Pet Shop Gets A Visitor

By J.R. Williams
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Helen Bach was just about back to her desk when she saw a 17-ton truck coming her way.

The truck crashed through the front wall of her pet grooming shop Thursday, destroying the desk where she had been sitting moments earlier.

"I would have been killed," Ms. Bach said. "I was going to order some supplies, but the line was busy. I was on my way back to my desk when I saw and heard the truck."

Greenville police are investigating why the tractor semi-trailer beer truck drifted down a 30-yard slope adjacent to Fast Fare on 10th Street and crashed into Helen's Grooming World and Pet Motel, Ms. Bach's business. The shop is located behind the convenience store.

William "Fizzy" Winslow, the driver of the truck, said he remembers engaging the brakes on the truck before leaving the vehicle to enter the convience store.

"I went inside the Fast Fare to get a pen and the owner of Helen's grooming came in while I was taking an order and she said, 'Do you know your truck just went through my business?'" Winslow said.

The incident, which occurred at 2:57 p.m., caused an estimated $20,000 each to the truck and the grooming shop, according to Officer A.G. Lloyd. The officer said investigation of the incident is continuing.

Although half of Ms. Bach's building doesn't have power today, she said the shop is open for business. She said she hopes to start repairs Monday.

Channel 8 Television Will Sign On Sunday

By Frances Horton Arrington
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Beginning Sunday, a new Fox affiliate WFXI-TV will begin broadcasting in eastern North Carolina, giving area residents access to live Charlotte Hornets basketball games, among other features.

The new station, which is based in Morehead City, will be Channel 8 on the TV dial, according to David Adcock, promotion director for WFXI.

Adcock said the station is housed in a newly constructed facility on U.S. 70. He said the facility is owned by local Morehead City businessmen and will employ about 24 people.

He said programming officials decided to get the Charlotte Hornets games because the team is this area's only National Basketball Association representative.

"We didn't take a poll or anything, but we knew that the Carolinas' NBA team is the Charlotte Hornets," Adcock said today. "So we decided to get them on."

He said residents in the station's viewing areas have been pleased to hear that the games will be aired, especially since Hornets' game tick-

Ollie May Get His Pension Yet

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House must decide whether to go along with a Senate vote to reinstate Oliver North's $23,000 annual pension, revoked after he was sentenced for illegally shredding documents in the Iran-Contra scandal.

"Let the vendetta end," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., whose bill to restore North's pension was approved by the Senate late Thursday on a 78-17 vote. "Ollie North has been punished enough."

But despite that plea, the debate over whether to give North back his retirement pay dredged up bitter partisan feelings stemming from President Reagan's efforts — with North in a key role — to evade congressional restrictions and fund the Contra war in Nicaragua.

The issue now goes to the House, where similar legislation has been introduced but not yet acted on.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., said he would vote to put North in jail if he could.

"Even a felon deserves equal treatment under the law," Biden said. "I might want Ollie North protecting me in a foxhole, but I wouldn't want Ollie North teaching my son or daughter ethics."

Senators ignored warnings from colleagues like Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who said the move would set a bad precedent and invite future congressional tampering with criminal cases.

Pitt Road Funds Gain Approval

RALEIGH — The N.C. Board of Transportation, in addition to adopting the 1990 version of the state's Transportation Improvement Program, today approved $163,250 for five projects in Pitt County and a $5,000 industrial site access road for Greene County.

Randy Doub of Greenville, a member of the board, said $50,000 in spot safety improvement money was approved for signal lights and turn lanes at the intersection of Memorial Drive, Chestnut Street and the proposed Moye Boulevard extension in Greenville.

In addition, the board approved $76,250 in discretionary funds for construction of the extension of Moye Boulevard.

Doub said the state money will be used, along with "I would think hundreds of thousands of private dollars," to build the road that will join Moye Boulevard near Pitt County Memorial Hospital with Memorial Drive at the Chestnut Street intersection.

Doub said the discretionary money was allocated to the project, "thanks to the efforts of House Speaker Joe Mavretic, (Pitt County) Representatives Walter Jones Jr. and Ed Warren, and Secretary (of Transportation) Jim Harrington."

Work on the Moye Boulevard project should begin within the next few months, Doub said.

The other money allocated for Pitt County today includes $9,000 for signal lights at the intersection of Memorial Drive and Westhaven Road at the entrance to Brendle's, and $28,000 for a traffic signal at the intersection of U.S. 264 and Secondary Road 1587 at the entrance to Yale Materials Handling Corp.

Doub said $5,000 was approved for an access road for the Greene County Industrial Park off U.S. 58 south of Snow Hill.

Among the projects included in the TIP adopted today, Doub said, were:

- Continued funding for the 7.3 miles of the northwest Greenville bypass ($36.56 million) with the initial contract letting now scheduled for February 1990.
- Construction of interchanges at the at-grade intersections on U.S. 264 between Wilson and Greenville,

Judge Keeps Watch As Senators Vote For His Dismissal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Senate today removed U.S. District Judge Walter L. Nixon of Mississippi from the bench on impeachment charges stemming from a perjury conviction.

Nixon was the second judge in two weeks removed from office.

With Nixon watching from his seat on the Senate floor, lawmakers sealed his fate by voting 89-8 to convict him on the first of three articles of impeachment. The Senate quickly followed by approving a second charge, 78-19, but acquitted him on a third. The vote on that was 57-40, less than the necessary two-thirds of those voting.

Defense attorney David Stewart put his arm around Nixon as the secretary of the Senate read the names of senators voting guilty. The judge closed his eyes as the list grew longer and longer.

The 61-year-old Nixon was convicted of perjury in 1986 for lying to a grand jury about his unofficial talk with a prosecutor in a marijuana-smuggling case. He served more than a year in prison and in recent weeks was moved to a New Orleans halfway house.

He has been collecting his 89,500 salary and saying he would like to return to the bench to preside over trials.

Nixon was charged in the first impeachment article with lying to a federal grand jury in 1984 by saying that then-District Attorney Paul Holmes of Forrest County, Miss., never discussed a drug-smuggling case with him.

He was accused in the second article of lying to the grand jury by saying he was never involved in the marijuana-smuggling case.

The final article accused him of lying to a Justice Department attorney and an FBI agent as well as to the grand jury. The charge said he "undermined the confidence in the integrity of the judiciary and disobeyed the laws of the United States."

Nixon and his lawyers watched from a table facing the lawmakers as they registered their votes, making him the seventh official ever removed from office through impeachment and the third judge in the last three years.

Before voting on the impeachment articles, senators rejected 90-7 a move by Nixon to bring witnesses to the Senate floor. They also turned down, 63-34, a Nixon request to drop one of the charges.

Senators were sworn to secrecy about the specifics of a six-hour closed door debate Thursday on the impeachment articles.

"It was thorough, it was courteous," Sen Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said after the debate session.

Pilot Missing In Florida Crash

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A commercial pilot who is a Greenville native is missing following the crash Thursday of a twin-engine cargo plane in Lake Apopka near Orlando, Fla.

Authorities said today a search is under way for pilot Ivy Harris, 24, and a passenger. The passenger, not yet identified by authorities, is believed to be a freight handler employed by a customer firm of Harris' company.

Harris, son of Harold and Anne Harris of Route 4, Greenville, was the chief pilot for Cherokee Express Air Cargo of Orlando, Fla.

According to an article in today's Orlando Express, wreckage from a crash, presumably that of Harris and his passenger, was scattered over a quarter mile of the northwest portion of the lake.

Divers worked the area all of Thursday and this morning, according to a spokeswoman for the Orange County, Fla., Sheriff Department. The cockpit of the plane has been found, but had not been raised this morning, the spokeswoman said.

School Bond Backers Go Before Public

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

LITTLEFIELD — Supporters of a $25.7 million school bond brought their campaign to Ayden-Grifton High School on a rainy night Thursday in the first of a series of five public forums to discuss the Dec. 12 bond referendum.

About 20 people heard school and county officials say the bond issue is the only way to raise money for needed school construction without raising taxes.

"A bond is not unlike you and I going to the bank and borrowing some money," Phillip R. Dixon, attorney for the Pitt County Board of Education, said.

Borrowing money to build schools is just like getting a mortgage to buy a house, Dixon said. The need for a home exists long before the ability to pay cash for it, he said.

Although the county puts $4 million aside each year for school construction, present needs for space are much greater, Dixon said. With the county's rapid growth, the school system will fall further behind unless those needs are met, he said.

"There's no way that we can meet and keep up with the demand by spending $4 million a year," Dixon said. "If we do that we're just losing ground every year."

County Manager Kramer Jackson said the bonds will not overwhelm the county with debt. The county is capable of borrowing up to $240 million by state standards, he said.

The county has a total present debt of $6 million, Jackson said, of which $2.6 million is owed for school construction.

Pitt County also has an AA bond rating — the highest possible for a county of its size, Jackson said. This means the county can borrow money at favorable rates, he said.

Instead of a tax increase, the bond money will be paid off over a 15-year period from money set aside for the county by the state, Jackson said. The money comes from sales tax revenues and is paid to the county each year.

The forums, which are scheduled to be held at each of the county's five high schools before the vote, are sponsored by the League of Women Voters and Citizens for Excellence and Equity in Education in Pitt County.

The next forum is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Thursday at North Pitt High School.

Students Passing Up Food To Aid Victims

By Charles Hoskinson
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Students at Grifton School are challenging each other to give up a day's worth of junk food in order to help earthquake victims in California.

Christy Hill, a music teacher at the school, said she got the idea while watching television news programs about the disaster.

"I just kind of felt it could've just as well been us as them," she said.

Ms. Hill discussed it with students in her homeroom class, who liked the idea. Students challenged each other to raise money, and immediately began collecting donations, she said.

Giving up junk food was agreed on when Ms. Hill told students it would be better to give something of themselves than to get the money from their parents, she said.

"I was trying to suggest that instead of going home and asking mom and dad, it would be a better gift to give up something or earn it themselves," Ms. Hill said.

The goal was to raise $500 by today — about $1 for each student — Ms. Hill said. Many of the teachers, including Ms. Hill, are matching their students' donations, she said.

The money will be donated to the American Red Cross for distribution to the disaster victims.

Buel said Best was an assistant manager of the store while Morning and Grimes were bag-boys.

Drug Arrest

Darryl Dancey, 19, of Church Street, Bethel, was arrested by Bethel police Wednesday on two counts of possession on crack cocaine and two counts of the sale and delivery of crack cocaine.

Chief J.B. Buel said Dancey, arrested at his Church Street home about 2 p.m. and placed under a $20,000 bond, was also charged with a probation violation.

Three Face Charges In Thefts

Three people were arrested on theft-related charges by Greenville police Thursday.

Detective G.W. Williams said Jeffrey Lee Tyson, 28, of Farmville was arrested on two counts of armed robbery about 7:46 p.m.

Williams said the charges stemmed from the theft of $24 in cash from the Short Stop at 1928 Greenville Blvd. about 12:11 a.m. on Oct. 21, and the theft of $118 in cash from East Carolina Inn at 2095 Stantonsburg Road about 1:58 a.m. the same day.

Williams and Detective E.M. Haddock said Leon Parker Lupton, 34, of 1800 E. Fifth St. was arrested on two counts of obtaining property by false pretenses and one count of larceny.

Williams said one of the false pretense charges involved $158 worth of merchandise charged, without authorization, to a company account at Lowe's on Greenville Boulevard on Monday.

Haddock said the second false pretense charge involved charging merchandise to a company account without authorization at Garris-Evans on 14th Street on Tuesday, while the larceny charge resulted from the theft of about $400 worth of property, including a pistol, from C.L. Lupton Co. at the intersection of Fifth Street and Memorial Drive in a break-in reported on Oct. 4.

Officer J.W. Corbett said Elisha Lynn Stancil, 20, of Inman, S.C., was arrested on auto larceny charges about noon. Corbett said the charge stemmed from the theft of a car from Joe Pecheles Volkswagen on Greenville Boulevard on Monday.

including $14.8 million for those just west of Greenville that are scheduled to be built in 1995.

- A southwest loop from U.S. 264 to N.C. 11-N.C. 903 at Greenville, 5.1 miles at an estimated $21.93 million, with right-of-way acquisition to begin in 1996.
- The four-laning of N.C. 11-U.S. 13 from Greenville to the U.S. 64 bypass north of Bethel, 13.2 miles at a cost of $29.6 million, with right-of-way acquisition scheduled to begin in 1995.
- The widening to five lanes of 3.1 miles of N.C. 33, from U.S. 264 alternate to SR 1755 at Simpson, at a cost of $5.8 million, with right-of-way acquisition to begin in 1995.

Doub said other TIP projects include the widening of N.C. 43 south of Greenville, Arlington Boulevard, from Memorial Drive to Stantonsburg Road (depending on right-of-way donation by property owners), and replacement of the Tar River Bridge on Greene Street.

Fire Investigated

The Pitt County Sheriff's Department is investigating a rural fire that occurred Tuesday near Falkland.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson said the fire destroyed a home near the intersection of N.C. 43 and Voice of America Road.

"I don't know what the circumstances are right now, but we are investigating it," Tyson said today.

Break-Ins

LEXINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Law enforcement officials have arrested seven people and are searching for three more in connection with 106 break-ins throughout central North Carolina since 1986.

Of those break-ins, officials say 42 of them took place in Randolph County and 38 in Davidson County, according to Davidson County Sheriff Paul "Jaybird" McCrary.

More than $112,000 worth of property was stolen by the ring, McCrary said.

The arrests were made late Monday night and early Tuesday. Investigators would not identify the three people they are still seeking.

Health Care

RANCHO CUCAMONGA, Calif. (AP) — Home health care currently is the fastest growing sector of the health care industry, according to Charles A. Laverty.

Laverty, president of Curaflex Health Services, says:

"Home health care has become a low-cost alternative to hospital care. It shortens the average hospital stay and reduces the daily cost of medical care by 30 to 70 percent."

He predicts the cost of home health care will reach an estimated $15.9 billion this year and that the Health Care Financing Administration predicts the figure will increase to more than $23.2 billion in 1993.

Channel 8 TV To Begin Sunday

ets have already sold out for the season.

"We've gotten overwhelming positive response from the people. There's a lot of excitement," he said.

Adcock said WFXI will likely air some ECU games, as well.

"We want to show as much local stuff as possible," he said. "We know there's an interest in ECU games and we're working out scheduling arrangements to get them on the air."

He said the new station would not do news spots. "There are already three stations doing news, so we don't see any need for us to do that," he said. "We're going to be an entertainment alternative for people who don't want to watch the news."

On Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights, WFXI will also carry all of the regular Fox programming including police shows, sitcoms, movie features and more.

Among the highlights, are Crystal Coast Cinema, a movies feature that will show box office releases Tuesday through Thursday nights and broadcasts of the original Star Trek series nightly from 7 to 8.

WFXI is set to begin broadcasting sometime Sunday. All Greenville viewers should be able to pick up the new channel, Adcock said.

Patsy Gouras, a spokeswoman for Cable TV of Greenville, said the new station would not be hooked onto cable this weekend. She said the cable company has not decided if it will drop WTTG, the Fox affiliate that cable customers in Greenville currently receive, once WFXI goes on the air.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Two Sides

Time For Better Relations

It's no treat when a good time turns bad. That's what happened in Greenville on Halloween, and it caused an already strained relationship to become a little more tricky.

One-hundred forty people were arrested at an apartment complex near downtown after a Halloween party spilled onto the street. Pumpkins, bottles and debris were thrown at police. A car and its driver, caught in the crossfire, were rocked by the crowd, which neared 300. The scene was an ugly and potentially dangerous one.

Many of those arrested were East Carolina University students. The students cried foul over the way police treated them, saying the cops came looking for trouble. The city said it had no choice but to arrest the revelers once they failed to disperse as ordered. The incident prompted many full-time residents to dismiss all students as rabble rousers.

Neither of these points of view is entirely accurate, and none of them will ease the tension.

The differing perspectives illustrate the gap between some students and the community. Although the university and the city are cooperative in many respects, Greenville has a tenuous relationship with students. Both the university and the city have a responsibility to find the facts about what happened Halloween. In addition, the city's leaders need to actively seek a stronger bond between Greenville and the university it houses — including students.

The history of Halloween celebrations in Greenville is troubled. The melee of '89 followed a destructive Halloween party in downtown Greenville in 1988, in which guns and knives were confiscated from party-goers who filled streets. Forty were arrested that year and the danger prompted the City Council to declare a moratorium on Halloween celebrations downtown.

The latest incident followed a period of tenuous relations between students and the city.

On Oct. 23, the city council nixed a noise ordinance that allowed police to issue permits for high-volume parties. That action went against the recommendation of its own committee — a committee that included student representatives.

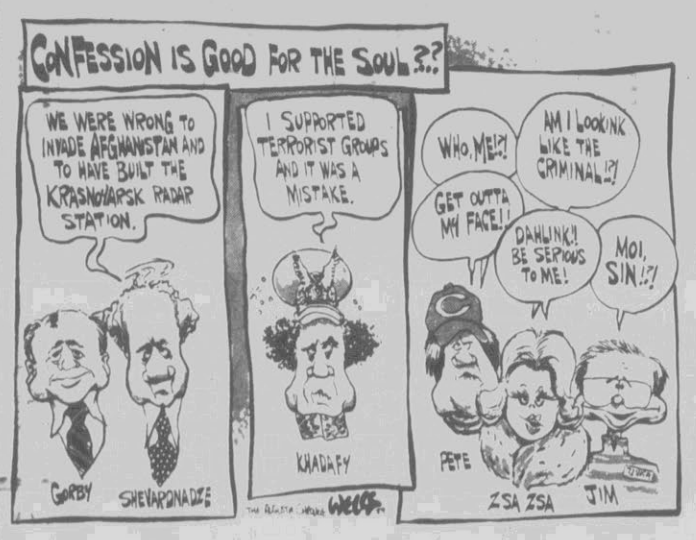
In addition, the high-profile issue of Halloween drew a week of what can best be described as campaign rhetoric from Mayor Ed Carter. Many of his comments warning students about partying on Halloween sounded more like challenges than cautions.

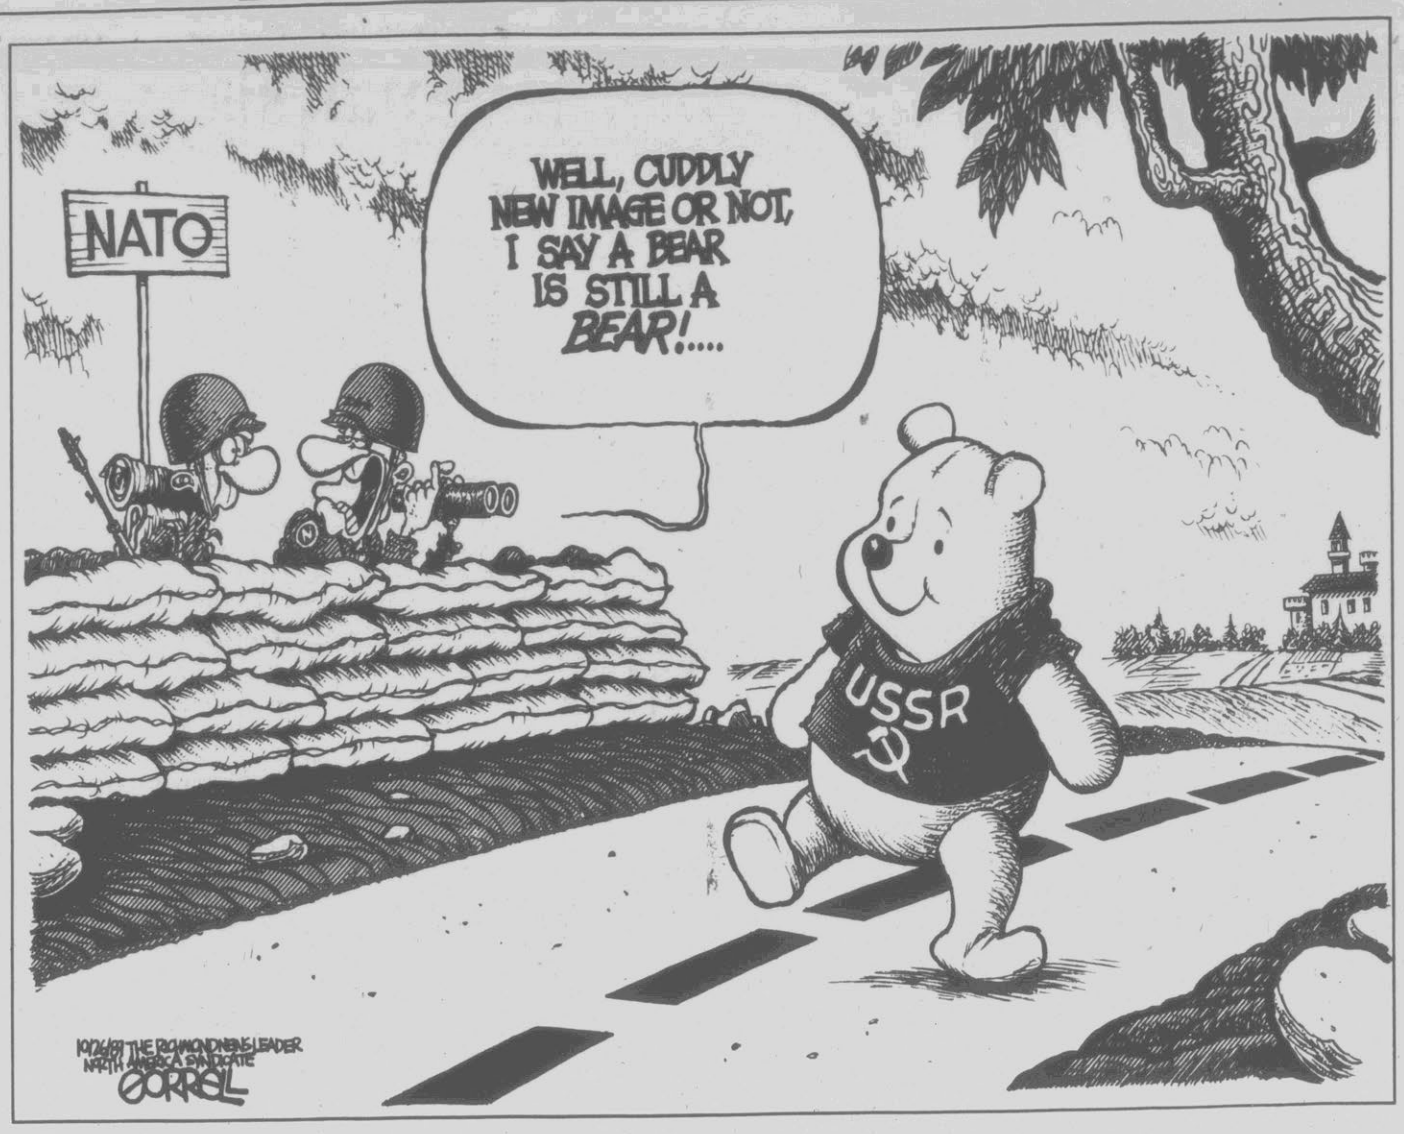
The latest ruckus makes it clear the relationship between East Carolina University students and Greenville needs work. Both sides have conflicts and prejudices that must be overcome.

