Tourism

ASHEVILLE (AP) — October visitors to Western North Carolina packed hotels to the rafters and mountains to the ridge lines, resulting in a solid fall tourist season for the region.

"The color seemed to stay for a long time," said Steve Miller, chairman of the Buncombe County Tourism Development Authority and an executive with the Biltmore Estate.

This past month was the highest attendance for an October since the Biltmore Estate opened to the public in 1930, Miller said. More than 90,000 people visited George Vanderbilt's former home, up 5 percent from last October.

Outdoor attractions also registered high numbers of visitors.

October visits on the 252-mile North Carolina section of the Blue Ridge Parkway totaled 1,516,615, up 12.3 percent from the same month last year.

Train Victim

RALEIGH (AP) — A Wake County man was killed early Sunday morning when an Amtrak passenger train struck him as he lay on the tracks near Cary, police say.

Police say they suspect suicide in the death of Donald M. Larison, 36.

K.E. Duckworth, an investigator with the Wake Sheriff's Department, said the two-engine, seven-car train was traveling north from Miami to New York at 70 mph when it went around a curve and struck the man about 9:50 a.m.

J.F. Anderson, a train master with Amtrak, said the driver had seen the man lying on the track with his head in the east rail. "He blew his horn, but the man did not move," he said.

Five People Die In Iredell Wreck

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ten people died in wrecks on state roads over the weekend, including five who were killed in a three-car collision in Iredell County, state troopers said.

The accident occurred about 9:20 p.m. Saturday when a vehicle traveling south on N.C. 136 collided with an oncoming vehicle. The first vehicle split in half and struck a third car.

Killed were Mooresville residents Terry Alan Coburn, 25, Sherry Waugh Cashion, 41, Robert Cashion, 46, Mary Morrow Sherrill, 52, and Bobby Lee Shrewsbury, 26, of Mount Mourne, the Highway Patrol reported.

Kevin A. Edmund, 9, of Apex, died Sunday afternoon when the car in which was a passenger collided with another vehicle on U.S. 74, about 7

Murder Charge

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A 35-year-old Duplin County man was charged with murder in the stabbing death of a 41-year-old Magnolia woman.

David Carr, 35, of Magnolia, was charged Saturday night with killing Annie Ruth Smith, 41, said Duplin County Sheriff George Garner.

Ms. Smith was stabbed twice in the chest about 6 p.m. Saturday at her apartment, Garner said. She was pronounced dead at the scene.

Carr was being held without bond in the Duplin County Jail.

"They had been together today and evidently they knew each other pretty well," Garner said. "I think they had an argument. He was shouting at her."

Phone Calls

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Since March, City of Charlotte offices have been billed with hundreds of unauthorized long-distance calls worth about $2,700, officials say.

The calls, billed to at least 14 of Charlotte city government's 1,180 phone numbers, have been made to Chicago, New York City and the Washington area. Several were to Fayetteville from Lumberton and vice versa. Others have been to television offices, including NBC newsrooms in Washington and New York.

Authorities suspect one person made most, if not all, of the calls and the city has not had to pay for them, said Mike Long, who's in charge of the city's telephone system.

Debut

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Catawba skydiver "Fast Eddie" Turner debuted Sunday in a beer commercial about his midair rescue of an unconscious friend.

Turner, who got a Carnegie Hero Award in September for the feat, plays himself in a Miller High Life television ad. He tells how in October 1988 he chased, caught and pulled the rip cord of a tumbling and unconscious skydiver just seconds before both would have hit the ground near Clewiston, Fla.

N.C. Baptists To Decide Convention's Stance At Meeting Opening Tonight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — Participants at the N.C. Baptist State Convention have a bumper crop of candidates for top offices this year, ranging from a fiery "ultraconservative" evangelist to a former seminary president.

Voters will determine whether N.C. moderates continue to buck the national trend toward more conservative policies and politics in the troubled Southern Baptist Convention.

"This is a pivotal election," said the Rev. Gene Watterson of Shelby, the moderate candidate for convention president.

"On the national level, control is complete by the right-wing contingent. Further defeat or surrender on the state level will distance us more and more from our true Baptist roots."

New leaders are expected to emerge from the annual meeting of the 1.1 million member convention, which is scheduled to open in Greensboro tonight. More than 6,000 people are expected to cast ballots Tuesday.

Fundamentalists have controlled the leadership of the 14.8 million-member Southern Baptist Convention for 10 years. Their belief that the Bible is literally true, coupled with their opposition to women's ordination, has led to sweeping changes in seminaries and mission agencies.

Moderates have countered with efforts to ensure church-state separation and preserve the autonomy of local churches in decisions about who can be ordained and called to ministry.

This year's abundance of candidates — at least 10 for the top three N.C. offices — may show that entrenched party lines are softening a bit.

"We are seeing a breaking-down of monolithic support for candidates," said convention spokesman Bill Boatwright. "We've got a lot more candidates than in recent years, and I think it's probably healthy to have more shades along the spectrum represented."

The moderate group called N.C. Friends of Missions is endorsing Watterson for president. The 59-year-old pastor, who is completing his second year as the convention's first vice president, will face at least two opponents.

The Rev. Eugene Ridley, pastor of the 1,500-member Long Leaf Baptist Church in Wilmington, is a self-described "ultraconservative." He has the backing of a longtime fundamentalist leader, the Rev. Robert Tenery of Morganton, and a group called Eastern Carolina Conservatives.

"I'm the underdog. There's no doubt about that," said Ridley, 42, a former traveling evangelist who heads the N.C. Baptist Pastors Conference. "I feel that we'll have a reasonable chance."

The race got more complicated about 10 days ago when the Rev. Billy Cline of Merrimon Avenue Baptist Church in Asheville jumped into the fray. He will be nominated by state Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus, a member of the one-year-old conservative group called Concerned Carolina Baptists.

"The positions Gene Ridley and I hold are essentially the same," said Cline, 61. "But he would go about them much differently. I would say, 'Let's negotiate a little, let's compromise a little.'"

The new president will succeed the Rev. Leon Smith of Goldsboro, a moderate who has served two terms and is ineligible for a third.

Despite its lesser significance, the campaign for first vice president has provoked the most lively discussion in recent weeks.

Lillington businessman George McCotter, former Friends of Missions chairman, left the organization and struck out on his own in September — advocating a greater role for lay people in convention leadership. His running mate for second vice president is Bea McRae of Lumberton, former president of the N.C. Women's Missionary Union.

Charlotte laymen Hobart Smith, a contractor, and Allen Bailey, a lawyer, are among those who have endorsed the McCotter slate.

But McCotter's former colleagues in Friends of Missions are supporting two other high-profile candidates: the Rev. Randall Lolley of Raleigh, former president of Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, and Bruce Whitaker, who just retired after 32 years as president of Chowan College.

Lolley's outspoken opposition to the fundamentalist takeover at Southeastern Seminary and his national visibility will make the race an interesting one.

Others expected to be nominated for first vice president are the Rev. James Johnson of West Asheville Baptist Church and the Rev. Steve Hensley of First Baptist Church in Icard.

On the tentative list for second vice president are Joe Lennon of Wake Forest, president of the Christian Action League, and the Rev. Al Wright of First Baptist Church in Adamsville.

Convention spokesman Boatwright doesn't expect the three-day Greensboro meeting to break the 1987 attendance record of 6,500. But the unusually large field of candidates may complicate the voting.

"It takes a majority to win, so we will more than likely need runoffs," Boatwright said. "That's when you'll see the major factions unite behind one candidate."

Voters also will decide on a constitutional change that would allow Wingate College, which receives about $1 million a year from the convention, to change its name to Cannon-Wingate University. The new name would honor the late Charles Cannon, a Presbyterian textile magnate.

Law Firm Donates $675,000 To Arts Center

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Members of a Charlotte law firm that donated $675,000 to the North Carolina Performing Arts Center say the money isn't what matters — it's what that gift is going to bring the state.

"The N.C. Performing Arts Center will offer tremendous opportunities to people all across North Carolina and beyond," said John Fennebresque, chairman of Moore & Van Allen's executive committee. "The men and women of our firm are pleased to participate in this effort."

The $38 million arts facility, scheduled to be completed in 1992, will be a key feature in the $300 million, 60-story NCNB Corporate Center at the corner of Trade and Tryon streets in downtown Charlotte.

The performing arts center, which will be designed by renowned architect Cesar Pelli, will house 2,100-seat and 450-seat theaters.

For its contribution, the lobby of the smaller theater will be named for Moore & Van Allen, which also has offices in Raleigh, Durham and the Research Triangle Park.

On Nov. 1, a $25 million fundraising campaign to build the arts center was launched. That total is nearly five times larger than the city's previous largest cultural fund drive — $5.1 million for an expansion program at Discovery Place.

At the kickoff celebration for the fund drive, campaign chairman Bill Lee said more than $13 million of the $25 million total had already been raised. That included a $2 million gift from NCNB, which also has donated $1.5 million in land on which the center will be built.

Eddie Burklin, an attorney with the law firm of Moore & Van Allen, agrees that a $675,000 pledge to the North Carolina Performing Arts Center is no small potatoes.

"To tell you the truth, they asked us for less than we gave them," he said. "We took a look at it and decided if we are going to do it we wanted it to be truly outstanding."

Several other law firms also contributed generously to the campaign. Kennedy Covington Lobbell & Hickman gave $350,000; Robinson Bradshaw & Hinson gave $275,000; and Smith Helms Mulliss & Moore $300,000.

"We're a statewide firm and we look at this as a statewide endeavor," Burklin said. "I came from Nashville where they have the Tennessee Performing Arts Center. It's a similar setup and it has really done a lot for that community."

Catholic Agency Helps All Faiths

By J.R. Williams
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Catholic Ministries Service will help anyone who has a problem, but most people don't understand what the agency's mission is or who it is suppose to serve, said a social worker at the ministry service.

"Just because we have the name Catholic Ministries doesn't mean you have to be Catholic to use our services," said social worker Gregg Allinson, who is not a Catholic.

"In North Carolina, the Catholic population is 3 percent so most people who seek our services are obviously non-Catholic," Allinson said. "They're Protestant or (from) other denominations."

The non-profit agency, located in three compact offices in the United Way Building at 114 E. Third St., is commissioned by the Catholic Social Ministries' Raleigh diocese. The diocese, which oversees seven small deaneries in eastern North Carolina, is a subordinate of Catholic Charities U.S.A., which is funded by the Catholic church.

Transferred from Tarboro in August 1988, the Greenville deanery regional office focuses on social services, peace and justice issues, family life, migrants and senior adult programs.

"Some of the counties and cities that are in our deanery have unique problems but most of them have the same problems as other deaneries," Allinson said.

The Tar River deanery includes Pitt, Greene, Wayne, Johnston, Wilson, Nash, Edgecombe, Halifax and Northhampton counties.

He said poverty, substance abuse and the dropout rate for high schoolers are the biggest problems for the local deanery.

According to the National Coalition for the Homeless, 500,000 children are now homeless across the nation. Also, almost 12 million U.S. workers cannot find full-time jobs, according to the U.S. Department of Labor.

"People get the impression that we hand out money," Allinson said. "We don't have any money to give out first of all, but we can use other means to help people. We offer services and work with other agencies."

The service works with the local immigration and social services offices, the Pitt County Mental Health Center and church and civic organizations.

Allinson said the agency's mission is to inform the community of existing social needs and help the community respond to those needs.

"All of eastern North Carolina is impoverished," he said. "There are a lot of problems related to poverty: illiteracy, crime and health issues."

Allinson said North Carolina is one of the poorest states in the nation, and he said Pitt County is one of the most impoverished counties in North Carolina.

Although most of the services offered at the ministry are free, there are some that require a fee, depending on personal income.

A person seeking counseling who has a family of four and an annual income of $10,600 pays $2 per visit, while a person with a $30,000 annual income and the same family size pays $33.

"Some people prefer to deal with us because we are small," Allinson said. "We get a lot of people who were referred to us by other places."

Allinson said he thinks the agency aides four or five people for every person who comes to the office or calls. He said the agency receives 30 to 50 clients a week.

