Mobil Hearing Stresses Safety

Public Seeks Its Own Answers

By J. Ward Best
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Like fighters rising after a hard-fought round, the players in a public review of Mobil Oil Corporation's drilling plans off the coast entered the second round of hearings with less intensity and more patience than in earlier meetings.

Tuesday's public hearing at East Carolina University drew a light turnout. And those who did attend wanted specific answers about Mobil's proposed drilling plans and the state and federal review of those plans.

A July 12 memorandum of understanding between the state, the federal Minerals Management Service and Mobil set in motion the public hearings and outlined a timetable which, if Mobil receives all the necessary approvals, would allow the company to sink a well off the Outer Banks by May 1.

Related story on A-6

Questions directed to Mobil officials Tuesday focused on the company's safety precautions and the on-shore impact of a test well.

Mobil released a draft exploration plan to the state and federal reviewing agencies Sept. 1. The 1,500 page document contains information on the drilling vessel, the geological structure of the drilling site, environmental assessments and an oil-spill cleanup plan.

Geologists for Mobil predict as much as 5 trillion cubic feet of natural could be buried under 2,700 feet of water along the Continental Shelf located about 44 miles off Cape Hatteras.

The panel of officials from Mobil, the state Outer Continental Shelf office and the Minerals Management Service spent little time reviewing the document Tuesday. It instead allowed the 10 to 15 people in the audience to question Mobil officials on its plans and state officials on the allotted review time.

Woody Lewis said he drove from Sharpsburg, located between Wilson and Rocky Mount, to attend Tuesday's hearing just for his own information. "If they go in out there

Cocaine Is Found Hidden In Apples

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Federal agents in New Jersey have found almost 900 pounds of cocaine hidden in a 13½-ton load of apples being trucked from a produce market in Los Angeles to northern New York state, officials reported Tuesday.

"It was a combination of things that led us to it," Bob Van Etten, special agent in charge of the U.S. Customs office in Newark, N.J., said. "One of those things was where those apples were going — to Albany, in upstate New York. That's like carrying coals to Newcastle."

Two men were arrested in New Jersey in connection with the seizure. Officials said the cocaine — with a street value estimated at between $40 million and $150 million, depending on its purity and how it was marketed — apparently was intended for distribution in northern New Jersey.

Van Etten said that as a result of intelligence reports, investigators on the East Coast have been closely watching shipments of produce from Southern California.

Los Angeles is one of the major transshipment points for cocaine from Mexico and Central America, and refrigerated trucks carrying produce are often used because they are relatively difficult to inspect, according to the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Agents from Customs and the DEA seized the cocaine late Sunday night after a drug-sniffing dog detected the narcotics in a refrigerated, 45-foot truck trailer parked in front of the Franklin Hotel in Port Newark, N.J.

Officials said the cocaine, packed in one-kilo bricks, was concealed in cartons buried beneath boxes of apples on a pallet at the front of the trailer.

Segundino Reyes Flores, 36, a Cuban national living in Miami, was arrested at the hotel. Agents said he was the driver of the truck.

GUC Cuts Gas Rate, For Now

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Residential users of natural gas supplied by the Greenville Utilities Commission will receive a 5 percent rate reduction beginning Nov. 1. But those same customers and thousands more will see the rate they pay for electricity go up by 3.5 percent no later than Jan. 1.

The board, at a lengthy meeting Tuesday night, approved the natural gas rate decrease after GUC General Manager Malcolm Green said the utility had reduced its wholesale cost of natural gas enough by buying well-head gas during off-peak months to justify the lower rate.

The decrease for firm gas customers — residential and small commercial users — will drop the rate from 69.27 cents per 100 cubic feet of gas to 65.81 cents. It also means that as a group gas customers will pay about $250,000 less a year for natural gas to GUC.

But those same customers and others — some 34,000 in all — will begin paying 3.5 percent more for electricity.

The board, after a long discussion, voted to pass on a 3.5 percent wholesale electric rate increase to all commercial and industrial customers beginning Nov. 1, but postponed the 3.5 percent rate hike for residential customers until Jan. 1. About 90 percent of the 34,000 GUC electric customers are residential customers.

For a residential customer using 1,000 kilowatthours of electricity a month, the 3.5 percent rate increase will increase his electric bill from $93.85 a month to $97.13 during the summer months. The cost of 1,000 kwh of power for the same customer during the winter would increase from the present $82.76 to $85.65.

The action to approve the rate increase came after Green told the board that since 1986 the commission's wholesale cost of electric power has increased 23.7 percent but customer's rates have increased only 14.2 percent.

Green said Greenville Utilities, which has absorbed some $5.9 million a year in wholesale costs over the past three years thanks to savings realized through its load management program, is simply unable to absorb additional rate hikes at this time. Each 1 percent in the wholesale rate equates to about $628,000 a year.

Roger Jones, director of electric systems for utility, said load management operations during September saved some $200,628 in wholesale power charges. Voltage adjustments accounted for $86,991 in savings, while operation of load management switches on air conditioners and water heaters saved some $102.720.

Since January 1985, the load management program has saved some $8.08 million in wholesale power costs, Jones said.

Farmville Hires Manager

FARMVILLE — Farmville has hired its first town manager and the new official will begin work Nov. 6.

The new town employee, Richard Neal Hicks, is currently town manager of Erwin in Harnett County. Prior to a June referendum, Farmville had a town administrator.

Hicks, 33, is a native of Walstonburg, located six miles from Farmville. He has served three years in Erwin, having previously been town manager of Pilot Mountain and planning director-zoning administrator and assistant town manager of Marion.

Hicks and his wife, Gena, an elementary school teacher, have an 8-year-old daughter and a 6-year-old son.

According to interim town manager Dillon Watson, Hicks was among 47 applicants for the job.

Edwards Resigns Foundation Post

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The chairman of the Pitt County Educational Foundation board of directors resigned Tuesday, saying he does not support the Board of Education's decision to deny Superintendent Edwin L. West Jr. a new contract.

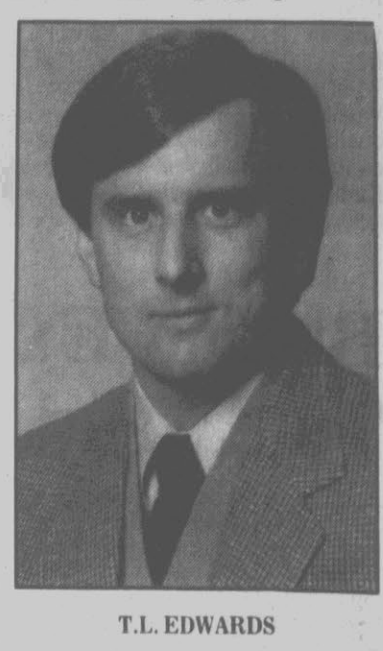
In a letter to West, Tommy L. Edwards said the board's decision on Sept. 18 not to renew West's contract "has been extremely stressful not only for you but for many who support our school system."

Although protesting the decision on West, Edwards said "business and other personal commitments" will prevent him from fulfilling his duties as foundation board chairman during a transition period for the school system.

"When I accepted responsibility to serve as chairman of our educational foundation, my commitment was based on the assumption that there would be stable, consistent leadership from the superintendent and staff," he said in the letter.

Copies of the letter were also sent to school board Chairman George E. Williams and foundation board members. Williams was not available for comment this morning.

Edwards has only been chairman since July, replacing Kenneth Dews Sr., who resigned.



T.L. EDWARDS

In the letter, Edwards said he intends to continue as chairman until Jan. 1, or until a replacement is selected by the foundation board.

The foundation's executive director, Betty Speir, said today that Edwards will continue to serve on the board after his resignation.

"Tommy Edwards has served generously with his time and expertise for the benefit of the children of Pitt County. We shall certainly miss his leadership, but I'm certain that he remains committed to the work of the Pitt County Educational Foundation," Mrs. Speir said.

The foundation is a private, nonprofit organization that supports public education in Pitt County. Its board of directors is appointed by the school board.

Aycock Wins Farmville Race

By Frances Horton Arrington
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — Dr. S.H. Aycock Jr., a local optometrist, was elected mayor of Farmville on Tuesday, defeating school principal Edith D. Warren by a margin of only 53 votes.

Aycock received 541 votes in the municipal balloting, while Ms. Warren, the principal at Sam D. Bundy School, got 488 votes, according to figures compiled by the Pitt County Board of Elections.

DR. S.H. AYCOCK JR.

Also, in Tuesday's elections, incumbent Oliver Murphrey and Dr. Dan Heizer were elected town commissioners, beating out candidates David Davis, incumbent John Turner Walston and write-in candidate Sam Hobgood.

"I'm quite pleased," Aycock said in a phone conversation this morning. "They're (town officials) already doing a good job. I'd like to see if I can add to that.

"I don't think we have any big issues right now, so it's just a matter of trying to carry on with what we're doing," Aycock said. "I want to make this a better place to live."

Aycock is no newcomer to public office, having served on the town board in Farmville for several years and as mayor pro tem for a brief period in the 1960s.

Aycock will be sworn in for a two-year term as mayor on Dec. 1.

Murphrey, who owns a local trucking business, received 635 votes and Heizer, a local physician, received 566. Each will serve four-year terms.

Pitt Elections Supervisor Margaret Hardee said today that 46 percent — 1,048 — of Farmville's 2,278 registered voters cast ballots Tuesday.

Mrs. Hardee said that Aycock, Murphrey and Heizer all received majority totals and no runoffs will be held.

Syrian Pilot Lands In Israel

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEGIDDO, Israel — A Syrian pilot landed his Soviet-made MiG-23 fighter jet in northern Israel today and the Israeli army said he was a defector. Syria denied the pilot defected and said he was forced to land because of a mechanical problem.

"This morning a Syrian pilot escaped from Syria with his plane, a MiG-23, and he landed safely in Israel," said Lt. Col. Raanan Gissin, an army spokesman.

The pilot landed at noon at an airfield at Megiddo, 57 miles north of Jerusalem, and was met by Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin and the army's chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron.

British Experts To Attend Meeting

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Child care and juvenile corrections experts from the United Kingdom will compare child and family issues in England with those in eastern North Carolina at a meeting Oct. 30 at East Carolina University.

The meeting for social service professionals and legislators is sponsored by the ECU School of Social Work. It will feature presentations by Spencer Millham, Roger Bullock and Ken Hosie of the Dartington Social Research Unit at the University of Bristol, England. The speakers will discuss ways to develop and link social research at ECU with the Dartington Social Research Unit, an organization responsible for numerous studies relating to child and family services in England.

A presentation by Millham, director of the research unit, is also scheduled for 7 p.m. in Room 1026 of the General Classroom Building.

Dr. John Y. Powell, assistant professor in the ECU School of Social Work, said the meeting is aimed at generating some new ideas on critical issues in social work. He said the issues in particular relate to mental health services for children, juvenile corrections and foster and residential services.

Powell said he hoped the new ideas could become the basis for further study conducted by ECU and the Dartington Social Research Unit.

"Southwest England resembles eastern North Carolina," Powell said. "The problems in these two areas are similar and the strategy for solving the problems in England may also be appropriate for eastern North Carolina," he said.

"I think we can learn from them and they can learn from us," Powell said.

The Oct. 30 meeting at ECU will follow an Oct. 24-26 symposium in Charlotte that will also be attended by the representatives from England. The Carolinas/England Child Care Symposium will examine residential child care in England and in North Carolina and South Carolina. About 16 social service professionals from England will be attending with educators and social service agency representatives from the two Carolinas.

S.C. May Issue Bonds To Pay Off Hugo Costs

By Trip DuBard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — South Carolina should be able to handle most costs from Hurricane Hugo but may have to issue bonds if the expense threatens to disrupt state government, Gov. Carroll Campbell says.

"From a fiscal standpoint, we're in a strong position because of what we had in place in the past to protect us. And that's going to protect our credit rating and everything else in the process of this," Campbell said Tuesday, referring specifically to the state's savings.

The governor's comments indicate that the millions it will cost the state to rebuild from the storm will not demolish the state's $3.4 billion operating budget, though shifting funds between or within agencies is virtually assured. Instead, funding for long-term building projects may be postponed and that money used to help offset Hugo's costs.

Issuing bonds also would allow the state to spread Hugo's costs over several years.

In other comments during an impromptu news conference Tuesday, Campbell

—again said he did not think the state needed a special legislative session prior to January's reconvening of the General Assembly since the state seemed to be able to pay for immediate storm-related damage.

—said he retained an "open mind" on giving counties a source of revenue other than the property tax to cover Hugo's costs in areas where the tax base has been damaged. He stopped short, though, of endorsing a proposal being ironed out between House and Senate leaders allowing local governments to levy a 1-cent-per-dollar sales tax increase if voters approve.

—restated his support for Senate changes in the 1988 Beachfront Management Act that would eliminate a construction-free, 20-foot zone along the oceanfront.

—said he did not anticipate renewing for a third 15-day period the emergency powers granted to him under the state constitution when his current emergency powers expire Oct. 21.

Hurricane Hugo is believed to have caused as much as $5 billion in damage to the state, though insurance and federal aid will pay for most of that.

Fred Carter, Campbell's senior executive assistant for finance and administration, said he hopes costs directly affecting the state budget to total less than the $200 million previously estimated, in large part because of increased help from the federal government.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Questions

A Fumble By The Bush Administration

While involvement of United States troops in an all-out shooting war during the recent event in Panama would have been improper, there are serious questions about how President George Bush did handle the situation in that country.

Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, wanted for his involvement with drug trafficking to the United States, is despicable in the eyes of the U.S. There could have only been approval in the White House when a coup attempted to oust him from power last week. After hours of confusion it became apparent that the coup was unsuccessful and that Noriega's forces remained in control at Panama City.

President Bush has been correctly criticized for failing to react before the coup attempt failed. While a full U.S. military involvement could have been a disaster, it is apparent that some steps should have been taken that were not.

'Gen. Noriega must go for the good of the people of Panama and the entire hemisphere.'

Noriega, after all, heads up a government which will eventually assume control of the American-built Panama Canal — an important trade link between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The United States could not find a worse element than Noreiga to take control of the canal. Thus it is understandable that those in this country who were opposed to the Panama Canal transfer from the start are vehement now in their criticism of President Bush for not intervening.

While this nation must consider the adverse feelings that past U.S. intervention in South and Central America have caused, it is probable that most of the South American nations would have favored some effort to bring down Noriega. As someone who has flaunted the law and adopted the stance and actions of a criminal, he is an embarrassment to the entire hemisphere.

Plainly put, Noreiga is a scallawag. The U.S. could and should have taken some steps to remove him without raising fears among Central and South American countries that gun boat diplomacy will eventually be aimed at them. The time for strong-arm tactics in Central America is past, but the U.S. still be able to take advantage of an opportunity to depose a leader who is clearly one of the "bad guys."

Gen. Noriega must go for the good of the people of Panama and the entire hemisphere. As the murky picture slowly unfolds it is uncomfortably apparent that the Bush administration may have fumbled an opportunity to bring that about.

The Problem Is The 'Instinct Thing'

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — In the wake of the debacle in Panama, White House chief of staff John Sununu has launched an investigation: What went wrong? From what we already know, the answer is clear: almost everything. That's because President Bush seems not to have learned a childhood saying: Put up or shut up.

The administration would not put up in Panama. After proclaiming that it wanted Manuel Noriega out, after denouncing him for the last several years, after indicting him in Florida, when the moment came to do something, no one wanted to do anything. Everyone, but most notably the President, was afraid of the risk.

Years from now, it will become clear that things started to go wrong with U.S. policy towards Panama when Noriega was indicted. The indictment was a typical Reagan administration grandstand play, still more theater in the mostly theatrical war on drugs. The indictment meant nothing because Noriega, manifestly and for all the world to see, was the leader of a sovereign nation. He was not about to turn himself in.

And neither could he be arrested. In fact, by indicting Noriega, the adminstration ensured that Panama's top thug would stay precisely where he was. With the United States seeking to put him behind bars, the safest place in the whole world for him was the presidential palace.

The stupid indictment did something else as well: It turned a criminal-justice problem into a foreign-policy crisis. The consequences were predictable. Since the colossus of the north wanted little Noriega of even littler Panama, all he had to do was whip up existing anti-American sentiment. Drugs and corruption were forgotten as the United States allowed itself to take on the complexion of the old United Fruit Co. No matter what the reason, no Latin American nation is going to accept being treated like a Banana Republic.

Bush inherited this policy. He could have altered it, but to have done so would have shown some initiative. Instead, like a good son, he did what Pappa Ron had done. But unlike Pappa Ron, Bush lacks instincts. His entire political outlook is learned, memorized. For instance, he won't raise taxes not because, like Reagan, he thinks taxes are bad and government can do no good. Far from it. He won't raise taxes because Reagan wouldn't and Reagan was a popular President. Reagan, however, would have gone into Panama with six-shooters blazing.

In so many ways, Bush is at war with himself. Lacking political instincts of his own, lacking a clear ideology, he winds up marrying his rhetoric to Reagan programs or, as Panama has shown, reversing the process. (Panama was Reagan rhetoric and Bush instincts — maybe the very worst combination imaginable.) For months now, Bush has talked tough on Panama, so tough that, if you just read the words, you might have thought Reagan was talking. When push came to shove, though, Bush caved. He was George Bush after all.

Same thing on education or drugs. Here you get the authentic voice of George Bush. We have to do more. We have to do better. The country is "at risk" and, moreover, government programs are needed — Head Start, for example, a pre-school program whose value is proven and which Bush has often mentioned favorably. But having bugled "charge," Bush then dismounts. He won't raise taxes. Simply won't. Why? Forget all the fancy explanations. Bush believes none of them. The reason is plain: Reagan wouldn't.

The contrast to Reagan is also instructive when it comes to dealing with the Soviets. Hard-liner Reagan turned on a dime after sizing up Mikhail Gorbachev. Bush, on the other hand, did a Hamlet number, picking options out of a daisy: Gorby's real, Gorby's not. Having decided in favor of caution and spelling out his position in four foreign-policy speeches, Bush reversed himself in a weekend. Where we are now depends entirely on who is testifying before Congress.

The current clear and present danger is not that the Panamanian debacle will be repeated, but that its lessons will become, like tax policy, memorized and rigid. In that case, we must face the prospect that Bush will err not on the side of caution, but on the side of danger. Now, after all, he has something to prove.

Sununu is wasting his time. The ultimate fault for the debacle in Panama will not be found in some management flow chart, but in the style and personality of George Bush. He is our most uninstinctive President, a manager more than a politician, a cover-your-butt guy who has spent a lifetime fudging the record and avoiding hard decisions. The problem is not in management but with the manager. It is, as Bush might call it, the instinct thing.

Panama To Potomac, The White House Looks 'Chicken'

David Broder

WASHINGTON — Official Washington, which had every reason to think it was dealing with highly professional operators in President Bush and his top associates, has had its confidence shaken. In the bungled business with Gen. Noriega and the too briefly promising Panamanian coup, it looks as if the White House failed to back its words with actions, to be there when its friends needed support. Faced with real opposition, its knees buckled.

As the inevitable investigations unfold, these impressions may prove wrong. But there is a parallel in domestic politics where the facts are now well established and the implications are equally troubling. It is the case of M. Caldwell Butler and the chairmanship of the Legal Services Corporation (LSC).

LSC is one part of Lyndon Johnson's war on poverty which survived the conservative counter-revolution, largely because such groups as the American Bar Assn. supported the principle of providing lawyers for people who could not otherwise afford them. Ronald Reagan despised Legal Services, but Congress never permitted him to kill it.

Butler is a former Republican congressman from Roanoke, Va. He retired from the House in 1982 with a 10-year record as a staunch conservative (lifetime American Conservative Union rating of 83 percent) and a reputation for independence underlined by his pivotal role in the Judiciary Committee impeachment proceedings against Richard Nixon. When Butler said, "I cannot condone what I have heard, I cannot excuse it and I cannot and will not stand still for it," the Watergate game was over for Nixon.

Butler was proposed for the LSC chairmanship by Rep. Bill McCollum (R-Fla.), a longtime Bush supporter and the leader of a group of conservatives who want to place new restrictions on what they regard as improper lobbying and class-action lawsuits by LSC grantees. McCollum quickly enlisted support for Butler from the entire House GOP leadership. He sold the Virginian's merits to the White House and to Sen. Warren Rudman (R-N.H.), who had emerged as one of LSC's defenders when Reagan was trying to kill the agency.

White House Chief of Staff John H. Sununu expressed his pleasure that the thorny personnel problem had been solved, and everything seemed greased. Then a group of conservative activists told McCollum and Sununu they had qualms about Butler. McCollum asked Butler to meet with them and when he did, they turned thumbs down. McCollum and some of the 31 other House sponsors then withdrew their support and the nomination was dead.

Who were these people who exercised such sway over the White House? One was Libby Whitley, the assistant director of national affairs for the American Farm Bureau Federation. Whitley said the Farm Bureau was involved because "we are spending millions" to defend members against LSC lawsuits, mainly involving working conditions of migrant laborers. Whitley's effectiveness is highly regarded among Washington lobbyists, who probably envy her gaining a position where she could veto the prospective head of the legal team that has caused her clients such grief.

Host to the meeting was David Keene, a political consultant who worked for Bush in 1980 and against him in 1988 and supplied reporters with an endless stream of quotes suggesting Bush was easily swayed and "weak" in conviction. He clearly enjoyed the chance to prove the proposition.

Two others were Howard Phillips and Richard Viguerie, conservative activists who found not only Bush but Reagan insufficiently pure for their standards. After Reagan started talking with Mikhail Gorbachev, Viguerie accused him of "a sellout" to the Soviets and Phillips called him "a useful idiot for Soviet propaganda."

Bush denounced them at the time and has refused to meet with them, but that did not prevent them from exercising their veto over Butler. Whitley and Keene said they came to doubt Butler's zeal for further restrictions on LSC, but Phillips told me: "The people present ceased to be interested (in Butler) as a result of what he had to say on the abortion issue." Since 1987, Congress has barred LSC lawyers from "participating in any litigation with respect to abortion." Butler, who acknowledges he was not aware of that ban, told me he had told his interrogators that "if a qualified poor person came with a question on her right to an abortion, they (LSC attorneys) should respond....They (the interrogators) said that was totally unacceptable."

Bush, of course, said in the campaign that abortion would not be a "litmus test" issue for his appointees, but in this case it became one. Butler never got a chance to talk to Sununu, whose spokesman said the chief of staff dropped the idea as soon as McCollum changed his mind.

The retreat was about as inglorious as the backdown in Panama. Rudman, who is close to Sununu, said: "The White House is trying to please everyone and in my experience that's impossible." Former Virginia Gov. Linwood Holton (R) said it was "criminal" that the White House allowed "extremists on the far side of the political spectrum" to knock out his former law partner and co-leader in the effort to make Virginia a two-party state.

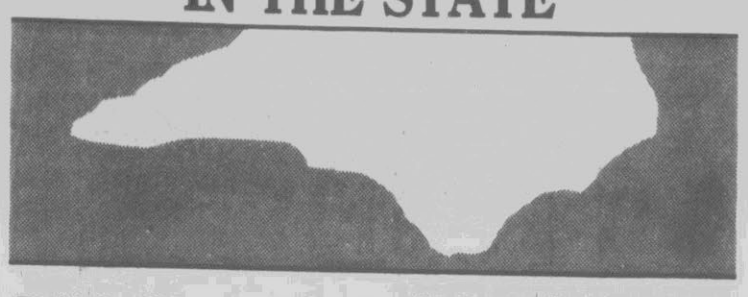
IN THE STATE



Raid Conducted

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — City police seized poker tables, gambling machines, sports betting forms and more than $30,000 cash in a raid on an alleged gambling house.

"There appear to be implications of probably a multi-million dollar a year operation," Gastonia Police Chief Jack Postell said Tuesday.

Police entered the four-room house with a search warrant about 2 p.m., Postell said. The raid followed a three-month police investigation with help from the FBI and IRS, Postell said.

"The house was not set up as a residence," said Postell.

Two men were in the house when it was raided but no arrests were made, Postell said. Charges were expected to be filed after seized betting records are analyzed by the FBI, Postell said.

Firrantello said the operation took in more than $100,000 a week.

"From our tallies we could show $180,000 in a nine-day period," said Firrantello. "And that was just baseball."

Police seized about 300 football betting forms for NFL and college games, sports schedules from Las Vegas and Atlantic City, $30,800, eight decks of cards, poker chips, two poker tables, three electronic poker machines, and five volumes of records, Firrantello said.