Around 35,000 non-students call Greenville home. Like residents of any community, they don't want disruption, violence or vandalism in their neighborhood. Most of them obey the law and respect the rights of others. They expect their fellow citizens to do the same.

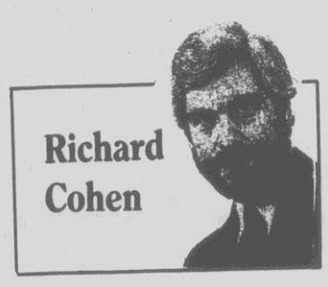
But 15,000 or so ECU students also call Greenville home. For some, it is a home away from home or a home for awhile, but it is a home nevertheless. Their presence is an asset to the community, but a handful of destructive mischief-makers sometimes make it difficult to recognize this fact.

The two sides need to stop shouting and talk. Throwing bottles is immature and dangerous. Judging all students by the actions of a few is narrow-minded. Neither makes for good relations between a community and a university. And Greenville has no choice but to cultivate good relations with ECU and the students that call this community home.





Follow Wilder's Footsteps



TYSONS CORNER, Va. — This onetime farmland, now one of the immense shopping centers of the world, is as good a place as any to write about the Virginia governor's race. Whoever wins will reign not only over farm and plantation, but Macy's and Bloomingdale's as well. Tysons Corner, basically a shopping mall, is the second-biggest "city" in a changing state.

If Virginia has changed, so has its politics. Outsiders have moved in, bringing alien notions such as racial equality and an insistence on good schools. The state still loves to talk about tradition, but it loves progress even more.

The gubernatorial candidate who has sensed that best is Douglas Wilder, the Democrat, and, not incidentally, a black. His Republican opponent is J. Marshall Coleman, who has taken every conceivable stand on abortion, each time out of conviction. And it is abortion, not race, that surprisingly has defined this contest. Wilder is pro-choice; Coleman anti-abortion. And on that difference the election may well hinge.

Regardless of the outcome, Wilder has already given American politicians a lesson. In one campaign spot, he stood before Virginia's secular Vatican, Thomas Jefferson's graceful Monticello, and framed the abortion issue in a way that must have given the White House the willies. In his formulation, the anti-abortion forces are not conservative at all: They are zealots who would use government to restrict the rights of ordinary people.

What Wilder has grasped has thus far eluded George Bush. It's been 16 years since the Supreme Court, in Roe vs. Wade, turned abortion from what was often a criminal act into a constitutional right. The right to an abortion has become part of the status quo — the way things are. The normal conservative tendency is to defend the status quo; the normal liberal tendency is to change it. This explains why even conservative Virginians find Wilder's message appealing. Jefferson himself would probably be pro-choice.

Jefferson on abortion is anybody's guess. But you don't have to be a Founding Father to see that the so-called Right to Life Movement has led the Republican Party astray. In exchange for its support, the GOP handed over both its head and its memory. It has adopted a "liberal" position — the government should change the status quo — and it has forgotten that it once tolerated politicians who favored population control. George Bush was once one of those, the very model of the very modern Republican. Let the record show that Bush was once pro-choice.

But where the President has failed to lead, the Democratic Party has mostly followed. Up until almost yesterday, it seemed to confuse liberalism with satanism. When called "liberal," it has cowered in a corner or, in the person of Michael Dukakis, ridiculously hunkered down in a tank for a photo opportunity.

But Wilder has shown that some so-called liberal positions are inherently conservative. When, for instance, Bush attacked Dukakis for vetoing a Massachusetts bill that would have compelled teachers to recite the Pledge of Allegiance, the Democratic Party's response was to have a nervous breakdown. It could have, instead, framed its response in conservative terms: Big Government should not compel anyone to violate his or her religious convictions.

But now, the Democratic Party is getting lucky. Not only is Wilder showing it how these things can be handled, it also has Bush in the White House. The President is a parody of Will Rogers, the late comedian who said he never met a man he didn't like. Bush feels the same way about constitutional amendments. He would amend to require a balanced budget, to prohibit abortion, to have prayer in the schools, to protect the flag and who knows what else. It is Ronald Reagan's basic program without Reagan's comforting persona.

Democrats are deluding themselves if they think the country is entering a liberal era. The country remains somewhat right of center, Virginia a bit more so.

But Wilder's pollster, Mike Donilon, sensed not only that a pro-choice position could be framed in conservative terms, but that abortion rights could become emblematic of Virginia's political persona: sentimental about the past, but without a hankering to return to it, especially when it comes to race. Progress — including racial progress — has made Virginia prosperous and proud.

Where Wilder leads, the Democratic Party should follow. Progressive programs can be both defended and advocated as long as they are rooted in traditional values. It's a new age in politics and Virginia has shown the way.

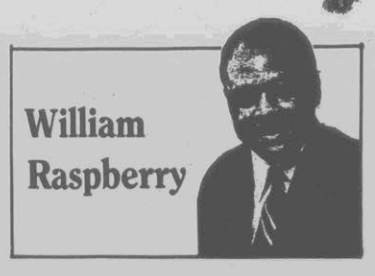
No Answers To Critical Questions



WASHINGTON — It's easy enough these days to find people who think that the best way to approach America's drug crisis is through legalization. They argue that both the enormous profits and the violence associated with drug trafficking are a result of the drugs' illegality.

What is excruciatingly difficult is to get anyone to give you a reasonably complete picture of what legalization would look like.

Would all drugs be legalized? Would they be sold across the counter to anyone, including children, who had the money to buy them? By whom would they be imported, distributed and sold? Would buyers be required to register as addicts?

The answers matter. If marijuana and perhaps heroin are legalized, but not crack cocaine and violence-inducing PCP, the effect on the crime associated with drug trafficking would be minimal. If drugs could be sold only to adults, wouldn't the illegal traffickers target children? If only registered addicts were eligible to buy legally, wouldn't there be a black market for middle-class "recreational" users for whom privacy is precious?

The typical response is that those are mere details. I think they are vital questions, whose answers might reassure skeptics that legalization would in fact take the profits (organized crime) out of the drug trade and do so without creating new hordes of addicts.

I recently moderated a panel discussion on drug policy at New York University, and was again struck by the reluctance of legalization advocates to talk about what a legalized market would look like. Ira Glasser, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union, and Ethan Nadelmann of Princeton University, were eloquent in their descriptions of what is wrong with present policy.

As Glasser noted, the "drug crisis" in the minds of most Americans has little to do with health consequences of drug abuse and a great deal to do with murder and corruption, which he sees as products of enforcement.

"A thousand people a day die from the consequences of nicotine; there are some 12 million to 14 million alcoholics. The medical and social costs of these addictions are enormous. What is it about the other drugs that makes us want to throw people in jail?"

Added Nadelmann: "Anti-drug laws make the effects of drugs worse and in addition generate $50 billion to $60 billion a year for organized crime."

Both stressed the need of attacking the drug problem "from the demand side," but neither would spell out the specifics of legalization, which allowed Louis Winnick, a retired urban specialist with the Ford Foundation, to make the point that reflects the misgivings of opponents of legalization.

"If you make a commodity either cheap or free of charge, improve its quality and greatly increase its access, you will also enormously increase its demand. If you insist that there is no answer without attacking the demand side, how can you argue for a policy that would automatically increase demand?"

And any increase in demand for narcotics would be vastly more dangerous than increases in demand for tobacco or alcohol, a point driven home by Robert Stutman, who once headed the New York office of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

"There are between 110 million and 115 million alcohol users, but only about 10 million alcoholics. On the other hand, there are some 4.5 million occasional users of cocaine and about 2.5 million cocaine addicts. In addition, cocaine — and especially crack cocaine — clearly causes violent behavior. I firmly believe that if we legalize drugs, we would have the worst of all worlds."

I left the New York University forum with my doubts unresolved, my questions unanswered. If law enforcement hasn't worked so far, is there any reason to believe that more enforcement would work better? Would legalization induce erstwhile non-users into trying drugs and, thereby, create hordes of new addicts? Unless the government distributed narcotics, free or at nominal cost, to all who wanted them, how would legalization take the profits out of drug use?

Without persuasive answers to these critical questions, can legalization make sense? Proponents of legalization may be right. But if they aren't, their proposal could end up making America's drug problem irretrievably worse.

Rafsanjani Walks Uncertain Road To Reconstruction

Carlysle Murphy

TEHRAN, Iran — Three months after his election, Iranian President Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani appears to be consolidating his political power and gaining consensus on an economic recovery plan that calls for increased private-sector investment, according to Iranian officials and foreign diplomats here.

"He's made some progress. Whether it will be permanent, I don't know," said one foreign envoy, reflecting the uncertainty of Iran's revolutionary politics and the formidable problems of rebuilding an economy battered by nearly 10 years of war with Iraq.

Rafsanjani, widely viewed as a shrewd and pragmatic politician, enjoys an unquestioned reputation as a genuine Islamic revolutionary because of his close relationship with the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

But unlike other Iranian clerics, the 55-year-old leader understands economic realities from participating in his family's lucrative pistachio business.

Rafsanjani's purist Islamic credentials have enabled him to secure the backing of elite religious revolutionaries, who wield considerable influence throughout Iran's social, political and military institutions and who see themselves as guardians of Khomeini's militant Islamic line. So far, there has been no significant public criticism of Rafsanjani from this sector.

Analysis

But there are signs that the support Rafsanjani initially received from Iranians whose priority is economic improvement is being depleted. "People are losing hope day by day," said one businessman. "I don't think anything will happen for a year ... but people on the street don't understand this. They think something should happen right now."

"We hope he succeeds. We like him so much," a 22-year-old veterinary student said of Rafsanjani. "But we are not sure he will. Everything is so expensive."

Rafsanjani has given top priority to economic recovery. Besides the wartime devastation of cities, industries and oil facilities, which the government believes may cost up to $400 billion to repair, Iran must cope with the troubles wrought by a decade of highly centralized and largely ineffective economic management.

Businessmen are holding back on investment because of wildly fluctuating currency exchange rates and a rampant black market. Consumers must contend with 50 percent inflation and recurring shortages of basic foodstuffs.

And Rafsanjani complained at a news conference last week that government subsidies on such consumer goods as bread, rice and kerosene, which are rationed through a coupon system, constituted "a heavy burden for the government."

To deal with these daunting economic problems, Rafsanjani must not only find the money for his redevelopment programs but also obtain political agreement on the shape of long-term economic policy in post-Khomeini Iran.

It appears he has won at least initial support for the government's five-year economic plan, which will be presented to the Majlis, or parliament, next week.

The plan, so far revealed only in broad outline, calls for $112 billion in expenditures, new foreign investment of about $20 billion in vital industries and an increased role for the private sector.

These elements reflect a shift toward what Rafsanjani likes to call "rational" economic policies, suggesting that he has overridden ideological rivals who favor a completely socialized economy or oppose all foreign investment because of an Islamic injunction against paying interest on loans.

Despite his political success, Rafsanjani must now confront the tougher problem of resources. Oil Minister Gholamreza Aqazadeh has estimated that over the next five years Iran will earn $70 billion from oil sales, which make up 90 percent of the country's income, and up to $9 billion from non-oil exports.

But even this optimistic assessment will leave an enormous shortfall, including the need to find an extra $15 billion for food imports alone, if current purchasing levels are maintained.

Moreover, foreign funding for Iran's postwar reconstruction seems remote unless Rafsanjani can improve relations with the West and overcome domestic opposition to massive foreign assistance. "He's taken some measures which can be considered as a good first step," said one diplomat, "but they are not enough to solve the problems."

On the political front, Rafsanjani's cabinet choices — most of them Western-educated technocrats — breezed through the parliamentary confirmation process. In selecting the cabinet, Rafsanjani dumped or demoted several prominent opponents from the previous government, including the powerful Ali Akbar Mohtashemi, who was fired from his job as interior minister.

Since then, leading hard-liners in parliament have publicly backed Rafsanjani's policies.

Last week an association of militant Islamic university students — the ideological heirs of those students who seized the U.S. Embassy in 1979 — issued a statement on the "necessity to fully support the new government." Their endorsement is significant because of the crucial role students have played in the revolution.

Still, while Rafsanjani now holds a clear advantage, he is not considered to have complete control of the political situation. "He can construct policy, but others can undermine it," said one foreign diplomat. This obstacle is particularly apparent in the rise within the government bureaucracy of parallel organizations not always staffed by Rafsanjani admirers. As a result, directives from the top sometimes are ignored or sabotaged.

Impatience Killed Capital Gains

David Hoffman & Ann Devroy

WASHINGTON — The demise Thursday of President Bush's quest for a capital-gains tax cut this year was the result of congressional impatience with his claim that it should be the nation's top domestic priority as well as White House overreaching for a victory, according to administration and congressional officials.

Although Bush insisted four weeks ago that the tax cut was "vital" and :'one of our major goals," he was unable to persuade even Republican congressional leaders that it was worth another bruising battle, these sources said. One Senate Republican said that privately, while supporting Bush, none of his GOP colleagues believed capital gains was the most important legislative goal of the session.

House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel, R-Ill., said,"We can't let the government topple on that (capital gains) issue, at least the government's ability to pay its bills. ... "

"You don't make it a to-die-for unless it is winnable or of major, major importance. This wasn't," said a high-ranking administration strategist. "It wasn't to the Republicans on the Hill and should not have been for the White House. You try it for this year. You try it for next. You support it. But why such a big deal?"

This strategist said Bush made the capital gains issue his top priority out of a desire to win something in Congress. The proposed tax cut was among many issues he had talked about in last year's campaign, and it did not have particular prominence in the speeches Bush delivered at the start of his term. But the White House elevated it to a priority during the summer when renegade Democrats broke from their leadership in the House on the issue and victory seemed possible.

"The impossible turned out to (be) might-be-possible," the strategist recalled.

This official and others said Bush may have erred by promising bipartisanship at the beginning of the year but then making the tax cut into a personal challenge to the Democratic leadership, embarrassing House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and then prompting Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, to stand fast against it. In their criticism of Bush, the Democrats also contributed to the heavily partisan atmosphere.

Tom Donilon, a Democratic strategist, said Bush, who still enjoys high public approval ratings, had focused on the prposed capital gains tax cut at the expense of more difficult issues, such as reducing the deficit. "This is what you have when every decision you make is based on two goals: One, don't make any mistakes. And two, keep your approval ratings up," he said. "When a president has approval ratings at the level Bush does and the country faces the difficulties this one does, you'd think he'd want to use some of that capital to get something done."

But Frank Donatelli, a Republican strategist, said Bush is making the kind of compromises that are necessary when the Congress is controlled by the opposition. "You can quibble that he went too far on a particular bill," he said. "You can't quarrel that he needs legislative accomplishments and to get that he has to be prepared to accept less than a whole loaf."

The fight over the tax cut appears to have all but destroyed the hopes of Bush and budget Director Richard G. Darman for a bipartisan compromise this autumn on reducing the budget deficit. However, some White House officials, who refused to be identified further, said the issues could well be raised again in a few months. "Yes, we wanted capital gains, but we will get it next year," said one official. "Mitchell can't keep his finger in the dike forever."

Abruptly shifting tactics, Bush Thursday challenged the Democrats to come up with stringent new deficit cuts. Previously, he had accepted the Senate's deficit-reduction bill, but Thursday he demanded that Congress vote even deeper spending cuts. He did not offer a plan but said he wants at least $14 billion worth of spending restraint.

Otherwise, Bush said, he will stick with the $16.1 billion in automatic spending cuts required by the sequester that took effect last month under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction law. This approach could lead Bush and Congress back to the bargaining table in January or February as both sides look for the kind of compromise that Bush had promised for this year.

By then, both the president and Democratic leaders could feel the pinch of the sequester — Bush by the pressure from the 4.3 percent automatic cut in defense spending and the Democrats by the pressure of the 5.3 percent reduction in non-defense outlays.

Federal Agency Says Mobile Drilling Offers Little Threat To Environment

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Mobil Oil Corp.'s plan to drill for natural gas off the Outer Banks poses little threat to the environment, but if oil is discovered tanker spills should be expected, a federal agency says in a preliminary report.

The preliminary report by the federal Minerals Management Service concluded that Mobil's plan to search for natural gas 45 miles off the North Carolina coast would have a negligible impact on marine life, commercial fishing and the environment, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported in today's editions.

But the report also said that at least one oil tanker spill should be expected to occur within the next 20 years if oil is discovered. The report noted that most of any spilled oil would be diluted at sea and that the remainder could be cleaned up before it reached the coast.

While Mobil executives were pleased with the report's findings, environmentalists were less than happy.

"I would not agree that if we looked down the road as to what energy development would do to coastal North Carolina that anybody could reasonably assume the impact would not be significant," said Derb S. Carter Jr., an attorney for the Southern Environmental Law Center in Chapel Hill.

"I think there are going to be a lot of people who are going to hold different opinions on those issues."

Mobil, which hopes to start drilling next May, stressed the positive.

"As in any endeavor there's a risk, in this case a very moderate one," said Michael J. Kimmitt, a spokesman for Mobil's exploration branch in Dallas. "But when you look at the benefits of a very large natural gas discovery, they outweigh the risk."

Mobil is hoping to discover the nation's largest natural gas reserve since the find in Prudhoe Bay, Alaska, in 1968. While executives have said the chances of finding anything are slim, they want to push ahead with an exploratory well anyway because the drilling site has the potential to yield 3 trillion cubic feet of natural gas — the amount North Carolina would consume for the next 34 years.

The company has said it will ask the Minerals Management Service, which regulates offshore drilling, for a permit in January. The final environmental assessment is to be completed next spring.

Carter, who represents several environmental groups who oppose the drilling, said he had failed to persuade the federal agency to delay the Mobil drilling until after a $250 million study of the ocean currents is finished next year.

"This well is going to one of the deepest ever drilled, it's going to be in some of the strongest currents ever drilled in, and being on the continental slope, they're on one of the most unstable sea bottoms," he said.

Mobil plans to drill the 14,000-foot test well 45 miles northeast of Cape Hatteras in almost 3,000 feet of water.

Overall, the federal report said the exploratory well would have "relatively minor" effects on air and water quality, fish and marine life, plankton and endangered birds and mammals.

"Unavoidable adverse impacts" include a slight increase in water turbidity from drilling mud and cuttings. If gas is found and the company goes ahead with plans to drill seven or more additional wells, the contaminants could settle on the ocean floor and kill communities of plankton, plants and creatures.

If the company eventually sinks the seven wells, submerged structures and assorted gear would interfere with fishing in about 4,000 acres of a popular fishing area known as "the Point."

The water, heavy with yellowfin, bigeye and blackfin tuna, would be open to boaters, but the drilling operations would disrupt fishing. But later, the report said, catches would improve because fish are attracted to the artificial reefs that grow on platform supports.

Delays Proposed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A panel of the National Academy of Sciences warned today against proceeding with oil exploration off the California and Florida coasts, saying there is not enough reliable technical information on potential damage to the environment.

The scientific panel also was critical of past environmental studies of the lease sites by the Interior Department, saying that in some cases potentially adverse economic and social problems from oil development were ignored.

At each of the three sites, the panel said it found inadequate and unreliable technical and scientific data to warrant going ahead with lease sales.

The conclusions were presented to a presidential task force that is reviewing whether to issue oil and gas exploratory leases for the three offshore sites. The task force is scheduled to make a recommendation to the White House by the end of the year.

The sites off northern and southern California and in the Gulf of Mexico near the Florida Everglades are among the most controversial government leases sought by the oil industry because of strong opposition from environmentalists and residents in nearby coastal areas.

Western Residents Speak On Drilling

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASHEVILLE — Western residents took their turn speaking out against Mobil Oil's plans to drill for natural gas off the Outer Banks, while state officials said they will take steps to protect the state's shores.