The agency plans to start an education and day-care center in Pitt County early next year and a family counseling service in the spring.

"We're defined in a community context," Allinson said. "We don't want to duplicate what others are doing. It's a real community approach."

House Panel Asked To Free More Funds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINGATE, N.C. — Members of the U.S. House Agriculture Committee were urged today to free more federal dollars for North Carolina farmers hurt by Tropical Storm Hugo.

"We can't prevent a natural disaster like this, but we must be ready for them," said N.C. Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham, one of about 20 witnesses scheduled to testify at the hearing at Wingate College.

"The 8th Congressional District of North Carolina suffered nearly $100 million of the $175 million in total agricultural damage done by Hurricane Hugo. Never before has a storm so powerful struck with such fury and done so much farm damage in the heartland of North Carolina," Graham said.

Three members of the committee came to Union County today to hear farmers' views for the 1990 farm bill that will replace a 1985 law.

Musicians Flock To Studio Expert To Enhance Songs

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In the home of producer Arthur Baker, near Woodstock, N.Y., are crates containing more than 10,000 records. In midtown Manhattan, the location of Baker's Shakedown Studio, nearly as many musicians have passed through.

Bruce Springsteen, Bob Dylan, Miles Davis and Paul McCartney are but a few of the artists with whom Baker has worked, remixing songs or producing albums.

Rappers, rockers, crooners and funksters have all gotten a boost from Baker's studio expertise and pounding drum sound that's best described by the Hall and Oates album he produced, "Big Bam Boom."

Disappearing behind the control board doesn't appeal to Baker. Emotional, hard-headed and opinionated, he believes in the producer as collaborator, even star.

"The producers who turned me on were (Kenny) Gamble and (Leon) Huff, Thom Bell and all those Philadelphia guys," Baker said in a recent interview at Shakedown.

"Norman Whitfield of Motown was a big influence. All those producers made producer-oriented music. The producers would write the songs, arrange them and do the whole thing. That's what I aspire to be."

Baker has no catch phrase like Phil Spector's "Wall of Sound" or Motown's "Sound of Young America." If anything, the producer sees walls as something to be broken down, not constructed. That's why he calls his new record "Merge."

"My album is representative of the music I like," Baker said. "If you come out to my house and see my records, you know my influences. This album is the merging of lots of different music."

"What I focused on was writing really good songs and making an album that I found listenable and enjoyable. The next album I'd like to combine some different elements and make new music."

Shirley Lewis, Tiny Valentine and John Warren are featured singers. Al Green's soaring vocals carry the album's first single, "The Message Is Love," but the song took months to record.

"We first did a reading and then he sang it through and it was really good," Baker said. "He said, 'OK, Al Green ain't going to sing it much better than that ...' But he didn't get the melody, he rewrote it."

"He goes back and sings the melody but it's horrible. I ask him, 'Do you think we can get the other Al Green?' He sang it again and it was great. Then I had to do some more over-dubbing. We ended up doing two takes in Boston and four in Memphis."

Conflicts in the studio don't faze Baker, who has seen them from all angles, settling creative differences and causing some, too. Cocaine was a problem, he admits, and nearly ruined his career after a run of hit records in the mid-1980s. He's counting on "Merge" to bring him back.

"The only way I can do anything is to go in and write songs. I had a bad reputation. People were saying I was difficult. But I helped create things like multiple edits and songs without bass lines. I think I can be innovative again."

Baker, a Boston native, made his breakthrough in 1981 with Africa Bambaata's "Planet Rock," an early rap record. He was soon one of the industry's hottest producers and remixers, asked to edit extended versions of songs from Springsteen's "Born in the USA" album. Dylan, McCartney and Hall and Oates also wanted his services.

In 1985, he helped produce the "Sun City" record, assembling a remarkable collection of musicians — including Springsteen, Davis, U2's Bono and Ruben Blades — to perform material attacking South Africa's apartheid system.

'Cosby' Reruns Costing Less

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

HOLLYWOOD — When reruns of "The Cosby Show" went into syndication a year ago, they were expected to hit TV like a megaton bomb, giving the 187 stations that bought them the kind of immense lift that NBC got from the original broadcasts of the series.

Expectations for the reruns were so high that stations bid feverishly for the show, paying unprecedented prices that totaled more than $600 million in overall sales.

But the rerun miracle of "The Cosby Show" — the big blowout — never materialized.

Despite doing very well — the Bill Cosby comedy is at the top of off-network programming — the series is drastically dropping its price with sales now under way for the second cycle of reruns, which will begin in 1992 or 1993, depending on how many episodes are available.

"Everybody that bought 'Cosby' paid too much," said Rick Feldman, manager of KCOP-TV in Los Angeles, a station that has shelled out about $300,000 per half-hour episode for rights to the series for the initial 3½-year rerun cycle. Several station sources said that Viacom has dropped the price for Wednesday's deadline on new sales set by the syndicator, Viacom. He said he's in no hurry to renew. "The Cosby Show" by one-half or more, depending on how the series fared in individual markets.

Rock Hall Backers Seek Funds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Backers of a shrine to the likes of Elvis Presley, Little Richard and the Beatles are frantically trying to drum up enough money to build the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum.

Wednesday is the deadline for raising the $40 million needed to build the structure, which would rise in downtown Cleveland near the Cuyahoga River by 1992.

Local promoters figure about 600,000 people would push through the turnstiles of the pyramid-shaped, glass-and-steel complex each year and spend $85 million in restaurants, hotels and souvenir shops.

Organizers canvassing corporate Cleveland for donations expect to meet the fund-raising goal in cash and pledges, said the project's development director, John Zoilo.

"It's gone through some rough stages. However, now it's on firm financial footing," Zoilo said. "We're confident we'll be there. We're closing the gap every day."

As of Sunday, more than $37 million was collected in cash and pledges from state, local and federal governments and from private companies and philanthropists, said Larry Thompson, rock hall director in Cleveland.

Last week, a local nightclub and restaurant developer, Jeffrey Jacobs, offered to chip in up to $500,000.

Three years ago, Cleveland beat out seven other cities for the project, sponsored by the New York-based Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Foundation, which also set the funding deadline.

Since 1986, the foundation, comprised of recording industry executives and artists' promoters and managers, has inducted performers into a Hall of Fame, though the organization lacked a building. Even after the hall is built, induction ceremonies probably would remain in New York, said Suzan Evans, the foundation's executive director.

The Rust Belt city whose main claim to musical fame has been its highly regarded symphony orchestra may seem an unlikely site to honor rock 'n' roll. Its few native rockers include the Poni-Tails, the Edsels, the Outsiders, the James Gang and the Raspberries.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠A43 ♥KQJ3 ♦J73 ♣J92
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 Pass Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—In first or second seat, this is a doubtful opening bid. But it is a classic third-hand light opening of one heart regardless of whether you play four or five-card majors. You are bidding the suit you want led, and you can comfortably pass any response partner makes.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠97652 ♥J ♦63 ♣96542
 Partner opens the bidding in first seat with one club. What action do you take?
 A.—We know some who would respond one spade with this collection but, in the words of Samuel Goldwyn, "include us out!" That's asking for trouble. We doubt that the bidding will die at one club, but if it does and we miss game, that's life.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠97652 ♥J ♦63 ♣96542
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass South West
 2 ♦ 2 ♥ ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—You have promised nothing when you actually have a pretty good hand. You have five-card support for partner's first suit and a host of ruffing values. Tell partner of your distributional assets by jumping to four clubs. Since you couldn't bid over one club, partner won't expect more than this.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠J9652 ♥Q83 ♦7 ♣K762
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ 1 ♦ ?

What action do you take?
 A.—There used to be a theory that, to take a free bid now, you had to have a pretty good hand. However, that often led to your side getting frozen out of the auction. With a five-card major, a singleton and support for partner's suit, there is no danger in bidding one spade, so do it!

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AKJ105 ♥J95 ♦7 ♣KJ83
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 2 ♦ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—One of the features of your hand is that it is two-suited, and you should clue partner into the picture. Bid three clubs. Don't even think of any spade rebid—two spades shows a far weaker hand and a jump to three spades would promise at least a six-card suit.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Void ♥7 ♦KQJ10654 ♣A10952
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 Pass Pass ?
 What is your opening bid?
 A.—If partner has as little as the right ace and king, you could come to 12 tricks. However, with your pronounced shortness in the major suits this is unlikely to be your hand! Bid five diamonds, to make it as difficult as possible for the opponents to get into the auction.

U.S. To Demand OAS Stand Opposing Noriega

By George Gedda
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III prepares to call for a decisive hemispheric stand against Panama's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega as foreign ministers from the Organization of American States gather here today.

A highlight of the meeting is expected to be the admission of Canada as the 32nd OAS member, effective Jan. 1. There also is some sentiment in support of readmitting Cuba. The OAS expelled the government of president Fidel Castro in 1962 on grounds that the country's Marxist-Leninist philosophy is incompatible with OAS principles.

OAS foreign ministers usually convene only once a year, but the Panama crisis has prompted four special OAS sessions since May. An OAS commission appointed in May was unable to fulfill its mandate of arranging a democratic transfer of power in Panama.

U.S. officials said Baker was expected to deliver a tough speech condemning the Panamanian government, but it was not clear whether he would make specific proposals.

The inaugural session was scheduled for this morning, and Baker's remarks were to be delivered in late afternoon.

The Panama crisis arose six months ago when Panamanian authorities threw out the returns from national elections amid widespread allegations of fraud. A Noriega ally, Francisco Rodriguez, was sworn in Sept. 1 as the unelected president.

The United States has been the strongest proponent of decisive action against Noriega, but other OAS countries maintain that the group should stay out of what is an essentially internal Panamanian matter.

Also on the OAS agenda is Nicaragua's scheduled Feb. 25 presidential election. The meeting is expected to produce numerous calls for a free and fair election process.

Cuba has been sharply critical of the OAS over the years, looking on the organization as an instrument of U.S. foreign policy. But seven leading Latin American democracies called last month for Cuba's readmission to the OAS and Cuba has said it's ready to accept. Cuba has far more diplomatic support in the hemisphere than at any time since it was expelled from the OAS 27 years ago.

The United States has lobbied hard against Cuba's readmission, citing alleged Cuban support for subversion in Central America and reported human rights abuses.

Cuba's readmission would require a two-thirds vote of member nations in attendance.

Government soldiers move into position for battle with leftist guerillas in San Salvador

Salvadoran Troops Fight To Keep Control As Rebels Take Part Of San Salvador

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Government forces fought today for control of the capital after leftist rebels, in their biggest offensive since 1981, seized parts of San Salvador and attacked military posts in the provinces.

At least 139 people were killed, including an American teacher, and 317 wounded, hospitals and the military said, in fighting that began Saturday night and prompted rightist President Alfredo Cristiani to declare a state of siege.

The president, whose official residence was attacked in the offensive's early hours, imposed a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. nationwide curfew in addition to rescinding basic rights.

In the capital, the fighting was the heaviest of the 10-year-old civil war. Early today, the sound of mortars and sporadic gunfire echoed through its deserted streets.

The rebels claimed 400 soldiers were killed or wounded and gave no casualty figures for their own forces.

They launched the offensive after pulling out of peace talks to protest a series of attacks on leftist political and union leaders they blamed on the U.S.-backed government.

Fighting was reported in at least four of the country's 14 provinces, including northern neighborhoods of San Salvador, much of which was being held by heavily armed rebels. It was the biggest coordinated rebel attack since a 1981 offensive in the provinces.

By late Sunday, rebel snipers had taken posts in the high floors of buildings in the capital's northern sections. Residents of the area helped rebels dig trenches.

"A free country or death!" one group called out when they saw journalists approaching suburban Metropolis.

"All the northern zone (of the city) is classified as critical," said Pedro Varela of the Red Cross. He also said such eastern areas as Soyapango, San Bartolo and Ciudad Delgado "are very dangerous."

A church lay worker speaking on condition of anonymity said he had seen government helicopters bombing a camp of homeless earthquake victims in Emanuel, a northern part of the city.

He said five people died in one of the tin shacks that took a direct hit and that many were wounded as government forces tried to dislodge rebels who had taken up positions in the area.

