Aftershocks Rattle Bay Area

Northern California Slowly Returns To Life As Relief Pours In

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Three strong aftershocks rattled Northern California today as relief poured into the earthquake-devastated Bay area from throughout the world.

Workers dug into a 1 1/4-mile-long slab of collapsed freeway in Oakland with fading hopes that anyone might be alive. Authorities fear more than 270 people were killed, most in the highway cave-in.

There were signs of life slowly returning to normal. Power was restored in the city's Financial District early this morning, setting off thousands of alarms. Airports were open, and ferries from Southern California steamed north to bolster the overburdened Bay area commuter fleet.

The third game of the World Series, which was within minutes of the opening pitch when the quake struck, was rescheduled for Tuesday at Candlestick Park in San Francisco.

Still, many offices remained closed. The Bay Bridge, the lifeline that links Oakland and San Francisco, was expected to be closed at least one or two more weeks while a collapsed section is repaired.

An aftershock that measured 5.0 on the Richter scale of ground motion struck at 3:15 a.m. and was centered near Watsonville, 10 miles south of Santa Cruz, according to the state Office of Emergency Services.

"It was real strong," said Kelly Johnston, an admitting clerk at AMI Community Hospital in Santa Cruz. "I ran to the doorway. Most people were just standing there frozen."

"No one is really sleeping around here," Watsonville resident John Murphy said.

Two other aftershocks measured 4.5. The aftershocks collapsed the damaged steeple of a Watsonville church, and further damaged buildings in Santa Cruz, near the epicenter of Tuesday's 6.9 quake, state officials said.

As of early today, more than 1,400 aftershocks were recorded. The strongest, 5.2 on the Richter scale, struck within 40 minutes of initial jolt, according to the U.S. Geological Survey.

Bush Will Visit Bay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush said today he will visit Northern California on Friday to get a first-hand look at earthquake damage and "to provide encouragement" to victims.

"We will stay on top of it," the president vowed.

He announced his travel plans at a picture-taking session in the Oval Office as he met with Vice President Dan Quayle and Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner, just back from their own inspection tour of the stricken San Francisco Bay area.

White House aides said Bush would spend about three hours in the Bay area.

The visit will include a helicopter survey of the affected areas and the president will also meet with local officials, said presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

Panel Chief Denies Appeal Hearing On Chocowinity Bay Development

By J. Ward Best
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Weyerhaeuser has cleared an obstacle blocking its proposed marina development on Chocowinity Bay. But environmentalists vow to continue their efforts to uproot the project.

Dan Besse, chairman of the state Coastal Resources Commission, said he decided Tuesday against the board granting an appeal on a permit issued for Cypress Landing, an 875-acre development proposed by Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Co.

Dave McNaught, director of the Pamlico Tar River Foundation, an environmental group based in Washington, N.C., said the decision to allow construction along the waters of the bay will reach beyond the shores of the small Pamlico River tributary and affect other coastal areas.

But Kip Perego, a spokesman for Weyerhaeuser Real Estate, dismissed the environmental concerns as over-reaction, and said the development should not be blocked just because the group wished to challenge the state's regulations.

On Sept. 11, the state granted Weyerhaeuser the necessary permit for construction over the objections of environmental groups and the state Division of Coastal Management. The permit included four pages of conditions, mostly restricting construction and operation of a 302-slip marina and private piers.

Besse said Wednesday his decision to deny a hearing on the appeal was based on what he considered a low possibility of the appeal being successful before the full board. He said

Weyerhaeuser's permit met all existing rules, and the appeal was actually seeking to change the rules concerning coastal development.

"They would have to change the law" in order to win the appeal, Besse said. And challenging a specific permit is not the proper process for changing the state regulations, he said.

McNaught said the appeal was filed not just for establishing a precedent on all marinas and coastal development. "We feel like there are many good guidelines in place," he said. "We feel they did not follow the procedure and standards in this case."

McNaught said his group will wait to hear Besse's specific comments for denying the appeal before deciding what action to take. But he said Wednesday the issue is far from settled.

Perego, community development manager with Weyerhaeuser Real Estate, said Wednesday he was pleased with Besse's decision, and felt the state's action in granting the permit was appropriate to begin with.

"We've done what we felt was a very good job of planning ahead," Perego said.

Perego said Weyerhaeuser began surveying and engineering on the project earlier this month. And construction on the project could begin by the end of this year or the beginning of next year, he said.

In its appeal, the Pamlico Tar River Foundation claimed the state overstepped its bounds in allowing development in public trust waters. The size of the development — 865 homes and the marina on the bay — would impact both the environmental quality of the area and severely restrict the public use of the area, the appeal said.

GASTON MONK

JOE GANTZ

Monk, Gantz Will Head Bond Drive

By Charles Hoskinson
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County school officials today launched their campaign to pass a $25.7 million bond referendum by introducing the co-chairmen of the bond campaign steering committee.

Gaston Monk, Pitt County NAACP president, and Joe Gantz, president of Empire Brushes Co., were selected by the Board of Education to replace Robert S. Griffin, who said he decided not to serve as chairman after the board denied Superintendent Edwin L. West Jr. renewal of his contract last month.

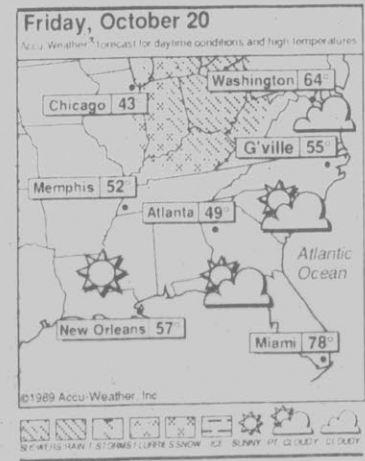

The appointments were announced by school officials at a noon press conference today at Greenville Country Club.

Both Monk and Gantz said they will work aggressively to convince voters to support the bond issue in a Dec. 12 referendum. Money raised by the bond issue will go to pay for school construction in the county.

The school system needs the bond money to build quality schools, Monk, a former teacher and principal, said. "We've worked under substandard conditions in the past,"

Eveready To Lay Off 38 Workers

Eveready Battery Co. Inc. of Greenville plans to lay off 38 production workers effective in mid-November, according to its plant manager, Joseph T. Tison.

Company officials notified employees last week of the impending layoffs, Tison said this morning.

"The layoff is due to a downturn in sales," Tison said. "We normally go through one or two of these a year." He said that Eveready hopes to bring the employees back if sales pick up.

"The anticipated outlook is that if sales increase, we will be calling them back," the manager said.

About 270 people are employed at Eveready, Tison said. The local plant, which had once operated as Union Carbide, has been a subsidiary of Ralston Purina since 1986, he said.

Eveready Battery is located on Greenville Boulevard.

National Poverty Rate Holds Steady

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Despite healthy economic growth, the nation's poverty rate failed to budge significantly in 1988 for the second consecutive year, the government reported Wednesday.

At the same time, the Census Bureau said that per capita income rose again last year to a new high of $13,120 after adjusting for inflation, but that the 20-year trend of growing inequality in the distribution of income continued in 1988.

The report showed pronounced regional gaps, with the median income of households rising significantly in the Northeast and Midwest and remaining stagnant in the South and West.

The Census Bureau's annual report on incomes and poverty, based on a survey of 58,000 households in March, showed the poverty rate at 13.1 percent of the population in 1988, compared to 13.4 percent in 1987, a change that officials said was not statistically significant. There were nearly 32 million people living in poverty last year.

The 1987 rate had dropped from 13.6 percent in 1986, a change also regarded as not statistically significant. To be meaningful, the annual rate must change by at least 0.4 percentage points.

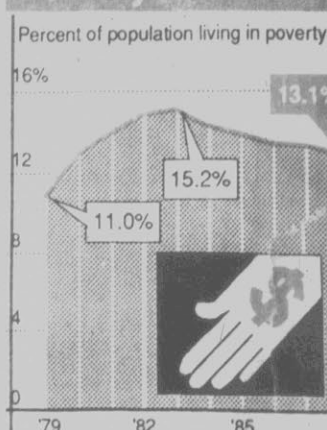

Poverty rates, which reflect cash income but not non-cash government benefits such as food stamps, in the past have usually paralleled economic growth and unemployment, with the rates climbing during recessions and falling during expansions.

But that trend did not occur in 1987 and 1988, when the economy grew by a robust 3.7 percent and 4.4 percent respectively after adjusting for inflation.

For a family of four, the poverty threshold in 1988 came to $12,092.

Driver Killed

A one-car accident on N.C. 33 west of Greenville left one woman dead this morning. Trooper B.J. Jones said the accident happened about four miles west of Greenville when the car apparently went out of control and struck a tree. Identification of the woman, who was the only occupant of the car, was withheld until her family could be notified. Jones said it was the seventh traffic fatality in Pitt County this month.

Recent Appointment

Dr. C. Christopher Bremer of Greenville has been appointed to the Medical Malpractice Claims Arbitration Legislation Study Commission.

The commission will study issues pertaining to the use of court-annexed arbitration in medical malpractice actions.

Church Services

First Timothy Church will hold services today, Friday and Sunday.

A prayer meeting will be held at 7 p.m. today and a members meeting will be held Friday at 7 p.m.

On Sunday, mothers anniversary will be observed with dinner at 2 p.m. and a 3 p.m. service.

Hugo Relief

The Greenville Morning Rotary Club presented a check for $1,000 to Major Earl Woodard of the Salvation Army to be used in relief efforts from the damage Hurricane Hugo caused in Charlotte and Charleston, S.C.

Hugo struck the two cities in September, causing millions of dollars in destruction. The club asked that $500 go to each city.

Guest Speaker

Dr. Lynn G. Borchert, a Greenville gynecologist and infertility specialist, will speak at a symposium, "Insights Into Infertility," scheduled Saturday at Wake Medical Center in Raleigh.

The symposium is designed for infertile couples and health care professionals. It begins with registration at 8:30 a.m. and concludes at 5 p.m.

Borchert will speak at 2:20 p.m. on "Unexplained Infertility." His talk is one of several presentations set for the symposium.

In addition to his private practice in infertility in Greenville, Borchert is an associate clinical professor of obstetrics and gynecology at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

The symposium is co-sponsored by Resolve of the Triangle, an organization that provides infertility counseling, referral and support groups for infertile couples. For further information call 831-5167 or (803) 282-8088.

Car Reported Stolen

Seven thefts, including a 1982 model car from a Pitt County Memorial Hospital parking lot, were reported to Greenville police Wednesday.

Officer G.M. Savage said the car, a Datsun, was taken in an incident reported at 8:45 a.m., while Officer R.D. Andrews said a Halloween witch display was taken from 1701 S. Elm St. in an incident reported at 8:09 a.m.

Officer A.T. Parrish said a radio-tape player was taken from a car parked at 105 Dundee Lane in an incident reported at 8:11 a.m., while Officer W.E. Davis said a battery tester, later recovered, was taken from S&M Equipment Co. on North Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 1:08 p.m.

Officer K.L. Jones said a car jack was taken from 1011 Van Nortwick St. in a break-in reported at 2:10 p.m., while Officer L.C. Overby said several video games were taken from 112B Emma's Place in a break-in reported at 5:03 p.m.

According to Officer J.E. Umphlett, $125 worth of electronic equipment was taken from Showtime Stereo at 300B SW Greenville Blvd. in an incident reported at 6:02 p.m.

Truck Accident

WARSAW, N.C. (AP) — A woman was killed and four people injured Wednesday in an accident on N.C. 24 east of Warsaw involving two tractor trailers and a car, authorities said.

The victim's name was not available.

A rescue worker was also injured while attempting to remove one of the occupants from the car, said Sprunt Hall of the Faison Fire and Rescue Department.

Bar President

RALEIGH (AP) — Charlotte attorney Emil Kratt will become the new president of the North Carolina State Bar on Friday.

Kratt, 54, will succeed Robert Baynes of Greensboro as president. A graduate of Wake Forest University's law school, Kratt has been practicing with Waggoner, Hamrick, Hasty, Monteith, Kratt and McDonnell since 1963.

Spanish Essayist Wins Nobel Literature Prize

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Spanish novelist and essayist Camilo Jose Cela, who used the horrors of the Spanish Civil War to infuse his work with an often grotesque and violent imagery, today won the Nobel Prize in literature.

Cela, 73, was cited by the Swedish Academy for his "rich and intensive prose, which with restrained compassion forms a challenging vision of man's vulnerability."

Cela said he felt he shared the award with many other Spanish and Latin American writers.

"For me this is something I'm very proud of," Cela told Spanish National Radio from his home in Guadalajara, Spain. "I offer it to all of literature in Spanish. I believe that other authors, Spanish and Latin American, who write in Spanish could also have won it for the same reasons as I, but, in the end, I won it, and I'm very, very happy."

Cela's best known work is the 1942 novel "The Family of Pascual Duarte," in which he created a new literary style known as "tremendismo," emphasizing violence and grotesque imagery.

The novel, a first-person account of a murderer awaiting execution, was banned in Spain but established Cela's reputation as a writer. It was considered the most important postwar novel and set a new direction for Spanish literature toward concise and sober writing.

Cela's masterpiece is considered "The Hive," from 1951, which captures three days in the life of Madrid four years after the civil war.

Cela has written 10 novels among his 70 works of travelogs, short stories and poetry.

The Swedish Academy called him "the leading figure in Spain's literary renewal during the postwar era."

"Cela is a restless spirit," who often expresses himself "in an old Spanish tradition of hilarious grotesqueness," it said.

Sture Allen, the Academy's secretary, called Cela "provocative and innovative" in both his form and subject matter.

"The Family of Pascual Duarte" was probably the most widely read Spanish novel since "Don Quixote," the Academy said. It also singled out as "a sensation" his 1969 novel "San Camilo," which describes the weeks before the outbreak of civil war.

Cela was the first Spaniard to win the Nobel since 1977, when it was awarded to poet Vicente Aleixandre. Cela was chosen from about 150 candidates.

Bones Found

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Human bones discovered in a rural section of McDowell County near the Buncombe County line will be sent to the state medical examiner's office for identification, authorities said Wednesday.

The bones were found by an unidentified hunter about 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in a wooded area about a half-mile off Old U.S. 70 and two miles from the Buncombe County line, said McDowell County Sheriff Bobby Haynes.

A State Bureau of Investigation agent was called to the scene and discovered more bones Tuesday night and again Wednesday. SBI supervisor David Barnes said the bones had been scattered over 50 yards, apparently by animals.

Lawmen are checking missing person reports for possible identification of the bones, but had not made a match Wednesday.

Kentucky Soaked By More Rainfall

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MYRA, Ky. — Dozens of residents were stranded in remote hollows as floods from the remnants of Hurricane Jerry wiped out bridges and roads in eastern Kentucky, and more rain today hampered cleanup and damage evaluations.

In West Virginia on Wednesday, the high waters eased hostility at least momentarily in the bitter United Mine Workers coal strike: Strikers rescued three non-union coal company workers whose van slid into a flooding creek.

"We really hate these guys, but we couldn't let them die," striking miner James Justice said Wednesday.

In southeastern Kentucky, 1.3 inches of rain fell between midnight and 7 a.m., but Charles Fenley, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Louisville, said he didn't expect the additional rain to worsen flooding conditions. A flash-flood watch for the region was withdrawn.

In West Virginia, light rain was falling today in the eastern part of the state. In the 24 hours leading up to this morning, one-half to 1 1/4 inches of rainfall had been recorded in the region, the weather service said.

Flood warnings that had been issued for West Virginia's Mingo and Logan counties expired this morning, but a flood warning went into effect for Lewis County, where water covered some roads. Twelve southern and eastern West Virginia counties also had flash flood watches expire today.

In both states, state disaster assessment teams toured flooded areas Wednesday and today, finding hundreds of residents with homes damaged by the flood and many people without safe drinking water.

West Virginia Gov. Gaston Caperton visited hard-hit areas by car after foul weather grounded his helicopter. In Davin, he talked to a man whose home garage and furnace were covered with mud.

"I had been up deer hunting in Roane County and my wife called and said the water was coming up," Bruce Belcher told him.

In eastern Kentucky's Pike County, several hundred homes were flooded, numerous bridges were washed out and 1,000 families were without drinking water, said Johnny Mike Blair, the county's disaster and emergency services coordinator.

Preliminary damage estimates for southeastern Kentucky were in the millions of dollars, Don Armstrong, spokesman for the state division of Disaster and emergency services, said today. He said it was too early to be more precise.

Pike County was one of seven counties that declared emergencies and requested state aid after Tuesday's flood.

Hearing Blocked

McNaught said the environmental group based its appeal on public access rights to the bay, an untested approach to protecting environmentally sensitive areas. A decision to grant the appeal could have potentially effected all development along North Carolina's coastal waters.

In filing the appeal on behalf of the group, Derb Carter, an attorney for the Southern Environmental Law Center, said, "Our coastal waters are owned and managed by the state for the benefit of all the citizens of North Carolina. In the face of increasing development of our coast, we must ensure that the public's right to use their waters is maintained."

A review of the records showed compliance with existing laws, Besse said, and conditions on the permit were included to protect the waters. "The existing law requires a balance of public interest in the use of the waters and private land owners interest in development," Besse said.

"This decision appears to be one more reflection of the true essence of the current administration's coastal initiative which seems to encourage the development of the few remaining pristine areas at the sacrifice of important public trust resources," McNaught said.

Although the Pamlico and many of its tributaries experienced large-scale fish kills this summer, Chocowinity Bay apparently escaped the deaths. Environmentalists say they believe the lack of development or pollution discharges along the waters have helped to maintain the bay's relatively pristine character.

Earlier this summer, PTRF and two other environmental groups petitioned the state for special protection of the bay under an outstanding resource waters classification.

Air Force Promotes 12 Cadets In ROTC

Twelve cadets in East Carolina University's Air Force ROTC detachment have received promotions in rank. Nine cadets have been recognized for academic achievement, and another cadet is an Air Force scholarship recipient.

The newly promoted cadets and their new ranks are Joseph Atkins of Burgaw, Reid Langdon of Raeford and Wayne Poole of Culpeper, Va., cadet lieutenant colonel; Pacharee Ann Quattlebaum of Goldsboro, cadet major; Fredrick Allen of Goldsboro and Michael Timerman of Camden, cadet captain; Matthew Beebe and Darrell Pennington, both of Goldsboro, Ewen Lennon of Warsaw, Jessica Temple Mitchell of Winchester, Va., Darrell Steele of Wilmington and George Trevillian of Richmond, Va., all cadet first lieutenant.

Cadets recognized for outstanding academic achievement include Poole, Langdon and Mitchell, along with Daniel Dant of Goldsboro, Earl Tingle and Tung Nguyen, both of Fayetteville, Sylvia Daniels of Bolton, Aaron Ullman of Garner and Derrick Llewellyn of Richlands.

Also recognized was Cadet Stephanie Troutman of Oxford, Ohio, who has been awarded an Air Force ROTC scholarship.

Rising From The Rubble

Tuesday's disastrous San Francisco Bay area earthquake tells once again how vulnerable man and his amenities are to nature's blows.

The major earthquake was made all the more graphic because it came just as the third game of the baseball World Series telecast began.

Television screens all across the nation went blank and the ABC network turned to alternate program as news agencies attempted to sort out what was happening at Candlestick Park and the San Francisco area.

Gradually it unfolded. A large area of northern California had been hit by a major quake.

When television returned to Candlestick Park it was obvious that the crowd and the participants had been shaken, but the magnitude of the earthquake was still unknown.