Lawsuit Filed

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — The brother of a Rocky Mount man who died after a struggle with police charges in a federal lawsuit that Melvin Lee Mathis was fatally injured when a police officer kneed him in the abdomen.

Michael Douglas Mathis of Rocky Mount filed suit Friday in U.S. District Court as administrator of his brother's estate. The suit names as defendants the city of Rocky Mount and Officers James K. Webb and Richard W. Parks, who now works for the Nash County Sheriff's Department.

Melvin Mathis, 37, died in October 1988 after the two officers arrested him outside a bar. According to his brother's suit, he was unarmed, intoxicated and argumentative but had not tried to run from officers.

Mathis seeks an unspecified amount of damages for violation of his brother's civil rights, wrongful death, assault and battery and illegal use of deadly force.

The State Bureau of Investigation found no evidence warranting criminal charges against the two officers, District Attorney Howard S. Boney Jr. announced in January.

Boney told The News and Observer of Raleigh that Melvin Mathis had tried to start a fight at the bar before police arrived. Later, when officers arrived, he was "swinging, kicking wildly and striking the officers," Boney said.

Charges Dismissed

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A district judge has dismissed misdemeanor charges against a principal accused of assaulting children on a school bus Sept. 11.

The decision led to protests from irate parents, some of whom said that they would keep their children home from school.

William Eugene Honeycutt, the principal at Mineral Springs Elementary School, had been charged with seven counts of assault on a child under 12 years old. He came to trial on those charges Tuesday in Forsyth District Court.

The seven children named in the charges, and five others on the bus, testified against Honeycutt. They said that he got on the bus that afternoon and angrily shoved children into the seats shouting, "I'm tired of this mess."

Honeycutt said that he was putting unruly children in their seats so that the bus could leave.

"I didn't kick anybody. I didn't shove anybody. I didn't slam anybody into the seats," he said. "I was doing exactly what I am supposed to do."

Judge Margaret L. Sharpe dismissed six counts, saying that the state failed to prove that Honeycutt acted maliciously. She dismissed the other, saying that the state failed to prove that there was any assault.

"I'm not going to send them back," said Cynthia Flow, who had two children on the bus. "If he's going to be back there, I don't want them to go to that school."

Union Rise Predicted For The 1990s

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An increasing demand for labor should make the 1990s a banner decade for union organizing even in North Carolina, which has traditionally lagged the rest of the nation, the president of the state AFL-CIO said today.

"We're right on the close of the 1980s, which has been a tough decade for workers and unions in the country and in North Carolina," said Christopher Scott in a telephone interview from Atlantic Beach, site of the 32nd annual convention of the state AFL-CIO.

With the baby-boom generation growing older, there will be fewer workers available in the coming years, Scott said. That will mean more people will have confidence in their ability to find work, and that confidence may translate into a greater willingness to join unions and fight for their rights, he said.

"All this, in my opinion, adds up to a revitalized labor movement that has confidence in itself and may very well see that the 1990s is the decade that we really make a substantial comeback," Scott said.

The current decade was characterized by "an enormous number of plant closures" and a "very tough political climate in the country ... that's made it more diffucult for us to do our job," Scott said. But recently that climate has been changing.

Union officials have been working to organize 6,000 to 7,000 workers at Harris-Teeter supermarkets as well as 3,000 employees of Duke Power Co. and groups at R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. in Winston-Salem, he said.

"Just in the last month, you're beginning to see signs that unions are really being bold in some of their approaches," Scott said, noting strikes by General Tire rubberworkers in Charlotte and Holly Farms truck drivers in North Wilkesboro.

"Those people were just as solid as solid can be and not a single person crossed the picket line," he said of the General Tire walkout.

North Carolina remains only 6 percent organized, with about 200,000 union members, but that could change, Scott said.

"I think that the fact that there are these big organizing efforts going on bodes very well for our improving our percentage of organized workers," he said.

There is also a growing sense among management that fighting union organizing efforts can be counter-productive, Scott said.

"Some groups of management have decided that it's really smart business to work with their unions," he said. "I think those companies are prospering. Then you have some employers who have really gotten a die-hard spirit in the 1980s and probably will fight harder than they ever have before.

Six Bus Drivers Protest Changes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Six Wake County school bus drivers skipped their afternoon runs in a protest over a change in benefits, leaving nearly 600 Zebulon schoolchildren without a ride on Tuesday.

"I can't believe they left kids stranded," said Thomas C. Benton, principal of Zebulon Middle School. "There are other ways to deal with this."

Some of the stranded middle-schoolers caught rides with neighbors, while others tried to reach their parents or waited for substitute drivers. Many anxious parents called the school or came by when their children did not arrive on time, he said.

Drivers who took part in the protest said they saw no other way to protest the loss of hours and benefits.

"They've not done us fairly," said bus driver Kay F. Hagwood. "I was caught between a rock and a hard place."

Mrs. Hagwood said she and other drivers were notified Tuesday that they no longer would be credited with six hours of work for their routes. The change followed an audit that determined how long each route should take. It generally should take drivers about 4 minutes per mile to to pick up children and deliver them to school, said Wyatt Harper, director of transportation for the Wake County schools.

A driver must work six hours to qualify for full benefits.

"We had to do some auditing and some adjusting on some routes in the East Wake area," Harper said. "Changes were made and apparently some people were not satisfied."

But the drivers' protest, Harper said, might cost them their jobs.

"If any of these people have a valid reason, then I will talk to them," Harper said. "If they did not report for other than valid reasons, yes, they will be terminated."

'Hot' Export

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — The T.W. Garner Food Co. isn't ready to suggest Texas Pete on sushi.

But the company is about to spice up the lives of Japanese and do its part for the lopsided balance of trade.

Garner's Texas Pete hot sauce made its debut in March at Japan's Food Exposition in Tokyo, said Jim Frank, national sales manager for Garner Food. More than 800 pounds of deep-fried buffalo-style chicken wings, laced with Texas Pete, were served at the exposition.

A market research study by the Babcock School of Management at Wake Forest University further bolstered Garner's move to Japan, Frank said. The company hopes to sell 100,000 to 150,000 cases of Texas Pete next year to Japanese grocery chains and food service companies.

N.C. Environmentalists Want Mobil Drilling Delayed

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Environmentalists say they have little faith in the review process for a draft oil drilling proposal submitted by Mobil Oil Corp., and have asked federal officials to delay a test well off the North Carolina coast until a study of the Gulf Stream can be completed.

The state is sponsoring public meetings this week to discuss the Mobil plan and take comments from coastal residents. The first meeting was held last week in Wilmington, with other meetings scheduled tonight in Elizabeth City and Thursday night in Buxton.

Tom Perlic, coastal conservation chairman for the Sierra Club, said Tuesday his group is not putting much effort into packing those meetings with supporters because the meetings "are basically a farce."

"We will continue to work within this process ..., but we have severe doubts anything we say will make a difference," he said.

Perlic said conservationists will concentrate on getting state officials to reject Mobil's proposal as inconsistent with the state's coastal laws. If the state rejects Mobil's request for a drilling permit, the company can appeal to the U.S. Secretary of Commerce.

Perlic said the Sierra Club is concerned that a successful test well will lead to commercial drilling no matter what the environmental cost.

"We're at the top of a hill with a snowball," Perlic said. "The more it rolls, the harder and harder it gets to stop. If Mobil finds significant amounts of oil and gas, they're going to be difficult to stop.

"You're talking about the oil industry, which has a lot of money," Perlic said. "They own the state of Alaska. Once they get started, they will be difficult to stop."

The Sierra Club, the N.C. Coastal Federation and LegaSea sent a letter Tuesday to the U.S. Minerals Management Service, which regulates offshore drilling beyond state waters. Mobil should not be allowed to drill its test well, the groups say in the letter, until more is known about the currents at the drilling site. Those currents could carry spilled oil to the state's beaches, they say.

"This is some of the deepest water with some of the most treacherous, shifting currents of any place where drilling for oil has ever been attempted," Derb Carter of the Southern Environmental Law Center said at the meeting. "Any oil and gas at this site has been there for thousands of years, and it will be there next year."

Mobil has proposed drilling a test well 38 miles due east of Salvo. The well would be sunk in 2,700 feet of water, with an eventual depth of 14,000 feet. The company says it has a 10 percent chance of striking natural gas and a 1 percent chance of hitting oil.

Carter said the proposed drilling site is at the edge of the Gulf Stream, an area known for unpredictable eddies that swirl toward shore.

"We do not know enough about this area for the development of an oil spill plan," Carter said. "Obviously, we are going to have to know where this oil is going if there is a spill."

Bill Whittemore, Mobil's senior counsel, said environmental groups had not given the company's draft proposal for the test well, which includes an oil spill plan, a fair hearing.

"To dismiss this out of hand before the draft is even in is to show the agenda of these groups — to oppose the project at every turn," Whittemore said. "We have the potential for one of the hugest finds in the world out there and we need to get at it."

Whittemore said the agreement for the draft plan, the first of its kind in offshore drilling, gives the state adequate time to review the test well proposal. If oil or gas is discovered, he said, then full environmental studies will have to be done before commercial drilling can begin.

"The bottom line is that a very sincere system that goes beyond what the law requires has been tailor-made for North Carolina," Whittemore said. "We ask only that those concerned give the plan a chance."

The company plans to present its final proposal by Feb. 1. Under federal law, the governor has 20 days to decide whether the plan is inconsistent with the coastal development laws.

The Mobil Oil Working Group formed by Gov. Jim Martin Tuesday began examining sections of the 1,500-page draft proposal so they can be prepared when the final proposal is presented.

Don Bryan, the mayor of Nags Head and a member of the group, said it was important to make sure the proposal meets state and federal laws.

"But we also must satisfy the people on the coast that we have looked at the things that concern them about this proposal," Bryan said. "If we don't do that, we're just spinning out wheels."

Mobil has proposed to begin drilling the test well May 1. The company expects the well will take 114 days to complete.

Experts Sent To Probe Fire At Nuclear Plant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Carolina Power & Light Co. officials say a fire in an electrical tranformer and generator at the Shearon Harris Nuclear Plant was handled properly, and the search for the cause of the blaze is continuing.

"From the preliminary information we have, they handled it responsibly," NRC spokesman Ken Clark said of CP&L personnel. "Our inspectors will be going over the sequence of events, and we're to have a report in 30 days or so."

State and local officials also said CP&L personnel had handled the situation well.

"From what information I was getting, they seemed to have things under control and were taking care of things the way they should have been," said Johnny D. James, a radiation emergency coordinator for the state Division of Radiation Protection.

CP&L officials refused Tuesday to permit the media to view damaged areas of the plant. Kyle W. Hampton, a company spokesman, said that it was standard policy to bar cameras from the vicinity of the company's nuclear reactors.

The company's investigation focuses on an electrical short circuit that occurred in one of the ducts housing lines that carry electricity from the plant's generator to its three transformers.

"We don't have any official verification or formal cause confirmed," said CP&L spokesman Elizabeth Bean. "We've got a number of presumptions."

CP&L also gave no estimates on damage from Monday night's, but an initial Nuclear Regulatory Commission report listed extensive damage to a transformer, the electrical ducts and auxiliary equipment for the generator. The extent of damage to the plant's only generator remained unknown.

"From outside, the generator doesn't look like it is that badly damaged," Mrs. Bean said, "but we don't know what is on the inside."

Company officials said the fire did not pose a threat to the public. No one was injured.

"Since the fire was located on the steam side of the plant in the turbine deck and at the transformer, it remained external to the concrete buildings which house the nuclear systems of the plant," said R.B. Richey, nuclear project manager. "At no time was there any danger to the public."

Mrs. Bean said there had been a hydrogen gas leak when the fire spread through lines running from one of three transformers to a generator. She said there was a hydrogen gas fire, but there was no explosion.

Ms. Bean said officials don't know whether the fire started in the generator, which uses hydrogen gas as a cooling agent, or in the transformer.

The fire was reported about 11:20 p.m. The fire was completely out and the hydrogen leak was contained by 2:43 a.m. Tuesday, CP&L officials said.

"The plant declared an alert which is a normal thing to do when there is a fire," said David McNeill, a CP&L spokesman.

Tom Ditt with the N.C. Division of Emergency Management said CP&L notified his office, and about six employees were placed on standby at the state office until the fire was extinguished.

Because there is damage to plant equipment, the plant will enter a refueling outage that was originally scheduled for late next week.

Couple Files Libel Suit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBORO, N.C. — A Chatham County couple has filed a $1.5 million libel suit against The Chatham Record for publishing a story that erroneously reported the couple sold illegal drugs, according to court records.

Tom and Jean Hudson say a story in the weekly newspaper's Aug. 10 edition "stated and implied falsely" that the couple acted in a criminal manner to hide and illicitly use proceeds of drug transactions or proceeds used to assist drug transactions, according to documents filed last month in Chatham County Superior Court.

Alan Resch and Cassie Wasko, editors at The Record, are listed as defendants in the suit filed by Robert L. McClellan, the Hudsons' Greensboro attorney.

"We think the kind of damage that occurs from such an accusation is quite obvious," McClellan said. "I think we do (have a strong case)."

The Record has not filed a response to the suit, a court official said.

Wasko declined to comment on the suit Monday, and Resch could not be reached for comment.

According to the suit, the article erroneously reported that federal prosecutors sought the return of $174,000 given to the Hudsons by Guy Harrison Hemrick of Winston-Salem, who is Jean Hudson's brother.

Body Identified As Missing Employee

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOONE, N.C. — Law enforcement officers in Watauga County say their search for an Appalachian State University employee was emotional because they were looking for a friend.

Jeni Gray, formerly a crime reporter for the Watauga Democrat, knew many of the officers and deputies. Officers found her body Monday in a rugged area near Boone.

"All the officers had sort of adopted Jeni as maybe a little sister," said Boone Police Lt. William Watson, the detective in charge of the investigation. "She knew us all. There's no one here that wouldn't have done anything in the world for her.

"We do our best on any crime, but when you know someone personally, it's a lot different," Watson said.

Since then, area lawmen who had seen Ms. Gray on a near-daily basis when she was a reporter worked 18-hour shifts and off-duty hours trying to find her.

"She was real good friends with all the officers, spent time with their families," said Boone Police Chief Zane Tester. "But Jeni was close to any one who knew her.

"As long as Jeni's been missing, it's been a major strain not only on her family, but on the police officers and people involved in the community. Also, we do not have a lot of major crime in Boone, and when we do, we band together." The body of Ms. Gray was positively identified Tuesday. Dr. John Butts, the state's chief medical examiner, said Mr. Gray, 27, a writer with the ASU news bureau, died of strangulation.

Butts said that Ms. Gray also may have been struck on the head.

"The circumstances and condition of the body indicate that she died shortly after she was last seen alive," he said.

The woman's body was found at the bottom of a steep embankment about 4 p.m. Monday by a Boone police lieutenant, who was searching for Ms. Gray with four other officers in the area near an unpaved secondary road at Jakes Mountain near Boone.

The victim was wearing a ring matching the description of one Ms. Gray was wearing.

Daniel Brian Lee, 24, of Watauga County was charged Monday night with first-degree murder, first-degree kidnapping, and first-degree rape, Tester said. Lee then was formally charged during a first-appearance hearing Tuesday with first-degree murder, first-degree rape and first-degree kidnapping today in Watauga County District Court.

Lee was being held in the Watauga County Jail, where he has been since Sept. 30.

Myrick Wins Primary In Charlotte

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Charlotte Republicans have given incumbent Mayor Sue Myrick the nomination for a second term in a primary that was delayed and downplayed by Hurricane Hugo.

"The turnout was 14,920, which is 7.5 percent," Mecklenburg Elections Supervisor Bill Culp said. "We had predicted 8 percent, so it was as bad as we expected. I guess hurricanes and Jim Bakker are all this town can take."

Myrick gathered 5,293 votes Tuesday, compared to 413 for Samuel Elijah McClure. She defeated McClure with 95 percent of the vote two years ago before taking a 995-vote victory over two-term Democrat Harvey Gantt.

In other municipal elections Tuesday, Raleigh voters re-elected three-term mayor Avery Upchurch and candidates backed by a conservative coalition in Durham led the primary voting there.

Charlotte's partisan primary was scheduled for Sept. 26, but election officials delayed it two weeks after Hurricane Hugo devastated the city.

Myrick's opponent in the Nov. 7 election will be Democrat Craig Madans, a political newcomer. He avoided a primary when two-term council member Al Rousso, the heavy favorite, dropped out because of illness last month.

Charlotte voters also chose four Democrats and four Republicans to battle for four city council at-large seats, as well as the Democratic nominees in council Districts 2 and 3 and the GOP nominee in District 7. The Democratic nominee in District 3 won the seat, in effect, because no Republican is running.

In Charlotte's District 2, incumbent Charlie Dannelly and Hoyle Martin will face off in a Democratic second primary next Tuesday. Incumbent Democrat Ella Scarborough won re-election by winning her primary since there is no Republican opposition for the seat. Tom Mangum apparently won the Republican nomination for District 7.

In Raleigh, three-term incumbent Avery Upchurch won re-election by a vote of 13,152 to 10,440 for city councilman Charles Meeker.

In voting for two at-large seats on the council, incumbent Anne Franklin led the balloting with 13,237 votes and won a seat without a runoff. She was followed in the balloting by Frank L. Turner who faces a possible runoff with Joan Baron for the second seat. Julian Ford and incumbent Jeff Elting face a runoff in District A seat, while Anna Keller and Barlow Hergett face a runoff in District D seat. Incumbents Mary Watson Nooe, Ralph Campbell Jr. and Mary Cates retained their seats.

In Durham, the conservative Friends of Durham coalition swept the voting, with candidates they endorsed placing first in primary balloting for mayor, two council seats and the top three spots for at-large council seats.

Nelson Strawbridge led the balloting for mayor with 8,919 votes and will face Chester Jenkins, who finished with 5,979 votes, in the Nov. 7 general election. About 24 percent of the city's 69,658 voters turned out.

"This is just the begining. It's just a primary," said Jenkins, who was supported by the Durham Committee on the Affairs of Black People. "It's very different from a general election."

Former Durham Police Chief Talmade Lassiter led the balloting for at-large council seats with 7,869 votes. The other five winner, who will compete for three seats, are Clarence Brown, Ollie Cook, Tommy Hudson, Betsy Robb and Diane Wright.

In Ward 1, Charles Grubb and Shirley "Red" Wilson will compete for one seat Nov. 7, and Howard Clement III will face Albert Huey in Ward 3.

In Asheboro, three-term incumbent mayor Joe Trogdon will face a challenge Nov. 7 from retired city manager Thomas J. McIntosh. Trogdon received 588 votes in the primary, followed by McIntosh with 567. Charles K. Moss, a third contender, had 132 votes.

In Ramseur's primary, voters narrowed the field of candidates for two seats on the five-member Board of Commissioners. The four candidates vying for two seats are Darius Stutts, Ed Parks, Raymond Brown and Kermit Pell. Ronald Douglas Burch was eliminated from the field.

In Boone, first-term council member Velma Burnley won the mayor's race with 746 votes, defeating Bill Rucker with 478 votes and Craig Austin with 245 votes.

Court Questions Procedure

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court justices questioned North Carolina's death-sentence procedure during a hearing on a case involving a 70-year-old man sentenced to die for killing a sheriff's deputy.

The case, if found in favor of convicted murderer Dock McKoy Jr. of Wadesboro, could win resentencings for many of the 88 convicts on North Carolina's death row.

Under jury instructions in North Carolina, jurors deciding whether to sentence a convicted killer to life imprisonment or death cannot consider mitigating factors — those weighing against death — unless all 12 jurors agree that the factor should be taken into account.

The unanimous-mitigation requirement is at the forefront of the case, the latest in a series of death-penalty cases being heard by the high court.

Under the disputed North Carolina law, a jury weighs "aggravating factors" against "mitigating factors" in trying to decide whether a murderer should be executed.

Aggravating factors, such as previous violent crimes or the killing of a law enforcement officer, tend to justify a death sentence. Mitigating factors, such as the defendant's mental instability or drunkenness, tend to justify a life sentence.

The high court voted 5-4 last year to strike down a sentencing procedure in Maryland.

But special deputy state attorney general, Joan H. Byers, argued that the Maryland procedure was different from the one used in North Carolina because it mandated a death sentence if the jury found no mitigating factors and even one aggravating factor. In North Carolina, under the same scenario, there still exists a deliberations phase in which the jury decides whether the aggravating factors warrant death.

"The jury still has that vehicle though which to give their rea soned, moral response," Ms. Byers argued.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist expressed some sympathy for her argument.

The chief justice, engaging in the give-and-take that marks oral arguments before the court, noted that criminal courts typically require cases to be decided by a unanimous vote of a jury. "There does seem to be some inconsistency," he said, in assertions that defendants could prove a mitigating factor by persuading fewer than 12 jurors.

But attorney Malcolm R. Hunter Jr., who is representing McKoy, said if only one hold-out juror refused to accept a mitigating factor, "the other 11, from that point on, have to look at the case through the eyes of the one."

Justice Antonin Scalia raised the most pointed questions about the ramifications of allowing jurors to consider mitigating factors without unanimous agreement. He noted that a hold-out juror could just as easily block consideration of an aggravating factor and therefore block a death sentence.

"Why isn't that even-handed enough?" he asked Hunter.

It's not the even-handedness that's troublesome, Hunter replied. Rather, it's the ability of one juror to block consideration of factors embraced by all the others.

"It seems to me altogether arbitrary to let one juror dictate to the other 11," he said.

Shootout

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Five suspected Kurdish guerrillas and two soldiers were killed in a shootout in a province near the Syrian border, the regional governor's office said Tuesday.

The announcement, carried by the semi-official Anatolia News Agency, said the guerrillas raided the Acikkoy village in Mardin province on Sunday, killing two villagers and burning down the school.

YOUR EYEGLASS PRESCRIPTION
What does the Federal Trade Commission say about "Eyeglass Prescriptions"

Q. Can I charge my patients an extra fee for releasing the prescription!
A. No. The Rule makes it illegal for you to charge your patients any fee in excess of your normal examination fee as a charge for releasing the prescription. So if your normal examination fee is $30, you cannot add an extra $5 or $10 for releasing the prescription.
Q. When do I have to give out a prescription?
A. The prescription must be given to your patient immediately after you complete the eye examination. This means that you must give your patient his or her prescription before you begin your dispensing procedures (if you also dispense eyeglasses).
Q. What if my patient doesn't ask for the prescription? Do I still have to give it out to my patient?
A. Yes. The Rule requires that you prepare the prescription and physically offer it to the patient. Of course, you can't force the patient to take it, but you must offer him or her the written prescription. Simply asking your patients whether they want their prescription is not sufficient. We found that many consumers had never seen a prescription for corrective eyewear, and thus were unaware that they could take that piece of paper and use it to comparison shop.
Q. What is the penalty for violating the Rule?
A. The penalty for violating the Rule is up to $10,000 per violation.
Q. How can I report violations of the Rule?
A. You can contact us directly in Washington, D.C. Our mailing address in Washington is: Eyeglasses TRR, Federal Trade Commission, Room 281, Washington, DC 20580

Animal Rights Group Files Suit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — An animal rights organization at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is suing the chairman of the school's institutional animal care and use committee to obtain protocols on animal research conducted by the university.

The suit, which names Dr. William Huffines, was filed Monday in Wake County Superior Court by Students for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

The protocols — official records or documents — being sought are among 16 animal documents SETA requested to see last January to study projects and procedures used by animal researchers. The university allowed SETA to review seven of those documents. Susan Ehringhaus, assistant to the chancellor, told SETA in a letter that the other nine documents would not be released.

Chris Brannon, a SETA member, said Tuesday that SETA members conferred with their lawyer, Douglas Ruley, about the nine documents.

"We believe that those are public documents," Brannon said, adding that he thinks a judge can order that the documents be released to SETA.

SETA contends that these documents should be available to students and to the public, and that they bear directly upon the efficacy and credibility of the animal research complex and process at UNC, which every year receives millions of dollars of taxpayers' money, a SETA statement says.

Huffines said hadn't seen the suit yet. "I've seen nor heard nothing about that," he said.

Ms. Ehringhaus was unavailable to respond to the suit on Tuesday.

The suit also requests copies of the minutes of meetings held by the institutional animal care and use committee and access on a permanent and ongoing basis to all research protocols kept by the committee.

Judge Clears Way For Atlantis But Launch Is Delayed

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A judge cleared the Atlantis for launch, but a computer glitch forced NASA to delay the space shuttle's planetary mission for at least four days.