A guerrilla leader who identified himself as Commander Fernandez told reporters in a northern neighborhood, "Here we will die fighting. They won't remove us from here."

On national television, Cristiani announced the state of siege, suspending rights of assembly as well as free speech and movement. The legislature was to vote today on whether to suspend the rights of people detained by authorities.

"The terrorists must know that there are judicial tools to fight these irrational attacks," he said.

The rebels declared a nationwide ban on traffic at midnight Sunday and ordered all gas stations to close.

Both sides made public appeals for international support and claimed they held the upper hand. Cristiani called the offensive "indiscriminate terrorism." He leads the rightist Nationalist Republican Alliance, or Arena, and took office June 1 after winning a presidential election.

His party has been linked to death squads that operated with near impunity in the war's early years and are blamed for most of its 70,000 deaths.

The rebel Farabundo Marti Liberation Front said the offensive was aimed at forcing the government to the negotiating table.

In a radio broadcast, it tied the offensive to the Oct. 31 bombing of the National Federation of Salvadoran Workers union hall in the capital that killed 10 people and wounded more than 30.

Rebel leaders on Wednesday pulled out of a third round of peace talks with the Cristiani's administration, claiming it has not been serious about negotiating an end to the conflict.

In Washington, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney called the rebel offensive "an act of desperation by a debilitated guerrilla force." The U.S. government has backed successive Salvadoran administrations in their war with the rebels.

The armed forces press office said 26 soldiers had been killed and 65 wounded. Guerrilla deaths totaled 93 and 55 were wounded, it said, while eight civilians were killed and 35 wounded.

Carlos Mendoza, spokesman for the Salvadoran Red Cross, said in a telephone interview that at least 20 civilians had been killed in the fighting.

Among them was a U.S. citizen who taught at the American High School in San Salvador, said U.S. Embassy spokesman Barry Jacobs. He said the victim's name was being withheld pending notification of family members but U.S. newspaper reports identified him as Chris Babcock, 25, of Spokane, Wash.

Military headquarters in the eastern cities of San Miguel and Usulután were among military posts attacked, said Col. Rene Ponce, chief of the joint chiefs of staff.

He said other rebel targets included the home of the president of the legislative assembly, Ricardo Alvarenga; the 1st Infantry Brigade; police headquarters in the Mejicanos neighborhood; the 3rd Infantry Brigade in San Miguel, and the 6th Brigade in Usulután.

Alvarenga escaped injury but the attack on his house left at least one guerrilla dead and two guards wounded, hospital officials said.

U.S. Says Cristiani Can Deal With Rebels

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration says it expects the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador to handle a guerrilla offensive that left at least 127 dead and led President Alfredo Cristiani to declare a state of siege.

White House spokeswoman Alixe Glen would not comment Sunday night on Cristiani's state of siege declaration and imposition of a dawn-to-dusk curfew.

However, earlier Sunday, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Secretary of State James A. Baker III both described the weekend offensive as a "desperate" move by the insurgents.

It was the biggest offensive in San Salvador in the 10-year-old civil war. An American schoolteacher was among those reported killed and more than 300 people were wounded, officials said.

Leftist rebels attacked the residence of the right-wing president and other official buildings Saturday night and occupied several sectors of the northern part of San Salvador, where fighting continued Sunday.

Cheney, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," said he didn't believe U.S. military personnel would get involved.

"We've got, of course, advisers in El Salvador, but I think the government of El Salvador can handle it," he said.

"I think there's a bit of a view that the attack on the city basically is a move of desperation by the guerrillas, that the FMLN (Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front) ... is under a lot of pressure from the Salvadoran government and that this is an effort to try to dramatize their posture," Cheney said.

El Salvador's ambassador to the United States, in Boston to attend a private function, said Sunday that his country would not need U.S. help to quash the offensive.

"I think the government can control this," Miguel Salaverria said. "The army's after them now and they'll catch them."

Bush Encourages European Reforms But Wants To Maintain Its Stability

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush, praised by the Soviets as "a real statesman" for his response to the opening of the Berlin Wall, wants to encourage reform in Eastern Europe without promoting instability, his secretary of state says.

The Bush administration is still weighing a reply to a message from Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev backing the changes made by East Germany's new leaders and expressing hope that the situation will remain peaceful.

Tonight, Bush will present Lech Walesa with the Presidential Medal of Freedom in a White House ceremony. Walesa is the Solidarity leader whose labor movement propelled Poland into the vanguard of the shift toward democracy in the communist East Bloc.

On Sunday, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennadi Gerasimov said of Bush's response to the joyous tumult in East Berlin: "I think he's handling it as a real statesman."

Secretary of State James A. Baker III emphasized that the administration wants "to encourage this move toward openness in Eastern Europe," but "to do so in a way that doesn't seek unilateral advantage and... doesn't promote instability."

Gerasimov, interviewed on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," predicted that Bush and Gorbachev, at their Dec. 2-3 shipboard summit off Malta, "may come to a common ground... that both countries — and actually everybody — is interested in stability, in not too much upheaval in Europe."

Baker, on ABC-TV's "This Week with David Brinkley," called the opening of East Germany's borders "historic," but said, "it doesn't mean a whole lot in economic terms."

For the United States to consider coming to the economic aid of East Germany, Baker said, it first must be convinced the rulers of the once hard-line communist state are moving toward a free-market system.

"It would be wrong to have a different standard for East Germany than we do for Poland and Hungary," Baker said. "We are somewhat constrained in what we can do before there is clear evidence that they want to reform their economic system."

Baker said he believes Moscow would draw the line at any attempt by its East Bloc allies to withdraw from the Warsaw Pact, the communist alliance's counterpart to the West's North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

But, Baker said, "they have made it very clear to us... that they will not use force in Eastern Europe."

Baker said the administration wants to help the Soviets "with technical economic advice in their efforts to move to a free-market economy."

Bush said earlier he believes "we're seeing a disintegration of that form of totalitarianism in Eastern Europe."

"There's no question that... they can't go back to square one," Bush told Texas reporters in an interview published Saturday.

Baker said the United States would welcome the eventual reunification of the two Germanies "as long as that reunification comes about on the basis of Western values." But he stressed it is too soon "to make the great leap... from right of free travel on the part of East Germans to the question of reunification."

Baker ruled out unilateral U.S. troop withdrawals from Europe.

"The reason the wall's coming down is because we have maintained our will and our resolve and our strength for 40 years, and let's don't jump here before it's time to jump," Baker said.

Some Democrats in Congress, including Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine, have accused Bush of timidity in responding to the ferment in the East Bloc.

The House last month passed an $837 million package to aid Poland and Hungary, nearly double what Bush requested.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, who voiced skepticism earlier in the year about Gorbachev's ability to survive, said Sunday that Gorbachev "is, indeed, for real," but he is "in for a very rough winter."

The Soviet economy is "a basket case... in terrible condition with labor strife, ethnic unrest," Cheney said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"There's great uncertainty about what ultimately will happen in the Soviet Union, and I think we have to judge our policies accordingly," he said.

and the more rural counties surrounding Pitt have more than a mandated incentive to look to a regional landfill. Limited space and funds along with stricter regulations make a regional system the best alternative.

The counties in the region also need to look at recycling and reducing the amount of waste going into their landfills, Dickerson said.

"This is a very complicated problem," Dickerson said. "There's a whole lot involved."

In a prepared statement, William L. Wall, chairman of community development for the chamber, said Tuesday's conference "will have a far-reaching impact on the development of future solid waste collection procedures in our 43 county region of the state."

Estonians Void Soviet Merger

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Estonian lawmakers have annulled the Baltic republic's 1940 decision to join the Soviet Union but stopped short of actual secession, the Tass news agency reported today.

The Estonian Supreme Soviet passed a resolution Sunday accusing the Soviet Union of "aggression, military occupation and annexation of the Estonian republic" and declared the 1940 assembly's vote for incorporation "unlawful."

Parliaments in the three Baltic republics already have condemned the 1939 Soviet-Nazi pact that paved the way for the annexation, but the Estonian resolution was the boldest challenge yet to the Soviet Union's historical claim on the region.

Soviet historians maintain the Baltic republics voluntarily joined the Soviet Union in 1940 to protect themselves from the onslaught of Adolf Hitler's war machine. Western historians and Baltic activists say the decision was made with Soviet soldiers already on Estonian soil.

Soviet troops moved into the Baltic republics of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania after Josef Stalin concluded a non-aggression treaty with Hitler on Aug. 23, 1939. Under a secret protocol to the agreement, Eastern Europe was divided into spheres of influence, with the Baltics falling into the Soviet sphere.

A special commission of the Supreme Soviet legislature in Moscow has been formed to review the Baltic republics' status, but its report has not been released.

The Estonian resolution specifies that it does not invoke Article 69 of the republic's constitution, which says the republic "retains the right to freely leave the U.S.S.R.," Tass said.

Estonia has consistently led the way in raising legal and parliamentary challenges to Kremlin authority. The Estonian Supreme Soviet has asserted its right to veto national laws on its territory, and Estonians spearheaded a movement to gain more economic independence for the Baltic republics.

The resolution evoked stormy debate in the Estonian Parliament Sunday, and 46 deputies walked out at one point to protest the body's refusal to postpone the decision, Tass said.

Miik Tiitma, a top Estonian Communist Party leader, emphasized that the republic did not intend to secede from the Soviet Union but said the resolution would "change relations between the republic and the center," the news agency said.

Tiitma said the republic understood the importance of perestroika, the Kremlin's program of reforms, and would be careful not to take steps that might jeopardize it.

Tass said the measure will be used as the basis for negotiating greater independence for Estonia under Moscow's rule.

In addition to the Baltic republics, many other of the Soviet Union's 15 republics have been hit with unrest stemming primarily from ethnic disputes. The latest upheaval occurred in Moldavia, on the Romanian border.

when the tallying is finally done.

"I'm expecting it (Greenville's population) to be just around 50,000," Knowles said. "I would hope that it would be over that. I've been telling people we should be within 500 one way or the other."

Knowles said the city is using all of its resources to help ensure that census officials don't miss any heads when canvassing for the census.

"You asked how committed we are to the census; this is how committed we are," Knowles said. "We've provided the (C.M. Eppes) Center, we've given them office space, training space. All because this is so important to all of us."

Knowles said the city has provided an office at the Eppes Center from which officials of the Census Bureau's Charlotte office have recruited and trained managerial personnel for census-taking operations that will service the entire northeastern N.C. region.

The city has also provided rooms at Jaycee Park for special training sessions for district supervisors for the census, Knowles said.

Knowles said the city is also working with Elvis Jones of Bethel, a census awareness specialist who works with the Census Bureau to target minority segments of the population that are traditionally undercounted.

"We deal with him on a regular basis. We've gone on the radio together and on a number of the minority shows trying to explain the importance of an accurate census," Knowles said.

Knowles said an accurate tally of ECU students and faculty who consider Greenville their permanent residence is also vital to the 50,000 population goal.

"At ECU, they count if they live in the city and if they claim the city as their residence," Knowles said. "Obviously, the more of those who would count as permanent residents the better."

Activists Revel

In San Francisco, 2,000 demonstrators played off Bush's campaign comparison of private charity to "a thousand points of light." A park overlooking the city's downtown glowed at dusk as demonstrators held up lights in support of the right to abortion.

"Here at dusk, we kindle a thousand points of light — our own thousand points of light — to say that we will never again accept the darkness of back alley despair," said Ms. Michelman, who went to San Francisco after the Los Angeles rally.

In Atlanta, hundreds waved coat hangers and posters during a rally attended by congressmen and celebrities including actress Marlo Thomas and magazine editor Gloria Steinem.

"Anti-choice is our Berlin Wall, and together, we will make it fall forever," Ms. Steinem said.

In Seattle, former congresswoman Bella Abzug took issue with the anti-abortion position that life begins at the moment of conception.

"I don't know when the moment of conception begins," she said. "My friend Marlo Thomas has said maybe it begins when you say, 'Hi ya, honey.'"

Many of the 1,000 abortion activists in Columbia, S.C., said lawmakers who try to restrict abortions should be tossed from office.