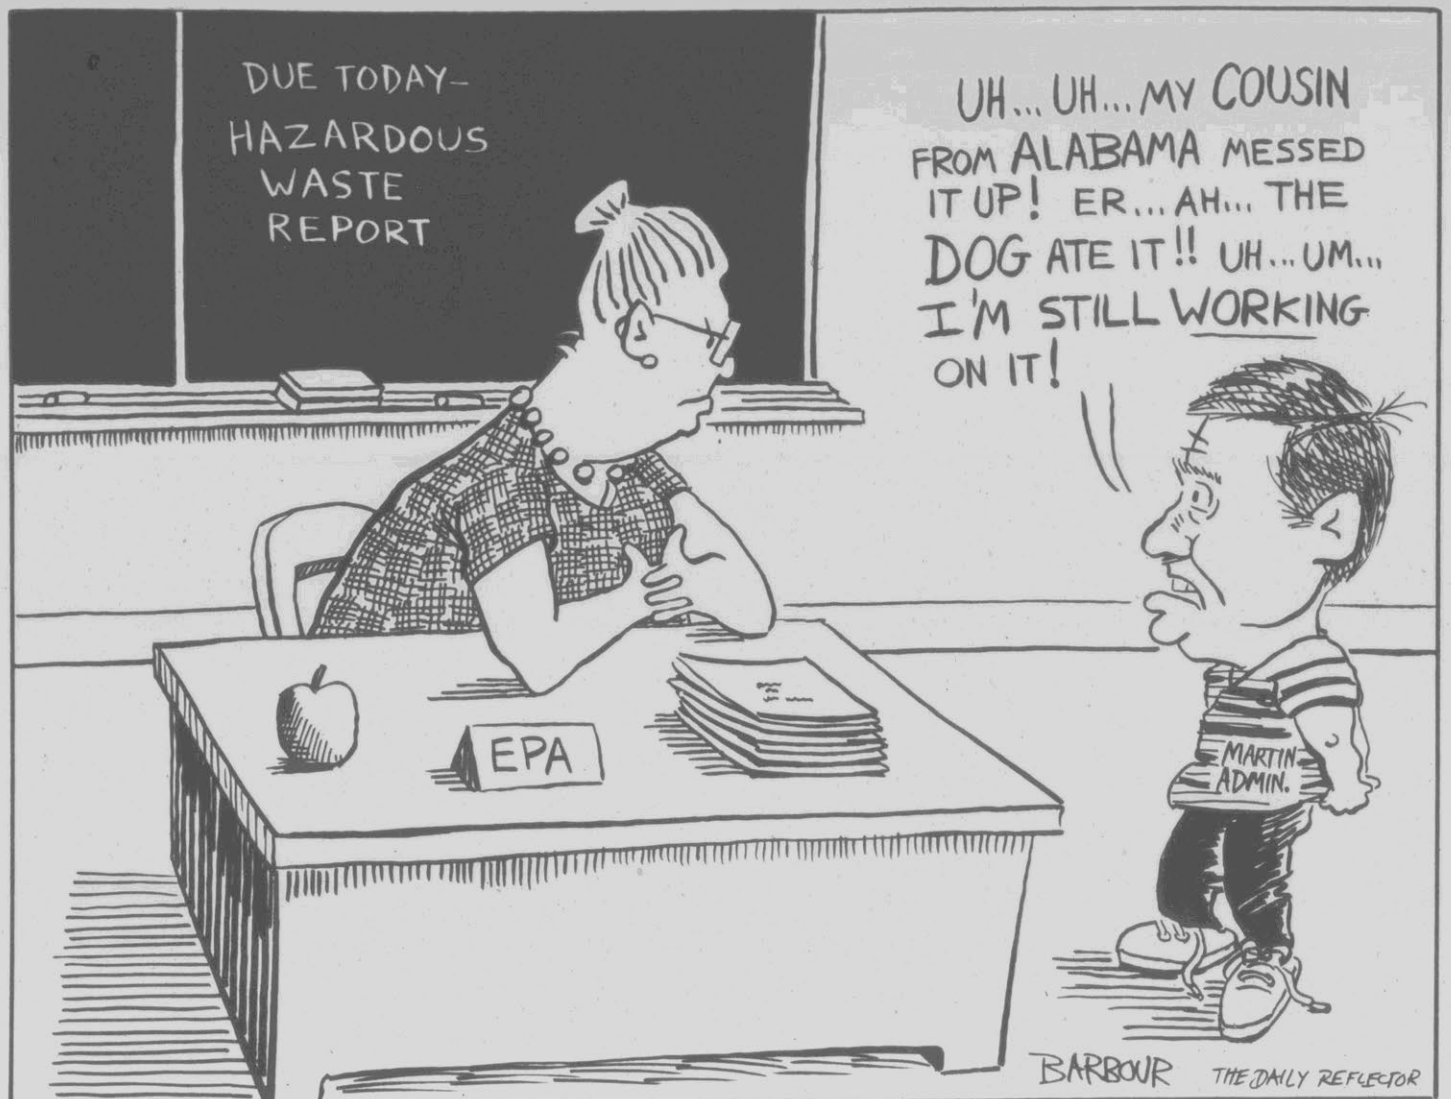

Through the evening unbelievable pictures of buckled sections of the Bay Bridge and crumpled freeways unfolded. Huge fires were reported. The World Series game was canceled. Still it was the next morning before the impact of the disaster was revealed. Instead of only a few deaths the figure had mounted to over 270 and there were estimates of billion dollar damage.

The California disaster followed an east coast natural disaster which saw Charleston, S.C., Charlotte, N.C. and other communities wracked by the howling winds of Hurricane Hugo.

In both cases Americans were quick to respond with offers of assistance. More immediately there were acts of heroism in the stricken areas and many who lived there volunteered to do what they could. There was the dark side ... reported lootings and robberies under the cover of all the confusion. Still the disasters brought out far more good than bad.

The lessons are there. In time honored tradition as a national community, the nation must be ready to help out in times of disaster.

Both the areas wracked by Hugo and the areas destroyed by the earthquake areas will rise again — and some of the credit must go to people everywhere who are more than willing to help out in crisis times.

A Tough But Truthful Teacher

WASHINGTON — San Francisco's geography is histrionic — its fogs can be as spectacular as the vistas they obscure — and its geology is downright dangerous. On Tuesday (Oct. 17) that geology taught the nation three lessons. They concern the predictability of some surprises, the sovereignty of nature and the web of dependencies that define civic life.

George Will

The earth's shell is composed of numerous plates from 45 to 95 miles thick, slowly migrating. North America — The United Plates of America, as a geologist calls it — is united only for now. This "collage of wandering fragments" (geologists are phrasemakers) may disperse to form new aggregations in a few hundred million years.

Meanwhile, California straddles two plates, one moving south, the other north. No good can come of this. Sudden slippages between plates produce quakes, and not only in the West.

Quakes around New Year, 1811-12, near New Madrid, Missouri, reached perhaps 8.8 on today's Richter scale. They reversed the flow of the Mississippi, altered its course, caused waves in the Earth several feet high and rang church bells in Boston. Last November, a 6.0 quake hit rural Quebec. In 1983, a 6.5 quake shattered Coalinga, Calif.

There are between 2,500 and 10,000 measurable tremors during a normal day on this fidgety planet. (Instruments can measure ground movements the size of an oxygen molecule.) Big quakes are rare. They also are certainties.

Earth sciences predicted the 1980 eruption of Mount St. Helens and six months ago Science magazine examined evidence that "dangerous quakes are closing in on the San Francisco area." A 1976 quake in China killed 400,000, but in 1975 the evacuation of a Chinese city in response to a correct prediction saved an estimated 100,000 lives.

Tuesday's quake should concentrate minds. One-tenth of all Americans live in California. One-quarter of the semiconductor industry is in one county near the San Andreas fault. About 47,000 Americans die each year in motor vehicle accidents, the equivalent of a major plane crash every day. An 8-strength quake — smaller than 1906, larger than 1989 — could kill that many in 15 minutes.

An earthquake once shook the Western mind. It struck Lisbon on All Saints' Day, 1755, killing thousands in churches and thousands more who, fleeing to the seashore, were drowned by a tidal wave. It was as though nature were muttering "Oh, really? Says who?" in response to mankind's expanding sense of mastery. The quake was an exclamation point inserted arbitrarily into the Age of Reason, raising doubts about the beneficence of the universe and God's enthusiasm for the Enlightenment.

In this secular age, when the phrase "acts of God" denotes only disasters, we still can learn lessons from them. One of the striking vignettes from television coverage of the aftermath of San Francisco's quake was a policeman exhorting citizens to "go home and prepare for 72 hours without services." Perhaps no electricity, no gas, no running water for three days. Of course mankind lived for millennia without any of those. Today, however, our well-being depends on a network of many systems too easily taken for granted.

The words civic, civil, citizen have a common root. They originally pertained to residents of cities. It is in these complex creations — cities — that we see the truth of the phrase "social fabric." Any community, but especially a modern city, is a rich weave of diverse threads. The strength of each thread is derived from its relation to the rest. All the threads can snap or unravel when the fabric is ripped by jagged events. San Francisco's fabric has been strained but not torn.

From any catastrophe some good can come. It is no bad thing to be reminded — the world relentlessly sees to this — of the fragility of all social arrangements. Americans, for whom individualism is instinctive, need periodic reminders that their individual pursuits of happiness are utterly dependent upon the functioning of civic, collective community institutions — government — and upon habits of civility of the sort San Franciscans showed in their crisis. An earthquake is a tough teacher but it tells the truth.

A Message From A Nervous Market

Once again the stock market has proven it can be difficult to understand.

Small investors were bewildered by the crash of 1987 only to see a spectacular bull market since which has culminated in new highs in market averages this year.

Last Friday the worst seemed to happen again. The Dow Jones average of industrial stocks plunged 190.5 points in that one day — a 7 percent drop. Even worse, most of the fall came at the end of the day. Over the weekend the stock market was dissected and investors were thoroughly prepared for another black Monday when the markets opened after the weekend.

Only it didn't happen. Instead the stock market was unsteady on Monday but eventually ended with a rally which sent the Dow Jones average up 88.12 points.

With the electronics available today the stock markets can be sent into precipitous declines or unprecedented climbs in a matter of hours. While the exchanges are learning to cope with the huge volumes of sales such binges create, regulators are still struggling with the question of how to deal with the havoc the lurches cause to an orderly market.

The human factor is also very prominent. People make the decisions and people tend to buy when everybody else does and sell with the crowd.

But finally it must be recognized that the stock markets ultimately must find sound prices for individual stocks. Thus often a nervous market is telling us something about the economy, or about the over pricing individual stocks.

We still don't know what the recent market gyrations were saying — maybe nothing and maybe that there are changes ahead in how huge corporate buy outs are financed, or perhaps that the economic crystal ball is just cloudy.

This week either the safeguards against huge market drops worked, or investors simply decided it was not time to sell the shares they held. There has never been a more widely anticipated stock market crash than the one which was dreaded Monday. It didn't happen — and that's something.

The Questions Of Children

SAN FRANCISCO — At last some good news about the environment. North of here, deep in redwood country, one small woody creature has just been saved from the brink of extinction.

The endangered species in question is the Lorax, a stumpy, mustachioed and furry fellow who sprang from the imagination of Dr. Seuss. For 18 years, this critter has offered a conservation message to the same children who devour green eggs and ham.

As the central character of a environmental morality tale, the Lorax's role was to speak for the Truffula trees because "the trees have no tongues." Over and over again the Lorax has waged a losing battle against the Once-ler family, who turn every last Truffula tree into sweater-like Thneeds and flatten the environment into a wasteland.

But this fall, "The Lorax" itself with its zany rhymes and conservation message felt the sharp edge of the ax. In Laytonville, a small lumbering community, the second-graders who read this tale in class came home bearing questions.

One, an eight-year-old son of a wealthy family that sells logging equipment, said to his mother, "Papa doesn't love trees anymore, does he?" And with that his parents and others tried to evict the Lorax from the required reading list.

Ellen Goodman

After a contentious few weeks during which everyone in the district came to know about Truffula tufts and Super-Axe-Hackers, the local school board voted to table the fate of the Lorax. They will "review" the entire school reading list.

So for the moment the Lorax has survived. But other familiar issues were raised. How much easier it is to take a moral stand in somebody else's backyard with somebody else's paycheck. How hard it is to be morally challenged by your own children.

The loggers of Laytonville are hardly the first to experience this challenge to values and behavior. At one time or another, most of our children come home from school with questions and return from the wider world with a sharp eye for contradictions.

The children fresh from the just-say-no class ask about our martinis and pills. The children who read the labels on the cigarettes ask why we smoke. In one town, those who learn what nuclear weapons do, ask why their parents build them. In another place, those who learn about injustice ask why their parents tolerate it.

When these questions are first heard from kids who once thought we knew all, the immediate impulse is to say what the Once-ler said to the Lorax: Shut up. It's an urge to cut off the source of criticism, rather than to answer the endless and uneasy questions: Why don't we take the homeless into our houses? Why are some poor and others rich?

Adults are not used to moral confrontation in their daily lives. The rich and powerful may even be exempt from such challenges. Except by their children.

As Dr. Robert Coles, who has spent a lifetime learning about the moral life of children, observes: "Moral discussion is usually kept abstract to protect us. It's only when it gets concrete, when it starts hitting close to home and close to the pocketbook, that it pricks us."

It's easier to talk about the rain forest in Brazil than the pollution coming out of the plant we work in or the pesticides we spray on our crops. But children remind us of the holes in our rationalizations. They often remind us of the uneasy compromises we have made to work and live with ease.

In their own fresh encounters with right and wrong, they prod us into feeling that we should do something...about smoking, or injustice or the environment. Their questions force us to explain and expose our own, often muddy, reasoning.

The irony in the Laytonville controversy was that "The Lorax" did not say lumbering was itself immoral. Indeed, the author in his real life as Theodore Geisel lives in a wooden house and writes books made of paper. His treatise was about greed and waste. The response was a raised ax.

But when parents react to a child's prodding with alarm, it isn't just because the questions are troublesome. It's because we cannot form an answer that rings right in our own ears.

Federal Agencies Gearing Up To Help

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dan Quayle briefed President Bush today on the California earthquake and declared the federal government would "put the maximum that we can" behind the relief effort. But members of Congress said the emergency funds would fall short of what was needed.

Bush said he would fly to the San Francisco Bay area Friday for a personal inspection of the damage. White House officials said the president would spend about three hours in the area.

Quayle and Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner were in the quake area on Wednesday and told Bush what they had seen and how federal relief efforts were progressing.

"All federal resources have been marshalled," Skinner said in an appearance on the ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" program. "The coordination in California is excellent. I spoke to the governor and all his requests are being met."

Quayle was asked on the NBC-TV "Today" show if there was enough money available for the relief effort. He replied, "We will put the maximum that we can behind that, working with state and local levels of government to clean the situation up."

Quayle brushed off criticism from San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos who said he was "ticked off" that the vice president did not meet with him during his tour of the area.

"We invited all the mayors to come and sit down with us," said Quayle. "I think it's very unfortunate to take that kind of a shot at a very difficult time."

Agnos, a Democrat, said Quayle "flies around in a helicopter, makes a bunch of television spots. ... I have real questions about what he was doing here. It may have been just a publicity stunt."

The White House said an initial $273 million will be available for the area from a pool of $1.1 billion that Congress appropriated after the devastation caused by Hurricane Hugo.

But Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., a member of the House Appropriations Committee, said $1.1 billion isn't enough. The Bush administration will have to cooperate to find more money, he said.

"I want to do whatever it would take to make those dollars available," he said. "No question we would want to take them (funds) out of existing programs."

The day after Tuesday's earthquake, Bush visited the headquarters of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the office responsible for coordinating 25 departments brought in to handle the disaster.

"Words can't adequately convey our sentiments, I know, but I can say that we will take every step and make every effort to help the Bay area in its hours of need," Bush said.

Relief Pours In

Area Rapid Transit subway system, reopened and then closed again when a train operator reported a leak in the tube beneath the bay.

Gov. George Deukmejian demanded an investigation into the collapse of Interstate 880 in Oakland, saying it should have been built to withstand the devastating force of Tuesday's earthquake.

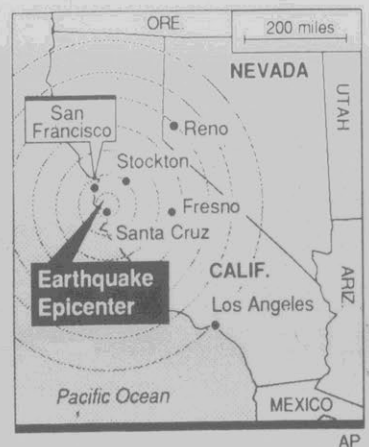

The collapse "raises troubling questions for the entire state in terms of the construction of our freeways," Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson said.

Largely because of the collapse of I-880, known as the Nimitz Freeway, the quake was the second-deadliest in U.S. history. It killed an estimated 270 people — 250 of them in the rubble of the Nimitz — and crippled transportation, electric power and commerce in the nation's fourth-largest metropolitan area, a region of more than 6 million people.

Besides the commuters crushed in the freeway collapse, at least 21 people died in San Francisco, San Mateo, Santa Clara and Santa Cruz counties. State officials said 1,400 people were injured throughout the Bay area, although hospitals said they treated 2,750 people, many for chest pains.

In Santa Cruz, closest to the quake's epicenter, police arrested at least five people Wednesday night after distraught friends of a woman missing in the rubble marched to protest authorities' decision to stop searching for her. Several buildings in the city's historic downtown district were destroyed.

San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos said the quake caused $2 billion worth of destruction in his city alone.

President Bush, sharply criticized in South Carolina for his response to Hurricane Hugo, quickly declared the San Francisco region a disaster area and directed an initial $273 million in relief efforts. White House officials said he would tour the area Friday.

More relief began to flow in from places as far afield as South Carolina, Japan and Great Britain. Israel and France offered to send disaster teams experienced in finding victims trapped beneath wreckage.

Officials in Los Alamos, N.M., dispatched a device used to locate survivors of last year's earthquake in Soviet Armenia.

Hope was fading, however, that anyone would be found alive beneath the devastation in San Francisco's Marina district or under the crushing weight of I-880.

In the affluent Marina district, two bodies were spotted in the rubble of a four-story apartment building. Their hands were clutched in an embrace, said Dr. Charles Saunders of the city Health Department.

"There were no signs of life," he said. "It's very unlikely anyone else will be found alive."

Across San Francisco Bay in Oakland, crews searched round the clock for victims amid the tons of steel and concrete that had been the Nimitz Freeway.

"We have located several individuals, none of whom are alive so there are no survivors at this point," Oakland police Capt. Jim Hahn said.

Earlier, rescuers freed a 6-year-old from a car by cutting through the body of his dead mother. The boy was in critical condition.

Seven bodies were recovered from the Nimitz and police said at least 86 people were officially reported missing. The quake hit at rush hour, and state officials estimated there were 250 cars caught in the collapse, based on an optimistic assumption of one person per car.

A remote-control backhoe was flown in by helicopter to dig out the rubble, but couldn't begin operation until workers shored up the 1 1/4-mile stretch of collapsed roadway.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., got an overhead view of the crushed freeway from a helicopter and offered a horrific description: "It looked like a snake hacked with an ax. It was in bits and pieces."

The Nimitz, built in the 1950s, was reinforced in 1977 in the first of a three-phase program to earthquake-proof state highways.

The second phase, begun on other roads in the last year, had been delayed at the Nimitz pending an engineering study, according to Bill Schaefer, the chief engineer for the California Department of Transportation.

Still, Schaefer said he was shocked by the collapse. "We thought it would withstand the maximum credible earthquake we could have in this area," he said.

Deukmejian said the cave-in appeared to be the result of substandard construction. "I think ... we should have a full inquiry to determine why there were failures," Deukmejian said.

He also noted the successes of the state's earthquake preparedness program. Although the quake, at magnitude 6.9, was as strong as last year's Armenian earthquake, the destruction was not even remotely comparable. The Armenian quake killed 25,000 people.

Downtown San Francisco's high-rise buildings swayed sickeningly during the 15-second tremor, but came through it virtually unscathed. Entire residential neighborhoods pitched and swayed but emerged intact.

The Bay area's residents also earned praise. There were few reports of looting or other crimes, and many reports of calm and compassion in the face of catastrophe.

"This is an incredible coming together; an act of the brotherly love that San Franciscans were famous for in the '60s," self-described "ex-hippie" Chuck Rosen said as he helped clear rubble from a collapsed building.

Many people appeared unruffled, and there were pictures of unexpected serenity: joggers loping through Golden Gate Park, sunbathers enjoying warm weather at the park's band shell.

But the band shell, a favorite of San Franciscans for the better part of a century, was badly damaged, and many lives were shattered as well.

Tony Thomas, 42, manager of an apartment building that had visible cracks on its facade, slept in a park across the street. He refused to sleep in a shelter.

"I just have this phobia about being inside a building. It feels like the bed is still moving. It's done a number on me," said Thomas, carrying a pillow, blanket and essential goods in a milk crate.

Dr. Collins shows off one of the rooms in new infirmary at North Carolina's prison for women

State-Of-The-Art Infirmary To Open At Women's Prison

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A new infirmary at the state Correctional Institute for Women will set new standards for prison hospitals when it opens later this month, a state prison official says.

"It's the best facility in the country," Jennie Lancaster, the female command manager for the state Division of Prisons, said Wednesday during a tour of the $1.7 million infirmary. "From traveling around and talking to others in corrections, I know that this is state of the art."

The infirmary at the women's prison has been housed in the oldest building on the campus, a dark, cramped structure built between 1901 and 1904. Once the new infirmary is fully operational at the end of the month, the old building will be razed to make way for a mental health facility.

"For us, this is like landing on the moon," Ms. Lancaster, the former superintendent of the prison said.

"It's that big a leap forward for us."