Engineers today were replacing a faulty engine control system that forced the postponement. The delay was announced Tuesday night, shortly after a federal judge rejected a request by three anti-nuclear groups that the launch, which had been scheduled for Thursday, be halted.

Officials said the liftoff of Atlantis and its Jupiter-bound Galileo probe could be rescheduled as early as Monday, but they would not have a definite date for a day or two.

NASA wants to launch Atlantis as soon as possible because Jupiter will be in the proper position only until Nov. 21; any delay beyond that would push the flight off until mid-1991.

If a postponement goes beyond 10 days, Galileo's altered course then would miss the opportunity for the spacecraft to take the first closeup look at two asteroids, Gaspra and Ida.

The space agency also has two other shuttle launches planned this year, and any lengthy delay could affect that schedule.

The decision to hold up the mission came after engineers tested the master controller in one of three main shuttle engines and could not learn why it had given a false signal about low pressure on a fuel pump, said launch director Bob Sieck. Subsequent tests did not duplicate Monday night's bad reading.

"We have to ascertain that we completely understand the problem and that there is no chance it will reoccur in flight and put us in jeopardy," said Bob Crippen, director of the Mission Management Team, which gives final launch clearance.

"The worst condition is that we would shut down an engine and have to abort the flight and we want to make sure there is no probability of that."

Sieck said repairs began immediately. It required opening up the engine compartment to get at the computer, which is the size of a 17-inch portable television and controls all engine functions during liftoff.

The countdown, which began Monday, was halted.

Shuttle workers received the bad news not long after getting the news from U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch in Washington that they could proceed with launch preparations.

The anti-nuclear groups had sought to block the liftoff on grounds that radioactive plutonium-238 particles would spread over east-central Florida if Atlantis exploded. The plutonium is in two nuclear-powered generators that provide electricity for the Galileo.

"The court concludes that NASA has complied with requirements of the National Environmental Protection Act," Gasch said.

Justice Department attorneys representing the National Aeronautics and Space Administration argued that Galileo's $1.5 billion, six-year mission to Jupiter carried very low risks. They said the nuclear generators were well shielded and similar to 38 generators that have flown on 22 previous space missions.

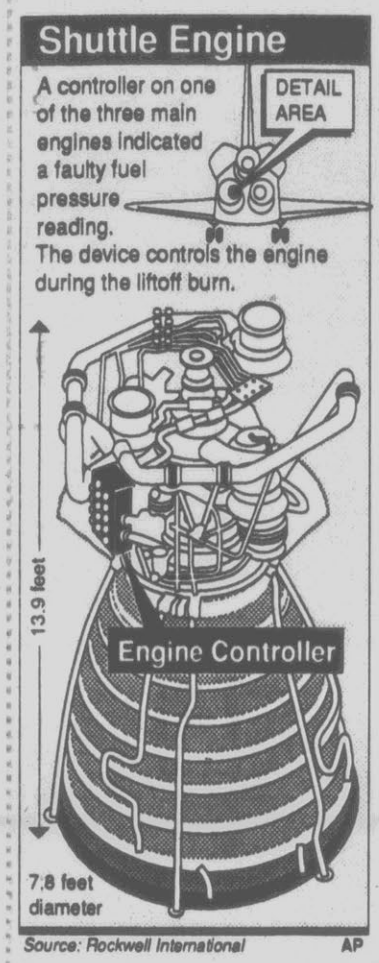
The anti-nuclear groups said that if they lost in court they would attempt to halt the launch by trying to infiltrate the Kennedy Space Center and put people on the launch pad.

"On our side we're sad because the court didn't rule in our favor. But on the other side, we feel that we've succeeded in bringing the issue to the public, that they are planning to put nuclear power in space," said Bruce Gagnon, coordinator of the Florida Coalition for Peace and Justice, one of the groups that filed suit.

When the launch is attempted, he said, "We're going to go with our plan to put people on the launch pad."

Reaching the heavily guarded launch pad would be tough, said Gary Wistrand, deputy director of security.

"We've installed various types of tactical intrusion devices," he said. "Hopefully, if they try this tactic, we'll be able to detect and apprehend them before they are successful in getting to the pad."



Fellowships

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Walter Annenberg, former ambassador to Great Britain, has established a $1 million endowment for public service fellowships in honor of his 40-year friendship with a federal appeals court judge, Harvard Law School officials announced Tuesday.

The gift was provided by Annenberg in the name of his friend, Judge Irving R. Kaufman of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and his 40 years of service on the federal bench, Harvard officials said.

The endowment will finance awards of $10,000 each for Harvard Law School students recent alumni who want to enter public service. Kaufman fellows will be chosen on the basis of commitment to public service, strong academic records and faculty and other recommendations.

Kaufman Fellowships will be awarded for periods of one, two, or three years. The first awards will be made for the academic year 1990-91.

Teen-Ager Charged In School Blasts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANDERSON, Ind. — Authorities arrested a 16-year-old after searching his home for allegedly placing two bombs at his high school, police said.

Anonymous tips led officers Tuesday night to the home of the youth, whose name was withheld because of his age, Anderson police Detective Kevin Smith said.

Bombs exploded Monday and Tuesday at Anderson High School, causing minor damage but no injuries, officials said. Classes were canceled and students were sent home both days. Officials estimated the total damage at less than $800.

As word of each blast spread, telephoned bomb threats were phoned to several other area high schools, authorities said.

The teen-ager was arrested at his home at 8:30 p.m. and charged with two counts of arson and two counts of manufacturing an explosive device, all felonies. He was held in the Juvenile Detention Center in Madison County.

The student has made no statement, Smith said.

At least one other youth was either involved or was aware of what was happening, investigators said. They are looking into the possibility of filing charges against him, they added.

On Tuesday a small pipe bomb exploded about 7:35 a.m. in a hallway outside the school auditorium, said Charles Petersen, special agent in charge of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Indianapolis.

Only a few students and teachers were in the building at the time.

Earlier Tuesday, Chief Ron Rheam said police would step up security at the school today. "I do not fear for any teacher or student coming to the school tomorrow," he said.

Shrimpers Face Fines

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Gulf Coast shrimpers are looking to President Bush for a last-minute reprieve from regulations they claim will cost them nearly a third of their income.

Unless Bush intervenes, shrimp fishermen will face stiff fines next week if they are caught without devices in their nets that prevent the drowning of endangered sea turtles.

The Texas Shrimp Association predicts quiet compliance with the law, but executive director Ralph Rayburn also says shrimpers could lose up to 30 percent of their catch at a time when earnings are banked to get them through the non-productive winter months.

Congressmen from the Gulf Coast say shrimping is an endangered industry that cannot afford to use the turtle excluder devices, or TEDs.

"You're beginning to see less shrimpers than less turtles," says Rep. Solomon Ortiz, D-Texas, who has watched the number of shrimp-industry employees in Port Isabel, Texas, fall from nearly 3,000 to fewer than 400 in six years.

Ortiz and Rep. Billy Tauzin, D-La., say fuel and insurance costs for the shrimpers have been mounting as prices have been driven down by shrimp imports, which now account for 75 percent of U.S. consumption.

Although shrimpers have been required to use TEDs since Sept. 8, the federal government has forgiven the penalties — at first in whole and later in part — if a shrimper bought and installed a TED.

Four Bodies Found In Trailer Traveling On Railroad Flatcar

VICTORIA, Texas (AP) — Authorities are investigating whether a man whose body was found near railroad tracks was traveling with four others found dead in a trailer being carried on a railroad flatcar.

The four, thought to be illegal aliens, were found Tuesday morning on the Southern Pacific train, and authorities were trying to determine if a toxic pesticide used on the cargo contributed to their deaths.

Later, authorities found the body of a man also believed to be an illegal alien beside the tracks just south of Sinton, 65 miles south of Victoria, authorities said Tuesday night.

San Patricio County Sheriff Leroy Moody said it's possible the man died in the same railroad car and fell out.

Moody said a crewman on a Union Pacific train spotted the fifth body about 10 feet from the tracks Tuesday afternoon.

Autopsies on all five were ordered.

The trailer, half-filled with boxes of tortilla or corn flour called masa, had two warning stickers about the size of license plates taped to the doors. The signs showed skulls and said in English and Spanish: "Danger. This trailer is being fumigated," and "Do not enter."

The masa had been fumigated with Phostoxin, an aluminum phosphate pesticide, before the trailer was sealed and loaded on the train in Harlingen, said Jorge Trevino, quality control manager for the flour producer, Azteca Milling Co. in Edinburg.

The pesticides are used on masa shipments to keep the food free of rodents and bugs. Trevino did not know when a contractor had treated and sealed the trailer, which measured about 40 feet long, 8 feet tall and 10 feet wide.

Anne Cuddeback, an investigator with the Texas Department of Health, said the fumigant used in the trailer could be fatal if inhaled or ingested.

The four apparently died of asphyxiation despite punching a small hole in the trailer, probably for ventilation, said Victoria police Lt. Jack Williams.

Three rescue workers and seven police officers at the scene were taken to a hospital after some complained of nausea and vomiting, said police Lt. Richard Jones.

The symptoms of the fumigant are diarrhea and vomiting, which was found inside the car, said police Sgt. John Burney.

The victims appeared to be in their 20s, he said. Three of the four had papers, although police hadn't verified the documents Tuesday. One had a Mexican passport, one had documents from Honduras, and a third had papers that had been stamped in El Salvador but indicated he was from Venezuela, Jones said.

Casino Officials Killed In Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LACEY TOWNSHIP, N.J. — A helicopter's main rotor fell off before it crashed onto a highway median, killing all five aboard, including three of the Trump Organization's top casino executives, said a witness and authorities.

"There was a loud bang, like a piston rod going," said Tom Murray, 38, of East Providence, R.I., who was camping near the site of Tuesday afternoon's crash, a wooded thicket between north- and southbound lanes of the Garden State Parkway.

"It fell below the tree-line and I didn't see it crash," he said. "It went straight down. ... It seemed like an eternity watching it."

No one on the ground was hurt.

State police Sgt. Anthony Aceto said the main rotor was found a quarter-mile from the crash site about 30 miles north of Atlantic City, where the helicopter was returning the executives from New York City.

The National Transportation Safety Board investigators were looking into a rotor malfunction, said Frank Ghiorsi, the agency's regional director.

"If the main rotor separated from the rest of the aircraft, it was out of control," Ghiorsi told reporters.

He said investigators were looking for the tail rotor to help them recreate the problem. Investigators say the loss of one of the two rotors could have caused the other to fall off.

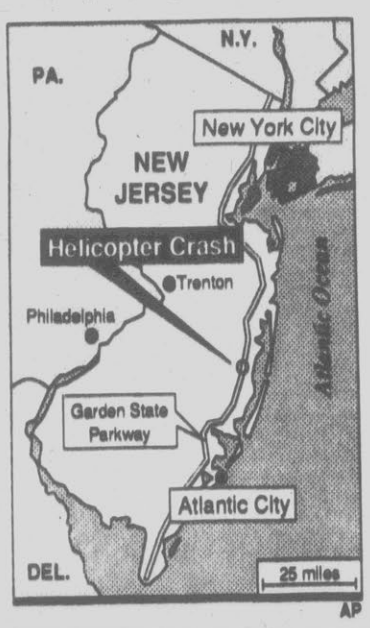
The New York Daily News, quoting an unidentified source, said financier Donald Trump had been scheduled to take the one-hour flight to Atlantic City, but had canceled at the last moment because he got too busy.

The others killed were pilot Robert Kent of Ronkonkoma, N.Y., and co-pilot Lawrence Diener of Westbury, N.Y., state police said.

The helicopter, a 1982 Agusta 109A, was leased from Paramount Aviation of Lincoln Park, and had taken off from Manhattan for Atlantic City, officials said. Officials at Paramount Aviation said they could not answer questions about the crash.



Jane Pauley May Leave 'Today'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — NBC "Today" show co-anchor Jane Pauley says she probably will leave the program by the end of the year but will stay with the network "in some fashion or other," The Washington Post reported today.

"I am definitely staying at NBC," Ms. Pauley told the newspaper in a telephone interview from New York.

NBC spokeswoman Peggy Hubble said an announcement concerning Ms. Pauley would be made in two or three weeks.

Ms. Pauley has co-anchored "Today" for 13 years, but her future with the program has been the subject of speculation in the weeks since Deborah Norville took over as newscaster on the program.

Ms. Pauley told the newspaper there has not been hostility among members of the "Today" show cast, although she did say the place has been more tense since Ms. Norville swapped duties with John Palmer, who has been sent to "NBC News at Sunrise."

Ms. Pauley told her interviewer that if she does leave "Today," she would "still like to come back to the show now and then in the future, the way Barbara Walters does at 'Good Morning America.'

Bush Will Attend Drug Summit In Latin America

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ICA, Peru — President Bush has accepted an invitation to attend a drug summit with the leaders of the world's three largest coca-producing countries, who pledged all-out war on traffickers during talks in this desert city.

The presidents of Bolivia, Colombia and Peru, in a five-hour meeting Tuesday, invited Bush and European leaders to take part in the summit, to be held within the next 90 days in Latin America.

In Washington, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said: "The president will go." He said 90 days was "within the time frame we have been considering. It's reasonable."

Fitzwater said the United States had no objection to participation by Europeans and security concerns would not stand in the way of a summit. Of a planning meeting Nov. 20, he said: "I'm sure that's fine with us."

At their meeting, Presidents Jaime Paz Zamora of Bolivia, Virgilio Barco of Colombia and Alan Garcia of Peru also questioned U.S. reliance on military and police actions to stem the cocaine trade.

In a brief communique at the end of their session to develop a common strategy to fight drugs, the presidents said both the production and consumption of cocaine must be addressed at the summit.

They also pledged to continue "all-out war" on trafficking.

In the statement, the presidents said a successful anti-narcotics campaign must, in addition to seeking punitive measures against drug traffickers, also deal with production and consumption of drugs.

They did not elaborate in their statement. However, Peru, Colombia and Bolivia have said military-style repression of the drug trade should be accompanied by more U.S. economic aid to provide alternative crops or sources of income for the hundreds of thousands of peasants who grow coca.

In August, Barco began a crackdown on Colombian cocaine barons, who oversee the smuggling of most of the cocaine that reaches the United States. He has received $65 million worth of U.S. military aid to help in the effort.

Garcia has urged European leaders to join the war against cocaine. He has warned that if the United States is successful in slowing the influx of cocaine, traffickers will shift their focus to Europe.

Colombia, Peru and Bolivia are the world's three major coca-producing countries. Coca is a raw material used to make cocaine.

About 300 soldiers guarded Ica's elegant Las Dunas hotel, where the meeting took place and about 3,000 plainclothes policemen circulated in this city of 350,000 people 180 miles southeast of Lima.

The heavy security was to defend against any attacks by the leftist Shining Path guerrilla group, which works in alliance with cocaine traffickers in Peru's Upper Huallaga river valley, source of most of the world's coca leaf.

Tuesday's one-day drug meeting was to precede a larger meeting today of seven Latin American presidents, who were expected to expel Panama from a regional organization called the Group of Eight.

A bomb exploded before dawn Tuesday in Trujillo, the northern Peruvian city where five regional foreign ministers were meeting to prepare the agenda for the three-day regional summit.

It exploded at the offices of a public housing agency, damaging the building but causing no injuries. Police said no group claimed responsibility.

In Lima, leftist guerrillas killed a governing party candidate for a municipal council Tuesday night and rebels set off a car bomb that wounded one person, police said. There was no claim of responsibility.

At today's summit, the leaders of Mexico, Venezuela, Uruguay, Brazil and Argentina will join Garcia and Barco in Ica to discuss Central America's conflicts, drug trafficking, foreign debt and environmental damage to the Amazon jungle.

They were to debate Panama's membership in the Group of Eight, which has already suspended Panama from participation to protest the leadership of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

"We cannot permit a country like Panama that scoffs at and ridicules the democratic system to continue with us," Foreign Minister Guillermo Larco Cox of Peru said Tuesday in Trujillo.

Phone Giants Go To Court

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — MCI Communications Corp. is asking a federal court to force American Telephone & Telegraph's "deceptive" ads off the air, even though MCI claims it is taking 100,000 customers a week away from its rival.

MCI Chairman William McGowan said Tuesday that MCI filed suit because AT&T is using false and deceptive ads comparing the two long-distance phone services in a "desperate" attempt to stem the loss of customers.

"They are panicking about it," McGowan said.

AT&T's market share has fallen to 75 percent since MCI broke the old Bell System's monopoly on U.S. phone service in the 1970s. MCI's share now is more than 10 percent.

McGowan said MCI research showed AT&T is losing even more than 100,000 customers a week, but MCI's marketing department, which has been trumpeting that number in its own ads, "likes round numbers."

But, he said, MCI is suffering substantial financial losses even as it takes away AT&T customers.

The MCI lawsuit in U.S. District Court, the latest in a long string of dustups between the nation's two leading long-distance companies, charges AT&T made false comparisons between its service and MCI's Primetime, cut-rate long-distance calling plan.

Florida Lawmakers Turn Back Anti-Abortion Bills

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Four bills to restrict abortion were soundly defeated by a state Senate committee during the nation's first special legislative session on the issue since the U.S. Supreme Court's Webster ruling.

"The battle isn't over," Jon Peck, a spokesman for Gov. Bob Martinez, said after the governor's proposals were voted down Tuesday, the first day of the session.

About 1,000 abortion-rights activists, however, celebrated outside the Capitol.

"The real news story is that nothing is going to happen here," Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League, told the cheering crowd. "Martinez is suffering a very embarrassing defeat."

Florida lawmakers convened in the afternoon amid tight security after more than 10,000 pro-choice and anti-abortion demonstrators held rallies.

As police guarded the doors to the Democratic-controlled Senate and House chambers, activists marched around the Capitol.

The abortion-rights side sang "America the Beautiful" and hired an airplane to trail a banner saying "Keep Abortion Legal."

Anti-abortion activists wore T-shirts with the words: "Spoken As a Former Fetus ... I'm Glad I'm Here."

Police made two arrests. A 14-year-old was charged with a misdemeanor for wearing a derogatory message on his jacket that referred to the governor, and 49-year-old Carl Carlander, an abortion-rights supporter, was jailed on a charge of aggravated battery after he allegedly struck a man in the face with a video camera.

The Senate Health Care Committee today was expected to defeat four bills it had to consider, including three measures to expand abortion clinic regulations, according to panel chairwoman Sen. Jeanne Malchon, a Democrat and an abortion-rights supporter.

The fourth measure would put a proposed constitutional amendment dealing with abortion before voters next fall. The amendment would allow counties to raise property taxes to pay for the care of poor, pregnant women and their babies, and would restrict abortions to cases involving rape, incest, the health of the mother and deformed fetuses.

Martinez identified tougher clinic regulations as one of his objectives when he first called the 3½-day special session, a few weeks after the U.S. Supreme Court Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services ruling in July. The ruling upheld a Missouri law giving states more authority to regulate abortions.

The first-term Republican governor's proposals that were defeated by the Senate Health and Rehabilitative Services Committee included a ban on use of public financing and public hospitals for abortions and a requirement for viability tests on the fetuses of women who are at least 20 weeks pregnant.

Those bills were defeated 9-3 as was a proposal that would have required women to wait a week and undergo counseling before having an abortion.

The committee said a bill to establish a state adoption center to promote adoption as an alternative to abortion was a good idea, but defeated the measure 8-4. Lawmakers said it should be taken up again when the legislature considers child abuse reform next month.

The committee action Tuesday "was a blow to the unborn," said Ken Conner, president of the Florida Right to Life. Expanded clinic regulations have the best chance of becoming law, he said.

The House wasn't expected to take a vote on abortion legislation until Thursday.

Elsewhere Tuesday, a legislative committee in Springfield, Ill., heard pro-choice advocates decry proposed curbs on late-term abortions, but the panel chairman said the bill likely will go to the Illinois House without major changes.

And in Harrisburg, Pa., a lawmaker introduced a bill to eliminate a Pennsylvania law that requires rape and incest victims to report the crimes before they can get publicly funded abortions.

Norwegian Wins Nobel Prize

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Trygve Haavelmo of Norway won the Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science today for his work in the 1940s showing how economic theories can be tested through mathematical and statistical methods.

Haavelmo's work pioneered the field of econometrics by explaining how random samples can be evaluated to forecast economic events, the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said in announcing the award.

Haavelmo, 77, a professor of economics at Oslo University, was the second Norwegian to win the economics prize. He was a research assistant to Ragnar Frisch, who won the prize in 1969, the first year it was awarded.

The prize is worth about $469,000.

Haavelmo's 1941 doctoral thesis, which he presented at Harvard University, "had a swift and pathbreaking influence on the development of econometrics," the academy said in a summary of his achievements.

His theories "gave rise to extraordinarily rapid methodological development" and established "the foundation of modern econometric methods," the statement said.

Haavelmo went to the United States on a Rockefeller grant in 1939, was a professor at the University of Chicago and worked for the Norwegian Trade Commission.

He returned to Norway in 1947 and has been at Oslo University since 1948.

Haavelmo, the son of a school administrator, is a member of the American Economic Association and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He was born Dec. 13, 1911, in the Norwegian town of Skedsmo.

The academy said Haavelmo's theories overcame the problems economists faced because they were unable to test their ideas in the same ways as scientists who work in laboratories.

Economists also could not weed out the influence of millions of individual decisions that people and companies make that disturb the models theorists devised.

Pulling Together.

Local people pulling together to provide important services and meet local needs—that's what makes public power special in our community.

In our public power community, everyone belongs to the team. The owners and users of electric service are one and the same. Local control means we all have a say in how the utility serves us. That can make a big difference in rates and service.

Because public power systems are community owned and don't operate to make a profit, all the benefits produced at home stay at home.

All this adds up to consumer protection at its best....made possible in communities like ours where everyone pulls together.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined broadly today, continuing the pullback that began in Tuesday's session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 6.85 to 2,778.48 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 340 up, 680 down and 483 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 22.6 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Analysts said traders increasingly yielded to the temptation to cash in their gains after the market's rise to record highs last week and Monday.

The tendency to lighten up was apparently heightened by a dimming of hopes for any moves soon by the Federal Reserve to relax its credit policy.

Interest rates, which had been dropping in recent days on hopes of some stimulus from the Fed, were mixed in today's credit-market activity.

In addition, the Bank of Japan raised its influential discount rate from 3.25 percent to 3.75 percent.

Losers among the blue chips included Philip Morris, down ⅛ at 45⅛; American Telephone & Telegraph, down ⅜ at 42⅝; McDonald's, down ⅛ at 30¼, and International Business Machines, down ¼ at 108.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .48 to 198.52. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .20 at 396.83.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average fell 6.08 points to 2,785.33.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 4 to 3 on the NYSE, with 829 down, 641 up and 490 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 147.56 million shares, up from 130.72 million in Monday's session, which had been the lowest level in more than two months.

Atrium Accident

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An electrician who fell 12 stories through a glass atrium and into a basement cafeteria died in a hospital Tuesday.

Troy Livingston, 24, had just finished changing the neon on a sign atop Medical Center Tower I and was gathering equipment when the accident occurred early Monday afternoon.

Livingston already had removed a safety harness and was walking backward, gathering rope, when he stepped off the roof and plummeted through the glass ceiling of a four-story atrium.

Kilough estimated Livingston's fall to the second floor at 100 feet, and said he fell another 40 feet to the basement cafeteria. He was taken to St. Luke's Hospital next door, where he died about 3:40 p.m.

P&G Executives

John G. Smale, left, chairman and chief executive of the Procter & Gamble Co., announced Tuesday he is stepping down as of Jan. 2. He will be replaced by Edwin L. Artzt, right, who is now in charge of P&G's international operations.

Hearing Is Calm

it's going to effect the whole state," he said.

Lewis said he was more worried about the impact of Mobil's efforts on land than in the federal waters off North Carolina's Outer Banks.

"I don't want to see them go down there and put in a lot of industrialization that the area can't support," Lewis said.

James C. Martin, Mobil's project manager, assured the crowd Mobil would not build a refinery in North Carolina or any gas processing facilities on the Outer Banks. He also said that if a commercially valuable reserve of natural gas was found an underground pipeline would likely carry the gas to Morehead City for processing.

Martin also said refining or processing usually does not begin for at least 12 to 15 years after an exploratory well strikes gas.

Lewis said he worried about the damage from an oil or gas spill, but believed Mobil was equally concerned if only to protect its reputation.