"We must get rid of the politicians who would restrict our choices in so private an area," said Columbia attorney Victoria Eslinger.

In New Orleans, a brass band and gospel groups warmed up about 1,800 abortion-rights advocates at the City Park.

In New York state, demonstrators in Rochester donned purple ribbons, a symbol of the suffragette movement, and about 300 people marched in Watertown in support of abortion rights.

In North Dakota, many demonstrators carried signs declaring "Mobilize for Women's Lives" and "It's My Body... and Keep Your Laws Off It." Demonstrators in Bismark gathered by the Capitol steps, while in Fargo they marched to a replica of the Statue of Liberty.

In Chicago, more than 2,500 activists held a silent march from a Southwest Side church to Cook County Hospital, urging resumption of abortion services at the county-run medical center. Feminist Betty Friedan was among those who spoke.

In Missouri, where the case in the July Supreme Court decision originated, more than 5,000 marched in Jefferson City. State Treasurer Wendell Bailey, a Republican expected to run for governor in 1992, sought to seize the issue from Democrats, traditionally considered more likely to support abortion rights.

Germans

Federal government officials in Bonn said fewer than 1 percent of the estimated 3 million East Germans who arrived over the weekend decided to stay in the West, a sign that the new open-door policy would not backfire.

Lack of freedom to travel had been one of the major complaints of hundreds of thousands of East Germans who abandoned their Communist homeland permanently before the borders opened.

"It was something special, but anyway, things have to go on as normal," said Peter Normann, an East Berliner who visited West Berlin and then went home.

West Berlin's bustling Kurfuerstendamm, the tree-lined shopping thoroughfare that had been jammed with revelers, today was filled with workers and shoppers.

The carpet of shattered bottles, crushed cans, fast-food wrappers and cigarette packs was swept up and hauled off overnight, leaving behind few traces of the celebration.

East Berlin Mayor Erhard Krack strode through a new breach in the 28-year-old Berlin Wall on Sunday and shook hands with West Berlin Mayor Walter Momper. The meeting took place at the Potsdamer Platz, once the vibrant hub of a united Berlin.

Momper, speaking this morning on NBC's "Today" show, said the mayors discussed the need for coordination between authorities in both sides of the city to handle the increased car and foot traffic resulting from the new border policy.

Today's announcement on the border areas covers both the 854-mile frontier between East Germany and West Germany and the even more notorious stretch of land running along the Berlin Wall in East Berlin. The borders had been one of the most closely guarded sections of the Iron Curtain.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Quiet, Please

Objections To Decision Justified

There's a whole lot of noise being made in Greenville about noise. It's time the decibel level subsided and some calm thinking took its place.

Three weeks ago, the city council decided the city would no longer issue permits allowing high volume parties and gatherings that exceed the noise limit set by the city's noise ordinance. East Carolina University students, the group most affected by the change, objected loudly to the move. They felt the decision was arbitrary and unnecessary and cited the decision as one more example of how Greenville slights ECU students.

Students who took the decision personally overreacted. The timing of the action (two weeks before a municipal election) smacks of politics.

But the students' objections to the decision are valid. The city council should reconsider the issue and reinstate noise limit permits.

Rejecting permits went against the suggestion of the city's own committee — a committee that included student, community, law enforcement and city representatives. That committee, after examining the permit system and scrutinizing complaints about it, decided it was best to continue it. The city council ignored this recommendation.

The fact is, loud parties and get-togethers are a part of being a college town. Nobody likes for the peace and quiet in their neighborhood to be disrupted by blasting music or rowdy crowds. But students are often youthful and exuberant. That won't change. Better to acknowledge this fact and have a means of controlling gatherings than relinquishing all involvement. The noise permits provide such control.

If a permitting system is used responsibly — and there is no indication it was not used responsibly in Greenville — it will help police and communities minimize conflict between party hosts, party-goers and their neighbors. It shouldn't mean the city will tolerate loud get-togethers every night or weekend. Permits are exceptions to the rules, and should be granted only in special circumstances.

The city council would be doing citizens a favor if it took another look at noise ordinance permits and reconsidered its hasty decision. That action could provide a quiet solution to what has unnecessarily become a very noisy problem.

'If a permitting system is used responsibly — and there is no indication it was not used responsibly in Greenville — it will help police and communities minimize conflict.'

A Continent Made Safer By Balance

Stephen Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — Nothing is more unstable in Europe these days than the old policy verity of stability in Europe. We of the West used to be sure we wanted it above all else: it kept the Cold War from turning hot. Now we wonder. Almost no one imagines anymore that there could be a war in Europe. But some of us clinging to an older hollow definition of stability, and the rest of us cast about for a newer more relevant definition. The resulting hesitation has to be dispelled if we are to find an effective way to deal with the new Europe.

Right-thinking regulars responded to Mikhail Gorbachev's call for a "common European house" by upping the political ante and saying yes, as long as Europe is "whole and free," and in the same breath lowering the ante by saying, but we also want Europe to be "stable." No upheavals that will bring in Soviet or proxy tanks, nothing that will otherwise jog the course of East-West relations, nothing that will impair our treasured sense of living in a reasonably predictable world.

In fact, the comforts and rewards of traditional Cold War stability have been very great. West and East recovered and, in their fashions, went on with their lives. As policy expert Helmut Sonnenfeldt points out, however, stability in the East was unjust, and it couldn't last. It created its own instability arising from the perception — the panic — that the whole system was failing. The effort to respond to this layer of instability, from above by leadership decree and from below by popular demand, creates a deeper layer of instability consisting of the perils generated by the very effort to change.

When we ask for "stability" in Europe, we need to know what we are asking for. We don't want reversal, crackdown or war, and if Gorbachev makes good on what he is saying, there won't be such contingencies — though incidents, explosions along the way, obviously can't be ruled out. Here it may help that Gorbachev is being quietly and regularly reminded of the Western interest in East Europe's soft landing and of the Western intent not to provoke additional Soviet-bloc strains.

But as we look at East Germans streaming into the streets and crossing the borders, we should not be so fastened on stability, Sonnenfeldt warns, as to fall into an implicit alliance with conservatives of the East, who would presumably like our consent to hold the line. We should be prepared to regard a certain level of disorder as the coin of essential change. It is bizarre for us to be more frightened of these developments than is Gorbachev. We should not ask even implicitly for the kind of Cold War calm that exists when people are back in their homes, sullen but quiet.

In the West, there is an excitement to find a second set of Germans claiming their liberal inheritance of self-government and personal choice. Still, there is also a scarcely subdued apprehension that things may be going too fast too far — and not just for the Germans' good but for ours as well. The particular reason lies in the whole Western reawakening to the possibility that, in removing the Soviet hand, the Europe thus revealed will be not a new Europe of enlightenment and reconciliation but the old Europe of ethnic animosities, national rivalries and, in Germany, a reach for power.

The coming of the impulse of liberty to East Germany stirs emotional and political beasts that slumber when the impulse works on other terrain. Many people can cope at least with the idea of renewed tension between, say, Hungary and Romania. But though reason tells them there is no need to expect another Hitler, they do not deal easily with the specter of a resurgent Germany. This poses some special requirements.

West Germans must start talking in the clear about their economic and political strategies and go public with the arrangements with the East they have found it convenient to shield in the past. In current conditions, the old discretion breeds suspicion. What is the German word for glasnost?

Americans and others in the West are basically already on the right track but must work to ensure that German self-determination advances in a context of close ties with Western institutions.

The Soviets have a harder duty: to cut off all lingering traces of the sneaky Cold War policy of trying to weaken the links that bind the United States to Europe. They should help the United States to find a reduced but enduring place in a continent made safer for everybody, including themselves, by American participation in the balance of power.

These are the approaches required to build the kind of stability that suits the new day.

Stephen Rosenfeld is an editorial writer for The Washington Post.

"WHEN THEY STARTED TALKING ABOUT REUNIFICATION, DID THEY MEAN IT WAS ALL TO TAKE PLACE HERE?!"

American Democracy: Still Worthy Of Emulation

Haynes Johnson

WASHINGTON — Two blacks, one a grandson of slaves and the other the son of a barber, moved to national center stage on Election Day with victories in Virginia's gubernatorial contest and New York City's mayoralty. No blacks have ever held those offices before. The winners presented themselves not as candidates of race but as mainstream politicians espousing progressive principles.

On the same day, an even stronger victory was registered in New Jersey's gubernatorial race by a white former high school dropout. This son of a painter at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, who put himself through law school at night by working as a janitor to support his wife and three children, campaigned on a theme of the need for new government activism.

These victories of Democratic candidates L. Douglas Wilder, David N. Dinkins and James J. Florio, respectively, are being hailed as signs of a Democratic Party resurgence after the dispiriting Reagan years. Perhaps. But party considerations are not the most important aspect of this year's "off, off-year" elections.

Their significance lies in something far greater. They are welcome signs that, for all its present failings, American democracy continues to display vitality and strength. Happily, they confirm the cliché: The system does work.

People do turn out to vote in great numbers when offered clear choices and when issues about which they care strongly, such as abortion rights, are involved. They do sort through the pall of negative campaigning and make reasoned, independent judgments. They do reject extremism and intolerance. And they do, occasionally, stick it to pollsters and confound them by their electoral behavior.

The timing of this lesson in democracy could not be better, for it comes amid evidence of deep problems within that very system.

Here in Washington, political gridlock continues to befoul the process. Tangible legislative results are slight. Postponement of serious national problems remains the political norm. On Election Day itself, Congress once again was grappling with a last-minute attempt to increase the national debt ceiling to $3.12 trillion, three times what it was eight years ago, and avoid a historic default on U.S. financial obligations.

While this unflattering example of democracy in action was occurring, great events abroad continued to command the world's attention — and to raise questions about the ability of the United States to play a leading role in those dramatic happenings.

For months, Americans have been stirred by breathtaking scenes of people daring to risk their lives in protest over democratic principle. From Tiananmen Square to Moscow, from the Baltic States to East Berlin, we are witnessing history. The communist empire crumbles; the old order passes; new international relationships and new opportunities present themselves.

Yet while cries for change and democracy echo around the globe, the world's leading democratic power — and model for the freedoms for which others hunger — plays a disturbingly passive role. U.S. leaders give the impression they either do not know how to respond, are reluctant to get involved or must be forced to engage. The result is to make the United States seem increasingly irrelevant to these events.

Then comes this American election, with its affirmation of democratic principles and good sense, to remind us that all is not negative.

It is not the millennium. Evidence of continued racial hostility and division shines through the returns. But the results suggest that the public trance and self-indulgence of the '80s may be ending. They further demonstrate that, at its core, American democracy remains a model worthy of emulation.

Haynes Johnson is an editorial writer for The Washington Post.

'For all its present failings, American democracy continues to display vitality and strength. Happily, they confirm the cliché: The system does work.'

Lakers Trip Stumbling Mavs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — It's a new season, but things already look sadly familiar to the Dallas Mavericks.

After taking the Los Angeles Lakers to seven games in the Western Conference final two seasons ago, the Mavericks dropped all three games to Los Angeles last season en route to their first losing season since 1982-83.

Dallas lost its fifth straight decision to Lakers Sunday night, 107-98. The loss dropped the Mavs to 1-4, their worst start since 1981-82, the franchise's second year, when they went 1-13.

But Mavericks coach John McLeod, seems unshaken.

"We'll be OK when we get every one in sync," he said. "We have two new starters (Roy Tarpley and Adrian Dantley) and James Donaldson is coming off of major surgery. When we settle down, we'll be fine."

In the only other NBA games, Washington defeated Portland 104-96 and Seattle beat Minnesota 108-97.

The Mavericks folded early after the Lakers took the lead for good with a 9-0 run in the second quarter.

"We're out of whack and we're having problems communicating with one another."

—Rolando Blackman

With the Lakers trailing 34-33, reserve guards Larry Drew and Michael Cooper sparked the spurt as the Lakers took a 42-34 lead with 5:22 remaining in the period. Drew scored five of his 15 points and Cooper added three assists during the run.