Ms. Lancaster said prisons are getting more attention now than they have in the past, in part because of threats of federal takeovers of inadequate prisons.

"It's a situation where either we are going to make the changes that need to be made or a federal judge is going to order the changes made," she said. "To our state's credit, we have said that we want to run decent prisons, to treat people humanely, without being ordered to do it by the courts."

"And we in the corrections business are doing a better job of telling people our story, showing them what we need and why we need it," she said.

"I can finally start being a doctor," Dr. Natalear Collins, the medical director for the clinic, said as she strolled the brightly painted halls of the new infirmary.

The new hospital includes 26 beds for patients, plus six beds in a mental health ward. Inmates will have a dental clinic, examining rooms, laboratory and X-ray facilities. A pharmacy in the new infirmary will provide prescriptions for female prisoners at all the state's prisons.

Ms. Collins, who will direct a staff of 40, was working for Kaiser Permanente a year ago.

"I started doing some moonlighting work here, as a contract doctor," she said. "And then they told me they had an opening for a medical director, so I decided to come to work here full-time."

The patients she sees in prison are radically different from the ones she saw as a staff doctor with the health maintenance organization.

"The cases we get here are usually extreme," she said. "Many of our women have not had the opportunity for good health care, so if they have a problem, it usually is an extreme one."

Daily sick call at the prison "is usually pretty large," she said. "Male prisoners are more likely to vent their frustrations with violence. Women tend more to malign, malingering and gripe, and they also tend to have more health problems than men do."

Ms. Collins said she doesn't regret leaving civilian practice for a clinic inside the fences topped with concertina wire.

"It sounds a little corny, I guess, but there are a lot of doctors to look after the patients I was seeing before," she said. "In here, there's me. I really feel like I can make a difference."

Solons Say Mavretic Applying Pressure

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House Speaker Joe Mavretic is putting pressure on other House members as he fights for a second term as leader of the body, some of the representatives say.

A Democratic legislator says Mavretic has threatened to banish him to a "Holocaust Committee" unless that member supports his re-election bid in 1991.

Two other lawmakers said this week that Mavretic had suggested that they would receive poor committee assignments unless they committed to support his re-election as speaker.

Rep. Charles W. Albertson, D-Duplin, said he spoke with the speaker at a recent political gathering in Greenville. He said he told Mavretic that he was committed to vote for Rep. Robert C. Hunter, D-McDowell, one of a handful of Democrats who have indicated they will challenge the speaker's re-election.

"He said, 'Well, I'll see if I can't get you on the Holocaust Committee,'" Albertson recalled. "He didn't smile, and I didn't either."

Mavretic, an Edgecombe County Democrat, was elected in January by a coalition of 45 Republicans and 20 Democrats, some of whom resented what they called heavy-handed tactics by Liston Ramsey, the former speaker. Some criticized Ramsey, a Madison County Democrat, for seeking commitments for another term from House members before discussing their committee assignments.

Rep. Daniel H. DeVane, D-Hoke, a vocal critic of Ramsey in January, defended Mavretic's actions Wednesday.

"I'll tell you what's different: You've got a half-dozen people running for speaker," said DeVane, one of Mavretic's key supporters.

He said he "wouldn't call it threats. You have to look after people that put you in office."

Mavretic, who was speaking in Asheboro on Wednesday, was unavailable for comment. Referring to Albertson, the speaker's administrative assistant, Timothy Kent, said, "We don't know what Charlie's talking about."

Poole Says Spangler Participated In Decision To Keep Report Secret

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The president of the University of North Carolina system played a role in deciding that a report on wrongdoing in the N.C. State University basketball program should be kept secret, Samuel Poole said Wednesday.

Poole, chairman of the commission that compiled the report, said the decision to keep the report from the public was reached after he, UNC System president C.D. Spangler Jr. and Andrew A. Vanore Jr., the state's chief deputy attorney general, discussed the issue.

"I'd have to say it was a mutual decision," said Poole, who also is vice chairman of the UNC Board of Governors. "I don't know who suggested it. It was thoroughly discussed by me and the president and Vanore, who obviously represents the interests of the university. It was not an independent decision on my part."

Poole has the one surviving copy of the report. He has refused to make it public. The other commission members destroyed their copies of the report, Poole has said.

Spangler did not return telephone calls Wednesday. On Tuesday, he referred questions about the report, and his role in deciding to keep it secret, to Poole. Neither Vanore nor attorney general Lacy Thornburg could be reached for comment Wednesday.

Poole's four-member commission spent six months and $40,000 in public money to conduct its investigations. The report formed the basis of an Aug. 25 speech by Spangler that called for academic and athletic reform in the UNC system.

In a telephone interview Wednesday from Washington, where he is an aide to Sen. Terry Sanford, D-

N.C., Poole said the commission wanted the report kept secret to protect the privacy of N.C. State students and employees named in its pages.

"There's absolutely no way you can delete the names and preserve the confidentiality," he said. "(The report) relates to confidential discussions of the commission. It was not ever an adopted report of that commission."

Reinstated

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — The Wilson County Board of Health has reinstated the county health director after he agreed to submit to a psychiatric evaluation, an official said.

Dr. John Perry, the health director for nine years, was suspended without pay Oct. 6 after a closed meeting of the board. He was reinstated Tuesday. County officials declined to comment on the reasons for the suspension.

County Attorney George Weaver read a statement Wednesday by Hattie H. Ellis, the board's chairman, saying Perry had been accused of "intimidation of employees, invasion of privacy and verbal abuse" of health department employees.

Weaver said Perry would be placed on leave until the evaluation could be completed. Weaver declined further comment on the case.

Groundwater

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A state scientist says they've only begun their examination of groundwater contamination, but that initial tests show contamination below several tanks could represent a health threat.

One of the first surveys that the state has made of some of the 1,473 septic-tank systems in use, groundwater contamination turned up at all five sites tested: two elementary schools, a car wash, a general home and a furniture plant.

"It's a little bit dangerous to try to draw conclusions," said Perry, chief of the N.C. Groundwater Section. "We're really just scratching the surface, and we need to go back and look at it further."

The 34-page analysis concludes: "There is no question that trace leaching compounds are present in the groundwater beneath most of the sites. In some cases ... these compounds represent a significant health threat."

The tested sites are in Iredell, Latham, Wayne, Henderson and Shelby counties.

Plane Search

GREENSBORO (AP) — Rescue workers searched this morning for a private plane that apparently crashed south of Piedmont Triad International Airport.

One person was aboard the plane that had been bound for North Wilkesboro from Texas, said Sgt. M. Gaylor of the Forsyth County Sheriff's Department. He said the craft had been directed to the airport near Greensboro after some trouble with the plane.

Civil Air Patrol officials said the plane was a Cessna 210 Centurion, which can seat six. Officials couldn't identify anyone on board.

Prison Escape

MARION, N.C. (AP) — Authorities continued to search today for a convicted murderer who escaped from a prison road crew, officials said.

Vernon Junior Woods, 40, who was serving a life sentence at the McDowell County Correctional Facility for a 1973 murder in Caldwell County, escaped around 1:15 p.m. Wednesday, authorities said.

Tom Laws, district manager for correction facilities in western North Carolina, said Woods escaped while working on a 16-man road crew near Old Fort.

Outdoor display shows some of the 200 defense industry exhibits on view in Washington

One-Stop Shopping For Arms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Need to pick up some helicopters, light armored vehicles and tank ammunition for your country's defense? The easy answer is one-stop shopping — military style — with the Association of the United States Army.

With the blessing of the Defense Department, the association is holding its annual meeting this week featuring the customary big-name speakers such as former Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci and information panels on topics like Soviet forces and national security.

The main attraction, however, is the approximately 200 defense industry and Army exhibits on every imaginable aspect of weaponry.

"The exhibits ... reflect the latest in military doctrine, technological advances and hardware improvements," says the association, which has held what it touts as "the largest landpower forum in the free world" for the past 35 years.

Among the items on exhibit in the bowels of a Washington hotel were a full-scale light armored vehicle, a handful of howitzers and several high-tech videos promoting helicopters, M-16 machine guns and night-vision goggles.

Beribboned officers, fresh-faced cadets and defense industry officials created traffic jams as they grabbed glossy brochures, closely examined the rifles and handguns and questioned the hundreds of company representatives.

But beyond all the glitz, there was serious business as officials from General Motors, McDonnell Douglas, General Electric, ITT Defense and John Deere briefed representatives from foreign countries and the United States on their latest wares.

For the buyer who can't afford to fly from one company to the next, the meeting provides a "great place for networking in a marketing environment," said Joe O'Brien, an official with General Motors, as he stood in front of the company's 14 12-ton light armored vehicle equipped with a 25mm gun.

The meeting, according to O'Brien, is strictly for the buyer who wants to browse.

"No contracts. We don't even talk about contracts. If we did the defense secretary could not endorse it," he said. "Those types of things are verboten."

Instead, the companies tout the advantages and successes of their products with the hope that a telephone call or meeting at a later date will result in a sale.

Consumer Prices Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Consumer prices in September rose an unexpectedly modest 0.2 percent, with most prices virtually unchanged except for a sharp rise in clothing costs, the government said today.

Energy prices, which had climbed sharply at the wholesale level, raising the expectation of an increase on the retail level, fell for the fourth consecutive month in September, the Labor Department said.

Consumer prices rose at a high annual rate of 6.7 percent for the first five months of the year, driven up by rising gasoline prices.

However, the index has risen only 0.2 percent or remained flat in each of the last four months, bringing the annual rate down to 4.4 percent for the first three quarters, the same as the rate for all of 1988 and 1987.

Social Security Going Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The nation's 38.9 million Social Security recipients will get a 4.7 percent benefit increase in January, the biggest boost in 7½ years, the government said today.

The increase promises an extra $25 a month for the average retired worker, who now receives $541 a month, the Social Security Administration said. The maximum monthly benefit for a worker retiring in 1989 at age 65 will rise by $76 to $975.

The benefit increase, a cost-of-living adjustment designed to offset the effects of inflation over the past year, will be the biggest since benefits rose 7.4 percent in July 1982. Benefits jumped 4.0 percent in 1989.

Since 1975, benefits have risen automatically each year along with advances in the Consumer Price Index, except for six months in 1983 that were skipped to help Social Security avert a financial crisis. In earlier years, benefits were increased sporadically by Congress.

The size of next year's benefit increase became official today when the Labor Department released the consumer price report for September. The annual change in benefits is calculated by taking increases in the CPI for urban wage earners and clerical workers for the July-September period, compared with the same period in the previous year.

The increase will show up in checks delivered Jan. 3, representing benefits earned for December.

The government also announced today that the maximum amount of wages subject to the payroll tax that finances Social Security benefits will climb from the current $48,000 to $50,400 in 1990.

RETURN TO JUPITER

GALILEO

After a flight lasting six years, the Galileo probe will separate into two parts as it approaches Jupiter. The orbiter section will circle the planet for at least 22 months. The probe capsule will descend into the planet's atmosphere and make direct measurements until it is destroyed by the high-pressure gases there.

Radioisotope-powered batteries
Galileo carries a total of 48 lbs. of plutonium dioxide, which decays to provide about 500 watts of electrical power to the spacecraft.

Galileo Probe Begins Journey Toward Jupiter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPACE CENTER, Houston — The nuclear-powered Galileo probe raced across space today on its long voyage to Jupiter, while the five orbiting Atlantis astronauts who released it began a day of other experiments.

Zooming along at about 10,000 mph, the probe was more than 75,000 miles from Earth this morning, NASA said. Galileo was deployed Wednesday night about six hours after the space shuttle thundered into orbit.

"Galileo is on its way to another world," Atlantis commander Don Williams said shortly after the 6,700-pound probe was gently ejected from the shuttle's cargo bay by springs.

The shuttle crew today ran some checks to determine why part of a cooling system shut down automatically and shifted to a backup unit Wednesday because of a low temperature reading on a valve.

NASA said today it felt the problem was associated with the power needs of Galileo. The five-day mission could be cut short because of a loss of a backup cooling system, but NASA said that was unlikely.

Mission Control awakened the space travelers today with a musical tribute to Williams and pilot Mike McCulley, both naval aviators and graduates of Purdue University. Reveille was sandwiched between "Hail Purdue" and "Anchors Away."

"I liked the first song better than the second," Williams responded.

The successful deployment of Galileo occurred as planned at 6:15 p.m. CDT over the Gulf of Mexico near Brownsville.

"Galileo looks absolutely super," radioed mission specialist Shannon Scobee, who was in charge of the deployment. "It's too bad you all can't be here to see it."

After Williams and McCulley maneuvered the shuttle a safe distance away, a two-stage rocket attached to the probe fired the initial stage. The second "burn" occurred about five minutes later, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said both were successful.

It achieved earth-escape velocity and is now heading outbound toward the sun," Mission Control commentator Brian Welch said Wednesday night. A spacecraft can escape the Earth's gravity when traveling faster than 25,000 mph.

Shortly after 8 p.m. CDT, Mission Control reported that the two-stage rocket and the probe had separated, and that Galileo was "on its own."

Galileo is powered by two electrical generators that are fueled by highly radioactive plutonium. Anti-nuclear activists opposed the use of plutonium and lost a lawsuit to block the launch.

Although Jupiter is the probe's destination, Galileo also will swing around Venus, the Earth and sun during its 2.4-billion-mile journey. Gravity from Earth and Venus will help the spacecraft gain momentum for its trip.

During the six-year voyage, Galileo also will provide the first close-up data about asteroids, passing within 600 miles of Gaspra and Ida.

Scientists hope the $1.5 billion Galileo — the most expensive unmanned space vehicle ever built — will give the best look yet of another planet and find clues to the universe's origin when it reaches Jupiter.

They believe the giant planet still holds much of the material, in its original state, from which the universe formed more than 15 billion years ago.

A robot on Galileo will dive through Jupiter's hydrogen-rich atmosphere and radio back readings during the 75-minute plunge. But Galileo itself will continue a wide orbit around the planet for 22 months, keeping track of changes in its weather for the first long-term study of an outer planet.

EPA Says Homeowners Should Test For Radon

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — New tests show widespread contamination of private homes in eight states with cancer-causing radon gas, the Environmental Protection Agency says in urging all homeowners to test for the gas.

Radon is "one of the most serious environmental health problems today," EPA Administrator William K. Reilly said Wednesday. "Radon can really be found anywhere."

Radon contamination is said to cause as many as 20,000 lung cancer deaths a year, second only to the number caused by smoking.

The agency released test results showing that in eight states, about one-fourth of 11,000 randomly tested homes had radon readings considered unhealthy. Nearly three of four homes tested in Iowa had significant radon readings.

The results mirrored findings over the last two years in 17 other states. Overall, said the EPA, about one-fourth of the 37,000 homes tested in 25 states so far have shown unhealthy indoor radon levels.

Radon is a colorless and odorless gas that is produced naturally by the decay of uranium in soil and rocks. While levels found outdoors normally pose no health concerns, concentrations of 4 picocuries per liter of air indoors are considered unhealthy.

Test kits cost about $20 and corrective action normally costs from $200 to $1,500, according to the EPA.

E. Germany Will Follow Hard Line

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — Opposition leaders today said they doubted whether new East German leader Egon Krenz will abandon his hard-line history and lead the country to greater freedoms.

Krenz, who took over from Erich Honecker on Wednesday, made it clear in a hourlong televised address that the Communist Party will resist pro-democracy movements like those under way in Hungary and Poland.

That brought criticism from opposition and church leaders, who have been pushing for greater openness and free elections in the tightly controlled society.

"Egon Krenz doesn't enjoy any particular trust among the people," said Baerbel Bohley, a leader of the New Forum opposition movement in East Berlin.

Speaking to reporters, Bohley blamed the 52-year-old leader for unleashing police forces that attacked pro-democracy demonstrators in East Berlin on Oct. 7 and the following day. However, Communist Party sources have said that Krenz ordered security forces to use more restraint in later demonstrations.

Tens of thousands of East Germans have fled to the West this year and the country's largest street protests since 1953 broke out this month.

In Austria, authorities said today that more than 1,000 East German refugees crossed from Hungary into Austria since Wednesday morning, more than 53,000 East Germans have fled to the West in recent weeks via Hungary, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

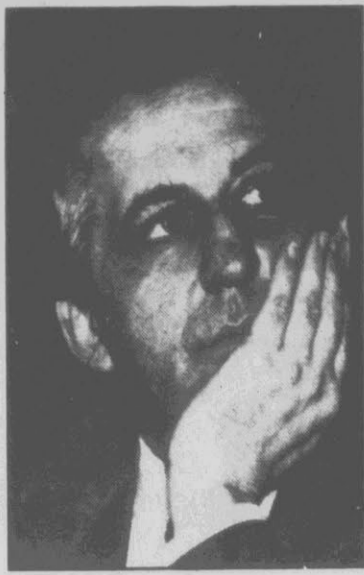

The Communist Party's Central Committee on Wednesday named Krenz to succeed his hard-line mentor, 77-year-old Honecker, who had ruled the nation for 18 years. Krenz, the youngest member of the ruling Politburo, also will assume the duties of head of state and head of the military, replacing Honecker in all three roles.

The state-run news agency ADN said today that the nation's Parliament would meet Tuesday to confirm Krenz in the additional posts.

Honecker said he stepped down because of health reasons, but rising public opposition to his authoritarian rule had fueled pressure for his resignation.

Another government critic, East German author Rolf Schneider, told West Berlin's RIAS radio in an interview Wednesday: "The crisis will keep dragging on."

Also speaking in RIAS, East Berlin's Lutheran Church leader

EGON KRENZ

Manfred Stolpe called on Krenz to react "even more decisively" to meet the needs of the people than the new Communist Party chief's initial address promised.

"In the entire GDR (East German) society, there is an enormous crush of expectations," Stolpe said today.

The Lutheran Church has been in the forefront of reform efforts in East Germany.

In neighboring West Germany, reaction ranged from very guarded optimism to cautions against hopes for wide-ranging reforms.

Two other Politburo members who had been heavily criticized within the party also lost their jobs Wednesday.

Quakes Kill 18 In China

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — A series of major earthquakes shook a largely rural area of northern China before dawn today, killing at least 18 people and flattening about 8,000 homes.

Officials of the State Seismological Bureau said the quakes, which injured at least 28 people and struck less than 24 hours after the devastating quake in northern California, were not related to that tremor.

The tremors — registering between 5.0 and 6.0 on the Richter scale — hit an area along the Shanxi-Hebei provincial border and at least one was felt in Beijing, the official Xinhua News Agency quoted the bureau as saying.

The stricken area is a flat and dusty region about 135 miles west of the capital where farmers grow wheat and other grains and many live in one-story unfired clay-brick homes with dirt floors that easily collapse in major quakes.

Shanxi is also China's major coal-producing province and the stark brown land is pocked with coal mines.

The first quake, measuring 5.7, shook areas of Shanxi and Hebei provinces late Wednesday. It was felt in the capital, but there were no reports of damage and the bureau said there was no need to take safety measures in the city.

There were at least four other quakes registering 5 or above in the next six hours, including one of 6.0 magnitude. Such tremors are capable of doing considerable damage in a populated area.

Bureau officials said at least 300 small quakes were recorded, but there were no major aftershocks after dawn.

The officials said there was still relatively little information about the extent of the damage. Xinhua said the casualty figures of 18 dead and 28 injured were "preliminary."

Soviet Military Plane Crashes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — A military transport plane carrying soldiers helping keep order in the ethnically tense southern republic of Azerbaijan has crashed, killing all 57 people on board, Tass reported today.

The official Soviet news agency said the paratroopers were being taken from an airport in the Caucasus Military District in an Ilyushin-76 plane when it crashed Wednesday night.

Tass did not say where in Azerbaijan the crash occurred or provide any other details about the circumstances. It said the huge transport carried a crew of seven as well as 50 passengers.

Interior Minister Vadim Bakatin told reporters the plane crashed into a body of water 1,500 feet from shore, but did not identify the location.

Bakatin told a news conference on another topic that workers recovered parts of the engines and fuselage from the water. The IL-76 has four turbofan engines and wings mounted atop the fuselage.

Tass said military authorities are trying to determine why the plane crashed.

"The U.S.S.R. Defense Ministry expressed its deep condolences to the families of the dead," Tass said.

Troops have been patrolling Azerbaijan and neighboring Armenia since last year to prevent more violence between residents feuding over the Nagorno-Karabakh territorial district, a predominantly Armenian enclave in Azerbaijan.

More than 100 people have died in violence related to the dispute.

Tass said the troops aboard the IL-76 were among those keeping order in Azerbaijan.

Yeltsin Branded A Liar

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The Soviet interior minister today branded Boris N. Yeltsin a liar and defended a government investigation into an alleged assassination attempt of the maverick lawmaker.