Officials from Mobil Oil and the N.C. Outer Continental Shelf office attended a public hearing on the company's plans to drill an exploratory well 45 miles northeast of Cape Hatteras. Environmental activitists, students and citizens peppered them with questions about the plan.

"We know from what happened in Alaska (with the Valdez spill) that no matter how much money you suck out of Exxon you can't restore the environment to the way it was," said Bill Thomas of Cedar Mountain in Transylvania County, chairman of the N.C. Sierra Club.

Setting up a drilling operation, Thomas argued, entails too great a risk for the benefits that would come from gas or oil findings.

Mobil spokesman Mike Kimmitt said the likelihood of a spill from the exploratory well is remote.

The state will make a decision in April on whether to approve or object to a permit being issued. The meeting in Asheville was one of several taking place across the state to get public comments.

The western meeting was scheduled so Outer Bank property owners living in the area and citizens concerned about the coast could have a say in the process.

NCAE Criticizes Guidelines For Local Control

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A teacher's association had immediate criticism for part of a plan adopted by the state Board of Education that is designed to empower local school systems seeking innovative approaches to education.

The guidelines adopted Thursday will permit school systems to proceed with the School Improvement Act passed this summer by the General Assembly. The measure is intended to encourage local school officials into coming up with new ways of getting students to learn, and determining if students are learning.

"It really powers down to some extent and moves decision making to the local level," state Superintendent of Public Instruction Bobby Etheridge said in a telephone interview. "We will be the first state in the nation to do this this way. It's a bold step for North Carolina in this regard."

Only hours after the board passed the plans, the North Carolina Association of Educators objected to a portion of the proposal that leaves teachers out of the process used to determine if local schools system attained their goals. Under that section of the plan, principals and superintendents would make the decision, and issue pay bonuses to those designated to receive them.

Julia Kron, NCAE president and a biology teacher at Rocky Mount High School, said in a telephone interview on Thursday that the association objected to the provision.

"We believe the school-based differential plan should focus on student improvement and that we should foster cooperation among all the members in the school, all the faculty and other school personnel," she said. "If all the goals are met, the entire school should be involved in designing the flow of the money."

Under the plan adopted by the board, local school systems will be encouraged to establish local performance goals. Student goals must include "three-to-five year student performance goals and annual milestones to measure progress in meeting those goals."

Mom Accused Of Abandoning Child

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Police charged a High Point mother with contributing to the delinquency of a minor after her 6-year-old daughter wandered away from their home wearing only a nightgown and socks.

The charges came after police determined that Vicky King had abandoned her daughter at their home twice in the past week, said High Point Detective Kim Beck.

The girl, Katie Renee King, spent the night at the home of 78-year-old Bessie Pearson, who said she had no idea police were looking for the girl.

"I heard someone crying and I looked out my door and I saw her standing in the street," Ms. Pearson said. "She was turning around and around, rubbing her eyes, crying for her grandmother. She had on a nightgown with no sleeves, just a little floppy thing with no slip."

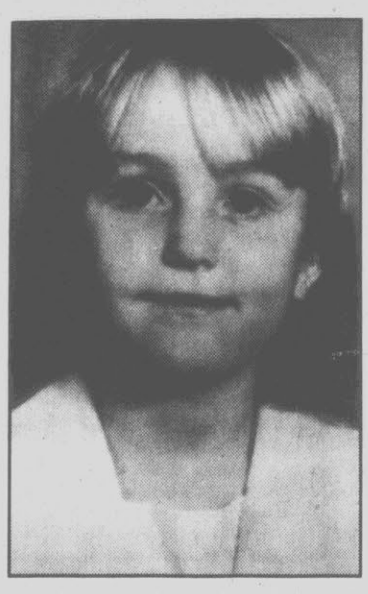
Katie King was picked up by police about 8 a.m. Thursday as she attempted to walk home after leaving Ms. Pearson's house. As many as 20 High Point police had spent nine hours searching for her, who was reported missing by relatives about 11 p.m. Wednesday.

The girl's mother, Vicky King, 27, was charged Thursday with two counts of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, a misdemeanor charge that carries a maximum two-year sentence, said Ms. Beck.

According to Ms Beck, Katie King spent Oct. 27 and 28 at a neighbor's house after she returned from school on Oct. 27 to find her mother gone. The neighbors brought the girl to the High Point police station Oct. 28 when they were unable to find Vicky King, Ms. Beck said. Police located King and returned Katie to her home on Oct. 28, Ms. Beck said.

The Department of Social Services released Katie King Thursday morning into the custody of her grandparents, said Capt. Steven Campbell of the High Point police.

Relatives reported the girl missing about 10:50 p.m. Wednesday, saying they had last seen her at about 9:40 p.m. playing with two other children near her home, according to police.



KATIE KING

However, Ms. Pearson said she found Katie King outside her house about 7 p.m. Wednesday. Ms. Pearson said the girl told her she didn't know how to contact her relatives.

"She said she was scared to go home," Ms. Pearson said. "I let her lay out on the couch and she kept screaming and crying and when she stopped she fell asleep."

Ms. Pearson said Katie King knocked on her bedroom door Thursday morning and told her she was going to walk home. The girl lives about four blocks from Ms. Pearson.

Ms. Pearson's daughter, Peggy Joyner, said she was a little surprised when her mother told her about her unexpected overnight guest.

"I said, 'Mama, did you have that little girl that had been missing all night?'" Joyner said. "I'm not surprised by anything she does anymore. Men come up to the door and ask Mama if she has anything to eat. People in the neighborhood know her and are always coming to her for help."

Insurers Avoid Federal Taxes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Thirty-nine of the 160 companies providing automobile insurance in North Carolina — including five of the state's top 10 auto insurers — did not pay any federal income taxes in 1988, according to the state Department of Insurance.

The taxes became an issue this week as state Insurance Commissioner Jim Long conducted a hearing on the insurance industry's request for an average rate increase of 4.2 percent for auto insurance. A consultant for the state Insurance Department contended Wednesday that automobile insurers in North Carolina are earning excessive profits because their rates include an allowance for taxes that they are not having to pay.

But industry officials defended the rate structure, saying that it assumes that those companies that do make profits will pay their proper share of taxes.

At the hearings, exhibits presented as evidence in the case show that 39 companies did not pay federal income taxes in 1988.

The companies included Nationwide Mutual Insurance Co., Allstate Insurance Co., Aetna Casualty & Surety Insurance Co., United Services Auto Association, and Atlantic Casualty Insurance Co.

Martin Urges Ministers To Join Effort To Cut Infant Mortality

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL — Gov. Jim Martin asked religious and business leaders to join the state's effort to reduce its infant mortality rate as some of the leaders described their work to improve the health of North Carolina's babies.

"I'm asking you to preach prenatal care from your pulpits," Martin said at the Governor's Conference on Infant Mortality and Morbidity on Thursday. "And if you are a businessman, consider following the ex ample of Burlington Industries in Greens boro, which offers pr[illegible] classes to em ployees at noon.

"Infant mortality is not only a medical issue. It's a social and economic issue as well. . . . We need your help."

Martin made his remarks to 300 business, religious, civic and health-care professionals at the conference in Chapel Hill.

The conference came less than two months after the announcement that North Carolina's infant mortality rate rose for the second year in a row. In 1988, 1,227 N.C. infants died before their first birthdays, for a rate of 12.6 deaths per 1,000 live births. In 1987, the rate was 12.1.

The latest national rankings, for 1986, showed North Carolina 42nd.

Martin announced the creation of the Governor's Council on Infant Mortality and Morbidity, a volunteer group to coordinate efforts and push for communitywide solu tions. Members will be named later.

At the daylong conference, representatives from business and churches described some programs to help pregnant women get medical care and to discourage teenage pregnancy.

For example, Robert Garren of Burlington Industries said the company gives $100 to pregnant employees who agree to get medical care during the first three months of pregnancy.

It also provides pregnancy classes and referrals to doctors or social workers.

Garren said Burlington's program doesn't cost any more than it was already paying in health insurance benefits and has resulted in more pregnant employees getting early medical care.

Ministers on a morning panel encouraged other churches to reach out to pregnant women who need medical care and to encourage teenagers not to have sex.

The Rev. R.T. McCarter of Morning Star Church of Christ in Rocky Mount, said his church has trained adult volunteers to be role models for teens and to help improve their self-esteem.

"Our first aim will be to teach our boys and girls to try hard to refrain from indulging into sexual acts. After all, before there can be infant mortality, there has to be a pregnancy," McCarter said.

In the meeting's keynote address, Reed V. Tuckson, commissioner of public health for the District of Columbia, warned that "trouble is on the horizon" because tere doesn't seem to be a national commitment to helping babies live.

Citizens of Greenville:

We demand a strong mayor, one who can control and lead, yet we refuse to allow him a vote because it will make him too strong.

We expect the mayor to be a traditional ombudsman for the people but when, in this capacity, he carries the citizens concerns to the city bureaucracy, he is accused of interfering.

When a straightforward request is made to treat city employees even handedly with equal disciplinary measures, given for like infractions, he is accused of discrimination.

When the mayor questions the buying of obsolete equipment and other needless expenditures to create layers of psuedo-management personnel, he is accused of promoting devisiveness.

In view of some of the talent the mayor has had to work with and some of the impediments placed before him by these so-called futuristic leaders, he has managed to do a more than tolerable job.

Plane Crash

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — A North Carolina man died Thursday when his single-engine plane clipped a pine tree and crashed in a wooded area less than a mile from the Darlington County Airport, authorities said.

Arthur Vann III, 45, of Durham, N.C., died instantly from massive trauma, coroner Eldridge Norton said. Vann was the only passenger.

Vann was flying a single-engine Cessna to Darlington where he planned to purchase a car from a local dealer, Norton said.

Protesters

DURHAM (AP) — A mistrial was declared Thursday in the appeal of seven anti-abortion protesters convicted of trespassing during a demonstration at a Durham medical clinic.

Judge Joe Freeman Britt made his ruling after jurors had deliberated for more than five hours Wednesday and Thursday day in Durham County Superior Court without reaching a verdict.

If convicted, the protesters each could receive as much as six months in jail and a fine of up to $500. They each were given a suspended 30-day jail term and $100 fine in district court in August, but those sentences were not imposed, pending the outcome of their appeal.

Board Sued

RALEIGH (AP) — Two Libertarian Party members and a political action committee have filed suit against a state Elections Board ruling that they say keeps them from raising money to fund a petition drive to get the party on the 1992 ballot.

Elections officials have interpreted a state law to prohibit the Libertarian Political Action Committee, Project 51-'92, from funding the ballot-access efforts, according to the complaint. Under the ruling, Libertarian organizations in the state are prohibited from getting the money because they are not qualified as a political party.

The plaintiffs — Timothy A. Spong of Wake County, Andre Marrou of Alaska, and Project 51-'92 — allege that the restriction violates their constitutional rights of free speech, free expression, due process and equal protection.

Cultural Drive

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A $25 million cultural fund drive, considered the largest of its kind in the city's history, kicked off with some good news: it is already more than halfway toward its $25 million goal.

The N.C. Performing Arts Center at Charlotte Campaign has raised nearly $13.2 million in donations, campaign chairman Bill Lee said.

The total includes several donations that were revealed for the first time at a rally at the Charlotte Apparel Center, including a $2 million gift from NCNB, which also has donated $1.5 million in land.

The $38 million arts center, scheduled for completion in 199?, is part of NCNB's new $300 million, 60-story headquarters.

Homicide

Donald Willis was shot as he entered a residence about 10:30 a.m. Wednesday, police said. They have no motive in the killing.

In 1988, the city had 40 homicides. If the current pace keeps up, police officials say, the total could equal or surpass the record of 68 in 1975.

Exchanges

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The N.C. School of the Arts has reached exchange agreements with arts schools in the Soviet Union that will put it in the "major leagues," the drama dean says.

Robert L. Francesconi, the dean of the art school's School of Drama, announced that theater students from the Moscow Art Theater School will perform here in January and that drama students from the N.C. School of the Arts will perform in Moscow in April.

In addition, six other schools in the Soviet Union have offered official invitations to begin exchange programs, he said.

Panel Supports Billboards On Interstates

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Billboards should be allowed on stretches of new, rural interstates, a panel of the state Board of Transportation said after a debate over whether sign restrictions amount to zoning.

The latest debate continues a yearlong showdown between the advertising industry and environmental groups over the role billboards will play as the state launches a $9.3 billion highway program.

The board's Drivers and Owners Committee on Thursday turned down unanimously a recommendation by a task force of Department of Transportation employees that billboards be prohibited on new interstate highways or other major roads in rural areas.

But Kenneth G. Younger, a board member from Cherryville, said some limits are needed on advertising.

"I have a problem seeing these areas opened up for billboards advertising soap powders, beer and stuff like that," he said. "I don't see anything wrong with signs showing where hotels are. This is a chance for us to at least write something in there."

The committee agreed to hold off a vote until after state highway officials report on a proposed system of designating scenic highways near federal and state parks, forests, nature preserves and wildlife refuges. That proposal is expected early next month.

Katherine E. Slaughter of the Southern Environmental Law Center in Charlottesville, Va., said the proliferation of billboards along highways underscores the need for more restrictions. "Coming into North Carolina along I-95 is like walking through the yellow pages," she said. "I'm optimistic that this committee can come up with some improvements."

Betty S. Waller of the N.C. Outdoor Advertising Association likewise said most of a package of proposals is acceptable to her group.

Food Recall Is Expanded

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURLINGTON, N.C. — Burlington-based Star Food Products Inc. is recalling more of its processed foods from supermarket shelves, a week after the company recalled its chicken salad, grocery store representatives said.

The chicken salad was recalled after a batch of the product was found to contain a potentially harmful bacterium during inspections by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Earlier this week, the company asked grocers to remove other products from its shelves, supermarket representatives say.

Products added to the recall list include egg salad, ham salad, pimento cheese with pepper, pimento cheese with pickles, pimento cheese spread, tuna salad, cream cheese with pecans and pineapple, cole slaw, barbecue salad and macaroni salad.

Star Food sells its products to supermarkets in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

USDA information specialist Hedy Ohringer said most bacteria only grow in warm environments. Lysteria is an exception.

"This bacteria is a real tough one because it can grow in refrigerated temperatures," she said. "It will even appear in a clean factory."

Lysteria monocytogenes can cause listeriosis, a rare but potentially fatal disease in people with compromised immune systems, a USDA report said.

YOUR EYEGLASS PRESCRIPTION
What does the Federal Trade Commission say about "Eyeglass Prescriptions"

Q. Can I charge my patients an extra fee for releasing the prescription!
A. No. The Rule makes it illegal for you to charge your patients any fee in excess of your normal examination fee as a charge for releasing the prescription. So if your normal examination fee is $30, you cannot add an extra $5 or $10 for releasing the prescription.
Q. When do I have to give out a prescription?
A. The prescription must be given to your patient immediately after you complete the eye examination. This means that you must give your patient his or her prescription before you begin your dispensing procedures (if you also dispense eyeglasses).
Q. What if my patient doesn't ask for the prescription? Do I still have to give it out to my patient?
A. Yes. The Rule requires that you prepare the prescription and physically offer it to the patient. Of course, you can't force the patient to take it, but you must offer him or her the written prescription. Simply asking your patients whether they want their prescription is not sufficient. We found that many consumers had never seen a prescription for corrective eyewear, and thus were unaware that they could take that piece of paper and use it to comparison shop.
Q. What is the penalty for violating the Rule?
A. The penalty for violating the Rule is up to $10,000 per violation.
Q. How can I report violations of the Rule?
A. You can contact us directly in Washington, D.C. Our mailing address in Washington is: Eyeglasses TRR, Federal Trade Commission, Room 281, Washington, DC 20580

Members of St. Marks Church in Richmond, Calif., hold vigil Thursday for quake victims

Freeway Was Never Checked

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The California Department of Transportation never conducted a complete seismic study of the double-decked Nimitz Freeway even though computer technology available for more than a decade could have uncovered flaws that contributed to its collapse, a top department official acknowledged Thursday.

State engineers conducted a partial seismic study in 1977 of the section that collapsed as part of a program to strengthen the freeway structure in the event of an earthquake. But they never examined the design of the expressway's columns, which gave way in the Oct. 17 earthquake, said James E. Roberts, chief of the department's structures division.

"We were not looking at columns at the time," Roberts said. "That was not our high priority."

Last week, Roberts said that the 1977 analysis had shown that the freeway would withstand a major earthquake — but he said that state officials could not find a copy of the study.

In an interview Thursday, however, he said that the missing seismic analysis only examined how to strengthen the roadbed portion of the Cypress Street structure and was not a comprehensive earthquake study.

Roberts' disclosure is significant because department officials have repeatedly said that they had believed that the Nimitz, with its two-level, double column design, would stand up in an earthquake.

Forty-one people were killed in the collapsed section of the Nimitz Freeway, Interstate 880, in Oakland.

James H. Gates, a department structural mechanics engineer who headed the 1977 study of the Nimitz structure, lamented in an interview this week that he and his staff did not discover the danger in the columns when they conducted their analysis.

"The disturbing thing from my point of view is that I didn't spot that problem," Gates said. "The disturbing thing from the point of view of the guys working for me is that they didn't spot the problem.

"We've been trying since 1986 to identify those vulnerable structures. We don't have any excuse. We just weren't able to do it. When you're looking at 15,000 bridges, it's like finding a needle in a haystack," he said.

California Assembly Opens Special Session To Deal With Earthquake

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — California lawmakers opening a special session on aid to earthquake-stricken areas questioned relief plans but barely debated the proposed source of funds: a sales tax increase local officials deem inadequate.

Marilyn Quayle, meanwhile, began visiting farm towns south of San Francisco left devastated by the Oct. 17 quake measuring 7.1 on the Richter scale.

"You've got me behind you," the wife of Vice President Dan Quayle told the owner of one damaged building on Thursday.

Also, Jack Kemp, U.S. secretary of housing and urban development, said at a San Francisco news conference that the federal government likely would be sending an additional $165 million to the Bay area to provide and repair rental housing.

Congress last week approved $3.45 billion in quake relief. The state is required to come up with $855 million more, said state Finance Director Jesse Huff.

To raise $786 million of that money, Gov. George Deukmejian and legislative leaders this week agreed to propose boosting the sales tax from 6 percent to 6.25 percent for 13 months starting Dec. 1 — encompassing two Christmas shopping periods.

The state Assembly and Senate opened a special session Thursday on quake relief. Several legislators closely questioned Huff on whether the highway funds included strengthening bridges.

"Before I can vote for a tax increase, I want to make sure some of the money is coming down to Southern California" to fix vulnerable highways, said Assemblywoman Marian La Follette.

Huff said the relief plan plan includes $300 million — $60 million of it in state funds — for retrofitting bridges.

Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson and officials from the counties shaken worst said they would ask for a sales tax increase to 7 percent for one year to raise about $2.5 billion for repairs.

But some Republican lawmakers questioned whether any tax increase was needed. Assemblyman Tom McClintock proposed a freeze in state spending to save the $800 million during the start of the 1990-91 fiscal year.

McClintock's plan would delay by 12 weeks the normal inflation increases due July 1 for programs from schools to welfare.

After hearing testimony and discussing quake relief needs, lawmakers broke into committees to consider specific legislation. Floor votes on bills were possible this afternoon. The session was expected to last at least until Saturday.

Any tax increase must be approved by two-thirds of each legislative house. While the state sales tax is 6 percent, the total sales tax charged in some counties is higher because of locally levied sales taxes.

The vice president's wife on Thursday toured Hollister, an agricultural town in San Benito County, then moved on to Watsonville in Santa Cruz County. Today, she was scheduled to visit inland Los Gatos, seaside Santa Cruz and San Francisco.

"I'm glad I came here and will certainly go back to Washington and tell the president of the problems here now and the hardships that will be faced in the months to come," Mrs. Quayle said in Watsonville.

Robert DeMonte, regional administrator for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, said that at Kemp's request Congress probably will approve an extra $165 million in housing aid next month.

And Kemp said another $300 million in housing aid already earmarked for the area over several years will be sent faster to help quake repairs.

In other developments:

—The Federal Emergency Management Agency reversed an earlier decision and decided to send 100 mobile homes for use by displaced people in Santa Cruz, San Benito and Monterey counties.

—The circa-1924 Giant Dipper wooden roller coaster at the Santa Cruz Boardwalk survived the quake and will roll again. Proceeds from all the boardwalk's rides this weekend will go to earthquake relief.

—Buck Helm, rescued after 90 hours in the rubble of Interstate 880, was moved from Highland Hospital to Kaiser Permanente Medical Center in Oakland. He remained in serious condition. He is still using a respirator and unable to talk. His family communicates with him "with our eyes," said his former wife, Lorene. Family attorney Bill Choulos said there have been numerous movie offers.

Bush, GOP Offer To Drop Demand For Cutback In Capital Gains Tax

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's offer to halt his drive for a capital gains tax cut this year could end a bitter congressional deadlock over must-pass fiscal legislation, a minimum wage bill and other measures.

Bush and Senate Republicans offered Thursday to stop trying to add the capital gains provision to debt-limit legislation that must be approved by next week.

"I deeply regret the tone of partisanship that has entered the economic policy debate," Bush said in a written statement. "Now, the stalemate must be broken."

Democratic House and Senate leaders said they liked much of the president's proposal and indicated a deal breaking the legislative logjam might come soon.

