Local Guard MPs Going On Duty In Charlotte

National Guard military police units from Greenville and Asheville were ordered into Charlotte today to help police and other local law enforcement agencies in the wake of Hurricane Hugo's sweep Friday.

They are joining or relieving 350 other guardsmen on duty in Charlotte since early last weekend. More than 200 other National Guard troops are on duty in other sections of western North Carolina.

State officials said today more than 200 N.C. Forestry Division workers, including 56 chain saw crews, also have been deployed in the triangle formed by Charlotte, Morganton and Lexington to aid in clean-up operations.

In Raleigh Graham Wilson, director of public affairs for the state Department of Crime Control and Public Safety, said local, state and National Guard officials met Sunday and decided to send more guardsmen into Charlotte. Wilson's department oversees the National Guard in such cases.

Wilson said members of the military police unit based in Greenville would help direct traffic and otherwise relief Charlotte and Mecklenburg County police officers.

"Their people have been working some pretty long shifts," Wilson said.

The Associated Press reported today that a National Guardsman and a Charlotte police officer were injured today when they were hit by a vehcile while directing traffic at an intersection left without a signal when the storm passed through.

The accident occurred shortly after 9 a.m. The names of the officers were not available, he said.

The police officer was taken to Presbyterian Hospital with a broken leg while the guardsman was taken to Charlotte Memorial Hospital with head injuries, Bailey said.

Utility officials said it could be two weeks before all of Charlotte has electricity. But for those who have been working to restore power, residents have shown their gratitude.

"One woman stopped and handed me a giant box of chicken she'd done," said Jim Estridge, a Southern Bell lineman who has worked 14- to 16-hour days since Friday. "She said we needed to have this. The public has been wonderful."

How pleasant the public remains will become apparent today, the first day that many Charlotteans have had to deal with the weekday routine since the killer storm veered further west after landfall and caused major damage in North Carolina's largest city.

In Mecklenburg County, 57 percent of homes were without electricity Sunday. Electricity was restored to an additional 15,000 homes on Sunday, and more of the city's 234 main feeder lines were repaired, bringing the total from 115 Saturday to 180 Sunday.

"We have restored power to about 230,000 of the 500,000 who were left without electric power by Hurricane Hugo Friday," said Joe Maher, a spokesman for Duke Power. He said by today, power had been restored to about 85,000 of the 200,000 Charlotte area residents affected by the storm.

Maher said Duke had one fatality in Fort Mill, S.C. A crewman working on wires there was electricuted

Charleston Copes Without Power

By Bruce Smith

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Electricity finally flowed through five downtown hospitals in hurricane-ravaged Charleston, but thousands of people were without power and short of food, clean water or cash for a fourth day today.

"I eat where I can get a meal," said Renildo Holmes, 26, who had no food at home and was eating barbecued chicken, sweet corn and butter beans from a mobile kitchen opened Sunday by the Alabama State Baptist Convention.

"My neighborhood looks like a trash barrel. Everything is out — trees, light poles and cars overturned."

Hundreds of Isle of Palms residents, meanwhile, were to learn today whether Hurricane Hugo spared any homes to return to. Boats were scheduled today to begin ferrying them to the island, which like other barrier islands, has been off-limits since being evacuated last week.

Aerial surveys showed more than half the island homes to be unsafe. Propane gas leaked, and power lines, trees and debris cluttered roads.

But angry and worried residents threatened to defy the mayor's declaration of martial law and go to the island on their own until officials worked out the boat trips. It will be midweek at least before people can go to stay, police said.

"When you come to the island, you better wear boots. There are snakes all over the place," Mayor Carmen Bunch told 500 homeowners at a meeting Sunday in Mount Pleasant.

Ms. Bunch, whose own house was demolished, brushed back tears as she told residents: "We're going to build the island back. We've got to stop the anarchy that's been talked about. We're not going to let anyone take over the city by force."

Coastal South Carolina, hit hardest by Hugo as it swept onto the U.S. mainland with 135 mph wind late Thursday, suffered billions of dollars in damages, officials said. Preliminary damage estimates in the Charlotte, N.C., area reached more than $366 million.

Ferry Fire Kills 2 People

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — Fire broke out on a 600-foot Danish ferry in the North Sea early today, killing at least two people and injuring 10, the Danish Sea Rescue Center said.

The Tor Scandinavia was carrying 540 passengers, mostly British citizens, and 110 crew members when the ship caught fire out at dawn about 90 miles off the west coast town of Esbjerg.

The fire was under control within a few hours, the rescue center in Arhus in central Denmark said. The Danish radio said the ferry was heading for Esbjerg on its own engines.

Joergen E. Petersen, a spokesman for the shipping line DFDS, said none of the 540 passengers 110 crew members had been evacuated. One of the injured was flown by helicopter to Esbjerg because of asthma respiratory troubles.

The nationalities or identities of the victims were not immediately released. The rescue center said injuries were minor and caused by inhalation of smoke.

The blaze started in a linen closet in the bow on the fifth deck of the 14,893-ton ferry, owned by DFDS, or Scandinavian Seaway shipping line.

The Tor Scandinavia was on a regular ferry service from Goteborg on the Swedish west, to Harwich on Britain's east coast and to Esbjerg on the Danish west coast, the owner, DFDS, said.

The liner was about to cross the North Sea from Goteborg to Harwich off the Danish coast when the fire was discovered.

Bush: Chemical Weapons Must Go

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — President Bush said today that the United States will destroy more than 80 percent of its chemical weapon stockpiles if the Soviet Union joins in reducing its arsenal to an equal level.

"The world has lived too long in a shadow of chemical warfare," Bush told the United Nations General Assembly, seeking to spur on a 40-nation conference aimed at banning the weapons entirely.

"Let us act together, beginning today, to rid the earth of this scourge," he said.

While the chemical weapons plan was the centerpiece of his remarks, Bush also dealt with what he called "the rise of freedom" around the world.

"Today we are witnessing an ideological collapse, the demise of the totalitarian idea of the omniscient, all-powerful state," he said. Bush said freedom is advancing in Hungary, Poland, Latin America and Africa.

"Make no mistake. Nothing can stand in the way of freedom's march," the president said.

The speech marked the first time that Bush addressed the United Nations as president.

Bush paid tribute to the Soviet Union for removing "a number of obstacles" on treaties reducing long-range nuclear weapons as well as troops and tanks in Europe.

"We have not entered an era of perpetual peace," the president said. He cautioned that regimes throughout the world were emerging "armed with old and unappeasable animosities and modern weapons of mass destruction.

He said regional conflicts "may well threaten world peace as never before."

Bush's offer to slash U.S. chemical weapon stockpiles was both a challenge to the Soviet Union to follow his lead and an invitation to the 38 other nations whose negotiations in Geneva to ban the weapons are moving at a snail's pace.

NASA Ends Rocket Era

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — After more than 400 liftoffs, NASA launched its last unmanned space rocket from this spaceport today, propelling a $125 million Navy communications satellite into orbit.

A 31-year era ended when an Atlas-Centaur rocket blazed away from the pad at 4:56 a.m. and hoisted a 5,100-pound payload intended to link land, sea and air forces around the globe with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the National Command Authority and the president's military command network.

"We have had a successful mission today; the satellite is now being tracked by spacecraft controllers after a flawless ride aboard its Atlas-Centaur rocket," said launch commentator Lisa Malone 30 minutes after the fiery liftoff.

The satellite was thrust into a preliminary orbit ranging from about 104 to 22,300 miles high. Late Tuesday, a radio signal from the ground will fire an onboard motor to place the craft in stationary orbit 22,300 miles above the Atlantic.

Lightning in the area held up liftoff for 44 minutes, and the Atlas-Centaur lifted off with just one

West Is Voted 'Best' In Regional Schools

Pitt County school Superintendent Dr. Edwin L. West Jr., whose contract will not be renewed after this year, has been named superintendent of the year for Region 1 by regional school officials.

The selection is made each year by a committee of school adminstrators in the region. Selection is based on leadership and creativity in sucessfully meeting the needs of students, strength in personnel and organizational communication, professionalism, providing professional development opportunities for others, participation in community activities and understanding of issues.

West was state superintendent of the year in the 1986-87 school year and national superintendent of the year in 1987-88. He is also a candidate for the 1990 National Superintendent of the Year award.

A divided Pitt County Board of Education voted 7-5 Sept. 18 to deny West renewal of his contract. He has been superintendent since 1982.

U.S. Dollar Plunges

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The value of the dollar plunged in hectic trading on world currency markets today as the world's richest countries dumped the greenback as a way of showing their determination to block any further rise in the U.S. currency.

The dollar sell-off began in Japanese currency markets in turbulent trading which was later matched in European and New York markets.

Traders reported that the dollar's plunge was aided by coordinated selling on the part of the central banks of the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France and Canada.

Finance ministers and central bank presidents from those countries, along with Italy, on Saturday issued a blunt statement expressing displeasure with increases this year in the dollar's value, a rise which many fear will abort needed improvement in the U.S. trade deficit. A stronger dollar makes U.S. products less competitive on overseas markets.

The finance ministers, in Washington for the annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank, pronounced their satisfaction today with the dollar's decline.

Falwell Offered Salary

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — PTL's chief builder testified today that he took an offer from Jerry Falwell to ministry founder Jim Bakker that would give Bakker a $300,000 salary "if he kept his mouth shut."

Falwell, who started the defunct Moral Majority and whose television ministry is based in Lynchburg, Va., took over PTL in 1987 after Bakker resigned in the wake of disclosure of the sex-and-money scandal involving then-church secretary Jessica Hahn.

Under questioning from defense attorneys, Roe Messner said he was sent by Falwell to Palm Springs, Calif., to make an offer that included $300,000 salary, a maid, a security guard for a year, health insurance and phone expenses.

County System Scores 90 Percent On State Accreditation Standards

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County's schools scored a high 90 percent on 1988-89 state accreditation standards, but the system must continue to improve to meet tougher standards for this year, school officials say.

The school system met 19 of 21 performance standards established by the State Board of Education for the 1988-89 school year, according to a report presented Monday to the county Board of Education. Pitt's schools scored 75 percent in 1987-88.

The system failed to meet state standards this year on the number of students passing the N.C. Competency Test in mathematics and writing. The standards require a passing rate of more than 88 percent on both tests. The passing rates for Pitt County students were 88 percent on the math test and 87 percent on the writing test.

School officials are pleased with the overall score, but say student performance must continue to improve to meet tougher standards expected for this year, especially on state end-of-course and competency tests.

Tougher entrance requirements at the state's public universities threaten compliance with a standard requiring that at least 35 percent of graduating high-school seniors successfully complete the courses required for admission. Although 57 percent met this requirement in 1988-89, the rate may fall below 35 percent in 1989-90 because of the tougher university admission standards.

Accreditation standards are becoming more important because the state is using them to judge the success of local school policies. Under the School Improvement and Accountability Act passed earlier this year by the General Assembly, local school boards will get more flexibility to decide how schools should be run, but have to justify their choices with increased student performance.

School systems must meet 75 percent of the requirements each year or lose their accreditation.

The tougher standards should not pose a problem for Pitt County schools, Superintendent Edwin L. West Jr. said. "I am confident that, even as the standards become more stringent, that our teaching, administrative and support staff will continue to meet the challenge exemplified by their excellent accomplishments this year," he said. "I think it's going to require continued dedication and persistence."

Teaching Fellows Program Criticized

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina University is doing more to recruit and support students who receive teaching scholarships, the dean of the university's school of education said today.

The efforts are in response to a recent evaluation of the university's Teaching Fellows Program that cited the school for weak advisory committees, poor recruitment, few enrichment activities, weak administrative support and poor communication.

The university has increased recruiting efforts, appointed a director to supervise the program, employed graduate assistants and allocated $5,000 for printing and postage costs to improve communications with scholarship recipients, Dr. Charles R. Coble, dean of education, said.

In the evaluation, ECU received an overall rating of "needs improvement," one notch up from the lowest grade of "unsatisfactory."

ECU is one of nine schools in the program, which is run for the state by the Public School Forum of North Carolina, a private Raleigh firm.

The program at North Carolina A&T State University in Greensboro also received a "needs improvement" rank. The University of North Carolina at Charlotte received the highest ranking of "commendable." Six universities received "satisfactory" rankings.

The program was started by the General Assembly in 1986 to attract more of the state's brightest students to teaching careers. Each year, the program awards $20,000 scholarship loans to 400 students who agree to become teachers in the state for four years.

The university campuses chosen to participate in the program are expected to recruit applicants and provide the recipients with counseling, seminars and enrichment experiences during their four years of teacher training.

ECU lost 15 of its 92 fellows in the first two years, eight for poor grades, John H. Dornan, executive director of the Public School Forum, said. Some of those losses might have been prevented with better programs, he said.

The forum's expectations were unrealistic, Coble said. It expected universities to run the program like the Morehead Scholars program at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill without providing the necessary financial support.

"One of my concerns expressed to the Public School Forum was that you need to have support for these programs," Coble said.

The university must show improvement within six months or its program will be put on probation for one year. If it does not improve after that, the program will be scrapped and moved to another school.

Evaluators will visit the campus again next spring.

An evaluation team assembled by the 11-member commission that oversees the fellows program visited ECU last spring after the forum conducted surveys of students and faculty. The evaluators found that ECU students suffered drastically in the program because of a lack of continuity. The program has had four coordinators in two years.

The team reported it found "a high level of student frustration and negative feelings toward the program."

Coble said he disagrees with the team's findings.

Chemicals Tainting Washington Water

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Close to 10,000 residents of Washington, N.C., have been advised not to drink city water because tests show it contains unprecedented levels of chemicals that might increase the risk of cancer.

Dr. Ronald H. Levine, state health director, said Saturday that high amounts of chemicals from an organic group called trihalomethanes had been discovered in the water supply, some at the highest levels he had seen in state testing. Those chemicals are thought to increase the likelihood of cancer with long-term exposure, he said.

The trihalomethanes might have formed when chlorine was used to purify the murky eastern North Carolina creek water that is a main source of Washington's drinking supply, Levine said.

"We have advised the people to discontinue its consumption until the city, which is working very hard, can achieve or reduce the level of these chemicals down to or near the recommended national standard," he said.

Federal Environmental Protection Agency guidelines permit up to 100 parts per billion of the chemicals, said Wallace Venrick, head of the public water supply section for the state Division of Health Services. A sample originating from Tranters Creek, a chief source of Washington's water, contained 1,400 parts per billion, Venrick said.

The high levels of chemicals were discovered in tap water when technicians at the Washington regional office of the state Division of Environmental Management were conducting routine tests.

EPA guidelines, which the state follows, do not require regular testing for trihalomethanes in cities with populations under 10,000 residents, such as Washington, officials said.

Arrests Made In Thefts

Greenville police arrested three people on theft charges over the weekend.

Officer H.D. Hines said Gary Wayne Davis, 18, of Washington, N.C., was arrested on larceny charges Saturday in connection with the theft of $5.76 worth of items from the Kmart store at Greenville Square Shopping Center about 3:35 p.m.

Officer E.E. Laughinghouse said John Peter Lengyel, 23, of 200 E. Ninth St. was charged with breaking, entering and larceny in connection with the theft of a radar detector from a car parked at 407 Meade St. about 3:25 a.m. Sunday.

Officer P.W. Worthington said Michael Duane Colville, 23, of 43 Thomas Mobile Home Park was charged with larceny of a vehicle in connection with the theft of a truck from the magistrate's office parking lot off Washington Street about 4:43 a.m. Sunday.

Worthington, who said the truck belonged to Magistrate Joseph Paul Cullipher of Bethel, said Colville, taken into custody behind the U.S. Post Office on West Second Street, was also charged with driving while impaired and driving while his license was revoked.

The 1989 tobacco season will be remembered as one of severe difficulties for local producers. Despite a better-than-expected crop, production is projected to be 10 percent to 15 percent below the 1988 level.

As we approach the final marketing phase of the 1989 crop, Pitt County growers will be concluding their normal production practices for this season. Among these practices is R-9-P or the stalk destruction program.

R-9-P was introduced in the late 1970s to the tobacco industry as a management tool to reduce losses for the following year. Research has shown that destroying stalks and roots as soon as possible after harvest completion results in lower chemical costs and disease risk for the upcoming season.

This pest reduction occurrs in two ways. First, the sooner that stalks and roots are destroyed, the fewer generations of pests decreases the field population by as many as a thousand fold. Seasonally, early destruction helps in that it allows more time for the decay process to occur. Growers should contact their local ASCS office regarding the earliest date they can begin R-9-P.

One tobacco pest which is epecially vulnerable to the effects of stalk and root destruction is the root knot nematode. These microscopic parasites of tobacco cause financial losses to Pitt County farmers each year and this program exposes their populations to fall drying and thus a reduction in their impact on the next crop.

Although growers are encouraged to disk stalks as soon as possible for the control of root knot, but effort should be directed to the examination of plant roots. Tobacco roots showing evidence of galling on a resistant variety like K326 indicates the presence of highly specialized nematodes and the need for extra precautions for upcoming seasons. In this situation, varietal resistance alone is not considered a dependable tool for the following year. It should be noted that examining the roots for galls is not a substitute for full soil sampling for nematodes.

Insurers Say Hugo Is Among Costliest Storms

By Linda Williams
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

For the nation's insurance companies, Hurricane Hugo is sure to be among the most costly storms ever to hit the United States, insurance officials said Sunday as they tried to assess the massive property damage in North and South Carolina.

"There will be hundreds of millions of dollars in insured property losses," said William J. Davis, Southern regional manager in the Atlanta office of the Insurance Information Institute. "Charleston is really a mess."

Some observers were holding out the possibility that insured losses could reach $1 billion, Davis said, topping the record $752.5 million in losses from Hurricane Frederic, which hit the Gulf Coast states of Mississippi and Alabama in September 1979.

However, Davis said a more generally held view is that the "losses won't be as bad as Frederic" but will be higher than from either hurricanes Betsy or Alicia, the second- and third-worst storms in terms of property damage. Betsy, which hit several Gulf Coast states in 1965, resulted in $715 million in insured losses, he said. Losses from Alicia, which struck Texas in 1983, cost insurers about $675.5 million.

In Columbus, Ohio, a spokesman for Nationwide Insurance Cos. said the insurer was expecting record claims from the storm, in part, because Nationwide is the largest insurer of automobiles and homes in North Carolina and the third largest insurer in South Carolina.

"The way it looks now, this one will be the biggest storm in the company's history," said spokesman Louis V. Fabro. Nationwide's current record is $31 million in insured losses from Hurricane Elena, which swept through Florida, Alabama and Mississippi in 1985, he said. Overall, that storm cost insurance companies about $543.3 million, according to the insurance trade group.

Fabro said Nationwide sent 43 claims adjusters to South Carolina and 12 to Charlotte, N.C., "which was hard hit" by the storm. Working conditions are difficult, he said. Adjusters are having a hard time finding housing because motels and hotels are full, and they are having trouble reaching clients because the storm cut telephone lines.

Scarce telephone lines is one reason Nationwide and other insurers can't give precise estimates of the losses, Fabro said. Davis said adjusters have not been able to get to some of the areas hit by the storm — particularly South Carolina's Barrier Islands.

While surveying Charleston Saturday, Davis said, he saw that several of the nation's big insurers had sent thousands of claims adjusters into the Carolinas, driving motor homes equipped with battery-operated computers and telephones. Some residents have access to a working phone, but they are in shelters and can't get home to see what damage they have because roads are blocked by fallen trees, furniture and other debris, he said.

Paying claims will "deplete the reserves" of some insurance companies, Davis said, but the storm will not put any insurance concern in financial jeopardy, although 1989 thus far hasn't been a good year for the industry. However, another big storm this season would significantly hurt the industry, said Marc H. Rosenberg, the insurance institute's spokesman in Washington.

Consumer rates in the areas hit by the storm shouldn't rise, Davis said, because the industry generally bases rates on an expectation of a major storm every 20 years. "Charleston hasn't been hard hit since Hazel in 1954," he said.

Estimates of losses cited by the insurance companies are lower than overall property damage cited by governmental officials because those figures include damage to public property — much of which is self-insured or not insured at all — and flood damage, which will be paid by the National Flood Insurance Program.

Election Postponed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Candidates sometimes seek elective office to gain power, but a primary election in Charlotte has been postponed because there isn't electrical power at many polling places.

The Mecklenburg County elections board voted unanimously Saturday to postpone the primary for two weeks until Oct. 10. It may be the first election in Charlotte or the state to be delayed because of weather, in this case Tropical Storm Hugo that swept through the city last Friday. Some 115,000 residents were without power today.

Republican Mayor Sue Myrick will face newcomer Samuel Elijah McClure. Democrat Craig Madans has no opposition. The general election is in November.

The county's mechanical voting machines would work all right. But Duke Power Co. told elections officials Saturday that, at best, only half the city's 107 polling places, mostly in schools and churches, will have power by Tuesday. Duke couldn't guarantee that electricity would be restored to all polls by the following Tuesday, Oct. 3.

So the elections board decided to hold the primary Oct. 10, when the Matthews' town primary is also scheduled.

"If you do not have sufficient light, voters can't read the ballot," said Mecklenburg County Elections Supervisor Bill Culp.

when he came in contact with a live distribution line, he said.

Preliminary estimates of damage to Mecklenburg County rose to more than $366 million on Sunday.

Figures from the Mecklenburg County Public Service and Information Department indicated that residential damage for the county and for the city of Charlotte was estimated at $256 million, and damage to businesses was estimated at $110.4 million.

The figures did not contain a separate breakdown for Charlotte and for the county. But Bill Guerrant, public information officer for Charlotte, estimated the damage to the city to be at least $45 million, up from the $15 million figure estimated on Saturday.

"As we get up in the helicopter more and do the street surveys, the number continues to climb," he said. "I imagine it will continue to grow beyond that."

A statewide damage estimate was not available on Sunday as 11 counties had not turned in estimates.

Four deaths in North Carolina were blamed on the storm, which came through Charlotte early Friday morning with winds of up to 75 mph. Gov. Jim Martin has asked President George Bush to declare 51 counties as federal disaster areas.

As for the first day of the work week, city officials announced that bus service will be free; they encouraged car-pooling and asked people to stop at all intersections where traffic lights aren't working.

Employees are being asked to go to work on a staggered scheduled based on the first letter of their last name: A-G: report to work before 8 a.m.; H-N, between 8 a.m. and 9 a.m.; and O-Z, after 9 a.m.

In addition, all Charlotte transit buses will be operating, Guerrant said.

About 40 people stayed in shelters Saturday night, he said. They were used mostly by people who live in Mecklenburg County, who, because they have wells and no power, have no water, Guerrant said.

And that power may not be restored for up to two weeks, Duke Power officials said.

"We're finding the damage to more extensive than we'd first thought," said Mary Kathryn Scarborough, Duke Power spokeswoman. "Therefore, the progress is going to be slower than we'd first anticipated. It would be prudent for customers to prepare for one to two weeks before service is restored."

Of the 500,000 Duke Power customers in North Carolina and South Carolina, about 200,000 have had their power restored, she said. In Charlotte, the hardest-hit of Duke's cities, 65,000 of the 200,000 without power since the storm came through Friday have had power restored, she said.

So far, 1,000 workers from utilities in 11 states have come to Duke Power's aid, she said. "As additional workers are recruited from other utilities, resurrection may be moving more quickly," Ms. Scarborough said.

Looting dropped dramatically over the weekend in Charlotte. Assistant city manager Don Steger credited beefed-up police ranks — including 200 rifle-toting National Guard troops.

Police arrested 23 people Friday and early Saturday on looting and related charges. Six were arrested Saturday night, and four had been arrested through about 11 p.m. Sunday.

Hugo's Mecklenburg County death toll remained at three Sunday. Karen Geiger, pinned to her bathroom floor by a tree Friday, was still in critical but stable condition at Charlotte Memorial Hospital.

At one church on Sunday morning, at least one congregation received the answer to its prayers.

In a dark St. John Neumann Catholic Church on Idlewild Road in east Charlotte, Father Aquin Harkness, a visiting missionary priest from Brazil, asked the con gregation to say the Lord's Prayer.

Halfway through the prayer, the lights blinked on.

Gasps and some clapping came from the congregation. Harkness smiled and said, "You know who to thank for that!"

Signs Of Life Are Returning To Charleston

But it will be days before anyone has accurate assessments of the losses. Insurance agents were going house-to-house, gathering information and handing out initial checks.

The death toll from Hugo's six-day rampage stood at 51 — at least 27 people in the Caribbean and 24 in the Carolinas, Virginia and New York.

There were small signs of life returning to normal in Charleston. Garbage pickups were scheduled today, and five bank branches were opening, Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr. said.

Construction was to begin today on a pontoon bridge to link the barrier islands to the mainland. The only land link — the Ben Sawyer Bridge — was ruined and repairs will take four to six months, said engineer Herman Snyder, of the state Department of Highways and Transportation.

Charleston Memorial Hospital, about a block from the harbor, was one of five with full power late Sunday.

"It's amazing the difference it will make. We can run air conditioning so we can control temperature in the operating rooms," said administrator Lynn Beasley. "We can run normal equipment and just function like a normal hospital."

Beasley said the emergency room was busy Sunday, with many people suffering cuts from chainsaws and axes they're using in the cleanup.

"We were delivering babies using flashlights," said Charlene McCants, hospital administrator for the Medical University of South Carolina, which also switched from generators to full power.

At least 760,000 people in the Carolinas remained without power. Some Charleston County residents may be groping without lights and refrigerators for a month.

Fifty churches in the Columbia area Sunday asked congregants for donations for hurricane victims. Within hours, the items filled 10,000-square-foot room in the Carolina Coliseum. Trucks were expected to begin carrying donations to the coast today.

In the three-county area around Charleston, 75,000 people were out of their homes, Riley said. Schools are closed until further notice, and a dusk-to-dawn curfew remains in effect.

There was evidence of tension during the weekend as the relief at having survived the storm wore off.

Police said there was a report of gas being sold for $5 a gallon and of a company charging $3,000 to cut down five trees.

An emergency law authorizing 30-day jail terms for price-gouging was enacted.

At one supermarket Saturday, people waited four hours to get inside. On Sunday, a line for a hot meal stretched three blocks.

Saturday, about 200 people began pushing and cursing as they waited for an ice distribution that never occurred.

"The people are short-tempered right now," said Patrolman Angel Ortiz.

"I'm frustrated, man," said 26-year-old Gerald Dean, whose 2-year-old child was diagnosed with meningitis and hospitalized the day Hugo hit. He has been unable to get his paycheck from the restaurant where he works, and even if he could, the lack of electricity kept banks closed.

National Guardsmen with M-16 rifles patrolled streets in the battered city of 65,000 people, guarding against looters and keeping order at locations where residents lugged coolers and plastic jugs to get fresh water and ice.

"People were ... begging for ice," Staff Sgt. Bill Petty of the South Carolina National Guard said Saturday. "There were fistfights in the line. They were down-on-the ground fights — men and women."

By Sunday night, 27 people had been charged with looting in Charleston, and about a dozen others had been arrested for such offenses as disorderly conduct, violating the curfew and petty larceny.

As a cold rain fell Sunday morning, church bells pealed above the hum of generators and the buzz of chainsaws as residents of the affluent Historic District began repairing their homes.

"We have no roof and we've got 3 feet of water in the living room," said Jimmy Bailey at one church service. "But we all have what we were born with and that's good health. ... Anything else is just gravy."

Hannah Death

GREENSBORO (AP) — A Greensboro woman whose body was found Wednesday off a dirt road in Rockingham County was strangled, according to an autopsy report.

Bonita Gayil Hannah, a 24-year-old mother of two small children, also had a broken nose, which would explain why a large amount of blood was found in the back seat of her car, said Lt. Jim Hightower of the Greensboro Police Department.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Necessary

Stadium Worth the Money Spent

Greenville is making a good investment by spending $197,174 to renovate Guy Smith Stadium.

The stadium is well located and heavily used as a city recreational facility. It is also historic in that it was constructed by the Works Projects Administration during the depression years of the 1930s. It served as the home field for Greenville's entry in the Class D Coastal Plains baseball league. It was also the home field for the early East Carolina University football teams and for local high schools.

Now, after many years of use, the understructure of the stadium is seriously weakened and prompts deep concerns about safety. The renovation will alleviate these fears by strengthening the structure. It will also include constructing two rest rooms, a concession stand and a dressing room — necessary amenities for a facility well-used by the public.

'Guy Smith has provided years of service for the community and can provide years more when the work is completed.'

The stadium was named for a local tobacconist who was an ardent supporter of professional baseball. Its stands seat some 1,200 and city officials say it would cost $3 million to construct the facility at today's prices. That's why it makes good sense to keep the current structure usable — $3 million makes building a new stadium prohibitively expensive.

A city with a population nearing 50,000, such as Greenville, needs safe, modern, adequate recreation facilities. With its record of use and the continued growth of the city, the stadium is a valued resource. Guy Smith has provided years of service for the community and can provide years more when the work is completed.

When it was constructed in the 1930s, Guy Smith Stadium was on the very edge of the city and had only limited street access. Now it is located on one of the city's busiest thoroughfares and it can serve for a number of athletic and outdoor activities.

And who knows. It may someday attract professional baseball again. It is well worth the cost to put the facility in good condition for both practical and nostalgic reasons.

It would be expensive to construct a comparable municipal stadium at today's cost and likely the funds for a new facility could not be found. For a comparatively modest amount, however, Greenville can restore Guy Smith Stadium to its former usefulness and keep a valued community resource available to the citizens who enjoy it.

The Beginning Of Business

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — It started last summer when a D.C. police officer answered a call and found a youngster slumped over the wheel of a car, a bullet in his head.

"I said that was it," W.W. Johnson recalled the other day. "I just couldn't take it anymore. I went in the next day and told my superior I was ready to quit."

The 19-year-veteran of the police department didn't quit. Instead, he was transferred to the department's Community Relations Division and assigned to patrol Woodson Jr. High in northeast Washington.

Rather than simply serve out his time in a relatively easy assignment, Johnson got involved with the Woodson youngsters. The result is one of the most inspiring stories I've come across in a long time.

First came the weightlifting room. "The idea was to teach them to discipline and respect their bodies," he said. "I wanted to make them so proud of their bodies, the temple of God, you know, that they wouldn't think about defiling it with drugs and alcohol."

Johnson found an unused room at the Woodson recreation center, fixed it up himself, begged mirrors from a hotel that was going out of business and donated $8,000 worth of weightlifting equipment.

But it didn't stop there.

"I saw the kids were leaving school to buy candy, school supplies, jogging shoes and so forth, and I thought, Why can't they sell these things to themselves? That way they could provide a service and make some money for themselves."

Last Friday, a packed room that included the chief of police, neighborhood residents, ministers, a cadre of Johnson-recruited volunteers and Johnson's own proud family dedicated the Conner-Harris Mini Mall, named for two victims of the District's violence, 13-year-old Derrick Conner and 17-year-old Lionel Harris.

It was a premature grand opening. The city-provided space, at the rear of the school, is still under renovation. (Johnson himself is doing most of the carpentry, under the direction of Jairo Delgado, an architect he saw on a television program and promptly recruited.) Schemes for dividing the money between the mall and young entrepreneurs are still being worked out. Decisions as to what will be sold are still being formed.

But the vision was almost palpable: stalls for candy, T-shirts, woodcrafts and athletic shoes. Four youngsters with an interest in photography are planning, with an assist from the National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise (NCNE), to acquire equipment to produce personalized buttons and badges for conventions. Mega Foods has agreed to hire some of the students and train them in food service.

"You should hear the business ideas these kids come up with," said Johnson, who works an eight-hour police shift at the school and then puts in an equal amount of volunteer time each day. "We keep saying legitimate jobs can't compete with the lure of the money to be made in drugs. Well, how do we know unless we give them the option? These kids aren't dumb. They know they've never seen a retired drug dealer. Given a choice, do you think they would choose jail and the cemetery?"

But Johnson's idea goes far beyond just giving Woodson youngsters a chance to earn a few dollars. He sees the mini mall as a chance to reinforce in the children the importance of math and English, to introduce them to such notions as self-respect and cooperation and, above all, to harness and enhance their entrepreneurial yearnings.

Robert L. Woodson, president of the NCNE and a committed admirer of Johnson, insists that the mall should be as attractive as the architects and volunteer contributions can make it — "second only to Union Station," he says.

"This mall ought to make Woodson Jr. High an island of excellence in a sea of drugs. Why do business people have nice offices? Because it makes a statement both about the quality of their service and about the people they serve. That's the sort of statement this center must make."

Woodson, not content to put Johnson in touch with the technical experts he needs to make the project a success, put the arm on 50 of his friends for $200 each. On Friday, he handed Johnson a $10,000 check.

"Boys and girls," said a beaming Johnson, "We're in business."

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — The Boston Globe says Barney Frank should resign. My colleague, the columnist Mark Shields, agrees. Still others join in. For the good of the Democratic Party, the Congress and liberalism, Frank has to go. Only one voice has yet to be heard from: Frank's constituents. Maybe they ought to decide.

That "maybe" is my feeble attempt at understatement since, in all the hollering and hand-wringing about Frank, the very people who elected him have yet to be heard from. Also ignored in all the fuss is the distinction between ethics and morality. Congress decides ethics, but the voters decide morality.

Frank is in trouble on both accounts, but one far more than the other. Unless new information is disclosed, Frank's ethical violations may come down to nothing more than writing letters on behalf of his one-time lover, Steve Gobie, and allegedly fixing some parking tickets for him. Neither one is exactly a capital offense.

Take the matter of fixing parking tickets. I first learned that Congress has this awesome power years ago when I found a car in my residential parking space that was posted "Private" and paid for by me. After I called the police and had the car ticketed, who should show up but Mr. Conservative himself, then Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.). He explained he had been helping my neighbor install a hi-fi set — hardly congressional business. As for the ticket, Goldwater shrugged. He would have it fixed.

Frank's other problems are more substantial. But they raise questions of morality and judgment, not ethics. They include paying a male prostitute for sex and putting the hooker on his personal (not congressional) payroll. They also include issues of credibility. Gobie says he ran a bisexual prostitution business from Frank's apartment — and Frank knew it. Frank says Gobie is a liar and, reportedly, his landlady is prepared to back him up.

Who should judge Frank's morality? The answer is clear: his constituents. And how should they judge it? Once again, the answer is clear: anyway they want. But what they should not do is take moral instruction from the Boston Globe which, over the years, has played cheerleader for Teddy Kennedy but thinks Frank has to resign. Nor should they listen to those who apply a facile formula to a complex problem: Just substitute "female" for "male" before the word "lover" or "prostitute" and you have the answer.

Until he revealed his homosexuality two years ago, Frank could not operate like a single heterosexual. He could not go places with male lovers. He could not ask people to fix him up. Life in the closet is not only confining, it can be harrowing. A person of Frank's age, 49, comes to terms with homosexuality by degrees — a psychic journey that is bound to affect judgment and behavior. In Frank's case, though, his behavior produced no victim other than himself. No under-age boy or girl is involved, no sexually harrassed woman — not (for crying out loud) Gobie and not even Congress. The institution will survive.

Are these excuses for Frank's behavior? No. They're explanations, and they in no way change the facts. Frank has shown appalling judgment. He concedes that. He was gullible. He concedes that. Like too many people of either sex or any sexual persuasion, he seemed to have had a crush on a worthless individual. But if Congress was asked for a show of hands on the question of daffy lust, the chamber would look like a Nazi Party rally.

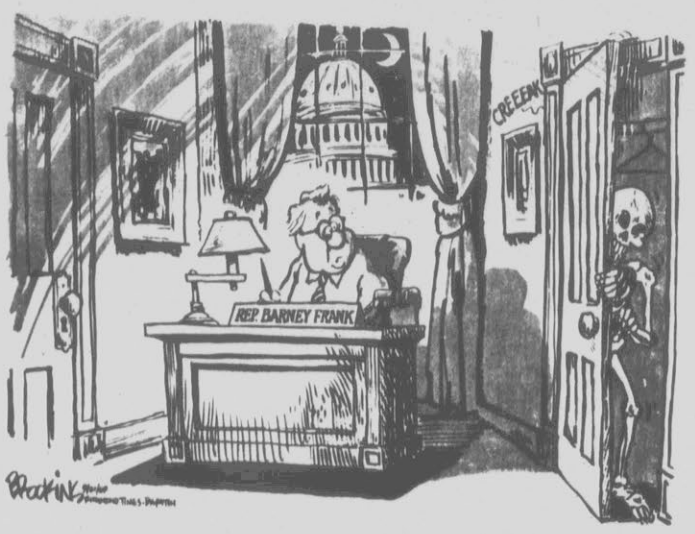

One final thought: For some people homosexuality is like sausage making: It does not bear scrutiny. Many people are tolerant of homosexuality in theory (Oh, so what?) but fundamentally revolted by what homosexuals do (Ooh, gross!). With his usual candor, Frank confronts the public with reality. Here is a man who bought sex from another man and who seemed to have fallen for an amoral hunk. Frank says he wanted to rehabilitate Gobie, to play Henry Higgins. That clever remark may reveal the essence of the Frank's relationship with Gobie. He grew accustomed to his face.

In similar cases — especially heterosexual ones — people make individual judgments. They look at the whole person, their career, their achievements and the reasons for their behavior. Barney Frank's career has been nothing short of remarkable and his achievements have been noteworthy. Maybe his constituents will rebuke him. That's their privilege.

But in the meantime — and until that happens — the sum of Barney Frank's life warrants that he be given two chances: to explain himself to the Ethics Committee and then, if he chooses, to his constituents.

They just might decide, in the words of the old song, what Gobie has already taught Frank: A good man is hard to find.

Martin To Seek Financing Data At School Talks

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — If Gov. Jim Martin can work it out, he expects to make a trade when he and other governors meet with President Bush for an education summit.

Martin will take to the meeting his experience with extensive state funding of schools. Some states face lawsuits, he said, because of inequities in funding caused by local variations.

"Some states, such as Kentucky, are under a lot of pressure right now because of the variation from one part of the state to another in the level of school support," Martin said. "And many states are going to be facing serious problems with financing of public schools because they rely so much on local governments to put up most of the money. In North Carolina, the state government puts up by far most of the money. And as a result we've avoided that kind of imbalance."

What Martin wants to get in return is an understanding of how others cope with merit pay for teachers, which has run into strong opposition in some systems here. While a pilot program on a career ladder is continuing, the General Assembly also has approved guidelines to give local schools more flexibility in coming up with their own programs.

"The career ladder program has been very successful in the schools that have tried it, but has been plagued with strong opposition from teachers in the schools that have not tried it," Martin said.

Martin, a Republican, said he expects schools of choice — something championed by Bush — to be a focal point of the weekend summit and hoped to find out how other states have fared with those programs.

"I want us to examine it and see whether it would be beneficial to the state of North Carolina," he said.

The issue of resegregation has been the source of most of the opposition to schools of choice in North Carolina, Martin said.

"Others states have been able to avoid that and I want to see how they have and what kind of results they've had," he said.

Martin said public education is facing a number of problems that threaten North Carolina's economy.

"Drug abuse undermines our competitiveness," he said. "Alcohol, teenage pregnancy, illiteracy undermine our competitiveness."

In addition, he listed "workforce education" as something that must be addressed.

"We're finding that we don't have enough people who can meet all the technical requirements," Martin said.

North Carolina has two counties experimenting with a program in which local businesses describe high-tech jobs they need filled and community colleges work to train high school students to fill them.

"It works very well for those that would drop out," Martin said, adding that it gave the incentive of higher pay to students who might otherwise be unwilling to improve their math or computer skills.

As far as correcting other problems, Martin cited the creation of the Governor's Council on Illiteracy a few years ago and the more recent Drug Cabinet of top-level state officials. He also noted getting local businesses involved in reducing the dropout rate by showing students the advantages of a high school diploma.

Martin balked at calling for federal intervention either through greater federal funding or a mandated national curriculum.

"I don't think the federal government needs to take a major responsibility for funding the public schools," Martin said. "I don't think the solution's more money. I think the focus ought to be on how to get better results."