The comments by minister Vadim Bakatin came less than 24 hours after Yeltsin accused President Mikhail S. Gorbachev of staging a "political farce" in an attempt to scuttle Yeltsin's political career.

Bakatin maintains that Yeltsin appeared at a police post Sept. 28, dripping wet, and reported that men had assaulted him and thrown him off a bridge into the Moscow River. Yeltsin, however, told the Supreme Soviet legislature this week he never reported such an incident and that no such attack occurred.

"I have presented only the official information I had from the policeman. I stated only what comrade Yeltsin told the policeman," Bakatin told reporters at a news conference called especially to discuss the affair.

The interior minister's appearance before reporters showed the government was eager to deflect Yeltsin's accusations quickly.

Bakatin said Yeltsin "lied publicly" when he told his story to the Supreme Soviet in remarks later shown on nationwide television, and a second time a day later when he issued a statement to the press accusing Gorbachev trying to undermine him.

"In my view this is becoming particular to comrade Yeltsin — saying something then afterwards calling it persecution," Bakatin said.

Stock And Market Reports

By The Associated Press
HOGS: The trend is $1.00 higher at North Carolina buying stations. Kinston, Spivey's Corner, Murfreesboro, Siler City and Robersonville 47.00; Clinton, Fayetteville, Dunn, Pink Hill, Pine Level, Chadbourne, Ayden, Laurinburg and Benson 47.50; Wilson 47.50. Sows: (500 pounds up) Fayetteville 40.00; Wallace 41.00; Spivey's Corner 40.00; Rowland 40.00.

N.C. BROILER-FRYERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 49.00 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2½ to 3 pounds birds. Too few percent of the loads offered have been confirmed for a preliminary weighted average. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a moderate demand. Average weights mostly desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Thursday was 2,169,000, compared to 2,132,000 last Thursday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn 1 cent lower at 2.48-2.58 in the East and mostly 2.58-2.73 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans 4-5 cents higher at 5.50-5.70 in the East and too few to be reported in the Piedmont; wheat mostly 3.66-3.76; new crop soybeans 5.20-5.55; new crop wheat 2.93-3.27. P.I.K. certificates ½ percent to 1 percent lower and ranged from 98 to 100½ percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a broad advance today, extending its recovery from the "Friday the 13th massacre" with encouragement from better-than-expected inflation news.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks climbed 16.39 to 2,660.04 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by more than 3 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 802 up, 237 down and 407 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 24.83 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Senate Defeats Flag Bill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Senate today defeated a proposed constitutional amendment to ban burning and desecration of the American flag, delivering a sharp rebuff to President Bush on a high-profile issue.

The vote was 51-48 in favor, but constitutional amendments require approval by a two-thirds margin in both houses of Congress and the Senate vote thus fell far short.

"We can support the American flag without changing the American Constitution," Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, declared before the vote.

The measure would authorize the state and federal governments to ban burning and desecration of the flag.

Bush repeatedly called for approval of such a measure, saying a simple statute such as one approved by the Senate last week would be inadequate.

Critics of the amendment said it amounted to tampering the constitutional right of Americans to freedom of expression. But they also expressed concern that opposition could be turned against them at election time in view of the power of the flag as a political symbol as demonstrated in last year's campaign.

After taking a 190.58-point tumble last Friday, the Dow Jones industrials recovered 73.39 points over this week's first three sessions.

The average got an added lift today when the Labor Department reported that the consumer price index rose just 0.2 percent in September.

The increase was about half of what had been expected, given a marked upswing in the producer price index of finished goods reported last week for September.

Interest rates fell in the credit markets in response to the news. Prices of long-term government bonds, which move in the opposite direction from interest rates, rose about $5 for each $1,000 in face value.

American Telephone & Telegraph led the active list, up ½ at 43. The company reported third-quarter earnings of 65 cents a share, up from 55 cents in the like period last year.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained 1.15 to 190.47. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.74 at 379.81.

On Wednesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 4.92 to 2,643.65.

Big Board volume slowed to 166.90 million shares from 224.07 million Tuesday.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 4 in nationwide trading of NYSE-listed stocks, with 822 up, 668 down and 461 unchanged.

A Perfect Angel
 Mary Corey Henderson

Mama, you went away and left us.
 We grieved as we mourned good-bye
 For the angels came to take you
 To God's kingdom in the sky.
 They said, "God needs a good cook.
 A keeper of his flowers,
 Someone who is friendly,
 And spreads news of his powers.
 He wants someone who was a good wife
 While living down below,
 Someone who loved her family
 (Mama, we miss you so!)
 You were the perfect angel
 For God to call above.
 Though you're not here to touch us,
 We cherish the memory of your love.

Hokies Reviving In Beamer Era

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

When Frank Beamer replaced Bill Dooley as the head football coach at Virginia Tech, he inherited a program in shambles. But in three seasons, he has apparently turned the corner and has the Hokies on the way to respectability.

Virginia Tech gained a lot of respect just two weeks ago when the Hokies upset previously unbeaten West Virginia, 12-10, without scoring a touchdown. Earlier they had tied South Carolina, 17-17, and they looked forward to another matchup with a nationally ranked team, Florida State.

That game, last Saturday, was played in the friendly confines of Lane Stadium in Blacksburg, Va., but FSU quickly snuffed out any hopes of another upset, riding to a 41-7 victory.

Still, considering the Hokies have lost their starting quarterback and tailback in recent weeks, Virginia Tech still has much going in its favor.

Injuries, however, appear to be mounting, and this Saturday's meeting with East Carolina could go a long way in determining whether a winning season lies ahead.

Tech will bring in a 3-2-1 record into the game. A victory would bring them to four wins with games still ahead with Tulane and Vanderbilt, both in Lane Stadium, and on the road against Virginia and N.C. State.

Tech has played its last two games without its starting quarterback and tailback. Will Furrer, a sophomore, suffered a knee injury in his team's 23-0 victory over Temple four weeks ago. He underwent surgery and will miss the remainder of the 1989 season.

Prior to his injury, Furrer had completed 45 of 88 passes for 589 yards and three touchdowns. He'd had only three passes intercepted after giving the ball up 18 times as a freshman.

Before that, junior tailback Jon Jeffries had gone down with an under-vent arthroscopic surgery to repair it a week ago. It is uncertain whether he will be able to play again this season.

Jeffries played two games, carrying the ball 26 times for 152 yards.

To replace them, Beamer has gone to both youth and experience.

Taking over at the quarterback position has been Cam Young. That name may sound familiar to N.C. State fans. Two years ago, he lost the battle for the Wolfpack starting job and decided to transfer to Tech. Now a senior, Young battled Furrer throughout the spring and fall, but eventually, again, lost the starting job despite the fact that the two were almost identical.

Like Furrer, Young is a lefty. Appearing in all six games thus far, he's thrown the ball 75 times, completing 36 for 330 yards. He has no touchdowns to his credit and has thrown five interceptions.

But, East Carolina coach Bill Lewis warns, Beamer and his staff have now had the opportunity to see him under a lot of conditions and they know his strengths and weaknesses and will play toward them.

In the place of Jeffries, Beamer is using redshirt freshman Tony Kennedy and true freshman Vaughn Hebron. Kennedy is the team's leading rusher, picking up 216 yards on 54 carries. Hebron, on 64 lugs, has 179 yards. Each has scored a touchdown.

When Tech has gone to the air, they've had three outstanding receivers, split end Myron Richardson, flanker Marcus Mickel and Hebron. Richardson is the leading receiver with 15 catches for 260 yards and two touchdowns. Mickel and Hebron have both grabbed 14 passes, for 159 and 103 yards, respectively. Neither has a touchdown to his credit.

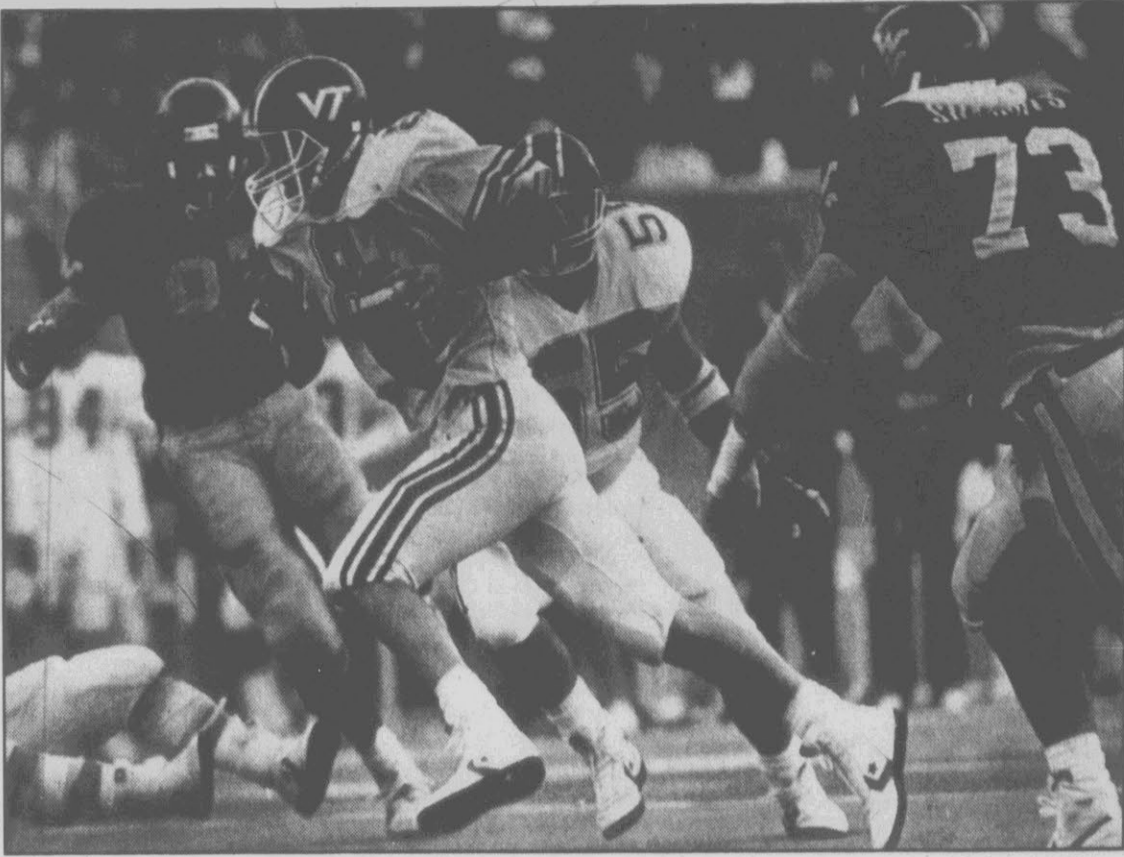

Richardson is also an outstanding kick returner. He has five punt returns to a 15.0 yard average and three kickoff returns for a 25.7 average. Bo Campbell, Richardson's backup at split end, also handles punts, returning 20 for a 5.6 yard average. Mickel is the leading kickoff returner with 12 for a 27.6 yard average.

Punter Chris Baucia is averaging 37.9 yards a kick, and has a net of 36.7 yards a try.

Place-kicker Mickey Thomas has kicked nine of 11 field goals, including a long of 42 against West Virginia.

Defensively, linebacker Bobby Martin is the leading tackler with 43, including two tackles for a loss and one sack. End Jimmy Whitten, tackle Bryan Campbell and safety Damien Russell each have 40 tackles and linebacker Sean Lucas has 39.

Tech has 20 quarterback sacks and has intercepted six passes.

Young Gets Second Chance N.C. State Transfer Starting For Tech

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Virginia Tech quarterback Cam Young knows the value of stepping in as a backup and performing, but he's had more success the second time around.

Young, a former North Carolina State quarterback, was pressed into duty as the Hokies' starter earlier this year when (starter) Will Furrer went down with a knee injury.

After mopping up a 23-0 win over Temple, Young, a 6-3, 194-pound senior, started the following week and guided the Hokies to a 12-10 win over previously unbeaten West Virginia.

Saturday, Young will get his third straight start when the Hokies take on East Carolina at 2 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium.

"You're only one play away from losing a starter," Young said. "That's what happened in our situation. The backup has to be ready to play."

That's a far cry from the first emergency call of Young's career.

As a redshirt freshman at N.C. State in 1986, Young was called on to replace the injured Erik Kramer in a key Atlantic Coast Conference game against Virginia.

The Wolfpack was in a battle for the ACC crown and needed a win over the Cavaliers to keep pace. But State struggled, losing 20-16 as Young hit on seven of 18 passes for 87 yards before being replaced by a hobbled Kramer.

"I think that game was very beneficial to my career," Young said in a phone interview Wednesday. "It made me know that you have to be prepared to play in a backup role."

"It was an experience I learned a great deal from. At the time I was not mentally prepared for the game. I made some mistakes that, as I've grown older, I can't see myself making. I have matured now and become a much more mature quarterback. At that time, I probably wasn't quite ready."

Young transferred to Virginia Tech in the summer of 1987 following a disappointing spring practice in which he was hampered by tendonitis in his elbow.

Virginia Tech coach Bill Dooley recruited Young out of high school in Salem, Va.

Young decided it was time to move home.

"I had some injuries. It was a frustrating spring for me," he said. "I was unable to participate most of the spring and I dropped down the ladder. It became frustrating for me."

"I wanted to be back closer to my family. I made that decision. I don't regret making the transfer."

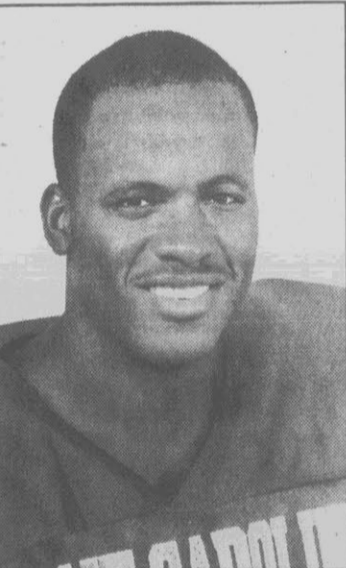

So he packed his bags for Blacksburg, a short 40-minute ride from his hometown of Salem.

Since he redshirted his first year at N.C. State, Young lost his sophomore year of eligibility while sitting out in accordance with NCAA transfer guidelines.

"I really wanted to go to Virginia Tech," Young said. "That was my second choice out of high school."

"Had it not worked out, I probably

Waiting Is Over For Pirates' Tyson

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Two years is a long apprenticeship for any job, but for East Carolina wide receiver Charlie Tyson, it's a waiting period that is thankfully over.

A junior criminal justice major from Miami, Tyson didn't have a whole lot to show after his first two seasons with the Pirates, other than playbooks for three different positions.

He started out as a slotback, found himself a combination defensive back/slotback his sophomore season and a wide receiver when spring drills concluded last spring.

"It was a big change from offense to defense and moving around," he said. "I was trying to figure out what was going on. Was it the talent level or was it just me as the reason why I wasn't getting enough playing time? All along, I felt the coaches believed I had some talent. The opportunity didn't come then. Now it's up to me to make the most of it."

His chance came when the ECU receiver ranks were thinned by injury.

A reserve behind Walter Wilson heading into the season, Tyson began to see more playing time when senior-BoJack Davenport was lost for the year during preseason drills due to a shoulder injury.

Then, in the fourth game of the year, Wilson, the Pirates' top pass receiver, suffered a partially separated shoulder.

Tyson has been able to step right in for the Pirates. He is the team's second leading receiver with nine receptions for 146 yards and two touchdowns. He'll be in the starting lineup Saturday when ECU, 3-1-1, takes on Virginia Tech, 3-2-1.

"Unfortunately, with a couple of injuries at the wide receiver position, like to BoJack Davenport, it kind of opened the door for me to show the coaches what I could do," Tyson said.

What he can do is catch. And now that he's gotten a taste of playing regularly and starting, Tyson wants to stay put.

Tyson came to ECU out of Norland High School in Miami and was recruited to fill a slotback spot in ECU's run-and-shoot offense. As a senior, he was All-Dade County after rushing for 1,300 yards.

He played just enough his freshman year to miss out on being a redshirt. The next season, coaches decided to use Tyson as both a

Series Not A Priority

May Resume Tuesday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — While baseball officials decided whether to finish the World Series, the Bay area tried to pick up the pieces from an earthquake.

A lot of people were asking if the Series should be played at all.

Since the end of the season, the Bay area was filled with excitement in anticipation of a World Series between the San Francisco Giants and Oakland Athletics.

It was indeed a dream come true.

TV newscasts led off with the Battle of the Bay every night, and the newspapers had special World Series sections.

On Wednesday, the World Series was part of the earthquake roundup.

The quake hit Tuesday at 5:04 p.m., forcing the postponement of Game 3.

On Wednesday, Commissioner Fay Vincent announced that no games would be played before next Tuesday. And then games would only be played with approval of city officials.

"I don't think cancellation of the World Series is appropriate," Vincent said. "Right now, we're hopeful to play next week."

"That's a tough call," former player and manager Joe Torre said. "It's certainly not the kind of atmosphere you want to play a baseball game in."

Vincent said reports indicated Candlestick Park and the Oakland Coliseum sustained only slight damage.

But getting to the parks will be a major problem for a long time.

"Well, the game usually goes on," World Series umpire Rich Garcia said. "I'm not sure how much it will mean."

Several baseball executives didn't even wait around to find out if the Series would continue. The suitcases bearing the logos of major league teams were stacked in the lobby of the St. Francis hotel Wednesday morning.

"The World Series is usually a time to see friends and have a good time," said Torre, now a TV commentator. "That's all changed. Even if the games are played, everyone will keep thinking about what happened."

Vincent stressed during his Wednesday news conference that the World Series was no longer a top priority in the Bay area.

"We have to remember we are guests here," Vincent said. "Our modest little game is not a top priority."

More than 200 people were killed in the earthquake and hundreds injured.

At the time of the quake, about 62,000 people had jammed into Candlestick Park to see the first World Series game in San Francisco since 1962.

The Oakland A's were milling around the third-base side, and the Giants warmed up near the first-base dugout.

In center field, a band was playing and hundreds of red, white and blue

It's Homecoming For Rose, Conley

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Homecoming festivities tend to create distractions for high school football teams, but Rose and D.H. Conley can ill afford to get sidetracked this Friday night.

The Rampants, who host Elizabeth City Northeastern at 8 p.m. in a pivotal Big East Conference clash, head into their final three games scrapping for a playoff spot.

The Vikings, meanwhile, can clinch a postseason berth with a win at home over Coastal Conference foe West Carteret.

Injury-riddled Rose, 2-1 in the conference and 5-2 overall, has had two weeks to mull over a 28-21 loss to league-leading Wilson Hunt.

A steak dinner with all the trimmings courtesy of the coaching staff and cheerleaders Wednesday evening should serve to raise spirits, but the focus must now be turned to the Eagles.

Northeastern is also coming off a loss to Hunt (10-7) and stands 3-1 in the league and 5-3 overall. The Eagles have an open date next week before closing the season at Wilson Fike.

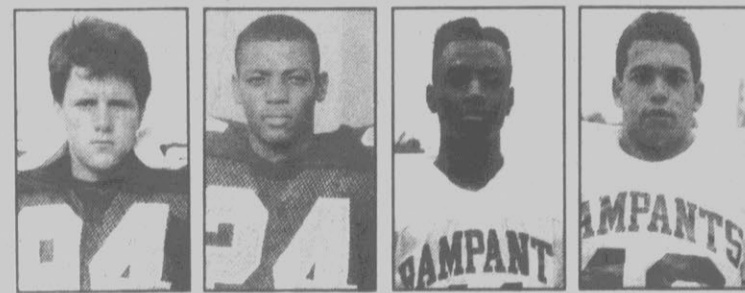

Rose will be at Fike next week and at Rocky Mount in its regular-season finale. Fike, which hosts Hunt Friday, is also in the playoff picture with a 2-1 league mark.

Hunt sports a 4-0 mark in Big East play.

While Rose tries to stay alive in the playoff chase, Conley continues its quest for a Colonial Conference title.

Four straight wins have boosted Conley to 4-0 in the league and 6-2 overall. West Craven is 3-0 in the conference and 7-0 overall. The two rivals will meet for the league title in

Sports Notes

ECU Works Two Hours In Full Pads

East Carolina's football Pirates put in two hours of practice in full gear Wednesday as they continued preparations for Saturday's home contest against Virginia Tech.

"Today was a good practice for us," head coach Bill Lewis said. "It poured just before practice and drizzled during the practice but we accomplished everything we wanted today."

East Carolina, 3-1-1, will entertain the Hokies at 2 p.m. Saturday in the annual Homecoming game. The Pirates are 26-8 in the last 34 Homecoming games. ECU has not played since losing its first game, 47-14, at South Carolina on Oct. 7.