"We are heartened by the statement made by the president today, including his apparent decision to terminate his effort with regard to capital gains," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, told reporters.

"My view is we're very, very close," said Senate Budget Committee Chairman James Sasser, D-Tenn.

But while extending an olive branch on capital gains — one of his top legislative priorities — the president left a threat dangling over Congress.

He promised that if lawmakers failed to send him legislation cutting at least $14 billion from the deficit — and containing no unrelated provisions — he would leave $16.1 billion in cuts in most federal programs, made under the Gramm-Rudman law, in effect all year.

"Clearly this approach would not be a first choice for any of us," Bush said. "It is, however, a necessary discipline in the absence of more satisfactory action."

The president's threat to leave the Gramm-Rudman cuts in effect sparked hot retorts from Democrats, who said the slashes would devastate education, environment, anti-drug and other programs Bush has said are his priorities.

"Make no mistake about it, when you ... agree that these across-the-board cuts are going to take place, it is really a coward's approach to deficit reduction," said House Budget Committee Chairman Leon Panetta, D-Calif.

The president's insistence on a deficit-reduction measure minus unrelated issues was an effort to strip a number of Democratic-backed programs from the House version of the bill.

President Supports Federal Pay Raise

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House said today President Bush will support a new attempt on Capitol Hill to get a pay raise for members of Congress, federal officials and judges.

"We're just waiting for them to give us a package," press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said. "We'll be supportive if the Congress produces any reasonable proposal."

Fitzwater said Bush would like to see any pay raise tied to a package of ethical standards that would prohibit lawmakers from accepting honoraria — fees for speeches, public appearances and writing.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., and Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., met with Bush on Wednesday to discuss pay raises, Fitzwater said. The Washington Post, in a story published today, said Foley and Michel both back a pay raise proposal that would phase in a 35 percent salary boost.

A public uproar caused Congress to kill a pay proposal last year that would have raised salaries by 51 percent.

Bush Keeping Options Open On Contra Aid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush is sending mixed signals about seeking military aid for the Nicaraguan Contras, seeming to revive that option after his spokesman ruled it out a day earlier.

"We will leave our options open," Bush said Thursday after visiting El Salvador's ailing former president, Jose Napoleon Duarte, at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

On Wednesday, after Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega called off a 19-month cease-fire, Bush spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said regarding the possibility of seeking military aid for the rebels, "We don't want to go that route. We want to get free elections."

Bush had appeared on Tuesday to leave the door to military aid open when he specifically declined during a news conference to rule it out.

After his visit to Duarte, who is thought to be near death from stomach cancer, Bush also accused Nicaragua of "armed subversion" of its neighbors.

"It's not clear how far Ortega intends to take his military and intimidation campaign. Accordingly, we must and we will leave our options open," he said.

Pressed to elaborate, Bush said only that he would let his statement stand for itself. Congress cut off military aid to the Contras in February 1988 but has approved humanitarian aid for the rebels through February, when Nicaragua is scheduled to hold national elections.

Bush said it was hypocritical for Ortega to expect the Contras to disband and return home voluntarily "while sending in vast armed forces to attack them."

Sentiment on Capitol Hill appears to be strongly opposed to restoring military aid to the rebels, although the House, often a bastion of anti-Contra sentiment, blamed the Sandinistas Thursday for the escalation in fighting in Nicaragua.

The State Department said two military operations launched by the Sandinistas were "large-scale" and involved the use of artillery and attack helicopters.

The House resolution called on Ortega to "cease his reckless rhetoric" and said Nicaragua's leaders must fulfill commitments to "end their aggression in the region.

Customs Chopper Goes Down

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Rescuers searched by sea and air today for a U.S. Customs Service employee missing after a helicopter crashed off the Florida coast while chasing a suspected drug boat, authorities said.

At sunrise, crews from the Coast Guard, Customs and Air Force doubled the search area to 500 square miles around the site where the Customs helicopter went down about 9:30 p.m. Thursday, said Customs spokesman Michael Sheehan.

The craft crashed in the Cay Sal Bank area, about 75 miles southeast of Miami.

Sheehan said searchers speculated Gulf Stream currents may have picked up the missing man, who is believed to have been wearing a life jacket.

The Blackhawk helicopter was carrying four customs officials and two Bahamian police officers.

"When they hit the water they were all able to get out safely. The problem came when they were unable to physically link up with one another in the water," Sheehan said.

A hydrofoil from the Naval Air Station at Key West recovered five people, Sheehan said.

They were taken first to a hospital in Key West, then transferred to Homestead, where they were being examined by Air Force physicians this morning, Sheehan said. "They are basically in good condition," he said.

No cause for the crash had been determined.

Democrats Want Special Prosecutor

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Dick Thornburgh says House Democrats are bringing partisan politics into the investigation of federal housing scandals by forcing him to take the first step toward naming a special prosecutor.

Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee formally asked Thornburgh on Thursday to appoint a special prosecutor to investigate former Housing Secretary Samuel R. Pierce Jr. and other officials linked to allegations of wrongdoing at the Department of Housing and Urban Development during the Reagan administration.

Under federal law, Thornburgh must tell Congress within 30 days whether he finds grounds to open a preliminary investigation.

Thornburgh said he would "report to Congress as provided for in that legislation."

But he charged the letter making the request and the two congressmen leading the push, Reps. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., and Bruce Morrison, D-Conn., thrust "partisan politics into this matter, which has until now been handled in a non-partisan, professional way by the Congress, HUD and this department."

"Even more distressing is the assertion by the congressmen that criminal acts have been committed before criminal investigations have been completed," Thornburgh said.

Nineteen of the 20 Democratic members of the House Judiciary Committee signed the letter making the formal request for a prosecutor.

They said evidence gathered by a House subcommittee probing the HUD scandals "raises a serious possibility of criminal conduct." They cited possible perjury and conspiracy to defraud the government by Pierce or other former top housing officials.

"I believe that crimes were committed at HUD," said Morrison. "We don't know whether Secretary Pierce was responsible for that criminal conduct, but we do know that without a special prosecutor we will never find out."

Pierce's attorney, Paul L. Perito, said he was confident the Justice Department would deny the request after reviewing transcripts of the House investigation.

Perito said the committee's proceedings "contain not one shred of evidence to form a basis that crimes have been committed or that Mr. Pierce was involved in commission of any crime."

Under the independent counsel law, a majority of the members of either party on the committee can trigger the first-step review by the attorney general.

If Thornburgh opens a preliminary investigation, he has 90 days to conduct it and decide whether to ask a three-judge panel of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to appoint a special prosecutor, formally known as an independent counsel.

Inspector

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Forsyth County's health department has traded a secretary for a restaurant inspector.

The department had been running short on inspectors, and in recent months has managed to inspect only about 60 percent of the county's 850 eating places on time. The restaurants are supposed to be checked and graded quarterly.

The department has asked the county commissioners for two new inspectors at an estimated cost of $69,000. But the commissioners didn't include those jobs in their 1989-90 budget.

By dropping a position for a secretary, however, the department will be able to add an inspector. If an experienced applicant can be found, the effect could be immediate.

Bush Gives Late Bid To Help Coleman

By Joe Taylor
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RICHMOND, Va. — The Republican gubernatorial candidate was relying on a late campaign stop by President Bush to battle a Democrat who polls show leading in his bid to become the nation's first elected black governor.

Bush's host for rallies today in Richmond and Norfolk, Republican candidate J. Marshall Coleman, accused the news media Thursday of giving Lt. Gov. L. Douglas Wilder favorable treatment.

Wilder's lead has been growing in polls in recent weeks, after he released a daring campaign ad identifying himself as a supporter of a woman's right to choose abortion.

Jesse Jackson said a Wilder victory Tuesday would send a signal across the country that "something profound is taking place" in Virginia. But he downplayed any comparison of his own national leadership with that of Wilder's.

"Doug will become a governor, a visible governor, a great governor, but I relate to that state and 49 others. I think as he settles into the day-to-day management of the state, he'll be seen as one of 50 governors," said Jackson, who was interviewed at Dulles International Airport in northern Virginia.

Wilder, who did not seek Jackson's help in his campaign for governor, was told of Jackson's comments while campaigning near Williamsburg.

Wilder laughed and said: "That Jesse is really something, huh?"

Coleman said he doesn't think it matters how much history Wilder's election would make.

"He has to meet the same high standards that Virginians have always demanded of their governors," Coleman, a former attorney general, said at a news conference at the state Capitol.

He accused the press of treating instances of "dishonesty and corruption" by Wilder "as minor foibles."

Coleman stopped short of saying race was the reason for what he said was Wilder's soft treatment.

"I don't know what the reason (for the press coverage) is," he said. "All I know is I see it because I am on the receiving end of it."

Laura Dillard, Wilder's press secretary, said Coleman's remarks were "offensive and will sicken the voters of Virginia. ... I am offended that Marshall Coleman is so desperate that he would suggest that."

Ms. Dillard said Wilder has been thoroughly scrutinized by the press. "I will leave it to others to conclude what is behind" the double-standard claim, she said.

A poll that Mason-Dixon Opinion Research Inc. released Thursday night showed Wilder leading Coleman 48 percent to 44 percent. The poll, with a 3½ percent margin of error, showed a 2-point gain by Wilder since the last Mason-Dixon sampling two weeks ago.

A poll published Sunday in The Washington Post gave Wilder a 15 percent lead.

In calling the news conference, Coleman invited Wilder to come and explain his views on Virginia's anti-union right-to-work law. Wilder did not appear, and Coleman released a videotape of a meeting Wilder held with United Mine Workers officials that he said showed discrepancies in Wilder's position on the law.

Coleman also listed seven points, among them Wilder's reprimand by the Virginia Supreme Court in 1978 for mishandling a case; sponsoring legislation to pay money to a client who was threatening a malpractice lawsuit; and housing code violations by property Wilder owned.

In such cases, Coleman said, if he had been the offender he would be "laughed out of the contest" and "not be in the running."

"But, for the most part, members of the news media have treated these examples of dishonesty and corruption as minor foibles," he said.

On the tape, Wilder says he supports Virginia's right-to-work law, which bars compulsory union membership. But asked whether he supports a "free-rider" amendment allowing non-union members to be required to pay dues to unions that negotiate contracts for them, Wilder says, "That's correct."

After a part of the tape was first released Tuesday, Wilder said he would veto any effort to weaken the law and said the tape did not contradict that position.

Coleman said the tape shows that Wilder is "so lacking in personal integrity that he would take two positions at once."

Wilder campaigned at the College of William & Mary, where he was heckled by students who shouted "Why do you lie?" and carried signs that read, "Doug, Your Nose Is Growing" and "Lies, Wilder and Audiotape."

Joblessness Holds Steady At 5.3 Pct.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Unemployment held steady at 5.3 percent last month as the economy added 233,000 jobs, the government said today in a report that showed continued troubles in the industrial sector.

The Labor Department said all of the non-farm payroll growth for October came in the service-producing sector, with most of that coming as schools and local governments continued to add jobs for the school year.

The department revised September payroll growth downward to 201,000 from the previously reported 209,000.

The manufacturing sector, which lost a revised 88,000 jobs in September, lost an additional 13,000 in October to post its fourth consecutive monthly decline.

Underscoring the weakness in that sector was new data showing the average manufacturing workweek fell from 41.8 hours to 40.8 hours and overtime was virtually non-existent after averaging just under four hours a week for several months. The automobile manufacturing industry continued to struggle, losing 14,000 jobs last month.

The 233,000 jobs added to non-farm payrolls was more than most analysts had predicted and likely will give pause to Federal Reserve policymakers who had been seen as leaning toward a further easing of credit.

Conferees Approve $305 Billion Bill For Pentagon That Cuts Star Wars

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Lawmakers are optimistic President Bush will accept a $305 billion defense bill that cuts $1.1 billion from the Strategic Defense Initiative and provides one less B-2 stealth bomber in fiscal 1990.

"Apart from SDI, on the whole it's (the bill) one which we find acceptable," Sen. John Warner of Virginia, ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee, said shortly after congressional negotiators adopted the legislation Thursday.

The bill still must be approved by the full House and Senate, and critics were outspoken about a defense blueprint that provides all but $150 million Bush sought for land-based nuclear missiles and restores some funds for conventional weapons the president sought to kill.

"Where a weapon is built and by whom has become more important than how much it costs, is it needed and whether it contributes to our national security," said Rep. Larry J. Hopkins, R-Ky., a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

"We're buying too many big-ticket items with no hard choices," said Rep. John Kasich, R-Ohio, another member of the panel.

The object of their anger was the conferees' decision to provide money for the Marine Corps' V-22 Osprey, the aircraft that takes off like a helicopter but can fly like a plane, and the Navy's F-14D Tomcat jet fighter.

The tilt-rotor Osprey, which Bush sought to cancel, will receive $255 million in research and development money but no procurement funds.

"This decision will save hundreds of jobs for Philadelphians," Rep. Tom Foglietta, D-Pa., a member of the House Armed Services panel, said in expressing his support for the bill.

The negotiators also agreed to buy 18 F-14Ds in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1 but none in fiscal 1991. The legislation also requires the manufacturer, Grumman Corp., of New York, to "sign up for termination," according to Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The debate over the cancellation of the F-14D was the most contentious of the nearly eight weeks of debate over the two widely divergent House and Senate defense bills, lawmakers said.

Warner said that in his 20 years of defense conferences, "I've never seen such forceful, if not ruthless, lobbying by some groups."

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said he was "generally pleased" with the bill because it provides for "a strong national defense and the basic principles of the president's defense budget recommendations."

In a Pentagon statement, Cheney noted the bill "recognizes that we can't afford lower-priority defense programs, such as the V-22 aircraft production and, after fiscal year 1990, F-14D aircraft production."

But Cheney expressed some disappointment with the cut in SDI, saying, "I would have preferred a higher level of funding for SDI."

The bill provides $3.79 billion for the anti-missile shield, popularly known as Star Wars — $3.57 billion in Pentagon money and $220 million in Department of Energy dollars.

That represents about $200 million less than the amount earmarked in fiscal 1989 and the first decrease in funds since former President Reagan proposed the program six years ago.

The Star Wars total falls between the $2.8 billion approved by the House and the $4.3 billion adopted by the Senate.

Nunn said the cut in Star Wars spending reflected the diminishing congressional support for a program the Bush administration has been unable to define.

The bill also includes:

—About $1.1 billion for the rail-based MX multiple-warhead missile and the truck-based Midgetman single-warhead, about $150 million less than Bush had requested for the two nuclear weapons. Cheney had favored financing only the MX, but Bush opted for both.

—Funds for two B-2 stealth bombers in fiscal 1990, one less than the Bush administration proposed, and money for components for five in fiscal 1991. The bat-winged aircraft has come under congressional criticism for its expensive price tag of $530 million apiece.

Pilot Is Missing

minutes before it was scheduled to land at Orlando Executive Airport. A commercial fisherman identified as Earle Griffis, 22, of Groveland, Fla., told the Orlando paper he and his mother were setting traps when they were startled, presumably by the noise of the plane's impact with the water. It sounded like a thunderclap, they said, but they could see nothing because of heavy fog.

Just after hearing the noise, the fisherman and his mother said they saw a tail section of the plane sticking out of the 6-foot-deep water near them. They then saw other portions of the plane and went for paramedics.

According to Capt. Gary Phelps of the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission, Harris spoke by radio to another Cherokee Express pilot, also in flight, shortly after 8 a.m. Harris said at that time he was 31 miles from the Orlando airport. He did not indicate trouble with the plane, Phelps said.

The newspaper said that after having delivered cargo, the plane left Mount Pleasant, Texas, 90 miles east of Dallas, early Wednesday. The distance to Orlando is nearly 1,000 miles, slightly less than the range of the plane, a Piper Aircraft Corp. spokeswoman in Vero Beach, Fla., told the paper.

Based on the widespread debris, authorities speculate that the plane struck the water at high speed. "We don't have any idea in this world" what caused the crash, Phelps said.

Jim Solomons of the Orange County Sheriff's Department, which has retained divers to comb the scene, said late this morning that no bodies had been found.

According to Harris' uncle, Parker Overton of Greenville, Harris has had a pilot's license since he was 16 and has been employed as a pilot in Florida for six years. He was a graduate of Greenville Christian Academy.

Tom Turner of the Cherokee Company called Harris "a very fine young man, a top-notch pilot.

"He had in excess of 5,000 hours of flying time — almost 3,000 of those in the Aerostar-type twin-engine aircraft he was flying," Turner said.

The plane, with a cruising speed of 230 mph, could carry up to six passengers or 1,800 pounds. Four of the seats had been removed to allow cargo space.

Shower Gift Returns Given For Tight Time

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I recently attended a bridal shower for a friend and gave her two beautiful nightgowns. (Not cheap, either.) She and her boyfriend became engaged shortly after she found out she was pregnant.

A week before the scheduled wedding, she called it off because she found out her fiance was using drugs heavily, and he told her that he had no intention of quitting.

She phoned me to tell me the wedding was off, then she asked if I wanted my gifts back.

I told her she could keep them if she wanted, or she could return them for the money, since times would be tight for her with the baby coming.

Should she have kept them or not? I felt she put me on the spot by asking me if I wanted them back.

What is the correct thing for an ex-bride to do in that situation? — Ex-Bride's Friend

Dear Friend: When a wedding is called off, the "ex-bride" should return the shower and wedding gifts.

However, in this case, the ex-bride asked you if you wanted your gifts returned, and you suggested that she return them for cash because "times would be tight," which was a very generous gesture on your part. Please don't fault her; she's facing a difficult future.

Dear Abby: My husband and I have been very happily married for 14 years and have four children. My problem is my parents, who take frequent vacations and short trips.

Every time they return from one of their trips, they bring some kind of gift for each of our children and me — but there's never anything for my husband.

Although he has never said anything, I can tell he feels hurt. I would prefer that my parents bring presents for the children only and nothing for me if they can't bring something for my husband. My parents are very loving and generous people, but I'm afraid if I tell them how I feel, they might think I am ungrateful.

What do you think, Abby? Perhaps if my parents (or other people who are guilty of the same thing) read this letter, they will remember to bring something for everybody in the family — or nothing at all. — Hurting For Hubby

Dear Hurting: Tell your parents how you feel. Don't assume they might think you ungrateful. If they are truly "loving and generous people," they will appreciate your calling this oversight to their attention, and admire you for your sensitivity and caring attitude for your husband.

Dear Abby: I would like to know if it is proper etiquette to put on a wedding invitation, "Adult Reception Only" and also, "Monetary Gifts Preferred." I think that is so tasteless and would like to know if things have changed since I married. — Appalled Out East

Dear Appalled: Nothing has changed. Only those whose names appear on the wedding and reception invitations are invited. And to suggest that "monetary gifts" are preferred is in the worst possible taste.

Confidential To "In A Great Relationship In Lake Charles, La.": The best advice I can give you is to use these three phrases as often as possible: I love you. Thank you. I'm sorry.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a formal gown of satin and Venise lace designed by the bride and Sherry Kennedy of Beaulaville with a V-neckline, pouf sleeves, fitted bodice and dropped waistline. It was hand-beaded with pearls, sequins and iridescents and the chapel-train had organza ruffles. She wore a satin hat with Venise lace and pearls, and carried a bouquet of birds of paradise.

Sheila Oliver Pittman of Kenly, cousin of the bride, was matron of honor and Dee Sanders of Fremont, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids included Beth Holland, Phyllis Mitchell and Kim Smith of Goldsboro.

Sherri Lynn Anderson Is Bride Of Michael Thomas

WASHINGTON, N.C. — The wedding ceremony of Sherri Lynn Anderson and Michael Quinn Thomas took place Oct. 21 at 2 p.m. in the 15th Street Church of God.

The Rev. Elmer Bauman conducted the double-ring ceremony. Music was presented by pianist Joann Lee and vocalists Donald Wallace, uncle of the bride, and Karen Taylor, cousin of the bride, of Washington.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Levy E. Liverman and Thurman S. Anderson, all of Washington. Inez Haddock of Washington is her grandmother. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Rolin J. Thomas of Beulaville.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers included Jeff Anderson of Charlotte, brother of the bride; Tim Blizzard of Mount Olive; Lee Quinn of Richmond, Va., and Andy Griffin of Beulaville, both cousins of the bridegroom.

The bride wore a formal gown of silk-faced taffeta with a Queen Anne neckline, Juliet sleeves and basque bodice with re-embroidered alencon lace beaded with pearls and sequins. The skirt extended into a cathedral train with matching beaded lace encircling the hemline and train. Her tiered veil of illusion had a rolled, scalloped edge and was attached to a tiara of lace with pearls, sequins and crystals. She carried a cascade of cattleya orchids, white roses, stephanotis and forget-me-nots with ivy and satin picot ribbon.

The bride graduated from Washington High School, and is presently employed as a customer service representative for National Spinning Co. The bridegroom is a graduate of East Carolina University and is a technical service manager for National Spinning.

MRS. THOMAS

The bride's mother and stepfather entertained at a reception in the church fellowship hall. An after-rehearsal dinner was held at the Holiday Inn in Washington.

Study Reveals Aging Decline Facts

By David S. Martin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Aging is characterized by abrupt declines in mental ability often caused by personal experiences like forced retirement or a heart attack, according to a long-term study that suggests some precautions.

The 33-year Seattle Longitudinal Study has tracked the intellectual ability of more than 4,000 people ranging in age from their 20s to their 90s.

"What we have to do now is document scientifically what anecdotally we have seen all along," said K. Warner Shaie, head of Penn State University's Gerontology Center. "That people don't age the same way.