As for a national curriculum, he said: "My main concern is I don't know what those national standards would be. They might make matters worse."

"I think there has been a tendency to offer too great a variety of courses. It tends to water down the academic content of some of the courses."

North Carolina, recently ranked last in the nation in Scholastic Aptitude Test scores, is not improving its educational system fast enough, Martin said.

"We are far ahead of where we were 10 years ago on resources committed to public education," he said. "But unfortunately we are right where we were 10 years ago on results."

Child Abuse Laws Reported Adequate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — After reviewing state laws that govern child protective services, the chairman of the state's Social Services Commission is predicting minimal changes.

"I looked at the rules on child abuse and neglect, and everything was pretty much in shape," Edgar Readling of Hickory said. "There is some language that could be tightened up."

But making changes, even minimal ones such as rewording, could take up to six months, he said.

"The rule-making process is a long process," Readling said. "The rules on child abuse and neglect are still being looked at, and (the commission) will probably be coming to use with changes as they come along."

The commission, which advises the N.C. Division of Social Services and sets regulations for county DSS agencies, initiated the review after the number of child abuse and neglect cases began increasing.

In the past year, more than 8,300 instances of child maltreatment have occurred. The number of confirmed abuse and neglect cases has more than doubled in the past six years.

The County Directors Association, which is made up of some 100 social service department representatives, one from each N.C. county, is also working on a set of model standards for county social services departments.

Lake Norman Passenger Says USAir Attendants Failed To Help

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — USAir officials are disputing the claims of a Lake Norman man who says attendants on Flight 5050 did not help him or anyone else to safety when the plane skidded off a runway and into New York's East River.

"This flight attendant, the only male flight attendant on board, was not calm," said Crowley, who was on the Charlotte-bound jet as he tried to return home from a business trip. "He was doing a lot of yelling and talking and whimpering and crying.

"While they're investigating the pilots, they should investigate the flight crew. They weren't doing a lot to help. It just wasn't professional behavior."

Patricia Goldman, senior vice president of corporate communications for USAir, said the flight attendant and the captain stayed with a woman who was trapped on the plane. "He stayed with his duties throughout," she said of the flight attendant.

Flight attendants did leave the plane at times, she said, "but to assist passengers in the water and to toss flotation devices to the passengers."

And sometimes, flight attendants must yell in a crash situation, she said. They will "usea megaphone to shout to make sure all the passengers hear the instructions."

Crowley, president of Timely Service Distributors jewelry distribution company in Huntersville, said he was trapped in his aisle seat in Row 20 on the left side of the jet, one row in front of the two women who died in the crash.

He said two flight attendants were trapped in the back of the Boeing 737-400 medium-range jetliner and couldn't help the passengers in the rear of the plane. Two flight attendants in the front left the jet after helping only passengers up front, he said.

"The plane was empty except for us in the back, and they just left," Crowley said. "I was stuck. The woman in front of me was stuck, and the plane was cracked open behind me, and my leg was wrenched. I was sitting up to my knee in water and diesel fuel and expected to go up at any minute."

Finally, Crowley said, he managed to extricate himself from his seat after the woman in front of him. He exited the plane and stood on the right wing, waiting for 40 minutes to be taken to safety, he said. He reentered the plane and walked out on the left wing after seeing that rescue workers were on that side of the jet.

That's when he encountered the flight attendant who threw his shoes in the water.

"He was obsessed with me having my shoes on the wing," Crowley said. "And my briefcase. So I went back and stood on the right wing of the plane until it was time to leave. Then I went back to the left wing. He (the flight attendant) took my shoes and instead of putting them in the raft, he threw them into the river. I told him I needed them and made him get them back, which he did.

"Later, in the rescue vehicle, this individual broke down completely, crying. I'm just saying it was not completely professional."

After treatment in a hospital for his wrenched leg and high blood pressure brought on by the crash, Crowley returned to LaGuardia and boarded another USAir flight to Charlotte.

Criminal Charges Weighed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Salvage crews removed the wreckage of a USAir jet from the East River to check it for evidence of a mechanical flaw that might have caused last week's crash, while prosecutors weighed criminal charges against the crew. A grand jury could be asked to consider charges of leaving the scene of an accident or even criminally negligent homicide against the pilot and copilot of the Boeing 737-400, a source in the district attorney's office told The Associated Press.

Another source in the office told the Daily News that Queens Borough District Attorney John J. Santucci may offer immunity from prosecution to the copilot, Constantine Kleissas, in return for his testimony.

The National Transportation Safety Board is conducting a separate probe into Wednesday's crash of Flight 5050, which killed two people; 59 others were rescued from the partially submerged plane that skidded off a runway and cracked into three pieces.

A lawyer for Kleissas and for the captain, Michael W. Martin, said he saw no basis for a grand jury probe, and news reports indicated some investigators were skeptical the criminal charges would hold up. "Based on everything I know, there is absolutely no criminal act committed by either pilot," said the attorney.

NCSU Prof Is Ostracized After Telling About Sports Program

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Hugh Fuller has received some praise and some criticism for speaking out against North Carolina State University Chancellor Bruce Poulton and the school's athletic program, and he wonders about his future at the school.

"When you blow the whistle, you lose a lot," he said. "People won't trust you with their private truths. It's weird. It's not a comfortable feeling."

The N.C. State controversy began in January, with the publicity surrounding Peter Golenbock's in the book "Personal Fouls." But Fuller's disclosure in July of seven years' worth of internal memos became the crucial development. The memos, along with statements by Fuller, showed manipulation of the academic system by the athletic department.

Since then, Poulton has resigned and the University of North Carolina Board of Governors has ordered systemwide changes intended to shore up academic policies.

Board member Samuel Poole, who chaired the UNC investigatory panel, said Fuller's memos and comments did not affect the committee's report to system President C.D. Spangler Jr. But, he said of Fuller's action, "I am pleased he did it."

"It showed his real interest was in the academics of the school," Poole said.

Over seven years as the school's director of tutoring programs, Fuller wrote memos to other university officials citing his concerns that many basketball players were not serious in the classroom.

"It was eating at me," he said. "I did get mad. I am still mad."

This year, as the controversy surrounding the book grew, Fuller waited for the right moment to take what would be a lonely stand.

"If you are a voice in the wilderness, you should have enough sense to speak when people are listening," he said. When "Personal Fouls" was released in July, "that had to be the time," he said.

Some criticized Fuller for airing his criticisms outside the university family. William Beezley, a history professor, said Fuller's statements denigrated certain courses popular with basketball players, including Beezley's surveys of Latin American history.

"How unfortunate that as you demonstrate your convictions about th proper education of athletes, you indulge in unfounded allegations, innuendo, exaggeration and ignorance," he said in a letter to Fuller.

Charlie Bryant, executive director of the Wolfpack Club, said it was Fuller's prerogative to go public with his claims. But, he added, "I happen to be one who believes in protocol."

But there are some who respect the man who bucked the system to call attention to foundering academics in an athletic community.

"If Dr. Fuller had not gone public, our administration would have continued to maintain its stance that nothing was wrong," said Cyrus King, a retired librarian who has proposed that the N.C. State Faculty Senate issue a resolution commending Fuller.

Raymond Long, the faculty senate chairman, said he prefers to see problems solved within the system, but "it took a lot of courage on his part," he said. "I respect the man for doing it."

New Car Tax Boosting Sales

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state Automobile Dealers Association has encouraged its 750 members to advertise the savings in buyiong now rather than after Oct. 1, when North Carolina's tax on the sale of motor vehicles rises from 2 percent to 3 percent.

The tact seems to be working, said B. Wade Isaacs, the association's executive vice president.

Sales have been perky during August and September across the state, he said, after many sluggish months. Manufacturer rebates ranging from $500 to $2,000 have helped, Isaacs said, and the increase in 1990 model prices, generally 5 percent, also has drawn customers to a dwindling stock of 1989 cars.

For buyers of expensive automobiles, the maximum amount of the tax also will increase. The current ceiling of $300 goes to $1,000.

The tax will triple, for example, on a luxury car that costs $30,000, from $300 to $900 beginning next week.

On a moderately priced car of $10,000, the tax will go from $200 to $300.

The vehicle tax increase is part of the financing of about $9 billion in highway construction over the next 13 years. The plan is designed to pave dirt roads and build city freeways as well as complete a statewide system of multilane highways. The state's motor fuels tax went up about a nickel a gallon in August as part of the package.

GUILD RX OPTICIANS
YOUR EYEGLASS PRESCRIPTION
What does the Federal Trade Commission say about "Eyeglass Prescriptions"
Q. Can I charge my patients an extra fee for releasing the prescription!
A. No. The Rule makes it illegal for you to charge your patients any fee in excess of your normal examination fee as a charge for releasing the prescription. So if your normal examination fee is $30, you cannot add an extra $5 or $10 for releasing the prescription.
Q. When do I have to give out a prescription?
A. The prescription must be given to your patient immediately after you complete the eye examination. This means that you must give your patient his or her prescription before you begin your dispensing procedures (if you also dispense eyeglasses).
Q. What if my patient doesn't ask for the prescription? Do I still have to give it out to my patient?
A. Yes. The Rule requires that you prepare the prescription and physically offer it to the patient. Of course, you can't force the patient to take it, but you must offer him or her the written prescription. Simply asking your patients whether they want their prescription is not sufficient. We found that many consumers had never seen a prescription for corrective eyewear, and thus were unaware that they could take that piece of paper and use it to comparison shop.
Q. What is the penalty for violating the Rule?
A. The penalty for violating the Rule is up to $10,000 per violation.
Q. How can I report violations of the Rule?
A. You can contact us directly in Washington, D.C. Our mailing address in Washington is: Eyeglasses TRR, Federal Trade Commission, Room 281, Washington, DC 20580

Dr. Elizabeth Morgan sits in her D.C. jail cell

Court To Decide Fate Of Mother

WASHINGTON (AP) — The District of Columbia's highest court is being asked again to consider whether Dr. Elizabeth Morgan must be freed after spending 25 months in jail for concealing her daughter in a bitter custody battle.

Attorneys for Morgan are asking the D.C. Court of Appeals to issue an order freeing her today. President Bush signed legislation Saturday designed to force her release.

Her ex-husband's attorney, however, said Sunday she will seek to have the law declared unconstitutional.

Morgan contends that her former husband and the girl's father, Dr. Eric Foretich, had sexually abused their daughter, Hilary, now 7 — a charge he strongly denies.

The child remains hidden at an undisclosed location, although court officials believe the girl may be with Morgan's parents in England.

Attorneys for both sides said Sunday they did not know how the court would handle the unprecedented situation.

"We have not heard anything on how the court will handle it," said Morgan attorney Adrian Roe. "It's really in the court's hands."

"We're hopeful the court will act promptly, but we have no guarantees," Roe said.

Foretich's attorney, Elaine Mittleman, said the court could order a hearing on the case and that there was no guarantee that the court would immediately issue an order freeing Morgan.

A three-judge panel heard arguments in the case last year, and the full court held a rehearing last Wednesday.

Foretich and Ms. Mittleman both stressed that the bill does not require Ms. Morgan to produce the girl.

Foretich said he would be "delighted" to have his former wife released, if the federal government helped him find their daughter.

"But until they're willing to do that, I don't see where I have any choice but to concern myself with the violation of my rights and those of my daughter," he added.

D.C. Corrections Department spokeswoman Patricia Wheeler said jail officials required a court order to release Morgan.

Mittleman said Foretich has asked President Bush to direct the attorney general to either appoint a special prosecutor or tell the FBI to help find the child.

Foretich has offered a $5,000 reward to anyone who could provide information on Hilary's whereabouts.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush signed the bill "out of compassion for her plight" after members of Congress, also concerned about her case, passed legislation to free Morgan.

Trafficker's Bullet Ends Immigrant's 13-Year Career As Police Informant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — This city has lost one of its most effective soldiers in the war on drugs, and it hardly noticed.

A drug trafficker's bullet that pierced the throat of Rafael Orelle Pazo in July ended the 13-year career of one of Miami's most productive undercover informants, drug enforcement officials said this week.

Orelle, a 44-year-old Cuban immigrant who never had a formal education, began undercover operations that resulted in hundreds of arrests and removed at least a ton of cocaine from the streets, officials said.

"No one worked like Rafael," said Peter Sarron, a Drug Enforcement Administration agent who worked with Orelle daily for the past five years.

Orelle died without fanfare, but his life offered an unusual glimpse into the methods of drug enforcement.

DEA agents said the risky activities of people like Orelle are the only way to penetrate smugglers' shadowy networks.

"He was an inspiration to the DEA," said spokesman Lynn Wheeler. "He knew the danger was there but he still came through with all this information, day after day, year after year."

The agency agreed to rare interviews on the subject because officials considered Orelle a cut above other informants.

"Quite often the people who assist us in narcotics cases are not pillars of the community," said DEA spokesman John Fernandes, describing Orelle as an exception. "He was just a concerned citizen."

A short, balding man who walked with a limp after being stricken with polio as an infant, Orelle had to wear a weightlifting belt to support his bad back and considerable paunch.

Born in poverty and unable to read or write, Orelle eventually would make more than $50,000 a year supplying information.

His undercover career began in 1976, when he was hired to lay tile in the home of a major marijuana trafficker and saw piles of cash and a room-size safe being installed under the garage.

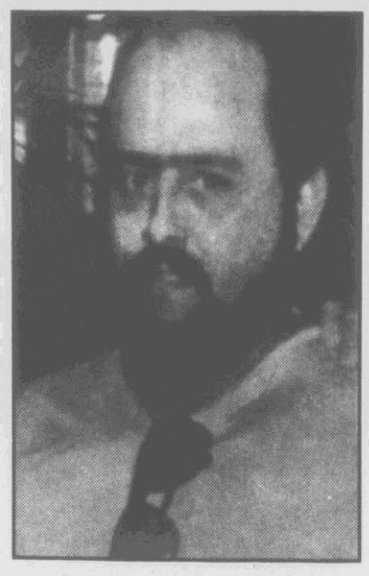

"He came to the DEA and offered his services," said Coral Gables Lt. Harold Hopkin. "We gave him $500."

After police seized 23 tons of pot and sent the trafficker to prison, Orelle found regular work with Miami-area police and federal agents.

According to court records, Orelle didn't always operate on the right side of the law.

In 1967, when he was struggling to find construction work to pay his rent, he was charged in a dozen burglaries. Orelle pleaded innocent by reason of insanity and spent a year in a mental hospital.

In 1979, Orelle and another informant were caught impersonating police officers and offering to fix the case of an accused drug trafficker for $7,000.

RAFAEL ORELLE PAZO

Orelle pleaded guilty to a lesser theft charge and was paroled. State prosecutors told police they no longer considered him a trustworthy informant, effectively blackballing him from Dade County courts.

But, "because of his value we began working with him again," said the DEA's Sarron.

During the past five years, the period for which records were available, Orelle initiated about 50 cases, leading to 150 arrests. Thanks to his efforts, agents seized about $2 million in cash, $3 million in property, tons of marijuana, more than 1,000 kilos of cocaine and a quarter-million illegal sedatives.

But Orelle's identity became more known among dealers in Miami's Latin community each time he testified in court.

"It always amazed a lot of us that he stayed alive so long," said Jerome Sanford, a public defender who first met Orelle in 1977, when Sanford was a prosecutor.

It all caught up with him July 14.

Working with Sarron and DEA agent Kevin Stephens, Orelle posed as a dealer wanting to buy 20 kilos of cocaine from Jose Peralta, an accused smuggler.

Before they could discuss prices, Peralta and a gunman, Octavio Sanchez, fired a spray of bullets, authorities said. A slug matching Sanchez' gun hit Orelle in the throat, said prosecutor Michael Cornely.

Orelle bled to death.

Sanchez, Peralta and his alleged getaway driver have been jailed and face first-degree murder and cocaine-trafficking charges.

Her 16-year-old son wants to be a DEA agent when he grows up.

"I'm trying to get his mind off it," Mrs. Orelle said. "I tell him 'I'm going to live the rest of my life in fear, and your wife and kids will be the same. You can do something about drugs in other ways.'"

Farm-City Week

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Farm-City Week, a three-day festival marking the annual celebration of mountain agriculture, begins Wednesday at the Western North Carolina Farmers Market.

The festival begins with the display of fall fruits and vegetables coming in from the around the western area. Activities include music, dancing, crafts, corn shelling and grinding, free hot air balloon rides, and information on canning and freezing.

The market, the busiest in the Southeastern United States during the summer and early fall season, has enjoyed a 12 percent upswing in volume of produce sold and in visitation this year, said Clayton Davis, market manager who is N.C. Associate Commissioner of Agriculture.

Hugo Donations

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham collected donations for victims of Hurricane Hugo on Sunday night during the final session of an eight-day Arkansas crusade.

Graham said donations to the new relief fund would be channeled by the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army to hurricane victims in the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and the Carolinas. Graham lives near Asheville, N.C., and is a native of Charlotte.

"We give to people all over the world, now our neighbors are in need," Graham said in a news release issued during Sunday's crusade.

'Speed' Makes Comeback As Cheap Alternative To Crack

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — It's cheap, it's easy to produce and drug dealers tout the fact that it's "made in America."

Methamphetamine, known in the 1960s as "speed" and now widely called "crank," is making a resurgence in the United States as an inexpensive alternative to cocaine or crack.

Users are beginning to smoke it, sending an instant jolt to the brain. But unlike crack, crank can give the user a high that lasts several hours.

Quickly addictive, it can also lead its victims to hospital emergency rooms, their fists clenched, raring for a fight even while strapped to gurneys for their own protection and that of hospital workers.

"I think there's sound reason to say this stuff is more dangerous than cocaine or crack," says James N. Hall, executive director of the Up Front Drug Information Center in Miami. "Speed killed in the 1960s and it can still kill in the '90s."

The Justice Department, in a report last month, said "methamphetamine has the potential of becoming the crack problem of the 1990s."

Dr. George M. Shumaik, an emergency room physician at the University of California at San Diego Medical Center, describes crank users as "crazy" and "combative."

"The complications are the same as we saw with PCP," Shumaik says of crank users who overdose severely. "They're so combative and so strong that they can throw you across the room."

The National Institute on Drug Abuse says the number of deaths involving crank nearly tripled in 2½ years — from 34 in the second half of 1985 to 91 in the first half of 1988, according to reports from 26 metropolitan areas.

"There has been an explosive growth in the use of methamphetamine" over six years, the Justice Department says. The problem has been especially severe in the western United States and Southern California.

San Diego, according to the Justice Department, is "the methamphetamine capital of the United States."

U.S.-Soviet Talks Set On Summit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Bush administration is setting next year's superpower summit meeting as the target for completion of a treaty to slash long-range nuclear arsenals by 30 to 50 percent.

To lay the groundwork, and also hasten an accord on troops and tanks in Europe, Secretary of State James A. Baker III probably will meet with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze twice before the summit, an official said.

Baker would go to the Soviet Union sometime between November and January, and Shevardnadze would come to the United States afterward, a senior U.S. official said Sunday night.

Shevardnadze and Baker, who just finished two days of productive talks in Jackson Hole, Wyo., are known to be considering locations other than Moscow for the next meeting.

A Soviet decision not to let a dispute over space-based defenses stand in the way is expected to improve chances of completing a strategic weapons treaty.

But, Baker said Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" program, "We are not home yet by a long shot."

Among the unsettled issues are procedures for verifying compliance with cuts in bombers, missiles and submarines.

But Baker said the Soviet decision to deal separately with its objections to the U.S. Star Wars program was a major achievement.

"What I think you see here is an exercise of political will by the leadership on both sides — the Soviet Union and the United States — to move us forward across the broad range of our arms control agenda," Baker said.

Later, on a U.S. Air Force jet to New York for the opening of the U.N. General Assembly, a senior U.S. official said a strategic arms reduction treaty may be ready at the summit.

"If we can't get to a START agreement, certainly a summit will move it forward — or should," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Baker said the success of his meeting with the Soviet foreign minister should silence congressional critics and dampen their appetite for unilateral arms cuts.

Cambodia Gives Viet Troops Huge But Concerned Send-Off

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — Thousands of Vietnamese soldiers bade farewell to Phnom Penh today, leaving behind citizens worried that the dreaded Khmer Rouge is already taking advantage of Hanoi's pullout with new assaults.

Hundreds of army vehicles including artillery and tanks paraded in front of the Royal Palace as a band played a song celebrating the "solidarity" between Vietnam and Cambodia.

Several thousand people including Cambodian soldiers and schoolchildren lined the streets waving flags in yet another government-organized ceremony marking what Vietnam says is the withdrawal of its final 26,000 troops.

Heng Samrin, presdent of the Vietnamese-installed government, thanked the commanders of departing Vietnamese units 479 and 979. Twelve Buddhist monks in saffron robes chanted blessings.

Cambodian and Vietnamese commanders embraced and were presented flowers from women in traditional costumes.

After the brief ceremony, the soldiers headed east for the Vietnamese border on narrow Highway No. 1. That was a main route Vietnamese forces used to invade Cambodia in late 1978 and end nearly four years of Khmer Rouge rule in which hundreds of thousands died.

After an overnight rest, the soldiers were to cross from Svey Rieng province to Vietnam's Tay Ninh province, supposedly ending Hanoi's involvement in the stalemated war against the Khmer Rouge and two other guerrilla groups. Other units were to return home by the Mekong River and the Gulf of Thailand.

The guerrillas have called the six-day troop movement a fake, but the Khmer Rouge has beseiged the gem-rich western town of Pailin in recent months, evidently to take advantage of a Vietnamese retreat from the Thai border area.

The Khmer Rouge claimed today it had captured the Ratanamondol district seat at Sdau township, on Route 10 which links the town of Battambang with Pailin.

On its radio station, the Voice of the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea, the Khmer Rouge called the area a "major strategic position whose task is to defend Battambang town from the south." A transcript of the radio report was seen in Bangkok.

The defense minister, Gen. Tea Banh, has acknowledged the guerrillas have seized territory around Pailin but says it remains under Phnom Penh control.

Phnom Penh's best division, the 196th, was defending Pailin against some 3,000 guerrillas of elite Khmer Rouge divisions 415 and 320, said Khieu Kanharith, a prominent newspaper editor who recently visited the front.

U.S. Shift Leaves Contras Uncertain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Central America's shifting political landscape has produced a more tolerant U.S. attitude toward Nicaragua's leftist government and deepening hostility toward some Contra rebels who once enjoyed red-carpet access here, according to U.S. and rebel sources.

The changed attitude toward the Sandinista government has been subtle compared with the mutual recriminations and finger-pointing that now characterize the relationship between the State Department and some elements of Nicaragua's exiled opposition.

By de-emphasizing military pressure against the Sandinista government, the United States has moved away from the confrontational policies of the Reagan administration and is now pursuing peaceful but guarded coexistence.

The shift has embittered some Contras. "No one in the resistance trusts the State Department," says Bosco Matamoros, a rebel spokesman who is closely allied with veteran Contra leader Adolfo Calero.

Calero was once a regular visitor to the White House and the State Department during the Reagan years but nowadays is treated almost as an outcast by the Bush administration.

Matamoros maintains that the State Department has refused even to answer rebel correspondence while abandoning the Reagan administration policy of avoiding all substantive contact with Sandinista leaders. When a congressional delegation met recently with President Daniel Ortega, a top State Department official participated.

Amid the ongoing debate over when the Contras should disband, Matamoros said the State Department "seems more interested than the Sandinistas in demobilizing the resistance."

One continuing source of concern for the administration is Soviet bloc military aid for the Sandinistas, estimated at $350 million for the first eight months of this year.

The administration view is that the Contra leadership mantle has passed from Miami-based civilians to battle-hardened Contra field commanders who have risen through the ranks and are far more qualified to represent the armed opposition to the Sandinistas.

Officials talk disdainfully of the U.S. taxpayer-financed Contra bureaucracy which has operated for years in Miami. Matamoros accused State Department officials of grossly exaggerating the size of the Contras' paid staff.

By turning its back on Contra civilian leaders who have refused to return to the region and by favoring the emerging military commanders within the resistance, Matamoros says the Bush administration is tacitly advocating a military coup despite its stated preference for civilian supremacy.

The administration's twin objectives for Nicaragua are to support the internal opposition there as the country gears up for national elections and to keep the armed resistance intact until after the Feb. 25 balloting.

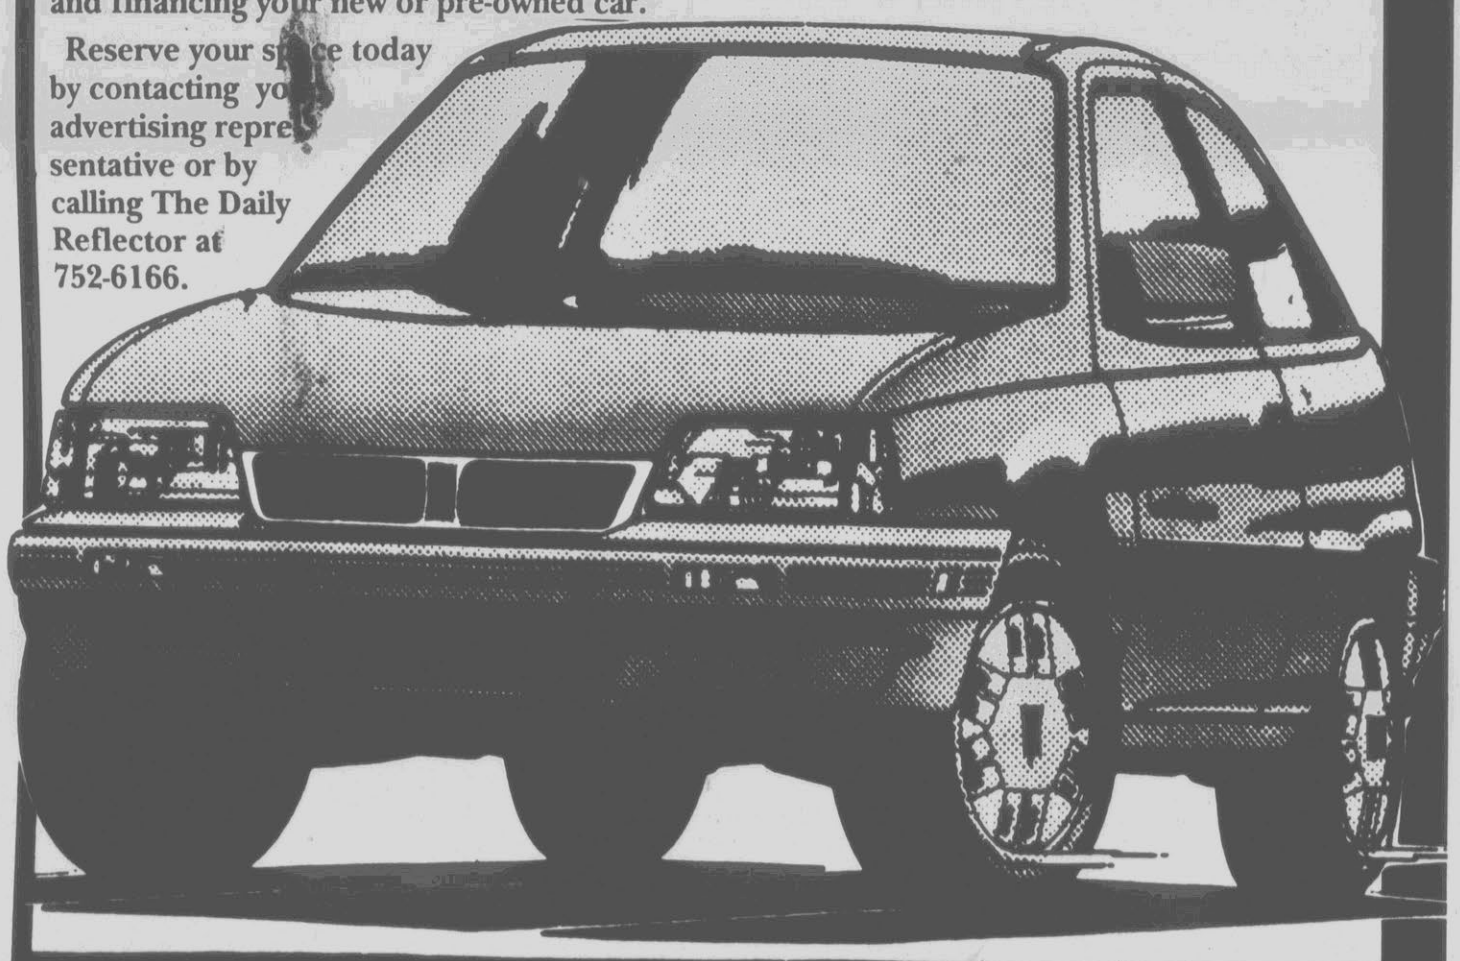

The bulk of the rebel force is based at camps along the Honduran border, living off U.S.-supplied humanitarian assistance.

McMurtry Moves From Father's Shadow In Song

By Richard Harrington
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — "I never really had a blinding desire to write," says James McMurtry, whose debut album, "Too Long in the Wasteland," may well leave listeners with a blinding desire to listen.

"James is the songwriter of the '90s, I just know it," says John Mellencamp, who produced the album.

"I took a couple of creative-writing courses in college," McMurtry recalls. "I tried to write short stories and poems, but writing prose seems to be more of a chore — it requires a long attention span — whereas with songs, you can try to bring it all in and not waste any words; you can economize and try and get that whole story down. ..."

And, he points out, his father "doesn't write songs. He doesn't write short poems. He doesn't even like to write short stories."

His father is Larry McMurtry. He writes novels, for which he's won a Pulitzer Prize, and he writes screenplays, and since 1971 he's been the proprietor of the Washington collectors' store Booked Up. In some circles he'll probably be known now as the father of James.

"Too Long in the Wasteland" contains 11 McMurtry originals — evocative, finely wrought narratives that conjure small-town politics, convoluted relationships that dissolve into desolation.

Comparisons are likely to range from such Texas songwriters as Townes Van Zandt, Steve Fromholtz and Guy Clark to Arlo Guthrie, Lou Reed, Mellencamp, John Prine and Randy Newman (particularly in terms of dry wit and laconic delivery, albeit with a Southwestern drawl).

"He almost sounds like a lot of people but he never quite sounds like anyone except himself," says Larry McMurtry, who knows this particular game from the literary side. "Actually, I see a good many analogues between James and me, between his way of working and my way of working."

"I listened to songwriters," says the son. "Somebody turned me on to Kris Kristofferson when I was about 9 or 10. I didn't know what he was singing about but I liked the way the words ran together, so maybe that had something to do with me wanting to be a songwriter.

"And I'm not a big reader. I read what I had to. Larry always had books stacked to the ceiling, so to me books were just something to cover the walls with. I didn't really think about pulling them down to read them."

"This (attitude) relates as much to book-selling as it does to writing-perhaps more," says his father. "Booksellers' children have a tendency to hate books, because they spend so much of their childhood being bored in book shops while their father or mother is buying books. ... They feel their parents are always playing with books instead of playing with them."

Instead, James began playing guitar at 7, often closeting himself away from his father's business concerns. "It was his escape from a great many things — homework and whatever pressures he may have had when he was growing up," says Larry McMurtry, adding that there were few records around the house, and that he himself paid little attention to music. "I would mainly listen when I passed his bedroom, and while I'm not musically very sensitive, I did realize a long time ago that he was a very good guitar player."

Songwriter James McMurtry, son of author Larry McMurtry

Without a point of view, of course, a good guitar player is to a songwriter what a good typist is to a writer. It's tempting to draw lines between the works of the father and the son.

In a number of novels Larry McMurtry evokes that swirl of aspirations and disappointments at the core of small-town life. In his songs James McMurtry covers much the same territory in a highly compressed style that confirms he's known both the roots and the restlessness.

"That comes from being on the fringes," says James McMurtry. "I never stayed in one place all that long."

James McMurtry has not only traveled with his father, but made journeys of his own after high school: a summer as a teacher's aide in Spain, college at the University of Arizona in Tucson, a summer in Alaska, then back to San Antonio and, eventually, to what he McMurtry calls "the Wasteland" at Idiot Ridge outside Archer City, Texas, the roots of McMurtry country.

"When I came back from Alaska, I didn't have much to do," says McMurtry. "Larry has this ranch house that was his father's — his brother was the last one to ranch it — and he'd put all his books in there. I decided it needed painting; that was something to do in the fall, so I scraped it down and repainted it. That's where that song, 'Too Long in the Wasteland,' came from" (including a resigned coda after verses of complaint: "I believe I'll have to stay.").

"About the only entertainment I could find was a TV," McMurtry recalls. "The main social organizing event was high-school football games, which was kind of new to me, though it's not unlike anyplace where whole towns come out to watch their boys play. I remember before kickoff there was a lady who used to call out with a raspy voice, 'HIT SOMEBODY.' It's little things like that perked my ears up.

"I started trying to write when I was about 18, I guess. I never got anything together until I was 24. Kept writing little scraps and fragments, throwing 'em in a pile. Luckily I never threw out the pile. Sometimes an idea that I wrote down six or seven years ago and turn it into a song now, where I didn't have the wherewithal to do it then."

Larry McMurtry concedes that "it's harder for a second-generation artist than a first-generation artist, in lots of ways. It's hard to emerge from the shadow of a successful parent in any walk of life, and it seems to me particularly hard in the arts. Those who are wise, I think, generally don't stay in the same art."

Still, it was only two years ago that James McMurtry started performing his songs in public. He entered the songwriters contest at the 1988 Kerrville Folk Festival and was one of six winners. "And that meant I was a songwriter."

'Beverly' Should Join 20th Century

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I may have a clue for "Embarrassed Parents" as to why their friends have not received acknowledgments for their wedding gifts.

After attending three successive weddings as guests of the groom and receiving no acknowledgments for my gifts, I made some inquiries.

It seems that some of the brides have been carrying this liberated woman thing a little too far. They are saying to the groom, "I will write the thank-you notes for all the gifts we receive from my family and friends, and you do the same for yours." This, of course, translates into: Her family and friends get thanked, and his get zilch.

I have solved the problem by accepting no wedding invitations as a guest of the groom. Perhaps if more people did this, the brides would wake up to the fact that it is no more reasonable for her to expect him to write the thank-you notes than for him to expect her to trot out to the garage and lube the car. — Beverly R. In Fresno

Dear Beverly: Please join the 20th century. Women have been trotting out to the garage to "lube" cars for some time, and men have been writing thank-you notes, too.

If you decline all wedding invitations that come from the groom because you're afraid you'll not be thanked for your wedding present, you need more help than I can give you in a letter. And you're also going to miss a lot of great weddings.

Dear Abby: I am not in favor of hugging. In fact, I am opposed to even touching a person without asking first if I may. I am not some kind of touch-me-not kook. Let me explain.

Someone may have a skin condition, or an injury that is not visible. I know a woman who has a chronic case of "shingles," but her painful condition is not visible because the rash is on her chest and rib cage, so very few people even know she has it.

Six months ago, I had surgery for lung cancer. My incision runs diagonally across my back. Casual acquaintances have patted me on the back and even embraced me as a cordial greeting. The pain was excruciating.

Abby, please print this to let folks know that a hug is the last thing some people need. A handshake is friendly enough. — Fragile In Phoenix

Dear Fragile: Thanks for a friendly reminder. Sometimes even a friendly handshake is too much if it's too enthusiastic and the person is wearing a ring on her right hand.

Dear Abby: As branch director of the Metropolitan St. Louis YWCA, Carondelet Branch, I was most interested in one of your letters pertaining to water safety from Jeane Burke. I commend her mother for her quick thinking on using the pool furniture as a rescue assist. It was almost as though she had taken water safety instructions from the St. Louis YWCA.

Each spring many groups, including senior citizens and neighborhood school children, are instructed about water safety at the YWCA. The program, "You Never Know What's on Hand to Save a Life," includes many items.

The demonstration itself is a picnic setting. The items include a picnic bench and table, ice chest, plastic containers, a log and, to the surprise of everyone, a watermelon! All of these items float, and are usually on the spot to throw out to someone who needs to be rescued.

Isn't it wonderful that the furniture tossing saved a life? So can other items, if we continue to train people that "You Never Know What's on Hand to Save a Life." — Veronica M. Halveland, YWCA, St. Louis

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Engagement Announced

Gregory-Coleman

Mr. and Mrs. Bobby L. Gregory of Route 4, Connelly Springs, announce the engagement of their daughter, Vicki Y. Gregory, to Curtis C. Coleman III, son of Mr. and Mrs. Curtis C. Coleman Jr. of Hickory. An Oct. 21 wedding is planned.

Griffin-Hamilton Pair Married

Heather Lynn Hamilton and Scott Eric Griffin were united in marriage Sunday afternoon at 4:30 in St. James United Methodist Church.

Daughter of Michael Hamilton of Cohocton, N.Y., and Wanda Conklin of Route 5, Greenville, the bride was given in marriage by her father. The bridegroom is the son of Russell and Ruth Griffin of Atlanta.

Wedding music was presented by organist Frances Cain and soloist Jane Vaughn. The double-ring ceremony was conducted by Billy Peate.

Rhonda Morris was maid of honor and Alison Neely was matron of honor. Both are from Ayden. Shannon Beauchamp of Greenville was bridesmaid, and Tiana Monahan of Bath, N.Y., cousin of the bride, was flower girl.

Tim Griffin of Atlanta, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Ushers were Chris Congleton of Ayden and Dave Fawcett of Pembroke Pines, Fla., brother-in-law of the bridegroom. Eric Hamilton of Cohocton, brother of the bride, was ring bearer.

The bride wore a formal gown of bridal satin with a sweetheart neckline and bodice trimmed with seed pearls, sequins and imported lace appliques. The dropped basque waistline fell into an A-line skirt which extended into a cathedral-length train. She carried a bouquet of ivory roses, daisies and pink roses. Her Camelot cap of lace and pearls was attached to a fingertip veil of English illusion.

Each of the attendants wore an emerald green taffeta gown and carried a bouquet of daisies and ivory roses. The flower girl was dressed identically and carried a white basket.

A reception was given by the bride's mother at the King and Queen.

The couple will live on Route 1, Grifton, after a wedding trip to the beach.

IICUC CERTIFIED MASTER CLEANER

YOU'VE WON

Don't you just love those phone calls that interrupt your busy morning (evening) with the fantastic news that you've won a "free" shampooing of any room of your choice? All you need to do is specify a time to take advantage of your phenomenal good fortune!

So who's doing the calling?.. Why, it's your friendly vacuum cleaner salesman, and the shampoo routine is what's known in sales jargon as the "hook"—the device he uses to get his foot in the door to sell you several hundred dollars worth of vacuum equipment and attachments (including a shampoo attachment, of course!).

"So what's wrong with a free gift," you ask, "since I'm under no obligation to buy anything?"

Consider...

As a professional cleaner, you may consider me prejudiced; but sit still a moment and consider...

First, consider the salesman's chemical. Is it highly alkaline? If so, don't dare let him use it on your expensive wool carpet! Got a synthetic, you say? What about color transfer or loss?.. And since the job's free, will he be using a cheap product which will cause rapid resoiling due to gummy detergent residue?..

What about his level of experience? Will his uneven application technique result in distortion of your carpet's face yarn? Does he know how to avoid overwetting which could result in sour odors, and eventually, mildew which could destroy your carpet's backing? Have you checked his liability coverage?..

In short, is it worth the risk?

Hey, don't let me stop you. Buy the darn vacuum cleaner and all the attachments (it may even be a decent machine)! But for heavens sake, leave the cleaning to a professional who knows what he's doing.

In the immortal words of the late P. T. Barnum (tactfully paraphrased, of course), "There's one born every minute!"

Don't you be that one!..

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined broadly today as the dollar fell in foreign exchange and interest rates rose.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 12.92 to 2,668.69 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by nearly 2 to 1 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 330 up, 621 down and 453 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 16.10 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The dollar lost ground against leading foreign currencies after officials of the Group of Seven industrialized countries issued a statement over the weekend declaring recent strength in the U.S. currency undesirable.