Virginia Tech, 3-2-1, has been one of the real surprises in college football this season. The Hokies beat Heisman Trophy candidate Major Harris and West Virginia, 12-10, two weeks ago. Earlier this season, Tech tied South Carolina, 17-17, on the road.

Tech's defense, an eight-man front alignment, has allowed just 90 yards a game rushing.

"Anytime that you practice against a defense that is different from yours, it is difficult to prepare for," Lewis said. "They have some outstanding athletes on defense and are extremely difficult to run on."

A.G. Cox Wins Volleyball Again

BETHEL — A.G. Cox swept a pair of volleyball matches from Bethel Middle School to clinch the Pitt County Junior High School Conference championship for the 15th consecutive year.

Cox won the A team match 15-12, 15-6, led in service by Shannon Owens and Tennesha Brown. In the B team match, Cox took a 15-11, 15-7 victory, paced by the service of Sarah Manning.

Cox is now 8-0 on the year.

Northampton East's Perry Honored

CHAPEL HILL — Two quarterbacks and two running backs picked up this week's North Carolina High School Athletic Association player of the week honors in their respective classifications.

In 4-A, Jed Galloway of Roxboro Person completed 23 of 35 passes for 365 yards and six touchdowns as Person defeated Hillsborough Orange 38-33.

Shawn Mashburn of Southern Alamance also had a terrific game through the air. The Patriot quarterback hit on 25 of 30 passes for 347 yards and two scores as Southern Alamance defeated Western Alamance 27-6 in a Mid-State 3-A battle.

In 2-A, David Perry of Northampton East had the best single-game rushing effort in recent years Friday by carrying 27 times for 352 yards and four touchdowns in a 41-7 victory over Plymouth. Perry has rushed for 650 yards in the last two weeks.

Running back-linebacker Rod Cooper of Cherokee helped down rival Murphy for the first time in 31 years. He carried the ball 22 times for 124 yards and three touchdowns to pick up the 1-A award.

Hornets Draw Small Crowd In Columbia

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The small crowd that attended last weekend's NBA exhibition game between Charlotte and Washington has jeopardized a return appearance next year by the Hornets, an official said.

The matchup between the Hornets, in their second season in the National Basketball Association, drew only 4,346 at the Carolina Coliseum on Saturday night.

"It's still too early to tell for next year, but right now it's 50-50 at best," said Neill McGeachy, president of Sugar Creek Promotions, which lost money on the game.

"When we drew about 5,800 last year, we had hoped for more, but we thought — all things considered — that it was a number we could build on," he added, referring to a game against the New York Knicks.

There were plenty of reasons for people not to attend the game. The State Fair is being held a few miles away, Clemson was playing Georgia Tech on the same day and the World Series was on television.

But South Carolina had an open date, which is the main reason the NBA exhibition game was scheduled for Saturday.

"There's never a good time for a preseason game," McGeachy said. "The games don't count in the standings, and there are a lot of things going on."

McGeachy said he is friends with South Carolina basketball coach George Felton and his assistant, Eddie Payne, "so I want to come back to Columbia, but right now, the future of pro basketball in Columbia is in doubt."

He did admit, however, the matchup could have been better.

"We tried very hard to get Denver or Seattle because we felt we needed a marquee individual such as Alex English or Xavier McDaniel to add to the mix of the 'home' team Hornets," he said. "But it's very difficult to get Western teams to travel across country for an exhibition game."

Both English and McDaniel are Columbia natives who play in the NBA.

Jazz Notch First Exhibition Win

ATLANTA (AP) — The Utah Jazz took their first NBA exhibition victory Wednesday night, defeating Atlanta 109-107 and handing the Hawks their first preseason loss.

Karl Malone led the Jazz with 26 points before being ejected from the game in the third quarter with two technical fouls. Thurl Bailey added 20, and Darrell Griffith had 14.

Rookie Blue Edwards from East Carolina collected nine points.

Dominique Wilkins paced the Hawks with 21 points, followed by Cliff Levingston and Antoine Carr with 14.

The Jazz outshot the Hawks from the field 52.6 percent to 33.3 percent.

The Hawks are 2-1 in exhibition, while Utah evened its record at 1-1.

Green Says Reds Have Made Offer

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dallas Green, former New York Yankees manager, says he has been offered the job as Cincinnati manager. But new Reds general manager Bob Quinn, former Yankees' executive, said no one has been offered the position.

Green said Marge Schott, the Reds' owner and president, offered him the manager's job, but he was uncertain whether he wanted it.

Quinn, hired last week as the Reds' vice president and general manager, denied that the manager's job had been offered to Green.

Team spokesman Jon Braude said the club had no comment on whether the manager's job had been offered.

Rookies Among NFL Players Of The Week

NEW YORK (AP) — Rookie quarterback Rodney Peete of Detroit and rookie safety Carnell Lake of Pittsburgh were among the four NFL players honored as players of the week.

The others were defensive tackle Jerome Brown of Philadelphia, NFC defensive player, and Houston quarterback Warren Moon, AFC offensive player.

Peete was named the NFC offensive player after he completed 17 of 31 passes for 268 yards and a touchdown and ran five yards for the winning TD on fourth down with 33 seconds left. Overall, he ran 10 times for 78 yards.

Lake, who played at UCLA, had an interception, a fumble recovery, knocked down two passes and had five tackles in Pittsburgh's 17-7 upset of Cleveland.

Jesse Owens Award Finalists Named

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Five of the nation's top track and field athletes, including world record holder Roger Kingdom in the high hurdles, were named as finalists for the annual Jesse Owens Award.

Kingdom, 27, from Monroeville, Pa., a two-time Olympic high hurdles champion, set a world record with a time of 12.92 seconds this summer. He won the World Indoor and World Cup championships.

The other finalists are Mike Conley, 27, Fayetteville, Ark., World Indoor and World Cup triple jump champion; Sandra Farmer-Patrick, 27, Pflugerville, Texas, who set two American records and won the World Cup championship in the 400-meter hurdles; Dave Johnson, 26, Montclair, Calif., whose 8,549 points in the decathlon was the second-highest score in U.S. history and the highest since Bruce Jenner in 1976; and PattiSue Plumer, 27, Mountain View, Calif., who set an American record in the 5,000-meter run.

Tway Fires 61 To Lead Disney

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Records fell because the putts did as Bob Tway bolted into a four-shot lead in the opening round of Disney Classic.

Tway made four birdie putts of at least 15 feet and an eagle putt of 25 feet in shooting an 11-under-par 61 in Wednesday's opening round.

"Obviously you don't make them like that very many times," Tway said. "For some reason, they were going in. I guess that's the difference between a 61 and a 65."

It took almost as long to tally the records as it did Tway's strokes after Wednesday's round of 32-29.

His score: — Matched the PGA Tour's best round of the year, by Jim Carter in the Centel Classic at Tallahassee, Fla., on Sept. 30.

— Tied the tournament record set by Mark Lye in 1984.

— Broke the Disney first-round record set last year by Bob Lohr, who shot a 62 on the way to his only PGA victory.

— Broke by two shots the tournament record at Lake Buena Vista, one of three courses used for the first three rounds of this tournament. Five golfers had shared the old mark.

Tway's four-stroke margin after one round was also a tournament record, by two shots. Three golfers held the old mark.

Tway is 16th on the PGA money list, but he has missed the cut in six of his past 11 tournaments.

"Coming here I didn't have many expectations," he said. But after an eagle-3 at No. 14, Tway thought about shooting a 59.

"You always do," he said. "I added it up and said, 'How many holes do I have left?' I thought, 'Well, I've got (four) holes left. I've got to birdie every one. That'd be pretty much of a fluke; let's just play.'"

Tway did get two more birdies, the last with a 20-foot putt at No. 18.

Tied at 65 were Paul Azinger, Ted Schulz, Tim Simpson and Mike Donald. Azinger and Schulz played Lake Buena Vista, Simpson the Palm course and Donald the Magnolia. All finished before Tway, who was among the last golfers to tee off.

"He might shoot in the 50s!" Azinger said when Tway was 9-under with three holes left. "That course played shorter than I can ever remember it playing, and it's a short course anyway (6,706 yards). Those fairways are hard."

Tied at 66 were Larry Silveira, Rocco Mediate and Dave Rummells. Eleven golfers were at 67.

Of the 44 golfers who played Lake Buena Vista, 28 broke 70. It is the shortest of the three courses used in the Disney, and Tway admitted it is an easy layout.

"There are a lot of short holes," he said. "I hit a lot of pitching wedges and a lot of sand wedges to the par-4s. The par-5s are reachable. If you get it going, you're hitting a lot of short irons and you have a lot of birdie chances."

Maryland Informed Of 19 Violations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — The Maryland men's basketball program is accustomed to having something hanging over its collective head.

For three years, the Terrapin program has been forced to operate in the aftermath of the cocaine-related death of Len Bias.

So, even though the NCAA officially informed the university Monday of 19 violations uncovered by an eight-month preliminary investigation, the program is not wavering.

"The players have been through a lot here," Maryland coach Gary Williams said Wednesday prior to the Terps' practice at Cole Field House. "I think the school owes it to the players to run a normal college basketball program. ... I don't think this will have an effect. ... It won't be an excuse for how we play this season."

School officials received a letter of inquiry detailing a list of charges against the program, including unethical conduct by former coach Bob Wade and the scalping of tickets to the 1988 Atlantic Coast Conference tournament. The program is also charged with offering improper inducements to recruits, including Alonzo Mourning, who signed with Georgetown, and ex-Terrapin Brian Williams, who now attends the University of Arizona.

Athletic Director Lew Perkins spoke with team members about the contents of the letter Wednesday morning. He was addressing an informed audience.

"We've been talking, ever since I took over, about the situation," Williams said. "We've tried to keep the players up to date so there are no surprises."

The official letter arrived five months after Maryland elected to buy out the final two years of Wade's contract and replace him with Williams, the former Ohio State coach.

Wade had been hired just weeks before the 1986-87 season after Lefty

Driesell was forced to resign in the aftermath of Bias's death in June 1986.

"We're a lot further along than you might think," said Perkins, who added that the university participated in the investigation and was aware of the facts as they unfolded.

"When you look at other investigations, this one has been relatively short. I read that the University of Kentucky investigation took three years."

The NCAA began its preliminary investigation into the Maryland basketball program last February, shortly after Wade admitted that members of his staff were involved in providing transportation to and from classes at a nearby junior college for former Terrapins guard Rudy Archer.

"It's not pleasant, of course," Perkins said. "We're not happy about getting the letter from the NCAA. ... But I'm looking at this as the final chapter of this episode. We're that much closer receiving the letter. I think everybody wants this situation to be over with. It's time to move on."

The Terps will be trying to put behind them a series of allegations, the most serious of which concerns their former coach's lack of cooperation with NCAA investigators.

Wade is accused of violating the NCAA's principles of ethical conduct. He "did not, on all occasions, deport himself in accordance with the generally recognized high standards of honesty" in responding to investigators, the NCAA said in the letter.

Wade allegedly provided false and misleading information in response to several allegations, and encouraged members of his staff to do likewise, the NCAA said.

Former assistant coach Jeff Adkins, administrative assistant Woody Williams, part-time assistant Ralph Lee and graduate assistant Ed Lansford were all named in several allegations. All four have since left the university.

The only member of Wade's staff not implicated was Ron Bradley, who was an assistant coach and now works in the Maryland athletic department.

Adkins is accused of arranging for several Terrapin players to receive from $200 to $250 for the sale of each of their four complimentary tickets to the 1988 ACC post-season tournament.

Adkins allegedly provided each player with the identities of individuals who would purchase the tickets. He also instructed the players to list these individuals as relatives.

The letter also alleges that, in 1987, Wade allegedly had an assistant coach, who was not named, accompany Williams and Mourning, in separate incidents, to a sporting goods store where they were allowed to obtain articles of clothing at little or no cost.

Other allegations against Wade's program include providing Archer with a courtesy car, providing members of the team with items of clothing and accessories at no cost to the players that Wade received free of charge from the Nike Corporation, and the use by student-athletes of mileage from frequent flyer accounts to obtain airline transportation at reduced cost.

Maryland has until Dec. 15 to officially respond to the allegations.

University officials will meet with the NCAA Infractions Committee before sanctions are determined.

"We've cooperated fully with the NCAA from Day One," Perkins said. "I think we'll be recognized for doing that. We've done everything we can and now it's up to the NCAA. We'll go along with whatever they decide."

Kayaking Caught Hix

ECU Club Heads For Whitewater

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The title of doctor is reserved for those well schooled in their field, hence the case of Jim Hix, whose office door sign reads "Dr. Kayak."

Hix, an associate professor of chemistry at East Carolina, can usually be found kayaking somewhere in North Carolina when he isn't grading lab reports or lecturing on the finer points of compounds and elements.

Hix first tried kayaking in 1984 and got hooked immediately. The sport offered him an exciting hobby along with a reprieve from any pressures of everyday life.

"The excitement and enjoyment is learning to use the power of the river to accomplish what you want to do," Hix said. "It gives you a tremendous amount of satisfaction to be able to observe and read the river, and use the river to go where you want to go and come out in one piece."

Through his interest in paddling and kayaking, Hix, along with the university's intramural department, helped originate the ECU Kayaking Club in 1984.

The group has about 10-15 hardcore members, along with a participation list of anywhere from 15-40 throughout the year.

"I was having so darn much fun with it I wanted other people to do it also and have other people to go with," Hix said. "There weren't that many people that I was aware of in Greenville doing whitewater when I started in 1984."

Originally begun as a paddling club, Hix soon found there was little excitement in paddling around the pool in Memorial Gym in a canoe. Kayaking, though, was a different story.

Kayaks were more maneuverable and students loved trying the Eskimo roll, where the kayaker turns completely over in the water.

"Everyone gets turned on by the Eskimo roll," Hix said. "That maintains their enthusiasm."

Locally there are a number of groups through which you can get involved with kayaking.

For students and people affiliated with ECU, there is the ECU Kayak Club. In Greenville, the Cypress Group and the Sierra Club are also involved with the sport, as is the Pamlico-Tar River Foundation in Washington.

Hix also does some instructing through Paddles and Sails of Washington.

With proper equipment, kayaking can be a year-round sport. In the colder months, a wetsuit is used.

"One of the things I like about kayaking is you can get into relatively inexpensively," Hix said.

Sailboats, for instance, will cost

Non-Revenue Report

thousands of dollars. You can get fully outfitted with a brand new kayak for less than a $1,000. With used equipment, you can get totally outfitted for around $500.

Hix began canoeing through his work with the Boys Scouts, beginning in Owensboro, Ky., and then in Greenville.

He owned a canoe and used to paddle around different bodies of water in the area first with his daughter Caren, and then with his wife, Nora.

Hix interest in paddling continued to grow and a friend of the family, Buster Thompson, suggested kayaking.

On Christmas Day of 1983, Hix woke up to find a brand new kayak under the tree.

"They won't go where you want them to go for the first time, actually for the first 10 times," Hix said. "They've got a mind of their own."

"If you've got the patience to stick with it, your body will figure it out where ultimately you can control what you want it to do. The kayak becomes part of you. You wear the kayak. I just fell in love with it."

Having gone whitewater rafting on his honeymoon, Hix decided he'd like to try kayaking in white water.

When there is water running over the dam at Rocky Mount, there is whitewater as close as the Tar River. Other close spots are the Cape Fear, about 25 miles north of Fayetteville, and the Haw River, near Weldon.

Some of his favorite whitewater areas in the region are the Chattooga, on the South Carolina/Georgia border; the French Broad, near Asheville; the Nantahala, also near Asheville; the Nolichucky, near Johnson City, Tenn.; the Ocoee, 150 miles west of Asheville and the James River in Richmond, Va.

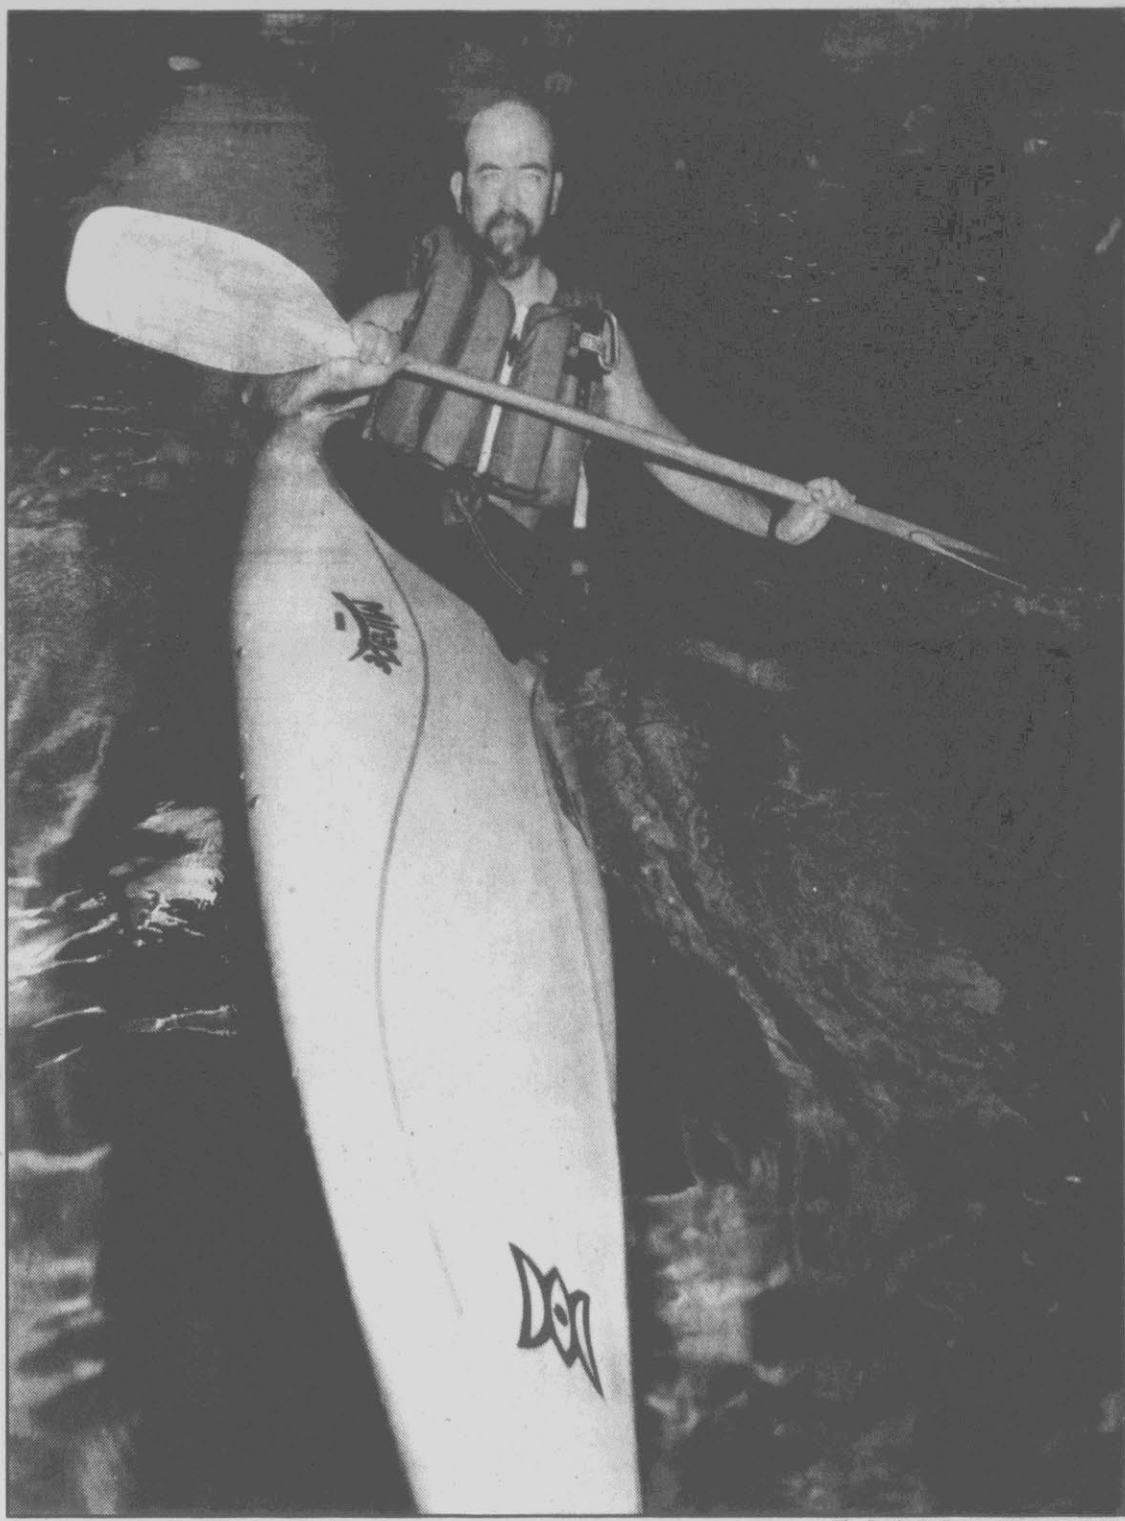

Hix has attended kayaking clinics at the Nantahala Outdoor Center near Bryson City at various times since taking up the sport. Recently, he received his certification as an instructor.