Under its proposed draft plan, Mobil would station a containment vessel at the sight with a cleanup capacity of 1,000-barrels per 12 hours. A second ship with a similar capacity would be stationed within 20 hours of the sight.

The North Carolina chapter of the Sierra Club also sparred with the Mobil representatives Tuesday, restating its opposition to any drilling off the coast.

Earlier in the day the Sierra Club and two other environmental groups called for a mandatory study of ocean currents around the proposed drilling site. The studies could delay Mobil's drilling plans or give the state better reason to challenge the company's right to drill of the coast.

The Sierra Club also released a statement calling the hearings "a crock and a sham." The proposed timetable and the scheduled public hearings do not allow for an adequate scientific review or fair public comment, said Tom Perlic, coastal conservation chairman of the Sierra Club.

Instead of fighting Mobil at the public hearings, Perlic said, the environmental group will focus its efforts on the state level.

Following the release of a draft environmental review the first of November, the public will have until Dec. 15 to make comments to the state. A final decision on Mobil's exploratory drilling is scheduled for May 15.

Donna Moffitt, director of the Outer Continental Shelf office, insisted that the final approval for Mobil's plans depends on the outcome of the public hearings and the review process. And Martin said Mobil was working to provide the best information to the state for the best possible drilling operation.

"How trustworthy they are," said Lewis, "is yet to be seen."

GOP Ticket

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — With a luncheon featuring Vice President Dan Quayle bringing about $125,000 to the GOP on Tuesday, no one seemed to mind when he forgot the name of one of the party's three statewide candidates.

About 450 people attended the $125-a-person lunch honoring Republican candidate for governor J. Marshall Coleman, lieutenant governor nominee Eddy Dalton and attorney general candidate Joseph Benedetti. A couple of dozen people paid $3,000 each to attend a private reception with Quayle.

Benedetti laughed off Quayle's slipup with his name.

"I look so much like the president that I think he just got carried away momentarily," Benedetti, who does not resemble George Bush, told reporters.

Tony LaRussa Ready For Umpires

If They Check Dennis Eckersley For Scuffing The Ball In Series

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Tony La Russa doesn't expect San Francisco will ask the umpires to check Dennis Eckersley in the World Series for scuffing the ball. But the Oakland A's manager is ready if they do.

"I never use gamesmanship first," La Russa said. "I pull it when the other club starts messing around. I'm not one of those people who turn the other cheek."

La Russa was still fuming on Tuesday over actions by the Toronto Blue Jays in the American League playoffs.

Blue Jays manager Cito Gaston claimed Eckersley was using a foreign substance in Sunday's Game 5. Nothing was found by the umpires, and the A's accused Gaston of trying to unnerve the reliever in the bottom of the ninth with Oakland three outs away from the pennant.

"I was fuming," Eckersley said. "But it was a good thing, because I got them out. I may have provoked them by putting my hand in my pants. I won't do that again."

The Blue Jays also accused Rickey Henderson and Dave Parker of being hot dogs and the bad blood continued after the end of the series.

"Roger Craig is a man of stature who wouldn't pull something like that," La Russa said of the Giants manager.

The A's worked out at the Oakland Coliseum on Tuesday in preparation for the World Series opener Saturday night against the Giants. San Francisco took the day off after winning the National League pennant with a 3-2 victory over the Chicago Cubs on Monday.

"If you want to play that style of game, then we will play it," the A's manager said. "I'll have coaches check bats, all of that weak stuff.

"Name one instant I checked a pitcher or a bat first," La Russa said firmly. "I think it's real poor. I think the fact that they are continuing their bad-mouthing is taking a lot away from the Toronto Blue Jays. I can't believe they're doing this."

Rosen Says Giants' Pitching Ready

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Pitching is supposed to be the Achilles heel of the San Francisco Giants in their World Series matchup with the Oakland Athletics. Al Rosen sees it more as a shot in the arm.

"So many people talk about our pitching, and while it's true that we've had things happen to our staff, we still think it's a pretty good staff. And it's proved itself," the general manager said Tuesday as the Giants basked in the day-after glow of their first National League pennant since 1962.

Rosen was busy warding off ticket-seeking strangers as he talked optimistically of his ballclub's chances of winning its first World Series title since the franchise was moved here from New York 32 years ago. The players and Manager Roger Craig steered clear of Candlestick Park — blustery once again after three days of calm for the playoff games against the Chicago Cubs — on their day off but were scheduled to work out there this afternoon.

"I look for an awfully good matchup," Rosen said. "The series is going to be pitching."

The first pitching matchup will take place at the Oakland Coliseum between the Athletics' Dave Stewart and the Giants' Scott Garrelts, chosen by Craig over Rick Reuschel. Garrelts' immediate predecessor: Jack Sanford, who started and lost in San Francisco's most recent World Series appearance in the seventh game in 1962. The New York Yankees won that game 1-0 to capture the title.

Garrelts, who got the official nod shortly after Monday's pennant-winning 3-2 victory over Chicago, had a 5.40 earned-run average in the five-game series to Reuschel's 5.19 and was 1-0 in two starts.

"I won't think about it for as long as I can," said Garrelts, 14-5 during the season. "I never thought about being the starter in a first game of the series."

When he does, pitching coach Norm Sherry will have some advice for him.

"He needs to get his breaking ball over more consistently than he did the last two games," Sherry said outside the Giants' nearly deserted clubhouse Tuesday. "And he can't have the shaky first two innings he's been having lately."

Reuschel (17-8) is the likely Game 2 starter on Sunday, probably facing the A's Mike Moore. But the rotation has not been disclosed.

Steele Accentuates Positive As Time For Practice Nears

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The old song advises to "accentuate the positive, eliminate the negative," and Mike Steele is trying to do just that as he approaches the 1989-90 basketball season.

Steele and his Pirates will officially take the floor Sunday at 6 p.m. in Minges Coliseum to begin practice for the upcoming season, and while the third-year coach is upbeat about the positives, he would like to eliminate at least one of the negatives before then.

Mike Steele

Steele announced Tuesday at Basketball Media Day that he had suspended senior Gus Hill for a month after Hill reportedly was missing classes. That suspension would not allow him to run or lift weights with the team, nor play in pick-up games with them.

"I'll find out Thursday if Gus has been going to class. If he's missed any, he won't be with us this semester," Steele said.

A negative, surely, but one he hopes to overcome quickly.

"We have a lot of positives," Steele said, enumerating attendance, recruiting, conditioning and academics.

"Our attendance was third in the conference last year. We moved ahead of some schools who had been beating us for some time. I was talking with (former ECU coach and now Wake Forest coach) Dave Odom the other day and telling him of some of the things we've done since he left.

"He was shocked by the figures, so it's easy to realize how the program is growing," Steele said.

The new Sports Medicine/Physical Education building, in which the basketball offices are now located, will be another help to the program.

Recruiting has improved, too, Steele says.

"The success we had last year and the success Blue Edwards has had are opening doors we haven't been able to open before," Steele said. "We're getting into homes now that we couldn't get into before. That doesn't mean that we'll get them, but we're further along than we were."

Steele believes that his team is in the best physical condition it's ever been in, and, for the most part, the best academic shape it's been in.

"But I have no idea how they're doing on the floor because I haven't seen them yet," he said.

As to the negatives, Steele can't do much about some of them. Of course, the biggest loss is Edwards, the Colonial Athletic Association's Player of the Year last season. Edwards is now a member of the Utah Jazz of the National Basketball Association.

The Pirates also lost Jeff Kelly and Kenny Murphy off last year's squad.

"That's a lot of experience and minutes," Steele said. "We have a lot of good kids, but they're raw. I believe we'll be able to play at a faster tempo and go with more people, but I won't really know for a month or so."

Steele will look to the two seniors, Reed Lose and Hill for leadership — assuming Hill is there.

"By the end of last year, we were as good as anyone in the league and that was due to senior leadership and the play of Blue Edwards," Steele said. "I hope it will be as good this year."

Another negative, Steele said, is that everyone in the conference will be better.

"Richmond has just about everyone back and James Madison had a great recruiting year and al-

Lady Pirates See Optimistic Year

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Despite having lost three starters and four seniors, East Carolina women's basketball coach Pat Pierson is optimistic about the upcoming year.

"Hopefully we can contend for the Colonial Athletic Association championship," she said Tuesday as ECU held its annual Basketball Media Day.

The team will still largely be a young one, with only one senior, point guard Irish Hamilton, on the roster.

There are two freshmen and two junior college transfers joining the team, along with a five sophomores and five juniors.

Pat Pierson

"We've got a lot of learning to do," Pierson said. "We're going to work a tremendous amount of time on defense. I feel that this team has the opportunity to play great defense. We'll be faster up and down the floor, but not as big overall.

"We want to play an up-tempo game and we want to use a lot of full-court pressure. We have lots of guards and we plan to use them and apply as much pressure as we can."

One of the bright spots is the return of last year's leading scorer, Sarah Gray, who averaged 14.4 points a game and pulled 9.0 rebounds an outing.

"We expect great things out of her," Pierson said. "We're going to ask her to play more defense, and offensively we hope to move her outside more. She's a good perimeter shooter."

"She's run the floor for the past two years and we expect a lot from her, especially in leadership," Pierson said. "Her shooting has improved drastically since I've been here, too."

The two junior college transfers, Keeneya Wilson and Michelle Marsh, should contribute early. Wilson, who was named to the all-tournament team at the National Junior College Tournament last year, is rated as an excellent outside shooter.

Marsh, who played with Wilson at Roane State Community College last

Conley, N. Pitt Win In 1st Round

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — There is always a tendency to play to the level of the competition, and perhaps, that's why Coastal Conference regular-season champion D.H. Conley never found its rhythm against a scrappy but overmatched South Johnston team Tuesday afternoon in the opening round of the Class 3-A state playoffs.

Still, the Valkyries had too much power, too much consistency — and too much of everything, really — to cruise to a 15-3, 15-5, 15-0 victory.

Conley advances to a second-round road test against Harnett Central Thursday at 6 p.m. Harnett Central eliminated Washington Tuesday 15-2, 15-5, 15-1.

"The score was not indicative at all, no way," Conley coach Martha McCaskill said. "Our offense was not clicking but that's going to happen sometimes and that's what I told the kids.

"You're not going to go out and just play great every match. They were getting frustrated. It was probably the most unforced errors we've had."

South Johnston's downfall was its inability to handle Conley's booming serves. The Lady Trojans also lacked the resources to mount an attack at the net but kept several points alive with defense and sheer hustle.

"They had a problem on serve-receive and we were able to get two or three people on rolls. I guess we just had too many weapons for this particular team although I felt like they covered the court and played defense as well as any team we have played."

After bagging a win in the first set, Conley stumbled out of the gates in the second set and saw a 4-1 lead vanish as the Lady Trojans reeled off four straight points to take a 5-4 lead. The Valkyries regained the lead, then at 7-4, the big blow that swayed the momentum came on a vicious spike down the middle by senior Tracey Sumrell.

From there, Sumrell had a string of seven consecutive service points to extend the lead to 14-5. An ace by Virginia Hall, who was credited with two blocks and eight effective hits, closed out the set.

Conley dominated the final set with Sumrell picking up six service points and Nikki Adams and Hall three each and Lori Waters one. Adams had a team-high 18 assists.

McCaskill said that although Sumrell was not at the top of her game, her spike was an emotional lift.

Chargers, Panthers Battle, But It's Not Quite The Same

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Over the last few years, North Pitt and Ayden-Grifton have engaged in some serious grudge matches over who will rule the Eastern Plains Conference.

The two meet again Friday, and while the stakes aren't quite as high as they were the last three years, fevers still figure to be running high come game time.

Undefeated Farmville Central, which takes on East Carteret at home Friday, is the new beast of the EPC. But this matchup between old rivals still figures to have bearing on the conference race.

North Pitt, 3-3 and 1-0 in the EPC, has won three in a row, including a 40-0 win over Pamlico in the conference opener.

The Chargers, 1-5 and 0-1, would love nothing better than to regroup at the expense of their cross-county rivals.

"It scares me to death," North Pitt coach Stuart Ennis said. "It doesn't make any difference who has the better team. It seems like the North Pitt-Ayden-Grifton game is always a dogfight.

"They have been down and I'm sure they're going to come here and play their hearts out. I just hope we'll do the same. I think we will."

North Pitt, behind the running of halfback Reggie Daniel and fullback Malcolm Wiggins, has its option game rolling, and that's a concern for Charger coach B.T. Chappell.

Daniel has rushed for a team-high 595 yards and nine touchdowns. Wiggins has 458 yards rushing and three touchdowns.

"We've had a lot of difficulty with the option the last two years each time we match up with North Pitt," he said. "When we played Farmville we did not do a good job with the option game of Morris Foreman.

"If I could have anything critical to say about our defense, we did not stop that option play. It is a matter of concern."

Chappell expects to try a number of new players at linebacker and defensive end this week in practice to try and find an answer.

"When you are doing like we're doing, it doesn't hurt to try something different," he said.

Ennis, though, said the Chargers have done a good job in the past of defending the North Pitt option game.

"I feel like they've done a good job," he said. "The last two years we've only scored twice."

Last year, Ayden-Grifton took a 14-12 win over the Panthers en route to the regular season title and the league's top playoff spot.

The previous two years, the teams shared the EPC crown.

In 1987, the teams met in the East-

Morale Remains High In Chapel Hill

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — In seven of North Carolina's last 10 games, the final drive has determined the outcome — and in six of those games, the Tar Heels were the losers. But North Carolina coach Mack Brown says team morale remains high.

"The attitude of our team, the chemistry of our team is good right now for the amount of struggles that they've been through," Brown said Tuesday at his weekly news conference. "They see there's very little difference between winning and losing."

Wake Forest (1-3-1, 1-1) defeated North Carolina (1-4, 0-2) 17-16 on Saturday when the Tar Heels failed on a two-point conversion attempt with 1:35 remaining. Brown said North Carolina must scale a mental barrier before it begins to win close games.

"I don't think there's any question that's true," he said. "It's the hardest thing to do because there's no guarantee in practice of them getting over that hump."

North Carolina faces an even bigger test this week when it travels to Charlottesville to play Virginia (4-2 and 2-1) at 1 p.m.

To defeat the Cavaliers, Brown said North Carolina must first stop three tailbacks — Marcus Wilson, Nikki Fisher and Terry Kirby.

"You take their running backs, ... they're as good as anybody's got," Brown said. "They're very good. Their tailbacks are a key because they're going to run the football and make you stop the run before they pass."

Because Virginia can do so many things offensively, Brown said this will be the toughest week of defensive preparation his team has had this year.

"They can run the option enough to bother you," he said. "So they make you defend the option, which is a lot tougher than just defending the pass or just defending the run."

Giant Pitching Ready For Series...

If the Giants go with a three-man rotation, as they did against the Cubs, Kelly Downs (3.12 ERA in two playoff relief outings) and the banged-up Don Robinson and Mike LaCoss all are possibilities. Sherry, who wasn't even aware Craig had pronounced Garrelts the Game 1 starter, said Robinson's sore right knee and LaCoss' sprained left knee both are improving.

"Robinson said he's going to feel pain when he pitches but he'll be ready," Sherry said. "LaCoss is all right."

Sherry and his pitching staff will have their hands full trying to devise ways to contain the A's.

"Right off the bat, you don't want that Rickey Henderson on base," Sherry said. "And if you keep him off base you've got the kids with power to contend with, (Jose) Canseco and the first baseman — what's his name, (Mark) McGwire."

The Giants did suffer another pitching setback Tuesday, although it won't affect the World Series. It was learned that hard-luck Dave Dravecky refractured his left arm in the celebration after Monday's game when a teammate bumped into him from behind. Dravecky, who broke the same humerus bone on Aug. 15 in a game in Montreal after coming back from cancer, is expected to face a six-week delay in starting his rehabilitation program.

"It saddens me no end to know his convalescing period has been set back," Rosen said.

Ballpark employees finished cleaning up the debris left from the pennant celebration while the front office bustled with activity Tuesday. A stack of telegrams was delivered for owner Bob Lurie, Craig, Reuschel and Rosen. Telephone operators greeted callers with the words "National League champions" and had to tell thousands of people they were out of luck — the official ticket agency quickly sold out the remaining 3,000 tickets by telephone.

Team workouts, closed to the public, will be held this afternoon and Thursday at Candlestick and Friday morning at the Oakland Coliseum.

ern 2-A Semifinals with Ayden-Grifton advancing to the state semifinals before falling to Whiteville.

Ayden-Grifton, though, is one of only two opponents Ennis will be battling this year, though.

"It's also our Homecoming and I fear homecoming most of all, being afraid that the activities during the week take the kids' minds off the football game," Ennis said.

The win over Pamlico was one of the Panthers' best performances of the year, on both sides of the line of scrimmage.

"It really was," Ennis said. "We played very good. The defense kept Pamlico out of our territory. They crossed the 30 once and our offense was able to move the football."

The Chargers are extremely young on both sides of the line of scrimmage and that has been a telling downfall over the last month, but Chappell said he saw some improvement against Farmville, despite the 44-0 score.

"We've been getting beat pretty bad in the line of scrimmage the last two weeks," he said. "One point of emphasis was, fundamentally, we wanted to come off the ball and stay low.

"On defense, we wanted to play our techniques right. Farmville had to play hard for what they got the first three quarters. We did feel like we made some progress with our lines."

One change was moving 5-9, 155-pound Ricardo Gamble to defensive guard where he was as effective as anybody who has played there this season.

Farmville-East Carteret

Farmville cruised over Ayden-Grifton last Friday, 44-0, as Anthony Foreman, converted to tailback from fullback, ran for 168 yards.

"We played well offensively and our offensive line had an excellent football game," Jaguar coach Dixon Sauls said. "Anthony Foreman gave us a boost in his first game at tailback. (Offensive lineman) Kevin Wade and Tony Gorham had very good ball games.

"You have to be pleased that we held together with our tailback (Rasel Daniels) out. We just wore them down."

The Mariners, who were expected to be one of the tougher teams during their first season in the EPC, dropped a 36-3 decision to Greene Central last week.

"I understand some turnovers occurred early that gave Greene Central the momentum," Sauls said. "I don't think the score was indicative of the two teams' abilities."

The Mariners utilize an I-formation offense keyed by tailback Tracey Johnson.

"They are a balanced offense similar to us," Sauls said. "They have struggled lately and got behind in some ball games and that has got them out of the game plan."

Daniels, who missed last week due to a disciplinary suspension, will return to the lineup. Tight end Scott Crisp is still out with an injury.

Lady Pirates Opening Practice...

year, is "fundamentally sound, and posts up well." At 6-0, she will add strength inside.

Kathy Addison, who missed much of last year with a stress fracture, will also add inside strength.

Also inside, much will be expected of Sandra Grace, the tallest Lady Pirate at 6-2.

"She helped at times and at other times, she'd come in and get three quick fouls and sit," Pierson said. "But she has come a million miles since I got here and should battle for a starting spot this year."

Another player who will help inside and could earn a starting spot is 6-1 Kim Dupree, a Rose High product.

"She's worked extra hard in conditioning," Pierson said. "She's a good athlete, really good around the basket, and a good rebounder. But she knew that we needed her in better condition and she's greatly improved."

While her height, 5-9, really makes it hard for her to battle inside, Tonya Hargrove is also in the picture at a post position.

"She's the strongest female athlete at East Carolina," Pierson said. "She's got a very quick first step and was on the all-rookie CAA team last year. That gave her a lot of incentive. She can score, rebound and run the floor."

At the guards, sophomores Laura Crowder and Mechelle Jones, both of whom got some playing time last year, return to help. Toina Coley also brings in more depth.

"She (Coley) has great hands, is very quick and plays good defense," Pierson said.

The two freshmen, Toni Thurman and Gaynor O'Donnell, will get some playing time, Pierson said.

"Thurman must make the transition from playing at a small school," Pierson said. "O'Donnell is an outstanding passer who plays good defense and can shoot the three."

The Lady Pirates, who practice for the first time Sunday at 8 p.m., will meet an alumni team on Nov. 18, and open the regular season on Nov. 24 at Georgia Southern.

Their first Minges Coliseum appearance will be Dec. 1 in the first round of the Lady Pirate Classic, which also features Coastal Carolina, Howard and Fairleigh Dickinson.

East Carolina Men's Basketball...

ready had people sitting," Steele said. "Wilmington had a good recruiting year despite losing some people. The others will be better, too."

Out of conference, ECU's schedule includes one tough road swing in December. The Pirates will travel to Hawaii for the Chamindae Christmas Classic Dec. 22-24 with a first-round matchup with East Tennessee State, an NCAA tournament team last year.

Also in the Pirates' bracket are George Mason, one of the top CAA teams, and Maryland.

That will be followed by road games at New Mexico and the fabled Pit arena, as well as a game at Texas Christian.

Lose, who has been playing pick-up games with all of the team members, said that while the veterans have improved, the newcomers are all very talented.

"But, I don't really know how they'll react until Oct. 15," Lose said. "None of them have known Coach Steele as a coach. I don't know what they'll be asked of by him.

"But we're all improved over last year. In our conditioning, we ran two miles, and after six weeks of conditioning, we ran again and everybody had better times."

And even the veterans are getting in on the coaching as of now.

"When we're playing with (the newcomers) we give them a little sense of what we're going to do," Lose said. "If they do things that Coach Steele doesn't do, then we let them know that they're not to do them."

The Pirates will face the Yugoslavian Red Star team in an exhibition on Nov. 14, then will open the season on Nov. 25 against Appalachian State in Minges Coliseum.

With the exception of the UNC-Wilmington game on Jan. 27, which will be carried over Home Team Sports, all home games will begin at 7 p.m. This is a new time from in the past to hopefully increase publicity for the Pirate team.

NFL Owners Still Split On Choice

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRAPEVINE, Texas — Unless Pete Rozelle can utilize his persuasive powers one more time to unify the warring factions in the NFL, his longed-for retirement will have to be put off. Again.

Those factions — Old Guard, New Guard, in-group, out-group, or whatever they're called — met for nearly nine hours Tuesday and ended farther away from electing Rozelle's successor than they were July 6. That's when Jim Finks, the president of the New Orleans Saints, came up with 16 votes, three short of the 19 necessary for election.

Rozelle, the only one who spoke about what transpired Tuesday, would not say how the four ballots came out except to say "it was less close than July 6." Rozelle said there were slight differences on each of the four, but indications were that Finks never got more than 15 votes.

In any case, it appeared to be a two-man race between the 62-year-old Finks and 48-year-old Paul Tagliabue, the league's top antitrust lawyer and a partner in the Washington law firm of Covington & Burling.

"There's so much support for both of them that I think it will be one of the two," Rozelle said.

When is another question.

Rozelle tried after the meetings adjourned at about 10:15 local time to work out a compromise, as he so often has during his 29 years as commissioner. In fact, one of the measures of his success has been an ability to extract compromise from seeming deadlock.

Deadlock is what there was Tuesday.

The owners spent the first four hours interviewing four finalists — Finks, Tagliabue, former Green Bay Packers star Willie Davis and J. Patrick Barrett, the New York Republican chairman and former chairman of Avis.

Tagliabue seemed the loosest afterwards.

"I spent about 45 minutes telling them about my basketball career," said Tagliabue, who is one of the leading rebounders in Georgetown history. "I wanted to show them that I knew something about what went on in the locker room."

After the interviews, the owners voted — twice before dinner and twice after — with no resolution.

Rozelle, who announced his resignation March 22 and hoped to be out of office by Sept. 1, is anxious to end the process of selecting a successor.

As he approached the podium in the room at the airport hotel where the meeting is being held, he joked: "If this goes on, I'll have to celebrate a divorce," a reference to his wife, Carrie, who already has moved to their retirement home in San Diego.

Asked if he was frustrated, Rozelle said: "Not yet. I may be next week."

Later, a tone of resignation in his voice, he noted: "It was disappointing, but not surprising."

Ever since the July 6 meeting, when Finks was expected to be annointed, the deadlock has continued.

Finks' election was blocked then via 11 voting abstentions by a group of owners led by Minnesota's Mike Lynn, Philadelphia's Norman Braman, San Francisco's Edward DeBartolo Jr., and Tampa's Hugh Culverhouse Jr. They objected both to the makeup of the original selection committee — all of whose members had been in the league at least 20 years — and the fact that they recommended only Finks.

So a new committee was formed, made up of two original members and two of the dissidents — Lynn and Seattle's Kenneth Behring. It reported back with four finalists, of whom only Barrett had not been in the final six during the first round.

But that didn't seem to work either, with indications that the longer the balloting continues, the more Finks' chances diminish.