That sent interest rates higher in the credit markets this morning. Prices of long-term government bonds fell about $5 for each $1,000 in face value, raising their yields to the 8.24 percent-8.30 percent range.

Analysts said that dampened interest in stocks at a time when many investors were already concerned that the market was due for a "correction" after its sharp rise over the first eight months of the year.

Losers among the blue chips included Philip Morris, down 1¼ at 156⅜; Procter & Gamble, down 1⅛ at 118¾; General Motors, down ¼ at 47⅜, and Alcoa, down ½ at 73¾.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks fell .94 to 191.79. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off .19 at 381.19.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 1.33 to 2,681.61, finishing the week with a net gain of 7.03 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 8 to 7 on the NYSE, with 727 up, 637 down and 576 unchanged.

Economic Growth Apt To Continue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The economy will continue to grow through 1990, forestalling until at least 1991 a recession that many once forecast for next year, top business economists said today.

Nearly two-thirds of the 72 forecasting experts surveyed by the National Association of Business Economists said they think a recession is not likely before 1991. A third of them said a recession will not arrive until 1992 or later.

"If the expansion does continue until that time," the association said, "it will set a record for the longest expansion (in either war or peacetime) in the history of the United States."

The nation's economy currently is enjoying record peacetime growth which will be seven years old in December. The longest expansion ever occurred in the February 1961-December 1969 period that included the Vietnam war.

The survey was being presented at NABE's annual meeting in San Francisco. A copy was made available here.

In its previous quarterly survey last May, NABE found that 63 percent of the respondents expected the next recession next year. Now, only 37 percent foresee a serious downturn by 1990.

In today's survey, 32 percent said the next recession would not begin until 1991, another 14 percent said 1992 and 17 percent said 1993 or later. Twelve percent said a recession would arrive before year's end and 25 percent expected it next year.

"At the time of this writing, the Fed seems to have engineered the much-awaited 'soft-landing,'" the report said, referring to the continued but slower economic growth sought by the Federal Reserve as it seeks to control inflation.

"Economic growth has dropped to below 3 percent, inflation is dropping and interest rates are easing," it continued. "A majority of NABE panel members expect this soft landing to continue through 1990, with real growth at a level fast enough to keep the unemployment rate below 6 percent, but slow enough to keep inflation in the 4-4½ percent range."

However, the survey responses did imply a slowdown in economic growth in the last half of this year.

The forecasters' median growth rate for the gross national product, the nation's broadest measure of economic health, during the final three months of 1989 is 2.1 percent. That compares with a 3.1 percent growth in the first half of the year.

The survey found a substantial majority expect growth to continue at about the same 2.1 percent rate throughout 1990.

At the same time, the economists scaled back their inflation forecast to 5 percent for the October-December quarter, down from 5.3 percent in the May survey. The median forecast for inflation in 1990 is 4.3 percent.

Judges Threaten Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOGOTA, Colombia — Judges are threatening to strike for more protection from the cocaine traffickers at war with the government of President Virgilio Barco, who heads to Washington this week for talks with President Bush.

On Sunday night, three more bombs exploded at banks in the capital but caused no injuries.

The blasts are among more than 100 attacks — blamed on drug gangs — that have killed at least six people and injured 130 since the war began Aug. 18.

Also Sunday, the editor of a crusading anti-drug newspaper called Colombian congressmen cowards in the fight against cocaine traffickers.

Judicial union officials were to meet today with acting Justice Minister Carlos Lemos Simmonds to discuss security, which they say should include bulletproof cars and vests, guards with metal detectors at their offices and other security measures.

"We don't see any will on the part of the government to increase security for our lives," Antonio Suarez Nino, president of the National Association of Judicial Employees, said Sunday in a communique.

Monica de Greiff, who resigned as justice minister last week after being threatened by drug traffickers, said she was promised $19 million in extra U.S. aid earlier this month to protect judges.

The union said it has heard nothing since about the aid.

Colombian judges say that in the meantime many of them earn so little that they are forced to take a bus to work despite cocaine barons' threats to kill 10 judges for each suspected trafficker extradited to the United States.

Since 1981, about 50 judges and 170 judicial employees have been killed and judges this year have repeatedly walked off the job or threatened to strike over a lack of security.

The National Association of Judicial Employees says 1,600 of the country's 5,000 judges have been threatened with death in the last 12 months.

Dollar Plunges

Beregovoy said that the coordinated intervention on the part of governments to push the dollar lower was "confirmation and illustration" of the resolve of the Group of Seven to cooperate on international economic matters.

Some critics have complained that the G-7 coordination process was in danger of coming apart, given a failure so far in the year by the group to influence the dollar's exchange rate.

Beregovoy, briefing reporters at the French Embassy, said that the G-7 communique "meant what it said" and he said it reflected "the reassertion of our common will to cooperate in monetary terms."

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar plunged 2.05 yen to a closing 142.95 yen. The dollar later fell even further in London trading.

Karl Otto Poehl, president of the West German central bank, confirmed for reporters that widespread intervention was occurring and said that it was "appropriate and reasonable" given the need to make further progress in reducing world trade imbalances.

Despite today's sharp plunge in the dollar's value, private economists said it remained to be seen whether intervention would work any better in the long term than it has up until now at keeping the U.S. currency from rising.

The sessions of the IMF and World Bank are focusing on such topics as the Bush administration efforts to reduce a portion of the Third World's debt burden and proposals to assist in the dramatic political and economic reforms under way in Poland and Hungary.

IMF officials told reporters today that there had been no final decision on the question of doubling IMF resources, although they predicted that the matter could still be resolved by the end of this year.

While there is overwhelming support among the 152 nations for at least some type of increase, the United States, which has veto power on the issue, remains opposed.

IMF Managing Director Michel Camdessus insisted that the outlook for an increase still looked encouraging, saying he believed there was a "growing perception of the weight of the responsibilities put on our sholders" to help carry out the Bush administration's Third World debt reduction strategy.

In the Group of Seven communique, issued late Saturday after a day of closed-door dicussions, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady and his counterparts from the other countries expressed their displeasure with the persistent increase in the dollar's value this year.

The joint statement called the dollar's increase "inconsistent with longer-run economic fundamentals" and said a further rise could "adversely affect prospects for the world economy."

minute remaining in a favorable 45-minute launch period.

The satellite, called FLTSATCOM-8, for fleet communications satellite, is the last of a series of eight and will complete a constellation of six orbiting switchboards that provide military command teams instant communications with farflung units. Two of the earlier launches failed.

Today's launch was delayed more than two years because of a 1987 launch pad accident that severely damaged the rocket's Centaur stage.

With the launch, NASA's only remaining launch vehicle here is the manned space shuttle. When the agency has a need for an unmanned rocket, it will have to buy launch services from private companies. It already has committed to seven such contracts in coming years.

The unmanned launch today was the 448th for NASA, dating from a Thor Able that lifted off Oct. 11, 1958, hoisting the Pioneer 1 probe toward a flyby of the moon. It failed, as did several other early launches. But the good shots came, and the agency's overall success rate is better than 90 percent.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration stopped buying Atlas-Centaur, Delta and other space boosters early in the 1980s, opting instead to launch all its payloads from the shuttle.

Officials admitted that was a mistake after the shuttle Challenger exploded in 1986.

Americans Salvage Tie But Europe Keeps Cup

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SUTTON COLDFIELD, England — The pond at the 18th hole of The Belfry is an unpleasant place. Bees swarm around the footbridge that connects the fairway with the green, and the meandering water is dyed a vile greenish-blue. Even the ducks don't stay there long.

Because shots kept plopping in this smaller, more brackish body of water, the U.S. Ryder Cup team is crossing the Atlantic Ocean today empty-handed, while Europe keeps the cup without a victory.

And the question the three-day tournament was supposed to answer — who plays better golf, the Americans or the Europeans — remains open.

"I think a draw was a fair result," European captain Tony Jacklin said.

With old-timers Christy O'Connor Jr., of Ireland and Jose-Maria Canizares of Spain leading the way, the Europeans retained the golden trophy with a 14-14 tie, losing Sunday's matchplay singles 7-5 and missing its own shot at a third consecutive victory. A drive into the water at 18 by Nick Faldo helped deprive the Europeans of the half-point they needed to win.

The United States avoided defeat with final-hole victories in the last two matches, including a win by U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange with birdies on the last four holes. The Americans said a tie was better than a third successive loss.

"I looked forward to going back with the Ryder Cup on the Concorde," U.S. captain Ray Floyd said. "I'm not going back with the Ryder Cup but I'm not going back a loser. We stopped the losing streak. We halved it."

But golden U.S. chances to regain the cup lost here four years ago drowned at the 18th, as first Payne Stewart and then Mark Calcavecchia drove into the water and handed victories 1-up victories to Jose-Maria Olazabal and Mark Calcavecchia.

"We had everything going for us," America's Tom Kite said. "We had an excellent chance to win the cup, but you have to play all 18."

Kite never got close to the 18th. He started the United States with an 8 and 7 victory over Howard Clark of Britain, the biggest winning margin in singles since they went to 18 holes in 1961.

Two teammates quickly joined him — Chip Beck beating Bernhard Langer of West Germany 3 and 1, and Paul Azinger coming from two holes down to beat Seve Ballesteros of Spain 1-up.

The United States had three of the

Another Montana Miracle

Rallies 49ers To 38-28 Win Over Eagles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — Maybe the difference between the quarterback of the '80s and the quarterback-to-be of the '90s is that Joe Montana has been bringing his team back for a decade.

Randall Cunningham's comeback reputation goes back only a week.

"When there's two minutes left and we're down and need a score, Joe Montana's the man," San Francisco fullback Tom Rathman said after Montana's four fourth-quarter touchdown passes gave the quarterback and his 49ers a 38-28 win over Cunningham and his Eagles on Sunday.

It didn't match Montana's winning 92-yard drive in the final two minutes of last January's Super Bowl against Cincinnati. But it will do for now, particularly since the Eagles (somewhat prematurely) were talking Super Bowl after Cunningham rallied them from a 20-0 deficit to a 42-37 victory in Washington last week.

It was vintage Montana, who three years ago came back in eight weeks from what might have been a career-ending back injury to get the 49ers into the playoffs.

In fact, he spent most of the first three quarters literally on that back — he was sacked four times in the first quarter, two more in the second and went down eight times in the game.

Moreover, his bruised ribs taped, he spent the rest of his time dodging the likes of Reggie White and Clyde Simmons, rolling right, rolling left, ducking up the middle. Once, he tripped over right guard Bruce Collie's ankle and was fallen on for a safety; another time he tripped over (Collie? a seam in the artificial turf? his own foot?) and lost more yardage.

But he hung in there, even when the 49ers fell behind 28-17 with 8:24 left on Cunningham's best drive of the day — a 3-yard touchdown pass to Jimmie Giles following a 33-yard strike to Giles.

Just over two minutes later, Montana hit Rathman for an 8-yard score. Then he hit Brent Jones for a 24-yard touchdown and 1:15 later, following Ronnie Lott's interception, it was 33 yards to Jerry Rice, who had caught a 68-yard scoring pass on the game's first series.

Cunningham?

A relatively sedate 19 of 38 for 192 yards plus 52 yards in 8 carries to (as usual) lead the team in rushing.

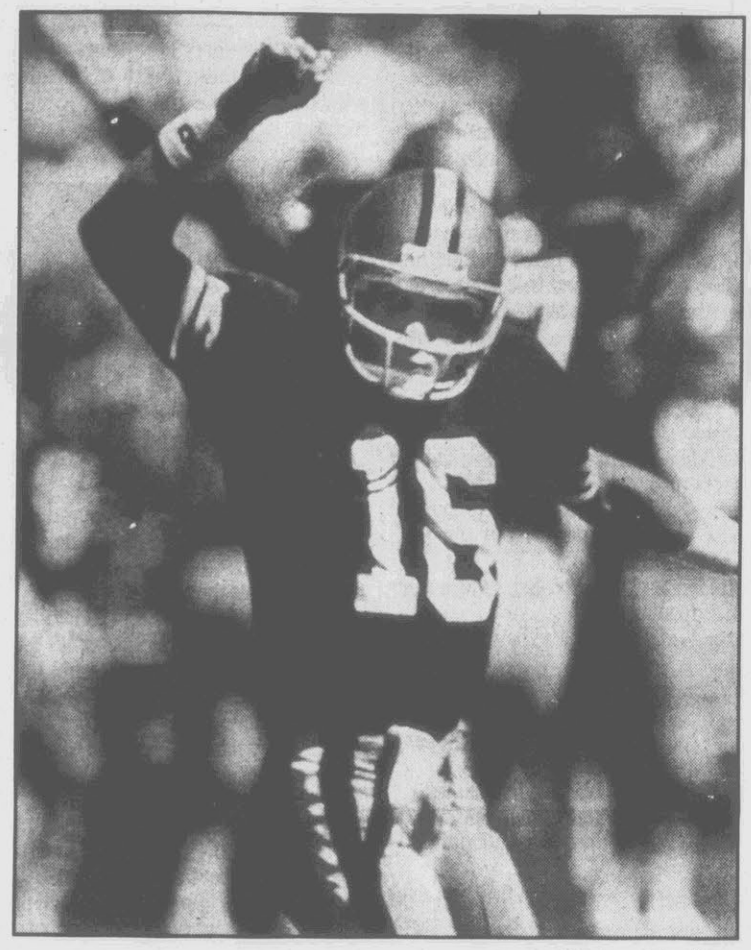

So who's the king of the quarterback hill?

Montana defers to his wide receivers — Rice and John Taylor, who had 12 catches for 300 yards between them — Taylor ran 65 yards with a 5-yard pop to start the fourth quarter scoring.

But cast at least one vote for Montana from Randall Cunningham, the once and future king.

"He's the most productive quarterback you can find," said Mr. Eagle. "He always seems to be able to get his team to play better in the fourth quarter."

And add one more for the team of the '80s from the man who runs what he still hopes will be the team of 1989.

Monday Quarterback:

Saturday night's performance must have warmed the fans of East Carolina University just as certainly as the chilled winds which blew over Ficklen Stadium in the second half sent many of them scurrying for their cars.

It was a banner night for the Pirates. Travis Hunter and Jeff Blake set a new single-game school passing record with 299 yards, thanks to some outstanding receptions by their receiving corps.

The Pirates rolled up a 56-10 victory against a Division I-AA team, Illinois State. It could have been much worse. East Carolina, once it got its feet under it in the middle of the first period, had the opportunity to score on just about every possession. Mainly it was their continued mistakes — penalties, fumbles and interceptions — that halted them.

Once Blake came on, some questioned why Coach Bill Lewis was continuing to pass the ball. Generally, some folks feel that once you get a lead on an obviously weaker team, you keep the ball on the ground. You don't "rub it in" by throwing the ball.

Well, maybe that's true to some extent. But here you have a fairly inexperienced quarterback in Blake, a true sophomore whom many thought would be redshirted this year. However, Lewis decided that the need for him to be ready was now, not a year from now, and he was thrown into the battle. And were else to best learn the passing game than on the field against another team. Thus, the passing continued.

Miami's teams, for years, have operated under the same principal. You play your game the same way regardless of which unit is on the field.

Hopefully, the lessons will be well-learned.

Some, apparently are not. The Pirates continued to roll up the penalty yardage, something they must guard against in the future. There are no more Bowling Greens or Illinois States on the schedule from here on out. Mistakes will suddenly become much more costly, as Lewis has been saying since the season began.

Being 3-0 is great, both for the Pirates and their fans. Being 5-0 over the last two seasons is even greater. ECU hasn't opened a season at 3-0 since the 1977 team of Pat Dye went 4-0 before losing to South Carolina by 19-16. The Pirates haven't won five in a row since the nationally ranked team of 1983 when they won games two through six.

A victory this Saturday against Louisiana Tech would give ECU its longest winning streak since 1978-79, when Dye's teams won five in a row at the end of the '78 campaign and one to start the '79 slate.

It would also mark the longest opening win streak for any first-year Pirate coach. Lewis' team has tied the mark of three set by John Christenbury's 1940 Pirates and tied by Dye's 1974 team.

Certainly, it will get tougher from here on in. Louisiana Tech will be the toughest test the Pirates have had this year. One must not be fooled by the Bulldogs' 1-2 record. They drubbed a pretty good Southwestern Louisiana team, 40-14, before falling to Mid-American Conference defending champion Western Michigan, 24-20, and tough Southeastern power Florida, 34-7. All three of those games were on the road.

Louisiana Tech is the newest member of Division I-A and is out to prove it belongs. East Carolina will be favored, but with the likes of South Carolina, a much-improved Virginia Tech and Syracuse waiting over the next few weeks, mistakes must be cut to the absolute minimum.

Or else, the winning streak will quickly come to an end.

Bills Survive Shootout In Astrodome

Bears, Rams, Jets Need Offensive Surge To Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Defense wins in the NFL?

Tell that to the Bills, Jets, Bears, Rams and 49ers, all of whom scored at least 38 points Sunday. And won.

And tell it to the Oilers, Dolphins, Lions, Packers and Eagles, all with at least 27 points — and all losers.

Scoring is up in the NFL this season — through two weeks, it was ahead 6.2 points and will go up more after this weekend's blitz.

That blitz included Buffalo's 47-41 victory in overtime at Houston; New York's comeback 40-33 win at Miami; Chicago 47-27 rout of Detroit; Los Angeles outlasting Green Bay 41-38; and San Francisco's sizzling late rally for a 38-28 decision at Philadelphia.

Also filling the end zone were the New York Giants, who beat Phoenix 35-7; Denver, which downed the Raiders 31-21; and Washington, a 30-7 winner against Dallas.

Other winners were Pittsburgh, which stunned Minnesota 27-14; Indianapolis, 13-9 over Atlanta; Tampa Bay, 20-10 over New Orleans; Seattle, 24-3 against New England; and San Diego, 21-6 against Kansas City.

Bills 47, Oilers 41, OT

"The Buffalo Bills have arrived," Jim Kelly said after throwing five touchdown passes, the last a 28-yarder to Andre Reed that won it. "When you can score that many points when you have to, you've really done your job."

Kelly did his job the way he did when Houston was his professional football home — as a Gambler in the USFL. He connected with Reed for a 78-yard TD and also had touchdown passes of six, 63 and 26 yards.

"This is my best game as a pro," Kelly said. "Our team talk this week was that we do not give up. Today our receivers and offensive line did a heck of a job."

The Oilers offense didn't do badly, either. Warren Moon hit 28 of 42 passes for 338 yards, throwing for a score and running for another. Tony Zendejas made a 52-yard field goal with three seconds left, forcing overtime.

Zendejas, however, missed twice in OT. His 43-yard attempt was blocked by Ray Bentley, but Buffalo was offside. Then he kicked wide to the left from 37 yards.

Jets 40, Dolphins 33

As usual, these two AFC East rivals staged a wild shootout. As has happened in six of the last nine meetings, the Dolphins made the critical mistake.

"We always play games like this against the Jets," said Dan Marino, who threw for 427 yards and three touchdowns but was picked off by James Hasty with the score 33-33 as the Jets marched to the winning score. "We let things slip away from us at the end. We've got to find an answer to that."

The Dolphins have scored at least 30 points in their past seven games with the Jets, but won only twice.

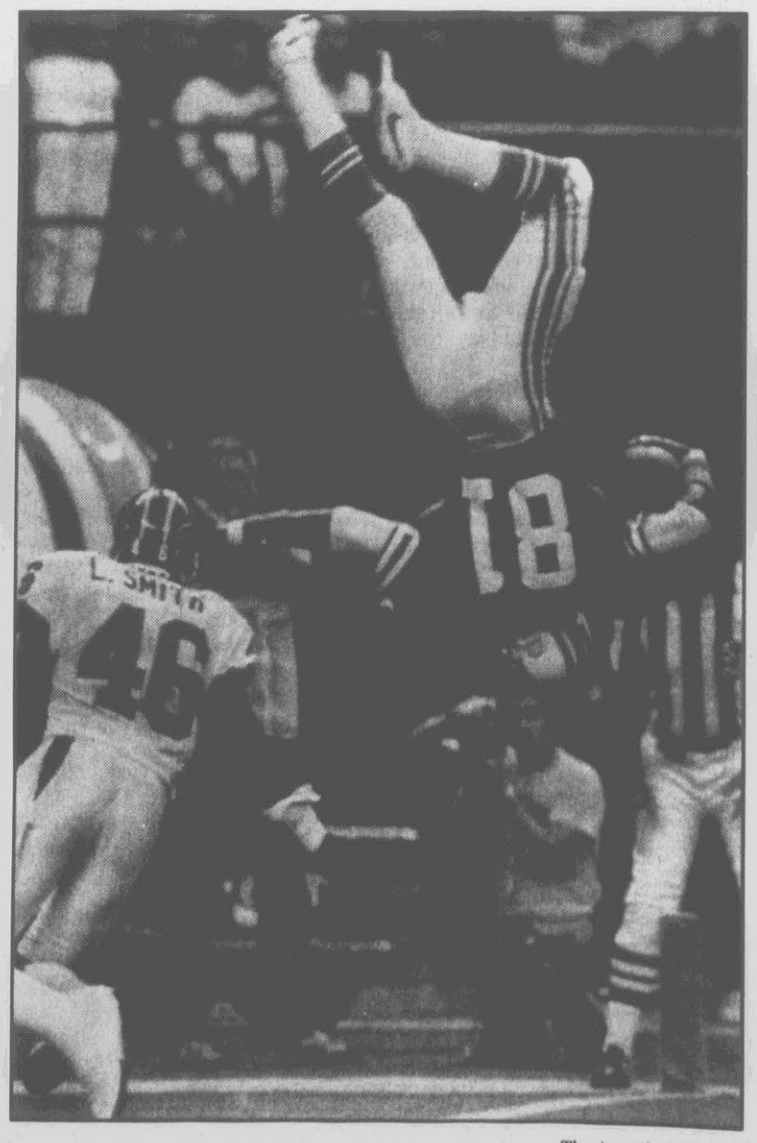

Ken O'Brien threw three touchdown passes and directed the Jets to 28 points on their four second-half possessions, hitting Roger Vick from 11 yards for the winning score with 1:29 left.

New York wide receiver Al Toon caught 10 passes for 159 yards, including eight for 138 in the second half.

Bears 47, Lions 27

Mike Tomczak and Neal Anderson had their most productive NFL outings. Tomczak, 19-3 as a starter, had completed only 40 percent of his passes before riddling the Lions (0-3) for 17 of 25 for a 302 yards. It was the 10th straight time the Anderson rushed for 116 yards, including a 53-yard touchdown run, and Chicago piled up 542 yards total offense. Barry Sanders rushed for 126 yards for Detroit but left with bruised ribs.

The Associated Press

Rams 41, Packers 38

Greg Bell rushed for 221 yards on 28 carries and scored two touchdowns, Jim Everett threw for two touchdowns and Vince Newsome return an interception 81 yards for a score as the Rams built a 38-7 halftime edge.

Then the Packers, who came back from a 21-0 hole to beat the Saints the previous week, stormed within 38-31 as Don Majkowski threw for 198 yards and two touchdowns. Brent Fullwood also had two scoring runs but his fumble on the Rams' 1 hurt.

"It was unfortunate, Fullwood feels real bad, but you can't blame him," Majkowski said of the fumble.

Redskins 30, Cowboys 7

Dallas' third straight loss caused the first verbal eruption by Jimmy Johnson, who already knows how Tom Landry felt last year. The Cowboys are 0-3 for the first time since 1963.

Charges Of Drug Use Will Be Reviewed

NEW YORK (AP) — The governing body of track in the United States plans to review charges in a West German magazine of drug use by Olympic champions Florence Griffith Joyner, Carl Lewis and other Americans.

"We are going to review the current statements of what Darrell Robinson said along with other evidence before we can contemplate our strategy, so we can get to the bottom of all these things," Frank Greenberg, president of The Athletics Congress, said Saturday.

Robinson, U.S. 400-meter champion in 1986, told the West German magazine Stern that he sold banned growth hormones to Griffith Joyner. Robinson said he saw a needle containing an "oily, ginger-ale colored" fluid being administered to Lewis. Robinson also said he was told by Lewis' coach to take steroids.

TAC has powers of suspension and can invalidate records of athletes who admit using performance-enhancing drugs.

Dibble's Suspension Lasts One Day

ATLANTA — Rob Dibble, suspended indefinitely by the Reds Saturday for insubordination, was reinstated Sunday before Cincinnati's game 6-2 loss to the Atlanta Braves.

"I just had a meeting with him, and we got things worked out," Reds manager Tommy Helms said Sunday. "He wants to be part of this club."

The Reds had said Saturday that Dibble was suspended for insubordination. Helms revealed the reason on Sunday.

"I put the take sign on and he swung," Helms said of an incident in Friday night's game. "He was fined $500, which is as much as we could fine him. I had to do what I thought was right but I'd rather just drop it. We got things worked out. He wants to be a part of this ballclub. It's his livlihood."

Dibble, who did not pitch Sunday, said he had discussed the incident with his teammates.

"I talked to them, but what I said was between me and them," he said. "I'm back, that's all that's important. I want to be a part of this ballclub."

Fittipaldi Clinches Indy-Car Championship

NAZARETH, Pa. (AP) — Emerson Fittipaldi won the Bosch Spark Plug Grand Prix Sunday, clinching the CART-PPG Indy-car championship after Rick Mears jumped the gun out of a fuel stop, costing himself a shot at the race victory and the series title.

Mears took the lead from teammate Danny Sullivan when Sullivan pitted for fuel on lap 154 of 200. Fittipaldi moved back to second and continued to battle Mears for the lead until Mears was forced to pit for fuel 12 laps from the end.

While in the pits, the three-time series champion thought he heard his crew yell "go" and left too soon, breaking the fuel vent hose and leaving a piece of it sticking out of the car. When CART officials black-flagged him two laps later, Fittipaldi made a quick stop of his own and then roared to a 4.796-second victory, allowing him to join Mario Andretti as the only drivers to win the Formula One and Indy-car titles.

Lopez Rules MBS Classic

BUENA PARK, Calif. (AP) — Maybe Alice Ritzman could have caught Nancy Lopez if they were playing somewhere else.

But it was a hot afternoon in Southern California and Lopez recovered from a shaky start and carded a 2-under-par 70 Sunday to win the MBS Classic by two strokes over Ritzman and rookie Pam Wright.

Lopez, who had a 72-hole total of 11-under-par 277, won her 42nd career tournament and her seventh in Southern California.

"I don't know what it is about this area," she said. "Maybe it's just the warm weather. I love to play in the heat."

Ritzman shot a 67, but started the day six shots off the pace while Lopez was only one back.

"I gave it my best shot. But it's tough to spot a player like Nancy Lopez a few strokes on the last day," said Ritzman, who tied with Wright at 279.

But she got back into contention with a birdie at the fourth, and moved into a share of the lead with a birdie at the ninth. It was the second straight day she made her move on the ninth hole.

Her key birdie, however, came at the 10th when she hit her third shot over the green, then chipped in from 30 feet.

Beth Daniel, who had won two tournaments in a row, shot a 70 to finish tied for fourth at 280 with Pat Bradley (69) and Colleen Walker (71).

Schulz Notches Win In Southern Open

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — Ted Schulz wouldn't allow himself to think about winning. But the 29-year-old unknown finally did — and won anyway.

Schulz shot a 4-under-par 66 Sunday to hold off a streaking Tim Simpson and Jay Haas and capture by one stroke his first PGA tournament, the Southern Open, with a 266 total.

Simpson rang up a 63 with eight birdies over his final 13 holes on a cloudy day with blustery winds to put the pressure on Schulz, playing about an hour behind.

"I didn't think about winning until No. 16," said Schulz, who played on the Asian tour last year after failing to qualify for the PGA tour. He earned only $18,000 in 1987, his first year on tour.

"I was trying not to think about winning and just play each hole,"

In contention several times earlier in the year, Schulz said he thought about winning, and stumbled. His best previous finish was a tie for third in Milwaukee.

"But I saw Tim (Simpson) climbing up the board and told myself I had better keep playing like I have," Schulz said. "I had led a couple of tournaments the first two days and thought about winning."

After rounds of 66, 68 and 66 on the par-70, 6,775-yard Green Island Country Club course, Schulz started the day two shots off third-round leader David Canipe's 198 total.

He got a share of the lead on the first hole after Canipe double-bogeyed and Schulz got the first of his five birdies. He added a birdie on No. 3, bogeyed No. 8 to fall one behind Simpson, but got back even with birdies on Nos. 10 and 11.

"I knew at No. 16 if I could get a birdie, I could win," said Schulz, who managed only a par there, but knocked in a 15-footer on the next hole to capture the title.

"It's been a dream year," he said after qualifying for next year's Masters and earning a two-year exemption on tour.

Bob Tway, Larry Rinker and Lance Ten Broeck tied for fourth at 270. Tway had a 67, Rinker a 68 and Ten Broeck a 69 Sunday. Canipe stumbled in with a 76 and fell back to 274.

Aunese Loses Battle With Cancer

DENVER (AP) — Former University of Colorado quarterback Sal Aunese died of cancer at the age of 21 Saturday night, a week after being admitted to University Hospital.

Aunese, who led the Buffaloes to an 8-3 record last season, was first diagnosed as having inoperable stomach and lung cancer last March. He was brought to the hospital Sunday after he began having trouble breathing.

DALLAS (AP) — Martina Navratilova defeated 15-year-old Monica Seles 7-6 (7-2), 6-3 to win the $250,000 Dallas women's tournament Sunday. Navratilova's seventh singles title this year and the 145th of her career was worth $50,000.

Waltrip Feasts At Martinsville

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MARTINSVILLE, Va. — Rusty Wallace's hunger for his first Winston Cup championship translated into another feast for Darrell Waltrip at Martinsville Speedway.

"When you're second in points like Rusty was, he knew he had to get by Dale. He was trying to have the best of both worlds," Waltrip said after he took advantage of a late-race confrontation between Wallace and Dale Earnhardt to win the Goody's 500.

With 56 laps remaining in the 500-lap event, Wallace was running his Pontiac Grand Prix up front and was bidding to put Earnhardt a lap down.

As they entered the first turn on Martinsville's narrow, low-banked oval, Wallace went to the high side of the track and pulled alongside Earnhardt's Chevrolet Lumina.

But both cars had difficulty holding their lines as they went into the second turn, and they came together and slid up toward the retaining wall.

Waltrip, who had his Lumina positioned on Wallace's rear bumper as the three entered the turn, ducked down near the apron of the track and zipped past Wallace and Earnhardt.

Wallace got by Earnhardt, but his car had little left after that. He wound up fourth after being passed by Harry Gant and Dick Trickle in the closing laps.

Gant was running 0.99 seconds behind Waltrip when the leader's younger brother, Michael, spun out and tagged the wall less than two laps from the finish. The elder Waltrip took the checkered flag under yellow.

Waltrip said it was the first time he could remember three cars running side by side through a turn at Martinsville and not wrecking.

"I just knew it was going to be a heck of a pass or a heck of a miss," he said. "It was just like a big wave opened up, and I just shot right through."

It was Waltrip's third consecutive victory at Martinsville, his fourth in the last five on the .526-mile layout and 11th overall at the facility.

"I've won here before when I didn't have a real good car," he said, "but today was the best car I've ever had here."

Waltrip averaged 76.571 mph and won $55,650 for the 79th triumph of his career.

Waltrip was hoping to win substantially more money through the Unocal Challenge, a bonus that goes to any driver who can win a race from the pole.

Waltrip posted the top qualifying speed in Friday's opening round of time trials, only to have it bettered by Jimmy Hensley, the last driver to make a qualifying run. Hensley was substituting as a driver for Earnhardt, unable to get to Martinsville in time because of damage by Hurricane Hugo to his farm in Mooresville, N.C.

The Unocal bonus, $7,600 per race, had gone uncollected since the second event of the season, and the total purse had grown to $167,200 for the Goody's 500.

But since Hensley just qualified the car for Earnhardt and watched the race from the stands, no one was eligible to win the bonus Sunday.

Mitchell Closing In On 50 Homers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Not since before Babe Ruth hit 54 in 1920 has there been a decade without a 50-home run hitter. Kevin Mitchell is the last chance to keep that streak from ending.

Mitchell hit his 47th homer, drove in his 125th run and scored his 100th run Sunday as San Francisco beat Houston 10-2 and eliminated the Astros from from the National League West.

Mitchell

The Giants lead San Diego by five games with six games remaining. Any combination of San Francisco victories and Padres losses totaling two would give the Giants the title.

Mitchell has been bothered by a sore right knee. He says he won't let that get in the way of his attempt for 50, a number last reached in 19776 by George Foster.

"If I don't have it, I'd love to stay in the lineup, no matter what," Mitchell said.

Willie Mays coached Mitchell in spring training. He joked with Mitchell Sunday about his chase for 50.

"Before that home run," Mitchell said, "Willie saw me going out there and said I could bunt four more home runs."

Robby Thompson hit a three-run homer and Mike LaCoss, 9-10, scattered eight hits and struck out four in his first complete game since he shut out St. Louis on July 8, 1988.

LaCoss, booed often by the Candlestick crowd this year, said he wanted to finish when Manager Roger Craig offered to remove him for a pinch hitter in the eighth inning.

"I wanted to experience the cheers again," LaCoss said.

Padres 1, Dodgers 0

Orel Hershiser, 14-15, lost his seventh straight decision as San Diego kept alive by winning on the road. Hershiser, who has gotten 17 runs in his 15 losses, allowed eight hits in seven innings and Tony Gwynn's sacrifice fly. The Dodgers have scored only three runs in his last 50 innings.

Andy Benes, 6-2, won his sixth straight, allowing four hits in 7⅔ innings and striking out seven. Mark Davis finished for his 42nd save in 46 opportunities.

Cubs 4, Pirates 2

Chicago moved another step closer to the National League East title, lowering their magic number to three. The Cubs lead St. Louis by four games wuth six remaining.

Dwight Smith drove in two runs and Ryne Sandberg had two hits as the Cubs won their fourth straight and finished their home season with a 48-33 record. Steve Wilson, 6-4, allowed three hits in five innings and Jeff Pico got two outs for his first save this season and second of his career.

Cardinals 2, Phillies 1

Chuck McElroy's bases-loaded walk to Tony Pena forced in the go-ahead run in the eighth inning after Terry Pendleton singled with two outs off Jeff Parrett, 12-6, and Parrett walked Jose Oquendo and Milt Thompson.

Ted Power, 7-7, got the victory, relieving Ken Dayley with two on and two outs in the eighth. John Costello pitched the ninth at Busch Stadium for his third save.

Expos 6, Mets 5

Dave Martinez's two-run, two-out single off Julio Machado, 0-1, capped a five-run ninth-inning rally at Shea Stadium. New York trails first-place Chicago by 6½ games with seven games remaining.

Joe Hesketh, 6-4, pitched two-thirds of an inning of hitless relief and Tim Burke got two outs for his 28th save.

Braves 6, Reds 2

Gary Eave, 2-0, won in his second major-league start, sending the visiting Reds to their 11th loss in 13 games. Scott Scudder, 4-8, gave up five hits in six innings for the Reds and struck out seven.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

So it has come down to this. The American League East, laughed at all season for its mediocrity, once again has the best race in baseball.

With one week left, can the Toronto Blue Jays hold off their own past along with the worst-to-first Baltimore Orioles?

Both teams lost Sunday, leaving Toronto ahead by one game. The last time the Blue Jays took a lead into the last week, they had one of the great collapses in history, losing seven straight and blowing the 1987 title to Detroit.

Milwaukee, still on the fringe, beat visiting Toronto 8-3 and stayed 5½ games behind. The Orioles, like the Blue Jays, lost two of three during the weekend, falling 2-0 to New York.

"It's a little easier to swallow when the Orioles lose," Toronto manager Cito Gason said. "We just hope they (Milwaukee) do well in the next couple of games here."

Baltimore begins a three-game series tonight in Milwaukee while Toronto plays in Detroit. Next weekend, the Orioles and Blue Jays finish with three games at the SkyDome.

"We're one out with six games to go," Baltimore's Jeff Ballard said. "I think it's still anybody's title."

The AL West, meanwhile, is going Oakland's way for the second straight year. The Athletics reduced their magic number to two by routing Minnesota 9-3. California and Kansas City are tied for second place, 5½ games behind.

Cleveland got past California 5-4, Kansas City topped Seattle 4-1, Boston beat Detroit 4-2 and Texas downed Chicago 5-4 in 10 innings.

Any combination of Toronto wins or Milwaukee losses totaling two will eliminate the Brewers.

"We have to win every game to stay in it. There is still some hope for us," said Joey Meyer, who hit a three-run double for Milwaukee. "We just have to play hard the rest of the year. Everybody has a good attitude about it."

Meyer's double made it 5-2 in the sixth. The Brewers got insurance in the seventh on RBI singles by Paul Molitor, Glenn Braggs and Rob Deer.

Tom Filer, 7-3, gave up two runs on six hits in six innings and Chuck Crim got his third save.

Yankees 2, Orioles 0

The Orioles stranded two runners in each of the last three innings. Cary, 4-4, gave up two hits and struck out 10 and Dave Righetti earned his 25th save.

Jeff Ballard, the league's winningest left-hander, fell to 18-8.

The Orioles lost just their third series at home in the last 16. They drew 51,173 fans for their final home game, raising the season attendance to a record 2,534,875.

Athletics 9, Twins 3

Mark McGwire hit two home runs and Storm Davis won his 19th game as Oakland beat Minnesota at the Metrodome for its sixth victory in seven games.

The Athletics play their final seven games at home. They finished with a 45-36 road record, the best in baseball.

Dave Parker's two-run single put the Athletics ahead 4-3 in the fifth and Jose Canseco hit an RBI single in the seventh. Dave Henderson singled home a run in the ninth and McGwire followed with a three-run homer, his 31st.

McGwire, who hit a solo home run in the second, has hit 30 homers in each of his first three seasons.

Davis, 19-7, has one more start in hopes of joining teammate Dave Stewart as a 20-game winner. Dennis Eckersley got his 32nd save.

Indians 5, Angels 4

Cleveland completed its first four-game sweep against California since 1965 when Brook Jacoby's RBI single capped a two-run rally in the bottom of the ninth inning.

The Indians, held hitless since the second inning, came back when Jerry Browne singled with one out. Dave Clark walked, Joey Belle doubled home the tying run with two outs and Jacoby singled.

Jesse Orosco, 2-4, pitched one inning for the victory. Willie Fraser, 4-7, was the loser.

Royals 4, Mariners 1

Steve Farr won his first start in more than a year and Bo Jackson hit a two-run triple as Kansas City stopped Seattle.

The Royals had been shut out on a total of four hits in the first two games of the series.

Farr, in his first start since June 6, 1988, gave up one run on five hits in six innings. Jeff Montgomery got his 19th save.

Red Sox 4, Tigers 2

Wade Boggs singled twice and scored two runs as Boston won in Detroit.

Boggs needs three hits to become the first player to get 200 hits and 100 walks in four straight years. Lou Gehrig did it three consecutive seasons.

Oil Can Boyd, 3-2, won for the first time in six career decisions at Tiger Stadium. Lee Smith got his 24th save.

Rangers 5, White Sox 4

Irish Keep Hold On 1st; Miami 2nd

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For the third straight week, Notre Dame is No. 1 in The Associated Press college football poll and Miami, Fla., is hanging tough right behind.

And for the second straight week, the Top Ten remains virtually unchanged, with the exception of Pittsburgh joining the elite group.

Following their 21-13 victory over Michigan State on Saturday, the Fighting Irish received 57 of the 60 first-place votes for 1,497 points from the AP board — the exact total they had the previous week.

Miami, a 38-7 winner over Missouri, recorded 1,432 points this time to shave eight points off the Notre Dame lead. Like the previous week, the Hurricane received the other three first-place votes.

After that, it was Nebraska in the third spot with 1,315 points following a 48-0 pounding of Minnesota and Auburn, which was idle, No. 4 with 1,284.