There are six classifications of rapids, ranging from I (gentle) to VI (rough). "Niagara Falls would be a class VII rapids," Hix said.

Beginners can usually handle up to Class II, while Hix puts his limit at Class IV or Class V.

"For some, the excitement becomes fear," Hix said. "It's not for everybody. There is risk, but it's a controlled risk. The potential for hazard is there."

"Everybody each year needs a good religious experience to show themselves the water still is as powerful as it is," Hix said.

reserve cornerback and a reserve slotback.

"I had to do what was best for the team at the time. I knew that later on I could get back to the position I wanted to play — wide receiver," Tyson said. "It was just a temporary move to help the team. They felt my speed would help them back there."

"It wasn't a definite move in the fall. I had to make a decision in the spring (with the new coaches) which side of the ball I wanted to play on."

Virginia Tech posed a severe challenge for the Pirates because of a defense that has been a catalyst to the Hokies' improvement after two down seasons.

"You're going to have a hard time establishing any kind of running game," ECU coach Bill Lewis said. "Florida State, they just abandoned the running game. They completely turned to throwing the ball."

That could put the onus right on the ECU passing attack.

"They have a tough front line," Tyson said. "I think we're going to have to throw the ball. In order to get the throwing game going, we're going to have run the ball, too."

Travis Hunter has been the starting quarterback for ECU in each game this year, but in the last three games backup Jeff Blake has seen extensive time.

Tyson, though, isn't about to get into any quarterback controversy.

"Of course the fans are going to acknowledge that there is a change at quarterback," he said. "But they don't really know what happened with the change, or the reason for the change."

"It really doesn't affect us very much. Travis is a very experienced quarterback and it's nice to have his leadership. When Jeff gets in the game he does a good job and has complete control of the offense just like Travis. We work with both of them during the week."

NCAA Council Supports Plan To Assist Prop 42s

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — The NCAA Council will support a plan to help college athletes who are suspended under Proposition 42 to attend schools of their choice.

Proposition 42, approved during the last NCAA convention, would eliminate all scholarship aid to freshmen who fail to meet the academic requirements of the earlier Proposition 48.

NCAA president Albert M. Witte said the council wants to make certain "partial qualifiers" — those whose high school grade-point average is at least 2.0 on a 4.0 scale — have "access to institutional funds" and not be barred from financial aid that they would otherwise be eligible to receive if they were not athletes.

Athletes denied freshmen eligibility often must attend other colleges because they cannot afford tuition without a scholarship.

"The council has a subcommittee which has developed a plan for ameliorating Proposition 42. We'll meet together to see if there is unanimity to go for one proposal or to present the membership with two proposals to choose from. But we are in agreement... partial qualifiers should have access to an education, and there should not be a loosening of eligibility requirements."

Witte said the council would not recommend repeal of Proposition 42 or changing previous stands on eligibility contained in Proposition 48.

The council, which includes 22 representatives from the NCAA Division I and II each from Divisions II and III, ended three days of closed-door meetings in Indianapolis on Wednesday. The meetings set the agenda of proposals the council will sponsor during the NCAA convention in Dallas Jan. 7-10.

The council also decided to recommend year-round drug testing for college athletes and stiffer penalties for those who test positive, especially for such banned substances as steroids.

"The feeling is to show more concern and compassion for those who use street drugs," Witte said Wednesday. "The emphasis there is less for punishment than for curing or helping the athlete."

"The health and safety and welfare of those athletes are given much greater weight than for those who test positive for performance-enhancing substances such as steroids."

Witte, a law professor at the University of Arkansas, said the council unanimously endorsed the concept of a year-round drug testing program, although no details of the plan or how it would be implemented have been formulated. The NCAA now tests only before its championship events and football bowl games, but many schools conduct in-season testing for athletes.

Richard Schultz, the NCAA executive director, said there likely would be challenges to the proposal if it is adopted "but we feel we're on solid legal ground."

The Council also denied an appeal for immediate eligibility for Chris Mills, a sophomore who transferred from Kentucky to Arizona after Kentucky's basketball program was placed on probation. The Council received the appeal before its last meeting in San Diego in August but referred the matter to its Committee on Infractions. That committee discussed it with an administrative committee before sending it back to the Council.

"The Mills voluntarily transferred and, according to the Division I steering committee, he seems to fit within the category of voluntary transfer students," Witte said. "The committee saw no reason to make an exception in this case."

Mills was ruled ineligible to play at Kentucky as part of the sanctions imposed for basketball violations. He became a focal point of the NCAA's investigation of Kentucky after a package addressed to his father and allegedly sent by a Kentucky assistant coach opened at an air freight office in Los Angeles and was found to contain $1,000 in cash.

Mills, who enrolled at Arizona this summer and began practicing with the team on Sunday, has not been implicated in any violation.

balloons were set to be released above Candlestick.

"Dusty Baker yelled, 'Earthquake!' But I thought it was a joke," Giants catcher Terry Kennedy said. "I thought he was trying to break the tension."

But in an instant, the Giants catcher knew something was very wrong.

"I looked at the first base dugout and it was moving," Kennedy said. "Then I felt the ground rumble."

The word came quickly that part of the Bay Bridge had collapsed and people had died.

"The World Series means nothing now," Kennedy said. "I'm sick about this. The people of the area waited forever to see the Giants and A's in the World Series and this happens."

The World Series was played through World Wars I and II and the Great Depression.

The NFL played a full schedule of games two days after President Kennedy was shot to death in Dallas, and in 1981, the NCAA played its championship basketball game the day President Reagan was shot.

The show always seems to go on.

On Wednesday, baseball officials debated if the World Series should be played after a natural disaster.

Donald Fehr, executive director of the players association, said he had been in contact with representatives from the A's and Giants.

Future Home Of A's Welch Damaged By Earthquake

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Bob Welch, the scheduled pitcher for the Oakland Athletics in Game 3 of the World Series, looked with dismay at his earthquake-damaged future home Wednesday, after a walk through the hard-hit Marina district.

Welch, with a pained expression on his face, turned to his wife Mary Ellen and gave a "thumbs down" sign.

Mrs. Welch held the couple's 10-week-old son Dylan in her arms and tried unsuccessfully to hold back tears, after a short walk from their current residence, an apartment. They had spent the night without water, electricity or heat. Natural gas service in the area was cut off because of the danger of more fires in the area, where a major blaze erupted following the quake.

The earthquake caused an indefinite postponement of Game 3 at Candlestick Park, home of the San Francisco Giants. Welch was in the trainer's room, getting his arm rubbed, when the quake struck, shaking loose chunks of concrete throughout the stadium with about 60,000 people waiting to see the game.

The couple and friends who were at the stadium then went through an anxious drive to their Marina-area apartment where the Welch's son was with a babysitter. The baby and sitter were OK, and the Beach Street apartment suffered no serious damage.

"It was an ugly ride, because we heard on the radio there was a big fire on Beach Street and we had left the baby (with a sitter) at the apartment," Welch said. "The ride took about two hours."

Normally, without traffic tieups, the Welch apartment is about 30 minutes from Candlestick Park.

"I don't worry about the World Series," Welch said of the disaster which caused widespread damage in a large area of Northern California. "Anyone who thinks I do is crazy."

The couple recently bought the condominium unit in a two-story building. As a result of the quake, the exterior of the building had large cracks, mostly around the ground-level garage door and building entryway.

"One good thing, we've got earthquake insurance," Welch said just before seeing the damaged building.

Across Jefferson Street from the condominium, a three-story apartment building was sagging. Less than a block away, firemen were pouring water on the blackened remains of a larger fire that erupted as a result of the quake. That fire destroyed a large apartment building, and for several hours it was feared the fire might spread to other structures in the area which has many wooden buildings, built early in this century.

Wearing a World Series souvenir cap and a red sweater during his walk through streets with quake damage visible in every direction, Welch passed dozens of people in a section where motor vehicle traffic was blocked off. No one recognized him.

The pitcher's brother-in-law, Chester Kulesza, a policeman from Warren, Mich., and Welch's friends Pat and Carol Rodgers of Vero Beach, Fla., were at Candlestick Park waiting to see Welch pitch against the Giants when the earthquake struck.

"Because we were with Bob, we were able to get down on the field and leave with him. We had his car," Kulesza said.

After arriving at the apartment and finding out their child was all right, Welch and his wife were able to concentrate on an easier problem.

"Chester, being an emergency-minded person got some hot water out of the hot water heater to warm up the baby's bottle. The baby was fine. The rest of us had no water to drink," said Pat Rodgers, a college classmate of Welch at Eastern Michigan.

Duke Basketball Begins Life Without Ferry

Mike Krzyzewski

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — For Coach Mike Krzyzewski, Duke's upcoming basketball season is a completely new task.

Gone are All-America Danny Ferry and floor leader Quin Snyder. In their position as team leaders are seniors Robert Brickey, Alaa Abdelnaby and Phil Henderson. Then there are the new faces, freshmen guards Bobby Hurley, Billy McCaffrey and Thomas Hill.

"It's a much different team than any I've coached in a while," Krzyzewski said Wednesday during media day at Cameron Indoor Stadium. "Everybody could contribute. The question is how to use them, how will I mix them? Probably, if we lose some games, I'll be open for conjecture. I'd like that, hearing ideas from others."

"Before, it was, 'Should I start Ferry and Snyder?' I'd play them if they were bad or not. Now it's different."

"We're gonna play a lot of people. We may play more people than in the past. We'll show more defensive pressure fullcourt."

Krzyzewski is focusing on keeping things simple and slow to develop this team. He has emphasized teaching more in the first week of practice.

"Right now we're a fair team," Krzyzewski said. "Hopefully, we'll be a good team in December and very good by February."

"With this team, one of the problems we have is we don't have an anchor—somebody who has done it day in day out all year. We'll have to develop and share the role of the big prime-time player.

"I could push our whole system on them right away, but then this could be a shallow team."

Krzyzewski's team is full of ballhandlers this year. While Snyder and Henderson were the only true guards on last season's team, this year's edition has Hurley, who is slated to start at point guard, Henderson, McCaffrey, Hill, Brian Davis and Joe Cook. Therefore, Henderson should be able to concentrate more on becoming a scorer.

Hurley, a 6-footer from Jersey City, N.J., has already been labeled a distributor for the Blue Devils. McCaffrey, 6-3, has been called a scorer. And Hill, 6-4, could fit it because of his defensive capabilities.

Inside, 6-11 sophomore Christian Laettner should be the big scorer. But his partner inside could vary. Krzyzewski wants the 6-foot-10 Abdelnaby, who has bulked up to 250 pounds, to be more consistent.

"If he scores 11 points and gets six rebounds per game that may be all he can do," Krzyzewski said. "I don't want that to be 18 points against The Citadel and four against Virginia, though."

Krzyzewski said two of the more impressive players in preseason drills have been Cook and Greg Koubek. Krzyzewski said Cook's defense would be a big reason he would see action after playing but five games last year because of academic difficulties. He added that Koubek, a 6-6 junior, has played with more confidence and could see time at forward in a small lineup.

Three injuries have slowed the Devils down further in preseason.

Reserve center Clay Buckley hasn't practiced because of a bad back. He suffered a slipped disk and hasn't gone through any of the preseason conditioning drills or practices.

Brickey, the team captain, took up golf during the summer, trying to recuperate from a leg injury suffered in the NCAA semifinal loss to Seton Hall. He developed a large calcium deposit in his upper right leg which took three months to rehabilitate. As a result, his progress and leadership in practice have been hindered by just trying to get in shape.

"I told him when you're 18 (years old) you can wake up and go dancing and moonwalk or whatever," Krzyzewski said. "But when you get to be 21 and go through the rigors of ACC basketball, you've got to get your rest. He's going through all of that right now. I think he'll be back to speed in a couple of weeks."

Henderson, who left school in early summer only to return to the team this fall, has been hampered by a pulled groin muscle. He was injured on Monday and will return to practice next Monday. Krzyzewski said there were even thoughts that he had a hernia.

Still, Henderson's biggest question is his summer of discontent where he tried to transfer to Illinois and then came back to Duke when that move didn't go through.

"The whole situation has been resolved with the team," Henderson said. "But that's something we can't let begin. If the public wants to look at it and still think about it, that's their business. But we're going on."

Krzyzewski said there was nothing new or "mysterious" about Henderson's situation, just that he thought the 6-foot-4 senior learned something.

"I think he needed to go through something like that to appreciate what he has," Krzyzewski said. "With kids, when they do something, they perceive it as being a whole lot more wrong than you do. Hopefully, it developed a lot of maturity with everybody involved."

Duke's first Blue-White scrimmage is scheduled for Oct. 28. Krzyzewski said the exhibition schedule — Nov. 11 against High Five America, an AAU team, and Nov. 22 against the Soviet Union — should be good barometers of his team.

"They'll be men, and we won't be," Krzyzewski said.

Ford: Tigers Must Overachieve

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Forget the flanker reverse and stash the good ol' Statue of Liberty. When 15th-ranked North Carolina State goes to Clemson this weekend, Coach Dick Sheridan won't be pulling out any book of trick plays.

"You don't win big games without having physical confrontations," he says. "You've got to line up and go nose to nose."

"You don't do it with tricks and mirrors. You have to do it with blocking and tackling."

Recent history would show the Wolfpack (6-0) has done the better job of blocking and tackling the Tigers than Clemson has of stopping the Wolfpack. Sheridan has won three straight over Coach Danny Ford, but that hasn't diminished Sheridan's respect for Clemson.

"I think Clemson has a model program," he says. "That's any way you want to measure it..."

"They have been the program everyone shoots for, and they have proven they can compete with the very best in the country. When we compete with Clemson, we know we're measuring ourselves against talent and against a program that's one of the top 10 in America."

Not this week, though.

Clemson fell out of the top 25 after its loss to Georgia Tech last Saturday. To stay in the race for the ACC title, the Tigers can't afford another loss.

Ford said the Tigers face "perhaps the future ACC" champion in N.C. State.

"I think we're a football team and a coaching staff that needs to ... overachieve this week," he said. "They're a more talented football team than we are. I'm sure they're better coached and better prepared than we are. So, it's going to take a lot of help to overcome these situations to try to win."

"But again, that's not the most important thing. I would like for our people ... to just go out and play football and have fun."

Also this weekend, North Carolina is at Georgia Tech. Duke goes to Maryland and Wake Forest is at Virginia.

The Yellow Jackets (2-3, 2-2) have something that they haven't had since Bobby Ross came to Atlanta — momentum.

"I think our kids now believe they can win," Ross says. "But we are a blue-collar football team. We've got to go out and work and play well. I think our squad understands that."

North Carolina (1-5, 0-3) is hoping some of that enthusiasm wears off. Despite a 50-17 loss at Virginia, Coach Mack Brown finds the silver lining in the ever-growing cloud over the Tar Heels.

"If you take away the four turnovers — which you can't — we played our best offensive game of the year," Brown said.

"Offensively, we had more exciting plays, we had more people doing things," he said.

Duke (3-3, 1-1) had last weekend off, but Coach Steve Spurrier was busy nonetheless, fending off questions about whether he was interested in going back to Florida to rescue that program from NCAA scrutiny.

"I haven't talked with anyone. If there is any (talking), it will be after the season. That's something you never know five or six weeks down the road," he said.

"If we lose every game, I might be begging (Duke associate athletic director) Joe Alleva to keep me."

Conley, Rose Homecoming...

two weeks if a spoiler doesn't ruin the script.

West Carteret, which had an open date last week, looms as Conley's only obstacle. The Patriots bring in a 1-2 league mark and 3-4 overall record into Friday's game.

The Vikings are coming off consecutive road wins at Pender County (59-6) and White Oak (17-0).

Elsewhere Friday night, Farmville Central hosts Greene Central, North Pitt visits East Carteret, Ayden-Grifton hosts Pamlico County, Washington travels to Tarboro, Williamston entertains Northampton East, Chocowinity is at Columbia, Roanoke entertains Mattamuskeet and Jamesville visits North Edgecombe.

Rose Seeks To Rebound

An open date gave the Rampants an opportunity to heal some aches and pains and work on fundamentals.

But coming after a loss, the layoff can also have its negative effects such as a drop in confidence.

"It was just time spent playing football," Rose coach Chip Williams said. "A positive point is we had time to go over some technique things and get ready. A negative point is you lose timing, and if you don't play, you lose a little something."

"It's been probably about as positive as it can be coming off a loss. You lose a lot of confidence when you do that. Sometimes you lose a little desire."

"And we might have had one or two that might have lost a little desire but we'll find that out Friday night. Overall with our team, I've been very pleased with how they've reacted."

Linebacker William Gibbs has joined the growing list of injured Rampants and is listed as doubtful. Lineman Boris Newton, who has practiced this week with his left wrist in a cast, may return but North Carolina High School Athletic Association rules prohibit playing with a cast.

Rose passed well, but ran poorly against Hunt. Establishing the run this week will be vital for Rose, according to Williams.

team. I think that's just as important," Williams said. "I certainly hope we play real hard and I hope every minute we're going hard after 'em and they give everything they have. If we can do that, then the W and the L will take care of itself."

Conley Wraps Up Home Schedule

Conley winds up its regular-season home schedule for 1989 with homecoming, but head coach Steve Craft is more concerned with Friday being a vacation day for students, thus interrupting the routine for his players.

"I'm more concerned with not being in school Friday than it being Homecoming," Craft said. "It just breaks your routine. We've been out one Friday this year and performed very poorly against North Lenoir. I just hope we've got enough experience and senior leadership to get us over that hump."

West Carteret also presents its share of problems, Craft said.

The Patriot offense, led by quarterback Mike Holman (6-3, 175) and fullback Tim Williams (6-1, 200), poses the threat of the option and the pass — neither of which the Vikings have had a great deal of exposure to this season.

"They are big, they are strong and they are basically a senior-oriented football team," Craft said. "They've got a football team that is very capable."

"They run a whole lot of option and they throw the ball a great deal. That's enough to concern us right there."

But Conley's defense has more than met the challenge over the past five games, allowing but 19 points.

"Our defense has come on strong," Craft said. "We made some adjustments very early in the season around the first of September which seems like six years ago. But it's more a matter of coming together as a unit."

"They have got a lot of pride in what they're doing and they're doing some things well. They hit people."

A Conley win would set up a possible showdown for the conference title.

"We're still looking at the conference championship," Craft said. "This week's a big week for us. It can get us to our goal of going into the last ball game with a chance."

Greenville's Heritage Club Is For The Young...

At Heart.

It's been said that youth is far too wonderful a thing to waste entirely on the young. And at Peoples Bank, we couldn't agree more.

Our Heritage Club is designed to give people 50 and better a variety of banking privileges and membership activities. The local office of Peoples Bank has named a Heritage Club Director, who will be responsible for your banking needs and organizing quarterly activities and seminars of interest to you. The Director will also plan local outings, even trips out of town.

And because we believe age should have its rewards, you'll receive special consideration on your banking relationship. You can earn bonus rates on Certificates of Deposit and there is no penalty for early withdrawals from C.D.s. You will receive free specialty designed Heritage Club checks and unlimited check writing privileges. And, if you maintain a minimum monthly balance of $1,000 in your checking account, you'll earn interest on those funds. There are also special annual percentage rate and annual fee privileges on your Peoples Bank MasterCard or Visa.

The Heritage Club offers special loan rates .25% lower than the current rates in effect. And you get all of these services, simply by maintaining a minimum balance of $3,000 in a Statement Savings, a Money Market Investment Account, a C.D. with term of six months or longer, or in The Heritage Club account itself.

Stop by and see your Heritage Club Director, because the way we look at it, you're as young as you feel.

Your Heritage Club Director is Yvonne Arnold.

REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS
October 16, 1989
Agencies that Transport the Elderly and Handicapped
The 1989 Session of the North Carolina General Assembly appropriated $22,283 (no matching funds are required) to fund additional transportation for the elderly and handicapped population of Pitt County. The Pitt Area Transit System, Inc. (P.A.T.S.) has been asked by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners to solicit proposals from agencies within Pitt County and to present a recommendation as to the best use of the increased funding. All uses of the funds must be consistent with the adopted Transportation Development Plan which is currently being developed by P.A.T.S. for presentation to the Board of Commissioners for approval. A copy of the draft document is available for public inspection. Agencies desiring to be considered for funding from this source should submit a detailed proposal containing the following:
1. A statement of the mission of the agency and how it is currently funded.
2. A detailed outline of the services provided the Elderly and

EVERY TIME WE SELL A CAR, WE ADD ANOTHER SALESPERSON.