Tagliabue seems to have the support of many of the dissidents, even though his work for the league and the league office stamp him as "establishment."

Caskill said. "It's just like anything else. Everybody wants to get the slam dunk or score the touchdown and that's the equivalent in volleyball."

North Pitt-South Lenoir

BETHEL — North Pitt High School's girls' volleyball team advanced to the second round of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association Class 2-A state playoffs Tuesday with a sweep of a best-of-five match against South Lenoir.

The Pant-HERS, the regular-season champion of the Eastern Plains Conference, dropped the Lady Blue Devils, 15-9, 15-4, 15-9. South Lenoir, in its first year competing in the East Central Conference, was an EPC member a year ago.

Tracy Nichols led North Pitt's service in the first game with 10 points while Keisha Highsmith had eight points in the second. Sharon Ross paced the way in the third game with six service points.

North Pitt will now host the North Carolina School of Science and Math in a second round match on Thursday. The time for the match will be announced at a later time.

Farmville-S. Granville

South Granville won the opening game of the best-of-five match, 15-7, then added a 15-6 win in the second game. Farmville Central then rallied for a 15-11 win in the third game.

But South Granville won the fourth game, 15-5, to wrap up the match and advance to round two.

Athletics Prepare For World Series...

"A lot of people have told me I'm a hot dog and controversial, but they've got the worst attitude I've seen in baseball," Bell said.

"George Bell? This is the consummate team player, right?" La Russa said sarcastically.

Stottlemyre was angry at things said by Eckersley and third baseman Tony Phillips to Gaston on Sunday.

"Eckersley is a pitcher, so I can't do anything to him," Stottlemyre said. "But I'll never forget Tony Phillips screaming at Cito after the game. Next year is going to come too soon for him. To win like that is one thing. To shove it in our face is another."

La Russa was incensed that the Blue Jays have kept the controversy going, even as the A's started to prepare for the World Series.

"They're making a big mistake," La Russa said. "I don't buy gamesmanship ever. But I'll guarantee if anybody does it, we will too."

In the past, Craig has accused Houston's Mike Scott of scuffing the baseball, and has asked the umpires to check the pitcher.

Texas manager Bobby Valentine, who worked the AL playoffs as an on-field reporter for NBC, had Eckersley checked two years ago for cutting the ball.

There was speculation by the A's that Valentine instigated the action on Sunday by informing Gaston of his suspicions.

"He told me he didn't and I believe him," Eckersley said. "There's no doubt in my mind that Bobby Valentine had nothing to do with what happened."

Eckersley said he received a telegram from Valentine saying he didn't appreciate being implicated.

La Russa said the joy of winning the American League pennant in the SkyDome on Sunday was tainted a little by the Blue Jays' actions.

"When I got up the next morning, every paper I read had a column about Cito and Eckersley. That's not the way it's suppose to be," La Russa said. "You don't start taking shots and sniping at those who did it because you didn't.

"This is terrible and if it continues they ar going to lose a lot of points with people in baseball. It's ridiculous. They're a lot better than this. They have people who know better than this."

La Russa said he didn't blame Gaston for the situation.

"I don't think Cito is the main instigator here," La Russa said.

On the field Tuesday, third baseman Carney Lansford, who sustained a pulled hamstring in Game 3 of the AL playoffs, did some light exercising and took batting practice.

"I'm feeling better and the extra rest will help," Lansford said. "I think I'll be ready."

La Russa said Dave Stewart (21-9) would start the opener Saturday night against Scott Garrelts (14-5) and Mike Moore (19-11) will start Game 2. The Giants are expected to start Rick Reuschel.

In spring training, the A's won eight of nine games against the Giants.

One of the victories was a 20-7 rout, in which the A's scored six runs against Garrelts without the right-hander getting an out.

"Spring training, as you know, doesn't mean that much," La Russa said. "Didn't the Cubs have the worst record during the spring?"

Parseghian, Switzer Broke Same Rule

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Coaching legends Ara Parseghian and Barry Switzer said they had broken the same NCAA rule that led to the resignation of University of Florida coach Galen Hall, a newspaper reported.

Also, Florida State coach Bobby Bowden said that 90 percent of coaches do not or didn't know the rule — which forbids a head coach from supplementing an assistant coach's salary — exists, the Palm Beach Post reported in today's editions.

"I will tell you right now," said Parseghian, who won national championships in 1966 and '73, "when I was at Notre Dame, I co-shared income that I received ... but that was after the fact.

"It was commerical and television money I had received as a reward for our success. I shared it at Christmas, as bonuses, with my assistant coaches."

Parseghian would not say how much he paid his assistants at Notre Dame in bonuses. He said he did not realize the NCAA had a rule prohibiting a head coach from supplementing assistant coaches' income until he read of Hall's resignation.

Hall admitted giving $4,000 to former defensive coordinator Zaven Yaralian and $18,000 to former offensive coordinator Lynn Amedee, saying he did not know the supplements violated a rule.

"I wasn't even aware that rule existed," Parseghian was quoted as saying from his business office in South Bend, Ind.

Former Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer said he supplemented the salaries of his assistants, graduate assistants and secretaries — leading to the Sooners' current NCAA probation status.

According to Nancy Mitchell, a legislative director with the NCAA, the rule has been in the NCAA's manual "for quite some time."

Specifically, it states: "The institution, as opposed to any outside source, shall remain in control of determining who is to be its employee and the amount of salary the employee is to receive within the restrictions specified by the NCAA legislation."

A head coach, in this instance, is considered "an outside source."

Bowden said he never supplemented his assistants' salaries.

"I never did it at all," he said. "And it wasn't because I wouldn't do it, but I never had the funds to do it.

"I will say that out of 1,000 coaches out there, 90 percent of them do not know this (rule) is on the books."

Switzer said Tuesday from his home in Norman, Okla., that he gave Mack Brown a $30,000 supplement when he hired Brown as offensive coordinator in 1984.

"I hired Mack Brown from Appalachian State and bumped his salary from $60,000 to $90,000. I paid Mack Brown from my pocket. I had him on my radio and TV shows, so he earned it," said Switzer, who coached the Sooners from 1973-88.

"But does that help you beat anybody? It is ridiculous. I gave secretaries and GAs (graduate assistant coaches) $1,000 each at Christmas. They don't get paid enough."

Switzer, who won three national championships at Oklahoma, said he never was aware the supplements were in violation of NCAA rules. But he said after NCAA officials explained the rule to him, he understood why it exists.

"It's simple," he said. "They don't want slush funds."

Bad Luck Continues For Dravecky; Breaks Arm Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Dave Dravecky's bad luck just won't quit.

The San Francisco Giants' hard-luck pitcher, his widely chronicled comeback from cancer already on hold from a broken pitching arm he sustained in August, has sustained yet another major setback with a fracture of the same bone in a freak accident.

An examination at the Palo Alto Clinic on Tuesday disclosed the break, which occurred when a teammate ran into him during the celebration after San Francisco won the National League pennant over Chicago.

"He was bumped from behind and then his arm rotated a little bit," said Helen Lamothe, nurse to team physician Gordon Campbell.

The injury is expected to delay the start of Dravecky's rehabilitation, slated for sometime this winter, by about six weeks. Doctors had hoped he would be ready to pitch again by next spring. Lamothe said it's not certain how much the new break would push that target back.

On Aug. 15 in Montreal, just 10 months after surgery to remove a cancerous tumor in his left arm, Dravecky broke the humerus bone just below the shoulder. This break is higher on the same bone, and will cause Dravecky to have the arm placed in another cast. Surgery won't be necessary.

"The good news is that the part of the bone that broke previously appears to be strong and healthy," Lamothe said.

But that provided little solace to those who cheered on the 33-year-old Dravecky's valiant comeback.

"It saddens me no end to know his convalescing period has been set back," Giants general manager Al Rosen said.

Dravecky, who was not available for comment on Tuesday, had been optimistic about his outlook shortly after the injury occurred.

"It happened before I got (to the mound)," he said after the game. "I'd even put the brace on just as a precaution, so I wouldn't take any chances, and I tried to keep things in front of me so I wouldn't get hurt, and I get bumped from behind.

Differences Are In The Stands

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Unlike some World Series in which artificial turf, a dome or odd field dimensions were big factors, this year neither the Oakland Athletics nor the San Francisco Giants will have an advantage at their ballparks.

The biggest difference will be in the stands. Oakland fans like "the wave," Giants fans scream more, but there will be plenty of fans of each club at the games.

The Oakland Coliseum, one of the best baseball parks in the country, and Candlestick Park, one of the worst, have three things in common — real grass, similar sized fields and good, well-balanced teams.

Cavernous Candlestick Park, home of the Giants on the western shore of the bay, is notorious for its swirling winds, cold, fog and empty seats. In October, though, the 'Stick can be as pleasant and packed as Dodger Stadium.

Cozy Oakland Coliseum, the Athletics' home a few miles away on the east side of the bay, is praised for its genteel accommodation with nature and fans — a recessed field, three tiers of unobstructed seats, big scoreboards and a view of the hills in the distance.

Both favor pitchers, with 400-foot center fields, deep power alleys and, particularly in Oakland, vast tracts of foul territory where pop fouls go to die.

"If I were a pitcher (the Oakland Coliseum) might be my favorite ballpark, but as a hitter there are probably 10 other places I'd rather play," said Oakland outfielder Dave Henderson, who played 15 games with San Francisco late in 1987.

Oakland's field has shorter grass, a slightly larger playing surface and a deeper right field, players say, despite the fact that Candlestick's right field line is listed at 335 feet, five feet more than the Coliseum's.

"You can put anything you want on the walls, but all the players know Candlestick has a shorter right field," Henderson said.

"Candlestick also has a see-through fence so you really don't know where you are on the field all the time," Henderson said. "Your depth perception is kind of off."

Hitters complain about the "dead air" at Oakland at night, but both clubs have sluggers who can hit homers in either place.

Since the arrival of Giants president Al Rosen and Manager Roger Craig four years ago, the Giants have tried to use Candlestick's problems to their advantage psychologically, knowing that other teams hate playing there.

But the Giants can't wait to flee Candlestick and are hoping for passage of a ballot measure in November that would allow construction of a stadium in downtown San Francisco. A new stadium, owner Bob Lurie believes, will overcome the weather problems better than Candlestick.

The worst weather, though, is in the early and middle part of the baseball season. If the Giants played all their home games in September and October, when the weather is most pleasant in the Bay area, the 'Stick would enjoy a much better reputation.

Indeed, for the San Francisco 49ers during the football season, the weather is ideal and the stadium is fine.

Game 4 of the National League playoffs began in 85 degree weather, and Game 5 in 78 degrees, and both games the flags hung limp in center field. The only weather-related problem was the blinding sun over the rim of the park that led to an error by Kevin Mitchell in the final game.

The weather was a little balmier than usual this time of year, but closer to what is expected during the World Series than the frigid nights and wild gusts of midsummer that gave the 'Stick its mean reputation.

Every year the legend grows of the wind that blew pitcher Stu Miller off the mound in the 1961 All-Star Game, although in reality it was a mild gust that caused him to lurch a little in his windup.

"Right now is the best time to play at Candlestick, but the wind is unpredictable," Henderson said. "It could come up any time."

But because it is not right next to the water, its field is recessed 28 feet below ground and the stadium walls block the wind, there is less of a problem with pop flies and frozen fans.

The Athletics, who moved from Kansas City to Oakland in 1968, set a franchise record this year, drawing 2.67 million fans to a ballpark that has a capacity of 48,219 for baseball.

The small capacity is part of the reason Al Davis packed up his Oakland Raiders after the 1981 NFL season and took them to Los Angeles. Davis is talking with Oakland Coliseum officials now about enlarging the park if the Raiders return.

The Giants, who moved to San Francisco in 1958 and into Candlestick in 1960, set a record, too, with 2.06 million fans in a park that seats 60,000. For the final playoff game, the Giants stuffed the place with a record 62,084.

Turnovers Are Deac Problem

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Wake Forest must eliminate turnovers if the Demon Deacons hope to win Saturday when they play Maryland, which is a better team than its 1-5 record indicates, Wake Forest coach Bill Dooley said Tuesday.

"I have a great deal of respect for Maryland," Dooley said. "They could have easily beaten N.C. State if they had not committed turnovers. They would have beaten West Virginia if Major Harris had not made two unbelievable plays."

Dooley said he's impressed with Terrapin quarterback Neil O'Donnell, wide receiver Barry Johnson, running back Bren Lowery, strong safety Eddie Tomlin and defensive tackles Larry Webster and Darren Drozdov.

But if Wake Forest hopes to win, the Demon Deacons "must eliminate turnovers, and we must stop our opponent from moving the ball down field like Rice and North Carolina did at the end of those games," Dooley said. "To stop these long drives, we must put more pressure on the quarterback, and we must cover the seams better in the secondary and underneath."

Clemson Takes Computer Lead

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

South Carolina made the biggest jump in The Daily Reflector Computer Rankings last week, while Clemson vaulted to the top of the pack.

South Carolina, 16th a week ago, jumped up to eighth this week after a 47-14 rout of East Carolina University.

Clemson, 5-1 on the season, defeated Virginia, which fell from ninth to 14th, and surged past Tennessee to take first place. Last week's leader, West Virginia, tumbled to fourth after falling to Virginia Tech, which jumped up to ninth after a 36th place standing a week ago.

Clemson finished Week Six of the 1989 football season with 602 points on the computer. Points are awarded for each game a team wins, with additional points awarded each time a team it has beaten records a win. More points are awarded for third-level victories, that is, a win by a team beaten by a team that initially recorded a win.

As an example, Clemson gained points by beating Virginia. For each game Virginia wins, Clemson gains additional points. Further points are added to Clemson each time a team Virginia has beaten wins a game.

Thus, the rankings grade a team according to its success against the strength of its schedule. Beating stronger teams will award more points than beating weaker teams.

Tennessee, third a week ago, is second this week with 574 points while Washington State, fifth last time, is now third with 504. West Virginia drops from first to fourth with 502 and is followed by Nebraska, which fell from second with 492.

Following are the top 25 teams, as well as the rankings of East Carolina, the Pirates' Division I-A foes and the other Atlantic Coast Conference teams:

Top Prep Teams Hold To Position

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Garner, Burns, Clayton and East Montgomery all held to first place in The Daily Reflector high school rankings this week.

The four head their respective divisions but there was quite a bit of shake-up under them.

The rankings rate a team's success against the strength of its schedule, awarding points for each game a team wins and more points each time someone it beats wins a game.

Because of the helter-skelter situation caused by Hurricane Hugo, some teams are behind in their schedule and may make dramatic gains once there schedules catch up. Too, a team which has not had its open date for the year will tend to be ahead of a team which has passed its open date.

In fact, three of the four leaders are in this situation. Garner, Burns and Clayton have all played seven games, giving them a temporary advantage over teams with only six games to date.

Garner, 7-0, has amassed 51 points to lead the 4-A ranks. West Forsyth, with a 6-0 record, is second with 42½ points while Greensboro Page is third with 41½. West Forsyth was second last week, but Page advanced from a tie for sixth.

One newcomer appears in the 4-A ranks, Wilson Hunt, currently tied for eighth.

Lawndale's Burns High, 7-0, leads the 3-A ranks with 41 points. Smokey Mountain, 6-0, is second with 36½ points. Central Cabarrus, 7-0, and West Craven, 6-0, are tied for third with 34 points.

Newcomers to the top 10 in the 3-A ranks are Canton Pisgah, seventh, and South Iredell and Eden Morehead, tied for eighth.

Clayton, 7-0, is atop the 2-A ranks with 39 points, followed by Clinton, 6-0, with 36. Farmville Central and Newton-Conover, both 6-0, are tied for third with 30½ points.

Starmount is the lone newcomer, in 10th place.

East Montgomery, 5-1, leads the 1-As with 24 points. Currituck, 5-0, is second with 21, while North Edgecombe, 4-2, and Elkin, 5-2, are tied for third with 20.

North Edgecombe, along with Swain County, Union, Acme-Delco, Rosewood and Southwest Onslow are all newcomers this week to the 1-A.

Richmond Heads 4-A Unbeaten List

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Richmond County, North Carolina's defending 4-A high school football champion, heads a group of eight undefeated teams in the top classification in the latest edition of The Associated Press prep poll.

The Raiders (6-0) received 10 first-place votes and 109 points from a statewide panel of prep sportswriters and have remained the state's top-ranked 4-A squad since the start of the season, outscoring opponents 294-26.

Asheville Reynolds, which dropped a spot in the rankings last week, jumped over Garner (7-0) and back into second place this week with one first-place vote and 92 points. Reynolds has outscored opponents 317-35.

Other ranked 4-A teams still undefeated included Greensboro Page, Northern Durham, Wilson Hunt, East Forsyth and newcomer West Forsyth. Sixth-ranked Fayetteville 71st and ninth-ranked Fayetteville Byrd are each 5-1.

Fayetteville Smith (4-2) dropped out of the poll after losing to 71st 20-14 last Friday.

In 3-A, Burlington Cummings (6-0) held on to its top ranking with 10 first-place votes and 109 points.

In addition to Cummings, positions 2-6 remained the same as a week ago. Statesville, Lexington, South Iredell, Smoky Mountain and Burns all held their respective spots in the rankings after remaining undefeated.

West Craven (6-0) moved into the No. 7 spot after defeating Havelock 12-7, knocking the Rams out of the poll with their second loss in two weeks.

Bertie was ranked eighth, followed by newcomers Central Cabarrus (7-0) and Canton Pisgah (5-1).

Warsaw Kenan was the only 2-A squad to fall out of the rankings after losing 31-14 to No. 4 Clinton.

Kenan's loss enabled Northampton East (5-0) to make its first appearance in the poll this season.

Positions 1-4 remained unchanged in the 1-A rankings as Currituck, Swain County, Murphy and Cherokee recorded victories.

Undefeated Union (6-0) made another big move in the poll this week, jumping from eighth to fifth after a 28-21 victory over Princeton.

The rest of the 1-A poll included Bladenboro, North Edgecombe, East Montgomery, Columbia and Goldsboro Rosewood, who make its first appearance of the year after edging Midway 14-13.

Following are The Associated Press high school football polls with team, first place votes in parenthesis, record, total points and poll position last week as voted upon by a panel North Carolina prep sportswriters:

Bombings, Assassinations Flare In Colombian War

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOGOTA, Colombia — Drug traffickers claimed responsibility for the assassination of two employees of a crusading anti-drug newspaper and threatened to kill its remaining 11 workers in Medellin if they don't leave.

A magazine journalist and four other people also were gunned down Tuesday in Colombia's cocaine trafficking capital.

The shootings in Medellin followed 13 bombings in three other Colombian cities late Monday and early Tuesday — the most serious rash of attacks since the country's drug lords went to war with the government nearly two months ago.

Last month, a car bomb exploded outside the main officies in Bogota of the 102-year-old El Espectador newspaper, injuring scores of bystanders and causing extensive damage.

In a telephone call to El Espectador, a man said a group called The Extraditables would kill the 11 members of the paper's Medellin staff if they did not leave the city in three days, an editor at the paper said. The staff is composed of journalists, secretaries and administrative workers.

The anonymous caller said The Extraditables was responsible for Tuesday's assassinations in Medellin of the paper's administrator and circulation manager for the city of 2 million, said the editor, who asked not to be identified for security reasons.

Drug traffickers have issued statements under the name The Extraditables. The country's top cocaine barons fear extradition to the United States, which seeks to put them on trial.

In announcing the anti-drug campaign, President Virgilio Barco put in place emergency decrees restoring an extradition treaty with the United States and empowering security forces to seize the property of cocaine bosses.

Millions of dollars in property allegedly belonging to the traffickers has since been seized, but only one reputed high-level drug figure has been extradited to the United States.

Killed within an hour of each other Tuesday afternoon were El Espectador's administrator, Martha Luz Lopez, 35, and its circulation manager, Miguel Soler, 45. Both employees were shot by unidentified gunmen traveling on motocycles.

Police said gunmen later Tuesday killed Roberto Sarasty, the 55-year-old director of Cronista Democratica magazine, while he was walking on a downtown street with another journalist. His companion was slightly wounded.

At about the same time, another group fired at a crowd at a bar in Manrique, a northern Medellin barrio, killing four people before fleeing. Manrique is a known recruiting ground for "sicarios," or assassins used by drug traffickers.

Police said that they not been able to establish the motives for the killings of Sarasty or the four people in Manrique.

The El Espectador editor denied local radio reports that the paper's owner had decided to close the Medellin offices because of the assassinations and threats.

However, one of the paper's owners, speaking in Monterrey, Mexico, at the annual conference of the Inter American Press Association, said El Espectador may close its Medellin office.

"I don't know if we'll be able to continue operating in Medellin under present conditions," said Luis Gabriel Cano, whose brother, Guillermo Cano, was killed by cocaine traffickers on Dec. 17, 1986.

Cano also said the paper, founded in Medellin in 1887, may have to close eventually because of financial problems caused by the bombing last month.

A senior El Espectador reporter, asking not to be identified, said in a telephone interview that none of the paper's 1,200 employees have quit, although many had received death threats.

The reporter said drug traffickers were trying to destroy the paper by decimating its staff and that more assassinations may occur.

South Africa Will Release Eight Nationalist Leaders

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The government says it will free five African National Congress leaders jailed 25 years ago with Nelson Mandela, but the man most black South Africans consider their leader will stay in prison.

President F.W. de Klerk said eight aging prisoners, including leading ANC political strategist Walter Sisulu, would soon be released to "contribute to the spirit of reconciliation which is presently evident in our country."

He gave not date but a prison official said it would be within two weeks.

Anti-apartheid activists welcomed Tuesday's announcement but called the move insufficent unless the government also legalizes banned organizations, frees Mandela and lifts restrictions on many black leaders not in prison.

"What is the use of releasing them when we still have a state of emergency and when our organizations are still banned?" the Rev. Allan Boesak asked 4,000 people at a rally at the University of the Western Cape Tuesday night.

"Eight is not enough, with detainees and political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela, still being held hostage," said Boesak, president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

The government has indicated Mandela may be released within the next few months.

State radio acknowledged in an editorial today that the prisoners have a constituency among South Africa's black majority and need to be part of negotiations.

"Where Walter Sisulu ... and others are recognized by some communities in South Africa as their authentic leaders — and if they, too, subscribe to democratic and peaceful objectives — there is a need for them to be placed in a position where they can make a contribution to the debate on just how a future South Africa should look," Radio South Africa said.

Today, de Klerk was to meet in Pretoria with three leading anti-apartheid activists: Boesak, Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu and the Rev. Frank Chikane, general secretary of the South African Council of Churches.

Mandela, told of the releases in advance, was with a group of anti-apartheid leaders at his home on the Victor Verster prison farm north of Cape Town when state television made the announcement.

"Mr. Mandela said he would greatly enjoy his sleep tonight after all his efforts to secure their release," said Murphy Morobe, a spokesman for the banned United Democratic Front anti-apartheid alliance.

He quoted the 71-year-old ANC leader as saying to South Africans: "The people are going to be greatly endowed by the leadership who are coming out of jail."

"This unexpected turn of events will take the townships by storm and thousands will welcome them home," the Sowetan, the nation's largest black daily newspaper, said today.

In Blackpool, England, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher welcomed the announcement of the releases, calling it "a major step in the right direction."

The releases had been expected as ammunition for Mrs. Thatcher to use at the Commonwealth summit against imposing further economic sanctions on South Africa because its white-controlled government denies the black majority a say in national affairs. The summit, in Malaysia, begins Oct. 18.

De Klerk said the men would be freed "as soon as the necessary formalities" are handled. A prison official said privately the process can take from an hour to two weeks.

Storm Claims 18 Lives In Philippines

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — Tropical storm Dan battered Manila and southern Luzon Island today with 62 mph winds, killing at least 18 people, injuring 55 and shutting down transport, schools and government offices.

Up to 20 fishermen were reported missing after two fishing boats broke from their moorings and collided early today at a port in Batangas province south of the capital.

Nearly 60,000 people fled their homes and sought shelter in government relief centers, officials said. Damage was extensive in Manila.

About 95 percent of the city of more than 7 million people was without electricity as winds ripped down power lines. Schools in Manila were closed for the day, as were government offices and stock markets.

Dan was the second killer storm to strike the Philippines in the last week. On Friday, Typhoon Angela roared across the northern coast of Luzon, killing at least 118 people.

At Manila's airport, Dan's gusty winds pushed an empty Omani Boeing 707 into the DC-10 that brought President Hussain Muhammad Ershad of Bangladesh to the Philippines Monday for a four-day visit.