Colorado didn't play, but moved up a spot to No. 5, replacing Michigan. The Wolverines, who needed a last-second field goal to beat UCLA, fell one spot to No. 6.

Clemson, Arkansas and West Virginia remained Nos. 7-8-9 after weekend successes. Clemson beat Maryland 31-7; Arkansas beat Mississippi 24-17 and West Virginia stopped Louisville 30-21.

Pitt replaced Syracuse as the No. 10 team following a 30-23 victory over the Orangemen, making a jump of three places.

The loss dropped Syracuse eight spots to No. 18, but it wasn't the biggest drop among the ranked teams. Washington plunged 10 places to No. 21 following a 20-17 loss to Arizona.

The voting by a panel of the nation's sports writers and broadcasters resulted in three new teams in the rankings: No. 23 Georgia, No. 24 Air Force and No. 25 Florida State.

The Top 25 dropouts included Oregon, UCLA and Ohio State.

The remainder of the Top 25 were No. 11, Southern Cal; No. 12, Tennessee; No. 13, Alabama; No. 14, Houston; No. 15, North Carolina State; No. 16, Oklahoma; No. 17, Arizona; No. 19, Washington State; No. 20, Illinois; and No. 22, Texas A&M.

Arizona made the biggest jump, moving up six places.

The Top Twenty Five teams in the Associated Press college football poll, with first-place votes in parentheses, records through Sept. 23, total points based on 25-24-23-22-21-20-19-18-17-16-15-14-13-12-11-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 and last week's ranking:

Bucs Stun Saints...

"We're not a very good football team, as anybody who saw us play can see, and it's not a good feeling," Johnson said. "I told my players I will not accept us being a poor football team.

"I can't live with this and I can't let them live with it."

Dallas rookie quarterbacks Troy Aikman and Steve Walsh each were intercepted twice as Waashington won its first road game after two losses at home.

With Gerald Riggs, the NFL's leading rusher, sitting out the second half with a bruised chest, Earnest Byner scored on his first run as a Redskin, a 12-yarder, and Jamie Morris scored a touchdown and gained 100 yards on 26 carries.

Broncos 31, Raiders 21

Denver victimized Jay Schroeder, who fumbled three times and was picked off another three times.

John Elway threw two touchdown passes to Mark Jackson and scrambled 29 yards for another score as the Broncos went up 28-0 and then withstood the Raiders' charge.

The Raiders rallied within a touchdown, reminding folks of Denver's collapse a year ago, when it blew a 24-0 halftime bulge. This time, Denver held on to move to 3-0.

Steelers 27, Vikings 14

After losing 51-0 and 41-10, the Steelers were in turmoil as the NFL's top-rated defense came to Pittsburgh.

The Vikings left town losers as their hosts recaptured some of the Steel Curtain's stinginess, sacking Minnesota quarterbacks five times, forcing two turnovers and holding the Vikes to 146 yards passing.

Seahawks 24, Patriots 3

Seattle took advantage of the undermanned New England defense, as Dave Krieg threw three touchdown passes in the last 8:15 of the first half. He found Louis Clark for 27 yards, Paul Skansi for 19 and John L. Williams from the 10.

Seattle, which never led in its first two games, and New England, which also gave up three first-half touchdown passes to Dan Marino the previous week, both are 1-2.

Giants 35, Cardinals 7

Phoenix's ride at the top ended quickly as the Giants forced six first-half turnovers. Terry Kinard had a 58-yard touchdown with an interception and New York, (3-0) intercepted four of Gary Hogeboom's first eight passes. The Giants also recovered two fumbles in building a 20-0 halftime lead.

Colts 13, Falcons 9

Indianapolis won its first game thanks to depth in the backfield. Trailing 9-0 and with star tailback Eric Dickerson (hamstring) and quarterback Chris Chandler (knee) sidelined, Albert Bentley and Jack Trudeau led the Colts back.

Dickerson and Chandler were hurt on the Colts' first series of the third quarter. But Trudeau ran for a score, Bentley had some key gains and Dean Biasucci kicked two field goals.

Atlanta, 1-2, has not beaten the Colts in 10 games.

Buccaneers 20, Saints 10

Tampa Bay knocked out two Saints quarterbacks and Vinny Testaverde once again was steady. Testaverde threw an 11-yard touchdown pass to Ron Hall in the second period and Lars Tate scored on a 5-yard run. He was intercepted once, giving him three this year; the quarterback set an NFL mark with 35 pickoffs last year.

Chargers 21, Chiefs 6

Rod Bernstine caught a touchdown pass and ran 32 yards for another score, and the Chargers intercepted Steve DeBerg five times, giving Dan Henning his first victory as Chargers coach.

Jim McMahon, acquired in a trade with Chicago in August, directed three scoring drives and threw for a touchdown. He finished with 96 yards, completing 11 of 18 attempts.

Player Of The Week

Levy Jones had a coming-out party in Roanoke's first game in the Tobacco Belt 1-A Conference Friday night, rushing for 310 yards on 31 carries as the Redskins rolled to a 35-18 win over Chocowinity.

The win was the first of the year for Roanoke, which dropped down from the Northeastern 2-A Conference this season.

Prep Honor Roll:

•Greene Central's John Dixon: Dixon, a senior fullback, scored two touchdowns and ran for 99 yards on 11 carries as the Rams topped C.B. Aycock, 21-14.

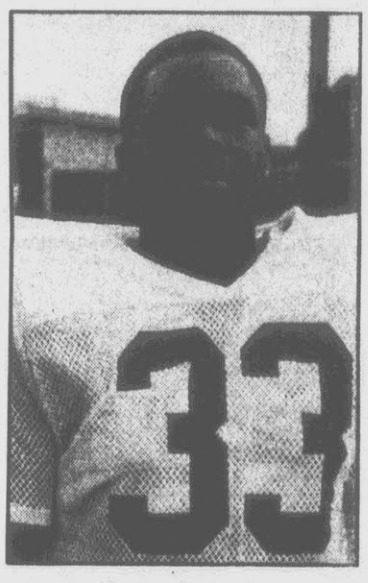

Dixon also had seven tackles and one interceptions.

•Washington's Damian Moore: Moore, a senior halfback, rushed for 208 yards on 21 carries and scored on a 39-yard touchdown run as the Pam Pack topped Southwest Edgecombe, 19-14.

•North Pitt's Reggie Daniel: Daniel, a senior halfback, scored a late touchdown to seal the Panthers' 22-13 win over Williamston while rushing for 135 yards on 21 carries.

•D.H. Conley defense: The Viking defenders, led by Terry Williams, kept highly regarded North Lenoir running back Tim Smith out of the end zone in a 13-0 Coastal Conference shutout victory Friday. Williams had a blocked punt and also rushed for 50 yards on four carries.

Smith, one of the more higly recruited backs in the East, ran for 127 yards on 17 carries, but 91 of them came off of two carries.

Levy Jones

Other than that, he was kept pretty much in check.

•Williamston's Shelton Slade: Slade, a junior halfback, ran for 95 yards on 11 carries in a 22-13 loss to North Pitt.

•Rose's Ty Ficking: Fickling scored two touchdowns and ran for 64 yards on 10 carries in Rose's 19-0 win over Northern Nash.

•Rose's Columbus Grice: Grice, a junior quarterback, took over some of the load on offense due to the loss of senior tailback Maurice Hines and passed for 114 yards with no interceptions in Rose's 19-0 win over Northern

Roseanne Says Wit Developed In Bars

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Roseanne Barr attributes her caustic wit to her responses to pickup lines from cocktail-lounge patrons, and says a painful childhood helped make her one of TV's funniest personalities.

"I wouldn't be making a lot of money and be very happy now if I had grown up content and sheltered," Barr said in her autobiography, "Roseanne: My Life as a Woman."

Excerpts appear in this week's People magazine.

The star of the television series "Roseanne" says she grew up as an outcast, the daughter of Jewish liberals in a working-class section of Salt Lake City.

"Friday, Saturday, and Sunday mornings I was a Jew: Sunday afternoon, Tuesday afternoon, and Wednesday afternoon we were Mormons," she said, explaining that her mother wanted her to become a Mormon while her grandmother wanted her to remain Jewish.

The dual allegiance "made for a complete and well-rounded sense of paranoia," Barr wrote.

To be accepted, she became the class clown — until age 16, when she was hit by a car and, traumatized, spent eight months in a psychiatric hospital.

At 18, Barr said, she fled for Colorado and met Bill Pentland, a "gorgeous hippie" hotel clerk. They married two years later.

Barr described the next six years as "The Queen of the Barefoot and Pregnant."

Picasso Swimming Was Faked

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The famous photographs of a bronzed Pablo Picasso swimming in the Mediterranean and playing with his daughter Paloma stretched the truth a bit, Paloma said in a recent interview.

"He would pretend to swim; he couldn't swim," Paloma Picasso said in October's Fame magazine. "I haven't told many people that he was faking swimming."

When Paloma was born in 1949, Picasso was 67. Her mother, the artist Francoise Gilot, was 27.

"His mind was on his work but not all day long," Paloma, a fashion designer, recalled. "The minute he turned it on to work, that was it. But then he would be on the beach for hours and hours."

Gilot left Picasso in 1953 after living with him 10 years. The split occurred "in a very smooth way," Paloma said. "Immediately we went to spend holidays with my father so there wouldn't be a drastic break between life with him and life without him.

"He still had his house in Paris. We would go to the circus with him or spend a Sunday and then a holiday."

As for biographers' accounts of Picasso's psychological abuse of his women, Paloma said: "Everything is always negative. But how could he be such a monster? Why would those women have stayed? No one forced them."

Broken Jaw

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Singer Pat Boone broke his jaw in a fall from a bicycle. He should be out of the hospital within a few days, authorities said.

Boone, 55, was hurt Saturday evening when the front tire of his bicycle hit a grating and caused him to lose control, said police Lt. Miles Lee.

Boone enjoyed a series of hits during the 1950s with covers of "Ain't That A Shame," and "Tutti Frutti," "Love Letters In The Sand" and "April Love."

New TV Shows Take On 'Old' Look Fast

By Jay Sharbutt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — If you decided to tiptoe out for a night on the credit card last Friday, rest assured you missed nothing with two new series that bowed then, CBS' "Snoops" and NBC's "Baywatch."

"Snoops" stars Tim Reid, of the late and good "Frank's Place," as a professor of criminology in Washington, D.C., and Daphne Maxwell Reid, his wife, as his wife, a protocol honcho for the State Department.

"Baywatch" is a Southern California surf-and-sand lifeguard tableau with a bronzed cast led by David "Knight Rider" Hasselhoff. He wears a lieutenant's uniform, is divorced and has a young son whose custody he shares with the mother.

Its stars are amateur sleuths, much to the dismay of Reid's police lieutenant pal, essayed by John Karlen. Their debut concerned the solution of a 4-year-old unsolved murder case in which a stockbroker was the departed.

The impetus for their efforts: Questions raised in Reid's class by a brilliant, cocky student (Jon Matthews), who on his own pursues the case. Also present were a convicted swindler, a killer millionaire and a beautiful ex-mistress who now owns a spa for women.

Double-crossing and insider trading were part of the hour. But the high point of the evening came when the ex-mistress told the millionaire, "I'm not going to jail for you, Arthur. I'd sooner die."

Our "Snoops" couple often engaged in light-hearted banter. This no doubt is intended to show the series is sort of a contemporary "Thin Man" expedition, a "Nick and Nora Go to Washington."

The problem, as with more than a few shows emitted by Hollywood these days, was the script. It was an epic in lackluster, and our heroes' banter was so strained the show seemed in danger of a two-star hernia.

It's always possible "Snoops" eventually will improve. But not "Baywatch." It is full of healthy, well-toned male and female lifeguard bodies, surf scenes, and that's it.

Other than establishing forgettable characters, the premiere featured what may be TV's first case of a beautiful windsurfer killed by hit-and-run jetskiers.

When first reported, the accident caused Hasslehoff to order, "I want an undercover recovery team, Code Three, here as soon as possible." Oh, good grammar, where is thy sting?

In a later, unrelated scene with his son, he rued that when he was married he didn't do more in preparing the lad for life: "I let your mom be the enforcer while I was out teaching you to surf."

Hey, kid, Just Say No to Surf.

There seems no relief from awful new-show scripts. Another example is Tuesday's "Living Dolls" preview on ABC. This sitcom, which starts its regular run Saturday, appears a good excuse to read a book for 30 minutes each week.

The show stars a fine actress, Michael Learned, as the owner of a top New York modeling agency. Formerly the Mom of "The Waltons," she now plays the wise, patient den mother and agent for four teen-age girls training to be fashion models. The girls also attend schools, exercise class and fittings.

These wanna-be mannequins, different in their varied ways, share Ms. Learned's surprisingly big townhouse with her son (he is supposed to be a teen-ager, too, but looks twentysomething). These beauties drive him bats.

That, like the show's efforts to give everyone a subplot and depth of character, doesn't ring quite true. But the lame dialogue doesn't help, either.

And, like many TV shows by the TV generation for the TV generation, this one feels it needs to refer to a well-known series show to establish a frame of reference.

The teen models attend a school that's "flexible," one of them tells a visitor. Their place of learning, she says, lets them audition and take jobs, "like that school on 'Fame.'"

Chung Show More Drama Than Study In Journalism

By Jay Sharbutt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — If the premiere of "Saturday Night With Connie Chung" is typical of things to come, it might be wise for CBS News to turn it into a docudrama anthology series and let CBS Entertainment produce it.

The show spent half its opening hour Saturday dramatizing the life of a fiery early civil rights pioneer in Montgomery, Ala., the Rev. Vernon Johns, played by James Earl Jones. That half was a fairly good docudrama.

But this is supposed to be a news series, even though this one's closing credits cited a "soloist" — jazzman David Sanborn, who played the show's bluesy theme music.

It is not a good sign for a journalism show to have a news & blues saxaphonist. But this effort's first 30 minutes were not a good sign, either.

They made one fear that this series, produced by Andrew Lack, producer of the departed "West 57th" series, may prove just a training ground for TV news producers who hope to someday make TV movies.

Entitled "God's Bad Boy," Saturday's debut dramatization, set in 1949, featured seven actors; a group of black townsfolk as extras in Johns' church, the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church, and white extras as hostile policemen.

By David Bradley and Kenneth King, the "re-creation" sporadically included brief interviews — in the manner of the movie "Reds" — with seven people who knew the late minister. They included his daughter, Toni Johns Anderson, and Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young.

There was an eighth interviewee, historian Taylor Branch. The first chapter of his Pulitzer Prize-winning book on the civil rights movement, "Parting the Waters," was the basis for the dramatization.

The dramatization, in which Johns strongly and loudly spoke out against murder of blacks by whites and urged his middle-class congregation to stand up for black civil rights, was woefully weak in journalistic basics.

Even Ms. Chung, who has a reputation as a good reporter, exhibited this flaw in her non-acting role as anchor.

She prefaced one scene by saying how "a series of brutal murders of blacks by the police" in the spring of 1949 led Johns to preach a sermon that "would threaten the uneasy calm" between the races in Montgomery.

But she cited no examples of any murders by police. She only said that a white man got up off his front porch and shot and killed a black man who was running by. The killer's explanation, she said, was this: "'If he was running, he must have done something.'"

She didn't say if the white man was charged with anything, let alone tried.

In the docudrama, Johns, in saying that "a lot of people doing the killing" of blacks are the police, at least cited two cases. They were found to be, he scornfully noted, "justifiable homicide."

But he named only one policemen while naming all the victims. It made you wonder if any of the names were real.

In another scene, he was called "boy" by a white man identified only as a "commonwealth's attorney" in Mongtomery. No name was given. Another white official in a succeeding scene is identified only as "Judge Jones."

In yet another scene, John's daughter, in an off-camera interview excerpt that accompanied the on-screen drama, said that "as I recall, a black girl had been raped. I think it was by six policemen."

You'd think there be might be a question at this shocking point whether what she said actually happened, and whether any policemen were charged. But there was no question.

On the bright side, the show's second half was an interesting panel discussion where sparks occasionally flew between the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Montgomery Mayor Emory Folmar, the latter a white man.

For the record, Ms. Chung told viewers that next Saturday will bring "Jane Fonda, talking for the first time on television, about her separation from Tom Hayden and about her newest roles, both on-screen and off."

It can be assumed that Ms. Fonda will play herself.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY Sept. 26

ARIES (March 20 to April 19): Contact newcomers whose sense of humor is similar to yours and have a good time together. Be sure that you don't drive carelessly or recklessly.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 19): Talking over recreation plans with regular partners can go a long way toward establishing better understanding and harmony, at this time with today's good aspects.

GEMINI (May 20 to June 20): Plan to have a constructive discussion with your associates in the a.m., so that you can solve the communication problems that have been difficult.

MOON CHILDREN (June 21 to July 21): Don't allow arguments in the home to get out of hand or to remain unsettled for long. Some vocational concerns are going to require more effort now.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Some secret anxiety is more pronounced today and could result in hasty actions so be sure to think over all your actions before you make a commitment.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 21): Look over and review your social life very carefully and be certain as to which friends you want to retain in your life and which friends you want to drop.

LIBRA (Sept. 22 to Oct. 22): Take sound steps to safeguard your reputation in the world of business and take time to know exactly where your career is heading.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Don't leave anything unattended or undone while you spend a lot more time delving into new interests. It is important that you make contacts with different types of people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 20): A financial obligation from the past has you very concerned but today isn't the time to try to handle this item or to get in an argument over it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21 to Jan. 18): Keep some distance between you and a partner who is too sensitive and emotional about an unidentified something that has put a bee in their bonnet.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 19 to Feb. 17): Stay out of an argument with a co-worker just because you don't agree on some minor points. Handle a task that you promised to take care of some time ago.

PISCES (Feb. 18 to March 19): Instead of trying to use force to achieve your goals, use tact and see how much easier you can have what you need under today's good aspects.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ1083 ♡AK54 ◇A106 ♣K
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—You are going to play in game at least, but you need time to locate your best spot. Start off by responding one spade. A jump shift needs either a better suit or a powerful fit for partner's minor.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ1083 ♡AK54 ◇A106 ♣K
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

♠9872 ♡A6 ◇10652 ♣742
Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What action do you take?
A.—You have just enough for game if your range is 22–24 points. (If it is any lower, pass with alacrity.) Because of your ruffing value, however, you should probe for the possibility of a 4–4 spade fit. Use the Stayman Convention—bid three clubs.

♠AJ85 ♡83 ◇J98 ♣AJ54
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—It's time to show your strength. A jump shift to three hearts fits the bill nicely—second suit, strong hand, forcing to game.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ1083 ♡AK54 ◇A106 ♣K
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Although partner has shown no great liking for either of your suits and there might be some duplication of values in clubs, you are still good enough for one more move. The logical choice is four diamonds, bidding out your hand pattern. If partner has a five-card diamond suit, six diamonds could be on because his club losers can be ruffed in your short-trump hand.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q87 ♡73 ◇AJ98 ♣A1063
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	2 ◇	?

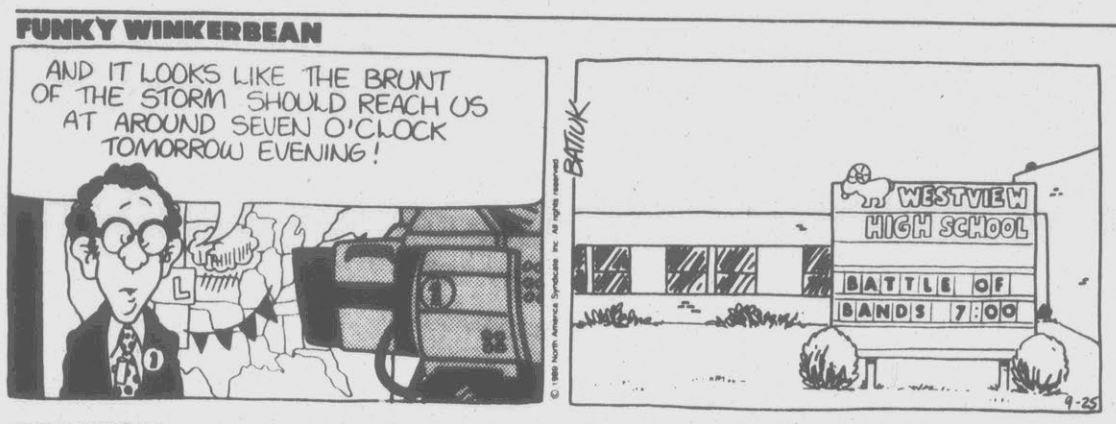

What action do you take?
A.—If you use basic methods, double for penalties. That should produce at least a two-trick set and you can't be sure you have game. If you play negative doubles, you must pass, of course, and hope partner reopens with a double.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: L equals O

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Experts Confused On Effects Of Global Warming

By David Foster
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SUNDANCE, Utah — Should we all be checking out real estate in Alaska, or are scientists who warn of catastrophic global warming just blowing hot air?

Sometimes it's hard to tell, admits one of those scientists. At a recent conference here on global warming, climatologist Stephen Schneider displayed two New York Times articles from last January.

"US Data Since 1895 Fail To Show Warming Trend," one headline proclaimed.

"Global Warmth In 88 Is Found To Set A Record," said the other.

Schneider turned to his audience and asked, "Anybody here confused?"

If so, they're not alone. Ever since the hot, dry summer of 1988, the news has been full of scientists grimly predicting droughts, floods and famine if we don't act immediately to halt global warming. At the same time, others urge caution, saying it's foolish to solve a problem nobody has proved to exist.

While most scientists concur on the basic mechanism behind global warming, there is less agreement over how much or how quickly the Earth is heating up, and even less over what should be done about it. Now politicians and special interests have leaped into the fray, making it even harder for a concerned citizen to winnow science from speculation and reason from rhetoric.

The underlying principle is called the greenhouse effect, familiar to anyone who has left a car with the windows rolled up in a sunny parking lot. The short-wavelength sunlight passes through the windows and is absorbed by the seats, which give off long-wavelength heat radiation that's trapped by the glass.

The "windows" in Earth's atmosphere are gases such as carbon dioxide, methane and chlorofluorocarbons (chemicals used in refrigeration and aerosol products). They let sunlight through but trap heat radiated from the ground, keeping it from escaping into space.

"If anyone is dubious that a greenhouse effect can be dangerous," says astronomer Carl Sagan, "just point them to our neighboring planets." A thin atmosphere keeps Mars in a deep-freeze, while an atmosphere rich in carbon dioxide keeps Venus roasting like an oven.

Earth, meanwhile, with a moderate carbon dioxide concentration, has equable temperatures, liquid water and abundant life.

But since 1850, Earth's atmospheric carbon dioxide has increased 25 percent, mostly due to burning fossil fuels. During the same period, average global temperature, compiled from hundreds of monitoring stations, has increased about 1 degree Fahrenheit.

Cause and effect? Common sense might suggest that rising levels of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases are responsible for global warming, and that is the basis of mathematical models being used to predict future warming.

If nothing is done to reduce society's production of greenhouse gases, the Earth faces the equivalent of a doubling of carbon dioxide by the middle of the next century. And that, the various models predict, could produce a global temperature rise of 2 to 10 degrees.

The serious disagreement starts here.

Robert Jastrow, former director of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Goddard Institute for Space Studies, questions both the accuracy of those models and the assumption that increasing greenhouse gases have already caused warming.

The past century's warming trend could be due to natural climate variations or changes in the sun's brightness, he says. And present climate models are so coarse that their treatment of how clouds affect warming varies by a factor of three; such a wide discrepancy casts doubt on all the models, he says.

But Jastrow's successor at the Goddard Institute, James Hansen, is a leading supporter of the climate models. Though uncertainties remain, he says, they are unlikely to change his basic conclusion, "that a growing greenhouse effect will increase the frequency and severity of the extremes of the hydrologic cycle: droughts, on the one hand, and extreme wetness and storms on the other."

Skeptics can use the first New York Times story mentioned by Schneider. It noted that U.S. temperatures since 1895 do nothing to confirm global warming. But believers can point out that the United States occupies just 2 percent of the globe. And they can cite the second Times story, which said that 1988 had the warmest average global temperature on record.

Each finding may be accurate, as far as it goes. But how significant is it?

A warm year, like 1988, may draw attention to global warming, but most scientists now say last year's U.S. drought and heat were natural atmospheric fluctuations caused by cyclical swings in Pacific Ocean water temperatures.

Yet, the six warmest years on record all have been within this decade. In order, they are 1988, 1987, 1983, 1981, 1980 and 1986.

To sort out nature's fickleness from longterm trends, climatologists continually plug new factors into mathematical models already so complex it takes days to run them through powerful computers.

Verifying the major effects of greenhouse warming could take 10 to 20 years of observation, Hansen says. By then, some scientists warn, it may be too lae to stop greenhouse warming already in the works.

A temperature change in the lower range of predictions might not cause catastrophic damage. But a 10-degree rise could expand ocean water and melt enough polar ice to raise sea level nearly three feet, flooding coastal regions worldwide, some scientists say.

Despite the uncertainties, many scientists — and more recently, government policymakers — have decided global warming is too much of a risk to ignore.

In May, the White House softened its go-slow attitude to embrace the idea of a formal international treaty-negotiating process on global warming.

Citing a "growing consensus" among scientists, the Environmental Protection Agency in March urged the reduction of carbon dioxide through energy conservation techniques such as development of fuel-efficient cars, energy-saving homes and solar technology.

But such measures can cost big money, and maneuvering has already begun to protect special interests. Last month, the oil industry released a study that concluded natural gas heat might contribute more to the greenhouse effect than oil heat. The gas industry attacked the report as flawed and biased

Cut Anger, Lower Blood Pressure

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — A study of anger could help determine if hypertension can be handled by teaching hotheads and people who sit and simmer how to handle the emotion more appropriately, a researcher says.

"There must be at least a hundred studies out there showing that blood pressure and anger are related, but no one has tried to change the way a person expresses their anger in order to lower their blood pressures," said West Virginia University clinical psychologist Kevin Larkin.

"We're not certain if anger causes high blood pressure or if high blood pressure causes difficulties with expressing anger.

"We're hoping if we teach people to express their anger appropriately, their blood pressure will come down."

Larkin's study, funded by the American Heart Association, will test the effect of a 12-week training program on people with borderline or moderate high blood pressure. Half the subjects will receive assertiveness training and learn relaxation techniques. A control group will receive no training. Both groups' blood pressures will be tested before and after the training.

The training includes role playing and "stress innoculations," he said. "We teach people how to handle their stress and then expose them to little bits of stress and anger situations. We then increase the potential anger so they get used to handling bigger and more intense anger problems."

The trained group should be able to express anger without hurting others, react in a more subdued manner to provocation and have lower blood pressures at rest. "We're confident that we'll be able to show the first two. We're keeping our fingers crossed on being able to lower baseline blood pressures."

The training helps alleviate two types of responses shown to be harmful: "anger-in," in which the response is suppressed, and "anger-out," in which it is vented aggressively. "The anger-in person feels bad because they didn't express their anger openly," Larkin said. "The anger-out person feels pretty guilty because they attacked or offended somebody else.

"In both cases, people feel pretty lousy about themselves."

Rebels Kill 2 Americans As Quayle Nears Manila

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — Suspected Communist rebels today killed two Americans near a U.S. military base shortly before Vice President Dan Quayle arrived for a visit to discuss the future of U.S. bases here, officials said.

Six unidentified gunmen firing from a passenger jeep killed the pair at about 5 p.m. in Capas, about 60 miles north of Manila, said Col. Florentino Amorabon, spokesman for the Philippine Constabulary in central Luzon.

The names of the two were withheld. In Washington, a Pentagon statement said the two were civilian employees of Ford Aerospace Corp., a contractor at Camp O'Donnell, a U.S.-run facility about 50 miles north of Manila and 12 miles from the U.S. Clark Air Base.

A Pentagon spokesman said the names of the dead were being held until relatives could be identified.

The Americans' car had been blocked by a dump truck and the jeep. The gunmen jumped out of the jeep, sprayed their car with semi-automatic weapons fire and then opened the car door and fired into the victims' bodies, said Lt. Pepito Pimentel, station commander of the Capas police.

The military believes the assailants were Communist rebels, who operate in the Clark area, Amorabon said.

In April, rebels killed U.S. Army Col. James Rowe as he was driving to the headquarters of the U.S. Joint Military Assistance Group in Quezon City. In October 1987, rebels killed three Americans in simultaneous attacks outside Clark Air Base.

Also today, suspected Communist rebels killed a captain from President Corazon Aquino's guard force in an ambush about one mile southeast of where the president will hold talks with Quayle on Wednesday.

As Quayle arrived today on a three-day visit, hundreds of leftists burned his effigy and an American flag while chanting "Bases out!, Quayle go home!"

Quayle made no statement as he arrived at Ninoy Aquino International Airport from Japan, where he ended a six-day visit with a short stop on Okinawa, an island that was a major World War II battlefield and today is home for more than 35,000 U.S. troops.

Before boarding a U.S. Air Force flight to Manila, the third leg of his Asian tour, the vice president called his Japan visit positive and said it helped strengthen the two nations' "global partnership."

Quayle's talks in the Philippines were to focus on the future of Clark Air Base, the Subic Bay naval base and four smaller installations, the leases of which expire in September 1991.

Nine policemen were injured and nine students were arrested today when security forces broke up a rally at Manila's Adamson University, officials said.

Water Crisis Builds 'Sense Of Urgency'

By Frances Horton Arrington
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

WASHINGTON, N.C. — City officials, after recently learning that the city's water contained two potentially deadly chemicals, have told residents to quit drinking the water and are making uncontaminated water available to citizens.

City Manager Bruce Radford said phones in his office have been ringing off the hook since residents learned of the contaminants in the water supply. Many people are calling with questions about using the water.

"There is a sense of urgency here," Radford said. "People want to know if they can boil the water and get the trihalomethane out and the answer to that is yes. But, they've been advised not to breathe the steam from the water."

In routine checks of the city's tap water, two toxic chemicals thought to cause cancer, trihalomethane and carbon tetrachloride, were both discovered in the water.

State scientists have said the amount of trihalomethane found in Washington's water is the most they have ever seen anywhere in the state. They are conducting more tests to determine the levels of carbon tetrachloride.

Radford said many people are also wondering why officials have said that the water is safe enough for residents to brush their teeth in, but not safe enough for them to drink.

"We are going on what the state health people have told us and they say it's fine to use the water for hygiene purposes," Radford said.

Many residents are reportedly rushing to grocery stores buying bottled water and are lining up at Slatestone Treatment Plant to get water that the city is providing at no charge to citizens.

Other locations that the city have opened to provide water are the ele-

Ex-HUD Chief Will Not Testify

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Former HUD Secretary Samuel R. Pierce today refused to answer questions from a House subcommittee investigating scandals at the agency during his eight-year tenure, citing his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

Pierce, appearing before the subcommittee under a subpoena, said attacks on him by members of the panel "leads me to the painful conclusion that I have been prejudged by this body."

Pierce made the dramatic announcement in a brief opening statement to the subcommittee more than an hour into a session from which television cameras and photographers were barred at his insistence.

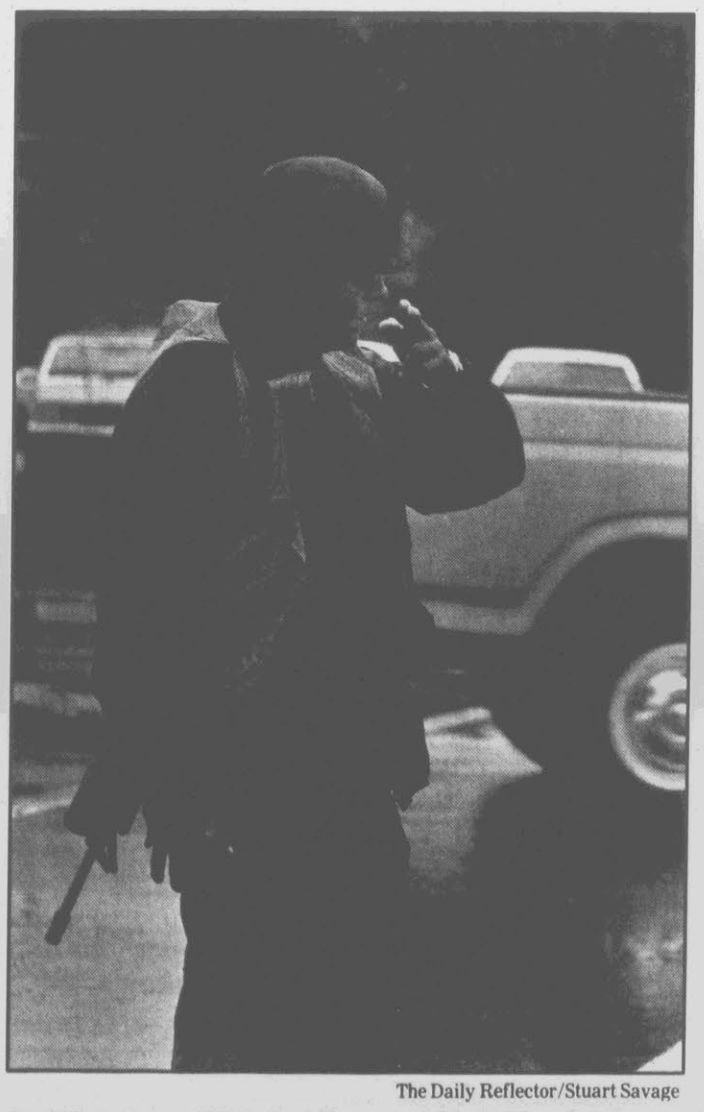

The subcommittee chairman, Rep. Thomas Lantos, then posed a series of eight questions to Pierce regarding his tenure at HUD, and each time Pierce refused to answer, citing his constitutional rights.

Lantos said Pierce may have waived his rights not to answer by testifying voluntarily before the same committee in May. But Lantos said he would not rule immediately on that question as chairman and told Pierce's lawyers to submit written arguments on the constitutional question within a week.

Lantos, D-Calif., also said he would again urge current HUD Secretary Jack Kemp to cooperate with Pierce's request under the Freedom of Information Act for HUD documents.

Among the questions Lantos put to Pierce were ones about his approval, over the objection of other HUD officials, of HUD funds for an elderly housing project in Durham, N.C.

Lantos also asked Pierce to explain an announcement by President Reagan of the awarding of a HUD grant for elderly housing in Ewing, N.J., during a campaign appearance in 1982 on behalf of the Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, Millicent Fenwick.

Guardsmen Find Duty's The Same

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

CHARLOTTE — The trip was faster but the ultimate duty was the same for 53 National Guard military policemen who flew from Greenville to Charlotte's Douglas International Airport aboard an Air National Guard C-130 cargo plane Monday.

The officers and men — members of the 514th and 213th MP companies from Greenville and Washington — stepped from the four-engine Hercules into the soaking rain in Charlotte shortly after the plane landed at 12:22 p.m. following the 56-minute flight.

They joined 76 other members of their outfits who spent seven hours on the road the night before with their vehicles after being called to active duty because of the devastation from Hurricane Hugo.

And on the ride from the airport to the National Guard armory, the damage was visible ... trees toppled or broken off, a small plane upside down, signs bent an broken and few electric lights visible.

Maj. Byron Hignite of Raleigh, the Guard's public affairs officer, said the lack of electricity — the fact that Hugo left 80 percent of the Charlotte area without electric power — was the major reason the Guard's military police companies from Greenville, Washington and Asheville were called to active duty.

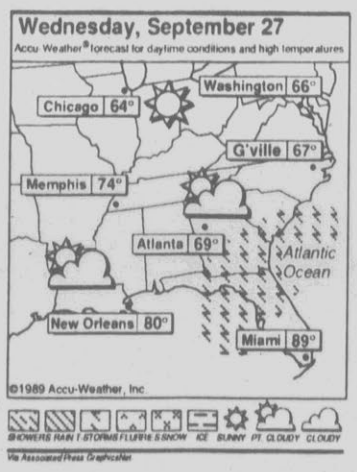

The 388 military policemen, Hignite said, "are being used in traffic control in the early mornings and late afternoons ... during high peak traffic times," to direct traffic at intersections where traffic lights are not working.

At night, Hignite said, the MPs are patrolling areas with high potential for looting. Hignite, a former Greenville resident, said "there has been a dramatic decrease in the number of calls for assistance" received by Charlotte and Mecklenburg County law enforcement agencies since the military police began their patrols.

In addition to the MPs, Hignite said 88 National Guard engineers are working with Duke Power company clearing rights of way so electric service can be restored as soon as possible.

Police Probe Could Take Another Month

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An internal investigation into charges of racial discrimination in the police department, already a month old, may take nearly another month to complete.

Ron Kimble, assistant city manager, said today "we estimate we're about half done."

Kimble presented a second report to the Greenville City Council during an executive session following Monday's council meeting. Kimble and Detective J.E. Harris have been investigating the charges since approximately Aug. 10.

The council moved quickly through its agenda items, approving all but one, and spent nearly an hour in executive sesssion. Along with the report from Kimble, the council also held discussion on land acquisition and possible litigation behing closed doors.

The council also moved to accept a reimbursement grant from the Federal Aviation Administration which would pay for nearly 90 percent of the cost of land aquisition around the Pitt-Greenville Airport.

City Attorney Mac McCarley said Kimble and Detective Harris have now spent approximately 195 hours on the investigation. All but one of the 13 officers who signed the original complaint against the department have been interviewed, McCarley said.

McCarley, the official spokesman on the investigation for the city, said Kimble and Harris plan to complete their interviews over the next two weeks and "summarize their findings as they relate to each of the initial concerns.'

Kimble said today he and Harris plan to interview 15 to 20 more police and city personnel for the investigation. "It sounds like another four weeks" before the investigation is complete, Kimble said.

Harris was not present during Monday's meeting because of other police duties, Kimble said.

The City Council ordered the investigation after a group of black officers publicly presented a list of grievances against the police department and Chief Jerry Tesmond. The petition denounced the "jaded discriminatory ploys" in the department, and contended Tesmond and his administration favored whites in patrol assignments and promotions.

One of the officers presenting the complaint, Lyn White, and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference called for Tesmond and two other high-ranking police administrators to resign.

Since the petition was made public on Aug. 4, a second petition supporting Tesmond and signed by 80 officers and police personnel was presented to the council in an open letter. The second letter charged the

Guardsman Injured

A National Guardsman injured while directing traffic at an intersection in Charlotte Monday morning has been identified by officials as Pfc. Michael Robbins of Greenville's 514th MP Company.

A Guard spokesman this morning said Robbins' records show he lives in Snow Hill and works at Collins and Aikman in Farmville.

Maj. Byron Hignite of Raleigh, the guard's public affairs office, said Robbins and a Charlotte police cadet were directing traffic at an intersection about 9 a.m. when a car driven by a woman struck both men.

The civilian, scheduled to graduate from Charlotte's police academy on Oct. 6, was hospitalized with leg injuries and was in good condition.

Robbins, who joined the National Guard in 1988, suffered head injuries in the mishap. He was listed in stable condition this morning.

Officer S.A. Bass said a license plate was taken from a car parked at Rose Hill Associates on North Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 9:20 a.m., while Officer L.T. Gray said a radio valued at $500 was taken from a car at Professional Body Works on Greenville Boulevard in an incident reported at 11:03 a.m.

Officer C.J. Melvin said $4 in change was taken from a storage shed at Sutton's Service Center on Dickinson Avenue in a break-in reported at 11:06 a.m., while Officer R.C. Broadway said $80 in cash and other items were taken from a purse at 309 Kirkland Drive in a break-in reported at 4:40 p.m.

School Presentations

Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt County, on Monday gave U.S. Bill of Rights Bicentennial presentations to two schools, Agnes Fullilove and D.H. Conley High School.

Taft gave each school a framed copy of the Bill of Rights along with a brief history of North Carolina's role in the bill's adoption.

The presentation was made on behalf of U.S. Sen. Terry Sanford, who sponsored a Senate resolution to designate Sept. 25 as Bill of Rights Bicentennial Day.

Similar presentations were made to schools throughout the state by various state legislators.