According to J.D. Power and Associates Customer Satisfaction Index™ survey, Acura owners have once again ranked Acura the most satisfying car in America. Making it the third consecutive year that Acura has been ranked above all other automakers, both import and domestic, as having America's most satisfying product quality and dealer service. So if you're still wavering on which performance car to buy, talk to an Acura dealer. Or to some people who have an extreme prejudice toward Acura automobiles. Acura owners.

ACURA
Precision crafted performance.

We need 2 career minded individuals who possess a strong desire to succeed.

Those who qualify would represent ACURA, a division of Honda Motor Co., through our Greenville location.

In addition to the ACURA automobile line you would sell from the finest selection of pre-owned cars in Greenville.

Daddy Track

Many Fathers Seek New Roles In The Lives Of Their Children

By Jim Schachter
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

It's a weekday morning in Half Moon Bay, Calif., a quarter past 8, and Chris Fennie is getting ready to leave for work.

Two-year-old Willie, his blond, blue-eyed son, clutches a new toy football as he climbs into his toddler seat in the family Volvo. Buffer, Fennie's wife, hops into the car, Fennie slides behind the wheel, and the family starts out on the 35-minute drive to Genentech, the biotechnology company in South San Francisco where the Fennies work as researchers.

It's an eventful ride. They cruise behind a truck loaded with redwood logs and answer Willie's questions about trees and lumber and houses. They see a van on fire and quiet Willie's fears. Coming over a hill, they watch jets take off from San Francisco International Airport. Driving into the industrial park that houses Genentech's million-dollar day-care center, they pass a train depot, where an obliging engineer toots a whistle and Willie beams.

But the joy turns to trauma when Willie is reminded that he must leave his football in the car — no outside toys allowed at day care. The tantrum is still ringing in Fennie's ears as he settles into his lab work around 9 a.m.

And so begins one more of the eight-hour days that for Chris Fennie, working father, constitute a career.

At 34, after nine years at Genentech, Fennie has new priorities. Like his lab partners in the cardiovascular department, he used to work long weekends searching for miracle drugs. But now on Saturdays and Sundays, he's home with Willie, hard at play. While his co-workers stay late on weekdays, unlocking chemical secrets, Fennie is picking up his son from day care, exploring more personal mysteries.

"I can't have my child in day care for a 12-hour day," says Fennie, who took three months off during Willie's first year to get to know him better and to let Buffer return to work. "He won't be my child. When you're all done, someone else will have raised him."

So Fennie works from 9 a.m. to 5:45 p.m. and resigns himself to treading water in his job — even as Buffer climbs past him on the career ladder at Genentech. "I'll sacrifice the career," he says. Then he corrects himself. "Not exactly sacrifice, but I'll kind of put it on hold."

Now meet Fennie's boss. G. Kirk Raab is president and chief operating officer of Genentech. At 54, with three grown children from a previous marriage, he is due to become the father of twins early in December.

But Raab won't be cutting back his hours when the children are born.

"Frankly, in my case, I think it would be irresponsible," Raab says. "I have a tremendous responsibility that's important to our shareholders

LAT-WP News Service

Keith Griffith at home with daughter Hannah as well as the health of mankind and our employees. That can't be sacrificed."

After all, Raab explains, "when you go into science, in particular, you decide to be a pretty committed person. Science can't be 9 to 5 to be significant."

Who's right? What should be sacrificed? What qualifies as "significant"?

For men, the answers used to be so clear. They were the breadwinners. They did the important things. For every Madame Curie, there were a thousand Pasteurs. And their wives took care of the kids.

But now, for many men, it's not so easy. Their wives work, so being a breadwinner is nothing special. Rather than taking macho satisfaction in bringing home the bacon, men face constant pressure to take on a share of the parenting and homemaking duties that had been their wives' domain. Yet from whom are they to learn how to be dads? Their fathers' approach — a pat on the head in the morning, a glance at a sleeping child at night, a game of catch on the weekends — wasn't good enough when they were young, and it won't do for their kids, either.

Meanwhile, their jobs want every ounce of them. And many of their peers at work, the competitors for raises and praise and promotions, remain fully invested in their careers. As if they didn't have wives. As if they didn't have kids. As if it were still 1950 and the whole world hadn't changed around them.

"The old definition of success was pretty clear," says Mark Gerzon, a Santa Monica, Calif., screenwriter and peace activist who has written books about the changing nature of manhood in America. "If success is making it to the pros or making over $100,000 or being president of the company, that's clear."

"Now this other thing is fuzzy, and men don't like things that are fuzzy," says Gerzon, a father of three whose sons are welcome to visit in the garage he's converted into an office. "One hundred thousand dollars is clear compared to $80,000, but being involved in parenting your children is not clear at all."

Big things aren't clear. Can a man say his family is the most important thing in his life, act accordingly and hope for any advancement in his career? Small things aren't clear. Can a man take time off to stay home with a sick child without inviting questions about his commitment to the company?

The dilemmas are old news for women, who, despite their historic assault on the working world during the past 20 years, still are expected — by society, by most husbands and often, by themselves — to retain primary responsibility for children and home. It is women whom employers are thinking of when they build child-care centers and extend parental leaves. It was a "Mommy Track" that was debated last spring when Felice Schwartz, president of Catalyst, a women's research group, proposed that companies make it possible for women to maintain careers through the child-rearing years by working part time or in jobs with fewer demands.

Schwartz's critics, mainly feminists, protested that the proposal falsely implied that professional ambition and motherhood could not coexist. Her defenders said that the tension between career and family direly needed the attention Schwartz focused on it.

It was only in the fallout from the controversy that Schwartz and other commentators began to acknowledge that working fathers increasingly are becoming embroiled in the same conflict as working mothers.

Women may be more fully engaged in the struggle, fighting daily to find the time to both nurture and provide. Men, for the most part, are just beginning to recognize that they have choices to make.

But some men, without much notice and certainly without much help from their employers, have gone further. They have wandered onto a "Daddy Track." Professional men, corporate men, single fathers, manual laborers — not a lot of men, but more all the time — have discovered a flip side to the women's movement. Where women found new identities and self-respect in jobs outside the home, these men are finding that what really matters to them is life outside the job.

So Chris Fennie puts his career on the back burner. Martin Sweeney quits his job as a magazine editor, in part to spend more time with his disabled daughter, Eva, 6. John Romero, an account executive, forgoes promotions because John, 5½, and Adrianna, 4, require more attention the older they get. Robert Hale, a personnel director, turns down job offers, despite his ambition; his first priority is Brian, 12, who has lived with Hale since a divorce.

These men are not abandoning work. The breadwinner is not staying home to be the bread baker. Nor are they superdads, the male equivalents of those working women who advance to vice presidencies, attend PTA meetings and put a home-cooked meal on the dinner table each night. Mostly, their wives still bear more than 50 percent of the burden at home.

Celebrities File Suits Against Advertising Imitators

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Most people probably think the late Bobby Darin's distinctive rendition of "Mack the Knife" belongs to the world, right along with Frank Sinatra's "My Way" or Tony Bennett's "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

Not so, if the late singer's son, Dodd, and singer-actress Bette Midler prevail in court.

Darin and the "Divine Miss M" are among the celebrities trying to break new legal ground as they sue companies for copying an entertainer's singing style — the trills and the pauses — in advertisements.

Darin announced last week that he was suing McDonald's for $10 million over its "Mac Tonight" campaign, which features a piano player with a crescent-moon head singing a version of "Mack the Knife," the song his father made a No. 1 hit in 1959.

"It's obvious as soon as you listen to it that it is identical to Darin's version," said Dodd Darin's lawyer, Cyrus Godfrey, in Los Angeles. "Everyone I've talked to is shocked that any company would have done such a thing."

Despite his attorney's incredulity, however, Darin's claim — that vocal style should be protected like lyrics or melody — probably would have been laughed out of court until about a year ago.

Federal copyright laws prohibit the unauthorized copying of songs, but they do not protect the performances. Copycat renditions have long held a place in the advertising industry's bag of tricks.

But Midler's claim against Ford Motor Co. and its advertising agency, Young & Rubicam, may change all that.

The claim stemmed from a 1985 Lincoln-Mercury spot in which one of Midler's backup singers imitated her in an off-camera rendition of "Do You Wanna Dance?" Now ricocheting through federal appeals courts, the case could sharply curtail "sound-alike" ads if it succeeds. To date, Midler has won the right to take the case to a jury despite Ford's attempts to have it thrown out.

As in the Darin case, Midler's lawyers intend to circumvent the copyright laws by arguing the case under the federal Right to Publicity Laws. Under those statutes, companies cannot wrongly suggest that celebrities endorse products.

Woody Allen and Jackie Onassis have both used similar arguments to prevent look-alikes from imitating them in advertisements. Their victories have not eliminated the use of look-alikes, only necessitated prominent disclaimers. The Right to Publicity Laws have never before held up for voices.

In the early 1970s, Nancy Sinatra sued Goodyear for using an imitation of "These Boots Are Made For Walkin'," but a judge threw her case out of court. The advertising agency in that case was New York-based Young & Rubicam, the same firm that created the Lincoln-Mercury ad.

"You really can't permit the association of a song with a performer," said Richard Kurnit, the lawyer who represented the actors who imitated Allen and Onassis. "After all, who do you figure owns 'New York, New York' — Liza Minelli, Frank Sinatra or the guy who wrote it?"

But Godfrey called Nancy Sinatra's case "ancient history. ... If it were tried today, she would win," he said. "The courts are beginning to recognize that a singing style should be protected just like a photograph. You can't use someone's photograph in an ad; why should you be able to rip off their singing style?"

But Felix Kent, a lawyer who represents several major New York advertising agencies, points to the distinctions between the cases.

In the Ford case, the company tried to hire Midler, who has never sung for a commercial. When she turned it down, Ford hired Ula Hedwig, who had traveled with Midler.

Self-Styled Jane Fonda Still Trains At Age 51

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — One day on the set of "On Golden Pond," Jane Fonda was standing in front of a mirror combing her hair, when she felt co-star Katharine Hepburn reach over and tug at her cheek.

"How do you feel about this?" Hepburn asked, peering from behind. "This is your box that carries your persona. What do you want this to be?"

Image is what Hepburn meant. What kind of a person does a face suggest?

Fonda didn't have a ready answer, even though neutrality is impossible for this self-styled crusader.

At age 51, she's still in training. Memoirs don't interest her. A house in Montana will have to wait — there's too much to do. Her outlook remains shaped by possibility, and by now her public knows that it's never too late for a new Jane Fonda.

"It literally doesn't occur to people, maybe even women more than men because women don't have as many options for change, that you can become very, very different, and it's never too late and it can be very profound," she said in a recent interview.

"You just have to stay open to life and not allow yourself to settle in. Anything can happen. I feel fortunate that I have this characteristic of openness."

"People say, 'Have you fulfilled your dreams?' I never had any dreams. My projections of the future were maybe I'd OD at 25 and end up lonely and self-destructive. I never had dreams, I never expected anything, so everything was a surprise to me."

Relaxed Jane:
She sat on a sofa at the Regency Hotel in jeans and blue flannel shirt, occasionally resting her black booted feet on a coffee table and nibbling chocolates.

She talked about open participation and activism. Something's wrong? Well, let's form a committee, organize, protest. Do something! Get involved! It starts with each of us. We can change the world!

No wonder a special screening in New York of her new film, "Old Gringo," was a benefit for the Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Foundation. Fonda and co-star Gregory Peck were there. So were the Kennedys: Ethel, Caroline, John Jr., Kathleen, Robert Jr.

Wealth, glamour, power and idealism: Fonda and the Kennedys. Feasts for the tabloids.

The latest? The drug bust of Vanessa Vadim, the daughter Fonda had with her first husband, French filmmaker Roger Vadim. The 21-year-old Brown University student was arrested Oct. 6 with a friend, Thomas Feegal, outside a reputed drug den in lower Manhattan. At her arraignment, she pleaded innocent to obstructing governmental administration, loitering for the purpose of purchasing drugs and disorderly conduct.

Patricia Jane:
She was born in New York in 1937, the daughter of a highly respected film actor, Henry, and his wife, Frances Seymour Brokaw Fonda, a descendant of Lady Jane Seymour, a wife of King Henry VIII. She committed suicide in 1953 although her children were told it was a heart attack. Jane learned the truth a year later from a gossip magazine.

Her brother, Peter, also went into movies, leaving a testament to the 1960s with the haunting "Easy Rider."

Fonda went to private schools on both coasts and wound up partying at Vassar College. Unsure of a career in acting, her confidence grew in the late '50s under the guidance of Method acting guru Lee Strasberg.

Thespian Jane:
There was Broadway and Hollywood in the early '60s. She had great reviews in bad shows, but her career was going nowhere. She escaped to France and made Vadim's "La Ronde" in 1964, a vulgarization of the 1950 classic about love and sex starring Simone Signoret. She and Vadim married a year later.

Sex Kitten Jane:
She was dubbed "La BB Americaine" by the French press, a reference to Brigitte Bardot, who was once married to Vadim. Among Fonda's roles over the next three years: a woman who seduces her stepson ("La Curee"), a business executive's mistress ("Any Wednesday") and an erotic space maiden who takes on a sex robot and wins ("Barbarella").

Hanoi Jane:
In 1968, around the time of "Barbarella," students in Paris nearly toppled the government, and opposition at home to the Vietnam War overflowed. At first, she defended the United States' involvement, but soon changed her mind — completely.

"I've taken many paths; I've broken all the rules," Fonda said. "I left Hollywood and went to Europe at the time when I shouldn't have. I came back, not as an actress, but as an activist."

Nearly 20 years later, her celebrated visit to North Vietnam, when she appeared on Radio Hanoi and begged American soldiers to stop the bombings, still isn't completely forgotten.

Last year, a Waterbury, Conn., vet tried to circulate bumper stickers that read, "I'm Not Fond'a Hanoi Jane," while the actress was there filming.

Driving Requires Attention

Dear Abby: A 33-year-old woman died today. She was applying mascara when she missed a turn, her car hit a concrete curb and flipped over. She suffered skull and chest injuries, was on life support for two weeks and then died. With her was her young son, who suffered only a broken arm. She left four young children without a mother.

Abby, please print this to remind people who drive that driving requires their full attention. — A Friend Of A Friend

Dear Abby: I am in need of some information and help in finding a licensed escort service or companionship service for persons who have been widowed or are single for reasons of their own. I lost my wife of 39 years two years ago and am now to a point that I would like to get on with my life. I have a very small income and cannot do much traveling, although I would like to do so. Having just returned from my first ship cruise, which was very enjoyable, I realized that there are ladies out there who would pay for a companion for a short period of time. I am not interested in a long-term relationship at this time.

I am a 71-year-old male (look 60), non-smoker, social drinking

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

OK, average physical condition. I consider myself a Christian and prefer a Christian lady. I would like to explore the possibilities of being an escort, and I think I should try to find an agency that specializes in this sort of thing because of the pitfalls that could be encountered. I would value highly any information you could give me. — Californian

Dear Californian: I appreciate your desire to travel and see the world, but if you intend to do so by hiring yourself out as a paid escort, I hope you know how risky it is these days. I'm sure there may be some very decent people in that line of work — but there are also some kinky, kooky folks among their numbers.

However, if you're determined to become a hired escort, make yourself available for interviews with the escort services in your area. Another thought: Inquire at the travel agencies and cruise lines. And keep your fingers crossed.

Dear Abby: I am a 71-year-old woman. Recently, when I went for an eye appointment, the doctor's greeting to me was, "Hello, young lady!"

As I have stated, I am not a young lady and prefer not to be addressed condescendingly. What's wrong with, "Hello, Mrs. Jones?"

Along the same line, I went to a nursing home to talk business with the administrator who was in her early 30s. I was not in her office five minutes before she was calling me by my first name!

Since we were doing business and she was so much younger, she should have known that she owed me the courtesy and respect of addressing me as "Mrs. Jones."

What is your opinion? — "Mrs. Jones" In Savannah, Ga.

Dear Mrs. Jones: People who address strangers — particularly older strangers — by their first names (or anything other than "Mr." or "Mrs.") may be perceived as rude or disrespectful, but actually they are just trying to be friendly.

If such familiarity bothers you, simply request that strangers call you "Mrs. Jones."

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Marriage Has Guarantees

Editor's Note: Erma Bombeck is on a book tour. This Best of Bombeck originally appeared Jan. 19, 1988.)

One of the hardest things in the world to explain is the difference between being married and living with someone.

As an advocate of orange blossoms and long mortgages, I usually end up throwing around a couple of high-class words such as "commitment" and "responsibility to offspring." When my opponent tosses back such phrases as "Love doesn't need a piece of paper" and "Look how many people get stuck in unhappy relationships," I crumble. I don't have a good answer.

Somehow I can't seem to put my finger on that elusive bit of intimacy that makes marriage "different." In both relationships, one shares the same bathroom, feeds the collective dog, eats together, shops together, sleeps side by side, and yet . . .

In a recent TV show, the widowed father no longer wanted to continue his relationship with a contemporary without marriage. She couldn't understand it. They were doing just fine the way they were. He looked at her and said sadly, "But we don't worry about things together."

You have to be married to understand that line. Anyone can play house, but a couple struggling to pay for one is something else. A philosopher once said, "Marriage is our last, our best chance to grow up." He could be right. Everything up until the time you walk down the aisle has been polite, guarded and a little superficial. Returning from the altar is a different feeling altogether. You have not contracted for a temporary position; this is a permanent career.

At Wits End

But there is something else. You have legally agreed to share equally in belongings, debts, closets, fidelity and children. There are defined duties: to respect each other, tell the truth, listen, take care of each other and be sensitive to individual needs. This isn't dating anymore; this is the major league of relationships, with surprises around every corner.

We've gone through three wars, two miscarriages, five houses, three children, 17 cars, 23 funerals, seven camping trips, 12 jobs, 19 banks and three credit unions. I stopped counting slammed doors after 3,009. What do I have to show for it? A feeling of pride and contentment for having done something that isn't easy. A realization that there is someone outside of myself without whom I do not feel whole. Maybe the difference between living together and being married is that the former is a spectator sport and the latter is playing the game by all the rules.

Marriage has no guarantees. If that's what you're looking for, go live with a car battery. As for fear of making a mistake, another philosopher said it all: "God help the man who won't marry until he finds a perfect woman, and God help him still more if he finds her."

Cantaloupe, Melon Business Is Ripe

By Charles Hillinger
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS BANOS, Calif. — It is 9 a.m. as George Lindemann, president of one of the nation's biggest shippers of cantaloupes and honeydew melons, checks his computer screen.

"We've sold 17,000 cartons so far this morning," he says. "We have 2,000 cartons left to sell. We have already sold 15,000 cartons (for delivery) tomorrow, 10,000 cartons the next day and 7,000 cartons the day after that."

Lindemann Produce Inc., headquartered in this San Joaquin Valley farming center, owns no farmland but — because of arrangements with growers from California to Panama — is the only melon shipper, so far as is known, that markets the fruit year-round.

Members of the Lindemann sales force in Los Banos start work each day at 5 a.m., on the phone with buyers for chain stores, brokers and wholesalers representing 1,500 companies.

The company ships melons — most under the Lindy's Delight label — every month to all 50 states and to every province in Canada. It also exports honeydews to Hong Kong, Singapore, Japan and Taiwan.

Less than a mile from company headquarters one day recently, 150 workers were busy processing hundreds of tons of cantaloupes and honeydews being unloaded from a steady stream of trucks onto conveyor belts leading into two huge packing sheds.

On nearby farms, migrant workers were hand-picking ripe melons from the vines. In an 18- to 20-day period, pickers typically go through a cantaloupe field 13 times, each time judging the fruit by its color and picking only at the peak of ripeness.

California and Arizona together account for 70 percent of the U.S. crop, producing about 26 million cartons of cantaloupes on 65,000 acres and 10 to 12 million cartons of honeydew on 20,000 acres.

Of those totals, Lindemann's U.S. growers produce 2.5 million to 3 million cartons of cantaloupes on 8,000 acres and 1.7 to 2.2 million cartons of honeydews on 3,200 acres between May and late November every year.