James Worthy, who had 15 of his 22 points in the first half, hit a 3-pointer with 5.8 seconds left in the second quarter for a 56-45 halftime lead. Dallas got no closer than eight the rest of the game.

"We're out of whack and we're having problems communicating with one another," said Dallas guard Rolando Blackman, who had 15 points. "People are complaining in the press, but everyone has to understand that they have to play a role."

"It's our responsibility to get organized and begin to take advantage of our best matchups. We're just not doing that right now."

start, has his own explanation for the Mavericks' woes.

"Dallas is a big power team," he said. "They're making the transition from a perimeter team to a power team. They seem to be missing some of the good perimeter shooting they used to have."

Dallas' only run at the Lakers came in the first period, when Magic Johnson left the game with a strained neck. During his absence, which lasted 3:45, Dallas outscored the Lakers 12-2 and took a 20-19 lead.

Johnson returned to score 13 of his 22 points in the third quarter and made his last seven field-goal attempts in the game.

Drew, Johnson's backup, had his best game as a Laker, going 7-of-9 from the floor and adding four assists in 22 minutes.

"(Coach) Riley talked to me about taking the open shot when it's there," Drew said. "I haven't been looking to shoot before because I thought my first responsibilities were to run the offense and think about defense."

Johnson said Drew's play lifts a burden from him.

"I really enjoy having him here," he said. "He frees me up to do more things and they'll be less wear and tear on me as the season goes on. It was nice to see him light up some other people like he used to do to us."

A crowd of 16,927 ended the Lakers' 35-game consecutive sellout streak dating back to last Jan. 18.

The streak includes eight playoff games.

Bullets 104, Trail Blazers 95
Washington won its fifth game in six outings and improved its road record to 3-0 as Jeff Malone scored 37 points at Portland.

Darrell Walker, who finished with nine points, made four of the Bullets' nine free throws in the final four minutes. Neither team made a field goal in that span.

Buck Williams led the Trail Blazers with 21 points and 12 rebounds, while Terry Porter added 20 points.

SuperSonics 108, Timberwolves 97
Seattle won at Minneapolis as Derrick McKey scored 10 of his 32 points during a decisive 19-4 fourth-quarter spurt. The Sonics led 78-67 with 2:33 left in the third quarter, but Sam Mitchell scored eight of his career-high 31 points and Tony Campbell added six of his 30 during a 16-2 run that gave the expansion Timberwolves an 83-80 lead.

Dale Ellis' 3-pointer then ignited the 19-4 run, which saw McKey score eight consecutive points in one stretch.

Ellis' 3-pointer with 8:49 left was the first scoring of the fourth quarter for the Sonics, who committed turnovers on their first five possessions.

Xavier McDaniel added 26 points for the Sonics, whose three victories this season include two over Minnesota.

Daly: Pistons Missing Killer Instinct

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The Detroit Pistons flew home Sunday after a road trip that Chuck Daly described as their worst in his seven years as coach.

"By far," Daly said. "We're struggling, and we'll keep struggling until we get back the killer instinct."

The defending NBA champions, 2-3 on the trip, blew an 11-point fourth-quarter lead Saturday night against Miami and lost 88-84.

The Pistons also lost at Indiana, where they scored only 74 points, and at Chicago. Their third defeat came 13 days earlier than last season.

"We've got great talent," guard Isiah Thomas said. "But right now we're not a good basketball team."

On Saturday, the Pistons played like an expansion team, while the second-year Heat played like champs. Miami rallied from a 76-66 deficit with nine minutes left, then hit six consecutive free throws in the final 53 seconds to pull away from an 82-82 tie.

"This was the best win in team history," said Coach Stan Rotstein, a former Detroit assistant. "We have played this year better than I thought we were capable of playing."

Second-year players Ronny Seikaly and Kevin Edwards led Miami with

NBA Notebook

21 points apiece. Seikaly said the game was one the Heat (2-4) would not have won last season.

"No way. We're a much better team than we were a year ago. We're more mature, and we're learning how to play with each other," he said.

"We cherish every win as we go along, but this one is sweeter than any other, because the Pistons are the best team in the NBA."

Not right now
The league's best team wouldn't miss 17 of its final 21 shots, as Detroit did Saturday. Thomas and Joe Dumars were the only Pistons to score in the final nine minutes.

Center James Edwards missed two free throws with two seconds left when Detroit trailed 86-84. He missed all seven of his field-goal attempts and has hit only five of 24 in the past four games.

The Pistons were also hurt in the fourth quarter by forward Mark Aguirre's wild 3-point attempt and erratic behind-the-back pass.

"High school Harry plays," Daly growled.

The Pistons are off until a rematch with the Heat on Wednesday in Detroit. Saturday's loss will shake the league champs out of their comfort zone, forward John Salley said.

"We got the message," he said. "We'll regroup because of the way everyone will feel when they go home and read the paper."

Top Matchup

Washington at Utah (9:30 p.m. EST). The Jazz have won three of their first four games and the Bullets five of six.

Around The League

• Jeff Malone, Bullets, scored 37 points and grabbed seven rebounds as Washington defeated Portland 104-96 for its fifth win in six games. Malone was 14-for-25 from the field and 4-for-10 from the line as the Bullets won their third road game without a loss.

• Derrick McKey, SuperSonics, had 32 points, seven assists and six rebounds as Seattle beat Minnesota for the second time this season, 106-97. McKey was 14 of 19 from the floor and scored 10 points during a decisive 19-4 fourth-quarter run.

• For the second straight game, Minnesota got a pair of 30-point performances, but this time it failed to produce a victory. Forward Sam Mitchell had a career-high 32 points and guard Tony Campbell had 30, but it wasn't enough as the Timberwolves lost to Seattle. Campbell had 31 and forward Tyrone Carter scored 36 in the Wolves' first-ever win Friday over Philadelphia.

• Los Angeles backup point guard Larry Drew, who played with II Messagero of the Italian League last season, came off the bench to score 13 points and hand out four assists Sunday in the Lakers' 107-98 defeat of Dallas. Drew was 7-for-9 from the field in 22 minutes.

• Seattle's first five possessions of the fourth quarter Sunday ended in turnovers, and Minnesota used the giveaways to build an 83-80 lead with nine minutes to go. But on the SuperSonics' next possession, Dale Ellis sank a 3-pointer to tie the game and spark a 19-4 run that gave Seattle a 106-97 victory.

• All-Star guard Clyde Drexler did not play in Portland's 104-96 loss to Washington on Sunday. Drexler has missed half of the Trail Blazers' first six games with a sore right elbow.

• Dallas forward Roy Tarpley had 14 rebounds in the Mavericks' loss to the Lakers. Tarpley is averaging 16.2 rebounds in his first five games, tops in the league.

• The Washington Bullets did not score from the field in the final eight minutes at Portland on Sunday. With four minutes left, the Trail Blazers tied the game at 95, but they also failed to make a field goal the rest of the way. The Bullets managed nine free throws and won 104-95.

• There were 16,927 at The Forum on Sunday for the Lakers' 107-98 defeat of Dallas, ending a streak of 35 consecutive sellouts. The capacity of The Forum is 17,505 for basketball and the streak included eight playoff games.

"I really enjoy having Larry Drew here. He frees me up to do more things and they'll be less wear and tear on me as the season goes on. It was nice to see him light up some other people like he used to do to us." — Lakers guard Magic Johnson on Drew, a 33-year veteran who was signed as Johnson's backup. Drew had 13 points in 22 minutes as the Lakers beat Dallas 107-98 on Sunday.

Falcon QB Miller Doubles As Kicker

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Atlanta quarterback Chris Miller, called on to kick when placekicker Paul McFadden was injured in pre-game warmups, punted a 25-yard field goal in a 45-14 loss to San Francisco on Sunday.

Miller kicked the kick through the uprights and passed his arms sublimely in the air as his smiling Falcons teammates congratulated him.

McFadden suffered a right thigh strain and was ruled out for the game. Running back Keith Jones took over the kicking duties.

Miller, in his third year out of Oregon, had never attempted a field goal in the NFL.

"I don't know I was going to kick," he said. "I don't know he was hurt until we called time out. The last time I kicked was some extra points in junior year in high school."

An all-around player, Miller made the national team in the NFL's Punt, Pass and Kick competition four times and the semifinals once between the ages of 1 and 17.

He also has played minor-league baseball in the Seattle Mariners farm system, a year-stranded pitcher who can throw the ball over 90 yards, and was a star basketball player as a youth in Eugene, Ore.

The coaching staff had a hunch of the measure of his kick-kicker as he punted the ball on a returned for a touchdown in the second quarter.

"I was trying to dump the ball off to Gene Lang," he said. "I don't know if the arm got hit or it just slipped. I wish we should have got a preview in that play."

NFL Notes

But, he added, "We really didn't have it today."

Also Getting Their Kicks

• Pete Stovaniuk kicked a 35-yard field goal, the third longest in NFL history against the New York Jets. Ironically, it tied the third longest NFL field goal, which was kicked by Tony Franklin of Philadelphia vs. Dallas Nov. 21, 1973, ten years ago to the day.

The only longer field goals in NFL history were by New Orleans' Tom Dempsey, a 63-yarder against Detroit in Nov. 3, 1970, and Cleveland's Steve Cox, from 60 yards in Oct. 2, 1984, against Cincinnati.

• Kevin Butler kicked field goals of 38 and 35 yards, giving him 21 in a row this season and 23 straight over two seasons, one short of the NFL record of 24, set by Dan Fouts of Washington's Mark Moseley in 1981-82. Butler beat Pat Leahy's streak of 22 in a row for the New York Jets in 1985-86 as the second-longest in league history.

• David Treadwell's 26-yard field goal with one second to play lifted Denver to a 16-13 victory over Kansas City.

Warrior, Montana, Everett

• Dan Marino completed 31 of 34 passes for 254 yards with three touchdowns to lead the Miami Dolphins to a 17-13 victory over the New York Jets.

• Joe Montana completed 31 of 33 passes for 170 yards and three touchdowns plus he ran for a fourth touchdown in leading the 49ers over the Falcons 45-7.

• Tim Everett completed 31 passes and was 22 of 33 for the day in leading the Rams to a 12-10 victory over the Giants.

The 13 consecutive completions were two shy of the NFL single-game record held by former Cincinnati quarterback Ken Anderson, but did reverse the Rams' record of 14 set earlier this year by Everett.

Odds And Ends

• The Detroit Lions made eight first downs while the Green Bay Packers recorded 12, but the Lions won 12-11.

• Minnesota sacked Willie Casper seven times in leading the Vikings to a 24-10 win. Chris Doleman set the pace with three and Sam Williams and A. Nova had two apiece.

• It took the New Orleans Saints just 6 minutes, 49 seconds to score 21 points against the Patriots, but then they couldn't score the rest of the game. However, they were able to hold on to edge New England 24-24.

• The Bills beat on to the ball for 4:14 and allowed Indianapolis to take a 17-16 lead in crushing the Colts 30-7.

• Steve Largent extended his NFL record in catching at least one pass in 27 consecutive games. He also had his 800th career reception extending his NFL record.

• The Saints 24-24 victory over the Patriots was the first ever and extended New Orleans' win streak to 10 against AFC teams.

• The Minnesota Vikings 24-10 win over Tampa Bay was the 10th in the last 11 games played between these two teams. The Buccaneers may win come in the strike-shortened season in a replacement game.

• A power failure, caused by a tree limb falling in a power line, hit Sullivan Stadium but didn't delay the game. All in Foxboro and parts of nearby Plumville, Mass., were without power for 34 minutes.

Chiefs' Mass Injured

• Pro Bowl noseguard Bill Maas of the Kansas City Chiefs suffered a broken left arm Sunday on the next-to-last play in Denver's 16-11 victory.

Maas, a 6-year veteran and leader of what has been the best Chiefs' defense in more than 10 years, was hurt on the play that Steve Sewell carried to the 4-yard line to set up David Treadwell's 26-yard field goal in the final seconds. There was no immediate word on whether he would return this season.