Most aging studies have looked at group averages for different age groups, rather than tracking changes in individuals over time, Shaie said. Every seven years, the Seattle study researchers test five areas: verbal meaning, spatial orientation, inductive reasoning, and number and word fluency.

People maintain their mental abilities, on average, into their 60s, Shaie said. "From then on, on average, you can find some decline."

By 67 more than half the participants showed declines in reasoning ability, though verbal ability didn't decline for most until their late 70s.

"Inductive reasoning tends to decline sooner, because it involves speed of response," Shaie said. "Between age 20 and 60, reaction time approximately doubles, so any skill requiring high levels of speed is vulnerable."

Researchers recently looked at 838 participants who had suffered a significant drop in one or more of the five abilities over the previous seven years, and found a link to jarring events in their lives, such as the death of a spouse and mental decline, Shaie said.

Jaguar OKs Ford Bid Of $2.5 Billion

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LONDON — Jaguar Plc, the prestigious British manufacturer of sleek sports cars for the rich and self-indulgent, agreed Thursday to accept a $2.5 billion buyout bid from Ford Motor Co., the maker of practical cars for the American masses.

The $13.60-a-share bid, which Jaguar's board immediately recommended to shareholders, headed off a counteroffer from General Motors.

A joint statement from the two companies said that they had reached agreement for Ford Britain to acquire all shares of Jaguar not already owned by Ford, which already holds a 13.2 percent stake in the British company. Ford's offer requires the approval of 75 percent of Jaguar stockholders to waive a charter provision that limits share holdings to 15 percent.

General Motors had been talking to Jaguar recently about a collaborative deal that would have left the British company independent while giving GM an initial 15 percent holding with the long-term goal of controlling 30 percent of Jaguar. The No. 1 U.S. auto giant said Thursday it was dropping the idea of buying into the British company in the wake of bid by No. 2 Ford.

McCotter To Build Motel For Tarboro

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TARBORO — The stage is set for construction of an $8 million motel here that will create employment for about 100 people.

Robin H. Spinks, Edgecombe County Development Corp. executive vice president, said Thursday that James McCotter Investment Co. of New Bern is planning to build a 150-room Ramada Inn on U.S. 64 Bypass at the U.S. 258 interchange.

McCotter Investments owns motels in Greenville, New Bern and Jacksonville.

McCotter has signed a purchase agreement with Planters Bank, trustee of the Fenner estate, for 20 acres of property in the southeast corner of the new interchange, U.S. 64 Bypass and U.S. 258, Spinks said.

Plans are to begin construction in February with completion by the end of next year.

NYSE Is Limiting Computerized Program Trading

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The New York Stock Exchange took steps to limit computerized program trading in case of sharp market declines, but congressional officials said the safeguards did not go far enough.

The exchange's board of directors approved a series of limits Thursday that will be imposed when the stock market takes rapid dives, and said they would appoint a commission to study long-term solutions to market volatility.

Their action came in response to a wave of opposition to the program trading strategy, which some have blamed for roiling the financial markets, causing the stock market plunge in October 1987 and the one-day, 190-point drop of the Dow Jones industrial average on Oct. 13.

The controls follow a growing outcry against a strategy known as index arbitrage, which involves the rapid trading of millions of shares of stocks and stock futures.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed today in an equivocal response to a stronger-than-expect report on employment.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.87 to 2,634.43 in the first half hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 391 up, 531 down and 504 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 21.50 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The Labor Department reported this morning that nonfarm payroll employment increased by 233,000 in October as the civilian unemployment rate held steady at 5.3 percent.

Advance estimates on Wall Street had called for a gain of not much more than 150,000.

That came as a setback to some faint hopes in the financial world that the Federal Reserve might take the employment data as a cue to relax its credit policy further.

However, analysts noted that details of the report continued to show weakness in the manufacturing sector of the economy. Some observers said the chances of easing by the Fed did not appear to be drastically changed.

Compaq Computer rose 1¼ to 90⅜, rebounding from a 16⅞-point slide Thursday that followed the company's projection of disappointing profits for the fourth quarter.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .05 to 187.69. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .14 at 371.62.

On Thursday the Dow Jones industrial average dropped 14.34 points to 2,631.56.

Pirates Challenge Miami

By Woody Peele

East Carolina head football coach Bill Lewis likes a challenge.

Saturday afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Orange Bowl in Miami, he and his Pirates will get all the challenge they want.

East Carolina, 4-2-1, will have the assignment to taking on the seventh-ranked Miami Hurricanes, which bring a 6-1 record into the game.

The "one" came just last weekend, a 24-10 defeat at the hands of Miami's arch-rival Florida State. It marked the first time in 14 games that the Hurricanes had tasted defeat.

Lewis is certain that Miami will be coming off that win with fire in their eyes and the attitude that East Carolina will pay for Florida State's sin against them.

Often times, however, that anger can be turned against a team to the underdog's advantage. That's precisely what Lewis and the Pirates hope to do.

They nearly did it last week against Syracuse, coming up just seconds short on the losing end of an 18-16 score. Syracuse, which trailed for nearly the entire game, kicked a game-winning field goal with just four seconds left to pull out the win.

Oddly enough, it may be the first time two former Wyoming coaches have faced each other across the football field. Lewis was the head coach at Wyoming from 1977-79, while Miami coach Dennis Erickson headed the Wyoming program for one year, in 1986. He moved on to Washington State the following year, and three years later took over at Miami.

It is, however, the first time the two have faced each other, or the others' school.

"(Erickson) has done an outstanding job in a difficult situation," Lewis said. "A lot of people might think it would be easy to take over at Miami, but he's come in when they are at an all-time high and has maintained the intensity."

And, not only does Miami have good football players, Lewis pointed out, but Erickson and his staff have done an outstanding job of coaching them.

"They play as hard as any team in America, or as physical as any team in America," Lewis said.

Erickson has changed some things. Miami is still an aerial-minded team, but now even more than in the past. Erickson has scrapped the I-formation backfield and gone to a one-back look. At times, he will put that back, usually Leonard Conley, in motion, and have a no-back look.

Quarterback Craig Erickson (no relation to the coach) and his back-up Gino Torretta have done an outstanding job. Erickson has been sidelined with a broken knuckle and Torretta has filled in admirably, throwing for a school-record 468 yards against San Jose State two weeks ago. Between the two, they've passed for nearly 2,200 yards in seven games.

As a team, Miami is rushing for 141.1 yards a game while throwing for 322.7 per outing — a total of 463.8 per game.

Conley is the leading rusher with 410 yards.

Torretta is again expected to be the starter on Saturday, but Erickson could be back and see some action, also.

"(Losing Erickson) didn't change their game plan. Torretta has kept things going, so we'll prepare for Miami, not for one quarterback or the other," Lewis said.

And whichever quarterback is in the game, there are a number of talented receivers to catch the ball. Chief among them is wingback Wesley Carroll, who has caught 40 passes for 595 yards and four touchdowns.

Other top receivers include wide receiver Randal Hill, flanker Dale Dawkins and tight end Rob Chudzinski. Each of the four have had 100-yard games this season, a total of seven between them.

"They'll throw long, they'll throw the screen, just about any type of pass pattern," Lewis said.

To protect the quarterback — or to open up holes when Miami chooses to run — Erickson keeps a fresh line on the field. He alternates two lines to keep them that way.

Defensively, the Hurricanes have been strong, especially against the run. They are allowing only 70.1 yards a game. Opponents are passing for 144.0 yards per game, a total of 214.1.

"Many times, because of their offense, people tend to overlook the defense," Lewis said. "But they are right up there at the top of the NCAA stats.

"Their whole theme is to be aggressive. They'll run a 4-3 alignment and the front four will come as hard as they can and not worry about the draw or the screen, leaving that up to the linebackers. They just create havoc."

Lewis lists the top people up front as end Greg Mark, tackles Cortez Kennedy and Russell Maryland, and linebacker Maurice Crum, the leading tackler on the team.

The 'Canes' kicking game is also excellent. Sophomore Carlos Huerta, the place-kicker, is perfect in his career on points after touchdown and misses few field-goal attempts.

"He was 21 of 27 last year and is 12 of 15 this year, including a 53-yarder. He may be the best kicker in football and he's just a sophomore," Lewis said.

East Carolina goes into the game somewhat banged up, but hopes to have most of those sidelined back in time for Saturday's game.

Tailback Willie Lewis is the leading rusher with 374 yards while quarterback Travis Hunter and fullback Michael Rhett both have rushed for 189 yards. Freshman tailback Michael Van Buren has 179 yards rushing.

Hunter has completed 59 of 122 passes for 834 yards and seven touchdowns. He's had eight picked off.

Intimidation Is Trademark Of Hurricanes

By Mike Grizzard
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Intimidation has long been a trademark of Miami Hurricane football.

Size, strength and speed — not to mention a passing game that has caused many a headache for defensive coordinators — are all weapons the Hurricanes utilize to subdue the meek week after week.

Dealing with the aura that surrounds the Hurricane program is a task for obvious underdogs who come to play and go away licking their wounds, often beaten before they step onto the field.

But senior offensive tackle Grant Lowe says that is over now, even though the Pirates are 0-7 in the series heading into Saturday's 4 p.m. game in the Orange Bowl.

"A lot of the guys on the team have played against them two or three years so I think being intimidated, that's over," Lowe said. "But just by them being a nationally ranked team, everybody will be up for the challenge.'

The Pirates, 4-2-1, are in the unenviable position of taking on a Miami team coming off a rare loss. The 'Canes were manhandled by streaking Florida State last week and will certainly want to take out their frustrations on an unranked, overmatched opponent.

Miami, 6-1 and ranked seventh nationally, has won 29 straight games in the Orange Bowl. The oddsmakers are expecting a runaway, billing East Carolina as

Hard Life Molded Carroll

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — University of Miami coach Dennis Erickson can identify the source of receiver Wesley Carroll's uncommon poise: tough times.

"Playing a football game is a very easy part of what he's been through in his life," Erickson said.

Carroll's mother was a murder victim 10 months ago. His brother went to prison on a sexual assault conviction. Carroll himself was a gang member briefly in the Cedar section of Cleveland.

He came away from those ordeals with a confident and positive attitude. Next to them, a third-and-14 situation is easy.

"I'd say I'm a survivor," said Carroll, a 22-year-old junior. "I consider myself a fortunate person because I had a lot of bad things happen, and I was able to overcome them."

Carroll's football future is as interesting to consider as his personal past. In his debut with the second-ranked Hurricanes, the transfer from Northwest Mississippi Junior College was the star of a 51-3 victory at Wisconsin.

Carroll, a 6-1, 183-pound speedster, caught seven passes for 113 yards and two touchdowns. He returned six punts for 122 yards.

Saturday, Carroll will lead the seventh-ranked Hurricanes against East Carolina in the Orange Bowl.

So far this season, Carroll has been the Hurricanes' leading receiver with 40 catches for 595 yards and five touchdowns.

"He's an outstanding player, and he'll continue to play like that," Erickson said.

"It's incredible in a way," the Hurricanes' newest star said, "because nobody expected Wesley Carroll to go from a junior college to a top school and perform the way I did."

At Northwest Mississippi, where he enrolled to improve his grades, Carroll last season caught 38 passes for 790 yards and seven touchdowns.

"I don't think I have any limitations on the football field," he said.

"Bad situations occurred in her life, and she always looked on the bright side. You've got to look for

Powell Finishes Second In State

From Staff And Wire Reports

Rose High's Paige Powell and Washington's Lisa Manning each were denied in their bids for a state singles title Thursday afternoon in the North Carolina High School Athletic Association championships.

Powell, a sophomore, reached the Class 4-A finals in Chapel Hill for the second consecutive year but was dealt a 6-1, 6-1 defeat by top-seeded Helen Spencer of Burlington Williams.

Powell fell in the finals to Scotti Thomas of Durham Jordan a year ago.

Spencer, who captured the 3-A crown last year, outlasted fifth-seeded Mandy Saharic of Durham Jordan 6-1, 3-6, 6-3 in the semifinals before handing Powell only the second loss of her high school career.

Powell, who qualified for the state tournament by winning her second straight Wilson Regional singles crown last week, picked up three wins Wednesday then started Thursday with a 6-3, 7-6 (7-3) win over eighth-seeded Cara White of Henderson Vance.

White had ousted Thomas in Wednesday's quarterfinals.

Rain forced the finals of the singles indoors, and Powell said she felt that favored her opponent. "I've played indoors before, but there's just something about it, the surface, or something," she said. "(Spencer) played really good and I knew that she would."

A senior, Spencer hasn't lost a match in North Carolina this year. "She was really up for it. Her service was really good."

Powell said she played well, too, but perhaps left too much in her semifinal match against White. "Beating Cara was a really big win for me. I was so up for that, it was hard to get up again."

Still, the future lies ahead for Powell, who would appear to have two more shots at the state title. "I think my chances are good. I was real happy just to make it to the finals and come in second this year. The competition is really tough but a lot of them will graduate."

Manning reached the 3-A finals in Charlotte via a 3-6, 6-1, 6-3 win over Dee Bumgarner of Wilkes Central, but settled for second place after falling to Heidi Smith of Brevard 6-0, 6-3.

Smith also had a three-set battle in the semifinals, rallying to defeat Heidi Watts of South Point 3-6, 6-3, 6-0.

Chau Dang-Tam Dang of Northeast Guilford won the 3-A doubles with a 6-3, 2-6, 6-4 triumph over Jenny Smith-Jennifer Vruwink of Asheboro.

Chapel Hill ended Goldsboro's two-year reign as the 4-A team champion when Susannah Cobb-Jennifer Thomas stunned Daniela Marx-Lee Worrell 6-1, 4-6, 6-0 in the doubles finals.

Cobb-Thomas needed three sets earlier in the day to get past Lisa Cook-Vera Jandera of South Mecklenburg, 6-2, 6-7 (4-7), 6-1, while Marx-Worrell easily disposed of Elizabeth Donovan-Liz Tuttle of Hickory 6-1, 6-2.

Marx-Worrell captured the state doubles title the last two years and had never lost a match in their high school careers.

Burlington Williams was second with 15 points, followed by Goldsboro with 13; Rose with 10; Durham Jordan with nine; Hickory, Charlotte Myers Park and South Mecklenburg with six each and Scotland County with one.

Brevard won the 3-A team title with 15 points. Asheboro was second with 11, followed by Washington with 10; Lenoir Hibriten and Northwest Cabarrus with seven each; Skyland Roberson with five; High Point Central and Statesville with four each; Newton Foard, North Iredell, Southeast Guilford and Tarboro with three each; Shelby with two and Kings Mountain, Salisbury and Southern Durham with one each.

The finals of both the 3-A and 4-A were played indoors due to rain.

Charlotte Catholic clinched the 1-A/2-A title Wednesday in Raleigh but added to its total Thursday to finish with 32 points. Mount Airy was second with 18, followed by Roanoke Rapids with six; Charles B. Aycock with five; Williamston and Monroe Piedmont with four each; Union Pines with three; and Albemarle and Mount Pleasant with one each.

Colorado-Nebraska Is Dominant Game

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOULDER, Colo. — Bill McCartney was the defensive coordinator at Michigan in the 1970s, but even some of the Wolverines' titanic struggles with Ohio State can't compare to this one.

"This is the biggest game I've been involved in as a coach," McCartney said. "Absolutely."

His second-ranked Colorado team plays host to third-ranked Nebraska on Saturday, with the Big Eight championship at stake — not to mention a possible national title.

McCartney, who earlier in the season steadfastly refused to entertain thoughts that his team was competing for a national championship, now admits it could happen.

"I think we now have a legitimate chance — if we beat Nebraska," he said. "But that's a tall challenge. We're in a position we don't want to miss out on."

Both teams bring 8-0 overall records and 4-0 Big Eight logs into the nationally televised contest.

Statistically, the teams are similar. Both run the ball effectively, using option attacks that have seen Nebraska rank No. 1 in the country in rushing with 400 yards per game and Colorado No. 3 at 376 yards per game. They don't throw often, but tend to be effective when they do.

The defenses are solid. The Cornhuskers are eighth nationally, yielding 260 yards per game, and Colorado is 19th, surrendering 301.1.

Colorado would appear to have an edge in special teams. Punter Tom Rouen leads the nation with a 46.5-yard average, and the Buffs also are first in kickoff returns and net punting.

"This is certainly the best Colorado team I've seen in the last 10 or 15 years — and maybe the best I've ever seen," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said. "I don't see anything they don't do well. They have a great option game, and when they throw it, they're completing 60 percent of their passes. They have a sound defense and an excellent kicking game. It's a complete package."

"This Husker team presents problems with play-action passes," he said. "When they're having success running the ball, their passing game is very effective because it looks like a running play coming at you. The same guy who looks like he's going to block you passes you up and gains a step or two on you, and that's how they make big plays in their passing game.

"They rank among the top teams in defense. They're always hard to run on."

Two inexperienced quarterbacks whose play was considered suspect entering the season have blossomed.

The Huskers' Gerry Gdowski, a senior, has topped 100 yards rushing in three straight games, capped by last week's 176 yards and four touchdowns in a 49-17 romp over Iowa State.

Colorado's Darian Hagan, a sophomore, has made brilliant decisions in directing the Buffs' power-I attack and has chipped in with five 100-yard rushing games.

Hagan and Gdowski also rank 1-2 in the Big Eight in passing efficiency. Hagan is practically off the charts with a rating of 197.3.

NBA Has Record Attendance For Preseason

NEW YORK (AP) — A record 1,063,379 fans attended 100 NBA preseason games this season, an average of 10,634 per game, up 20.6 percent over last year's average of 8,818.

The total was helped considerably by a single-game preseason record of 35,156 that turned out for the expansion Minnesota Timberwolves' debut, an Oct. 18 game against the Los Angeles Lakers at the Metrodome. That crowd easily bettered the previous standard of 23,811 established by Boston and Washington last year in Knoxville, Tenn.

Three days after the Wolves' debut, the Charlotte Hornets and New Jersey Nets played before 23,901 at the Charlotte Coliseum. That stood as the second-largest preseason crowd ever until the defending champion Detroit Pistons and Philadelphia 76ers drew 25,009 at the SkyDome in Toronto on Oct. 30.

Ayden, Aycock Roll To Easy Victories

AYDEN — Ayden Middle School overwhelmed Bethel Middle School, 54-6, in a junior high football game Thursday.

Andrell Roundtree and Richard Stewart had two touchdowns apiece for Ayden. Keith Marrow, Bryan Crandall and Craig Edwards also added scores for Ayden.

Ayden moves to 6-0 and returns to action at Farmville Friday.

Jermaine Reed scored all three touchdowns for Aycock, which moved out to a 22-0 lead at the half and never looked back.

Rogers, Owens Headed To Deacons

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Rodney Rogers didn't have a complicated selection process to go through when he announced he would play basketball at Wake Forest. He just went with his heart.

"I just like it at Wake," Rogers said. "I've been thinking about it hard for a couple of days. The outcome was just that Wake came out on top."

Rogers, the top-rated basketball player in North Carolina, became the second top recruit to make a commitment to new coach Dave Odom.

On Tuesday, Trelonnie Owens, a 6-foot-8 forward from Bladenboro, announced that he would play for Odom.

Rogers, a 6-7, 225-pounder, picked Wake Forest over Temple, Georgetown and South Carolina. He also had considered Duke, North Carolina, UCLA and Minnesota, although those teams reportedly were eliminated from his consideration rather early.

"It's a great coup for Wake Forest," said Bob Gibbons, the North Carolina-based basketball recruiting analyst. "Rodney was just the man at Nike (basketball camp). He didn't back away from anyone and proved he was the most physical forward there. He's got the body of an NFL defensive end and the strength to match his physique."

Rogers was highly recruited as a defensive end in football before giving up the sport prior to this season.

As a junior, Rogers averaged 25.7 points per game, 12.8 rebounds and four assists. He shot 58 percent from the field and 73 percent from the free throw line for a 21-6 team. He had game highs of 44 points, a school record, and 21 rebounds.

One problem with Rogers might be his Scholastic Aptitude Test. He took the test in the summer and failed to make the 700 necessary to make him eligible as a freshman under the NCAA's Proposition 48 guidelines. He took the test again on Oct. 14. Those results will be back in six to eight weeks, and Rogers did not request a rush return on the test.

Wake, Maryland, Duke Advance

DURHAM (AP) — Neil Covone set an Atlantic Coast Conference men's soccer tournament record Thursday when he assisted on all three Wake Forest goals as the Demon Deacons defeated Clemson 3-2 in first-round action.

Maryland defeated North Carolina 2-1, while Duke downed North Carolina State 2-1 in the nightcap. All games were played in driving rain, making field conditions extremely muddy.

Virginia received a first-round bye.

Clemson (13-6-1) took a 2-0 lead in the first 10 minutes of the first contest before Wake Forest fought back with three first-half goals of its own. There was no scoring in the second half as the Demon Deacons (13-3-1) held on for the victory.

John Garvey scored Maryland's game-winning goal early in the second half. The Terrapins are 9-6-2, while the Tar Heels dropped to 9-9-1.

Duke (9-4-3) got second-half goals from Chris Yankee and John Gwin to down the Wolfpack (8-8-1).

Bears' Dent Signs Five-Year Deal

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Defensive end Richard Dent, who has 78 sacks in 6½ seasons, signed a five-year, multimillion-dollar contract with the Chicago Bears. Details of the pact, one of the most lucrative in Bears history, were not available.