Hugo Relief

Julie Hunter of the Pitt County chapter of the American Red Cross said this morning that her agency has been deluged with calls about how people in this area can assist Hurricane Hugo victims in South Carolina and the Charlotte area.

She said money contributions should be sent to the American Red Cross, Pitt County Chapter, P.O. Box 586, Greenville, N.C. 27835.

Both Charlotte and Charleston lost the use of their blood centers, Ms. Hunter said, so donations of blood from this area slated for use in those areas would be welcomed. She said donations may be made at the Pitt County Red Cross Office Oct. 2 and Oct. 6 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. For more information or to schedule an appointment, call the chapter at 752-4222 or 757-0270.

Contributions of blankets, disposable diapers and canned goods, preferably those that can be eaten right out of cans, are urgently needed, she said. They may be taken to the Salvation Army on Dickinson Avenue Extension; phone, 756-3388.

Fuel-Assistance Program Is Scheduled

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt County Department of Social Services will begin work on its low income energy assistance program Oct. 16 and should have all paperwork completed by Dec. 22, Director Ed Garrison said Monday.

Garrison said the program will bring $335,885 in federal funds to Pitt County, a decrease from last year.

"We anticipate this program will operate more smoothly this year than it has in the past," Garrison said.

Because of action in the N.C. General Assembly the DSS could have to ask the Pitt County Commissioners for up to $93,336 dollars in additional funding Garrison said.

The General Assembly has increased the county' share of Medicaid appropriations by $29,134 and has increased its share of aid to families with dependent children by $44,561.

The board set the limit on clients for the Community Alternatives Program for Disabled Adults at 100 per year. The state has set a level of 150 clients for the program but Garrison said Pitt County could not handle that caseload with its existing staff.

The program allows disabled adults to stay at home instead of in a hospital or nursing home.

DSS will begin strictly enforcing the Medicaid deductible when the insurance is used for the program. Garrison said the department cannot afford to serve clients who will not pay for the services.

George Perry, income maintenance program administrator, said 140 people have signed up for the department's new food stamp issuance program which will mail stamps to the elderly and disabled. He said the program should be implemented by November.

Correction

The Daily Reflector erroneously reported Monday that the Teaching Fellows Program at East Carolina University has had four coordinators in two years. The program has had only two coordinators.

Schools Get Grant For Drug Program

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County schools recently received a $46,000 federal grant to establish an assistance program for its employees, school officials announced.

The funds will be used to establish an employee-assistance program in conjunction with the Pitt County Mental Health, Mental Retardation and Substance Abuse Center, according to Leck Keeter, associate superintendent for personnel. The county school system will put $15,000 in matching funds into the program, he said.

The school system was one of 23 non-profit employers to receive a grant from the U.S. Department of Labor under the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988. The act appropriated $1.5 million for workplace substance-abuse programs.

The grants went to applicants with programs that contain a workplace substance-abuse policy, supervisory training, drug and alcohol awareness and assessment and referral plans, according to a press release from the Labor Department. The grant program is administered by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

The program will be available to assist employees with a wide range of personal problems, including substance abuse, Keeter said.

Relief Supplies Begin To Arrive In Charleston

By Bruce Smith
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Truckloads of ice, plastic sheeting, bottled water other necessities are beginning to arrive from the outside world as a few services return to communities shattered by Hurricane Hugo.

Charleston Harbor reopened to limited ship traffic today under a sunny but cool sky, and residents were advised Monday that the city's water supply is safe to drink without boiling.

The storm, which rammed the coast Thursday night with winds of 135 mph and torrential rain, left at least $3 billion in damage, state officials said.

Hugo killed 33 people as it rampaged through the Carribean; 28 deaths on the U.S. mainland are blamed on the hurricane and its remnants.

Two inches of rain Monday fell on Charleston, and there was an 80 percent chance of showers today, the National Weather Service said.

"It's going to make it harder to accomplish anything, going to make everything a little more miserable," said Kay Robinson, of the weather service.

Offers of outside help have begun to arrive.

A Maryland businessman sent two truckloads of ice Monday to help residents who can't keep their food fresh because they are without power. The ice from the Berlin Ice Co. was delivered in tractor-trailers by the Perdue chicken company.

The Mississippi Department of Agriculture will set up a food stand in Charleston Thursday, offering a ton of fried catfish, hushpuppies and French fries.

Truckloads of plastic sheeting, blankets, trash bags, diapers, tools, bottled water and other necessities were sent by Wal-Mart stores, said spokeswoman Brenda Lockhart at the company's Bentonville, Ark., headquarters.

"We still have our sleeves rolled up," she said Monday. "We'll find out what needs to be done and react accordingly."

Utility companies across the South offered to send crews to help restore service to the thousands of homes and businesses blacked by the storm.

More than 150 workers from the Florida Power & Light Co. were on the job or on the way, said spokesman Dale Thomas.

Power was restored Monday to more than 200,000 people in the Carolinas, but at least 546,000 remained without service, according to utility company officials. It could be a month before full service is restored.

Power has been restored to about 5 percent of Charleston customers, including hospitals.

Commerce is picking up on Broad Street in the heart of the Historic District, where some stores and restaurants used emergency generators Monday to power cooking and lighting.

A few banks reopened, and some automatic-teller machines have sprung to life — a godsend in a city where cash has become scarce.

At the Citizens and Southern National Bank Monday, customers with checks to cash lined up under four light bulbs strung from a wire hooked to a generator. Tellers phoned transactions to banks in other parts of the state to record the information on computers, said John Jordan, senior vice president.

Down the street at Charleston City Hall, volunteers manned a bank of phones set up as part of a nationwide relief effort.

The city needs everything from canned goods and bread to building supplies, generators and roofing nails, said Mayor Joseph P. Riley.

Gov. Carroll Campbell announced the state would hire some of the estimated 224,000 workers displaced by the storm to help with cleanup efforts.

President Bush expanded his earlier disaster declaration to include four North Carolina counties. He already declared seven South Carolina counties as disaster areas. The declaration frees federal assistance and eases the way to getting loans for repairs.

Seventeen Navy ships and five freighters were at anchor off the Charleston Harbor waiting to return today, said Anne Moise, spokeswoman for the State Ports Authority.

N.C. Coast Has Homes On Brink Of Toppling

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON — Brunswick County officials have condemned 129 homes in three coastal communities and say up to 200 are threatened by future storms after Hurricane Hugo destroyed protective dunes.

According to local officials' estimates, the tidal surge from the hurricane caused more than $55 million worth of damage to coastal Brunswick County towns. Some homes were rocked from their foundations while others were ripped apart and scattered along the beaches.

The loss of oceanfront dunes has exposed between 150 and 200 houses to the threat of waves.

Working most of Monday in the driving rain, state officials staked lines in Ocean Isle Beach, Holden Beach and Long Beach where towns or property owners can bulldoze sand or lay sandbags to protect endangered houses.

After those temporary measures are taken, property owners must decide whether to demolish, repair or move houses that lack any permanent protection from the pounding surf. Many property owners may find they have little choice because they have lost most — if not all — of their oceanfront lots.

"Because there's so much erosion, in a lot of cases, the lots themselves don't exist," said Jim Herstine, regional manager for the state Division of Coastal Management, which regulates coastal development.

"A lot of the homes have lost anywhere to put a septic tank," he said. "So even though the structure itself hasn't experienced damage that would make it unsafe for living ..., if there's no septic, then it's considered uninhabitable and is declared unsafe by the town."

Holden Beach officials condemned 75 houses Monday. Ocean Isle Beach condemned 40, and Long Beach condemned 14. A condemnation means the house is unsafe to inhabit.

"Some of these buildings are still wide open," said Holden Beach Mayor John Tandy. Most main streets in the towns are passable, but some side streets in Long Beach are still clogged with sand and mud. At Bald Head Island, workers have been pumping water up to three feet deep from South Bald Head Wynd road since Saturday, said Village Manager Wallace Martin.

In all three towns, the storm left an entire row of houses and some roads out of compliance with state oceanfront building setback rules. Coastal management regulations require buildings to be set back at least 60 feet from the dunes or the first stable line of vegetation.

"The whole island's in jeopardy without that dune," Tandy said.

Long Beach Mayor John W. Vereen III met with officials in Raleigh Monday to explain the town's predicament and plead for speed in getting the county federal designation as a disaster area, Town Manager Gary Britt said. He said the state has already applied to the federal government for the declaration, a decision which must be made by President Bush.

Duty Is The Same

But the Guard spokesman said the troopers would remain on duty in the state's largest city until electricity is restored and traffic is back to normal.

Out in the field, Staff Sgt. James Manning of Greenville said — standing at the intersection of Freedom and Camp Greene avenues directing traffic — "it's my duty." The state Division of Highways employee has been a Guardsman for 20 years.

At an intersection on York Road, Spec. T.E. Nevelle said, "it's not much different" than being at work in Greenville, where he is a police detective. "We're here for security purposes ... maintaining the flow of traffic.

"There's less paper work here," Nevelle said, but "we're still dealing with people ... dealing with the public."

Julia Sneed of Greenville, a specialist in the Guard, finds being a military policeman and directing traffic in the rain in Charlotte "a change of pace" from her normal job at Empire Brushes where she is a technical services coordinator.

Nevelle is a veteran of 11 years in the guard, while Sneed is a nine-year veteran.

But Staff Sgt. N.L. Garrish seemed to be more anxious to get back to his duties as a Greenville police sergeant. Just back from a traffic-direction assignment and wet from the rain, Garrish, sipping a cup of hot coffee, said: "I'd rather be back home."

But Charlotte policemen seem to like the MPs presence.

One rain-soaked officer on York Road, waiting to relieve a Guardsman from Asheville, had the same thought that others had expressed from time to time during the afternoon, "I'm glad they're here. They are doing a great job."

Emergency Teams To Set Up Operations In Charlotte Area

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Officials in Mecklenburg County prepared today for the arrival of federal emergency response workers who will distribute aid to victims of Hurricane Hugo, which left much of Charlotte without electricity.

Secretary of Crime Control and Public Safety Joe Dean said today disaster assistance centers for people affected by Hugo should be operating by Saturday. Dean says the centers will be set up in the four counties that have been declared federal disaster areas. Dean said more counties may join the disaster list after a federal disaster coordinator arrives in the state on Wednesday.

Dean said he expected the statewide damage totals to be at least $400 to 500 million. He said emergency officials are continuing to find damage.

Dean said the discrepancy between state and local damage estimates are due to bureaucratic delays. State officials have listed damage at $15 million, while local officials say damage totals are more than $360 million.

"We're eating good. Well, really we're not eating good, but we're eating. We're grilling and going visiting," said Alice Reed, who lives on Atmore Street.

She said she had water and telephone service, but no electricity.

"Even though the showers are cold, I'm still bless," she said. "Those poor people in Charleston don't even have water."

A huge gum tree leaned over the Reed's two-story house. Atmore Street was nearly impassable Friday because of downed trees, but the street was passable today.

Connie Fuller, a spokeswoman at First Union Corp., said today was her first full day back at work.

"Getting back to work has been the biggest boost for so many people," she said. "We feel like we really will be back to normal. People take great comfort in routine and that's going to be the key."

Charlotte's bank headquarters — First Union and NCNB — reported no problems during or after the storm with the giant computers. Ms. Fuller said First Union's data was delivered by satellite and that power wasn't lost.

"Since we had the declaration made, I think today will probably be one of getting all the local government officials together and reviewing what needs to be done to set up the disaster center and figuring out what the federal people need," said Jim Hollingsworth, a Mecklenburg County Emergency Management Coordinator this morning.

Hollingsworth and police reported that Monday night and early Tuesday morning was quiet in the storm-ravaged city which has been largely without electricity for four days.

Rain has hampered efforts to restore electricity, Hollingsworth said. Linesmen are having to be more careful in their work as the rain increases the chance of electrocution, he said.

Two linemen remained hospitalized this morning — one in critical condition — after they were shocked Monday while working in Lincoln County.

Timothy B. McInnis, 20, a lineman with Line Construction Co. of Sanford, was in critical condition at Charlotte Memorial Hospital this morning. He and Ralph Mattews, another lineman with Line Construction, were working on an electrical line when it struck them. Matthews was in stable but guarded condition in Lincoln County Hospital in Lincolnton, a nursing supervisor said this morning.

Bush's disaster declaration was for Mecklenburg, Union, Gaston and Lincoln counties.

"We should all be thankful for the president's quick move," said Gov. Jim Martin. "Equally important, this opens the door for assistance to the other N.C. counties who need it too."

State officials reported Monday preliminary damage totals for the four counties: Mecklenburg, $15.2 million; Union, $81.7 million; Gaston $7.1 million; and Lincoln $1.3 million. The total amount of damage for the 51 counties affected by Hugo is $198.4 million, state officials said.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

In The Dark

Discarding The Public's Rights

The mandate of public service is accountability and straightforward action. That mandate was disregarded when a majority of Greenville's City Council met last week in a session that was unadvertised and improper.

Four of six Greenville City Council members and the mayor sat in on a meeting with the city's development staff and the Pitt County Mental Health Department to hear the facts about a proposal scheduled to go before Greenville's Board of Adjustment Thursday.

The meeting was not advertised as a public meeting for city council, yet a majority of the council attended. They were asked to be there in a memorandum sent to each council member by the city's director of development. During the session, council members asked questions. They also conversed with each other and with the members of Mental Health Department.

'The presence of a quorum of the city council at an unadvertised meeting was improper and conflicts with the intent of North Carolina's Open Meetings Law.'

The presence of a quorum of the city council at an unadvertised meeting was improper and conflicts with the intent of North Carolina's Open Meetings Law. That statute states that the majority of the members of a public body may not meet — except in a social setting — unless it is in an open meeting.

A council is a public body. A majority of its members were in attendance. Public business was discussed. The meeting had all the makings of a meeting of a public body that should have been open to the public.

Yet the citizens were not notified of the session. They were left in the dark. The public's right to have its business conducted in an open meeting was not observed.

The council held a workshop session without undergoing the formality and protocol of calling and convening such a meeting. That is an oversight of propriety that conflicts sharply with public responsibility.

The person who sent that memo should have recognized that responsibility.

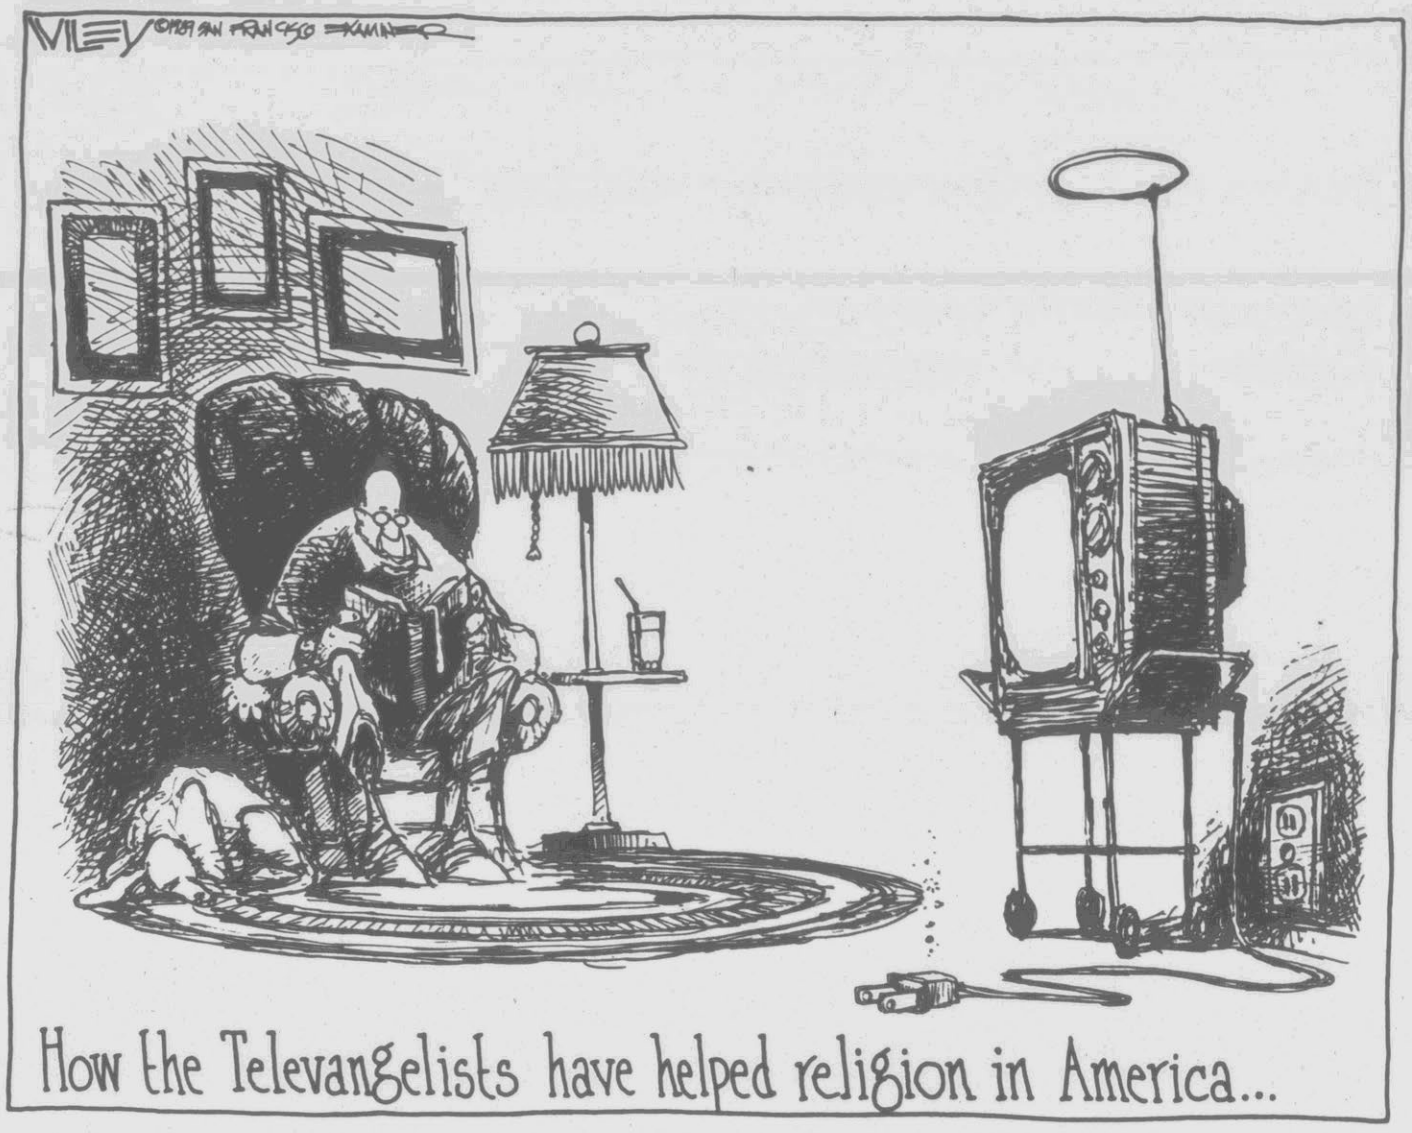

The city attorney should have vigorously pointed it out.

And the city council and mayor should have heeded it by leaving the meeting when a conflict was apparent.

But instead, these city and elected officials choose to discard the public's rights like so much litter.

It is now the citizens' prerogative to ask why. Why was this particular issue more urgent than propriety? And if it was so important, shouldn't it have been discussed in a rightfully advertised public meeting — the proper forum for such matters?

Public employees and officials shouldn't require a civics lesson on their obligations to taxpayers. But in this case, they need a reminder that the citizens are the final authority and that these citizens should be informed when their business is being conducted.

A Marriage That Cannot Endure

Richard Cohen

NEW YORK — Years ago, I learned of a college where students pulled off a tour de force in stupidity. They scored under 50 percent in a true-false test — worse than if they had just flipped a coin. That mark stood until a Tennessee judge recently awarded custody of seven frozen embryos to a woman in a divorce case. As Jay Leno cracked afterwards, the judge should have given them to Mrs. Paul.

Like the students, Judge W. Dale Young worked hard to do so badly. He said he had read the law and did some mighty pondering. And then, having taxed his mind to its limit, he declared the embyros "human beings" and awarded them to the mother. "I have agonized over it," Judge Young said.

Mary Sue Davis, the mother-to-be, greeted the judge's decision as a victory. Embroiled in a divorce case with her husband, she claims the frozen embryos as her own. Her intent is to implant them in her body regardless of her husband's wishes. For this, she has marshaled arguments incorporating an array of silly slogans: A woman's body is her own, life begins at conception and (why stop now?) Thank God It's Friday.

But it was a Friday, the day after the decision, that Mary Sue Davis may have come to terms with the consequences of the decision. If the seven embryos are human beings, then she must implant them all. To do less, to select only those that have the best chance of surviving, would be murder. After some reflection, Mary Sue Davis may finally learn the meaning of "choice." She went into the case a lonely crusader but could come out the Little Old Lady Who Lived in a Shoe.

The judge's decision is preposterous on its face and likely to be reversed on appeal. The doctrine that human life begins at conception is an assertion of the anti-abortion movement, neither a scientific finding nor law. The Supreme Court, an august body apparently unknown to the judge, has ruled otherwise. Since 1973, it has permitted abortion and while, recently, that decision has been narrowed, it has not been reversed. If, as the judge maintains, an embryo is a human being, then abortion is murder — legally so. The law says otherwise.

Mary Sue Davis, 29, had five tubal pregnancies and so the couple turned to in vitro fertilization. In that process, eggs are extracted from the woman, mixed with sperm in a laboratory and the embryos implanted in the womb — a process that can entail great discomfort, pain and stress. Mary Sue Davis had produced nine eggs. After fertilization, two of them were implanted, but no pregnancy resulted — an all-too-frequent outcome. The remaining seven eggs were frozen.

For the judge, one issue was how to characterize the embryos. Were they property or human life? It's an interesting question, but, really, we all know the answer. They are potential children, the joint creation of Junior and Mary Sue Davis, and they were conceived in that spirit. It had been Junior Davis' intention to become a father, a word that carries a lot of freight. To those of us who are such things, it has profound meaning and it includes, among other things, a lifetime's emotional and financial commitment.

But Mary Sue Davis and, by implication, the judge, treated Junior Davis as if he had been used for stud purposes. He had done his job and could be returned to pasture. His role was simply procreative, only now he could be compelled to support seven children he does not want. Horses are given more consideration than that.

Of course, after divorce, parents are obligated to support children they no longer live with — and the same thing applies in paternity suits. But the Davis case is really analogous to a childless marriage that has gone on the rocks. In such a case, either party has the ability — never mind the right — to avoid conception. Freezing of the embryos is a mere scientific doodad. It hardly changes the principle that fatherhood — like motherhood — ought to be voluntary.

Just like Junior and Mary Sue Davis, the judge created a marriage that cannot endure. He joined the cant of the anti-abortion movement to standard divorce law to produce a botch. Four to eight-celled embyros are deemed to be human beings and legal custody is given to the mother. But if frozen embyos are human beings, then fertility specialists cannot even choose among them. This is what happens when bumper-sticker slogans are substituted for thought.

A little thought would suggest that the real human beings in this case are Junior and Mary Sue Davis. But by making the embryos humans, the judge diminished the humanity of both Davises. She becomes a mere vehicle for the birth of others and he a stud whose pasture could be a lifetime of child support.

Missing The Big Picture On The 'Little People'

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — And now, from a small county courthouse in Marysville, Tennessee, comes a new reproductive rallying cry: Liberate the Frozen Seven!

Judge W. Dale Young issued this ruling in one of the most bizarre custody cases since divorced couples first began wrangling in court over the leftovers of their marriage. This time, the leftovers weren't a sofa and a car. They were seven fertilized and frozen eggs in storage at the local IVF clinic.

The woman, Mary Sue Davis, wanted custody of the eggs so she could become a mother. The man, Junior Davis, wanted custody of the eggs so he would not become a father. She sued for a right no other divorced woman has had: the power to control her ex-husband's reproductive future. He sued for a right no other man has had: the power to determine what happens after fertilization.

If the judge had ruled narrowly for either of these contestants, his decision would have been defensible. But what he did in a 57-page brief that gave custody to Mary Sue was to rule in "the best interest" of the pre-embryos.

He didn't call The Frozen Seven in this story by their real names: "pre-embryos." The benign-looking, humane-sounding magistrate referred to them as "children" or "little children" or at least once, on television, "little people."

In his decision, Young put it this way: "Mr and Mrs. Davis have produced human beings....It serves the best interests of the child or children, in vitro, for their mother, Mrs. Davis to be permitted the opportunity to bring them to term through implantation."

Human beings. Children. Little People. Judge Young makes human biology into a scene from "Honey, I Shrunk The Kids." But whatever his whimsical notions, the two-day-old eggs in question are not some sort of Munchkins. Nor are they "little children," although they are indeed small, about the size of the period at the end of this sentence.

A pre-embryo, a group of undifferentiated cells, deserves respect because it can become a child, not because it is one. The notion that this potential life has a paramount right heads us into some very murky waters.

Mary Sue may feel vindicated today in her desire to have a child. But under the reasoning in the case, this single woman has just signed on to become the mother of seven. Indeed if Mary Sue gets pregnant and decides to stop at one, the judge has hinted that the rest of the "little people" might go elsewhere.

"It is possible," he wrote, "that the court might have to have them implanted in someone else." Do we see a show of hands? No volunteers? If the "right-to-life" of the embryo is paramount, couldn't a judge force a mere adult to have it placed in her womb?

There is another consideration here. Mary Sue may not be the best "vehicle" for turning little people into big people. She already has had six failed IVF attempts. If, under Judge Young's reasoning, they are human beings, why leave it here? Why entrust them to her, rather than someone with a better track record?

Once you put the embryos' best interests first, there are all sorts of logically absurd possibilities.

What are we to do, for example, with women who have fertilized eggs, "little children," and failed naturally to bring them into the world? There are some 336 million eggs fertilized every year in the world. About 107 million of them are washed away. Don't the Unfrozen 107 Million embryos also have a right to be born? The implications of such a ruling for abortion and IVF are deadly obvious. So are the implications for birth-control methods that don't prevent fertilization but, rather, prevent implantation.

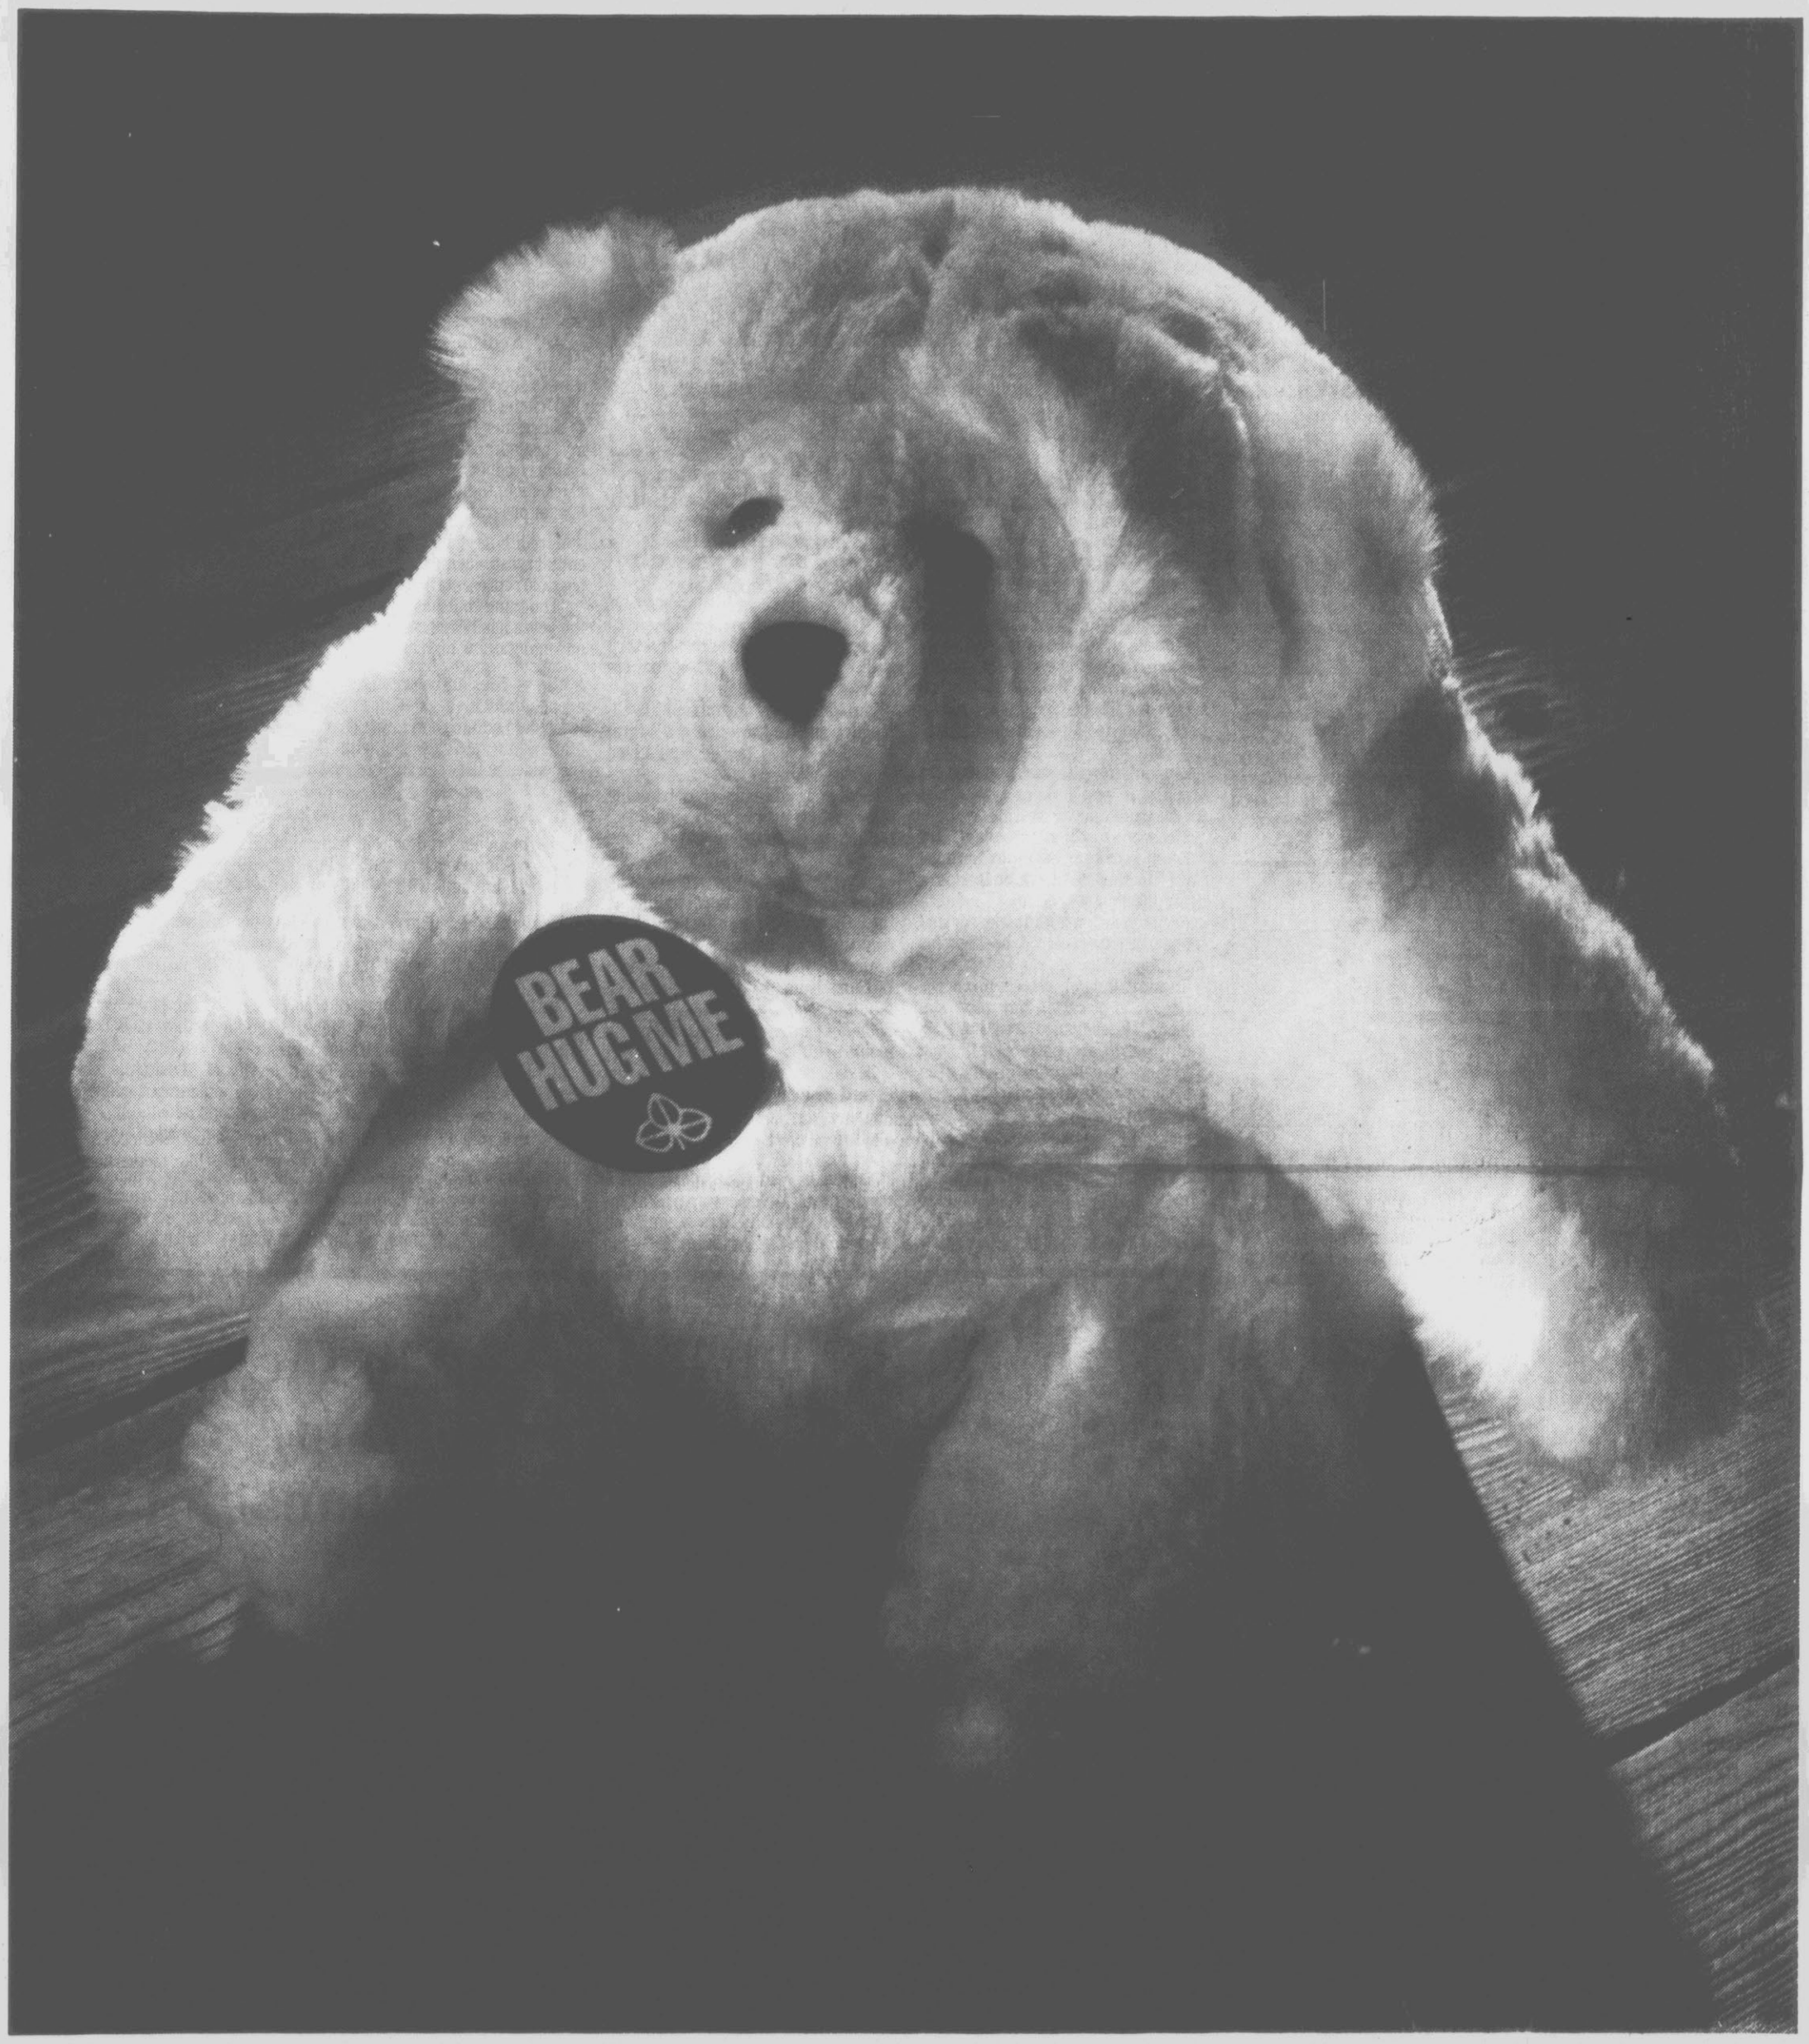

Perhaps embryos, like children, and now occasionally fetuses, will be entitled to their own lawyers. And while we are on the subject, surely every sperm and egg have a right to be joined as well.

Not since his Tennessee predecessor ruled against evolution in the Scopes trial has there been a verdict of such scientific fantasy. What is missing in the judge's focus on the microscopic aspect of life is the larger picture. Honey, I think he shrunk the law.

'Perhaps embryos, like children, and now occasionally fetuses, will be entitled to their own lawyers. And while we are on the subject, surely every sperm and egg have a right to be joined as well.'

States OK Joint Plan On Taxes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — An agreement North Carolina has joined with 11 other Southeastern states will help revenue officials collect taxes on goods bought by citizens outside their home state, a tax official says.

"This will just increase our opportunity to know about those transactions, and it will make the system a lot fairer to people who have to collect the sales tax from their customers," said state Revenue Secretary Helen Powers.

The agreement will allow the 12 states involved to exchange tax and sales information on the business that retailers in their state do with out-of-state customers.

The agreement represents the largest single group of states cooperating in sales tax enforcement efforts, Miss Powers said Monday. It is expected to generate about $2 million in the first year.

Like the other states signing the agreement, North Carolina imposes a tax on the use of goods on which no sales tax has been paid. The 5 percent use tax is identical to the sales tax and is designed to promote fair competition between retailers who must collect sales tax and those — like some mail-order retailers with no North Carolina business — who do not.

Under the agreement, merchants of each state will be encouraged to register voluntarily to collect the use tax for the other states, Miss Powers said.

The tax often goes uncollected by out-of-state retailers not doing business in North Carolina, and their customers fail to report it when they return home. Sometimes North Carolina customers will buy from retailers in neighboring states, and pay neither state's taxes.

"That's an unfair disadvantage for North Carolina retailers," Miss Powers said. "Most people, I don't think, are basically dishonest."

Evangelist Jim Bakker and son Jamie leave courthouse in Charlotte after trial Monday

Falwell Denies He Offered Bakker A Lifetime Salary

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — A former builder for Jim Bakker testified in the PTL founder's fraud and conspiracy trial that Moral Majority leader Jerry Falwell offered Bakker a $300,000 annual salary to keep quiet.

Falwell, who took over PTL after Bakker resigned in a sex and money scandal, offered Bakker an annual salary for life of $300,000 and other perks, said Roe Messner, of Wichita, Kansas.