Bucs' Perkins Impressed

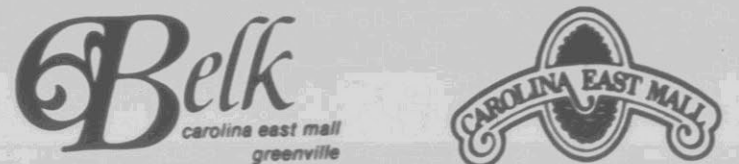

• Minnesota has the best defense in the league. They are devastating. We made some pass protection adjustments, touting Willard, but you can't double all four," said Tampa Bay coach Ray Perkins, after his quarterback was sacked seven times.

Tonight's Watchup

Cincinnati Bengals at Houston Oilers 9 p.m. EST. Cincinnati leads 22-17-1, but Houston has won four of the last five. The Oilers have won four straight in the Astrodome. Cincinnati has a 1-1 record against the AFC Central, while Houston is 1-1. The Bengals are 4-0 on Monday nights, including a 21-14 victory over Cleveland to end Week 1. The Oilers are 7-4 in Mondays.

Few Rockefeller Centers Are Up For Sale In Japan

By Elaine Kurtenbach
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Could an American do in Tokyo what Mitsubishi did with a stroke of its pen in New York — gain controlling interest in the landmark Rockefeller Center?

The answer is sure ... well, maybe ... but, if ... For one thing, not much real estate is available in central Tokyo to buy and what's available is far more expensive than similar real estate in the United States.

"If the building were worth having, nobody would sell it," says James Doherty, a real estate analyst at Jardine Fleming Securities.

Vacancy rates in central Tokyo are below 0.5 percent and land prices are as high as 35.3 million yen per square meter — $22,940 a square foot, or $992 million an acre.

The Mitsubishi Estate Co. of Japan paid $846 million for a 51 percent share of the Rockefeller Group, which owns the 22-acre Rockefeller Center in the prime midtown area of Manhattan.

If Rockefeller Center were in central Tokyo, its 22 acres would be worth about $21.7 billion at going Japanese real estate prices, and 51 percent of that comes to about $11 billion.

Mitsubishi paid the $846 million not for the land but for the majority share in the Rockefeller Group.

That's how the Japanese are accustomed to operating, said Doherty, and it's how an American or another foreigner probably would have to operate in Tokyo to make a deal like Mitsubishi did in New York.

"It's easier to buy companies than to buy land," Doherty said.

But Tokyo, which was razed by an earthquake in 1923 and by Allied bombing in World War II, doesn't have prestigious landmarks like Rockefeller Center.

"There just aren't many buildings with much status," says Noriko Hama, a researcher at the Mitsubishi Research Institute.

"People might be shocked if a foreigner bought the Kasumigaseki Building," Japan's first skyscraper, "but it wouldn't be for sale anyway," she said.

Lawyers and analysts active in mergers and acquisitions in Japan say it isn't government regulations, as many foreigners believe, that prevent foreigners from buying Japanese real estate or companies, but the realities of the marketplace — plus the age-old insularity of the Japanese, as well as those things foreign eyes don't see and foreign ears don't hear.

Among the realities of the marketplace are high stock prices and a system of share-crossholdings that locks about 70 percent of all stocks in the hands of stable shareholders who often are corporate allies. In addition, not many shares are in circulation.

So far, foreign corporate buyouts of listed companies in Japan number exactly one — the recent acquisition of Sansui Electric Co. by the British conglomerate Polly Peck International PLC.

The tendency in Japan's corporate world to do business only with trusted allies has traditionally limited both domestic and foreign participation in mergers and acquisitions.

Such deals, says lawyer Kanji Ishizumi in his 1988 book "Acquiring Japanese Companies," have customarily been arranged as rescues by associated firms or banks of companies in trouble.

Selling to an outsider, especially for speculative purposes, Ishizumi says, is "as much a betrayal as a captain of a ship deserting his crew in a storm."

Ishizumi recommends that foreign buyers cultivate informal ties with businessmen and even government officials before attempting any takeover activity to avoid a backlash.

Without that type of "nemawashi," or groundwork, investors face the same rejection that Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens has run into in his battles to win a seat on the board of Koito Manufacturing, even though he holds a 26 percent stake in the company. Toyota Motor Co., with a 19 percent share, has three seats.

"It is necessary to build a trusting relationship first," said Tamotsu Aoyama, a Koito director. "In Japan, it is not possible to just say, 'I'm a major shareholder,' and get a seat on the board right away."

But foreign investment is growing here, nevertheless. Mergers and acquisitions experts predict a boom as foreign pressure against exclusionary business practices makes it increasingly difficult for Japanese corporations to shut out foreign competitors.

In the fiscal year that ended March 31, foreign investments in Japan were up 46.5 percent over the previous year to $3.24 billion, according to the Finance Ministry.

It says investment by U.S. firms took 54.7 percent of the total, jumping 89.1 percent over the previous year to $1.77 billion. The United States meanwhile attracted $21.7 billion in direct investment from Japan, up 47.6 percent from fiscal 1987.

Federal Express, Merck Pharmaceuticals, Motorola, Bayer and General Electric Co. are among many foreign companies that have made small inroads.

Pickens' stake in Koito and Polly Peck's takeover of the ailing Sansui

Electric Co. indicate traditional barriers to foreigners are crumbling, says Howard Chao, an attorney with the Tokyo office of O'Melveny and Myers.

"Foreign acquisitions are heating up in Japan," Chao added. "There are indications it will open up more and more." Likely targets for foreign takeovers, analysts say, are companies in straits similar to Sansui. Once one of Japan's top three audio equipment makers, Sansui has not paid a dividend for five years and faced the threat of no longer being listed on the stock exchange if not rescued from its debt by March.

Polly Peck's $108.8 million, 51 percent stake in Sansui gained the British company entry into Japan's competitive electronics market.

In another deal, two regional supermarket chains, Chujitsu Co. and Inageya Co., turned to the U.S.-backed firm of Nomura Wasserstein Perella Co. to underwrite a share issue and help fend off a takeover bid by property giant Shuwa Corp., said Doherty.

"It wouldn't be difficult to imagine an asset-heavy company worn down by takeover attempts being grateful for a foreign 'white knight' to come along ... although one would have to be seen very clearly as a savior from a fate worse than death," he said. "The market is moving toward this."

New East Bank Branch To Be Located At ECU

East Carolina University has contracted New East Bank of Greenville to provide banking services in the ECU Mendenhall Student Center, announced New East Bank of Greenville President Jerry Powell.

Powell said New East has applied to the N.C. State Banking Commission for authority to open the facility in January 1990. This will replace the university-operated banking service. New East's ECU office will offer several banking services and an automatic teller machine with Citrus and Relay networks.

"Our business plan calls for New East Bank of Greenville to provide the most professional banking service in Greenville," Powell said. "New East is the only bank chartered to the Greenville community. Our board of directors and our staff are all Greenville people and we are ready and eager to give New East's exceptional service to the folks at ECU."

The New East Bank of Greenville recently opened its main office's temporary quarters at the corner of Charles Street and Red Banks Road. Hours of operation will be from 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays and 9 a.m. to noon on Saturdays.

Preceded by New East Bank of Goldsboro, New East Bank of Greenville will be the second bank opened by New East Bancorp, a multi-bank holding company based in Raleigh, organized for the purpose of establishing eight unit bank corporations across eastern North Carolina.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed higher today, picking up where it left off in Friday's rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.72 to 2,630.33 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 3 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 579 up, 372 down and 530 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 13.50 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Analysts said stocks appeared to benefit from continuing hopes that the Federal Reserve's gradual relaxation of its credit policy would soften the impact of the recent slowing of economic growth.

However, interest rates were flat to moderately higher in today's credit market activity.

Some observers believe the market in general has benefited from the opening up of borders in Germany, which continued to make headlines over the weekend.

But the most notable response has been confined so far to stocks of a few companies with extensive operations or investments in West Germany.

Among actively traded blue chips today, General Electric rose ¾ to 55; American Express ¼ to 34¼; McDonald's ¾ to 31¾, and Philip Morris ¼ to 42½.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .26 to 188.16. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .56 at 372.03.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average climbed 21.92 to 2,625.62, closing out the week with a net loss of 3.90 points.

Reynolds Workers Making Union Bid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. traditionally has enjoyed a reputation of being a company that pays its employees well, provides good benefits and job security, but many workers say times are changing.

They say that they began losing faith in the company when Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. bought Reynolds in a $25 million leveraged deal last spring.

The ensuing layoffs and a recent series of demotions confirmed their fears, they said.

Now, a group of workers and union officials have launched a campaign to organize about 5,500 production workers at Reynolds.

Employees said they are looking for job security, seniority rights, grievance procedures and a voice in shaping the company.

"I think the yearning to organize has been there for a while," said Ronald Schuyler, 43, who has worked for Reynolds for 17 years and has joined the organizing group.

"I'm not out to hurt R.J. Reynolds. I'd like to see it back to being the No. 1 cigarette company in the United States. We'd just like to have a voice in what happens to us. I realize that the president and the vice president of the company have a contract, and we would like to have the same opportunity," he said.

Workers are concerned about losing their jobs as the tobacco industry's market share continues to decline about 2 percent a year, said William Flynn, a Reynolds employee for 20 years who has spearheaded the organizing effort.

"The wages and working conditions are not an issue here. We want a voice at the bargaining table," Flynn said.

Reynolds spokesman Betsy Anese said the company has no plans to run a campaign against the union.

"We plan to continue to deal with our employees as fairly and equitably as we have always tried," she said.

Organizing began in late August, just weeks after Reynolds laid off 700 production workers and 825 salaried employees.

There have been several meetings among employees and organizers from the Bakery, Confectionary and Tobacco Workers Union, and pro-union employees say they have already spoken with dozens of their co-workers.

The union opened an office last week in the Communication Workers of America union hall in Winston-Salem. It represents more than 125,000 workers, including 18,150 tobacco workers, 8,393 of whom work for Philip Morris Co. in Virginia, Kentucky and North Carolina. Reynolds is the only major U.S. cigarette manufacturer whose workers are not unionized.

The union also represents 431 workers at the RJR MacDonald plant in Montreal and about 12,000 employees at Nabisco Brands, the food division of RJR Nabisco, which owns Reynolds Tobacco.

With average hourly wages of more than $17 an hour, tobacco workers are the highest paid industrial employees in the country.

Pro-Choice Rallies Draw Thousands Across Country

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hundreds of thousands of pro-choice activists reveling in recent electoral victories held demonstrations from President Bush's vacation hometown in Maine and the Lincoln Memorial to a celebrity-packed Los Angeles park.

"Today, we mark a new era in America. The 1990s will be the decade of choice," declared Kate Michelman, president of the National Abortion Rights League, at a rally Sunday in Rancho Park in Los Angeles' Century City.

Celebrities at the event included members of the cast of NBC-TV's "L.A. Law" and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who exhorted the crowd of more than 50,000 to "fight for the right of self-determination."

Also at the rally were entertainers Holly Hunter, Barbra Streisand and Donna Mills, and Norma McCorvey, the Jane Roe of the 1973 abortion rights case known as "Roe vs. Wade."

Many demonstrators around the country referred to the U.S. Supreme Court's July 3 decision that let stand the landmark ruling that legalized abortion but gave states broad authority to restrict abortions.

"The Supreme Court did us a great favor," Mary Ann Baker of Youngstown, Ohio, said at a rally in the nation's capital. "It got us off our complacent behinds."

In Washington, D.C., Democratic and Republican politicians and entertainers headlined a rally by about 150,000 people at the steps of the Lincoln Memorial.

It was the largest of Sunday's events that began with a sunrise service in Kennebunk, Maine, near President Bush's vacation retreat in Kennebunkport. Some attracted small counter-demonstrations.

Galvanized by election victories for abortion-rights supporters in last week's gubernatorial elections in Virginia and New Jersey, demonstrators said politicians would be forced to pay them heed in the next round of elections.

Party Calms For Germans

Parliament Picks Non-Communist

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — East Berliners today began returning to their jobs after four days of frenzied celebrations at the newly opened Berlin Wall, and officials said fewer than 1 percent of those who crossed into the West during the weekend chose to stay.