The 6-foot-5, 265-pound Dent had 17 sacks and forced seven fumbles during Chicago's 1985 championship season, when he was an All-Pro and Super Bowl MVP.

Massenburg To Sit Out Two Games

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Maryland basketball player Tony Massenberg, the Terrapins' high scorer last season, will sit out two regular season games before the NCAA restores his eligibility, the University of Maryland announced.

Maryland Athletic Director Lew Perkins, under NCAA rules, declared the Massenberg and two others — Teyon McCoy and Rodney Walker — ineligible when they were named in the official inquiry received by the University of Maryland on Oct. 15.

Massenberg and Walker allegedly received money for their complimentary tickets for the 1988 ACC tournament. McCoy received free admission to a Washington Bullets game in Oct. 1987.

McCoy, who repaid the money, can play immediately. Massenberg and Walker must pay back their money before eligibilty can be restored.

Farmville Again Tops Rankings

West Craven, Northampton East Close Behind As Final Week Arrives

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Undefeated Farmville Central enters the final night of the regular season as the top-ranked team in The Daily Reflector Top 12 prep football poll.

The Jaguars, 9-0, secured the top spot five weeks ago and have yet to relinquish it despite the hot pursuit of West Craven and Northampton East.

Farmville received all three first-place votes this week for 36 points. West Craven, also 9-0, is second but has a tough test tonight against eighth-ranked D.H. Conley.

Northampton East, 8-0, comes in again in the third slot, followed by Wilson Fike, North Edgecombe, Bertie, Greene Central, D.H. Conley, Northern Nash, Rocky Mount, Rose, Havelock and Tarboro.

The poll ranks teams from the Big East, Colonial, Coastal, Northeastern, Eastern Plains and Tobacco Belt conferences without regard to classification. The ranking is based on how a team does within it's own schedule.

The Top 12

• Farmville Central: The Jaguars got another big lift from quarterback Morris Foreman en route to a 20-7 win over North Pitt. They host Pamlico County tonight.

• North Edgecombe: The Warriors came up with four interceptions and Orlando Whitaker tossed three touchdown passes in a 40-0 blitzing of Creswell that sealed the Tobacco Belt title. They visit Mattamuskeet tonight.

• Bertie: The Falcons needed fourth-quarter touchdowns from Tracy Leary and John Leary to rally past SouthWest Edgecombe 27-17. They travel to Northwest Halifax tonight.

• Greene Central: John Dixon rushed for 211 yards and Michael Dail flipped a pair of touchdown passes as the Rams whipped Ayden-Grifton 35-0. They visit North Pitt tonight.

• D.H. Conley: The Vikings got a needed break last week after reeling off five wins in a row. They gun for the Coastal Conference title tonight at West Craven.

• Northern Nash: The Knights stayed in the hunt for a playoff spot by punishing winless Kinston 42-0. They host Wilson Hunt tonight.

• Rocky Mount: The Gryphons took advantage of eight Wilson Hunt turnovers to win 12-0. They host Rose tonight.

• Rose: The Rampants missed an opportunity to take over sole possession of first in the Big East Conference by falling to Wilson Fike and are in danger of missing the playoffs. They visit Rocky Mount tonight.

• Havelock: Silas George helped the Rams snap out of an offensive slump and ease past Pender County 45-6. They host White Oak tonight.

• Tarboro: The Vikings enjoyed its first tour through the new Colonial Conference, winning their sixth straight behind 215 yards rushing from Terrell Hinton. They take tonight off before beginning the state playoffs next week.

Kulwicki One Of A Dying Breed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Many people were surprised when Alan Kulwicki turned down the opportunity to drive for Junior Johnson in 1990.

Johnson runs one of the most successful and consistent race teams on the NASCAR Winston Cup stock car circuit.

Kulwicki, considered by some observers to be a potential superstar, chose to remain one of the last of a dying breed — the driver-owner.

"That was a real tough decision because there's a lot of pressure and a lot of responsibility involved in running this team," Kulwicki said as he directed preparations for Sunday's Autoworks 500 at Phoenix International Raceway.

"All the fans and everybody out there have their own opinion," he said. "But we certainly got plenty of cards and letters from people saying, 'We really admire you for not going, and sticking up for what you believe in and staying with your own team.'

"It was a lot of money to turn down, but I guess one of the biggest reasons I didn't go is I still believed in this team."

Johnson, a former driving great, is a Kulwicki fan and made a very attractive offer after he and Terry Labonte decided to part company after this season.

"They told me if I went over there I could pretty much set the car up any way I wanted to and do whatever I needed to be comfortable," Kulwicki said. "I thought if I'm setting up their car, and setting up my car, that I would run just as well in my own car. That's why I chose to stay with my own team."

Kulwicki, whose only Winston Cup victory came last November in the inaugural Autoworks 500, has had a disappointing season. He is 15th in the championship points and has just five top-five finishes, including four seconds.

"There are certainly plenty of things to do to improve this team next season," he said. "We're going to build some new cars for next year, we're building a new race car shop right next to Charlotte Motor Speedway ... and ordering new equipment, we've ordered a new trailer for next year.

"We're improving the team in a lot of ways that we weren't able to do before we had really good sponsorship like we do now with a growing commitment from Zerex Antifreeze. I think those things will make it a better team.

"A lot of it won't make that car run two-tenths of a second faster on that particular day, but it'll make us a more established, more solid team," he said. "One with more depth that hopefully, if we do get in a position where we're running well, we can maintain that through the season better than we did this year."

The fact that he has failed to win in 27 starts this season is eating at the graduate engineer from Wisconsin.

"It's been a year of missed opportunities," he said. "We could have won four or five races this year. I hate to say should of or would of or could of; I hate to make excuses, but we've finished second at Richmond and Rockingham, at North Wilkesboro, at Bristol — all races we were real, real close to winning. Somehow or another, all those opportunities slipped away and I don't feel too good about that. That bothers me a little bit, especially getting down to the end of the year when there's only two more chances to win.

"But I've probably learned a lot more this year about how to run the team and prepare the cars to finish races than I have about how to try to make the car run faster. I think we're just really on the verge of having all the mechanical problems solved and we should turn into a real consistent front runner real soon.

"If you do that week in and week out, you're going to win your share of races."

While Rusty Wallace trys to hold off Dale Earnhardt and Mark Martin in the tense battle for the driving championship, Kulwicki will be involved in one race.

Martin has six poles this season, followed by Kulwicki with five and Wallace with four. The one who winds up winning the most will win the $30,000 Busch Pole Award.

"We have several reasons for wanting to win the pole," Kulwicki said. "One, just the prestige of being the fastest qualifier. Secondly, we are real close to tying Mark Martin for the most poles this year. Lastly is the Unocal money that is up to $197,000 at Phoenix. That on top of the race winnings is plenty of incentive to try to do both."

The Unocal 76 Challenge bonus is paid if a pole winner goes on to win the race. The $7,600 per event rolls over until someone wins, and no one has taken the bonus since Wallace at Rockingham in the second race of the 31-race season.

The top 20 qualifying positions for the 500-kilometer, 312-lap race will be determined today on the one-mile Phoenix oval, with the rest of the 40-car field set in time trials Saturday.

Intimidation Hallmark Of Miami...

But Pirate coach Bill Lewis can't be concerned with the numbers or Miami's incentives. It will take all his efforts and the efforts of his assistants to create a positive mood after last week's gut-wrenching 18-16 loss at Syracuse.

"I don't know what (Miami's) reaction will be to that loss," Lewis said. "I would much rather they had won the football game and continued on their undefeated ways.

"I cannot control how the University of Miami prepares for this game, I cannot control their emotions, I cannot control anything they do. What we've got to do is direct all of our efforts and all of our energies toward our football team and having them ready to play the best that we possibly can and realize Miami will be ready to play, we think, at their very best on Saturday."

Lowe said the memories of the Pirates' visit to the Carrier Dome and a 18-16 loss to Syracuse last week will not fade quickly. But the senior offensive tackle noted it's essential they focus on what lies ahead. Looking back to what might have been could be fatal Saturday.

"We look back on last week and we remember what it felt like to lose in the final seconds," Lowe said. "We worked so hard but came up a little bit short. That will always stick with you.

"We've put it behind us the best we could and now are just really trying to concentrate on Miami."

Lewis says the Pirates have successfully shifted gears from game to game, especially the past two weeks. They did not rest on the laurels of a mild upset of Virginia Tech, but headed to Syracuse believing they could win — not just come close.

"I think our football team has done a good job in putting games behind and getting ready for the next game," Lewis said. "I think that's one of the important things in competitive athletics, whether it be football, basketball or whatever, that when you're in season there's another game, there's another preparation immediately waiting.

"Our football team was absolutely broken-hearted by the game Saturday. I saw emotion in our dressing room that I had not seen before which was positive thing. It was obvious that that football game meant an awful to the 60 players and the 14 coaches that went to Syracuse, that this football team and this football program means a lot to us. That loss hurt."

Preps Wind Up Regular Season Play

Woody Peele

We're down to the final week of the 1989 high school football season and there are still several playoff spots to be decided. Several of our area teams are already in the playoffs, Farmville Central, Conley, Greene Central, Roanoke at North Pitt, and several others still have a chance to make it.

Meanwhile, Mike Grizzard inched back out one more game in his lead over the rest of us, while Tom Morris slipped a couple of notches to last place.

Grizzard goes into this weekend with a 77-27 record while Tom Baines is second at 74-30. Vickie Spivey holds to third at 73-31, while Greg Laudick is fourth at 70-34. I'm one game further back at 69-35, followed by Morris at 66-38.

This week, there could be more changes.

First off, let's take a look at this week's high school wrapup.

Ayden-Grifton comes to the end of a frustrating season at East Carteret. The Chargers have struggled with a young team after several years of dominating the Eastern Plains Conference. East Carteret is winding up its first year as a 2-A team after several years in the 3-A ranks. The season has not been kind to either.

For one, it will be the chance to end the season on a winning note. For the other, it will just be the end to this year's frustrations. My feeling is that the Mariners have just a little more going for them. East Carteret will win this one, 21-14.

Farmville Central closes out its regular season hosting Pamlico, the team that will finish last in the EPC race. This is a David and Goliath meeting and it would take another miracle for Pamlico to pull this one off. The Hurricanes are only a gentle breeze this year. The Jaguars are for real. Farmville will roll, 35-0.

Greene Central travels to North Pitt in a game that will decide only which of these teams will be the second and which will be the third seed for the EPC. Both are ensured of a spot in the playoffs and it's only a matter of their head-to-head meeting deciding where.

The Rams have a strong offense and defense, but so do the Panthers. It should be a true dog fight, and it's a difficult one to call. I'm going to give Greene Central a light pick here, 14-13.

Finally, Rose High School travels to Rocky Mount with a playoff spot on the line. Rose must win to have a chance at the playoffs — and must get outside help also. Rocky Mount — picked to win in preseason — is out of the playoff picture but is acting as a spoiler.

And we all know the rivalry these two teams have. The choice here is simple. If it's at Rocky Mount, it must be the Gryphons, 21-15.

In other area games, it will be Creswell over Chocowinity, Roanoke over Jamesville, Williamston over Edenton and Washington over Hertford County.

Last week's record 6-0, this season, 60-11.

The other high school game of the week, D.H. Conley at West Craven falls to the panel.

Conley was one of the preseason picks to win the conference. The Vikings, still, have been somewhat surprising this year. They've been a steady, grind-it-out, do-what-you-have-to-do-to-win type team. West Craven has just been the type team to run right over you. Both teams have qualified for the playoffs, but this is for the conference championship.

The panel is split on this, but gives West Craven a 4-2 nod. My pick is West Craven, 28-20.

East Carolina travels to Miami, Fla., to take on the Hurricanes. The Pirates nearly pulled off the shocker last week against Syracuse, but fell four seconds short of it. Miami, meanwhile, was losing its first of the year against Florida State.

ECU's best hope is to catch the Hurricanes looking back at that loss, wondering if it could cost them the national championship. The panel, however, is looking to Miami to win this one, 6-0. My pick is the Hurricanes by 42-20.

Our other consensus picks: Clemson over North Carolina; Georgia Tech over Western Carolina; Air Force over Army; Mississippi over Louisiana State; Texas over Texas Tech; Duke over Wake Forest; N.C. State over Virginia; Penn State over West Virginia; Colorado over Nebraska, and Michigan State over Indiana.

J.R. Reid Happy To Be Starter In The Opener

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Saying it's not where you start but where you finish, J.R. Reid says he's happy to be in the starting lineup for the Charlotte Hornets as they prepare for their opening game against the Washington Bullets tonight.

"I'm just glad the coaches have enough confidence in me to give me a shot," said the rookie 6-foot-9, 256-pound Reid, the Hornets No. 1 draft choice who passed up his senior year at North Carolina to turn pro. He'll play at center.

"Like I've said all along, it doesn't matter where you start," the 21-year-old Reid said following Thursday's practice at the Charlotte Coliseum. "It's where you finish that counts."

For the Hornets, who led the NBA in attendance despite a 20-62 record in their first season, Reid is not expected to help them finish near the top.

Most experts predict the Hornets will have to battle with the expansion Minnesota Timberwolves to stay out of last place in the Midwest Division.

After one season in the Atlantic Division in the Eastern Conference, the Hornets move into the Western Conference this year.

"We'll be away from home a lot more, traveling a lot more," said Ccoach Dick Harter. "I feel more comfortable playing in Madison Square Garden than in places like Seattle."

Harter's chief concern is matching up against teams such as San Antonio, Utah and Houston.

"I don't think we've added enough," Harter said. "I wish we had more players."

During the off-season, the Hornets made some moves to strengthen their inside game. The Hornets were the worst rebounding team in the NBA last year.

Gone are veterans Robert Reid, Earl Cureton and Tim Kempton. They were replaced by 7-footer Stuart Gray, 6-foot-10 Richard Anderson and 6-foot-9 Terry Dozier, a rookie free agent out of South Carolina.

Returning starters include veteran forwards Kelly Tripucka and Kurt Rambis, and shooting guard Rex Chapman, who has added some pounds after his rookie season.

Muggsy Bogues, the 5-foot-3 point guard out of Wake Forest, also will start Friday.

"I think we might catch some teams by surprise if they come in with a lackadaisical attitude," Bogues said. "If we're sharp and do what we're told, we're much stronger with J.R."

Guard Dell Curry, who led the team in scoring with 15.4 points a game during the preseason, will be the Hornets sixth man.

Journeyman point guard Jerry Sichting, who comes over as a free agent from Portland, also is expected to see a lot of playing time until Michael Holton returns.

Holton, who started 60 games last year, begins the season on injured reserve with a fragmented disc in his spine. The 6-foot-4 Holton is considered the Hornets' best defensive point guard.

"On paper, we can't compete with the Detroits or LAs (Los Angeles Lakers) of this league," said the 6-foot-1 Sichting. "But we'll bust our tails and win a few games. The goal of an expansion team is to get better."

Harter said the team's weak spot is obvious.

Looking at his returning players, Harter said he has seen the most improvement in Curry and reserve forward Brian Rowsom. Rambis and Tripucka have played well, he said, and Chapman has shown some improvement

Reid has progressed quickly in a few short weeks, Harter said.

"He's a strong physical player and he doesn't back down," he said. 'How skilled he is only time will tell. But I can tell you he won't back down to anybody."

When the Hornets drafted Reid in the first round of the NBA draft, some observers were not impressed. At North Carolina, his rebounding dipped from 293 as a sophomore to 170 as a junior, and his scoring dropped from 18 points a game to 15.9.

Reid convinced most skeptics with a strong training camp, hitting the boards, blocking shots and adding some thunderous dunks as the Hornets went 4-4 in their preseason games.

Reid averaged 13.9 points a game and led the team in rebounding with 6.8 per game.

"He won the job — it wasn't given to him," he said. "He had a terrific camp. I think he's going to be a very fine professional player if he continues to work hard and learn the game."

Scheer said one thing won't change about the Hornets.

"I think we'll give our fans the same hard-nosed, Dick Harter team that gets after it every night," he said.

"The fans won't continue to support us if we don't play hard," he said. "I don't think we would have filled this place last year if we didn't work our butts off."

To that, Reid added: "Hopefully we'll start out with a win."

Bird's Back, But Question Marks Remain About Future

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Boston Celtics, who didn't clinch the last spot in the playoffs until the final game of the season, were 7-1 in exhibitions as Bird returned after missing all but six games in 1988-89 because of foot and back injuries. Bird struggled, however, leaving question marks about his future as the team prepared for the season opener against Milwaukee.

"I haven't played as much as I'd like," Bird said. "I get going and I come out of the game and I get going again and I come out. I've struggled a lot more in this preseason than I have in any preseason I can remember.

"I'm not getting the minutes I used to get. So it's something I have to adjust to."

The Celtics, who have won their last 10 home openers, meet a Milwaukee team top-heavy with backcourt strength and problems up front. Forward Terry Cummings was traded to San Antonio and forwards Greg Anderson and Larry Krystkowiak are injured, but the Bucks have guards Alvin Robertson, Rickey Pierce and Jay Humphries, while Paul Pressey moves from guard to forward.

"Things flash through my mind that I think's going to happen, and they don't happen," Bird said. "I always said basketball's a reaction game. If I start thinking about how a guy's going to play me, or what they're supposed to do, and they don't do it, it really screws me up. I'm a reaction player."

The loss of Cummings, who was traded to San Antonio in exchange for Robertson and Anderson, could be the hardest to overcome. Cummings averaged nearly 23 points per game.

"I think it has to come from a team concept where there are two points here, three points there and I believe we'll find a way to get the 110 points we're going to score," Harris said. "We've got a little more speed and quickness and we'll play around the rim a little more frequently than the past teams have.

Atlanta won 52 games last season before being eliminated in the first round by the Bucks, whom Atlanta had beaten six straight during the regular season.

"Last year is behind us," Fratello said. "Let's deal with this year. What do we accomplish by dealing with last year?

capably but not in a dominating fashion until last week's 20-3 victory at Oklahoma. The Buffs held Oklahoma to 248 total yards, including 169 rushing. The Sooners were held to zero or minus yards on 34 of the 71 plays against the Buffaloes. Nine other Oklahoma plays produced gains of two yards or less.

That was reminiscent of Colorado's last victory over Nebraska — when the Buffs repeatedly dumped Nebraska players for losses in a 20-10 upset here in 1986.

That victory was a rare breakthrough by the Buffs against the Huskers. Nebraska has won 20 of the last 21 meetings dating back to 1968, and has lost only once in 14 visits to Boulder since 1960.

Elsewhere, Navy is at top-ranked Notre Dame, Purdue is at No. 4 Michigan, Mississippi State is at No. 5 Alabama, South Carolina is at No. 6 Florida State, East Carolina is at No. 7 Miami, No. 8 Illinois visits Iowa, and Oregon State is at No. 9 Southern Cal. No. 10 Tennessee is idle.

In the Second Ten, No. 11 Arkansas is at Rice, No. 19 Florida is at No. 12 Auburn, No. 13 West Virginia is at No. 16 Penn State, No. 15 Arizona is at California, No. 17 Houston is at TCU, No. 24 Virginia is at No. 18 North Carolina State and SMU visits No. 20 Texas A&M. No. 14 Pittsburgh is idle.

Rounding out the Top 25, No. 21 Clemson visits North Carolina, Texas Tech is at No. 22 Texas, Oregon is at No. 23 Brigham Young and San Jose State is at No. 25 Fresno State.

Notre Dame, coming off a surprisingly easy 45-7 victory over previously unbeaten Pitt, entertains an old foe in Navy. The Irish (8-0) haven't lost to the Midshipmen (2-5) since quarterback Roger Staubach won the Heisman Trophy for the Middies in 1963.

Dennis Erickson lost his first game as Miami coach when the Hurricanes (6-1) were beaten 24-10 by Florida State. The loss string isn't likely to reach two against East Carolina, despite the Pirates's 4-2-1 record.

Michigan and Illinois, both with 6-1 records, can't afford to look ahead a week to their first-place showdown in the Big Ten. It might not matter in Michigan's case as the Wolverines take on lowly Purdue (1-6). The Illini have a tougher task against Iowa (4-3).

Alabama is 7-0 thanks to the block of a potential game-winning field goal against Penn State last week. At issue this week is the Crimson Tide's lead in the Southeastern Conference, which will be at stake against Mississippi State (4-3). Bill Curry's Crimson Tide must win to maintain a one-game edge over Tennessee and Auburn.

Florida State (6-2), its win streak at six games after beating Miami, will need to avoid a letdown — if that's possible when facing a ranked team — when the Seminoles meet South Carolina (5-2-1). The Gamecocks have been a pleasant surprise under new coach Sparky Woods, but have lost quarterback Todd Ellis to a knee injury.

In the Pacific-10, Southern Cal and Arizona, both 6-2, tune up for their meeting a week down the road, knowing a Rose Bowl berth probably goes to the winner. The Trojans, 4-0 in the Pac-10, could knock Oregon State, 3-1-1 in the conference, out of the Rose Bowl race. The Wildcats, 4-1 in the league, should have the easier time against lowly California (2-6).

In the Southwest Conference, only Texas, the lone unbeaten in league play, can afford the luxury of a loss. The Longhorns, who are 4-2 overall, also have the best chance of being beaten this weekend when they play dangerous Texas Tech (5-2). Texas A&M (6-2) draws Rice (1-6-1) and Arkansas, also with one conference loss, plays SMU (2-5).