But a Falwell spokesman said Monday it was Bakker who asked for the money and perks.

Messner testified Monday that Falwell sent him to Palm Springs, Calif., in May 1987 to offer Bakker a deal: the $300,000 salary, a maid, a security guard, health insurance and telephone expenses "if he kept his mouth shut."

Tammy Bakker jotted down the offer on a piece of her pink stationery, Messner said, and Jim Bakker wrote at the bottom: "I'm not making any demands on PTL. I'm not asking for anything."

Defense attorney George T. Davis never asked Messner what Bakker was supposed to keep quiet about.

Testifying for the defense, Messner also said a chief Bakker aide claimed Bakker knew nothing about $265,000 in hush money to Jessica Hahn, the church secretary with whom Bakker had a sexual encounter in 1980.

Through a spokesman, Falwell, founder of the now-defunct Moral Majority, denied the account given by Messner.

Bakker is accused of defrauding followers by using more than $3.7 million in ministry money to fund his lavish lifestyle. The TV evangelist faces up to 120 years in prison and more than $5 million in fines if convicted on all 24 counts of fraud and conspiracy.

Messner testified that the offer to Bakker from Falwell included a maid, a security guard and telephone expenses if Bakker "kept his mouth shut."

It was not clear whether Bakker turned down the alleged offer. Messner was not questioned further about the matter.

Mark DeMoss, a Falwell spokesman, said in a telephone interview that Messner was mistaken. The offer actually was a demand from Bakker, DeMoss said.

James Meredith Joins Helms Staff As Special Adviser

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

— One of the early heroes of the civil rights movement has joined the staff of Sen. Jesse Helms, a match another civil rights leader finds astonishing. But James Meredith calls his move a step forward for blacks.

Meredith, who with the aid of federal marshals in 1962 became the first black to enroll at the University of Mississippi, has become a special assistant to Helms, R-N.C.

The Rev. Joseph Lowery of Atlanta, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, one of the nation's best known civil rights organizations, said he is astonished by Meredith's career turn.

"The only thing I can say about this is that either something has happened to Jesse Helms that I haven't heard about or something has happened to James Meredith that I haven't heard about," Lowery said.

"It sounds incongruous. It sounds like the the odd couple. It is the strangest turn of events that I have heard about in a long time."

The 56-year-old Meredith told The Greensboro News & Record Monday he joined Helms' Washington staff about four weeks ago and is advising the senator on domestic policy.

While Meredith was battling segregation in the South during the '60s, the conservative Helms was gaining a following as a Raleigh television editorialist who harshly criticized the movement to bring about racial change in the South.

Since his election to the Senate in 1972, Helms has vigorously opposed civil rights bills and other domestic programs favored by many blacks. He has defended the white minority government of South Africa, fought making Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday a national holiday and criticized such national black leaders as Jesse Jackson.

Meredith, however, doesn't believe Helms is hostile to blacks.

"I have never seen anyone sustain that charge or give the first iota of evidence," Meredith said.

Efforts to reach Helms for comment about Meredith's new job and salary were unsuccessful Monday.

In a letter that Meredith sent to acquaintances, he wrote:

"I consider this job in the U.S. Senate the most significant development in my long campaign to make the black race full first-class citizens. I am particularly concerned about our domestic policy, especially in regard to the black race, the family, education and drugs," as well as African policy and hunger programs.

Meredith says in the letter that Helms represents the state with the seventh largest black population and that the senator "wants to provide the best possible representation to them as well as the entire black population."

"The thing that has impressed me the most about Sen. Jesse Helms over the years has been his total commitment to preserving the traditional family and maintaining high moral standards based on Christian morality.

"He is constantly criticized for his unbending resistance to the liberal agenda, which seeks to destroy these traditional and moral values. He is right and I admire him for it. That is why I'm here."

Meredith said the job with Helms arose after a long period of correspondence between the two and after following Helms' record through the years.

Meredith joins Helms as the Republican starts another re-election campaign. In an editorial on that campaign, The News and Observer of Raleigh two weeks ago declared that Helms "repeatedly has injected North Carolina election campaigns with the divisive politics of race."

The newspaper charged that "Helms personally tells after-dinner jokes that rely on humor grounded in racial stereotypes."

Meredith said he read that article "and I found not one substantiated charge."

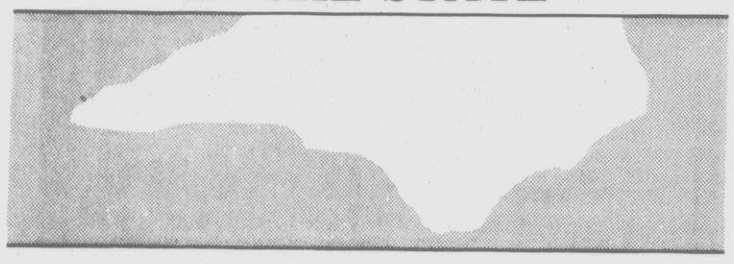

Though Helms won only a tiny percentage of the black vote in his three previous Senate campaigns, Meredith believes that 85 percent of blacks share the views that he and Helms express.

Meredith entered the all-white University of Mississippi after spending nine years in the U.S. Air Force. His arrival on campus caused rioting and two people died, but Meredith stuck it out and graduated in 1962. In 1966 he suffered a minor wound when shot by a sniper while leading a march in Mississippi.

Though he fought for integration, Meredith later was quoted as saying integration has been the worst thing that has happened to black families.

He said Monday that the statement was taken out of context and that there has been too much emphasis on integration — that it singles out blacks.

Robber Injured

DURHAM (AP) — Joined by his wife, a wounded Durham convenience store manager turned the tables on a would-be robber by beating him until he dropped his rifle and begged for mercy and ran, police said.

The gunman remained at large early today, but authorities said he wouldn't soon forget his close encounter with Ralph and Edith Turner.

Police said they didn't know how badly the suspect had been injured, but store officials said Turner's knuckles were badly bruised from hitting the man.

Turner, manager of the Tops Food Mart near Interstate 40 was in fair condition at N.C. Memorial Hospital early today after being shot in the leg during the robbery attempt.

Heritage USA

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — Heritage USA — the Christian theme park and retreat that was the dream child of former PTL leader Jim Bakker — will not reopen after Hurricane Hugo knocked out its utility service and shut its doors.

"We were planning to close the (Heritage Grand) hotel anyhow. It was a cash drain," bankruptcy trustee M.C. Benton said Monday.

The 11-year-old, 2,200-acre Heritage USA near Fort Mill was shut down Friday after Hugo knocked out its electricity and phone service, Benton said.

The Heritage Grand Hotel, full of charismatic Christians and curiosity-seekers before Bakker's downfall, has been vacant in recent months. The neighboring Heritage Towers was never completed.

Bakker resigned from the ministry in March 1987 amidst allegations of misuse of ministry funds and a sex and money scandal. The ministry went into bankruptcy three months later.

Innocent Plea

RALEIGH (AP) — A Johnston County man charged in the slaying of A Chinese-American man killed outside a pool hall pleaded innocent to second-degree murder Monday in Wake Superior Court.

In making the plea, Robert C. Piche rejected a proposed agreement under which he would have been sentenced to a maximum 30 years in prison in exchange for a guilty plea. If a jury finds him guilty of second-degree murder, a judge could sentence him to life in prison.

Piche is charged in the slaying of Ming Hai "Jim" Loo, of Cary, who died following an attack outside a Raleigh pool hall in July.

Witnesses have testified that, in the attack on a group of Asian men, Piche and his brother said they didn't like Vietnamese because their brothers had gone to Vietnam and never returned.

Trench Death

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Department of Labor has fined a Raleigh plumbing firm $28,000 for safety violations in a trench that collapsed, killing a construction worker.

The fine was levied against Evans Plumbing Co. in connection with the death of Blake Aubrey Bunn after an investigation by the labor department's Occupational Safety and Health division, said Maurice R. Edmonston, a department spokesman.

The investigation found that Evans Plumbing violated four safety standards designed to protect workers in trenches. Eight citations were issued.

Bunn, 22, of Clayton, died Aug. 19 when the trench in which he was working collapsed, burying him under four feet of red clay dirt. He and other workers had been laying sewer pipes at a home under construction in an exclusive Raleigh subdivision.

Dr. Morgan and fiance are all smiles after her release

Mother Released From Jail But Could Go Back

WASHINGTON (AP) — A physician, free after two years in jail for refusing to let her daughter visit her former husband, says she realizes she could wind up back behind bars in her bitter child custody battle.

"I don't know that anything is over," Dr. Elizabeth Morgan said shortly after she was released Monday from the District of Columbia jail, joining her fiance, Appeals Court Judge Paul Michel. "I could be jailed again, and I know that, and my daughter remains unprotected."

Dr. Morgan, 41, was jailed on civil contempt of court charges in August 1987 after failing to produce her 7-year-old daughter Hilary for court-ordered visits with Dr. Eric Foretich, her ex-husband and the girl's father. She has alleged that Foretich sexually abused Hilary; Foretich has repeatedly denied those charges.

Her release was the result of a law passed by Congress and signed by President Bush last week limiting civil contempt jail terms in the District of Columbia to 12 months. The law expires after 18 months.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, who sponsored the bill which resulted in her release, said today that Dr. Morgan still could be charged with criminal contempt. "So I suspect this case is not over," he said on ABC's "Good Morning America" program.

Foretich, appearing on the same program, said, "I'm delighted that Elizabeth Morgan is out of jail. I only wish this could be coupled with some concern for my missing daughter. I would have been in support of that bill if the bill had a provision mandating a government agency such as the FBI be required to find my daughter."

While Dr. Morgan smiled during a news conference and held hands with her fiance, federal appeals court judge Paul R. Michel, she acknowledged that her legal fight is far from over.

"I intend to stay here and work through the legal system until (Hilary) is safe," Dr. Morgan said. "I will never give up."

"I cannot say where she is if there is a possibility she would be returned" to Foretich, she said.

Elaine Mittleman, Foretich's attorney, said after Dr. Morgan was released that further proceedings against her are "quite likely."

Dr. Morgan "remains in contempt of court, and this law doesn't change that," Ms. Mittleman said. "That's not being vengeful; it's just what the law is about."

Foretich's attorney maintained in court papers that the new law was unconstitutional because it infringed on the power of the judicial branch to enforce its orders.

Ms. Mittleman also charged in her papers that the law violated several of Foretich's constitutional rights, among them the right to due process of law.

"I feel very happy and very grateful to everyone that has helped me," she said, wearing an orange prison jumpsuit and clutching a dozen yellow roses given her by Michel. "I will probably cry when I say this, but I want to thank God for every angel on Earth who has helped me."

Grand Jury To Study USAir Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A grand jury will hear testimony on the crash of a Charlotte-bound USAir jet into the East River after an aborted takeoff, said Queens District Attorney John J. Santucci.

Santucci said Monday he had no prospective targets and would not seek specific criminal charges.

Among the things the grand jury would investigate was how the crew was picked for Flight 5050, an unscheduled flight, he said.

Santucci's decision to investigate Flight 5050 is unusual, if not unprecedented, airline insiders said.

"We're not aware of criminal charges in the past ever being brought here in the United States against an airline pilot" following a crash, said John Macor, a spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association in Washington.

Rachel Halterman, a spokeswoman for the National Transportation Safety Board in Washington, said, "I don't recall it happening before."

Meanwhile, investigators went inside the wreckage of the jet, looking for additional clues to what caused the plane to skid into the East River Wednesday night. Two people were killed and 59 others were rescued from the river.

Santucci's spokesman, Richard Piperno, said the grand jury could begin hearing testimony immediately, depending on scheduling considerations.

Santucci also would have subpoena power to call witnesses, the spokesman said.

"It would be reasonable to expect the crew to be called," Piperno said. "He wants to have a grand jury sort out all of the facts and take whatever action it deems appropriate."

Federal investigators have criticized the cockpit crew for failing to follow established procedures before the crash. The two men, flying together for the first time, had been chosen from a pool of pilots with the least seniority. The co-pilot, who had flown a 737-400 only once before on a regular passenger flight, was attempting his first takeoff in that model plane with passengers aboard. Both pilots had been working about 12 hours.

A lawyer for the captain, Michael W. Martin, and the co-pilot, Constantine Kleissas, refused to comment.

The attorney, Frederick Hafetz, has stated that he believes his clients innocent of criminal wrongdoing.

Charges that a grand jury might be asked to consider include criminally negligent homicide, vehicular manslaughter and leaving the scene of an accident, according to sources in Santucci's office who requested anonymity.

Teachers Returning To Class

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY — Twenty-thousand teachers were returning to classes today following a one-day walkout, but pledged to maintain pressure for greater funding for a crowded school system that ranks last in per-pupil expenditures.

"We will keep the pressure on," said Utah Education Association President Jim Campbell.

The walkout gave 435,000 children an unexpected holiday when all but two of Utah's 40 school districts were closed down Monday.

The strike was incited by the Legislature's decision during a special session last week to give residents a $38.4 million tax rebate, and not to allocate money to education from a $94 million surplus.

The walkout began with a wildcat strike Friday morning at Davis High School in Davis County, just north of Salt Lake City, and spread to schools in three other large school districts by the end of the day.

Republican Gov. Norm Bangerter and the Republican-controlled Legislature, who drew the wrath of teachers as they previously drew the ire of taxpayers for a record tax hike two years ago, pledged money would be found for education during the regular legislative session, which begins in January.

With a population of 1.7 million, Utah has the largest average household size at 3.17, compared with the national average of 2.62. Nearly 70 percent of its residents are members of the Mormon Church, which encourages large families, and the state has the nation's highest percentage of school-age children, with 37 percent under 18.

With a student-teacher ratio of 25.4 to 1, Utah also has the most overcrowded classrooms, and at $22,621 a year its teachers earn smaller salaries than educators in 43 other states, according to the union. The state ranks 50th in the average annual expenditure per student of $2,326, according to the union.

Years of budget cuts have produced increasing complaints about outdated textbooks and inadequate supplies, with many teachers saying they've had to pay hundreds of dollars out of their own pockets to provide basic supplies.

The governor has said teachers should have waited until the regular legislative session to press their demands, but he acknowledged the walkout got attention.

Animal Rights Groups Plan Procter & Gamble Boycott

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Animal-rights activists say they will avoid buying Procter & Gamble Co. products in an attempt to pressure the company to stop using animals in product safety tests.

Holly Hazard, executive director of the Washington-based Doris Day Animal League, told reporters Monday that 36,000 of the group's members nationwide have returned cards indicating they will support the boycott.

The group accuses the consumer products company of needlessly torturing rabbits and other animals in laboratory tests in which cosmetics and other products are placed in the animals' eyes to document exposure risks.

The Doris Day group and similar organizations, including In Defense of Animals and People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, say the tests are cruel and unnecessary and produce irrelevant data.

The groups said other, more humane tests could provide safety data.

Procter & Gamble, however, says it has been studying alternatives to using animals but so far has found no satisfactory replacements.

Ms. Hazard met Monday with company representatives at Procter & Gamble's Cincinnati headquarters to present her group's demands, but said later she was disappointed with the results.

Ms. Hazard said P&G representatives declined her requests Monday to provide data on the numbers of animals used in testing and would not commit the company to support bills before Congress designed to phase out the use of animals in testing.

She said P&G officials also refused to disavow any relationship or contribution to the Animal Testing Coalition, which animal-rights activists describe as an industry group secretly committed to persuading the public that animal testing is necessary.

But P&G spokeswoman Linda Ulrey said the coalition was only an industry vehicle to educate the public that no sufficient alternatives have been discovered to permit the elimination of animal use in product tests.

Ms. Ulrey said P&G has spent $10 million in the last three years on research into alternatives. She said that compares with $150,000 P&G plans to spend this year on the industry coalition.

Ms. Ultrey said alternatives to animal testing included scientific data-based predictions of effects of product exposure and computer-simulated results of exposure.

But she said: "Right now, the scientific community says you cannot completely walk away from animal testing."

P&G has won recognition for its research into alternatives to animal testing and will receive an award next month from the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Ms. Ulrey said.

Ms. Hazard and other activists said Monday they will stage demonstrations at P&G headquarters during the company's Oct. 10 shareholders' meeting. They also said they would demonstrate that same day at other P&G operations in Baltimore; Chicago; Dallas; Greensboro, N.C.; Hatboro, Pa.; Iowa City, Iowa; Kansas City, Mo.; Oxnard, Calif.; Phoenix, Ariz.; and Sacramento, Calif.

Animal-rights activists have picketed P&G's shareholders meetings in the past.

In 1987, P&G's shareholders followed the company's recommendation in rejecting a resolution to stop using animals in product testing.

In 1988, the shareholders followed P&G's recommendation that they reject a resolution that would have required the company to disclose the numbers of animals used in tests and how much the tests cost.

P&G officials have consistently refused to release such information, saying it is privileged and is not necessarily relevant for comparison with other corporations.

Democrats, White House Agree On Drug Plan

By Jim Drinkard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senate Democrats, reaching for advantage in the politically charged war on drugs, seek today to finalize a tentative agreement with the Bush administration to boost the president's anti-drug plan by $900 million.

"The American people wanted more than the president requested, and this gets more," Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., told reporters in outlining the plan Monday night. "It's not a final solution, but it's a good first step toward fighting the war on drugs."

The agreement, subject to final approval by a handful of key senators who were returning to Washington today, would raise to $8.8 billion the anti-drug funds for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. It includes an across-the-board cut of about 0.43 percent in other federal programs to pay for the stepped-up drug war.

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., the chief negotiator for Senate Republicans, said the White House had agreed to the plan in general terms.

Bush was traveling Monday and had not analyzed the details of the proposed agreement, said White House spokesman Roman Popadiuk. But if it proves consistent with news reports, "then it may form a basis on which we may proceed," Popadiuk said.

The accord was expected to break a two-week logjam keeping four major spending bills from final Senate passage: transportation; foreign aid; veterans, housing and space; and labor, health and education.

But it appeared impossible for Congress to pass in time all of the 13 spending bills needed to keep the government running after Sept. 30, and the House was expected today to approve a 25-day stopgap spending measure. The bill would continue the flow of cash to federal programs at current levels.

The compromise anti-drug figure would be $900 million more than Bush sought in his Sept. 5 speech to the nation, and $3.1 billion more than is being spent on anti-drug programs in the current fiscal year. Congressional Democrats had criticized Bush's request as too little to make headway against the drug scourge.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said the agreement would "substantially improve the president's drug package" and added he was "gratified that the administration has agreed to support necessary funding for the drug program."

While the compromise figure went a little less than halfway toward the $2.2 billion increase Byrd originally proposed, nearly all of the increase — $800 million — would be devoted to drug treatment, education and prevention programs that Democrats said were most seriously underfunded in Bush's outline.

Hatfield sought to minimize any Democratic advantage from the accord by pointing to Bush's leadership in proposing the anti-drug package in the first place.

"This is a bipartisan war," Hatfield said, adding that he expected many Senate Republicans to support the compromise package. "The Democrats don't have any greater degree of support for the drug war than the Republicans."

Left unresolved were several legislative initiatives Bush had proposed on habeas corpus and the death penalty to strengthen the prosecution of drug dealers. Those awaited talks with Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., who was out of town on Monday.

Discussions aimed at finding a compromise broke off on Friday after an apparent stalemate was reached. Byrd, the chief Democratic negotiator, complained that the White House had been "a shadow participant" in the negotiations and was causing the breakdown.

But Hatfield said Byrd telephoned him Friday night and the two met on Saturday to begin putting the talks back on track.

A substantial part of the compromise involved the mechanism to pay for the increased anti-drug programs. The across-the-board cut would hit most government programs equally, excluding Social Security and other federal benefits.

That would mean a dent of about $1.3 billion in next year's $288.2 billion Pentagon budget. But in the case of defense spending, the agreement allows the flexibility the administration had sought to allocate the cuts to areas where the pinch can be minimized.

Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, the senior GOP member of the defense Appropriations subcommittee, said the cuts probably would be aimed at plans for new weapons procurement in order to protect crucial areas like personnel and military readiness, and weapons productions lines already in operation.

Survey Shows 'Alarming Trend' Of Drug Abuse By School Kids

By Carolyn Skorneck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Some sixth-graders say they use cocaine as often as every week, according to a survey released today that shows an "alarming trend" of drug use among junior high school students.

At the same time, illicit use of drugs and alcohol declined among high school students, according to the nonscientific survey of almost 400,000 secondary school students by the National Parents' Resource Institute for Drug Education.

"Whereas we have seen some drops (in drug use) at the upper grades, at the lower grades there is an alarming trend of more use," said Doug Hall, vice president of PRIDE.

Dr. Thomas J. Gleaton, Jr., president of the Atlanta-based drug prevention organization that has been conducting the nationwide surveys since 1982, said the study "detected weekly cocaine use in the sixth grade."

Of the 29,116 sixth-graders who responded to the question about cocaine use, about 233 said they used cocaine weekly or daily, according to the report. About 58 sixth-graders said they used cocaine once or twice a month, and another 87 sixth-graders said they used cocaine one to six times a year, the survey found.

The survey covered 392,003 students in grades 6 to 12 who answered the anonymous questionnaire given in 958 schools in 38 states, according to PRIDE.

Overall for junior high students, of the 161,907 who responded to the question on cocaine use, 0.7 percent or 1,133 said they used it weekly or daily; an equal number used it infrequently and 648 said they used it once or twice a month.

The study showed 24.9 percent of junior high school students said they had drunk an alcoholic beverage this year. Two years ago 26.3 percent said they had done so, and in 1984-85, 21.2 percent said they had.

In senior high school grades — 9-12 — the use of cocaine, marijuana, beer and liquor declined from the levels of two and four years ago, the study found.

A total of 4.6 percent of the 223,036 students in grades 9-12 who responded to the question on cocaine use said they used the drug this year, compared with 5.7 percent four years ago and 6.4 percent two years ago, the PRIDE survey found. Of the 10,260 this year who said they used cocaine, 2,900 said they used it weekly or daily, according to the report.

The National High School Seniors Survey, released in February, also found that drug abuse among high school seniors declined last year, reaching its lowest level since 1975. That survey by the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research found that the proportion of seniors who have used cocaine at least once in their lifetime dropped from 15 percent in 1987 to 12 percent in 1988.

Gleaton said only 22 percent of the senior class of 1989 was drug-free, with the other 78 percent saying they had used a drug or alcoholic beverage in the previous year.

"It is a matter of grave concern to the nation that thousands of young and promising brains are being impaired daily," said Dr. Gabriel G. Nahas of Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons, who is PRIDE's medical advisor.

Cigarette smoking, while not considered a drug by PRIDE, gained popularity in all the grades surveyed, with 38.7 percent of high school students and 28.1 percent of junior high school students saying they had smoked a cigarette, increases over both two and four years ago.

Extrapolating from the survey, PRIDE estimated that 690,000 American students in grades 6-12 tried cocaine last year and about 223,000 used cocaine weekly or daily. PRIDE did not provide a margin of error for this estimate, however.

Bush Seeks Backing For Chemicals' Ban

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush today is seeking congressional support for his new chemical weapons plan, contending U.S. and Soviet abolition of such weapons will slow their proliferation in Third World countries as well.

As Bush returned Monday night from New York, where he outlined before the United Nations his offer of an 80 percent cut in U.S. chemical weapons stockpiles, a top Soviet official expressed preliminary approval of Bush's general approach.

"We have a positive view of these proposals, because from the beginning we stood for the total elimination of all chemical stockpiles," said Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in New York. However, he added, "As for the specific proposals by the president I believe they will have to be studied additionally."

Later, at a dinner Bush hosted Monday evening at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, Secretary of State James A. Baker III suggested to Shevardnadze that the two meet today. "We have some news from Moscow," Shevardnadze told Bush and Baker, but did not give details.

Bush today invited bipartisan congressional leaders to the White House to discuss the chemical weapons initiative, which hinges on joint U.S. and Soviet reductions.

The proposal, designed to spur a 40-nation conference in Geneva to ban all chemical weapons within 10 years, would have the two superpowers reduce their stockpiles to a level equivalent to 20 percent of the current U.S. level. That would mean deeper cuts for the Soviets, because U.S. officials contend Moscow has far greater stockpiles than the United States — an acknowledged 50,000 tons compared to an estimated 30,000 tons for the United States.

Bush proposed a U.S.-Soviet agreement to begin those cuts at once, while a 40-nation treaty is being worked out in which the United States would destroy 98 percent of its chemical weapons over eight years if the Soviets joined the ban.

Greek Leftists Kill Leader's Son-In-Law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece — The son-in-law of the conservative New Democracy party leader Constantine Mitsotakis was fatally wounded by two unidentified gunmen today as he entered his downtown office, police said.

The Marxist terrorist organization November 17 claimed responsiblity for the killing of 54-year-old Pavlov Bakoyannis in leaflets found scattered in the street nearby, police said.

Bakoyannis, a New Democracy lawmaker and the party's press spokesman, died during surgery at a nearby hospital about an hour after he was shot at least six times from close range, police said.

November 17 accused Bakoyannis of being connected with a banker with whom he founded a magazine with money allegedly embezzled from the Bank of Crete. The banking scandal contributed to the defeat in June elections of the socialist administration of former Premier Andreas Papandreou.

November 17 has claimed responsibility for at least 13 killings and numerous bombings in its 13 years. Its victims have included three senior U.S. officials, diplomats, industrialists and judges.

The group first surfaced with the assassination of Athens CIA station chief Richard Welch in 1975. It also claimed the killing in June 1988 of U.S. Defense Attache William E. Nordeen.

Police said Bakoyannis was shot at about 8 a.m. in the hallway of the building housing his office on Omirou street. As he lay in a pool of blood passersby rushed him to Evangelismos hospital.

Police said Bakoyannis' bodyguard, who also served as his driver, was parking the car at the time.

The murder shocked the political world as parliamentarians condemned the shooting in statements read over private radio stations.

Bakoyannis, a former journalist and magazine publisher, was elected to Parliament for the first time in June.

Mitsotakis rushed to the hospital along with his wife, Marika, minutes after he learned his son-in-law had been shot. He was joined later by his daughter Dora, Bakoyannis' wife.

Witnesses told police that two men had apparently been waiting for Bakoyannis as he entered the building where his political office is located.

Police said later that the getaway car was found abandoned about a mile from the scene of the shooting.

Protesters Settle In

The Associated Press

Members of a group calling themselves the American Disabled for Accessible Public Transportation, most of them in wheelchairs, settle in for the night during a protest Monday evening in the lobby of the Richard B. Russell federal building in Atlanta. The group had been ordered out of the building earlier in the day, but President Bush intervened, directing federal authorities to allow the protest to continue.

Money Blows Across Highway

CASEYVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Motorists were surprised to find $100 bills blowing across the highway. And police were surprised three motorists turned the money in.

The St. Clair County Sheriff's Department was called to investigate Sunday after motorists reported finding nearly $2,000 in bills of $100, $20, $10 and $1 blowing across State 159.

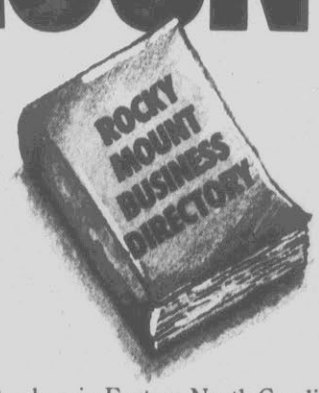

"Nobody knows where it came from," said St. Richard Scott.

One of those who turned in money, Evie Gorski, said she owns a business and knows how important the loss can be.

"We're hoping somebody would do the same if we had lost money ourselves," said the 40-year-old Edwardsville resident.

Ferry Fire Was Set, Police Say

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COPENHAGEN, Denmark — The fire that killed two people and injured dozens aboard a huge North Sea passenger ferry apparently was deliberately set, police said today.

The 600-foot Tor Scandinavia was traveling from Goteborg, Sweden, to Harwich, England, with 650 passengers and crew when the fire broke out at dawn Monday.

The fire was put out within a few hours and the Danish ferry, owned by the shipping company Scandinavian Seaways, sailed under its own power to its home port, Esbjerg.

Esbjerg police inspector Herluf Mogensen, head of the investigation, said the fire started in a hall with linen closets, close to a staircase on a passenger deck in the bow. The staircase leads up to the radio room. Mogensen said electric failure had been excluded as a cause of the blaze.

"Theoretically a cigarette could have been accidentally dropped in one of the 10 trolleys standing in the hall with linen, but the violent development of the fire indicates it was helped and that it was deliberately set," Mogensen told the Associated Press.

He said a crew member carried out a routine inspection 40 minutes before the fire started and found everything was normal.

Mogensen declined to say if there were any suspects.

A middle-aged Swedish couple was found dead in a cabin close to where the fire started.

Mogensen said 35 persons suffering from smoke inhalation were treated in hospital. Shipping company officials said Monday that 10 were injured. Danish radio reported Monday night that about 50 were taken to hospital when the ferry reached Esbjerg. The reason for the discrepancies was not immediately explained.

Moslem War Lords Reject Reform Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Moslem militia chieftains today criticized political reforms being considered by legislators and warned that the fighting in Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war will continue.

A 3-day-old truce, which halted six months of fighting between the Syrian army and Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun's forces, was "generally holding" with no serious violations, police said.

Sporadic sniper fire crackled along Beirut's dividing Green Line, but that has become a daily ritual.

"The military battle is not over yet and will not be finished on the basis of a new sectarian compromise contained in the committee's draft plan," declared Walid Jumblatt, leader of the Syrian-backed Druse Moslem Progressive Socialist Party.

His remarks, published by the independent An-Nahar daily, reflected the hostility between Syria's Moslem and leftist allies and the Christians who have long dominated Lebanon's political system.

Shiite Moslem militia chieftain Nabih Berri also criticized the proposed reforms, which aim to split power equally, saying they were "not enough."

"The constitution which they want to change gives us more than the Arab committee's plan for reforms," he said.

Berri did not elaborate. But he has been insisting that Lebanon's 1.2 millin-strong Shiites, the country's largest sect, should have a greater share of power than other sects.

The remarks by Jumblatt and Berri underlined the fragility of the cease-fire, brokered by an Arab League committee, that took effect Saturday.

The truce was part of a seven-point peace plan forged by King Fahd of Saudi Arabia, King Hassan II of Morocco and President Chadli Bendjedid of Algeria in an effort to end the civil war that has claimed more than 150,000 lives.

The criticism came as Arab League mediator Lakhdar al-Ibrahimi, an Algerian, met Christian legislators to discuss a planned meeting by Lebanon's parliament in Saudi Arabia on Saturday on the proposed political reforms.

Ibrahimi, deputy secretary-general of the Arab League, later told reporters: "The ball's now in the legislators' court."

Legislator Jibran Taouk said Maronite deputies will "announce our stand on the reforms Wednesday after a meeting with Gen. Aoun."

Beirut's leftist As-Safir daily reported that Aoun was also "exerting pressure on Christian parliamentary deputies prior to their departure for Saudi Arabia."

Aoun, a Maronite, was believed to be pushing the Christian deputies not to give too much away in Saudi Arabia.

The venue was selected because it will allow the deputies to discuss the reforms far from any pressure by the powerful militia leaders.

Sandinistas Open Party Convention, Pick Ortega

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — In a bid to establish its democratic credentials, Nicaragua's governing Sandinista party for the first time opened its doors to the public as party delegates met to select candidates for next February's general elections.

As expected President Daniel Ortega was elected to stand for a second six-year term as was Vice President Sergio Ramirez.

What was unusual, indeed unprecedented, was the manner in which they were chosen. Instead of its traditional closed-door sessions, the Sandinistas chose to hold an American-style party convention, complete with balloons, children in fancy dress, musical interludes and last but not least, debate.

Speakers frequently were drowned out by deafening cheers accompanied by the sound of hundreds of rattles. Elected candidates were thrown into the air and carried on the backs of their supporters.

It was left to Interior Minister Tomas Borge to nominate the presidential ticket. Addressing his words to the U.S. government, he said, "If this isn't democracy, what is democracy?"

And there were promises of more openness around the corner. "In the past we have been going through war and economic harassment of all sorts. As peace has been gaining ground and war receding, more open and democratic ways are possible," said Finance Minister Luis Carrion.

It was a spectacular affair, entitled the "Great Convention of the Sandinista Front with the people." More than a thousand delegates attended, together with foreign diplomats and scores of reporters.

The choice of the candidates came after 2½ days of internal debate within the party. The discussion culminated in the 12-hour convention where the candidates were approved. Also elected were a list of 90 national assembly deputies and a new party policy program, bearing the slogan "Everything will be better."

The Sandinistas are anxious to show not only that they can govern democratically, but that there are also democratic procedures within the party.

Nicaragua goes to the polls in five months and already numerous observer groups are in the country watching to see if the electoral process is free and fair.

Critics say that the convention was a pure publicity stunt. The debate was often highly theatrical with celebrities — such as the artillery gunner who shot down American Contra cargo kicker Eugene Hasenfus — invited to read the lists of official candidates.

Other criticisms centered on charges that the choice of candidates had already been made by the party chiefs. No primaries were held to select the National Assembly candidates. But, although the great majority of these candidates were nominated unopposed by the party hierarchy, a few were unseated by independently proposed rivals. All candidates were subjected to a vote.

Soviets Debating Reforms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The Supreme Soviet today began a stormy debate on the future of small private businesses that President Mikhail Gorbachev says are facing an ultimatum from Soviet consumers upset about price gouging.

Gorbachev questioned why soap, for example, is sold by the businesses for as much as $9 when it should sell for $1.50 or less.

"We have to take into account the mood of the people," he told the legislature as it began debating proposed amendments that would decentralize control of private firms and give local governments more power to regulate them.

The amendments were to be submitted to a legislative committee, but both opponents and supporters of the private businesses, called cooperatives, used the joint session to debate the enterprises' future.

The debate came a day after the Soviet government presented a "crisis" budget including a reduction in defense spending by more than 8 percent and measures to cut the budget deficit in half.

Gorbachev initiated legislation that beginning in 1987 allowed individuals to set up small cooperative businesses to provide goods and services the government-run economy could not.

He said he stands by cooperatives for the innovation and competition they can bring to the Soviet economy, but that price gouging and corruption must be controlled because of public outrage.

Several groups, including trade union activists and a group of farmers who met with Gorbachev last weekend, are demanding a crackdown on cooperatives, which charge prices that are not regulated by the state.

Deputy Veniamin Yarin of Nizhni Tagilsk said that cooperatives engage in "open robbery of the working man."

But Deputy Anatoly Sobchak, head of the law school at Leningrad State University, said cooperatives in some areas were facing wholesale closure by local governments that were ignoring the law.

Deputy Premier Leonid Abalkin, one of Gorbachev's closest economic advisers, presented the amendments and told the deputies that "cooperatives are making the first step toward forming a socialist market, which we have been talking about for so long."

Abalkin said problems that cause public outrage with cooperatives actually are the problems of the entire Soviet economy, such as severe shortages of basic goods and services.

Hungarian Parliament Opens Session On Political Reforms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUDAPEST, Hungary — Parliament today began a landmark session that is expected to begin Hungary's historic shift from Communist domination to a multiparty system and free elections.

Lawmakers are to consider six key bills dealing with the function of political parties, a new electoral law, the establishment of a constitutional court and changes in the penal code.

The legislature also is to adopt changes in the constitution to eliminate all references to the leading role of the Communist Party. The Communists have committed themselves to multiparty elections and have pledged to go into opposition if they lose.

Elections are due to be held by June. They would be the first free elections in Hungary since the Communists consolidated power in 1948.

The legislators today approved membership of four opposition members who received a majority at recent by-elections, marking the first time members of the opposition took their seats in the Communist-dominated assembly.

Gabor Roszik, the first opposition member elected in July, was accompanied to the Parliament building by supporters waving flags.

"Democracy has returned to Parliament after a 40-year exile," Roszik told the house.

"This is one of the most significant steps of the revolution underway in Hungary, as we move from dictatorial socialism to democracy," Roszik said. "The millions of Hungarians have never paid such close attention to our work as they do now."

The bills before Parliament this week are designed to bring legislation in line with preparations for the multiparty elections, which would be the first since the Communists consolidated power in 1948.

The legislature also is to discuss a law that would allow Hungarians to travel and emigrate freely. Earlier this month, Hungary opened its borders to thousands of East Germans seeking to emigrate to the West, angering its hard-line Communist allies.

More than 70 percent of the 387 members of Parliament are Communists. So-called independent candidates elected after 1985 when Hungary instituted multi-candidate elections had to be approved by a Communist-affiliated organization.

According to the state MTI news agency, Parliament is to continue debate on the draft laws Oct. 17-20, indicating the agenda is expected to evoke considerable debate.

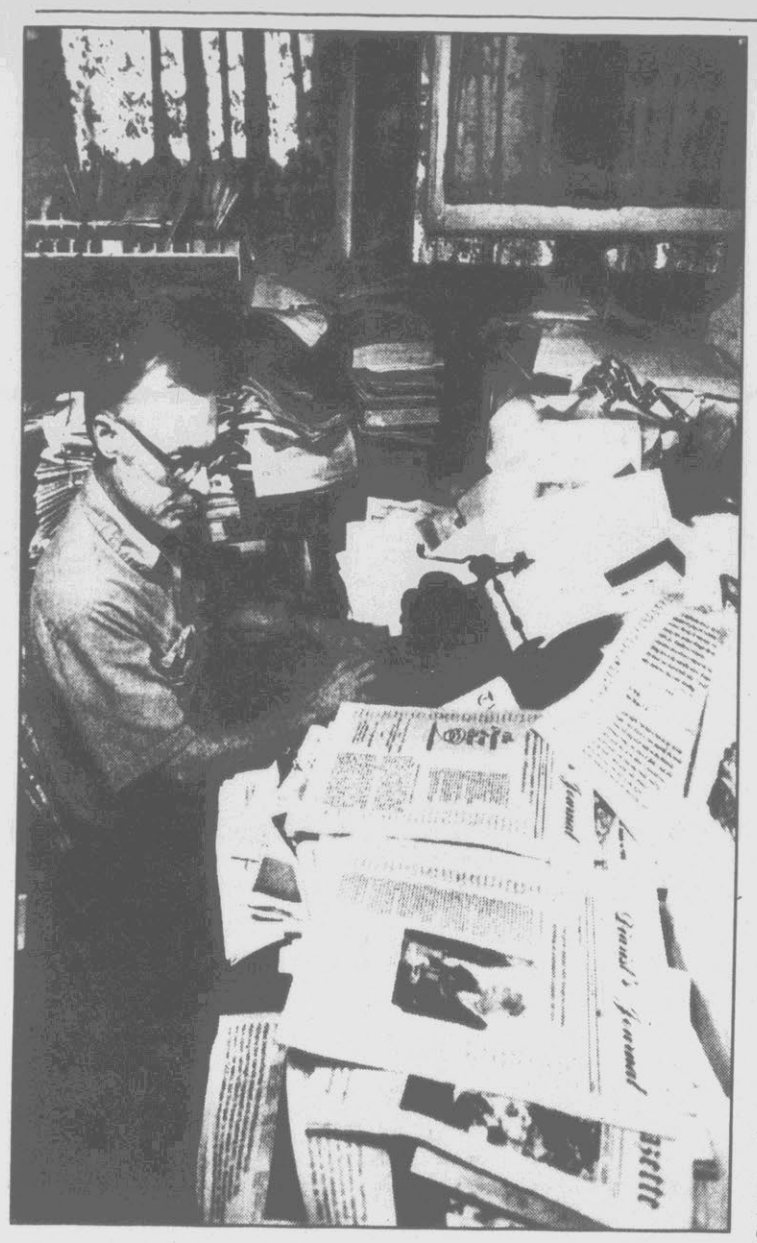

A new constitution that is to provide guarantees for a multiparty system and universal human rights is currently being drafted.

By Charles Hillinger
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LANSFORD, Pa. — "The days are closing in as the anniversary of Dad's death draws near. Thirteen years since he was murdered. And still no answers," writes LoRee Peery of Walton, N.Y., in her diary.