Five of the deaths occurred in the Manila area, four in Laguna province, four on Marinduque island, two in Cavite province, two in Bataan province and one in Quezon province.

In Batangas province, the coast guard said 10 people were rescued when the two fishing boats collided off Bauan, 50 miles south of Manila.

The Office of Civil Defense said up to 30 people may have been aboard the two vessels, but the coast guard said the figure was uncertain.

Utility officials said that by mid-afternoon power had been restored in about 16 percent of the city. A generator at a suburban power station caught fire and burned for three hours after the storm ripped off the roof.

Philippine Airlines canceled 30 domestic flights from the capital and international service was disrupted.

Bodies Found On Road

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — Police found the bound bodies of 80 murdered young Sinhalese men along a road in southern Sri Lanka today, a day before the final round of peace talks to try to resolve ethnic conflicts that have claimed more than 16,000 lives.

The bodies were found along a 20-mile stretch of road between the towns of Panadura and Mataguma in Kalutara district, 25 miles south of Colombo, said police officials who cannot be identified under briefing rules.

The victims, all between age 18 and 30, had their hands tied behind their backs before they were shot to death, police said. The bodies, some of them burning, were found in groups of six or eight, they said.

Human rights groups and opposition politicians have alleged that vigilante groups are killing sympathizers of the front, an extremist Sinhalese group trying to overthrow the government.

East German Elite Also Calling For Reforms

By Nesha Starcevic
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — It is not only the tens of thousands of ordinary workers, students, housewives and shopkeepers who are complaining about conditions in East Germany and berating its leaders.

Still, authors, entertainers, artists and sports personalities have urged the hard-line leadership to reexamine its policies and open a dialogue with opposition groups.

The calls have ranged from a joint appeal by as many as 300 East Berlin artists to individual statements by such prominent authors as Christa Wolf.

Katarina Witt, the two-time Olympic figure skating gold medalist and possibly the best-known East German abroad, said the Communist government must think about the causes for the exodus of its people to the West.

About 50,000 East Germans have fled West in recent months, either crossing Hungary's recently opened border to Austria or after seeking refuge in Bonn's embassies in Prague, Czechoslovakia, and Warsaw, Poland.

The exodus deeply embarrassed the government last weekend during 40th anniversary festivities that were overshadowed by nationwide demonstrations unseen since Soviet tanks crushed a workers' uprising in 1953.

"It makes me sad, it hurts me that so many people have left the country," Ms. Witt told reporters in Munich, West Germany, where she was touring this week with a show.

"Something will change (in East Germany)," said Ms. Witt, herself a member of the Communist Party and a beneficiary of the perks bestowed on major athletic stars.

Ms. Witt has been a glamorous ambassador of goodwill and previously limited her political statments to praise for the benefits of a socialist system.

The brutal force used by security police against demonstrators over the weekend caused some public figures to call for restraint.

Christa Wolf, a well-known author who is widely read in West Germany, urged both sides to show "prudence, calm and patience."

In a statement broadcast by West German radio stations, she criticized Communist authorities for outlawing the New Forum opposition group, calling the move a "fatal" mistake.

The author, whose daughter and son-in-law were arrested during weekend demonstrations in East Berlin, called for a broad dialogue over the future of the country.

Kurt Masur, chief director of the famed Leipzig Gewandhause orchestra, and cabaret star Berndt Lutz Lange joined three local Communist Party officials in calling for a dialogue between the opposition and authorities. After their statement was read on Leipzig radio about 70,000 people demonstrated in the city Monday evening. Unlike the weekend clashes, the biggest demonstration in the current wave of protests ended peacefully with no intervention from massive security forces.

Actors in two East Berlin theaters have posted statements calling for dialogue between the state and the opposition.

A similar statement was read by the cast in the Dresden City Theater after a recent performance. After authorities warned the actors not to read the statement again, they stood silently on the stage after the next performance and distributed it to the public.

A group of 300 East Berlin painters, sculptors and other artists have passed a resolution calling for a broad public discussion of the country's problems. They also urged the state-controlled media to open up to all forces seeking democratic reforms.

A statement by 44 entertainers, including well-known East German rock bands such as Pankow and City, criticized the "unbearable ignorance" of the Communist leadership.

The statement, published in a West Berlin newspaper, called for reforms "that will not remove socialism but continue to make it possible" in East Germany.

Hermann Kant, president of the official Writers Union and a member of the Communist Party Central Committee, wrote an open letter to the Junge Welt newspaper criticizing censorship in the media.

The letter, published on Monday by the official youth newspaper, said it would be wrong to abscribe "our current defeat" to the "evil class enemy."

East Germany's state-run newspapers have bitterly denounced Western, particularly West German media, blaming them for triggering the exodus and instigating the protests.

Communists Tell World To Back Off

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — The Communist Party said East Germany can solve its problems by strengthing socialism and told other nations today to stop meddling in the country's internal struggle over whether to embrace reform.

The report in the official party daily Neues Deutschland was the latest in a series of mixed signals the hard-line government was sending the rest of the world as it grapples with a growing movement for social change.

Local Communist Party officials in at least three East German cities — Dresden, Leipzig and Magdeburg — have either started talks with pro-democracy activists or talks are planned, according to West German news media reports.

But questions remain whether high-ranking leaders in East Berlin are ready to move away from the strict adherence to Communism that has helped sparked an exodus to West Germany of tens of thousands of its skilled young citizens.

Neues Deutschland today conceded the country has problems, but at the same time said socialism must be strengthened.

The newspaper also renewed its accusations against West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, accusing him of "unveiled interference in (East Germany's internal affairs." Kohl has been extremely critical of the East German government in recent days.

"If today we stand before new demands that require new solutions, we'll manage that ourselves," the newspaper said.

"We can solve our own problems, not through Kohl's recipes, but through socialist means ... through the further strengthening of socialism. Every demand and recommendation that in reality aims at weakening or even doing away with socialism cannot bear fruit among us," the newspaper wrote.

On Tuesday, West German news media reports said local Communist officials had met with opposition leaders in Dresden and talks were expected soon in Leipzig.

Westdeutscher Rundfunk radio in Cologne said today that Magdeburg party leaders "have also said they are ready for a dialogue."

However, Erich Honecker, the country's 77-year-old Communist leader, has indicated he will crush dissent if it challenges stability.

Over the weekend, authorities used force to disperse demonstrators, clubbing and arresting hundreds. Then officials in Leipzig allowed a peaceful march by 70,000 people Monday night.

Local Communist officials met Monday with opposition leaders in Dresden and talks were said to be expected in Leipzig, the first signs of official willingness to discuss change.

Christof Ziemer, the superintendent of Dresden's Lutheran church, said the two sides discussed electoral reform, ending travel restrictions and the release of people arrested during street demonstrations.

The nationwide protests by tens of thousands of people were East Germany's most serious since Soviet tanks helped put down a workers' revolt in 1953.

West German radio said Dresden Mayor Wolfgang Berghofer, who attended Monday's meeting, told activists Tuesday that all demonstrators who still jailed "who were not accused of violence would be freed." He said another meeting would be held next week.

West Germany's ZDF television network, quoting high-level church sources, said that "talks had begun with central offices" in the East German government to discuss widespread discontent among the populace. It did not elaborate or identify the participants.

Soviet Fire Cadets Shoot Into Street Mob

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Cadet firefighters shot at a crowd of attackers in the capital of the disputed territory of Nagorno-Karabakh, wounding at least eight people, an Interior Ministry spokesman said today.

The confrontation between the cadets and a threatening mob occurred Tuesday night in Stepanakert in the southern Soviet Union, said Yuri M. Arshenevsky of the ministry's press office in Moscow.

He said eight civilians were in critical condition.

Arshenevsky said the cadets were riding in 19 vehicles and crossing a bridge into Stepanakert when a mob materialized and began throwing stones and firing on the passing column. He said the firefighters were forced to shoot in self-defense.

But representatives of a pro-Armenian group — Nagorno Karabakh is a predominantly Armenian enclave in the republic of Azerbaijan and the focus of a bloody ethnic dispute — said the crowd was non-violent.

Ashot Manucharyan, an Armenian legislator from the region, said in a telephone interview from the headquarters of the Karabakh Committee in Yerevan, the capital of neighboring Armenia, that the civilians were attracted to the bridge by warning shots fired into the air by the cadets.

He claimed one civilian was killed in addition to the eight wounded.

The Karabakh Committee has led the campaign for the annexation of Nagorno-Karabakh to Armenian jurisdiction. Azerbaijanis are predominantly Moslem and most Armenians are Christians.

It was not clear if the firefighters also were soldiers, but troops have been stationed in Nagorno-Karabakh to try to keep the peace for the past year.

Quiet Support Is Often Role Of Arts Council

By J.R. Williams
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Most people are confused about what an arts council is, what its mission is and where it's suppose to perform that mission, says the Pitt County Arts Council executive director.

Cynthia Marvin says because the council fluctuates between programming events and providing services to smaller arts organizations, the public sometimes thinks the Arts Council is inactive.

"That's what the public identifies you with are your programs," Ms. Marvin says. "But when you're concentrating on your services, the public says, 'What's the Arts Council doing?' "

The Arts Council provides smaller arts organizations with grant information, helps them write press releases and brochures and sponsors a limited number of programs in the performance and visual arts.

The Arts Council also publishes Circa, a bi-monthly publication listing arts events in Pitt County.

"The mission of an arts council is to coordinate and promote all art activities in a certain area, and we happen to be concerned with the city of Greenville and Pitt County," Ms. Marvin says.

"We're working on a three-year, long-range plan and it's part of what has been learned from the Arts Roundtable," Ms. Marvin says.

The Roundtable, sponsored by the Arts Council and composed of representatives from county arts organizations, meets at noon on the third Monday each month at different locations. This month, the meeting is scheduled at Marbleous on Dickinson Avenue. Anyone is invited.

The roundtable meets to discuss plans, concerns and share ideas, Ms. Marvin says.

She says the council doesn't focus on a single display of the arts, but plans and coordinates programs in art, music, theater, dance and the visual arts.

"It's very difficult to define the effect that the arts council or any one art organization can have on a community," Ms. Marvin says. "The arts improve the quality of life."

Ms. Marvin, who earned a bachelor's degree in the fine arts from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, says this part of life should be nurtured in children and developed as they grow older.

"You can't get alone without creatitivity today," Ms. Marvin says. The ability to problem solve is so important in anything you do."

The Pitt County Arts Council plans and coordinates an annual children's film-making festival. Also, the Arts Council is planning Imagination Celebration during the first weekend in April. The weekend will feature a ballet and a puppet workshop for local school children. Imagination Celebration will also hire part of the Discovery Place display, a $30 million science amusement park based in Charlotte.

Paula Larke, a singer a story teller will perform for school children Jan. 19, and a Mardi-Gras celebration is set for Feb. 24.

Ms. Marvin says an International Festival is scheduled for October 1990. The festival will recognize international hertitages of Pitt County's citizens.

But for now, Ms. Marvin is con-

Arts Council Fund-Raiser Is Extended

By J.R. Williams
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Cynthia Marvin said the Pitt Council Arts Council will have a hard time carrying out its planned events if it doesn't meet a fund-drive goal.

The drive, which was extended to Oct. 27, is $11,000 short. The drive was originally scheduled to end Sept. 30 with a goal of $37,000.

"The arts, unfortunately, can't pay for themselves," said Ms. Marvin, executive director of the arts council. "It's necessary to raise money from private sources in order to carry out our programs on a day-to-day operation." The Pitt County Arts Council, like many county arts councils in North Carolina, gets most of its funding from the N.C. Arts Council in Raleigh. The state group is funded by the state legislature.

Ms. Marvin says a small portion of the council's budget comes from Greenville City and Pitt County funds. The rest of its budget comes from event ticket sales and council donors, she said.

This year's budget is $90,000.

"There are so many ideas for new programs, but we're afraid to start planning because we don't have any money to plan who we're going to hire to help," Ms. Marvin said. "Volunteers can only do so much."

If the money isn't raised, school arts programs will have to be cut, the Arts Council will lose its office and the position of executive director, usually a full-time

Museum Marks 50th Year

Fine Arts Ball Will Celebrate With Evening To Remember

By Frances Horton Arrington
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville Museum of Art turns 50 this year. And, museum members are turning the 1989 Fine Arts Ball into a birthday bash to celebrate the occasion.

The annual gala is the museum's primary fund raiser for the year, and its proceeds are used for operating expenses year round.

"An Evening of Elegance" is what ball organizers are calling the affair which has been set for Saturday night.

They say hundreds of people are expected to attend — all clad in sleek, glamorous gowns and black ties and tuxedoes.

In previous years, the ball has been held at the Greenville Country Club, but this year it moves outdoors and onto the velvety green lawn of Meriwether Farm. Organizers plan to pitch two huge tents on the lawn for the affair.

"The ball has always been at the Country Club, but the board has charged us with making this year's more special than any we've ever had before," said Helen Weaver, a co-chairman overseeing the planning. Peg Hardee and Linda Blount are also co-chairmen.

"By having it outdoors, we'll be able to have many more people than in the past," Mrs. Weaver said. The Country Club could accommodate only about 350 people comfortably, she said.

One of the tents will house items for a silent auction. The other will be transformed into a spectacular ballroom complete with crystal chandeliers, gigantic floral centerpieces for the tables, a marbelized floor and other features.

In a news release, the organizing committee described the scenery they hope to create for the affair this way:

"Massive old oak trees will surround two spacious tents, one for auction items and the other, floored tent will be for seated dining. A full moon will complete the picture-perfect setting."

Among the special guests expected to attend the gala are N.C. Sen. Mark Basnight, (D-Dare), Sen. Tom Taft, (D-Pitt) and N.C. Rep. Ed Warren, (D-Pitt). All helped legislate funds for the recent expansion of the museum, according to Mrs. Weaver.

Auction items will include original works from several Southern artists. Among those represented are Donald Sexauer, Betty West, Nelson Britt, Bob Timberlake, David Duffus, Francis Speight, Joe Bowler, Butter Fisher, James Beaman, Marie Easley, Michael Ehlbeck, Heath King, Bob Pittman, JoAnna Huggins, Paula Blumenfeld, Jerry Raynor, Kevin McCloskey, Ross Horrocks, Mary Batchelor, Blanche Monroe, Ray Elmore, Oscar Bailey, Emmy Whitehead, Judy Chaplinski, Sally Prange and Casey Ginn.

Paintings, craftwork and other items to be featured in Saturday's auction are on display at the museum all this week.

Also to be auctioned during the ball will be European artisans, sterling silver, pearls diamonds, clothing, furniture and trips.

Guests will be served hors d'oeuvres as they browse the silent auction display. A three-course dinner will be prepared by Chef David Greenleaf of the Coral Bay Club in Atlantic Beach. The meal features medallions of beef tenderloin.

Tuxedo Junction, a nine-piece jazz ensemble, will entertain diners with soft jazz selections throughout the meal.

Mrs. Hannah examines a child's party dress, one item in the silent auction

Also during the ball, members of the Board of Trustees will pay special tribute to individuals who served on the museum's board during its first five years of operation.

The museum, which is located on Evans Street, began in 1939 as a Works Progress Administration Gallery. Today, it is one of the state's oldest art museums and the only accredited museum geographically central to the eastern region.

With a $200,000 renovation of existing buildings already completed, the museum's board has begun work on an expansion plan to which the state legislature has committed $300,000.

Art museum adminstrators say they are interested in making the museum the regional resource center for eastern North Carolina towns from Falkland and Winterville to Vanceboro, Williamston, Tarboro, Snow Hill and other outlying areas.

Mort Hurst practices for the Moon Pie eat-off outside his home training site

By Priscilla Brown
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Not everyone knows how it feels to be the world's best. Few have the courage to try, because they know what it takes. It takes talent. It takes training.

It takes an appetite for victory.

Especially when it means eating 15 double-decker Moon Pies in 10 minutes.

But none of that bothers Mort Hurst, legend among food fanatics.

He's injured, but he'll do his best. Never tried record-smashing with sweets, but he'll give it his all. And that just might be enough.

"There are two things that aren't in my vocabulary," he says, "can't and won't."

Hurst is known hereabouts as the Collard Eating King, a title he established by gobbling 7.5 pounds of the leafy greens in one sitting. He is one-time watermelon champ, and just this past August, down at Andrews Superette and Deli in Robersonville, he ate 25 eggs in 40 seconds.

That was when he got hurt. The flying fork caught his cheek, his neck got strained — and worst of all, his wrist is a wreck.

His stomach, however, is fine. And he has been training hard for Saturday's face-off with record-holder Rodney Frazer of Oneonta and last year's victor, David Dunn of Arab, Ala.

He won't sneak up on any of them, though. John Love, the Oneonta businessman who founded the Moon Pie eat-off in 1985 calls Hurst the Godzilla of Gluttony. And Hurst, who just might be playing a little strategy of his own, has seen to it that a Birmingham radio station is playing his record, "The Legend of Old Eating Mort Hurst."

The charges and counter charges are flying. The Associated Press said that Love said that Hurst said that Frazer was "getting to big for his britches."

Maybe that's because he insists on eating 15 Moon Pies in 10 minutes.

That's OK. Hurst can still beat him. Has Frazer eaten 750 shrimp in one sitting? Consumed 19 catfish, 52 deviled crabs or eight pounds of steak?

Surely not.

And he has no way of knowing the strategy Hurst plans to carry into Saturday's championship — the strategy that enabled him to eat one Moon Pie in 15 seconds.

He's also going to eat bannana pies. Vanilla, he has discovered, is too rich; chocolate, too sticky. And he's going to wash them down with water.

"If they start sticking up on me, I'm going to switch to Pepsi," he confides. "I'm gonna have some Pepsi there, just in case."

Or you may order Kit No. K-100889 by sending a check or money order for $42.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn in your choice of a peachy-pink blend or a turquoise blend.

Available now — new book! "A Collection of Afghans" for $8.95.

Dear Pat: I have been trying to knit an afghan in the feather-and-fan pattern, but got hopelessly confused every time I tried to knit the main pattern row, and I can see after a few repeats that I must have made many errors across each of those rows. Do you have any suggestions? —
Knit Wit

Dear Knit Wit: Pattern stitches using combinations of decreases and yarnovers can be difficult to keep up with across long rows as you would have in an afghan. It's much easier to work just one repeat of the stitch until you become familiar and confident with it.

In this case, the pattern repeat is worked over 17 stitches, and I recommend that you cast on 23 stitches for a practice swatch. This will give you one pattern panel with borders of three stitches each on the side edges.

It's always easier to start the pattern with some knitting already on the needles, so knit a couple of rows first. Then start the pattern that follows:

Row 1: (Right side) Step 1: Knit 3, place marker on needle. Step 2: (Knit 2 together) three times. Step 3: (Yarnover, knit 1) five times. Step 4: Yarnover. Step 5: (Knit 2 together) three times. Step 6: Place marker at each end in garter stitch.

Row 2: Knit all stitches. Row 3: Knit all stitches. Row 4: Knit 3 stitches, purl to within 3 stitches of end, knit 3 stitches. Repeat Rows 1 through 4 for desired length or until you are at ease with Row 1 of the pattern stitch.

You can easily see that you are having to keep track of a pattern on only one out of every four rows, so you can zip through the balance of the pattern stitch.

When you are comfortable with your ability to work this pattern stitch without errors, you should be able to work it in overall as well as panels.

This version of the pattern has a multiple of 17 stitches with extra stitches added at the beginning and end of the rows as a border. For example, you might cast on 176 stitches. This would give you 10 repeats of the pattern plus 6 more for a 3-stitch border at each end of the row.

I would suggest that you place markers at the beginning of the first pattern repeat and after each pattern repeat to assist you in correctly following the pattern. Markers serve as a reminder to start a new pattern repeat.

In other words, on Row 1, you would work Step 1, place a marker on the needle, work Steps 2 through 5 and place another marker on the needle. Keep repeating Steps 2 through 5, placing a marker each time you finish Step 5. When you put the last marker on the needle, you will have three stitches remaining, which are worked in the border pattern. Repeat Rows 1 through 4 for desired length.

Hurst To Seek Moon Pie Title

Then, he's going to hit them with his eating motion. He's not dumb enough to try tackling a Moon Pie head on, he says, no siree. He'll be stuffing those mashed marshmallow and cookie concoctions in on the spin, hurt wrist and all.

No pain, no gain.

"I want an advertising contract with a big chain," he says. "Then maybe I won't have to work no more and I might not have to eat anymore, either."

All of this will occur Dec. 31, she said.

"An organization doesn't center around one person," she said. "The fact is that they wouldn't have enough money to hire someone else."

Incorpated in 1976, the Pitt County Arts Council is celebrating its 10th year as a non-profit organization.

Ms. Marvin said the local public is reluctant to donate to its fund because the Greenville Museum, the Pitt County Boy's Club and the Pitt County Memorial Hospital endowment fund have all had fund-raising drives recently.

But Ms. Marvin said things could turn around, as in the case of Winston-Salem's Little Theater. The theater fell $140,000 short of its goal three years ago, but this year enjoys great success.

"The public responded with funds so they could keep their doors open and then they got a loan from the Winston-Salem Foundation, and now they're in great financial shape because they have three years of record-breaking attendance," Ms. Marvin said.

Childhood Asthma Affects Entire Family

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Families of these kids also face problems, according to a survey of parents of asthmatic children by the National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine in Denver.

Survey results reported in Better Homes and Gardens magazine show one-third of married respondents reported their child's condition put a strain on the parents' relationship. The same percentage reported strains between a parent and a nonasthmatic child. The more severe the asthma, the more strained the relationships.

Moviemaker: 'It's Not Art, It's Commerce'

By John Medearis
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

HOLLYWOOD — First-time movie director Rick Pamplin was in Glendale, Calif., recently shooting a low-budget action film when the cops burst in. Pamplin, it seems, didn't have a police permit to film at the warehouse where he was staging scenes for "Provoked," a shoot-'em-up feature about a hostage-taking.

But the police crackdown — complete with squad cars and a helicopter — was not really such a bust for Pamplin. "I, of course, filmed the police helicopter so I could put it in my movie," Pamplin explained later. After all, with his $120,000 production budget, it was a spectacle Pamplin couldn't have staged on his own.

That's the kind of initiative Denis Donovan likes to see. Donovan, 39, president of Raedon Entertainment Group, a Los Angeles company that will soon release Pamplin's movie, is a low budget movie mogul. Really low budget. In the 1950s, the low-budget movies played at drive-ins, but Donovan is one of those who has helped update that distribution route for the 1980s. His films never play on TV or in movie theaters: He sells them only to videocassette stores as eye candy for movie gluttons.

An early effort from Raedon was "L.A. Heat," starring former footballer Jim Brown and ex-"Welcome Back Kotter" actor Lawrence-Hilton Jacobs. Brown's star seems to be on the decline and Jacobs has yet to make it big, but Donovan packaged the videocassettes of "L.A. Heat" in some sexy artwork and has managed to sell more than 7,500 copies to video stores.

Donovan says that's about $225,000 in sales for a movie that cost $175,000 to produce. Donovan wants to make that his formula: Shoot and market movies for less than $250,000 each.

A former video company marketing executive, Donovan's idea is to reduce the risk of producing flops by doing the marketing first. A case in point: along with Pamplin, Donovan and his wife, Ralie Rae Donovan, Raedon's art director, first thought up the title of "Provoked," bounced it off a few friendly video distributors, then planned a few action scenes and hired some actors. Only then did they pay to have the script written. Finally, in eight days of what he terms "guerrilla film making," Pamplin shot the movie.

But "Provoked" is the first film Raedon has produced. Up until now, the company has simply released movies whose video distribution rights Donovan bought up. Donovan started his company 19 months ago with $8,000 and runs things out of his house. In that time he has already released 10 films, Raedon is up to 10 employees, and Donovan says revenues are running at $200,000 a month.