In East Berlin, the Parliament convened and elected a non-communist, Guenther Maleuda, as its new speaker in an unprecedented secret ballot. The ruling Communist Party did not propose a candidate for the post.

Maleuda, 58, is the chairman of the Democratic Peasants party, one of the four small parties that have been allied with the Communists for 40 years. During the political turmoil in recent weeks, the four parties have been cautiously exploring ways of becoming more independent.

Parliament also was expected to name Hans Modrow, a leading reformer, to be the new premier. He would replace Willi Stoph, who resigned along with his 44-member Cabinet on Tuesday.

Also today, the party's 163-member Central Committee was expected to set a date in December for an emergency party congress, which would have the power to elect an entire new Central Committee and change party politics.

Maleuda was elected to replace Horst Sindermann, a Communist party official who was sacked from the ruling Politburo last week and today resigned from his post of Parliament president.

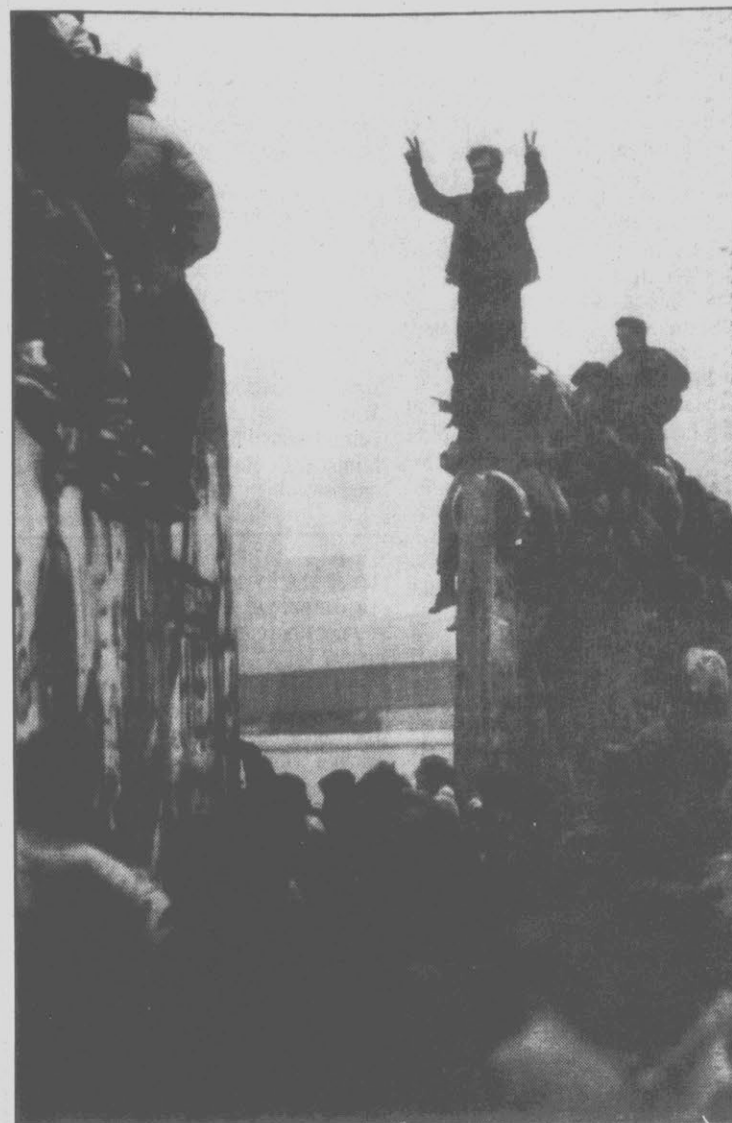

Maleuda surprisingly defeated Manfred Gerlach, chairman of the Liberal Democratic party who was one of the first politicians to call for broad political and economic reforms.

No candidate won a majority on the first ballot. In a run-off against Gerlach, Maleuda received 246 votes, while Gerlach got 230. The parliament has 500 members, but only 477 attended the session and one abstained.

Meanwhile, activists in Leipzig, which has been the site of huge prodemocracy protests, planned another demonstration tonight.

West Berlin began cleaning up the remnants of a celebration that began Thursday, with the opening of East Germany's borders, and finally began winding down Sunday night.

Greenville Pushes For 50,000 Mark

By Frances Horton Arrington
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville officials, eager to see the city hit the 50,000 population mark, say they have used recent media campaigns to inform residents of the upcoming 1990 Census and plan to launch additional campaigns in January.

"Our assistance has been more in the early stages, educational, informational," City Manager Greg Knowles said in an interview. "We're telling people what the census is and how it's going to affect them and the city, getting them ready for it so that people are not so anxiety-prone."

Knowles said the city has done radio and television spots and some newspaper advertising to get the word out to residents about the census.

"We've been campaigning already on the air, in the newspapers. We'll probably gear up again in January," he said. "When they (census offices) open up in December, we will spend a few thousand dollars trying to get people interested. So this will be a big effort for us."

The U.S. Bureau of the Census plans to conduct census-taking operations for northeastern North Carolina from two district offices in Greenville, with one set to open as early as next month, according to census officials.

Knowles said the number of heads counted locally in the 1990 Census is vital to Greenville and could mean more money in state and federal funding for the city.

With a population of at least 50,000, he said, Greenville would automatically qualify for community block grants from the state or federal government and would no longer have to compete with other cities for the funding.

He said he does expect the city to reach that magic mark next April

Boeing Faces $5.2 Million Penalty

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The Boeing Co. pleaded guilty today to two felony charges of "unauthorized conveyance" of secret Pentagon budget documents and agreed to pay more than $5.2 million in fines and restitution.

U.S. District Judge T.S. Ellis III accepted the plea, entered by attorney Robert S. Bennett, after questioning company and government lawyers for nearly an hour. He said he was concerned that the plea and penalties agreed to might not sufficiently cover what he called a serious breach of national security.

Ellis said he wanted a "clear indication that the disposition bears a rational relationship to the injury to the United States and reflects an awareness on the part of the Boeing Co. on the gravity of it."

He criticized Boeing for not sending a corporate officer from the Seattle-based aerospace firm to be present for the guilty plea and sentence. "I think you would have done well to have someone here to accept responsibility as officer of the company," Ellis told Bennett.

The judge said he would require the corporation's board chairman to write a letter to him expressing "the typical contrition that any defendant would express."

Ellis fined Boeing $20,000 and ordered it to pay $5.2 million in restitution, which covers the cost of the government investigation and the value of the two documents that had been illegally obtained.

Boeing admitted that it accepted two 1984 planning and budget documents classified secret from Richard Fowler, a former Boeing marketing official who is awaiting trial on 39 counts of conspiracy and unauthorized conveyance of more than 100 documents to the company between 1979 and 1985.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Randy Bellows said the Justice Department is continuing its investigation to determine who in the Pentagon gave the documents to Fowler, who had worked as a civilian Air Force employee before joining Boeing.

Plane Lands Safely On Road

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A small plane made an emergency landing with its engine aflame on a freeway overpass and struck a car, but the occupants of both the plane and the car escaped serious injury, authorities said.

Robert Gaugenmaier, 62, of Studio

City, was flying the Cessna 210 when it developed engine trouble approaching Burbank Airport, police Officer Jim Thompson said. Gaugenmaier's wife, Judith, 50, was a passenger in the plane.

The craft clipped a traffic light and, with its engine on fire, was forced to land on the Sunland Avenue overpass of the Golden State Freeway.

"I was looking for any place I could set it down," Gaugenmaier told police after the 4 p.m. crash about one-half mile north of the airport.

Gaugenmaier's forehead was cut and his face, chest and arm were bruised.

Mavretic Heads Trash Study

By J. Ward Best
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Eastern North Carolina faces a mounting problem with its garbage, a problem large enough to draw the speaker of the House of Representatives to Greenville for a conference Tuesday.

The Eastern North Carolina Chamber of Commerce has scheduled a conference for regional municipal, county and business leaders at the Ramada Inn from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday. House Speaker Joe Mavretic will open the conference with an overview of the importance for regional cooperation in solid waste management.

James E. Fulghum, executive vice president of the Eastern North Carolina Chamber of Commerce, said the conference is intended to "begin to get counties working together on landfills for the future, and recycling."

Officials from the state Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources will present a review of solid waste legislation passed by the N.C. General Assembly during the 1989 session. B. Kent Burton, director of resource recovery for the National Solid Wastes Management Association in Washington, D.C., will also cover anticipated changes to federal regulations governing operations of landfills.

Phil Dickerson, Pitt County engineer, said in an interview last week the county has already begun to look at a regional collection and landfill system for the future. Dickerson said the present county landfill has approximately five to six years of useful life remaining, but tougher state and federal laws could shorten the length of time left for the landfill.

Malta Braces For Expected Flood Of People For Superpower Summit

By Victor Simpson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALLETTA, Malta — This Mediterranean island that held back the Turks in an epic 16th-century siege and withstood heavy bombing by the Germans and Italians in World War II is now bracing for an invasion by today's superpowers.

Officials making land arrangements for the Dec. 2-3 off-shore summit of President Bush and Mikhail S. Gorbachev are expecting an army of some 2,000 people between delegations and journalists — or about three times the size of the Maltese armed forces.

For an island more accustomed to putting on horse-and-armor medieval costume parties for British and West German tourists than catering to the security and communication needs of such a gathering, the summit came as a shock.

"When I heard the news I thought the moon had fallen from the sky," said Arthur L. Pace, the government's director of information.

But Malta, which had a 2,000-year history of foreign domination until it achieved independence from Britain in 1964, sees the summit as an opportunity to make its contribution to world peace as well as promote its tourist facilities and ambitions to become an offshore banking center.

And the summit is seen as a dry run for the first visit by Pope John Paul II to the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic island in May.

With history the stuff of Malta and politics considered the national pastime, summit followers will get a dose of both. The opposition party is promising a protest against nuclear-armed warships.

As the site of offices of the U.S. and Soviet delegations and the international press center, organizers have chosen the Mediterranean Conference Center, a monumental complex built as a hospital by the Knights of Malta in 1574.

It was the knights, mobilized to defend Christian Europe, who held onto the island during the long siege by the Ottoman Turks in 1565. Malta came under British rule in 1800.

The complex, with its vaulted ceilings and religious reliefs, suffered heavy bombing damage in World War II, when King George VI of Britain awarded the population the George Cross for bravery and Winston Churchill referred to Malta as the "unsinkable aircraft carrier."

The building was completely restored and repaired again after a 1987 fire in its main auditorium. Maltese organizers hope to keep the onshore activities within the confines of the center while the leaders meet aboard ships.

There has been no official confirmation, but Maltese expect the warships to be anchored in Marsaxlokk Bay, within sight of fishing villages on the island's eastern end.

Last year, at the time of a visit by the British aircraft carrier Ark Royal, Parliament adopted a resolution saying Malta expects that visiting ships won't be carrying nuclear weapons.

The conservative government of Prime Minister Edward Fenech Adami hopes the Soviets and Americans will take heed. But the leftist opposition plans a demonstration if assurances are lacking.

"Bush and Gorbachev are absolutely welcome, they will be welcomed by all Maltese people," said Joseph Brincat, deputy leader of the Malta Labor Party, adding "Is it necessary to have a nuclear warship in Grand Harbor?"

Diplomats say the island's improved ties with Washington and loosened links with Libya, its central location in the Mediterranean and its official policy of neutrality and non-alignment apparently played a role in the decision to hold the summit off Malta.

Gorbachev will be arriving from a visit to Italy and the Vatican.

One of Fenech Adami's first official acts was to scrap part of a 1984 friendship treaty with Libya and security for exchange of military and military information. It was under this pact that Malta gave advance warning to Libya of the U.S. air raids on Tripoli and Benghazi in April 1986.

Libyan officials are due here in coming days to renegotiate the pact and the military clause is expected to be formally dropped.

Although trade with Libya is flourishing, officials stress the government is trying to change the direction of Maltese foreign policy from 16 years of Socialist rule. Says Austin Gatt, secretary general of the Nationalist Party:

"We want friendly relations with everyone (and) look to the Western world as a natural ally."