"Someone, somewhere has kept silent all these years. I know somebody knows the killer. Someone who is too frightened to come forward. ..."

An excerpt from the diary of Michael Brownstein of Chicago starts: "I was looking for a cool seat on the train." In her diary, Lynette Benton of Arlington, Mass. laments: "I write till my muscles ache as though I've been hauling bricks."

A teen-ager named Julie confesses in her diary that she has been reading her sister's diary.

D. Watt of San Diego tells of hitchhiking from Las Vegas, N.M., and eventually getting a ride in a van "from a bearded Moses-type guy. I was a captive audience down the desert road as he played Holy Roller sermon tapes."

And, Gladys Street of Cadiz, Ky., writes about a landmark day in her life: "I woke up and said: 'Ugh! Today I am 85! How awful! But, I'll have to go along with Minnie Pearle. I'm just so glad to be here.' "

These and scores of other excerpts from contemporary diaries have been appearing in a monthly tabloid, the Diarist's Journal, published since January 1988.

Brewery worker Edward Gildea, a lifelong diarist himself, moonlights as publisher of what he believes is the only periodical in the world devoted exclusively to diary and journal keeping. He publishes the nationally circulated paper from the cluttered basement of his modest home in this small Appalachian Mountain coal-mining town.

The 60-year-old publisher graduated from Penn State as a journalism major in 1952. He worked on several small-town Pennsylvania daily and weekly newspapers as a reporter and editor before going to work for a brewery. He and his wife, Dolores, who have been married 30 years, have seven children and five grandchildren.

Abiding by the Journal's motto "True things happening to ordinary people," Gildea fills his 20-page publication with excerpts from personal diaries submitted by his readers. But he also runs features on present and past diarists.

"I saw an item in a newspaper reporting that 5 million blank diary books are sold every year in America," explains the shy, slender 5-foot-6 bespectacled publisher.

"Thinking diarists would like to share their recorded personal experiences, I decided to publish a journal just for them." He spent eight years planning the publication "before I finally got enough nerve to do it."

He expected the Diarist's Journal to be a lot more successful than it has been so far. "I thought I would have at least 1,000 subscribers by the end of the first year, 2,000 to 3,000 by the end of the second year. So far, it has a circulation of only 536 in 35 states and Washington, D.C.

It is most popular in New York, where 82 are sold. California is next with 55, then Pennsylvania with 52 and Texas with 35. Subscriptions cost $12 a year. Gildea says he has not lost any on the publication so far: "My big problem is getting the word out to people who keep diaries that there is a journal especially for them."

Retired Los Angeles attorney Raymond Lee Zager, who has kept a diary since 1957, did a story for the Diarist's Journal about a trip he made to Kirkcaldy, Scotland, to visit the grave of Marjory Fleming. A statue on top of her tombstone shows a young girl seated in a chair. Wearing an ankle-length dress, she sits with a quill in hand and a diary on her lap.

The inscription on the tombstone reads: "Marjory Fleming. 'Pet Marjorie' died at Kirkcaldy Dec. 19th, 1811, aged eight years and 11 months. The Youngest Immortal in The World of Letters." The girl started keeping a diary when she was 6 and filled 154 pages by the time she died.

A story about 1,000 years of diaries written by Japanese women appeared in a recent issue as did a story about Betty Lacey's collection of 100 old diaries found in flea markets and antique shops.

The entire July 1988 issue was devoted to Edward Robb Ellis, the 82-year-old New Yorker listed in the Guinness Book of World Records as the world's champion diarist. He has been keeping a daily diary since 1927, writing 18 million words on 35,000 pages bound in 60 volumes.

Ellis' diaries are housed in the University of Wyoming's American Heritage Center. He began his diary when he was 16. He worked on several newspapers as a reporter until his retirement and was married three times.

James and Kristen Cummings are the owners of what is said to be the largest private collection of diaries in the world. They have more than 12,700 diaries in the library of their Stillwater, Minn., home. Their collection was the subject of a feature story in the Diarist's Journal.

Town Wants To Spread Spirit

Dear Abby: Please help us find a community to honor with the Midland Community Spirit Award.

After the rescue of Jessica McClure from an abandoned well, the citizens of Midland, Texas, want to recognize another community that has worked together to accomplish a goal.

So often our attention is focused only on negatives. But as shown in the rescue of Jessica, when people work together, miraculous results are accomplished. We know there must be many large and small victories occurring in communities every day. We hope that by recognizing another community, we can share the good will we have received and encourage other communities to tackle difficult problems they may face.

We have asked President Bush to present the Midland Community Spirit Award at a White House ceremony next month.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Abby, please publish this, and invite proud citizens to nominate their communities now. The deadline for nominations is Oct. 1, 1989. For a simple nomination form, write to: Community Spirit Award Nomination Form, P.O. Box 1152, Midland, Texas 79702-1152. Or phone (915) 685-7411 for applications. -- Carroll M. Thomas, Mayor, Midland, Texas

Dear Mayor Thomas: Here's your letter. Please send me a form; I would like to nominate my own hometown -- Sioux City, Iowa -- for its show of generosity, compassion and teamwork when a United Airlines jet crashed in a Sioux City cornfield on July 19.

Doctors, nurses, paramedics and thousands of public-spirited citizens rushed to the scene to offer aid and comfort to the survivors and their families. Restaurateurs brought food, hotels offered lodging, and people stood in line to donate blood. I'm sure there are many other communities where citizens rose to the occasion when tragedy struck. Readers?

Dear Abby: It's been almost nine months since my husband and I got married, and here's my problem. Although my husband is busy with school and a job, we agreed to share the duty of sending out thank-you notes for our wedding gifts.

I went through all our gifts and made a list. I also addressed all the envelopes. Then I did my half of the notes, and my husband was supposed to do the other half -- which he told me he had done.

Well, yesterday I found most of his half of the thank-you notes in a box in our spare room. I couldn't believe my eyes!

What should I do now? I know I still need to send them out, but how do I apologize for getting them out so late? Everyone who hasn't received a thank-you note yet must think we are absolutely awful! Please help. -- Embarrassed

Dear Embarrassed: Judging from your husband's track record, in order to avoid further delay, you'd better write the balance of the thank-you notes yourself. Although your husband doesn't deserve to be protected, resist the temptation to "explain" why your acknowledgment is so late. How disappointing for you to learn that your husband is not only irresponsible, he's less than honest.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Today's Man Looks For A Trophy Wife

As far as I know, there hasn't been a cute name assigned to people who have been married to one person for 30 or 40 years. We refer to ourselves as "dinosaurs," mostly because we're nearly extinct, move in the slow lane and are reputed to have small brains in comparison to our bodies.

There was a time when our sons and daughters looked for mates to marry just like their mothers or fathers. Somewhere between Dr. Spock and Dr. Ruth, the rules changed. A new man and woman emerged, and both moved away from the traditional molds. Women weren't challenged anymore by bathtub mold and snapping fresh beans, as were their mothers. Men had more important things to do on Saturdays than fertilize their lawns and build bookcases out of 2-by-4s and cement blocks, as their fathers did.

Wives were encouraged to be financially and emotionally independent, and husbands were expected to share in domestic responsibilities. Men and women no longer married their parents, but a revolution in progress.

The rules changed again.

The newest couple on the American scene is the "trophy" wife and the successful, powerful, celebrity husband. According to an article in Fortune magazine written by a senior editor, Julie Connelly, this marriage is usually a ⅔econd one for both parties. The trophy wife is often a decade or two younger than her husband, sometimes several inches taller, beautiful, and very often accomplished in her own right. But her role is to enhance her husband's status and to "dispel the notion that men peak sexually at age 18."

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

These men aren't marrying a revolution; they're marrying their fantasy mistress and ultimate movie star. She's the convertible they always lusted after, the prom queen who didn't know they were alive or the girl who dated only guys with their own cars.

We have a whole generation of men and women out there who are scared to death of marriage. The rules keep changing. They don't know what to look for, what to expect, what to throw away or what to keep.

The expectations for marriage have always been bigger than the institution was ever capable of delivering. Most of the rules were stupid to begin with: A woman should never marry a man shorter than she is. Women should never make more money than their husbands. A man should be older than his wife. Beware of someone who has been married before. The rules begged to be broken.

As I told one of my unmarried sons the other day, "The way the trend for the 1990s is shaping up, my advice to you would be to get a terrific job, make a bundle, go to a tanning salon, lift weights and buy a good hairpiece. Your trophy wife is about to be born ... sometime this fall."

Actor Jimmy Stewart Is Published Poet At 81

By Megan Rosenfeld
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Jimmy Stewart never set out to be a writer. Being an American icon is enough of a job, and besides, he never could spell. All he ever wanted to do was record a few memorable events in his life and see if he could make the words rhyme, and now almost his entire output has been turned into a 31-page book.

"Johnny Carson said, 'The book's skinnier than you are.' I said well, it took me 20 years to write," he said Tuesday.

It was Carson, actually, who was indirectly responsible for Stewart becoming a published author at the age of 81. Stewart recited some of his poems on Carson's show and the response inspired Crown Publishers Inc. to put the book together. "Every now and then I'd get a letter from a fan asking where he could get a copy of the poem, or where he could get the book. And then a columnist (Dear Abby) printed the poem about my dog Beau from a transcript."

Here is part of the poem about Beau:

He never came to me when I would call
Unless I had a tennis ball,
Or he felt like it,
But mostly he didn't come at all.

Then there is a section that deals with Beau's reluctance to submit to any discipline, his tendency to attack deliverymen and gas meter readers, and the way he sometimes would climb into bed with Stewart and his wife, Gloria:

And there were nights when I'd feel this stare
And I'd wake up and he'd be sitting there
And I'd reach out my hand and stroke his hair.
And sometimes I'd feel him sigh and I think I know the reason why.
He would wake up at night
And he would have this fear
Of the dark, of life, of lots of things,
And he'd be glad to have me near.
And now he's dead.
And there are nights when I think I feel him
Climb upon our bed and lie between us,
And I pat his head.
And there are nights when I think
I feel that stare
And I reach out my hand to stroke his hair.
But he's not there.
Oh, how I wish that wasn't so.

I'll always love a dog named Beau.

"I frankly don't look on myself as a poet," Stewart said. "These are just stories I told and made into rhymes."

The truth is, people may buy this book not because they love poetry but because they love Jimmy Stewart. And they seem to be doing that in droves, especially as he travels around the country agreeably signing books for all comers. Tuesday, for example, about 500 people turned up at Sidney Kramer Books in Washington, at one point queuing through International Square. The store had purchased 800 books and had 75 left Tuesday afternoon.

"All through my movie days I've always been in favor of going out on the road and publicizing the movie," he said, explaining why he had no problem with a five-city book tour. "I went around the world with the four Hitchcock movies. ... I've always had the feeling you owe the audience something besides doing the picture and throwing it out at them."

In 1936, he said, a man named Ted Healy told him something that has stuck ever since. Healy was the man who originated the Three Stooges and brought them to Hollywood. Stewart was under contract to MGM. "He said, 'You may do all right in pictures. But always treat your audience not as customers, but as partners.'"

Perhaps this helps explain why Stewart has, over the years, become a cultural archetype with such a straightforward and unblemished identity that he is approached with near reverence. His public, it seems, has never wavered, and now a new generation of fans is coming forward because of the availability of such classics as "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" and "It's a Wonderful Life" on videocassette. He is one of those actors whose persona is inextricably mixed with the characters he has played, his own lanky, laconic, unpretentious brand of middle American. And too, he has never been splashed across the tabloids for hanky-panky with underage girls, or bashed a photographer, or confessed to any virulent addictions. He has been married to Gloria for 40 years. At this point, if you can't believe in Jimmy Stewart, what can you believe in?

"The older I get, the more people recognize me. And they're older too," he deadpanned. At 81 he has clearly joined the elder statesman crowd, his hair a dry white, his eyes behind horn-rimmed glasses a bit rheumy. But he jokes about it too, and about the slight deafness that requires a visitor to speak up. When John Strauss, who has been his public relations man for 31 years, mentions that longevity is in Stewart's genes, Stewart notes his father died at 88. "That means I've got seven years left," he joked.

"Didn't you say your grandfather lived to 102?" Strauss replied.

Stewart said he is still sent scripts, but the part is always "a grouchy grandfather, and I don't think grandfathers have to be grouchy." (He is grandfather to four.) And he is frank, and always has been, about mourning the loss of the major studio system in Hollywood.

"I've always felt that was the real way to make movies. This idea of being independent and waiting around for someone to send you a script. ... You went to work every day, got home at 6. If you weren't in a picture, you exercised in the gym, or you were doing a (screen) test with someone they wanted to take a look at, or you were out on the road publicizing a movie you might not even have been in. The heads of studios — they called them moguls, which is embarrassing. They loved the movies and they insisted on variety. You had the Three Stooges on one lot and 'Romeo and Juliet' on another. It'll never come back. Now they're owned by all sorts of people, like Coca-Cola."

He does not intend to write his autobiography, he said. This in itself may be newsworthy. "There have been three books written about me, without my knowledge, and I've read them all. They're all pretty interesting, and I really don't think there's anything else to say."

In recent years Stewart has continued to travel (he was in Antarctica last winter and in East Africa in June) and to lobby against colorizing movies, a process inaugurated by Ted Turner in 1986 by which old black-and-white classics, such as "It's a Wonderful Life," are turned into color movies. Stewart has spoken with individual senators (as he did Tuesday with Paul Simon, Mark Hatfield and Arlen Specter), spoken publicly, written letters — and lent his considerable presence to a cause he cares about deeply. He even lobbied his old pal Ronald Reagan when he was in the White House. Reagan never committed himself one way or the other.

He is asked whether he has ever lobbied Ted Turner personally, bearded the lion in his den, so to speak.

"I think that's probably the last thing I want to do."

He says it softly, calmly, but with a touch of steel in his voice, a hint of hard determination in the way he nods. He says it just like Jimmy Stewart.

Staying Single Is Appealing To Some

Your Mental Health

By Jeannie Golden

If you're single, are you waiting for Prince or Princess Charming to sweep you off your feet, ride with you into the sunset of a happy-ever-after marriage?

Then you'll be surprised to know that some people actually choose to remain single, that they wouldn't marry even if Mr. or Ms. Charming came along.

Granted, being single isn't always wild romances, travel to exotic places, and endless money to spend on yourself. But a single lifestyle does have advantages.

You can make decisions without considering and potentially displeasing another person.

"I love the freedom," says Ann, who was married for 12 years and has been single for seven. "I love not having to notify anybody if I'm going to work late. I can eat carrot sticks if I don't feel like cooking, keep the light on the read half the night, spend my money foolishly, put violet wallpaper in the bathroom. I like not having to be considerate except when I want to be."

You may want to relocate, be a foster parent, invest money in risky venture or change careers. You can change plans at the last minute, put energy into exactly what activities you want, have whatever values suit you for the day. And you can do these things without letting anyone down, without confusing someone or spoiling someone's dreams.

Being single gives you the opportunity to stretch and flex your emotional muscles.

"I bought my house as an investment," said Sheryl, 32, and single, "and I did it by myself, with my own money."

Jason, 42, also single, enjoys entertaining friends in his spotlessly clean house.

"I've made myself learn to do it all," he said, "cook, clean, wash, decorate. And I'm good at it! It's a treat to have friends in."

Being single doesn't mean you have to handle everything alone. Friends or relatives are usually willing to help or share experiences with you. But being single does give you the option of doing for yourself -- and what an exciting, exhilarating feeling that can bring!

A sense of accomplishment and inner strength come from being in control of your own life. In order to be happy with a single lifestyle, however, you need a balance between fulfilling your need for independence and your need for intimacy.

You may have a desire to be a part of a family -- to recreate the satisfying family life you had as a child or to improve upon what was lacking. It isn't necessary to be married to have those close relationships which are so extremely valuable. You can create your "family" by choosing friends who meet this need. And your family can be as varied as you want, can take may forms.

You may have friends who have children with whom you develop a special relationship to fulfill your need to nurture. Other friends may be fun to "hang out" with -- to laugh, play, act silly.

Sheryl has one friend who goes with her every year to a fund raiser caller Bid for Bachelors.

"I get a big kick out of the Bid," Sheryl said. "But nobody I know except my friend Clair would go with me to such a thing. We have a blast."

You can have a friend who is like a brother or sister with whom you bare your soul, leave yourself vulnerable, knowing you'll get only compassion and concern in response.

Another friend might be intellectually stimulating or keep you informed about important political issues. Yet another can tap you creative resouces, join you in carrying out crazy ideas and elaborate new projects.

"Brenda helped me build a sailboat," Tom said. He is 38, single, and planning to stay that way. "We've been friends since college, and she's the best carpenter around."

Emotional needs are complex, and they change as time passes and as you change. Mostly everyone knows that one person, one relationship, can't fulfill every personal need. When you're single, you're free to cultivate a wide array of significant relationships -- with persons of the same as well as the opposite sex -- and to move between them as you change.

"I suppose I might think about marriage again," Ann said. "But I'm not willing to settle for anything less than what I have now, and I love what I have."

Water

vated water tower at Telfair and 3rd streets and the fire station at Market and Fifth streets, Oakdale Cemetery at 15th and Bonner streets and the Jordan Water Plant at 3rd and Plymouth streets.

Radford said people getting water from anywhere except the fire station should bring their own containers.

As of Monday, the Washington city school system stopped using city water and nursing homes in the city also stopped using the water and switched to using bottled water, Radford said.

He said the Beaufort County Hospital has moved its water tap from one city water location to another that is less contaminated with the trihalomethane. Hospital officials are awaiting the results of further tests of the city water before they decide whether they will stop using city water altogether, he said.

After initial tests of the water turned up the trihalomethane, subsequent testing revealed the presence of high amounts of carbon tetrachloride, which has been linked by some researchers to birth defects.

City officials have ordered further tests of the water to determine if levels of that chemical exceed EPA safe levels. Radford expects to have the results of those tests by Thursday and said he does not anticipate a problem with carbon tetrachloride.

"We did tests for carbon tetrachloride when it was first found in the water and ours was found to be well within the EPA allowed limits, so I don't foresee a problem with that," Radford said.

Soviets Accept Bush Offer To Cut Chemical Stockpile

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said today that Moscow will join the United States and "radically reduce or completely destroy" all the chemical weapons it has stockpiled.

Shevardnadze, in a speech to the General Assembly, also said the Soviet Union will stop producing such weapons.

The speech was a prompt reply from Moscow to President Bush's proposal Monday to drastically reduce chemical weapons stockpiles. The proposal was given to the Soviets during the weekend and announced by Bush in his U.N. address.

Bush offered an 80 percent cut in U.S. chemical weapons stockpiles if the Soviets reciprocate.

Speaking to delegates of 159 nations, Shevardnadze said "We welcome the proposal concerning chemical weapons put forward yesterday by President Bush.

"Generally consistent with the well-known initiatives of the Soviet leadership, it indicates to us that we share the desire to rid mankind of those barbaric weapons."

He said "The Soviet Union is ready, together with the United States, to go further and assume mutual obligations prior to the conclusion of a multilateral convention" currently being discussed by 40 nations meeting in Geneva.

—Stopping the production of chemical weapons, including binary weapons, which the United States still manufactures.

—Agreeing to "radically reduce or completely destroy Soviet and U.S. chemical weapons, regarding it as a step toward the global destruction of chemical weapons."

—"Renounce the use of chemical weapons under any circumstances."

"I think that there is no need to say how beneficial that would be for the overall climate in the world," said Shevardnadze.

Bush's proposal, designed to spur a 40-nation conference in Geneva to ban all chemical weapons within 10 years, would have the two superpowers reduce their stockpiles to a level equivalent to 20 percent of the current U.S. level.

That would mean deeper cuts for the Soviets, because U.S. officials contend Moscow has far greater stockpiles than the United States — an acknowledged 50,000 tons compared to an estimated 30,000 tons for the United States.

Bush proposed a U.S.-Soviet agreement to begin those cuts at once, while a 40-nation treaty is being worked out in which the United States would destroy 98 percent of its chemical weapons over eight years if the Soviets joined the ban.

The remaining 2 percent would be destroyed within 10 years if all nations capable of building such weapons agreed to a total ban.

Only the United States, the Soviet Union and Iraq acknowledge having chemical weapons, but more than 20 nations are believed to have them or have the capability to produce them.

The United States has condemned Iran and Iraq for using chemical weapons and has said Libya is on the verge of production.

During its open session the council approved action by the city manager to accept a grant from the FAA. The grant, which has not yet been approved, would reimburse the airport authority $832,000 of $925,000 for land aquisition costs.

An additional 50 acres of land at the airport would allow the airport to maintain a clear zone for runway approach required under FAA rules for a full instrument landing system.

Council member Mildred Council voted against the move. She has earlier stated objections to expanding the airport because of noise and traffic problems to the surrounding neighborhoods.

The council agreed to an inspection program of the five bridges within the city by the state Department of Transportation.

The council denied a request from Fizz to install a fence around a deck behind the restaurant. A number of city departments objected to the request becuase utility lines would have to be moved and an access maintained.

Utility lines along Evans Street also sparked problems for the council and Carolina Telephone. A 1967 city ordinance requires all utilities to locate underground if moved, but the phone company said it would pay only for the cost of above-ground relocation. The council agreed to pay nearly $18,000 for the additional cost to bury the phone lines in a four-block section north of 10th Street.

The council also agreed to revive a planning committee with members from Greenville, Winterville, Pitt County and Greenville Utilities to study the city's plans to extend the extraterritorial jurisdiction to the south. Public outcry and property divisions stopped an earlier plan to extend greenville's planning authority nearly 2.5 miles south toward Winterville.

Rain Hampers Work But Damage Minimal

As Greenville area residents continue to sigh relief not to be coping with Hurricane Hugo's aftermath, it's still raining.

According to the National Weather Service which now has a computer connection with Greenville Utilities, there was 1.21 inches of rain in the 24 hours prior to 7 a.m. today. The Tar River at its Greene Street Bridge stood at 4.56 feet above sea level at 7 a.m. today, having fallen from 4.8 feet 24 hours earlier. Temperatures Monday ranged from 53 to 73 degrees Fahrenheit, according to Sharon Daughtridge, an operator at the GUC water plant, which keeps weather information.

Rain is hampering outdoor work throughout the Greenville area, but otherwise has done little damage so far, area observers say.

Peanuts still in the fields may be hurt by too much water, Pitt County farm agent Al Hight said, but most tobacco is in the barns or on the warehouse floors and soybeans and corn crops aren't suffering too much so far. Most corn is standing up well, he said, but farmers are being delayed in harvesting it by fields' being too wet to accomodate heavy machinery.

Soybeans are also holding up well, he said, and should wait for drier picking weather. Later soybeans that are still filling pods shouldn't be hurt by the amount of rain, he said, though good drainage is a must for these to continue to develop well.

Greenville Street Superintendent Jack Clifton said rain hasn't caused much damage in Greenville, but has hampered work. He said his crews are checking catch basins and keeping them clear of debris to prevent as much flooding as possible. He said damage to storm drains, if there is any, won't show up for another week or two.

Leadership Change Could Affect Talks

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

While speculation swirls over the possibility of a renewal of the East Carolina-North Carolina State football series, a change in leadership for the Wolfpack could render the point moot.

NCSU officials ended the series between the two schools after fans stormed the field after ECU won 32-14 in 1987 and caused extensive damage to the field at Carter-Finley Stadium.

Following the contoversy involving a book, "Personal Fouls," about the N.C. State basketball program and a resulting investigation by the Board of Governors as well as the NCAA, Athletic Director Jim Valvano and Chancellor Bruce Poulton will step down.

With the change in leadership, the future of negotiations for the series are very much uncertain.

"Quite frankly, it could all be moot," Hart said. "We could be starting from square one. Nobody knows.

"At best, we would simply pick up the negotiations where they truly left off. We would talk about resumption and potential dates and then truly have a meeting where we would negotiate dates, terms, etc."

The two sides have met a number of times since the series was canceled, but there have been no formal conversations since July.

N.C. State sports information director Mark Bockelman said there had been some discussion but no agreement had been made.

ECU and N.C. State have met 18 times, with the Wolfpack holding a 12-6 advantage.

Each contest, though, was held in Raleigh. Hart has said that a resumption of the series is dependent on a home-and-home arrangement.

The last meeting between the Valvano and Hart came at a luncheon July 11 along with Robert L. "Roddy" Jones, chairman of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors and an ECU graduate, and Wendell Murphy, a state senator from Duplin County.

Poulton reportedly did not approve of the meeting, according to The News And Observer of Raleigh.

In a letter dated Sept. 18, Chancellor Bruce Poulton reminded Valvano that the 1987 decision to cancel the series had not been an athletics department decision, but a "university decision" based on consultation with numerous campus officials.

"If, at any time, you are giving serious thought to the resumption of this competition, it would be my recommendation that you discuss the matter, first with the chancellor, and the chancellor in turn will appropriately discuss with all those

Thomas Made Winning Play

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — After Eric Thomas had blown a coverage that led to a Cleveland touchdown in the first half, he got some reassurance for the second half.

"I told Eric Thomas at halftime, 'You're going to make plays in the second half,' " said Dick LeBeau, defensive coordinator of the Cincinnati Bengals. "Darned if he didn't."

Thomas went from goat, for allowing a second-period pass that set up a touchdown as Cleveland tied the game 14-14 at halftime, to hero when he knocked away a fourth-down Bernie Kosar pass from the 3-yard-line with 1:41 left to preserve the Bengals' 21-14 victory.

As a rookie, he was beaten by Jerry Rice on a last-second touchdown pass against San Francisco in a game best remembered for a failed fourth-down play that gave quarterback Joe Montana one last chance.

Last year, in his second season, Thomas made the Pro Bowl as the Bengals made it to the Super Bowl.

On Monday, Thomas was back in the doghouse, at least in the first half, when Webster Slaughter got behind him for a 55-yard gain. One play later, Kosar hit Tim Manoa for a touchdown that tied it at 14-all at intermission.

Thomas had a complicated explanation for the play, all about zone coverages and mistaking his reads, but the gist was expressed in three words: "I messed up."

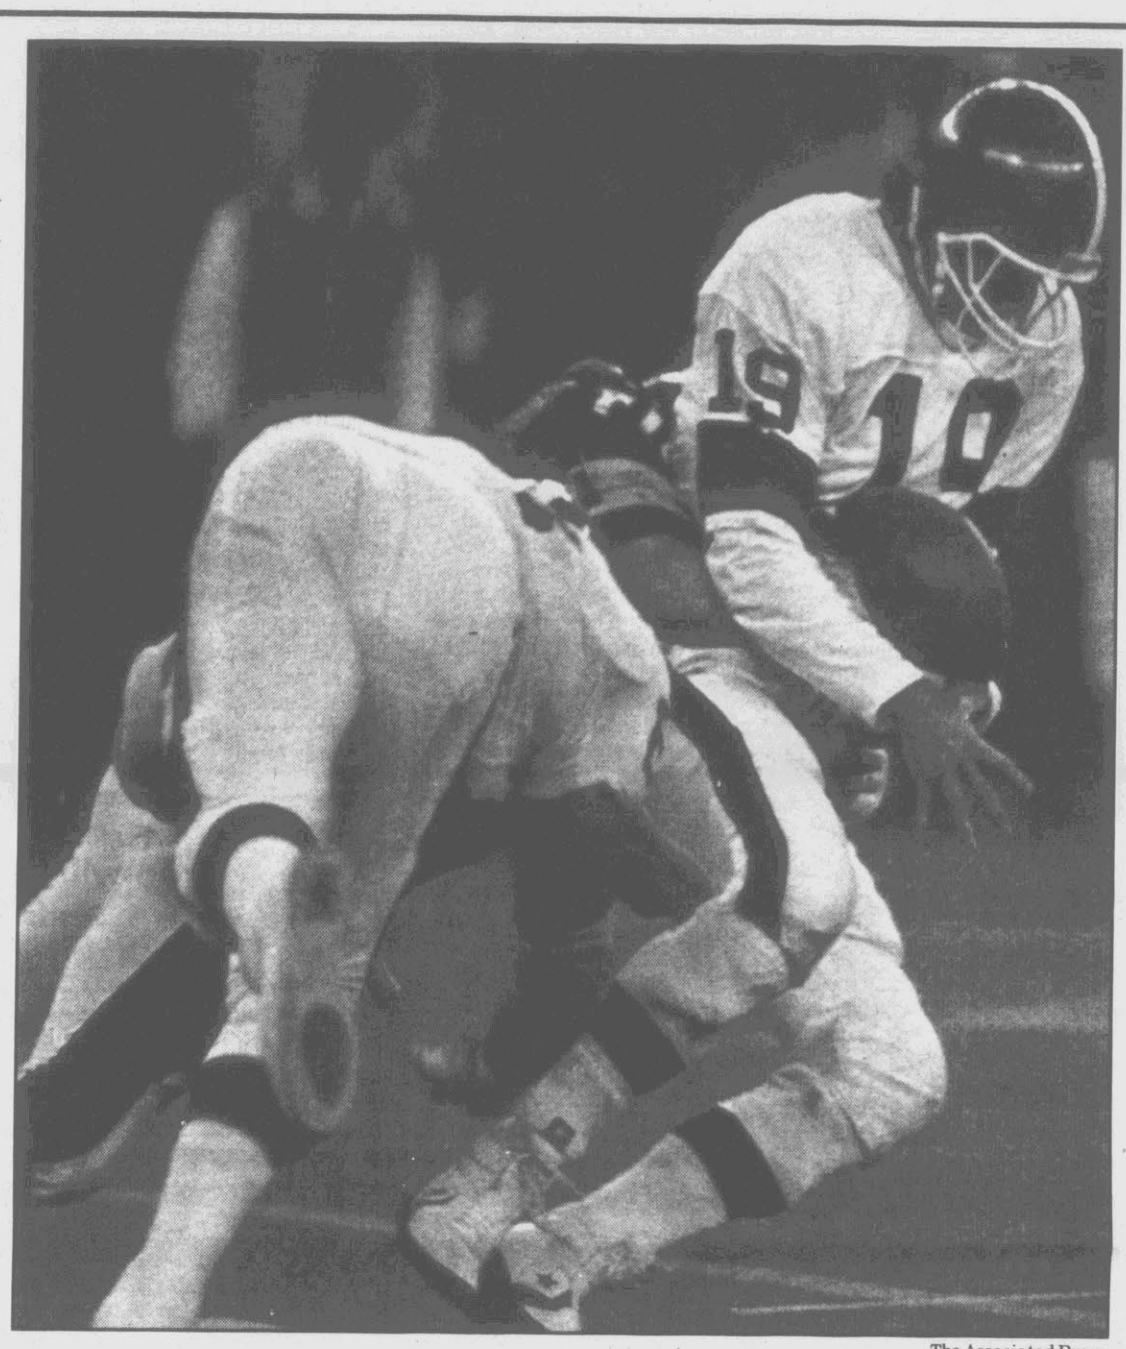

Boomer Esiason helped overcome the Thomas mistake with his third touchdown pass 5:05 into the third quarter. Then it was left to the Cincinnati defense, particularly after Jim Gallery missed 48- and 44-yard field goals that could have given the Bengals a cushion.

The Browns, held to seven yards on the ground for three periods, began to run — Eric Metcalf for 12, Keith Jones for 5, Metcalf for 5, then Gerald McNeil on a reverse that, with a personal foul added on, put the ball at the Cincinnati 7.

Metcalf took the ball to the 3, and it was time to pass.

'D' Comes Through

Cincinnati Holds Off Browns, 21-14

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Bengals' defense was tested twice in the clutch. It earned its stripes both times.

The Bengals stopped two Cleveland drives inside the 10-yard line in the fourth quarter Monday night to preserve a 21-14 victory over the Browns.

Cincinnati's defensive surge overwhelmed fullback Tim Manoa on fourth down and less than a yard at the Bengals' 9 to end one threat. Cornerback Eric Thomas batted down a fourth-down pass at the goal line with 1:41 left to decide the first Monday night game between the intrastate rivals.

"It feels good to be able to put your backs against the wall and keep your head up in that situation more than once," linebacker Reggie Williams said.

The two plays were all that separated the AFC Central rivals, now tied for first with 2-1 records.

"Those guys made the plays — they stopped us two times in the fourth quarter when we were trying to score," Browns receiver Reggie Langhorne said. "That pretty much says it right there."

Esiason, who has struggled against the Browns' tough bump-and-run coverage throughout his career, threw scoring passes of eight and 16 yards to tight end Rodney Holman.

Kosar countered with a 5-yard touchdown pass to Eric Metcalf, who put spectacular moves on two defenders to score his first professional touchdown, and a 6-yarder to Manoa just before the half.

Esiason broke the deadlock with a soft 19-yard touchdown pass to James Brooks early in the third quarter. Esiason had just three touchdown passes and six interceptions in his nine previous games against Cleveland.

"Every time we had things under control, Boomer made big plays for them," Browns coach Bud Carson said.

"Our offensive line gave me great protection," Esiason, who wasn't sacked, said. "The guys caught everything I threw. And I made a lot of right calls at the line of scrimmage."

Kosar single-handedly matched him in the second quarter, but the Browns' lack of a running game eventually doomed them in the second half.

Cleveland's offense failed to get a first down on three third-quarter possessions. Kosar, sacked just once in the first half, was dropped five times after the intermission.

"We changed our pass protections three or four times," Carson said. "They got good pressure on Bernie, no question. They did a good job defensively. But in the end, we had the chance to win it."

Crum Returns To Tar Heel State

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former North Carolina football coach Dick Crum will return to the Tar Heel State to face N.C. State and he said the trip to Raleigh would bring back some memories.

And he made it clear that they wouldn't all be bitter ones.

"You don't spent 10 years of your life in a place without getting attached," he said.

"I think there was a misconception that we never liked Chapel Hill or the South. That just wasn't the case."

Although Crum became the winningest football coach in Carolina history, with a record of 72-41-3, and led Tar Heel teams to bowl victories over such powerful programs as Michigan, Arkansas and Texas, his relationship with North Carolina came to a controversial parting late in 1987.

With four seasons left on a 10-year contract that was agreed upon over his objections in 1982, Crum was paid $885,000 by a private group of UNC boosters to resign after a 5-6 season in 1987.

Crum, in his second season as coach at Kent State, said Thursday that neither he nor North Carolina's officials were familiar enough with each other's needs and demands when he was hired to succeed Bill Dooley in 1978.

"Consider my background," said Crum, whose 0-4 Golden Flashes will visit the 15th-ranked Wolfpack in Carter-Finley Stadium.

"I went there from Miami of Ohio, where we had 45 scholarship players and not very much outside influence on how the program was operated. When I interviewed at Carolina, no one said anything to me about the non-coaching responsibilities, and I certainly didn't know enough about those sort of things to ask the right questions," Crum said in an interview with The News and Observer of Raleigh.

"I thought I knew how to coach and get good academic results out of kids. But I didn't know very much about helping with the fund raising and socializing with the big donors. I guess I learned the hard way."

"It might not have been destined to work from the start," Crum said. "No one wants to look at something that way, but you have to. Maybe I wasn't right for the situation there, but maybe I was, too. That's something we'll never know. But life's too short to sit around and think about what might have been or might not have been. We're extremely happy here. This is home, and maybe I'm in my element. I'm sure that's what the people who

Big Troubles In Big D

Loss To Redskins Haunting Johnson And Cowboys

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING, Texas — On the day after the second-worst home opener in team history, Jimmy Johnson's anger had cooled.

"I knew we were in for a long haul when I accepted the job," Johnson said.

However, Johnson said he'll never forget Washington's 30-7 slaughter of the Dallas Cowboys in his first regular-season home game as coach.

"I don't want these players to forget how awful they looked," he said. "I can't live with this and I don't expect them to live with it, either."

Sunday's humiliating loss to the Redskins dropped the new-era Cowboys to 0-3, the club's worst start since 1963. The only other NFL team without a victory is the Detroit Lions.

The Cowboys got only 10 first downs against the Redskins and Herschel Walker was held to 33 yards rushing in 11 carries. Rookie quarterbacks Troy Aikman and Steve Walsh each threw two interceptions.

"I'm totally embarrassed," said offensive coordinator David Shula, who was with the Miami Dolphins for eight years. "We were inept. I'm very discouraged."

The Dallas offense, which has been shut out in two games, has been blanked 10 times in 12 quarters. Shula's quarterbacks have eight interceptions and one touchdown pass.

"We will not accept being a poor football team," Johnson said. "We'll work and do whatever it takes. We'll find those players who want to work.

"We'll practice longer and stay in meetings longer and run longer after practice. It's not a good feeling."

In consecutive weeks, the Cowboys have lost 28-0 to New Orleans and blew a 21-10 halftime lead in falling 27-21 to the Atlanta Falcons. The Cowboys wouldn't have come close to scoring against Washington had not Jim Jeffcoat returned a Mark Rypien fumble 77 yards for a score.

After a 3-1 exhibition record which had Johnson and new owner Jerry Jones feeling chesty, the Cowboys once again have become joke material as they were in a 3-13 season a year ago.

"The phones are not as busy as they normally are on Monday mornings," Lavine said.

Rogers Captures Football Contest

Rogers successfully picked the winners in 29 of the 32 games listed on last week's contest pages. His victory, however, came on the basis of his point total guess. His guess of 83 point was the closest to the actual total of 87 scored in Hawaii's 67-20 romp over Utah Saturday night.

Second place went to Billy Ray Speight of P.O. Box 474, Farmville. He also correctly picked 29 of the 32 winners, but was further off in his point total guess, with 76.

The tie game between Colorado State and Eastern Michigan was counted as wrong if a team was picked since rules allow entrants to pick a tie.

Five others also picked 29 games right but were further off in their point total guesses. They were:

Joe Sayblack, Rt. 13, Box 355, Greenville (72); Mark Saylor, 104 Vernon St., Greenville (72); Faye Kennedy, Box 818, Grifton (69); Jerry L. Greene, Rt. 15, Box 260, Greenville (74) and Keith Johnson, 2903-B Cedar Creek Road, Greenville (72).

Stars Soccer Team Wins, Ties

The 1977 Greenville Stars won one game and tied another in North Carolina Youth Soccer Association Travel League action in Greenville Saturday.

The stars defeated the 1977 Greensboro Twisters, 1-0. The only goal of the match was scored in the 18th minute of the first half, unassisted, by midfielder Daron Cannon.

In the second game, the Stars tied the Burlington Blaze, 1-1. Burlington took the lead midway through the first half of the game, but the Stars came back to tie five minutes later with a goal from Edward Markowski, who scored off a deflected shot taken by winger Jonathan Clark.

The result improved the Stars record to 2-1-1 in the league.

Edwards Sets Two Sr. Games Marks

Edwards swam home in the 25-yard backstroke in a time of 16.75 seconds, snapping the old mark of 18.18. In the 50-yard backstroke, he was timed in 39.81 seconds, as compared to the old mark of 42.20.

Edwards, 65, holds records in the same two events in the 60-64 age group. His marks in that bracket are 16.27 in the 25 and 37.14 in the 50.

GCA is now 1-3 overall and travels back to Wilson today to face Wilson Christian.

CHICOD — Chicod swept two games to take a straight set volleyball win over E.B. Aycock in junior high volleyball Monday.

Chicod was led by Christy Stancill and Chrystal Smith in serving with five points each. In the second game, Wendy Beachum had nine service points to lead the way.

Browns' Mack Undergoes Surgery

Bucks Extend Harris' Contract

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Milwaukee coach Del Harris has signed a three-year contract extension through the 1992-93 season and was named vice president of basketball operations, the club announced Monday.

Harris' current three-year contract, signed in June 1987, would have expired at the end of the upcoming season.

Financial terms were not revealed.

Spurrier Doesn't Expect An Upset

DURHAM (AP) — Duke football coach Steve Spurrier doesn't expect any surprises when the Blue Devils host Clemson Saturday — he expects the Tigers to win.

Spurrier said in his weekly news conference Monday that he told his team Sunday that Duke had a "one in a million" chance to beat Clemson.