North Carolina State (7-1) and Virginia (7-2) will battle for the Atlantic Coast Conference lead and the inside track to the league's host berth in the Florida Citrus Bowl. N.C. State, Virginia and Duke each have one conference defeat.

Neighbors Jittery Over German Reunification

By Carol J. Williams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BONN, West Germany — Although the superpowers profess to have no fear of a reunited Germany, Europeans on both sides of the East-West divide are growing increasingly nervous at the prospect of a German giant in their midst.

NATO and Warsaw Pact lawmakers who met here this week to discuss political changes indicated that Europeans, afraid of the rise of a new dominant power on the continent, may be more comfortable with the status quo of two Germanys.

East Germany's new leader, Egon Krenz, quashed the prospect of a reunited Germany in the near future when he told reporters in Moscow that "division is an element of our European security."

But West German officials and scholars say the mass demonstrations sweeping the Communist state could lead some day to the kinds of reforms that would allow East Germans to reconsider their separate status.

The East German state under Communist Party control "has never been accepted by the people," said Burkhard Dobiey, head of the German Policy department of the federal Inter-German Affairs Ministry in Bonn.

"If they decide that as Germans they would like to be with us, for instance, we have to accept that. This is in our Constitution."

Dobiey's comments came during a three-day discussion between lawmakers from the East and West sponsored by the North Atlantic Assembly, an advisory body to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The long-dormant idea of a reunified Germany has been revitalized in recent months by the flight of tens of thousands of East Germans disillusioned with conditions in their country.

President Bush said in an interview with The New York Times last week that he doesn't "share the concern that some European countries have about a reunified Germany."

"We are very much concerned about the impact the rapprochement of the two Germanys might have on the European Community," said Loic Bouvard, a French parliament member.

Pieter Maris of the Netherlands' Parliament noted the thorny problems of bringing together two Germanys belonging to opposite political and defense camps. He asked the West Germans to explain what they see as "the last step."

West European unease with talk of reunification likely reflects concern about the emergence of an overpowering economy as much as security questions.

Joining the two states would boost the population to more than 75 million, and expand the industrial base of what is already Europe's strongest economy, West Germany.

Some East European states, like Czechoslovakia, view efforts at reunification as a drive powered by a revengeful spirit on the part of the Germans to reclaim territory lost in World War II.

The Kremlin, however, has signaled through envoys abroad it would pose no barriers to East Germany's departure from the Warsaw Pact if the populace so decided.

"Everything is up to the Germans," the Bonn-based daily Die Welt quoted Nikolai Shishlin, head of the Communist Party Central Committee's East European department, as saying in Washington.

The newspaper also quoted Yevgeny Primakov, head of the lower house of the Supreme Soviet, as telling CBS television the Kremlin has no objections to the departure of any of its allies from the Warsaw Pact.

Istvan Gyarmati, a deputy foreign minister of Hungary and a negotiator at the Vienna-based conventional arms talks, said Europeans would accept reunification if existing military blocs were dissolved.

Jerzy Golaczynski, head of the national defense committee in Poland's Sejm, or parliament, said his nation recognizes the right of both East Germany and West Germany to determine their own futures.

"But it has been made clear at this conference that reunification is not just a concern for Germany, but for all of Europe and the world," Golaczynski said. "The concerns of Germany's neighbors must also be kept in view."

While Poland and West Germany have made major advancements in their relations recently, and Chancellor Helmut Kohl will visit Warsaw next week, it was Poland that suffered first at the hands of Nazi Germany 50 years ago.

Mourners take to the streets in San Salvador during funeral

Unionists Bury Dead In Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas suspended peace talks with the rightist government after accusing the president of complicity in the bombing of a union hall. Thousands of unionists buried slain companions and vowed revenge.

"Because the color of blood is never forgotten, our slain companions will be avenged!" the unionists shouted Thursday as they marched through the downtown area.

The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front said Thursday it had "suspended our participation" in peace talks. Rebel and government representatives were scheduled to meet Nov. 20 in Caracas, Venezuela, in the third round of talks that began in Mexico in September.

The talks had produced virtually no progress toward ending a 10-year-old civil war that has killed an estimated 70,000 people. Each side accused the other of bad faith.

The suspension came in a week of rapidly escalating violence and two days after a terrorist bomb killed 10 people and wounded 29 others at a leftist labor federation.

The rebels said they had evidence that the bombing of a hall belonging to the National Federation of Salvadoran Workers was the decision of military chief of staff Col. Rene Ponce, "had the authorization of President Cristiani and was executed by Col. Elena Fuentes," commander of the San Salvador-based 1st Army Brigade.

El Salvador observed the Day of the Dead holiday Thursday, and no government spokesman was available to respond to the guerrilla accusation. THe two-day holiday honors the deceased.

Cristiani, in an address Tuesday night, condemned the bombing as terrorism and pledged an investigation.

Several thousand people took part in a funeral procession for six of those killed in Tuesday's bombing. The four other victims were buried separately by their families.

"Death to D'Aubuisson!" chanted the marchers, referring to Roberto D'Aubuisson, founder and honorary president of Cristiani's Republican Nationalist Alliance, or Arena.

Human rights advocates consider D'Aubuisson the mastermind of rightist death squads that killed thousands of suspected leftists in the early 1980s.

Soldiers and police generally stayed well away from the march route. The only incident occurred when a truckload of army troops approached the rear of the march.

East Germans Step Up Demands For Communist Leaders To Resign

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — East Germany's state-controlled media today reported widening public calls for the resignations of top Communist Party leaders after yet another day of protests for democratic reform.

A West German newspaper said it has learned the East German premier, Willi Stoph, will step down next week.

The mass-circulation Bild newspaper, which forecast the ouster of East German leader Erich Honecker last month, reported today that Stoph will be removed at a party Central Committee meeting convening Wednesday.

In East Berlin, the National Zeitung newspaper said it regretted the continuing departure of East Germans to the West while the new party leadership of Egon Krenz tackled the social problems behind the exodus.

"Without a doubt, we are only at the beginning," the newspaper said, referring to the reform movement. "There is mistrust and a thousand things still to be done. But we are dealing with this here, not in Bonn or Frankfurt."

The West German ZDF television network also reported that Dresden mayor Wolfgang Berghofer has predicted more top-level changes.

On Thursday, the resignations of several East German officials were announced, including that of Honecker's wife, Margot. She had been education minister for 26 years.

Also Thursday, Annelis Kimmel became the first woman to head the federation of trade unions, replacing longtime Honecker protege Harry Tisch.

Two regional party bosses quit after more than 20 years in their posts, and the leaders of two Communist-aligned parties resigned under pressure from members.

Also, in an apparent attempt by the leadership to regain popular trust, it was announced Thursday that an East Berlin couple with nine children will move into the opulent home of a disgraced trade union boss.

They marched in Gera, Erfurt, Halle and Wilhelm Pieck Stadt, the official ADN news agency reported.

It said marchers bearing candles and banners shouted through loud speakers for more democracy and an end to Communist Party privileges.

Krenz, who replaced Honecker on Oct. 18, returned late Thursday from an afternoon visit to Warsaw, Poland. He met with non-Communist Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki and declared that East Germany could learn something from that country.

Refugees Jamming Embassy In Prague

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — About 4,000 East Germans were jammed into the West German Embassy in Prague today with new arrivals pouring in each hour, all eager to emigrate West despite promises of reform from their Communist leaders.

"I don't believe that anything will change there," one young man at the embassy said Thursday, declining to give his name. "The reforms are only for the outside world."

With East German diplomats processing only about 100 applications a day, it was expected the embassy and its gardens, which have a capacity of about 5,500 people, would be overflowing before an expected weekend rush of East Germans.

Embassy sources, who put the number of East Germans at around 4,000 just before noon, said negotiations were under way with Czechoslovak authorities for extra space.

Czechoslovakia's state-run media, usually silent about the East Germans packing Bonn's embassy, reported swiftly on the latest wave of arrivals.

At least 8,000 East Germans swarmed into Czechoslovakia after East Germany lifted a month-old travel ban Wednesday, the official East German news agency ADN said. It is the only country East Germans can visit freely.

Most of those flooding into the embassy here were in their early 20s. At least 200 to 300 children could be seen behind a fence playing peacefully in the embassy grounds.

The refugees simply walked in through the giant wooden doors of the Palais Lobkowicz, the elegant Baroque palace that houses the West German Embassy in Prague's ancient Mala Strana district.

A Czech policeman outside the embassy said he and his colleagues had orders not to interfere because it was a matter for the two Germanys alone.

Tents were ordered from West Germany to cope with what embassy sources expected would be a new influx over the weekend. West German Red Cross helpers and medical supplies were dispatched from Bonn.

East Germany has agreed to allow its citizens at the embassy and at the West German Embassy in Warsaw to renounce their citizenship and go to West Germany.

Colombian Judges On Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOGOTA, Colombia — Two bombs exploded in the capital, killing three people, including a child, and injuring five, a national radio chain reported early today.

The new violence erupted late Thursday, the same day judges and court workers began a series of nationwide strikes demanding more protection. The strikes were a response to the murders a day earlier of a judge and a congressman, apparently by drug traffickers.

A car bomb exploded in the western part of the capital, killing three members of the same family who were walking nearby, the radio network Caracol said, quoting witnesses. The three dead were a woman, her small child and her nephew, it said.

Four people were injured in the blast and one was in critical condition after losing his arm, Caracol said. The bomb caused extensive damage to a mattress factory.

Another blast minutes earlier in northern Bogota damaged a bank and injured one person, the network reported.

Caracol quoted police as saying they had deactivated a third bomb, placed at a Colombian-American cultural exchange center in downtown Bogota late Thursday, and a car bomb on the outskirts of the capital.

A national police spokeswoman said early this morning that she could not yet confirm any of the reports. She spoke on condition of anonymity.

More than 180 bombings have rocked Colombia since the government declared a crackdown on drug traffickers Aug. 19, the day after a leading presidential candidate was assassinated. The terrorist campaign has left 25 people dead and another 224 injured.

Authorities here assume the drug traffickers are using the bombings to try to force the government to abandon its policy of extraditing drug suspects to the United States. Five suspects have been extradited since the crackdown began.

In Medellin, where the judge was killed Wednesday, federal judges walked off the job indefinitely until they receive more protection.

It was the third time judges have gone on strike in the last three months, each walkout following the assassination of a federal judge. In the last eight years 222 court workers, including 43 judges, have been killed, most of them by drug traffickers.

TNT To Air Cooper Special On Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — "His name was Gary Cooper. In a time now fast receding, he was the greatest of all movie stars."

That's how "Gary Cooper: American Life, American Legend," begins, as written by Richard Schickel and narrated by Clint Eastwood. The one-hour TNT special's first showing is Sunday at 8 p.m. EST.

The idea for the special was hers. She wanted, through film clips and home movies, to show her late father as a man and an actor to viewers born since his death at 60 in 1961. "There was diversity in roles he was able to portray. It wasn't just the stereotyped Westerner."

And she wanted to show his values. "He liked to play roles that pointed up a sense of valor and quality in human behavior. Playing Sergeant York and Lou Gehrig gave him his pleasure in life. He liked the ones that pointed up the best that we can be rather than the lowest that we can fall to."

Mrs. Janis adds, "Heroes are not uncomplicated. They're not goody goody. Human conflict and struggle goes on."

Her father, she said, "hated stupid dialogue and unreal situations."

Cooper was famous in movies for brevity of speech. Comics used to get laughs indicating that all he said was "Yup."

In his private life, his daughter says, "He wasn't a lecturer or a pontificator. But he chatted about ordinary things. He had a wry sense of humor."

Her father's fame, she says, did not cause her to have a troubled childhood, Mrs. Janis says. "All the trappings, the phony part that can come into that Hollywood way of life, didn't for them (her parents) and therefore I had a very solid kind of base."

Cooper left his family for five or six years after he met actress Patricia Neal, which is mentioned in the special. "Facts are the facts," Mrs. Janis says. "People live their lives and things happen and they go through difficult periods."

When doctors found that Cooper had lung, colon and bone cancer, his daughter, who had never wanted to act, recalls, "I thought maybe I should try — carry on the family name." She took three lessons. It helped her master a stutter but she realized acting wasn't for her and returned to painting.

She chose Schickel, film critic for Time, to write the TV special because of the foreword he wrote for the book "Legends." "I thought it was the only thing I've ever read about my father that captured him."

Her pianist husband, Byron Janis, is battling arthritis in his hands and increasingly is turning from performing to lecturing about Chopin, working for the Global Forum on Human Survival and composing.

She asked him to write music for the special. One day, he played two themes for her. She says, "I cried at both of them. It was really like my father had walked into the room." He wove them into "Song for a Hero" which is part of the soundtrack.

Sometimes Mrs. Janis gives lectures about growing up in Hollywood. "I was in Cincinnati and I said that something which moved Papa tremendously during the war was going to the South Pacific to visit the troops. He was nervous and said, 'I don't sing or tell jokes. What can I give the guys?' The captain said, 'Coop, all they want you to do is say the Lou Gehrig speech.' He didn't know if he remembered it. He said it. Everybody was in silence and tears

"After my talk a woman came up to me. She said, 'I was a nurse and heard your father do it. You cannot imagine what that meant to those boys.'"

TV's 'Cross Of Fire' Earnest In Style But Writing Suffers

By Jay Sharbutt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — On Sunday night and again on Monday, NBC will air "Cross of Fire," a two-part tale of a particularly evil Ku Klux Klan leader in Indiana. It's earnest. Badly written, too.

Let us put it another way. If you heard a character in a work of serious TV drama say "there's lawlessness and loose morals right here in Indiana," would you stay tuned?

NBC's work of serious TV drama tells of the rise in the 1920s of a young, handsome, rich Indianapolis Klansman who denies he is bigoted, likewise the Klan. He insists that each only wants morality, Prohibition and patrotism.

A gifted recruiter, he swells Klan membership rolls with such talk. He also is, in his stiff way, crazed with love for a beautiful state education worker who only wants to help the children of black migrant workers learn to read.

With John Heard as the Klansman and Mel Harris as the educator, the film also is, in theory, a drama about how the Klan, masking hatred of blacks, Jews and Catholics, once became a strong political force in America.

Based on what NBC calls the true story of Klan leader and political boss D.C. Stephenson and occasionally using old newsreel clips of Klan parades and seemingly benign deeds, this could have been a good two-hour movie.

But that would have required a decision to either concentrate on the Klan's rise or on Stephenson — whom this film eventually shows as a sham, a drunk and a sadist, one who kidnaps the woman he professes to love and so viciously abuses her after the kidnapping that she takes poison.

Instead, NBC's epic, written by Robert Crais, tries on both fronts. The result is four long hours of cliches, with a plodding first part that turns vicious near its end, and a concluding chapter of courtroom melodrama that features Lloyd Bridges as the crafty old defense lawyer.

Complete with a crusading Indianapolis newspaper editor (George Dzundza) who helps an inexperienced young prosecutor (David Morse) bring Stephenson (Heard) to justice, this "Cross" is almost too much to bear.

Heard and Harris each are fine actors. But save for moments when Heard gets to erupt in drunken rages, their characters are so wooden they could be a termite paradise. One keeps wondering why they're so attracted to each other.

Harris' Madge Oberholtzer also seems naive beyond repair. True, when he tells her the Klan is going to crown him Grand Dragon and asks if she knows what that means, she playfully inquires: "You turn green and grow scales?"

But when he blabbers his love for her, all she can say is, "It's all so confusing, Steve."

Well, any woman would be confused by a swain who likes to wear a purple hood and robe, and start a Klan rally by welcoming the "Imperial Wizard, Grand Goblins, Exalted Cyclops ... and all citizens of the Invisible Empire."

This would be fine comedy were it not for the brutality he wreaks on her later on. But even those shocking moments are followed by passages that continue to exhibit author Crais' ear for memorable dialogue.

A good example, uttered in Monday's chapter by a young reporter after reports of violence against the Klan, is this: "Sounds to me like the seeds of a full-blown rebellion against the Klan."

Sounds to me like you can miss all this.

Soap Stars Join Abortion Activist

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of soap opera stars joined Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women, and some Brooklyn high school students at a news conference calling for the protection of abortion rights.

Margaret Reed, who plays Shannon McKechnie on "As the World Turns," was joined at a news conference by co-star Sherry Ramsey, Rena Sofer from "Loving," and Michelle Forbes, Patrick O'Connell, Gil Rogers and Vince Williams from "Guiding Light."

"We're a group of actors on daytime television who feel compelled to speak out in defense of our constitutional right to privacy and reproductive choice, which includes the right to choose whether or not to terminate a pregnancy," Reed said.

She said many in the group plan to attend a rally in Washington, D.C., on Nov. 12.

Reed said she did not fear a backlash from viewers because "we know from all the polls that the majority of Americans feels this way."

Mayor Plays Himself

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Art imitated life and the art of politics when Mayor Raymond Flynn made a cameo performance playing himself on "Cheers," the situation comedy set in a tavern in Boston's Beacon Hill section.

On a program that aired Thursday, Flynn, plaque in hand and a television news crew in tow, strode into the bar festooned with balloons and jammed with people celebrating the watering hole's 100th anniversary.

The crowd on the show includes a barbershop quartet that sings too much, a doctor going into labor and a 106-year-old man who pinches young women.

The mayor, who in real life instituted a pothole hot line, listens patiently as someone complains about potholes and promises to look into them. But when he discovers the postman on the show is the man who writes him weekly missives suggesting how to run the city, he has the postman arrested.

Israeli Theater Is Testing Freedom Of Censorship

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli theater is free of censors for the first time after parliament suspended the blue pencils for a two-year trial period.

Liberal lawmakers are now trying to end censorship of movies and ease military censorship of the media, but they are almost certain to be defeated in both efforts. Few plays were actually banned, but playwrights had constant battles with censors over scenes, lines and even words. Several complained this produced artistic hesitation and self-censorship.

The move to free plays of control was hailed on all sides as long overdue for a country that values its democratic tradition.

"In a democracy, there is nothing more loathesome than censorship," said Mordechai Vershuvski, a Citizens Rights Movement lawmaker who led a successful, nine-year effort against censorship.

Miriam Kainy, head of the 50-member Playwrights Association, said ending censorship would mature Israeli playwrights, who have held back and felt a reluctance to "go all the way" with their work and ideas.

"The existence of the censor is an example of our conservativeness, our wanting to have a father to tell us what to do," she said. "The fact that you don't have to send a text to a censor will mature us."

Yehoshua Justman, head of the 27-member Theater and Movie Censorship Board appointed by the Interior Ministry, which is controlled by an ultra-Orthodox religious party, said the panel had been very liberal in approving scripts and denied it had an anti-left bias.

In the past decade, he said, the board had banned outright only three or four Arab productions and one Israeli play, "Ephraim Returns to the Army."

"Ephraim Returns" is the story of a well-intentioned but morally weak West Bank commander who allows a group of right-wing Israelis to escape punishment for shooting an Arab demonstrator.

The board, which reviewed 50 to 60 scripts a year, ruled the play impuned the honor of the army and incited Israeli Arabs to violence by comparing Israeli rule in the occupied territories to that of the Nazi Germans in Europe. The Supreme Court overturned the decision in 1987, curtailing the power of the board and clearing the way for parliament's move in August to suspend censorship altogether.

Yitzhak Laor, author of "Ephraim Returns," said he believed the play was banned in part because of his own activism against the Lebanon war and his refusal to serve as a soldier in the West Bank.

"The Israeli establishment has traditionally feared the theater. It uses security considerations to cloak the political considerations," Laor said in an interview.

Despite the lifting of formal censorship, pressure could still be exerted through how theaters are financed. Israeli theaters rely on grants from city hall and the education ministry as well as managements that, in times of economic recession, are more interested in popular plays.

Tom Levy, a director and head of Tel Aviv University's theater department, said the suspension of theater censorship was easy for parliament because plays were increasingly non-political.

"The Israeli public doesn't want to hear about the Palestinian issue," he said, adding the recent success of imported productions such as "Les Miserables" and "Cabaret" was proof of theater being used as "an emotional sleeping pill."

In movies, Justman indicated the board, which reviews about 250 films a year, would not slacken its censorship of extreme violence and sex.

Tom And Dick Get Their Star

LOS ANGELES — Hollywood star No. 1,902 went to Tom and Dick Smothers, and a sandwich was created in their name at a delicatessen on Hollywood Boulevard.

More than 300 family, friends and fans cheered the famous siblings as they unveiled the star Thursday in front of the Hollywood Deli, which dedicated a sandwich in their honor called "The Smothers Brothers Better Half Sandwich."

Burns Will Star Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — George Burns is 93, but not too old to play God for a fourth time.

He hopes to begin filming "Oh, God! Book IV" as soon as he finds a script he likes, but meanwhile he's been promoting a new show-biz memoir, "All My Best Friends," and a new comedy video, "George Burns: His Wit and Wisdom."

Daily chores are made more difficult by arthritis, astigmatism and hearing loss, and he had a bypass operation at age 79, but Burns says he is looking toward the future.

He has so many projects ahead of him that he "can't afford to die."

One of them is a two-week appearance at the London Palladium in January 1996, when the comedian will celebrate his 100th birthday.

"I don't think I'm going to die for a long time because I'm too busy," Burns told USA Weekend in its Nov. 3-5 issue.

TNT To Air Cooper Special On Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — "His name was Gary Cooper. In a time now fast receding, he was the greatest of all movie stars."