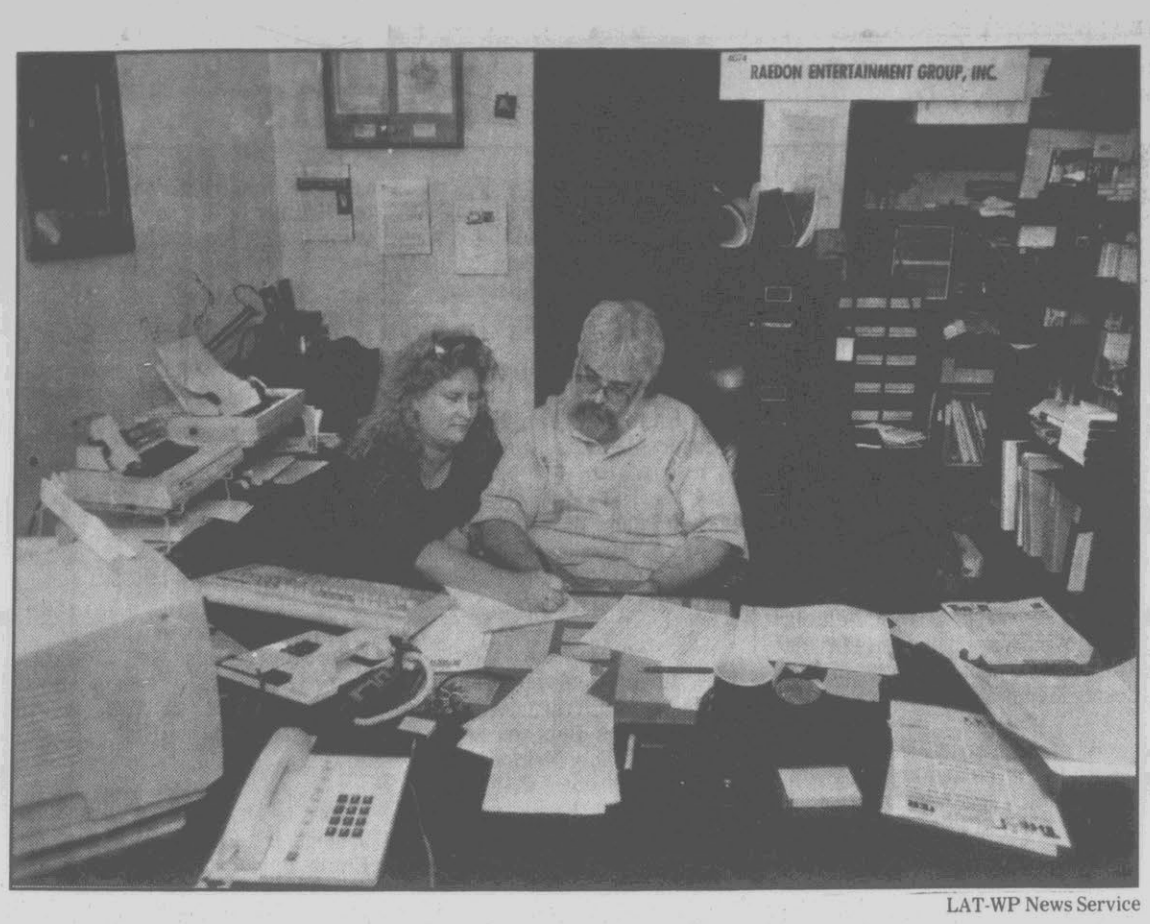
His films are really a cut below what most people call B titles: films intended for release to theaters and made by independent producers for perhaps $1 million. Despite their tiny budgets, Donovan's releases must go head-to-head in video stores with major studio films that have had millions spent on television and newspaper advertising.

So low-budget movie companies like Raedon have to count on the hard-core fans of genre films. Donovan is putting most of his money on pleasing the fans of action films.

One video chain company that stocks Raedon releases is Blockbuster Entertainment, based in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Ron Castell, Blockbuster's senior vice president, calls films like Raedon's "man-with-a-gun movies." They have a solid following among young men, said Castell, particularly ones who are "not much interested in the subtleties or nuances of plot."

Ed Hulse, a critic for Video Review Magazine in New York who has seen some of Raedon's films, described the made-for-video action film audience: "We'd have to call them droolers."

Low budget genre films must also appeal to less dedicated fans who come into a video store for a film like "To Live and Die in L.A." but are willing to walk away with "L.A. Heat" as a second choice. In either case, potential viewers are only going to rent a made-for-video film that leaps off the rack. "Box art is incredibly important," said Frank Moldstad, the editor of Video Store Magazine, in Santa Ana, Calif.



LAT-WP News Service

Ralie Rae and Denis Donovan started Raedon 19 months ago with $8,000

A Raedon release

A striking number of the videos Raedon has released have boxes displaying a scantily clad woman wrapped around a man holding a gun. "The bigger the gun, the better," observed Warren Cohen, president of a Boca Raton, Fla., video distribution company that specializes in low-budget titles. Cohen said that the Donovans are masters of box art. "They do a fantastic marketing job with their packaging."

Still, the major studios make it tough for mini moguls like Donovan. Most of the big studios now have their own video distributing arms, some of which pressure video chains and other distributors to meet quotas for selling videocassettes of theatrically released films, according to industry analyst John McRae with Bear, Stearns & Co. in New York.

Despite the obstacles, Donovan said he thinks that made-for-video movies are a great way for him to make money and eventually break into producing films for television and theaters, too.

Donovan hearkens back to the 1960s and 1970s, when producer Roger Corman, sometimes known as "the King of the B's," gave young directors like Francis Coppola and Martin Scorsese a chance directing genre flicks like "Dementia 13" and "Boxcar Bertha." But Corman said now it's harder even for even genuine B movies — features like the unusually successful "sex, lies, and videotape" — to get exposure because major studio releases like "Batman" open simultaneously at more than 2,000 theaters across the country.

Corman, who has not heard of Raedon Entertainment Group, said low-budget movies — including those made for videocassettes — can be a good way for directors to get experience. "If they do a good job, it will come to the attention of someone."

That is certainly what Joseph Merhi, the director of the Raedon release "L.A. Heat," is hoping. Merhi and his partner, Richard Pepin, have together produced 26 films — virtually all of them for video release only — since they teamed up in June 1986.

"There is no ego," Merhi said. "We say if we make a great film in 15 years we're grateful."

You can't call Merhi pretentious. He agrees that "L.A. Heat" has problems, from occasional contradictions in the script to a muddy sound track (which he says was caused by low quality tape duplication). But Merhi said that his films get better each time.

Copeland Opera Opens In Cleveland

By Kristi Umbreit
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — The Cleveland Opera opened its season Tuesday not with the works of Wagner or Puccini but with a tale of the Crusades written by Stewart Copeland, former drummer for the rock group The Police.

"Holy Blood and Crescent Moon" is bona fide opera, a love story with arias, choruses, grandiose sets and sweeping gestures, drawn from Copeland's research and observations on Holy Land history and current situation in the Middle East.

Copeland, who spent six years with The Police before going on to score movies and television shows, said Monday he doesn't put himself in the same league as the masters but did use the qualities found in traditional opera.

"The music is definitely very brooding," he said. "It's very bombastic. I use the orchestra to its fullest."

The opera, which took four years to write, is the result of Copeland making good on a flip remark during a 1984 press conference after he had written music for a ballet to Shakespeare's King Lear for the San Francisco Ballet.

When asked when he would write another ballet, he said it would be "after I finish my opera."

The son of Cleveland Opera General Manager David Bamberger heard that remark and urged his father to commission Copeland, who had ventured from rock music to write scores for the movie "Rumblefish" and the TV series "The Equalizer."

Copeland, 37, said he knew little about opera when he agreed to write one, and he had to learn to love the dissonant voices and grand drama.

'Hug A Tree' Saves Children

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: You recently had a letter voicing concerns about children losing their way in the woods or campgrounds. You suggested that they should always carry a whistle, which is fine, but parents can take a few more steps to keep their children safe.

One of them is called "Hug a Tree." This is a program founded by Abe Taylor, a retired U.S. border patrolman who is an expert "tracker." He honed his talents to such an extent that the National Parks and Recreation Agency held special training sessions with Taylor to assist their agents in finding people who had lost their way in our deserts, mountains and forests.

Mr. Taylor and other volunteers carry this lifesaving message to children in our schools and summer camps: "Hug a tree, if you suddenly realize that you have lost your way. Sit still; trackers will find you! All children should have a whistle, and in their pocket — folded and kept as an emergency item — a plastic trash bag to be stepped into and pulled up only to the child's neck, and never over their head, to protect them from exposure to the chill of the night. And no one, child or adult, should go hiking without taking along a 'buddy.'"

Family outings are great fun, but many end in tragedy because the areas do not appear sinister (they have brooks, trees, small animals, birds, picnic tables, etc.). Because of the friendly atmosphere, we all tend to let our guard down.

"Get Lost — Hug a Tree" is easy for a child to remember, and it's recommended for adults, too! — Muriel C. Watson, Bonita, Calif.

Dear Muriel: And a hug for you, Ms. Watson, for sharing the excellent lifesaving suggestions for campers.

Dear Abby: Two years ago our son was killed in an accident. He left a wife and two sons, ages 4 and 6. Within a year, his wife (I'll call her Jane) met a man who moved in with her, and our grandsons started calling him "Daddy." We begged Jane not to let the boys call this man "Daddy" because we felt there was no lasting commitment in that relationship and never would be. Jane had told us that she had no intentions of marrying again because she'd lose the $500 a month in Social Security she gets as a widow.

Meanwhile, my husband and I were always there for Jane and the boys, and we kept our grandsons every weekend we could get them.

Three months ago, "Daddy" left Jane and she started to drink too much. Last weekend we had the boys, and when we brought them back on Sunday evening, Jane came to the door very disheveled with a swollen lip and dark glasses. She looked as though she had been in a fight. When I asked what happened to her, she went totally out of control and struck me! I hated to leave the boys with her, but since she was so hostile, I didn't want to start anything in front of the boys, so I left.

Now Jane refuses to let us see our grandsons. When I call her, she hangs up on me. We do not want a public court battle, but we worry about our grandsons. We are desperate. What should we do? — Keep Me Anonymous

Dear Anonymous: Discuss this with your lawyer immediately, and follow his or her advice. Please do not delay, for the sake of your grandchildren. Jane is not a fit mother, and your grandsons need to be protected.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Max Von Sydow Earns A Spot In Movie History

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTREAL — The blond giant stood tentatively on the stage of the Place des Artes theater, seemingly amazed at the standing ovation accorded him by the packed audience.

Max Von Sydow had come to the Montreal World Film Festival for a tribute to his 30-year career that has brought distinction to movies on both sides of the Atlantic. The program included clips from two widely divergent films: Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring" (1959) and "Hannah and Her Sisters" (1986).

A dialogue with the actor was followed by a screening of the Danish-made "Pelle the Conqueror," which drew the Motion Picture Academy's best foreign-language film Oscar of 1988 as well as a nomination as best actor for Von Sydow. He received a second standing ovation when he left the stage.

"It's very strange," he admitted afterward. "I don't know how you feel, but I feel like I'm 25 inside. I don't feel that I have any kind of 'lifetime achievement.'"

Film critics would argue with that. If he had appeared only in the Bergman films, Von Sydow would have earned a place in movie history. But he also has contributed a series of noteworthy performances in a wide variety of films, from the profound (Jesus Christ in "The Greatest Story Ever Told") to the eerie ("The Exorcist") to the frivolous (Ming the Merciless in "Flash Gordon").

Like most successful actors, Von Sydow's career was the result of a series of happy accidents. He was born 60 years ago in Lund, Sweden, the son of a university professor and his wife. Max happened to see some plays in nearby Malmo, prompting him to enroll in dramatic classes at high school. After his two-year military service, he enrolled in the Royal Academy, training ground for such famous Swedes as Greta Garbo and Ingrid Bergman.

Von Sydow played repertory at the Malmo Municipal Theater, where Bergman had been hired as chief director. When Bergman filmed "The Seventh Seal," he chose the young actor as a returning Crusader. The pair collaborated on 11 films.

George Stevens was impressed with Von Sydow's strong, mystical persona and cast him in the mammoth, unrealized "The Greatest Story Ever Told." "Hawaii" with Julie Andrews was also a disappointment, but the two films established Von Sydow as an international star. He has been working all over the world ever since.

Before leaving Montreal for a new film in Australia, Von Sydow paused for an interview with The Associated Press:

Q. You have now directed your first film, "Katinka." How did you like being on the other side of the camera?

A. "It was a great experience, very exciting. I had never had any plans to become a director, but this was something very special. It dealt with a novel I had found a long time ago; I fell in love with it immediately and saw it as a film with me playing a part in it.

"I tried to convince my director friends, but nobody caught on to it. Then someone approached me to direct the film, and I couldn't turn it down. I was too old to play one of the parts, unfortunately. Time does these things to you. It was a great experience, exhausting, but I learned a lot."

Musician Lenny Kravitz Is Not Mr. Lisa Bonet

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Name-dropping is a favorite pastime in the entertainment business, and musician Lenny Kravitz has a few at his disposal.

There's his wife, actress Lisa Bonet of NBC's "A Different World"; his mother, Roxie Roker, who played Helen Willis in the long-running TV sit-com "The Jeffersons"; and his father, Sy Kravitz, a former NBC executive.

But the younger Kravitz, who also goes by the name Romeo Blue, prefers discussing a few well-placed strangers, such as John Lennon, Jimi Hendrix, Bob Marley and Lou Reed, all influences for his debut album, "Let Love Rule."

"I'm not hip on the way records sound today," the 25-year-old Kravitz said, "all this digital and sampling everywhere.

"My record sounds like the kind you just drop a needle on and play. I grew up on records that sound like this. I don't think records sound any better than in the late '50s or early '60s."

"I dreamed the whole song," he said, "and I hummed it into the tape recorder. I did that one live, in one take, with just guitar and mike. Someone told me to get rid of the crack in my voice, but I liked it that way."

Kravitz thinks of old girlfriends with "My Precious Love" and "Rosemary," and gives Bonet her due on "I Build This Garden for Us," the last song to make the record.

"The lyrics were just killing me," he said. "I wrote the hook, but there were spaces missing everywhere. I stayed up for two days and drove myself crazy. I was ready to slash my throat. The last night in the studio I finished it and did the vocals."

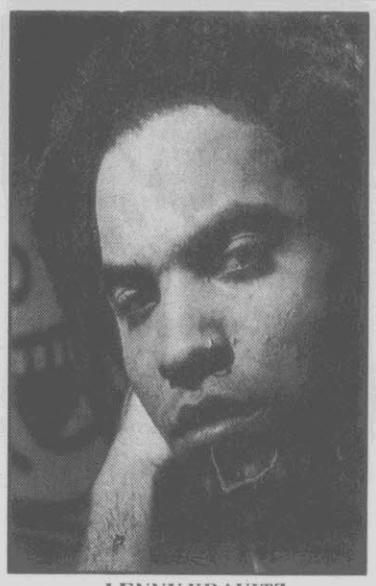
Karvitz grew up in New York and Los Angeles and at age 10 was already learning guitar and writing. He spent time as a classical musician, performing with the California Boys Choir and appearing on records with Zubin Mehta. By high school, however, Kravitz was a born-again rock 'n' roller.

"From the time I graduated from high school until now, I think I turned down about eight record deals," he said. "They wanted trendy black music, which I hate. 'This is too white. You have to get your black base first, then you can cross over. Everybody has to. Go get yourself a drum machine and make yourself a funk record.'

"That was a big issue. But what I'm doing is black music anyway, rhythm and blues, rock 'n' roll. People think if you don't sound like Bobby Brown, it's not black music."

He spent time in the studio, recording songs meant for his ears only, when a friend heard a tape and passed the word around that a promising new star was waiting to be discovered. After meeting and falling in love with Bonet, Kravitz was an even hotter property.

"Being that I was married to her, people were interested in what I was doing. I was on the cover of all these magazines, just because I was married to her. 'Who is this guy?'"



LENNY KRAVITZ

"When I first met Lisa, I was a studio musician, but I still didn't know what to do, because I played funk, rock, jazz, whatever and could play all sorts of instruments," said Kravitz, who plays all the instruments on "Let Love Rule."

"We're so similar. I saw myself in her, a reflection of myself. All of a sudden I knew what I had to. After she was finished with her show, I started writing and cutting. I came to New York and booked myself in a studio. My writing come back and I started building up these tunes."

Kravitz's nasal vocals on "Let Love Rule" and "Be" recall Lennon and Elvis Costello, and "Mr. Cab Driver," an angry talking blues, has the man-on-the-street feel of Reed's best known songs.

"I got 'The Best of Lou Reed' and 'Walk on the Wild Side' just blew my mind. I fell in love with that Lower East Side, New York sound, getting that message over. But I don't think about doing a Lou Reed-sounding record, certain sounds just come out of me."

PBS Documentary Tells Story Of FDR Aide Harry Hopkins

By W. Dale Nelson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Harry Hopkins had something in common with Samuel Pierce. Both were in charge of programs to help the poor. Both got a lot of criticism for the way they ran them.

In the case of Pierce, former President Reagan's housing secretary, critics have said the poor people weren't getting the help.

In the case of Hopkins, the trouble was that they were getting the help, and critics of Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal didn't like it.

The story of Hopkins, the social worker who headed the Works Progress Administration and later became Roosevelt's most trusted wartime aide, is told tonight in a 90-minute PBS documentary airing at 9 p.m. EDT.

"Hopkins kept the WPA free of scandal and became one of the most vilified public servants in modern times," narrator Walter Cronkite says.

Businessmen said the New Deal agency undermined the morals of workers and created boondoggles for the lazy. Hopkins said if he deserved any criticism it was "that I didn't do enough when I had the chance" to help the down and out.

Arthur Schlesinger Jr., Pulitzer Prize-winning historian of the New Deal, who appears on the program, said in an interview, "There is a difference between having idealists in government and having people who are there either to promote their own careers or to make contacts so they can make more money after their government service. Idealists have many faults, but they rarely steal."

Among others who reminisce about Hopkins on the documentary is the late Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., a young senator in New Deal days, who talked to the filmmakers in one of his last interviews.

"You never heard of Harry Hopkins trying to make any money, getting Roosevelt to approve some project over there, getting some fellow a contract. He wouldn't any more have asked for that than he would have asked for the Lord to come down in person," says Pepper.

Pamela Harriman, who met Hopkins when she was Winston Churchill's daughter-in-law and Hopkins came on a wartime mission to Britain, is interviewed on the program.

Hopkins had a brusque manner and a talent for getting at the heart of things, which prompted Churchill to tell him jocularly that the British crown was going to name him "Lord Root of the Matter."

Even at the highest levels, players reach silly contracts. But you never know what might happen if you can play the spots off the cards. This deal is from the Czechoslovakia vs. Poland match at the recent European Championships.

North-South were using Canape, a method where the shorter of two suits is bid first. Thus, South's first two bids showed longer spades than hearts. Thereafter, the bidding was natural if a trifle too optimistic.

The diamond lead put a crimp in declarer's chances—it knocked out a dummy entry before it could serve a useful purpose. It seemed that, even if hearts were to break 3-3, declarer had only 12 tricks—five trumps, four hearts and the three minor-suit winners. But Dame Fortune was smiling on the Czechs.

Declarer won the first trick in dummy, cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club. Next, a diamond to the table's remaining high honor was the entry for another club ruff. Then the king of hearts was used as an entry to ruff dummy's last club, this time with the king of spades.

After cashing the ace of trumps, declarer led his remaining trump and boldly finessed the board's ten. When that held and East followed, only one more hurdle remained to be crossed. The outstanding trump was drawn and the ace and queen of hearts were cashed. When that suit broke evenly, declarer had 13 tricks—three trumps, three club ruffs, four hearts and three minor winners.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: C equals V

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Would I

By Nyeema Morgan

Would I choose to live in this marvelous universe if I had a choice?

Of course, there are wonderful beaches.
Beautiful animals.
Spectacular mountains
And our loved ones.

Would I choose to see these beaches polluted by carelessness?
Would I choose to see the cruelty to animals?
Would I choose to see these mountains crumble down?
Would I choose to have war break up the love of our loved ones?

No. No, not I. No, not I.

I don't know how long this will last.
Would I choose to be here when it happens?

No, not I. No, not I.

Duties Of The President

By Casey Lynn James

The president's job is very important. He has a lot of titles that I might not understand but I will do my best to explain his duties to you.

He is leader of our nation. He represents the United States to the world. Our president talks to the other leaders and makes agreements. He presents awards, rides in parades and eats at special dinners. This is the president's job as Chief of State.

The president is Commander in Chief of all the armed forces. He tells the armies how much money they can spend. He decides if we will have a war and what our plan of attack would be if we did have a war. He has people to help him with his decisions.

As Chief Executive, the president has much power. He has the right to hire, to fire and to nominate other people who serve under him. He makes sure all the laws are followed the right way.

As you can see from these duties, the president has a very important job. The people of the United States elect him to be in charge of our nation and trust him to make the right decisions for our future. For these reasons, the person we elect should be the best person available for the job as president of the United States of America.

My Day At The Beach

By Jessica Daniel

One day I went to the beach with my friends. We met some new friends. Everywhere we went they were behind us. We decided to play a trick on them. We knew where there was this tree that had lots of bees in it. So we decided to lead them to the bee's tree. Bees came out and they were all over the place. They ran away as fast as possible. The bees were behind them. We never saw them again.

Sherlock Danie And Fishface

By Danie Maness

It was a dark and stormy night. The lights went out in the city. Fishface, a sea monster from Manhattan, had sucked all the power from the lines. He used the power for his red laser eye beams. The laser eye beams could freeze the world and turn people into crystal.

Sherlock Danie, a mystery solver, decided to fight the monster and save the world. Sherlock Danie hid around the corner on Elm Street and waited for the monster. Fishface came down the street and started sucking the power from the lines. Sherlock Danie took out his laser sword and scared the monster. He was able to tie him up and put him in the monster jail. Sherlock Danie solved the case and saved the world.

Greenville Spending

Adjacent is a pie graph of how the city of Greenville spends its money. Before we study this pie graph, it is important to know how the city gets its money to spend. Most of the money or income comes from taxes paid by citizens. Other income comes from grants from state and federal governments. Local licenses and permits issued bring in money. Investment earnings also bring money into the city of Greenville.

Now let's look closely at the pie graph and see how Greenville government leaders spend the city's money. Most of the money is spent on public safety. This includes police and fire protection and rescue services for the people of Greenville. According to the pie graph, over 6½ million dollars are spent for protection.

Does Greenville owe money? Yes! Look at the slice of the graph called debt service. This money is used to pay off debts which the city owes for money it has borrowed.

What is the next biggest expense? It is for general government which includes salaries of government officials and the general running of the day-to-day city needs. Over 4 million dollars are spent here.

Where is the smallest or least amount of money spent for the city of Greenville? It is for capital projects. This money could be used for needed improvements including building projects.

Look at each piece of the pie and find all of the ways the money of the city of Greenville is being spent.

Celebrate! It's Pasta Month

Pasta Tops Ranks

By Carol Deegan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Pasta has made it to the top of America's list of favorite foods. The options have expanded from macaroni and cheese and spaghetti and meatballs to an endless array of side dishes, salads, main courses and desserts in a variety of shapes, sizes and flavors.

Pasta is found on athletes' tables as they load up on carbohydrates before a competition — and in countless kitchens where even the busiest or most inexperienced home chef can create a meal in minutes — and feel like a gourmet.

Justin Arecchi, president of Frescala Foods in San Antonio, Texas, makers of fresh pasta products, says: "One of the best things about fresh pasta is that it has more texture, or 'bite' in your mouth, and it has a taste of its own. It's not just a vehicle for the sauce."

Fresh pasta is quick and easy to prepare. The cooking time is short — about 1 or 2 minutes. (Most people have a tendency to overcook pasta, resulting in a mushy, bland-tasting product.)

Roman Pasta Shells will add some gusto to your pasta month celebration

ROMAN PASTA SHELLS

1 pkg. (10 oz.) frozen chopped broccoli, thawed and well drained
1 cup (4 oz.) shredded mozzarella cheese
6 hard-cooked eggs
½ cup chopped green onions with tops
½ cup chopped green pepper
1 tsp. marjoram leaves, crushed and divided
1 tsp. basil leaves, crushed and divided
½ tsp. salt
1 can (10¾ oz.) condensed golden mushroom soup, divided
½ cup milk
16 large pasta shells, cooked
¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese

In large bowl, toss together broccoli, mozzarella cheese, eggs, onions, pepper, ½ teaspoon marjoram, ½ teaspoon basil and salt. Stir in ½ can undiluted soup until well combined. Set aside.

For sauce, blend together milk and remaining soup and seasonings. Pour ½ cup of the sauce mixture evenly over bottom of 11-by-7-1½ inch baking dish or pan.

Fill each pasta shell with about ¼ cup reserved broccoli mixture and place in baking dish. Drizzle remaining sauce mixture over filled shells. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. Cover and bake in preheated 350° oven 30 minutes. Remove foil. Bake until heated through, an additional 15 minutes.