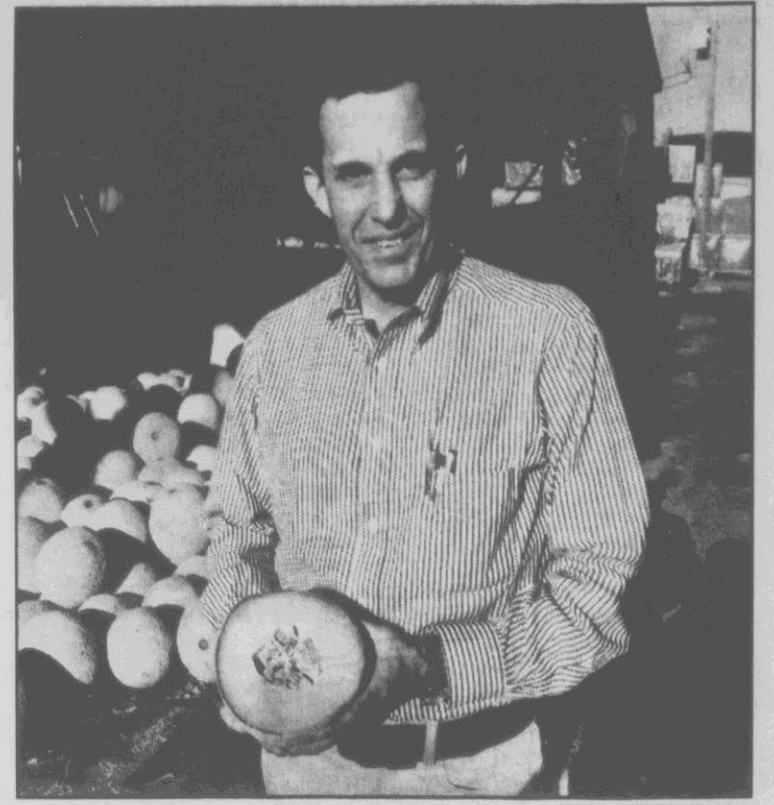

The average price received by the grower is $4.50 for a 40-pound carton — about 11 cents a pound.

Lindemann, 46, whose family has been farming in the San Joaquin Valley for 66 years and producing melons for 47 years, said, "We have joint venture partnerships with 55 growers in California and Arizona, with eight growers in Mexico and nine growers in Honduras, Guatemala, El Salvador and Panama. Our winter crop comes from Mexico and Central America," where Lindemann growers produce about a million cartons of both kinds of cantaloupes and honeydews combined.

The company, which provides farmers with half of the cost of producing the melons, harvests and markets the crop. "We share the risk with the growers and split the profits with them," Lindemann said.

Until five years ago, the company owned 12,000 acres in the Los Banos area — land devoted to grapes, almonds, peaches, beef cattle, dairy herds and cotton. But then the land was sold and 85 percent of Lindemann's business is now made up of processing and marketing cantaloupes and honeydews, with the rest involving other melons, lettuce, apricots and asparagus.

Daddy Track A New Road For Men

Rather, in Gerzon's term, the Daddy Trackers aim to be "companions" — literally, those with whom bread is broken. They work and provide, but they want, too, to be home to enjoy with their families the fruits of their efforts. Urged on by their wives, haunted by their fathers' example, they are stumbling toward a new balance between work and family.

For Keith Griffith, 34, an emergency-room nurse at St. Mary Medical Center in Long Beach, Calif., the price is a schedule that wears on his marriage and his well-being. Griffith and his wife, Arleen Blank, who also is a nurse, don't want other people caring for their two children. So Griffith works seven p.m. to 2 a.m. shifts every two weeks — shifts that sometimes stretch as late as 6 or 7 a.m. if the ambulances keep rolling in — and Blank fits her work time around his.

"We have sacrificed a lot of our relationship working opposite schedules," says Blank, sitting with Griffith in the living room of their Long Beach home as Sam, 5, plays in the yard and Hannah, 10 months, fidgets in her lap. "The kids are used to one or the other of us, but they rarely see us both together."

Questioned about their values, most men say they are prepared to pay almost any price to play a bigger role in their families' lives. In June, when 1,000 men and women were surveyed by Robert Half International, a San Francisco personnel recruiting company, 74 percent of the men said they would choose a Daddy Track — flexible jobs that offer slower career advancement but more time to give attention to family — over more-rigid jobs on a faster track.

Yet only one in 10 Southern California personnel executives in a July survey of 440 companies by William M. Mercer Meidinger Hansen, a human-resources consulting company, were convinced that creating a Daddy or Mommy Track would give their company a competitive advantage.

Other studies, however, suggest that family demands already take a toll on large numbers of working men.

Nearly three-fourths of fathers in a study of AT&T employees said that they had to deal with family issues while at work. Almost half of DuPont's male workers reported difficulties making child-care arrangements. A national study in May by Opinion Research Corp. of Princeton, N.J., found that male managers under 40 are the group in the work force least satisfied with the amount of time their jobs leave for family life.

A fundamental change during the past two decades in America's economic life — women's headlong entry into the working world — and the upsetting of traditional sex roles that has followed go far in explaining the new demands on men to assume a bigger role at home. Today, only 10 percent of American families follow the Ward and June Cleaver model, with husband as breadwinner and wife as homemaker. Even among the shrinking portion of families in which two parents are present, both husband and wife are working in 80 percent of households.

So what's expected of men has changed. The Fennies, for instance, can't afford to have Buffer stay home. But her economic contribution to the family means that Chris must contribute his time to their home and son.

The U.S. Census Bureau says that while mom is at work, no one — grandparents, baby-sitters and day-care providers included — looks after more preschool-aged children than do fathers. Men in the Daddy Tracking vanguard split children's trips to the doctor with their wives, occasionally stay home with a sick kid, hunt out child care and flinch when grandmothers at the park offer fawning praise that dad is "baby-sitting" his children.

By itself, recognizing the importance of family does not put a man on the Daddy Track. In "The Second Shift," a newly published study of the lives of 50 two-earner couples in the San Francisco Bay Area, University of California, Berkeley, sociologist Arlie Hochschild found that men talk a far better game than they live when it comes to sharing the responsibility for children and the home. Only 10 of the husbands took on a full 50 percent of household duties. Others were more likely to help with child care than housework. Hochschild's findings confirm studies that indicate that in two-earner families, women, on average, work a full month more each year than men, counting work in and out of the home.

Indeed, most men — whatever their professed attitudes — remain more committed, in practice, to job than home life. A San Francisco Chronicle survey in June of 700 Bay Area residents found that 40 percent of men said that they had substantially compromised child-rearing and family for their careers; only 29 percent said that they had compromised their careers for their families.

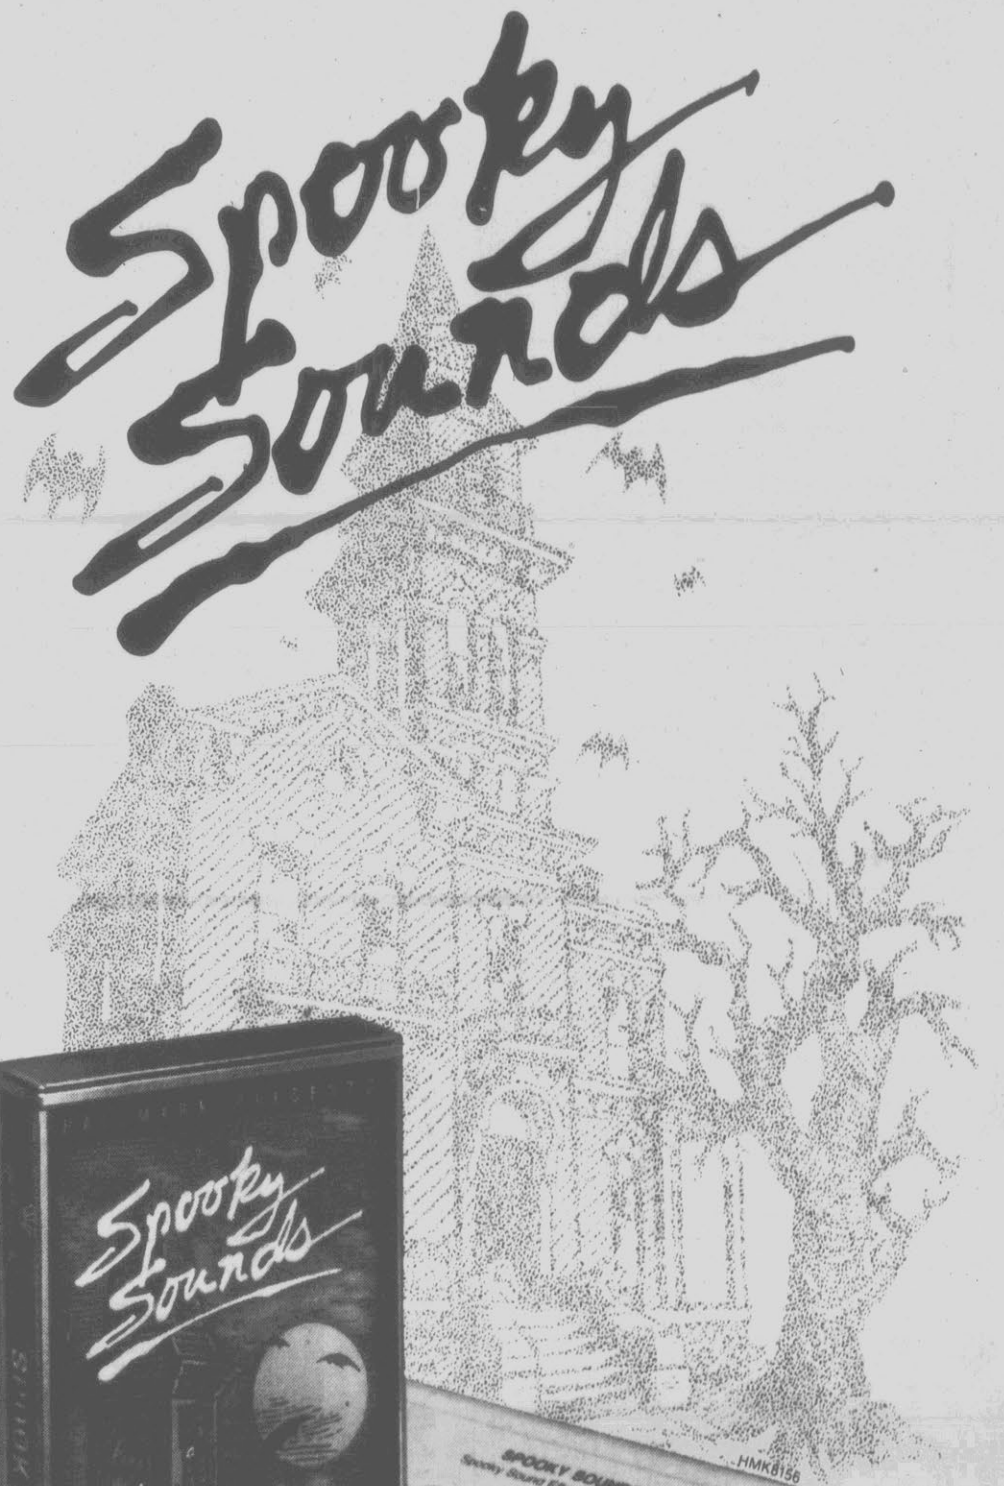

It's not as if employers give fathers many options. In most organizations, bosses are of another era and policies still assume a world where mothers stay home and fathers practice more-or-less benign neglect.

Lawrence Del Santo, 55-year-old chairman and chief executive of the Lucky Stores supermarket chain, can't imagine, for instance, how a man seeking advancement in the grocery business could do anything but devote himself to the trade. Now that he's in charge, Del Santo, the father of 12 children ages 7 to 32, has stopped working weekends. But he still puts in 11-hour days. And for younger men, he says, the hours are longer than ever.

"I don't see how there are any shortcuts," Del Santo says. "When I started, the stores were open 9 to 9. Now they're open 24 hours." To stay current "and to stay successful, you have to be here."

Some corporate executives — fathers who have spent time with their kids and still managed to advance at work — argue that it is up to men, one by one, to overcome the stigma that, in many organizations, looms as the primary obstacle to making a place for family in a budding career. Men, they say, must take a stand: declare themselves unavailable for business dinners, cut short meetings, take off a month when the baby arrives.

HANDLE WITH CARE

Opening lead: Queen of ♠

Some card combinations allow flexibility in how they are handled. Others can be played only one way. There's nothing to the auction. South has a minimum no trump opening bid and, with a balanced 10 points in the responding hand, North has just enough to raise to game.

After the opening lead of the queen of hearts, it is obvious the club suit is crucial. The defenders have at least three heart tricks and the ace of clubs, and declarer has only six fast tricks in the other three suits. So if the contract is to be made, declarer will probably have to score three club tricks.

If clubs break 3-3, there's nothing to the hand—whatever declarer does will succeed. Therefore, the problem hinges on 4-2 club distributions, those most likely to occur. If East has four clubs to the ace, odds are the defenders have two tricks in the suit regardless of how declarer plays. And if East has a doubleton ace, there is nothing short of a wonder guess to hold the defenders to one trick in the suit—declarer will have to lead a low club to the jack and then duck a club.

What if West holds a doubleton ace? Declarer can handle that simply enough. He should duck the first heart and win the continuation just in case that suit breaks 5-2 and East holds the ace of clubs. After winning the ace of hearts, declarer leads a low club to the king. When that holds, South returns to hand with a diamond and leads another low club. West has to waste the ace "on air," so the best the defenders can do is take their two heart tricks. Declarer can win any return, cash the jack of clubs and then get back to dummy in diamonds to take the established club for the fulfilling trick.

Critics Rip State-Produced Alaska Oil Spill Coverage

By Brian S. Akre
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNEAU, Alaska — Scenes of Alaska's oiled beaches and the cleanup of Prince William Sound have been telecast into millions of homes worldwide via Gov. Steve Cowper's state-funded news service.

In the six months since the Exxon Valdez oil spill, Cowper has expanded his video-production staff and provided hundreds of television stations with raw footage and edited stories about the spill and its effects.

During the departure of Exxon's cleanup crews from Valdez, Cowper's staff offered via satellite a series of free "news packages" — known in the TV news business as video news releases, or VNRs.

Critics say VNRs distort the news-selection process and often give viewers a biased view of an event.

The state's videos have become one of Cowper's most powerful tools to sway public opinion. Alaska has sued Exxon over the March 24 spill and is lobbying Congress to pass stronger spill-liability legislation.

"The only way we can get decisions made that we believe are necessary is through public pressure, and that's how we get public pressure," Cowper said recently. "It's unfortunate that's the way we have to do business, but it's also effective. It works."

When Cowper arrived in Valdez to announce the state's winter cleanup plan on the final day of Exxon's pullout, he displayed an impressive video with aerial shots of oiled beaches.

That night's "NBC Nightly News" led its story on the pullout with scenes and narration from the video. The narrator, Cowper spokesman Terence O'Malley, was ecstatic.

The network noted the beach scenes were shot just days before and it "picked up on the term 'Dirty Dozen' — the 12 beaches that represent why Exxon needs to come back," O'Malley said.

"You just can't get any better than that," NBC clearly identified the source of the video and followed it with a report by its correspondent in Valdez.

It's on cost-conscious local stations, however, where the state's footage is most likely to be seen.

sometimes without attribution. At least 29 stations and news-distribution networks from San Francisco to New York used the state's VNRs during a three-day period in September, according to a state-commissioned survey.

"Of course, some of them had ethical problems with state-funded video," said Steve Nelson, who helped produce the VNRs. "But I would say that was a very small minority. Once they saw the quality and content of the product, most of them were very happy to utilize it."

Nine two-minute stories have been produced, on topics such as "spill stress," Exxon's beach-cleaning techniques, and the effects of the spill on fishermen and natives. Each package includes raw footage and edited stories, duplicated with and without narration.

O'Malley narrates most of the stories but does not appear on camera. He identifies himself by name but not as Cowper's press aide. That, he said, allows the stations to present him as their own correspondent.

World Series Helps ABC Top Rivals

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — ABC's coverage of the World Series helped end NBC's record 68-straight weeks at the top of the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings.

ABC moved into first place for last week with its coverage of the first two games between the San Francisco Giants and the Oakland Athletics.

NBC, which has dominated the ratings for the past four years, was second last week, followed by CBS.

One of the previous 68 weeks included a tie between NBC and CBS when that network telecast "Lonesome Dove" earlier this year.

Oddly enough, neither of the first two games Saturday and Sunday made the top 10 or even won the night. But on Saturday, for instance, the game raised ABC to an average rating of 15.0 compared with its usual 7.0.

ABC also made a strong showing with its regular programming. "Roseanne" was first and its three other Tuesday night comedies, "Who's the Boss?" "The Wonder Years" and "Chicken Soup," were all in the top 10.

Saturday's opening game of the World Series tied for 18th place with ABC's "Doogie Howser, M.D." Sunday's game finished 16th.

Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment, expressed regret at the loss, and said, "I hope we start a new streak soon."

ABC won the week with an average prime-time rating of 14.8. NBC had 13.9 according to CBS, 13.8 according to ABC and 14.0 according to NBC. CBS was third with 12.5. The raw data is provided by Nielsen and is subject to interpretation by the networks, although different figures generally come only when programs such as ball games run live in prime time in one part of the country and in fringe time in another part of the country.

A ratings point represents the percentage of the 92.1 million television homes.

NBC's loss is partly due to the fact that the baseball playoffs did not go for a sixth or seventh game. NBC's promotion for the past week had been based on the assumption the playoffs would go to seven games.

Here are last week's top 10 programs: ABC's "Roseanne," NBC's "The Cosby Show," NBC's "Cheers," NBC's "A Different World," ABC's "The Wonder Years," ABC's "Who's the Boss?," NBC's "The Golden Girls," CBS' "Murder, She Wrote," ABC's "Chicken Soup" and NBC's "Dear John."

"Old Gringo" Premiere

Liza Looks For Elusive Hit

By Mary Campbell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — One recent night, Liza Minnelli and her husband, sculptor Mark Gero, went out to dinner with a friend. When they got home, the friend telephoned with a question for the singer.

"Have you ever had a hit record?" asked Gene Simmons, formerly of Kiss.

"No," came Minnelli's response. People think she has, Minnelli says, but "New York, New York" was a hit for Frank Sinatra, and "Cabaret" was a hit for Louis Armstrong.

"It was way before I did the movie; I was doing 'Charlie Bubbles' at the time, the first movie I did, with Albert Finney."

Simmons, who obviously didn't phone just to flatter, continued, "How did you get so far in your career without a hit record?"

"Hard work — going around singing and building an audience. And it's 1:30 in the morning. You got something in mind?"

Simmons did. He thought she should sing "today" music and he should represent Minnelli in her recording career, which he now does. He introduced her to CBS Records president Walter Yetnikoff, who signed her to Epic Records. The Pet Shop Boys' manager happened to see the signing memo and suggested they produce a couple of tracks on her album. A meeting was arranged.

So, while singers from Linda Ronstadt to Steve Miller switch on albums from rock to standard ballads, Minnelli is going the other way and trying out rock. "Results" is her first album in 12 years that isn't a Broadway cast album or a live concert.

She had heard "West End Girls" by the Pet Shop Boys. "I started to buy their albums. The song that hooked me was 'Rent.' It was this strange, beautiful little song, so bittersweet and ironic. It was almost like a Noel Coward lyric."

The first song the Pet Shop Boys (Chris Lowe and Neil Tennant) brought to her, she recalled in a recent interview, was "Losing My Mind," from Stephen Sondheim's score for "Follies." As they worked on recording it, they found out Minnelli knew more about rock than they'd expected, and she discovered they knew a lot about the Rodgers and Hart era.

"They found out I wasn't going to try and pretend like I knew more than I do or boss them around or be demanding," she said. "All I wanted was to do it well and learn from them because I adore them. Four days later they called and said, 'We want to do the whole album.'" The Pet Shop Boys wrote seven of the 10 songs.

"I kept saying, 'I want to do your music.'" They said, "You've got to leave us open if we find something that's good for you." I said, "It's up to you completely."

There's a dance beat, which Minnelli calls "heartbeats," on the tune. "I sing it with anger," she said. "It's different from singing it as blues but just as valid. Obsession runs many courses and a lot of layers. After you get sad and sorry for yourself, you probably get angry. I do."

"Losing My Mind" already is a hit in Europe. She'd been busy with concerts, Broadway, TV and films and hadn't been yearning for a hit record. But when the album shipped gold in England, "I was like the 'new artist of the week.' It was hilarious. It was wonderful." The album was released in the United States on Tuesday.

The Pet Shop Boys didn't want Minnelli to change her emotive singing style and stopped her once for a retake when she pronounced love "luv" as she thought a rock singer should.

"I had such fun working with them," Minnelli said, "just the three of us in this little tiny recording studio." They cut the album with Minnelli singing eight songs to completed tracks.