That's how "Gary Cooper: American Life, American Legend," begins, as written by Richard Schickel and narrated by Clint Eastwood. The one-hour TNT special's first showing is Sunday at 8 p.m. EST.

The idea for the special was hers. She wanted, through film clips and home movies, to show her late father as a man and an actor to viewers born since his death at 60 in 1961. "There was diversity in roles he was able to portray. It wasn't just the stereotyped Westerner."

And she wanted to show his values. "He liked to play roles that pointed up a sense of valor and quality in human behavior. Playing Sergeant York and Lou Gehrig gave him his pleasure in life. He liked the ones that pointed up the best that we can be rather than the lowest that we can fall to."

Mrs. Janis adds, "Heroes are not uncomplicated. They're not goody goody. Human conflict and struggle goes on."

Her father, she said, "hated stupid dialogue and unreal situations."

Cooper was famous in movies for brevity of speech. Comics used to get laughs indicating that all he said was "Yup."

In his private life, his daughter says, "He wasn't a lecturer or a pontificator. But he chatted about ordinary things. He had a wry sense of humor."

Her father's fame, she says, did not cause her to have a troubled childhood, Mrs. Janis says. "All the trappings, the phony part that can come into that Hollywood way of life, didn't for them (her parents) and therefore I had a very solid kind of base."

Cooper left his family for five or six years after he met actress Patricia Neal, which is mentioned in the special. "Facts are the facts," Mrs. Janis says. "People live their lives and things happen and they go through difficult periods."

When doctors found that Cooper had lung, colon and bone cancer, his daughter, who had never wanted to act, recalls, "I thought maybe I should try — carry on the family name." She took three lessons. It helped her master a stutter but she realized acting wasn't for her and returned to painting.

She chose Schickel, film critic for Time, to write the TV special because of the foreword he wrote for the book "Legends." "I thought it was the only thing I've ever read about my father that captured him."

Her pianist husband, Byron Janis, is battling arthritis in his hands and increasingly is turning from performing to lecturing about Chopin, working for the Global Forum on Human Survival and composing.

She asked him to write music for the special. One day, he played two themes for her. She says, "I cried at both of them. It was really like my father had walked into the room." He wove them into "Song for a Hero" which is part of the soundtrack.

Sometimes Mrs. Janis gives lectures about growing up in Hollywood. "I was in Cincinnati and I said that something which moved Papa tremendously during the war was going to the South Pacific to visit the troops. He was nervous and said, 'I don't sing or tell jokes. What can I give the guys?' The captain said, 'Coop, all they want you to do is say the Lou Gehrig speech.' He didn't know if he remembered it. He said it. Everybody was in silence and tears

"After my talk a woman came up to me. She said, 'I was a nurse and heard your father do it. You cannot imagine what that meant to those boys.'"

TV's 'Cross Of Fire' Earnest In Style But Writing Suffers

By Jay Sharbutt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — On Sunday night and again on Monday, NBC will air "Cross of Fire," a two-part tale of a particularly evil Ku Klux Klan leader in Indiana. It's earnest. Badly written, too.

Let us put it another way. If you heard a character in a work of serious TV drama say "there's lawlessness and loose morals right here in Indiana," would you stay tuned?

NBC's work of serious TV drama tells of the rise in the 1920s of a young, handsome, rich Indianapolis Klansman who denies he is bigoted, likewise the Klan. He insists that each only wants morality, Prohibition and patrotism.

A gifted recruiter, he swells Klan membership rolls with such talk. He also is, in his stiff way, crazed with love for a beautiful state education worker who only wants to help the children of black migrant workers learn to read.

With John Heard as the Klansman and Mel Harris as the educator, the film also is, in theory, a drama about how the Klan, masking hatred of blacks, Jews and Catholics, once became a strong political force in America.

Based on what NBC calls the true story of Klan leader and political boss D.C. Stephenson and occasionally using old newsreel clips of Klan parades and seemingly benign deeds, this could have been a good two-hour movie.

But that would have required a decision to either concentrate on the Klan's rise or on Stephenson — whom this film eventually shows as a sham, a drunk and a sadist, one who kidnaps the woman he professes to love and so viciously abuses her after the kidnapping that she takes poison.

Instead, NBC's epic, written by Robert Crais, tries on both fronts. The result is four long hours of cliches, with a plodding first part that turns vicious near its end, and a concluding chapter of courtroom melodrama that features Lloyd Bridges as the crafty old defense lawyer.

Complete with a crusading Indianapolis newspaper editor (George Dzundza) who helps an inexperienced young prosecutor (David Morse) bring Stephenson (Heard) to justice, this "Cross" is almost too much to bear.

Heard and Harris each are fine actors. But save for moments when Heard gets to erupt in drunken rages, their characters are so wooden they could be a termite paradise. One keeps wondering why they're so attracted to each other.

Harris' Madge Oberholtzer also seems naive beyond repair. True, when he tells her the Klan is going to crown him Grand Dragon and asks if she knows what that means, she playfully inquires: "You turn green and grow scales?"

But when he blabbers his love for her, all she can say is, "It's all so confusing, Steve."

Well, any woman would be confused by a swain who likes to wear a purple hood and robe, and start a Klan rally by welcoming the "Imperial Wizard, Grand Goblins, Exalted Cyclops ... and all citizens of the Invisible Empire."

This would be fine comedy were it not for the brutality he wreaks on her later on. But even those shocking moments are followed by passages that continue to exhibit author Crais' ear for memorable dialogue.

A good example, uttered in Monday's chapter by a young reporter after reports of violence against the Klan, is this: "Sounds to me like the seeds of a full-blown rebellion against the Klan."

Sounds to me like you can miss all this.

Mayor Plays Himself

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Art imitated life and the art of politics when Mayor Raymond Flynn made a cameo performance playing himself on "Cheers," the situation comedy set in a tavern in Boston's Beacon Hill section.

On a program that aired Thursday, Flynn, plaque in hand and a television news crew in tow, strode into the bar festooned with balloons and jammed with people celebrating the watering hole's 100th anniversary.

The crowd on the show includes a barbershop quartet that sings too much, a doctor going into labor and a 106-year-old man who pinches young women.

The mayor, who in real life instituted a pothole hot line, listens patiently as someone complains about potholes and promises to look into them. But when he discovers the postman on the show is the man who writes him weekly missives suggesting how to run the city, he has the postman arrested.

Soap Stars Join Abortion Activist

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of soap opera stars joined Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women, and some Brooklyn high school students at a news conference calling for the protection of abortion rights.

Margaret Reed, who plays Shannon McKechnie on "As the World Turns," was joined at a news conference by co-star Sherry Ramsey, Rena Sofer from "Loving," and Michelle Forbes, Patrick O'Connell, Gil Rogers and Vince Williams from "Guiding Light."

"We're a group of actors on daytime television who feel compelled to speak out in defense of our constitutional right to privacy and reproductive choice, which includes the right to choose whether or not to terminate a pregnancy," Reed said.

She said many in the group plan to attend a rally in Washington, D.C., on Nov. 12.

Reed said she did not fear a backlash from viewers because "we know from all the polls that the majority of Americans feels this way."

Israeli Theater Is Testing Freedom Of Censorship

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli theater is free of censors for the first time after parliament suspended the blue pencils for a two-year trial period.

Liberal lawmakers are now trying to end censorship of movies and ease military censorship of the media, but they are almost certain to be defeated in both efforts. Few plays were actually banned, but playwrights had constant battles with censors over scenes, lines and even words. Several complained this produced artistic hesitation and self-censorship.

The move to free plays of control was hailed on all sides as long overdue for a country that values its democratic tradition.

"In a democracy, there is nothing more loathesome than censorship," said Mordechai Vershuvski, a Citizens Rights Movement lawmaker who led a successful, nine-year effort against censorship.

Miriam Kainy, head of the 50-member Playwrights Association, said ending censorship would mature Israeli playwrights, who have held back and felt a reluctance to "go all the way" with their work and ideas.

"The existence of the censor is an example of our conservativeness, our wanting to have a father to tell us what to do," she said. "The fact that you don't have to send a text to a censor will mature us."

Yehoshua Justman, head of the 27-member Theater and Movie Censorship Board appointed by the Interior Ministry, which is controlled by an ultra-Orthodox religious party, said the panel had been very liberal in approving scripts and denied it had an anti-left bias.

In the past decade, he said, the board had banned outright only three or four Arab productions and one Israeli play, "Ephraim Returns to the Army."

"Ephraim Returns" is the story of a well-intentioned but morally weak West Bank commander who allows a group of right-wing Israelis to escape punishment for shooting an Arab demonstrator.

The board, which reviewed 50 to 60 scripts a year, ruled the play impuned the honor of the army and incited Israeli Arabs to violence by comparing Israeli rule in the occupied territories to that of the Nazi Germans in Europe. The Supreme Court overturned the decision in 1987, curtailing the power of the board and clearing the way for parliament's move in August to suspend censorship altogether.

Yitzhak Laor, author of "Ephraim Returns," said he believed the play was banned in part because of his own activism against the Lebanon war and his refusal to serve as a soldier in the West Bank.

"The Israeli establishment has traditionally feared the theater. It uses security considerations to cloak the political considerations," Laor said in an interview.

Despite the lifting of formal censorship, pressure could still be exerted through how theaters are financed. Israeli theaters rely on grants from city hall and the education ministry as well as managements that, in times of economic recession, are more interested in popular plays.

Tom Levy, a director and head of Tel Aviv University's theater department, said the suspension of theater censorship was easy for parliament because plays were increasingly non-political.

"The Israeli public doesn't want to hear about the Palestinian issue," he said, adding the recent success of imported productions such as "Les Miserables" and "Cabaret" was proof of theater being used as "an emotional sleeping pill."

In movies, Justman indicated the board, which reviews about 250 films a year, would not slacken its censorship of extreme violence and sex.

Note South's game try of three hearts. It is the suit in which he needs help, and has the added advantage that it might discourage the lead of that suit. North's acceptance of the game try is clear cut.

After a heart lead it is obvious that, as the cards lie, declarer will have to lose three heart tricks and a trump. At the table, however, West made the normal lead of the queen of clubs. Even so, it still seemed that declarer would have to surrender four tricks. But then declarer began to work his wonders.

South won the ace of clubs and immediately ruffed a club. Next, the ace and king of trumps were cashed to reveal a trump loser but, since it was West who held the winning trump, declarer was in control. After cashing the ace and king of diamonds, he continued with a low diamond. If West ruffed with the master trump, one of dummy's heart losers would go and a heart would eventually be ruffed on the board, so West discarded a club and the table ruffed.

Declarer returned to hand with a club ruff and led his remaining diamond, and West was fixed. If that defender parted with his last club, he would set up a club in dummy, and ruffing would still allow one of the board's hearts to be discarded. West was forced to pitch a heart, and declarer was able to take two more tricks by ruffing the diamond in dummy and the club in hand for a total of ten tricks.

China Questions Students About Protest Activities

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Authorities investigating the crushed pro-democracy movement have begun questioning Beijing University students on campus about their activities at the time of the protests, university sources said today.

In Hong Kong, an independent newspaper reported that Chinese authorities have complied a new wanted list of dissidents. It reportedly includes Chai Ling, a key figure in the protests, as well as other students and intellectuals.

At Beijing University, students were told at several officially sponsored rallies this week that they should cooperate with investigators who would come to question them, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

An official of the university's Foreign Affairs Office today denied that any such rallies had taken place or that investigators had come onto campus.

Beijing University students were at the forefront of the mass protests that were crushed when the Chinese army shot through crowds of unarmed demonstrators in the capital, leaving hundreds and possibly thousands dead.

The crackdown on the protest movement has increased tension on campus this year. Some upperclassmen did not return after summer break, apparently either because they were arrested or feared they would be.

There also are no freshmen on campus this year. The entering class was slashed from 2,100 to 800, then shipped off for a year of army training and political indoctrination at a military academy southwest of Beijing.

Classes at the university, originally scheduled to begin Aug. 29, were delayed until Oct. 14 to avoid unrest on Oct. 1, or National Day, which marks the 40th anniversary of Communist China, students said.

Hao Bin, the Communist Party vice secretary at the university, summoned students in groups to hourlong rallies this week at the campus' 2,000-seat auditorium, the university sources said.

He told them to cooperate with investigators and urged them to confess if they had done any significant "bad things," said one university source.

Hao, a hard-liner believed to have served as a political officer with the People's Liberation Army, was quoted as telling students there were several types of people who must turn themselves in.

They included leaders of student organizations involved in the protests and those who attacked soldiers, spread rumors to foreigners or divulged secrets.

American Nun Missing In Guatemala

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GUATEMALA CITY — An American nun who disappeared from a retreat house after receiving a series of threatening letters was probably kidnapped, the city's Roman Catholic archbishop said.

Archbishop Prospero Penados del Barrio said in an interview late Thursday that Sister Diana Ortiz, 31, of the Ursuline order had gone into the garden of the Belene Sisters Retreat House, a former convent in the town of Antigua, on Thursday and "she did not return at lunch time."

The archbishop said the nun probably had been watched and then was kidnapped from the courtyard without anyone noticing. She had been attending classes at the house, he said.

Since mid-July, Guatemala has been suffering from a resurgence of the assassinations, disappearances and other violence that claimed tens of thousands of lives in the late 1970s and early 1980s. A leading Christian Democratic politician, a prominent banker and students have been among its victims.

Ortiz had been threatened several times while teaching kindergarten for more than a year in San Miguel Acatan, in Huehuetenango province, 225 miles northwest of Guatemala City, the archbishop said.

A native of Grants, N.M., she had taught school in Owensboro and Hawesville, Ky., before going to Guatemala two years ago.

National police in Antigua, 28 miles west of Guatemala City, would not comment on the case. The national police office in Guatemala City said it had no information.

In Louisville, Ky., The Courier-Journal quoted Sister Mary Elizabeth Dallard, who worked with Ortiz, as saying Ortiz had received at least seven letters since January warning her to leave the country.

Industry Warns Degradable Plastics Have Limitations

By John Donnelly
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Some of the nation's largest plastics companies who rushed to get degradable products onto the market are warning the public that the items can hurt more valuable recycling efforts and won't cut down on trash in dumps.

Industry officials say they're concerned that widespread disillusionment over such degradable products as trash bags and diapers will lead to a backlash of more legislated bans against non-recyclable plastics.

Plastic producers, including Dow Chemical Co. and Mobil Corp., are joining environmental groups to produce a statement dispelling notions that degradable products will extend the life of landfills.

Degradable plastics have "little significant role" in helping solve the nation's garbage-disposal problems and "could significantly deter" recycling efforts, according to a draft statement being circulated today to industry, environmental and government officials in the alliance.

More than two dozen officials met last summer to address the issue. Acceptance of the draft statement is a formality, according to Karl Kamena, director of government affairs for the Midland, Mich.-based Dow Plastics. Dow makes degradable plastic six-pack rings.

Degradable plastics, which were introduced in the United States only about two years ago, have become hot selling garbage bags. No figures are available, but the country's two biggest selling brands — Hefty and Glad bags — exclusively use the ingredients to make the bag quickly disintegrate.

Degradable products break down to their basic components when exposed to air and sunlight. But entombed in oxygen-starved landfills, they don't disintegrate, industry officials say. Other plastic degradables include grocery bags and sheets used on farms to hold down weeds.

The draft statement, obtained by The Associated Press, comes at a time when the plastics industry faces increased pressure from municipalities to develop recycling markets for their product.

Plastics industry officials say more than 350 legislative initiatives have been introduced at the federal, state and local levels to curb the use of non-recyclable plastic products.

"If the public develops false expectations for degradable plastics — that it will magically solve the solid waste problem — we are fearful of an overreaction against the industry," Kamena said Thursday.

Kamena and other industry officials said degradable plastics do have beneficial uses such as in compost bags and six-pack rings, which lessen chances of entanglement for wildlife.

But the degradable materials "contaminate" recyclable plastics, producing a less sturdy mix, the report said. Environmentalists say some recycling centers now turn away degradable plastics and could prove to be a disincentive for people to recycle plastics and other items.

Allen Gray, a Mobil spokesman, said his company makes degradable Hefty trash bags only because consumers demanded them.

"You're in a competitive situation right now. Consumers have indicated a preference for the degradable bags," he said.

He said the trash bags are "no help as far as solving the nation's solid waste problem."

"We have a very environmentally friendly product," said Jerry L. Petak, business development manager for Archer-Daniels-Midland Corp., which produces an additive to plastic — corn starch — that speeds the breakdown. "There are certainly applications for it."

"When you see degradable bags sold in stores as being helpful to the environment, that's all a hoax," said Darlene Snow, an official at the National Solid Wastes Management Association in Washington.

Hefty trash bags show an eagle soaring over a pine tree with a headline "Degradable." On the back, the text says the bags show "a step in our commitment to a better environment." Glad trash bags' headlines say "Degradable" and "Safe for the Environment." On the back, though, the text points out that the material will be "inert" once buried in a dump.

"It's kind of hard to tell the story in a 30-second TV spot," Petak said.

The Environmental Protection Agency has recently begun studies on how the plastic residue will affect wildlife, ground water and marine life.

University College* . . . A PART OF YOUR LIFE!

How To Get Started With The University College

The University College functions to serve the needs of the non-traditional or adult student. Recognizing that adults have job responsibilities, family obligations, or may reside some distance from the campus, the University College attempts to assist adult students in overcoming these barriers. At the University College, we are here to assist students in planning and fulfilling their educational goals. We take pride in the informal, interpersonal, "people-centered" atmosphere we convey. We strive to provide educational opportunities for the non-traditional student which will be pleasant and rewarding.

Programs

The University College offers flexible scheduling of DAY and/or EVENING courses. Schedules may normally be arranged to accommodate job and family responsibilities and commuting distances from campus. Evening credit classes are an integral part of the University's academic program and are taken by full-time day students as well as University College students. It is possible to complete degrees in a variety of programs by attending the University as an evening student.

The following degrees may be completed through evening courses:

- Anthropology
- Business Education/ Administrative Services
- Computer Science
- Driver and Traffic Safety
- Economics
- English
- Geography
- History
- Industrial Technology
- Psychology
- Sociology

Minors in several areas, including Business Administration, are available in the evenings. In addition, the General Education requirements for other baccalaureate degrees can usually be completed through the University College. Certificate programs in Business and Technical Communication and Alcoholism Counseling are also available. University College students may enroll (if their schedules permit) for day degree programs.

Services

The University College provides many services to the non-traditional student. The extension of operating hours during registration periods provides an opportunity for adults to register, pay fees, purchase books and supplies and secure other services. On-line registration permits individuals to register quickly, either by phone or in person. Information on admissions and registration procedures, degree programs and requirements can be obtained from the Office of The Coordinator, University College (757-6488). Materials on housing, financial aid, child care, health service, etc., may also be obtained from this office. Guidance is available to assist applicants in determining their needs and interest and to help plan the course of study that should be followed.

Counseling is an important aspect of successful entry or re-entry into the University. Students are encouraged to take advantage of the counseling services available through the University College. Counseling is available during normal working hours, 8:00 AM to 5:00 PM, Monday through Friday. As a convenience to University College students, evening counseling sessions will be available on November 21, December 5 and 11 from 6:00 PM to 9:00 PM. Appointments are necessary for these sessions and may be scheduled by calling 757-6488. Counseling at times other than those listed above is also available by contacting the University College office.

Admission and Registration Procedures

Given the diverse educational background of the non-traditional student, the University College has an admissions policy based upon performance and maturity rather than upon standardized tests scores or class rank. Consideration is given to those whose high school class graduated three or more years ago. In addition, the non-traditional student should:

1. have acquired a high school diploma or GED.
2. have a "C" average and be eligible to return to the last college or university where they were enrolled (if applicable). Exceptions to the "C" average may be made for individuals who have not attended any college or university in the past three years or by the University Admissions Committee. In all cases, students must be eligible to return to the previous college or university where last enrolled.
3. complete an application, statement of residence, pay a $15.00 application fee, and submit official copies of high school and college transcripts.

Former East Carolina University students who desire to re-enter the University as a part-time day or evening student may apply for readmission through the University College.

Registration for the Spring Semester will be conducted on January 4 from 7:00 AM to 5:30 PM on the second floor of Erwin Hall. Late registration will be conducted on January 5, 8 and 9 from 8:00 AM to 4:00 PM. Counselors will be available to assist students with course selections and the on-line registration process.

University College students may enroll in any course listed in this schedule provided they have satisfied the required prerequisites as stated in the 1988/90 East Carolina University Undergraduate Catalogue. The University College can assist students with questions concerning course selections, degree requirements, and University requirements and regulations. With this opportunity comes a responsibility: University College students are required to adhere to academic standards, policies, procedures, details and regulations which apply to all students of the University.

Vehicle Registration

All students desiring to utilize campus parking facilities, including metered spaces, must register their vehicle with the Traffic Office. How to "Earn a Future While You Earn a Degree"

The Cooperative Education Program at ECU assists students in obtaining career-exploratory or career-related paid jobs while they are getting an education. Co-op services are available to both undergraduate and graduate students in most academic fields. Among the benefits available to students are

- earnings to help defray University expenses
- academic credit, if appropriate
- practical application of classroom knowledge and skills
- opportunities for future employment

For more information about how non-traditional or adult students may receive the benefits of Co-op, contact Mary Cauley, the liaison for University College students in the Office of Cooperative Education, 2028 General Classroom Building (757-6979). Let us help you put your education to work. Co-op is the best kind of "HIRE" education.

Co-op at ECU is working--make it "a Part of Your Life" . . .