"Our only chance, of course, is to catch them flat and overconfident and to make some big plays ourselves and not give any up," Spurrier said. "You don't just line up and play against Clemson. You have to do something different to keep them off-balance."

Undefeated Pack Is Battered, Bruised

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State football coach Dick Sheridan says his team is bruised and battered after four consecutive conference games.

"We've got a lot of bumps and bruises," Sheridan said. "We're fortunate not to have a conference game this week."

The No. 15 Wolfpack hosts Kent State on Saturday and will play without tailback Anthony Barbour.

Sheridan said Monday that Barbour tore cartilage in his left knee during last week's game against North Carolina. An injury to the same knee prevented Barbour from playing most of last season.

Colorado Team Mourns Aunese

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOULDER, Colo. — The Colorado football team, its coach and hundreds of fans bade an official goodbye to Sal Aunese, the team's starting quarterback last year and its inspiration this season.

Coach Bill McCartney and Gov. Roy Romer spoke during a memorial service on Monday for Aunese, who died on Saturday of cancer.

"His humility and his courage are something we will always remember," McCartney said in remarks to the 2,000 people who attended the 90-minute service in Macky Auditorium.

Aunese, 21, died in Denver's University Hospital Saturday night. Doctors first diagnosed him as having inoperable stomach cancer on March 30. He recently was hospitalized with breathing difficulties.

Many in the audience wept openly as McCartney praised the team of doctors who tried to help as Aunese's condition deteriorated. McCartney's voice broke as he spoke to the team, seated in the first three rows.

"Perhaps never in recent history has a young man allowed a group of guys to love him like you did," McCartney said.

McCartney also acknowledged publicly for the first time that Aunese had fathered a son by McCartney's 19-year-old daughter, Kristin. McCartney expressed admiration for his daughter, who sat in the second row with the 6-month-old baby, Timothy.

"You could have had an abortion. You could have gone away to have the child to avoid the shame. But you stayed. And you're going to raise that little guy," he said.

Romer expressed sympathy for Aunese's family and teammates, who have dedicated the 1989 season to him, and school president Gordon Gee lauded Aunese as someone who faced his cancer battle head-on.

Aunese's family, along with Kristin McCartney, then filed onstage and surrounded the casket. A private memorial service for his former teammates, coaches and family had been held earlier Monday.

At a news conference following the service, McCartney said the university would decide whether to retire Aunese's No. 8 jersey. "The subject is definitely worthy of discussion," he said.

Confined to a wheelchair and with an oxygen bottle close at hand, Aunese watched his teammates win its first three games this season reach No. 6 in the rankings. On Monday, the day of his memorial service, the Buffaloes moved to No. 5, their highest ranking in more than a decade.

Aunese's struggle gained nationwide attention. Former President Ronald Reagan called Aunese earlier this month to offer encouragement and praise his much-publicized battle against the disease.

Aunese rushed for 1,009 yards and passed for 1,526 in two seasons. Four games into the 1987 season, Aunese became the starting quarterback, and he held the position through the 1988 season. He set a school record by throwing 92 straight passes without an interception.

Crum Returns ...

wanted me out at Carolina would say."

School president Michael Schwartz said the most evident difference between Kent State and North Carolina is the absence of a sophisticated school athletic booster club.

"The state of Ohio pays for our athletic scholarships," Schwartz said.

"North Carolina's loss was my gain. Dick represented everything I wanted in a football coach. He brought stability and a reputation for caring about academics. "The first thing I told him was that he would never have to worry about being chased out by a powerful booster club because as long as I'm president of this school, there won't be one. And after I'm gone, we've put in some policies in that regard that will be extremely difficult to change."

Kent State's Blue and Gold Club raises less than $500,000 annually — all of which goes to the university's general operating budget on an unconditional basis.

UNC's Educational Foundation, or Rams Club, raises more than $5.5 million annually, much of which endows athletic scholarships. A group of Rams Club members paid Crum to quit after he first expressed his intention to remain. UNC's administration, after stating that Crum would be allowed to stay, approved the agreement that sealed his departure.

"We're not perfect here," Schwartz said. "But we may be a little saner."

Blue Jays Win; Exorcise Ghost Of 1987

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Toronto Blue Jays say they are no longer looking back and the Baltimore Orioles claim they aren't looking ahead.

The Blue Jays felt they finally laid the corpse of 1987 to rest when Tony Fernandez, the man who wasn't there in '87 after suffering a broken elbow, hit a two-run homer for a 2-0 victory Monday night over the Tigers in Detroit.

Toronto snapped a two-game skid and maintained its one-game lead over Baltimore in the American League East. Naturally, everyone recalled that in 1987, the Blue Jays led Detroit by 2½ games with six remaining but finished a game behind after being swept in the final series of the season at Tiger Stadium.

"Everybody keeps bringing up 1987," Toronto manager Cito Gaston said. "I hope you'll remember we played without Tony Fernandez, who hit the home run tonight, and also without Ernie Whitt. They were both injured. We're getting tired of hearing about 1987."

If the Blue Jays are to win the division, they'll have to wait until the weekend. The Orioles' 5-3 victory over Milwaukee assured them of a chance to catch the Blue Jays in their showdown three-game series in Toronto beginning Friday night.

"We've got two more games here (Milwaukee). Don't give me that Toronto stuff," Manager Frank Robinson said. "They're all big; they have been for quite some time. This one is no bigger than the others or bigger than the one we will play (Tuesday night).

"What it did was keep us on the same pace with Toronto and kept pressure on them, and that's what we have to do."

Toronto's Jimmy Key allowed six hits with nine strikeouts and no walks in seven innings, only the third time in the last 16 games a Toronto starter has won. Meanwhile, Baltimore's Pete Harnisch won for the first time since Sept. 7 by limiting the Brewers to three hits and three runs over 6 1-3 innings.

While the AL East race is still tight, it's beginning to look like a very quiet weekend in the National League.

Oh, there will be a batting title to decide and the race for second place in both divisions is still hot.

But by late tonight, the anticipated showdowns between the Chicago Cubs and the Cardinals in St. Louis and the San Francisco Giants and Padres in San Diego could mean nothing more than a mere warmup for the playoffs.

San Francisco clinched a tie for the NL West championship Monday night despite losing 5-2 to Los Angeles as second-place San Diego also lost, 5-3 to Cincinnati.

The Giants can win their second division title in three years with a victory tonight at Dodger Stadium or another San Diego loss to Cincinnati.

Chicago missed a chance to clinch a tie for the NL East title, losing to Montreal 4-3 in 10 innings. But the Cubs still managed to reduce their magic number to two as Pittsburgh beat second-place St. Louis 4-2.

St. Louis and Chicago each have five games remaining and the Cubs have a four-game lead.

The Cubs can clinch the division tonight if they beat the Expos and the Cardinals lose to the Pirates.

Andre Dawson hit two home runs for the Cubs, including a controversial inside-the-park homer in the seventh to give Chicago a 3-2 lead.

"I don't expect it will be easy to nail this thing down," Dawson said.

Orioles 5, Brewers 3

Pete Harnisch allowed only one hit through the first six innings, a leadoff single in the first by Billy Spiers. Spiers stole second, took third on a grounder and scored on Paul Molitor's sacrifice fly for a 1-0 Milwaukee lead.

It stayed that way until the Orioles tagged Milwaukee starter Teddy Higuera, who last pitched on Aug. 26, for three runs in the third and two more in the fourth.

The Baltimore runs in the third came after Higuera retired the first two batters. Stan Jefferson and Phil Bradley doubled for the tying run, Tim Hulett singled to put Baltimore ahead and Hulett scored on Cal Ripken's drive to left- center that center fielder Robin Yount dropped for a double as he crashed into the wall.

Rangers 3, Athletics 2

With Oakland leading 2-1, Todd Burns took over the pitching duties in the eighth, trying to save Bob Welch's 18th victory. But he issued a leadoff walk to pinch hitter Jack Daugherty and one out later Manrique hit a 1-2 pitch that struck the screen on the left-field foul pole for his fourth homer of the season.

The Athletics can clinch a tie by defeating Texas tonight, but the earliest they can nail down the division flag is Wednesday night. Oakland has a five-game lead over California and Kansas City, who begin a three-game series tonight. The winner of tonight's Angels-Royals game will still be mathematically alive.

Red Sox 7, Yankees 4

Wade Boggs went 4-for-5 for his seventh consecutive 200-hit season and Dwight Evans became the only major-leaguer with 20 homers in each of the last nine years.

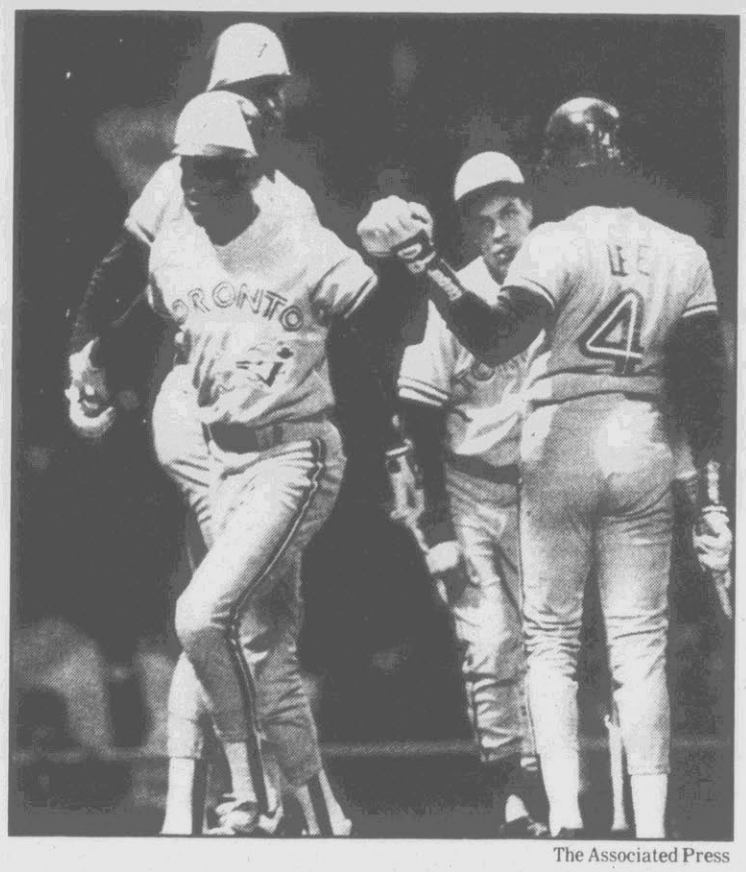

Roger Clemens, 17-10, gave up three runs and 10 hits in the first four innings but earned the victory with relief help from Rob Murphy in the seventh and Lee Smith in the eighth.

Boggs, the only player in this century with 200 hits in seven consecutive seasons, also set a major-league record by becoming the first to ever get 200 hits and 100 walks four years in a row, breaking a tie with Yankees Hall of Famer Lou Gehrig.

White Sox 10, Twins 2

Ivan Calderon drove in four runs, giving him a career-high 86 for the season. Calderon drove in the game's first run with a grounder in a three-run first inning, added a two-run single in the second and tripled home another in the fourth.

Sammy Sosa and Russ Morman drove in two runs each for the White Sox and Lance Johnson had three hits. Meanwhile, Richard Dotson won for the first time since Aug. 25 and for only the third time in 16 starts since rejoining the White Sox on June 22. He yielded 10 hits in seven-plus innings.

Dodgers 5, Giants 2

Mike Scioscia hit a solo homer and drove in four runs and Jeff Hamilton was 3-for-3 and scored three runs for the Dodgers.

Rookie John Wetteland struck out six and walked one to improve his record to 5-8. He pitched seven-plus innings and allowed seven hits.

Cubs 4, Expos 3

Scott Sanderson, 11-9, relieved in the 10th inning for the visiting Cubs and Mike Aldrete led off with a single. Rex Hudler pinch ran and stole second and the Cubs intentionally walked Andres Galarraga. After a sacrifice by rookie Marquis Grissom moved the runners up, Tim Wallach was intentionally walked. Mitch Williams then relieved.

Reds 5, Padres 3

Second baseman Roberto Alomar's bases-loaded error with two outs in the eighth inning allowed the winning run to score as Cincinnati beat San Diego at Jack Murphy Stadium.

With two outs in the eighth and the score tied 3-3, Scotti Madison, who was 3-for-3, doubled off Greg Harris. Harris, 7-9, walked Jeff Reed and pinch-hitter Barry Larkin to load the bases and Luis Quinones, batting for reliever Rob Dibble, 9-5, bounced a grounder to Alomar's left. The ball skipped off Alomar's glove for his 28th error.

Pirates 4, Cardinals 2

Barry Bonds hit a two-run homer and Benny Distefano and Mike LaValliere hit consecutive home runs in the second inning as Pittsburgh hurt St. Louis' chances in the NL East with a victory at Three Rivers Stadium.

Jose DeLeon, 16-12, lost for the first time since Aug. 10. He had won five consecutive decisions.

Phillies 2, Mets 1

New York was eliminated from the NL East race, falling to Philadelphia at Shea Stadium on Tom Herr's two-run homer in the eighth inning.

Braves 5, Astros 3

Berra: It's Really Over

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's over.

Yogi Berra said he will turn in his uniform and become a baseball adviser for the Houston Astros. It will be the first time since 1947 that Berra, who was the hitting instructor for Houston, has not worn a major league baseball uniform.

"I felt in spring training that this might be it," Berra, 64, said. "I figured after 42 years, it was time to try something else."

Now the Hall of Famer will spend more time at home and continue working with the Astros in scouting and spring training.

"I've got seven grandkids and I want to see more of them," Berra said. "I want a chance to travel a little bit before I die. If we want to take a trip to Europe, we might just do it."

Berra, a close friend of Astros owner John McMullen, came to Houston in 1986 as a member of Hal Lanier's staff, helping the team to the National League West title.

Berra was a bench coach under Lanier and this year became hitting coach under first-year Manager Art Howe.

Berra has appeared in 21 World Series, including 14 as a player with the New York Yankees, and was one of only five managers to represent both leagues in the World Series.

"I couldn't ask for anything else from my career," Berra said. "This had nothing to do with anything that happened during the season. I had said I'd take it one year at a time."

The Astros challenged for the National League West title for much of the season before fading in September. The San Francisco Giants clinched at least a share of the division title Monday night. Houston is in third place, eight games out of first.

"I still would have done this if we'd won it all," Berra said.

Howe said he would miss Berra's assistance.

"I don't know what it's going to be like without Yogi," Howe said. "He's been such a big help this year with things like double switches and his overall knowledge of the game."

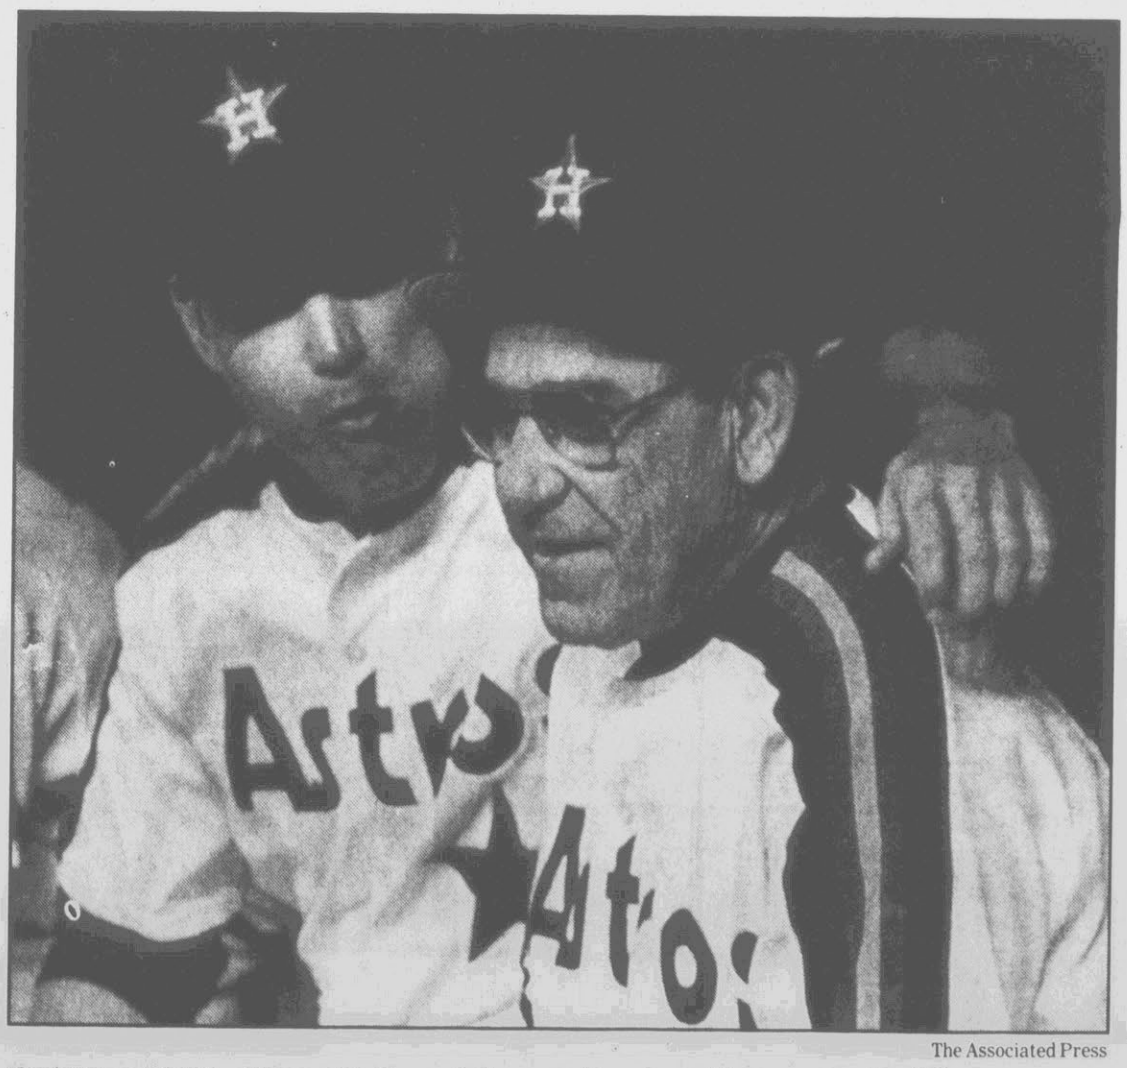

For years, Berra was as well known for his "it ain't over until it's over" refrain as for is Hall of Fame playing career, which included 358 home runs and a .285 lifetime average. He was the American League's Most Valuable Player in 1951, 1954 and 1955.

"I wish people really realized how smart he is about the game," Howe said. "You hear so much about all these Yogi-isms but he's really knowledgeable about the game."

Boggs Had A Plan

Wade Boggs of the Boston Red Sox decided there was only one way to react to the public disclosure last spring of his steamy romance with Margo Adams.

"I didn't want to fold up my tent and have a bad year and blame it on what happened," Boggs said Monday night after reaching another career milestone.

Baseball Notes

Boggs

Given a standing ovation before Boston's home opener last April 10, Boggs received another after breaking a 67-year-old major league record in the Red Sox' 7-4 victory over the New York Yankees Monday..

With four hits in five at-bats, Boggs became the first major league player to get 200 hits and 100 walks in four consecutive seasons. That broke the record he had shared with New York Yankees Hall of Famer Lou Gehrig, who accomplished the feat in 1930, 1931 and 1932.

"Just to be mentioned in the same breath as Lou Gehrig is something, but breaking one of his records makes it extra special," Boggs said.

"I got off to a slow start this year, then lacked consistency," Boggs, a five-time American League batting champion said. "This year I've been hot one week, cold one week.

"I've had a lot of nagging injuries, too, but you just get the baling wire, the glue and the aspirin and go out there. The main thing is to just keep swinging."

With his sixth four-hit game of the season, Boggs pushed his total for the season to 201 to go with 103 walks. He is the only player in this century to get 200 hits seven years in a row.

He improved his average to .331, keeping alive an outside chance of overtaking Minnesota's Kirby Puckett and Oakland's Carney Lansford for his fifth straight batting title and sixth in seven years. Puckett is hitting .342, Lansford .336.

Berenguer Moves To $1.9 Million

The two-year contract Juan Berenguer signed with the Minnesota Twins Friday will bring him a guranteed $1.9 million over two years.

Berenguer, 4, could have become a free agent at the end of the season. Instead, he returned to the Twins for a $200,000 signing bonus, a $650,000 salary in 1989 and a $1.05 million salary in 1991.

He is 8-3 this season with a 3.58 earned-run average and three saves in 55 appearances. He is making $625,000 this year.

Evans, Herr Win League Awards

Dwight Evans of the Boston Red Sox, who had nine hits in 18 at-bats and drove in 11 runs, was named American League Player of the Week on Monday.

Tom Herr of the Philadelphia Phillies, who hit .520 last week, was named National League Player of the Week on Monday.

Series Future ...

named above," Poulton wrote.

A copy of the letter, which was addressed to Valvano and sent to seven other campus officials, was obtained by The News and Observer of Raleigh.

Valvano and Hart met for lunch. Hart said the meeting was not a formal negotiating session, but rather a casual lunch at which the topic of renewing the series was discussed.

"We were going to meet anyway and Roddy said if we were not in objection to it, they would love to join us," Hart said. "Roddy scheduled a lunch at the North Raleigh Hilton.

"I can only speak for the way we structured it. Everybody at East Carolina who needed to be abreast knew we were going to have lunch. It was just a luncheon. I sure didn't think it was newsworthy then, let alone two months later.

"Those gentlemen (Jones, Murphy) wanted to state they were pleased we were continuing to talk about resuming the series, and secondly that they thought it would be great if we could resolve the situation on down the road.

"They stated if (we) were going to get down to any hard negotiating, they would finish lunch and leave."

Poulton, in an Aug. 30 letter to UNC system President C.D. Spangler Jr., criticized Jones for meddling in the NCSU football schedule.

Responding to that criticism, Jones told The News And Observer: "I think the man is under extreme personal stress and his memory obviously is slipping. I was told by the athletics director that he cleared" the meeting with Poulton.

Hart said he couldn't speculate on whether Valvano had discussed the meeting with Poulton.

"Only Jim Valvano could answer that," Hart said. "Our chancellor obviously knew about the meeting and has been kept abreast.

"From day one, I have kept our chancellor and our athletic committee abreast and updated. There hasn't been anything concrete to tell them. If anybody is trying to make more out of that, then they're reaching."

In 1987, NCSU earned more than $300,000 from the game, while ECU garnered $204,000. The game annually attracted one of the largest gates in the state.

ECU's tentative future schedules for 1990 and 1991 are full. The first open date comes in 1992 on Oct. 3.

Still, the future schedules are subject to change and all the dates in 1990 and 1991 are not set in stone.

New TV Season Starting With Mixed Bag Of Shows

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The new season brings a new reason for thinking you're still looking at the summer festival of rejected pilots on network television.

Have you seen ABC's "Chicken Soup" or "Homeroom" or CBS' "Top of the Hill?"

No wonder the three networks are losing viewers to alternative viewing. No wonder their share of the audience is down to 62 percent. The share dropped below 60 percent during the summer.

First, the good news.

Stephanie Beacham, last seen vamping on "Dynasty," has taken the vows and borrowed the tongue of an asp to have a go at NBC's "Sister Kate." She rides herd on a group of unruly orphans who are the dickens. (Sorry, Charles.) It does have a nice twist and great expectations.

"The Famous Teddy Z" on CBS is the kind of agent your mother would want you to take home. Laughing all the way, of course. Creator Hugh Wilson is at his best tilting his lance at Hollywood, and actor Jon Cryer makes the little twerp endearing.

ABC's "Life Goes On" is a satisfying story of a family coping with the usual problems plus a teen-age son with Down's syndrome. Christopher Burke, who has the genetic condition himself, is Corky, and if you don't watch out he'll charm your socks off.

ABC's "The Young Riders" shows promise. It follows a group of Pony Express riders whom one critic called "hunks on horseback." Anyway, it's great to see another Western on the air.

ABC's "Chicken Soup" appears to be on its way to becoming a smash hit. Simply because if follows "Roseanne." Scheduled anywhere else this show would be gone in a few weeks. It's not funny and it has no charm. The so-called "Abie's Irish Rose" romance between Jackie Mason and Lynn Redgrave doesn't generate enough heat to warm a flea. Mason, even at his cheeriest, comes across like a messenger of Doom.

CBS' "Top of the Hill" started with great potential. The surfer son of an ailing congressman takes over his seat in the House. His idealism clashes with political realism. It has touches of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington." That lasted about five minutes. Rep. Tom Bell, played by William Katt, quickly becomes involved in freeing a federal agent being held by a drug lord in a Latin American country.

The State Department doesn't want to upset a friendly government, so no official action is taken. The possibilities for a Contra-type story arise. Kelsey Grammer does a nice turn as an "ugly American" foreign service officer, but otherwise forget it. Bell's heroics become so unbelievable you expect Katt to get back into his costume from "The Greatest American Hero."

ABC's "Homeroom" will never move to the head of the class. Not funny, no appeal.

NBC's "Nutt House" is too much shtick. While Harvey Korman and Cloris Leachman are marvelously loony, the show needs one sane person for them to revolve around.

Fox's "Alien Nation" should just get on with telling its stories and lay off the heavy-handed preaching. We don't need to be hit over the head to get its message of tolerance.

CBS' "The People Next Door" is the kind of show that makes you wonder what's happening to the neighborhood. Tain't funny, McGee.

No hard opinions yet either way: ABC's "Doogie Howser, M.D.," CBS' "Island Son," ABC's "Family Matters," CBS' "Peaceable Kingdom."

Sony Proposes $3 Billion Package To Take Over Columbia Pictures

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Japan's Sony Corp. has offered to buy Columbia Pictures Entertainment Inc. for more than $3 billion, according to reports published today.

Columbia Pictures, a movie and television company with current releases including "When Harry Met Sally ..." and "Ghostbusters II," declined to comment on the reports. Nor would Sony officials comment.

Coca-Cola Co., which owns 49 percent of Columbia's stock, said it was aware the movie-and-television company was in talks and that it would consider whatever recommendation may be made, but declined further comment.

Columbia triggered a sharp run-up in its stock price Monday when it announced it was "in discussions with a third party involving the acquisition for cash of all of Columbia's outstanding shares." A board meeting was scheduled for Monday night to consider the offer, the company said.

The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times and the Los Angeles Times reported today that the potential buyer was Sony. The papers cited unidentified sources familiar with the negotiations.

The Journal said Sony had offered $26 to $28 a share for Columbia stock. With 112.7 million shares outstanding, that would make Columbia worth at $2.93 billion to $3.15 billion. It also has about $1.3 billion in long-term debt outstanding.

The Times said Sony offered $3.4 billion cash.

In active trading Monday on the New York Stock Exchange, Columbia climbed $5.25 a share to close at $26.37½. Coca-Cola rose 62½ cents a share to $63.

Foreign companies have shown a ravenous appetite for U.S.-made films and TV programming in recent months as cable and satellite channels have opened up in European and Asian markets.

Less than two weeks ago, for instance, Australia's Qintex Group agreed to buy MGM-UA Communications Co. for $1.5 billion, outbidding Rupert Murdoch's News Corp.

MGM-UA said it had active buyout discussions with Sony in late 1988.

Analysts say Sony, which bought CBS Records for $2 billion in January 1988, is eager to own entertainment "software" such as movies and TV shows as a complement to the hardware such as VCRs and television sets it has been making for years.

Columbia Pictures operates two movie studios, Columbia Pictures and Tri-Star Pictures, and has a library of more than 2,700 films and more than 260 TV series.

Recent movie releases from Columbia include "The Karate Kid Part III," while Tri-Star has come out with "See No Evil, Hear No Evil" and "Lock Up."

Columbia produces or distributes 11 TV series that are being broadcast in prime time, including "Who's The Boss," "Designing Women" and "Married ... with Children."

Judge Says Gabor Trial Is Dragging

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — The judge in Zsa Zsa Gabor's cop-slapping trial said the misdemeanor case that has drawn worldwide publicity is taking too long.

"We're clearing the decks and trying to get this out of the way," Municipal Court Judge Charles Rubin said Monday as he ordered jurors and attorneys to start an hour earlier today.

The trial, now in its third week, has cost taxpayers an estimated $22,000 and provided fodder for journalists around the world. They have dutifully reported Miss Gabor's sometimes outrageous statements, which at one point earned her the judge's reprimand for failing to heed his gag order.

On Monday, Miss Gabor retracted a recent out-of-court remark that she was afraid to go to jail because lesbians were there.

"I have nothing against gays or lesbians. I have lots of gay boys working for me," the actress told reporters outside court. "I got letter from the lesbians and gay association. They are going to boycott me because I said there are lesbians in jail."

In court, a defense witness supported Miss Gabor's account that she slapped motorcycle Officer Paul Kramer in self-defense when he stopped her Rolls-Royce on June 14.

"That man was after blood I think," said David Katzman, a freelance screenwriter who has written for "Knots Landing" and "Dallas."

Katzman said he stopped his car when he noticed the unusual sight of a policeman pulling over a white Rolls-Royce Corniche, and became concerned as he watched.

Joel Files Lawsuit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Singer Billy Joel is suing his former manager for $90 million, alleging that he stole millions of dollars and lost millions more in risky investments such as horsebreeding.

The suit was filed Monday, the day after Joel was hospitalized with severe abdominal pain from kidney stones, the New York Post reported today.

The pain struck Joel as he waited Sunday afternoon at John F. Kennedy International Airport for a Concorde supersonic flight to London, said Joel's lawyer, Leonard Marks. The trip was part of a tour of Europe to promote his new album, "Storm Front."

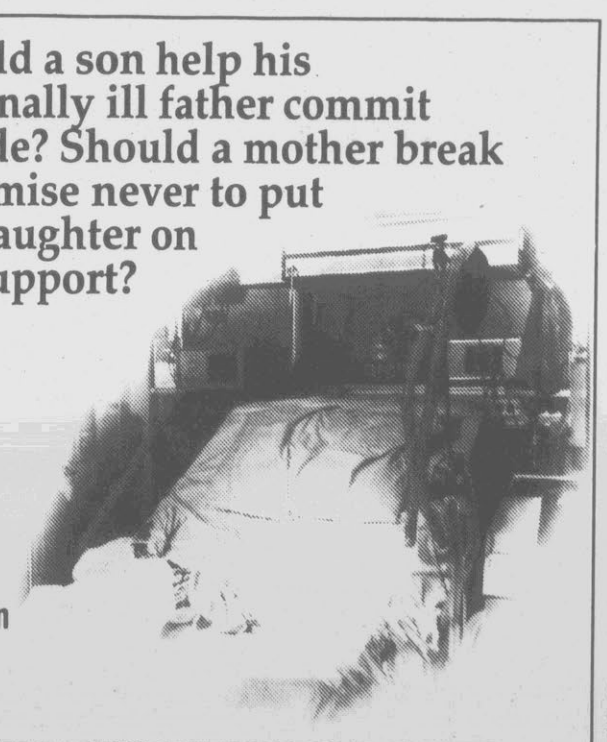

Marks would not disclose the name of the hospital. "He's in this country and he's OK — that's all I can tell you," he said.

The lawsuit was filed in state court against Frank Weber, who was fired Aug. 30, after an audit uncovered the alleged thefts, Marks said. Weber also was Joel's former brother-in-law.

The lawsuit charges that Weber used Joel's money in the form of interest-free loans; misued his power of attorney by signing the singer's name to documents without his consent; and invested Joel's money in high-risk ventures despite the singer's express instructions to invest conservatively.

DUNKEL INDEX

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

EXPLANATION - The Dunkel system provides a continuous index to the relative strength of all teams. It reflects average scoring margin combined with average opposition rating, weighted in favor of recent performance. Example: a 50.0 team has been 10 scoring points stronger, per game, than a 40.0 team against opposition of identical strength. Originated in 1929 by Dick Dunkel.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY Sept. 27

ARIES (March 20 to April 19): You would be wise to keep in mind the basic plan of action agreed upon originally by you in your work. This is a good day to follow up on things already started.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 19): New ideas will be excellent at your work so long as you are not too forceful. Financial protection is now yours for any new ventures in which you become interested.

GEMINI (May 20 to June 20): You will have a new idea at your work which can put you quickly into a top position. A private huddle with a dynamic practical-minded person will open up new ways to increase revenue.

MOON CHILDREN (June 21 to July 21): You will stand pretty much alone during your work, but don't ignore duties but do them efficiently. Forget that long drawn-out project and start a new project by which you can make some money.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): A change will now be necessary at your work so be sure to do it quickly. Follow the suggestions of a highly placed person now if you want to increase your income.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 21): It is up to you to get the information by which you can increase your efficiency at your job. An influential man has several ideas for increasing your income.

LIBRA (Sept. 22 to Oct. 22): You will have many good ideas for your work but you will need to make them much more practical. You will now be realizing some benefits from a time venture now producing money for you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You will have blind spots where some work conditions are concerned so be sure that you are open-minded. A new approach to your financial responsibilities will bring you ways to make more money.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 20): The more practical the approach at your work today, the more of value you will get done at your job. You will need to organize your time and energies more efficiently if you are to have more income.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21 to Jan. 18): Go to the most influential man that you know that you feel can give you brilliant ideas for doing your job. You will have great charm today. Use it on your attachment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 19 to Feb. 17): You would be wise to have a well-rounded plan of action at your job today. A man from a distance will bring you a business proposition that you need to be leery of.

PISCES (Feb. 18 to March 19): Watch your step at work for otherwise you may have an unpleasant surprise. If you want to make more money it will be necessary that you have more expertise about your work.

There's a new name on the column today. Tannah Hirsch, a former editor of the ACBL Bulletin, a contributor to most of the world's leading bridge publications and senior editor of this column for many years, joins the writing team. Thomas M. Smith, a many-time national champion, assumes the post vacated by Hirsch.

Besides his writing and editorial skills, Hirsch is an accomplished player. Recently, he held the South cards on this hand from a rubber bridge game at New York's Cavendish Club. West's decision to pass his partner's double of four hearts is debatable. Note that four spades will probably succeed even if North-South score a trump trick.

Had West chosen to lead a black suit, this hand would soon have been forgot. The defenders would have cashed two tricks each in spades and clubs, and declarer's 100 honors would have offset the one-trick set.

However, West opted to attack with his singleton diamond. East played low and declarer scorned winning the trick cheaply with the ten. Since trumps were likely to be 3-1, there was little chance of scoring three tricks in the suit without first drawing trumps. By winning with the ace, declarer kept open the option of finessing West for the queen.

When South proceeded to run trumps, East began to feel the pressure. That defender was forced down to five cards. Since he had to retain two diamonds, he had to discard one of his black-suit winners. Dummy came down to queen and another club and three diamonds to K-J Declarer simply exited with a black card. East could take his three tricks, but then had to lead away from his queen of diamonds into the table's tenace, giving declarer his 10th trick.

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

'Satanic Verses' Unlikely To Cause Changes

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Satanic Verses" is one novel that shook the world. But one year and 1.1 million hardback copies after it was released, the factors publishers weigh in deciding what to print remain the same, experts say.

"The book was one of a kind — I mean it was a fictional fantasy that happened to affect large numbers of people and particularly people in positions of power, and I think that's a very unlikely thing to be repeated right now," said John Baker, editor-in-chief of Publisher's Weekly, a trade magazine.

Viking Penguin Inc. published the book a year ago.

Five months later, on Feb. 14, Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini fixed the world's attention on it when he put a $5.2 million bounty on the life of its Moslem author, Salman Rushdie. Khomeini also urged Moslems to kill his publishers.

The book, which most Moslem countries banned because they said it blasphemed Islam, plunged Iran into a confrontation with the West.

Viking Penguin says its decision to publish the book was not influenced by its potentially inflamatory content.

"We certainly didn't buy 'The Satanic Verses' because we thought it would be controversial. We bought it because we think Salman Rushdie is one of the most distinguished authors of the late 20th century," said Paul Slovak, a spokesman at the publishing house.

Slovak declined Monday to disclose sales or profit figures for the book. But he added that despite the huge sales, Viking Penguin may just about break even because of costly security measures it was forced to take.

"We can't let our guard down completely even now," he said.

On Sunday, a London newspaper reported that a paperback edition of the book would come out this winter but that the exact date was being kept secret for security reasons. Earlier, there were reports that plans for a paperback edition had been shelved for fear of more violence.

The book's hardback release in England on Sept. 22, 1988, led to a series of bookstore bombings and other troubles, including the refusal of some stores to stock it out of fear for their safety.

David Rubin, a New York University journalism professor, said the determining factor among book publishers in deciding what books to offer is profitability, not whether it will be controversial.

"The notion of publishing a book because it is critical of government or some group — Palestinians, Moslems, or Jews — and banking on that and the publicity that may come from it is much too speculative a strategy for people who are basically kind of accountants," Rubin said.

And Barbara Reno, a spokeswoman for Simon & Schuster, said: "People assume a lot of the time publishers aren't publishing a book because they're worried about controversy — in fact, they're making business decisions."

Jeffrey Robinson, who wrote a best-selling, controversial biography of former Saudi Arabian oil minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani published in England, said profit motivated Viking Penguin to print more copies of "The Satanic Verses" when demand skyrocketed.

"That's just fueling the fires," said Robinson."I think most publishers would be very wary of getting involved with a book like that again.

"But there will always be somebody."

Morgan Entrekin, an independent publisher under the umbrella of Atlantic Monthly Press, said: "It gets very dangerous if you let yourself get censored a priori. I don't go looking for trouble, but I try not to let it influence me too much."

RJR Nabisco Sells Del Monte Foods

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Food and tobacco giant RJR Nabisco Inc. took a big bite out of its debt troubles by selling its Del Monte processed foods business to an investor group headed by Merrill Lynch & Co. Inc. for $1.475 billion in cash, company officials said Monday.

The Del Monte sale is part of a continuing program to cut the enormous debt that resulted from Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co.'s $25 billion leveraged buyout of the company early this year.

Lenders who financed the buyout gave RJR Nabisco until February 1990 to reduce the debt by $5.5 billion and an additional six months to bring the total cut to $6 billion. Monday's announcement brings RJR Nabisco to within $600 million of the February requirement.

"We are now up to $4.9 billion," said David Kalis, an RJR Nabisco spokesman. "We're almost home. ... We don't expect any more major divestitures — by major I'm talking in the megabillions."

In addition to Merrill Lynch, other investors include Del Monte senior management, Kikkoman Corp. of Japan and Citicorp Capital Investors Ltd. In addition to its investment, Kikkoman has agreed to purchase a variety of Del Monte's assets in Asia, RJR Nabisco said.

The processed foods business has been up for sale for several months, analysts say, with Citibank as the major would-be buyer.

"But Citicorp had to reduce its equity stake ... because the Federal Reserve Board had rules limiting banking investments in non-financial companies," said Kurt Feuerman, analyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert. "That was the major roadblock. Merrill Lynch stepped in fairly recently when it was decided that Citibank could not have a larger equity portion."

"From now on, we can be strategic about it (divestment)," said Kalis, the RJR spokesman.

Looking for a JOB...OR A CAREER!?

Mike Leith and Associates operate over 20 dealerships in Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee. All are operated by men and women who began their career a relatively short time ago in our Raleigh dealerships.

We are like the Marines—we want a few good people who are looking for rapid advancement in a most exciting field. It makes no difference whether you have automotive experience or not! We're looking for individuals who understand how vital a total commitment to each customer really is—people who want to make a career of the automobile business.

College education is fine—but not a requirement. Being "street smart," being honest, and having great determination to succeed are the key characteristics we are searching for. By the way, when we say we're an equal opportunity employer, we mean it (It isn't just lip service). Several of our dealerships' chief executives are Black and we also have several chief executives who are women.

For the right people—honest, dedicated, and determined—we think our company offers the greatest opportunity for personal growth and enrichment. Please call LaVare Wilson, Mike Inabinett or Ron Williams and let us know when it would be convenient for you to interview with us. Thank you for your time in reading this.