Pesto With Pasta Is Natural Marriage Of Italian Delights

By Nancy Byal
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Next to garlic, the Italian seasoning I use most is pesto: a paste of basil, parsley, garlic, oil, nuts and Parmesan cheese. A little dab is delicious on fish, chicken or steak, or tossed with pasta or vegetables. Many gardeners grow basil and make their own pesto. I also like the commercial pesto that's sold in the refrigerator case in my supermarket.

This salad won raves from our tasters at Better Homes and Gardens as the best tortellini salad ever. What did they like best about it? You guessed it —the pesto-seasoned dressing.

FAVORITE TORTELLINI SALAD

One 7-oz. package frozen cheese tortellini or 3½ oz. (2 cups) dried cheese tortellini
1 small red sweet pepper, cut into thin, bite-size strips
¾ cup broccoli flowerets
1 small carrot, thinly sliced
⅓ cup sliced pimiento-stuffed olives or ripe olives
¾ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing
⅓ cup purchased pesto sauce
¼ cup milk
2 tbsps. grated Parmesan cheese
1 tbsp. olive oil or cooking oil
1 tsp. vinegar
½ tsp. pepper
1 clove garlic, minced (optional)
Fresh spinach leaves

Cook tortellini according to package directions; drain. Rinse with cold water; drain well. In a large mixing bowl combine tortellini, sweet pepper, broccoli, carrot and olives.

For dressing, in a small mixing bowl stir together mayonnaise or salad dressing, pesto sauce, milk, cheese, oil, vinegar, pepper and garlic. Pour dressing over tortellini mixture; toss lightly until well mixed. Cover and chill at least 5 hours. Serve in a spinach-lined bowl. Makes 8 side-dish servings.

Pasta Is Almost Foolproof

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — If you can boil water, you can cook pasta.

The National Pasta Association in Arlington, Va., says pasta is practically foolproof — if you keep in mind the shape of the pasta and follow the recommended cooking time, testing often for doneness.

Pasta tastes best when it is cooked to a firm, tender consistency known as "al dente," which means "to the tooth."

For best results, use a large pot that allows the pasta to move around and cook evenly. Use 4 to 6 quarts of water for each pound of pasta. Add salt, if desired, after the water has come to a hard boil.

Add pasta to rapidly boiling water gradually or in batches, so that the water continues to boil. Stir during the first minute of cooking to keep pasta from sticking together or to the pan.

Follow package instructions for cooking time. Begin testing for doneness after about 6 minutes of cooking. Use a long-handled wooden fork or spoon to remove a strand from the pot and taste for doneness. When done, drain pasta thoroughly in a colander.

Reheat leftover pasta dishes in the microwave. Cover the dish and set on 100 percent power (high) for 30 seconds to 1 minute.

Pasta Sauces

— Long rod or string pastas, including cappellini and linguine, are best combined with oil-based sauces. Most meat sauces are not recommended with this type of pasta because the meat chunks fall to the bottom of the bowl rather than being uniformly distributed.

— Tubular pastas and those with a cuplike space, such as shells, are designed to trap sauces. Combine with chopped meat and vegetables. The sauce and toppings will be trapped in the pasta's curves.

— Short, stubby varieties of macaroni are ideal for cream and cheese sauces such as macaroni and cheese. Very small macaroni and noodles go well in soups.

— Egg noodles do best with meats and vegetables; in puddings, streudels and soups; and as side dishes.

Taking A Look At Gin-Seng

Q. Is there any harm in taking gin-seng? — B.K., Greenville

A. I've had an interest in gin-seng for years. When I was collecting my dissertation research data in the hills of eastern Tennessee, I'd periodically accompany an old gentleman who would gather wild gin-seng and sell it for some extra cash. There were a few others who cultivated gin-seng for sale.

It's been cultivated in the U.S. since the late 1800s. But the wild gin-seng that matured to look like a human-like form would always bring more money. The Chinese word is jen-chan or manroot.

Why? Because that gin-seng was exported to Asia, where the well formed roots (more powerful) were used to make teas and other elixirs.

Gin-seng has been in world trade markets since the late 1770s. The poorly shaped were processed into pills and exported by the Asians to the U.S. I used to team teach a graduate nutrition course with a cultural anthropologist. We used gin-seng as a great example of how Americans believe in the "magic" of pills.

We believe a pill will cure this and that, give energy, help us lose weight or improve almost anything. We strip the gin-seng of the beliefs or tradition associated with its natural shape and make it into a pill.

Last week, I saw an ad for "Loving Mood Capsules." A main ingredient was gin-seng. I also saw it listed as an ingredient in Pure Energy Capsules.

I've noticed over the last couple of years that gin-seng is becoming popular not only as a pill, but also as an ingredient in "health food" cookies. Chinese have used it as a seasoning. It has a licorice-like flavor.

Jo Bartlett and I searched the literature for scientific information. We chatted with Dr. Holly Matthews, anthropology, but we found little medical information.

The only helpful information we found came from the "Food For Health" encyclopedia. It notes that generally people consume small amounts (1 teaspoon) and it is too small to contribute much of nutrients. It says, too, that gin-seng "may raise blood pressure in some susceptible persons." these comments were not referenced, so we couldn't evaluate the studies to see if we agree.

I had heard years ago that Soviet cosmonauts took pieces of gin-seng into space with them to prevent ailments. I don't know if that's a fact or just a story. Anyway, like most things, used in moderation it can't seem to hurt.

TV Dinners, Like Baby Boomers Are Trying To Be Healthy At 35

By Charlyne Varkonyi
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Once upon a time when members of the baby boom generation were children, Ozzie and Harriet were the ideals of mom and pophood and everyone was talking about this new-fangled miracle called a "heat and serve" TV dinner.

The year was 1954. Flimsy metal trays were placed before flickering black-and-white TV and children considered it a treat to eat Swanson's first TV dinner — turkey, cornbread dressing, gravy, peas and sweet potatoes — while they watched "Superman" or "The Cisco Kid."

Even the box the dinner came in looked like a TV set with wood grain finish, tuning knobs and a screen. And the container was considered tray chic for the time — an oven-safe metal contraption with sections to keep the foods from running into each other.

Now, 35 years later, busy baby boomers have moved the frozen dinners from TV trays to the dinner table. Microwaveable plastic dishes have replaced metal and diners can pick from a menu of choices — from the old-time turkey and salisbury steak dinners to entrees with names right out of glitzy gourmet restaurants to health-conscious meals low in fat, sodium and cholesterol.

The TV dinner of the 1950s has evolved into what the National Frozen Food Association says became a $2.5 billion a year industry of frozen dinners and entrees in the late 1980s.

But although the food companies tapped new markets in this decade with their low-calorie and premium gourmet dinners, the trade journals report that frozen dinner sales have been relatively flat for the past five years. Their last big year was 1984 — right after Le Menu's national rollout, according to Advertising Age and Supermarket News. Premium dinners with fancy names and fancier price tags have been hit the hardest — dropping anywhere from 10 percent to 30 percent.

The latest remedy? Some of the biggest frozen food companies are betting their money on America's mania for health and fitness, fueled by the Surgeon General's report on "Nutrition and Health" and the eat-for-health advice dispensed by everyone from the American Heart Association to the American Cancer Society and the National Cholesterol Education Program.

Recently, Stouffer's became the third company to offer health-minded dinners with the unveiling of its Right Course, an 11-item line including exotic-sounding dishes like sesame chicken, sliced turkey in mild curry sauce and beef Dijon with pasta and vegetables.

Other companies already offering similar products include ConAgra's Healthy Choice and Campbell Soup Co.'s Le Menu LightStyle. And although a spokesman for Kraft General Foods Group refuses to comment, the trade journals are speculating that Kraft will bring back the Eating Right line, similar products that were mysteriously pulled from eight test markets last fall after a six-month trial. The trade journal Advertising Age said that some industry executives were speculating that the line was withdrawn because it was too upscale for the market at that time.

In general, the health-conscious dinners differ slightly in their requirements, but basically they aim to be under 310 calories, get less than 30 percent of their calories from fat and have less than 1,000 mg of sodium and less than 100 mg of cholesterol.

"I think it's clear that if 'calorie-controlled' was the message of the 1980s, 'nutrition-controlled' products are what the '90s will be keying in on," Stephen Hughes, vice president for new products at ConAgra told Advertising Age.

ConAgra, Campbell's and Stouffer's will put an estimated $80 million into promotion of these dinners next year, but not everyone is sure consumers will bite.

Mona Doyle, a food-trend watcher who runs Consumers Network in Philadelphia, says that the market for frozen dinners faces stiff competition from outside as well as inside the freezer case. The industry is fragmenting, she says, with competition from chilled and shelf-stable foods as well as frozen.

"I think nutritional eating and the refueling concept is valid with young people," she says. "Will that drive the entire market? Will that be the password of the 1990s in food? I am not sure that nutrition itself can do it."

The market watchers do agree that the product that fueled the TV dinner revolution was the introduction of Stouffer's Lean Cuisine in 1981. Lean Cuisine is credited with setting the 300-calorie limit as the generally accepted standard for all calorie-controlled entrees.

But the low-calorie market was not necessarily low in fat or sodium. And many nutritionists warned consumers that some of the dinners were getting up to 45 percent of their calories from fat and more than 1,000 mg. of sodium.

In fact, in January 1988, the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a non-profit consumer group in Washington, dubbed Lean

By Joan Drake
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Previous "Back to Basics" columns have explained the techniques for mixing and baking shortened cakes. This final series shows how to frost the cooled cake layers.

The word "frosting" has come to be used interchangeably for all types of cake decoration. By the strictest definition, however, frostings are sweet mixtures that are thick enough to spread in a thin layer but that still hold their shape or texture. Icings are thinner and shinier than frostings yet are still capable of holding a shape. Glazes are more liquid and are poured or brushed over a cake.

There are countless ways to decorate cakes, but the typical American layer cake has a rounded top and a simple, complementary frosting. This covering not only adds eye appeal and flavor to shortened cakes, it also provides a protective coating that helps maintain the cake's moistness.

Before beginning to frost the cake layers, trim away any ragged edges with a pair of scissors. If the top or sides are uneven, they also may be trimmed.

Loose crumbs should be brushed away so they don't get mixed into the frosting. (If the surface is still rough, it may be coated with a very thin layer of frosting that has been diluted with milk. This layer should be allowed to dry about 10 minutes at room temperature or be chilled.)

Place the bottom cake layer upside down in the center of a pedestal or serving plate. Slip overlapping strips of foil, wax paper or parchment, about three inches wide, under the edges of the cake (Step 1) to protect the plate.

Spoon one-quarter to one-third of the frosting onto this layer (Step 2) and smooth to the edges with a spatula (Step 3). Pushing the frosting, rather than pulling or dragging it, with the spatula prevents pulling up crumbs.

Flexible, narrow stainless-steel pastry (or icing) spatulas are available in a variety of lengths. Choose the size most comfortable for you to work with.

Position the top layer over the bottom, right-side up (Step 4), so the two flat sides face together. The sides of the cake, of course, should be straight and even.

Spread frosting around the sides of the cake (Step 5), beginning at the lower edge and pushing it up toward the top. Spoon the remainder of the frosting onto the top and either smooth it or leave it textured or swirled (Step 6).

After the frosting has set, carefully remove the foil strips by gently lifting the cake with a small pastry spatula. The result should be a neat cake and clean plate.

Step 1: Slip overalapping strips of foild, about 3 inches wide, under the edges of cake to protect the serving plate.

LAT-WP News Service

Pound Cake Wins Quaker Grand Prize

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – Apple Butter Pound Cake, flavored with apple butter, cream cheese and cinnamon, has won the $5,000 grand prize in The Quaker Corn Meal Contemporary Classics recipe contest. The prize-winning recipe was submitted by Helen Peach of Meridian, Miss.

APPLE BUTTER POUND CAKE

2 cups all-purpose flour
1 cup corn meal
2 tsps. baking powder
1 tsp. cinnamon
¼ tsp. salt (optional)
1 cup spiced apple butter
1 tbsp. bourbon whiskey (optional)
1 tsp. vanilla
1½ cups granulated sugar
½ cup margarine, softened
One 8-oz. package cream cheese, softened
2 eggs
1 cup chopped pecans
Glaze (recipe follows)

Heat oven to 350°. Grease a 10-inch tube pan or 12-cup bundt pan. Combine flour, corn meal, baking powder, cinnamon and salt. In separate bowl, combine apple butter, whiskey and vanilla.

In large mixer bowl, beat granulated sugar, margarine and cream cheese until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, mixing well after each addition. Add flour mixture alternately with apple butter mixture, mixing at low speed of electric mixer until well blended. Stir in pecans.

Spoon batter into prepared pan; spread evenly to edges. Bake 60 to 70 minutes or until wooden pick inserted in center comes out clean. Cool 10 minutes in pan; remove to wire rack. Cool completely.

Glaze

Combine 1 cup powdered sugar, 4 to 5 teaspoons milk, 1½ teaspoons corn syrup, ¼ teaspoon vanilla or bourbon whiskey; drizzle over cooled cake. Store cake tightly covered. Makes 16 servings.

TV Dinners Try For Healthy Outlook As They Reach Age 35

Cuisine one of the fattiest of the low-calorie lines — with more than half the dinners it offered then getting more than 30 percent of calories from fat. Other offenders included Weight Watchers, Budget Gourmet Slim Selects and Le Menu's regular line.

Many of these dinners are still well over the recommended 30 percent of calories from fat and the frozen food companies provide charts in their press materials to document the excesses of competing products. Percentage of fat is important because a gram of fat contains more than twice the calories of a gram of protein or carbohydrate.

"Studies comparing low-calorie diets in which the same amount of calories were taken in have shown those subjects who eat fewer calories from fat lose weight more successfully than those eating diets with a higher percentage of calories from fat," says Dr. Audrey Cross, an associate professor of nutrition at the Columbia University School of Public Health.

Cross, former special assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture, helped interpret and implement the Dietary Guidelines for Americans. Currently serving as a consultant to the Campbell Soup Co., she has redesigned the label for Le Menu LightStyle dinners specifically to meet the guidelines.

The label includes not only the percentage of calories from fat but the percentage of calories from saturated fat, cholesterol, sodium and complex carbohydrates, as well as the percentage of the recommended daily intake of these components recommended by leading health organizations. The label also includes the percentage of calories from fat and diet exchanges that are used by diabetics and people on certain weight loss diets.

Cross says that the labeling was formulated to meet nutrition criteria that conform to recommendations of the American Heart Association, the National Academy of Sciences and the Surgeon General. The LightStyle dinners contain less than 300 calories, less than 30 percent of calories from fat, under 100 mg. of cholesterol and under 1,000 mg. of sodium.

"It is important for consumers to pay attention to the information on the back of the label and not be deceived by the calorie count," Cross says.

But, despite all the innovations and attempts to attract the new health-conscious consumer, the frozen food companies admit that the more things change the more they remain the same.

In fact, when many of the premium dinners came out they offered unique dishes such as Le Menu's chicken almondine and chicken breasts Florentine. But within three years, the unique varieties were replaced with the basics.

Popcorn A Light, Delicious Snack Food

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Love to snack — but need to watch your intake of calories and fat? Plain popping corn contains no cholesterol, sugar, artificial additives or preservatives.

Popcorn has a lot going for it.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture says 1 cup of plain popcorn popped in a hot air popper contains only 23 calories. The American Dental Association recommends plain popcorn as a sugar-free snack alternative.

The American Dietetic Association includes popcorn as a preferable bread exchange on weight-control diets. And because of its high fiber content (15 percent total dietary fat), popcorn has earned recommendations from the American Cancer Society and the National Cancer Institute.

Popcorn can be prepared on the top of the stove, in the microwave, or with a hot air or electric popper. The following tips are provided by Orville Redenbacher's, maker of a variety of popping corn products:

Microwave: The microwave is quick and convenient, but be sure to follow package instructions. Never leave a bag of microwave popcorn unattended. Most brands are ready in 5 minutes or less.

Hot air popper: Preheat the hot air popper for 3 minutes. Measure ½ cup popping corn and pour into the popping chamber. Place a 4-quart heatproof bowl under the popping chute. After popping, add butter and salt, if desired.

Top-of-the Stove and electric poppers: To make 3 quarts of popcorn, carefully measure ⅓ cup corn and 2 tablespoons oil. Be sure the lid allows steam to escape during popping so that popcorn stays light and fluffy. Always open the top away from you to avoid contact with escaping steam.

Shake the pan or popper to make sure every kernel is heated equally. When popping slows down, remove from heat or unplug popper.

PRALINES, POPCORN & CREAM

⅔ cup firmly packed dark brown sugar
¼ cup butter
½ gallon vanilla ice cream, softened
2 tbsps. coffee-flavored liqueur, optional

Preheat oven to 400 degrees F. In a large saucepan, stir together popcorn, brown sugar and butter until brown sugar and butter are melted. Spread onto a foil-lined, 15- by 10-inch baking sheet. Bake in a 400-degree F oven for 8 minutes; cool 10 minutes.

Meanwhile, in a medium bowl, mix softened ice cream with coffee-flavored liqueur. Stir cooled, candied popcorn mixture into ice cream. Freeze until ready to serve. Makes ½ gallon.

PEANUT BUTTER & JELLY THUMBPRINT NO-BAKE COOKIES

2 qts. popped popcorn
1 cup light corn syrup
1 cup creamy peanut butter
3 tbsps. fruit jam

Place popped corn in a large bowl, set aside. In a medium saucepan, over medium-high heat, bring corn syrup to a boil. Boil for 3 minutes; remove from heat. Stir in peanut butter.

Working quickly, pour peanut butter mixture over popcorn, tossing gently to coat. Allow to cool 10 minutes. Roll popcorn mixture into eighteen 2-inch balls. Press thumb firmly into center of each ball. Fill each cookie center with ½ teaspoon of your favorite jam. Store in an airtight container. Makes 18 cookies.

Yes, There Is A Way To Eat Low-Fat Italian

LAT-WP NEWS SERIVCE

Do you have to answer "yes" to any of these questions?

Do you have a cholesterol level of 200 milligrams or higher? Do you or any member of your immediate family have a history of coronary artery disease, heart attacks or strokes? Are you a diabetic or do you have a family history of diabetes? Do you have hypertension (high blood pressure)? Are you concerned about the research that indicates that a diet high in fat can increase your risk of certain types of cancer (colon, breast, prostate)? Do you have a family history of any of these types of cancer? Do you smoke? Are you overweight?

Joanne D'Agostino asks these questions when she lectures about a fat-restricted diet. It is with missionary fervor that she speaks, because following a low-fat diet became a matter of life or death for her husband, Dr. Frank J. D'Agostino.

"My husband is athletic. He walks everywhere. Each day, he customarily runs up six flights of stairs at the hospital and never uses the elevator between floors. But in the fall of 1986, he came home two or three evenings and complained that he was feeling 'winded' when he reached the sixth floor. My response was, 'Anyone would feel that way.'"

He replied that he still felt a certain heaviness and added that he was going to have his heart checked. His cardiogram was normal but the technicians had to stop in the middle of giving him a stress test. It all moved quickly after that.

Mrs. D'Agostino said, "He had angiography and a cardiac catheterization. The finding: Three of his main arteries were blocked including one that was 90 percent closed. His doctor told him that because he was not old enough to develop the collateral circulation older people have, he would have had a very serious, if not fatal, heart attack within the next six months if the problem hadn't been discovered."

D'Agostino had angioplasty (in which a balloon is inflated to open blocked arteries), which was successful. He was sent home after being told to follow a low-fat diet.

Mrs. D'Agostino commented, "I felt guilty because I felt I had done this to him. And I felt a sense of panic because I thought we had already been following a prudent diet most of the time. But the diet had failed us.

"Obviously, it wasn't enough for us to substitute unsaturated fat for saturated fat. And when we had tried to be really strict, eating only fish or chicken broiled, the diet had been bland and unpalatable. We became bored and sometimes would slip out for something like a greasy burger," she said.

"We knew, however, that there was no room for cheating on the diet. I had to find a way to pare the fat in our diet to the lowest degree and still make the food interesting enough to stick to it," Mrs. D'Agostino commented. Her answer led to a newly published book called "Italian Cooking for a Healthy Heart" (Eagle Publishing).

She spent enough time in supermarkets to practically establish residency there. She began by thinking of her and her husband's favorite foods and their ingredients. Then she would check the ingredients out according to the standards she had set for herself.

"I made up my mind that there'd be no food in our diet that contained more than 20 percent fat," she said. That decision automatically ruled out the use of margarines and oils that are 99 percent fat.

Product by product, she learned which ones fit her requirements. When she had checked out enough for the recipe she had in mind, she headed for her home kitchen and prepared it.

The time paid off with dramatic results for D'Agostino. In just three weeks on Mrs. D'Agostino's regime, his cholesterol level dropped 100 points. [illegible] any added medi[illegible] Fran[illegible] cholesterol level r[illegible] to [illegible] milligrams," she said.

He has also rea[illegible]ed the point where he [illegible]ed an even more im[illegible]y following the lo[illegible]sly, he has actually [illegible]reverse the plaquing [illegible]eries. Mrs. D'Agostin[illegible] Frank had a cardiac ca[illegible] right after the angio[illegible] showed the vessels he[illegible] year later, they were [illegible] open but they were open[illegible]r degree than when they [illegible]ened."

Quickly as[illegible]ood labels for the choles[illegible] fat content became a[illegible]sion, Mrs. D'Agostino g[illegible] to the tricks. She is quick t[illegible]dvice gleaned from her supe[illegible]et experience: "Avoid prod[illegible] that contain hydrogenated [illegible]d tropical oils such as palm[illegible] palm and coconut oil. A[illegible] they're often labeled as 'v[illegible]ils,' they are saturated fats[illegible]uld be avoided."

She adds, "[illegible]be fooled by labels boastin[illegible] cholesterol.' Despite such labe[illegible] a product can be high in fat a[illegible]y contain the tropical oils."

At first, Mrs. D'Agostino said she thought she'd do a little pamphlet of her favorite recipes. Then she envisioned a paperback book. But the New York City publisher who bought her idea of an Italian cookbook of low-fat and low-cholesterol dishes wanted even more. And the result is a collection of 140 easy-to-make recipes.

"The book probably should have been called 'The I Hate to Cook Book of Italian Cooking for a Healthy Heart.' I'm not masterful when it comes to preparations and when I am in the kitchen, there are pots everywhere," she said.

One of the critics who read the manuscript for the publisher commented, "There's no medical mumbo jumbo." Mrs. D'Agostino said, "Instead of telling people who read the book how sick they are, I'm telling them how to do something about it. I've done my work for the person who prepares the meals."

DELICIOUS CHEESECAKE

Egg substitute equivalent to 6 eggs
2 lbs. low-fat cottage cheese (1 percent fat or less)
6 tbsps. flour
½ tsp. baking powder
2 tbsps. grated lemon rind
1 tsp. vanilla extract

Combine sugar and egg substitute and beat on medium speed with electric mixer for 1 minute. Add cottage cheese and continue to beat until smooth and creamy. Sift flour and baking powder together. Add gradually to cheese mixture, blending thoroughly after each addition. Add grated lemon rind and vanilla extract and beat for 1 minute. Pour into 10-inch springform pan. Bake at 350 degrees for one hour, or until toothpick inserted into center of cake comes out clean. Let cool; remove rim of springform pan, place cheesecake on large plate and refrigerate until well chilled. Makes 12 servings.

MOCK EGGPLANT PARMESAN

3 tbsps. fine cracker crumbs or breadcrumbs (non-fat variety you make yourself by toasting bread and running it through your food processor)
½ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
½ tsp. garlic powder
½ tsp. oregano
1 cup chopped onions
2 cups crushed tomatoes
1 cup dry-curd cottage cheese

Peel eggplant and cut into ⅜-inch slices. Combine crumbs, salt, pepper, garlic powder and oregano. Press eggplant slices into crumb mixture, coating each slice thoroughly. Arrange slices on cookie sheet in single layer. Broil 6 to 7 minutes on each side to brown. While eggplant is broiling, dry-saute onions over low heat until tender in medium nonstick saucepan. Add tomatoes; cover and simmer for 10 minutes. Place 2 or 3 tablespoons of tomato sauce on the bottom of a 9- by 13-inch baking dish. Arrange layer of eggplant slices on top of sauce. Place a small amount of cottage cheese on each eggplant slice; then top with additional sauce. Repeat layers until all ingredients are used up, ending with tomato sauce layer. Cover with aluminum foil and bake at 375 degrees for 30 minutes. Makes 6 servings.