Organizers also believe the visit of Bush's brother, William, to September ceremonies marking the 25th anniversary of Maltese independence played a key role in the choice of Malta.

Security For Top Officials Varies From Case To Case

By Joan Mower
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — It's a typical Washington scene: Attorney General Dick Thornburgh's black car with a red light on the dash sweeps into the Supreme Court's basement.

A handful of eagle-eyed, armed FBI agents hover nervously around the side entrance of the imposing, white marble building. Make no mistake, they know their mission is to protect the boss.

But wait! Isn't that Chief Justice William Rehnquist, dashing up the stairs alone, setting off on his regular morning stroll near Capitol Hill?

The contrast between the phalanx protecting the attorney general when he came to argue a case and the solitary wanderings of the nation's top judicial official reflect the wide variety in personal security afforded officials in Washington.

In general, security has been increased in the 1980s, a decade punctuated by terrorist threats and activities like the bombing of Pam Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, last December.

Several months ago, threats from Colombian drug cartels reportedly prompted President Bush to order an increase in Secret Service protection for some of his children.

William Bennett, director of the nation's drug policy, receives protection from the U.S. Marshals Services, a part of the Justice Department.

"Certainly there is a threat to be considered as far as Dr. Bennett's work is concerned," said Bill Dempsey, a spokesman for the service.

The marshals' function is to provide security for the judiciary, including federal judges and juries, but they protect others like Bennett when ordered to do so by the attorney general, Dempsey said.

"There's been a big upsurge in security," said Chuck Vance, a former Secret Service agent who now runs a $20 million-a-year security company, Vance International. "There's been an increased concern."

While Vance favors a wide range of preventive measures — security systems in houses and concrete barriers to buildings, to name a few — he said the "bodyguard business sometimes gets overdone."

While trained security agents can deter trouble, too many guards can be counterproductive, he said. "You will attract nuts if there is a big security splash."

But bodyguards definitely are in, for government officials as well as private citizens like business executives.

Neil Livingstone, writing in his book "The Cult of Counterterrorism," quoted Washington restaurateur Victor Colucci as saying bodyguards "are a mark of importance. When someone says to a maitre d' that he or she needs an extra table for their security personnel, it is immediately assumed they are important."

An informal check of several agencies revealed a broad range of personal security, from the knot of Secret Service agents protecting Bush to the single staff aide who goes around town with Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole or the driver who accompanies Jack Kemp, the secretary of housing and urban development.

"He just jumps in the car and away he goes. He got rid of all that stuff," said Kemp spokesman Bob Nipp, referring to the entourage that surrounded former HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce.

Many agencies are reluctant to talk about the security provided officials for fear of attracting unwanted attention. The Secret Service, with its $364 million budget and 1,900 special agents, never talks about security details except in broad terms.

The service, part of the Treasury Department, protects the president, the vice president, their immediate families, Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, presidential candidates and visiting heads of state.

Over the years, Vance said, the service has increased the number of people traveling with top officials.

While the bodyguard function is important, he said the agents' major task is to secure a public area, the advance work.

"Security is taking away the opportunity to harm," he said. If an assailant gets too close, there's little a bodyguard can do other than "damage control," he said. Thus, when former President Reagan was shot in March 1981, agents pushed him into a car which sped to the hospital.

While the Secret Service protects the White House contingent and the marshals are responsible for the federal judiciary, most officials rely on security details inside their agencies for protection.

CIA Director William Webster has plain-clothed men from his agency who stand at the entrance of the tennis court for Webster's 7 a.m. games. When he visits friends in Georgetown, the agents stay outside in a parked car.

The FBI, part of the Justice Department, takes care of Thornburgh and FBI Director William Sessions, and Secretary of State James Baker III and Defense Secretary Dick Cheney have details from their agencies.

The Supreme Court has its own armed security force, although the justices are among the most inconspicuous officials in Washington.

Business, Schools, Partners

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — The news that RJR-Nabisco will contribute $30 million to finance major changes in American public schools is only the latest in a recent series of business efforts to improve education.

RJR's offer serves as an exclamation point to a number of smaller local business initiatives that are being announced nearly every day in North Carolina. None are as dramatic as a $30 million benefaction, and some don't involve any money at all, but they could have a tremendous influence on community efforts to improve education.

RJR plans to provide grants to individual schools which want to pursue educational innovation. Educators often can't find the public funding for new efforts, and thus new ideas often go untried.

Under the School Reform Act passed by the General Assembly last August, schools which seek to be innovative will have greater leeway, if they can find the needed money.

But a business doesn't have to pledge huge amounts of money to help its local schools. At a conference on business-school partnerships recently held in Chapel Hill, a number of school districts reported on the help they are receiving from their business communities.

Analysis

Wake County, which pioneered the business partnership idea a decade ago, is borrowing talent from the Triangle's many research companies. Scientists are spending time in Wake County schools, conducting experiments and, it is hoped, helping encourage students to become more interested in scientific study. Hundreds of scientists have volunteered their time, and the state is looking at the program for possible expansion.

The Craven County schools have a business partnership which last year helped finance an intensive preparation course for the Scholastic Aptitude Tests. Kathy Curran, director of the program, said during the conference that some teens saw their SAT scores rise by 200 to 300 points after taking the course.

Jan Allen, director of the Granville County program, told of the financial support her system received when it purchased a new computer instruction system. More than $300,000 was raised to get the program started, and now the schools are trying to raise $1 million.

But Granville businesses are being asked to do more than give money. They're being asked to promote education with their workers. A special Granville program asks businesses to sign a pledge to give priority in hiring to high school graduates, to limit student working hours, to monitor student performance in school and encourage student workers to do well in school. Ms. Allen says that on the program's first day, 14 businesses signed the pledge.

Granville County is also showing considerable political courage in this program. It pledges to publish the names of those firms which sign up for the program. Those which don't and which continue to employ students on late night shifts or for too many hours during the school week, will also have their names published.

In Rowan County, one of the state's largest employers of teens has launched a similar program. Food Lion is tying employment in their stores to performance in school. Kids who don't measure up at school are being told that they won't keep their jobs.

State businesses are showing that you don't need $30 million to help improve the schools.

Paul O'Connor writes for the Capital Press Association in Raleigh.

'Stunned' In Durham

Dennis Patterson

DURHAM — Looking back on it, Nelson Strawbridge wishes he hadn't done so well in Durham's mayoral primary.

Strawbridge, who was backed by a new conservative group, Friends of Durham, led the balloting with a 3,000-vote margin Oct. 10, and six city council candidates backed by the group also led the voting.

But when the dust settled Tuesday night, Strawbridge was 3,000 votes down as Durham elected Chester Jenkins its first black mayor. Only two of the candidates backed by the conservative group will be taking seats on the council.

"I guess may we shouldn't have done so well the first time," Strawbridge said last week. "They sure stunned us in the second one."

The liberal-progressive coalition made up of the Durham Committee on the Affairs of Black People, the People's Alliance and Durham Voters Alliance have dominated Durham's politics for years.

A number of controversial issues, including a gay rights measure, development restrictions and a plan to bypass the voters with "certificates of indebtedness" for building projects, galvanized conservatives.

Strawbridge gathered 9,000 votes in the primary, while Jenkins finished second with 6,000 as the coalition haggled over who to support. In Tuesday's voting, Jenkins finished with 16,136 votes, while Strawbridge pulled in 13,026.

In the last two weeks of the campaign, the coalition phoned 8,000 to 10,000 homes and mailed out about 3,000 newsletters to specific precincts.

"Our effort was the greatest effort we've ever taken, and it was in response to the most organized effort I've ever seen coming from the Friends of Durham," said Julia Borbely-Brown, a spokeswoman of the Durham Voters Alliance.

"We didn't recognize the strength that they had, and we didn't realize they could muster the strength that they did," said Strawbridge. He said he had not been surprised by the three-month-old conservative group's showing in the primary.

"The surprise I got was when the liberals came out the way they did," he said. "There are a lot of conservatives, a lot of moderates here."

"The circles I travel in are generally conservative, and I knew there was more strength there than people might realize," he said. "Fiscally, I'm conservatives, but I'm not necessarily conservative in all areas."

"I think there's no question but what the liberals and the black voters took care of us this time," he said. "But of course, they have a lot more experience than we do in getting out their vote."

He said the conservative group is not about to fold their tent, despite winning only two council seats.

"We're sure not going to give up," he said. "We hope we can surprise them the next time."

Dennis Patterson writes for the Associated Press.

Krenz Gamble Pays Off

Abner Katzman

BERLIN — Egon Krenz's gamble that an open door policy would not backfire has paid off. All but a few of the millions of East Germans who flooded West Germany over the weekend returned home.

In charge of a faltering economy and a government under siege by calls for democracy, East Germany's new Communist leader created a safety valve by opening the doors to the West. The lack of freedom to travel to the West has been among the most bitter complaints of East Germans.

More importantly, Krenz bought time for the political and economic reforms he has promised by boosting his credibility with East Germans who had doubted the sincerity of his pledges.

Gunter Schabowski, a member of the ruling Politburo and East Berlin's Communist Party chief, said the border opening proved the East German leadership was serious and decisive about reforms.

"The needs of the people were clear to us and we knew that the decision entailed risks," the state-run news agency ADN quoted Schabowski as saying. He said he never feared the situation would get out of control, that trust had been won back.

ADN reported that East German officials had issued nearly 4.3 million visas for travel to the West between Thursday and late Sunday.

West German officials said that of the more than 3 million East Germans who poured in over the weekend, only about 2 percent opted to remain under laws that guarantee automatic citizenship to East Germans.

Krenz's hand was forced by a combined challenge: the flight of 200,000 East Germans this year and massive street protests demanding reform.

To stem the flight of East Germany's youngest and most talented workers, Krenz opened locked doors that had done much to fuel the exodus West.

In doing so, he has also taken the pressure off Czechoslovakia, which had reluctantly become a conduit for tens of thousands of East German refugees who poured over its frontiers to the West in recent weeks.

Prague's orthodox Communist leaders have refused to join East Germany, Hungary and Poland in endorsing democratic change.

Krenz gambled that a look at West Germany's glittering economy would not permanently lure most East Germans into deserting their homes and jobs.

The weekend's visitors to the West went on a spending spree for fresh fruit and electronic gadgetry scarce back home, then went back across the border.

The fallout from the massive influx to West Germany is likely to increase pressure on the East German government to improve its people's standard of living, already the envy of many Warsaw Pact neighbors.

Computer Criminals May Escape Prosecution

By Barton Reppert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Computer crime specialists fear that renegade programmers who attack the nation's computing networks with viruses and other software mischief may be able to escape prosecution under existing laws.

Joseph B. Tompkins Jr., chairman of the American Bar Association's Task Force on Computer Crime, told a congressional panel this past week that "there are clearly some types of computer virus activity that would be beyond the terms of the current statute."

He and other witnesses outlined a series of activities that could fall through the cracks of ambiguous federal laws.

For example, if a computer hacker sends a program laced with a hidden virus to an electronic bulletin board, can he be prosecuted for harm that results when other bulletin board users transfer the virus-infected software into their own systems?

Can the hacker be successfully prosecuted if he claims that he really didn't have any malicious intent, but instead was merely trying to pull off an innocent prank — or aiming to demonstrate existing weaknesses in computer security?

Under current federal law, the answer to both questions is "maybe."

These are among key issues being considered by the House Judiciary subcommittee on criminal justice as it studies legislation designed to help fight viruses and other forms of malicious software.

The panel's chairman, Rep. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y., said last week that computer viruses "cost industry and government at least millions of dollars in damage and disruption ... and yet there is no specific federal criminal statute in place to attack this type of malicious programming."

Schumer said afterward that "it seems to me that presently not enough is going on" to combat viruses. "I think the likelihood is that we will do some kind of legislation," he said.

Computer viruses generally are small strings of computer code that can "infect" legitimate computer programs and may cause destruction or alteration of data files.

The Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1986 makes it a federal crime to "intentionally access a federal interest computer without authorization and alter, destroy or damage information in such computer or prevent authorized access to such computer if such conduct causes the loss of $1,000 or more during any one-year period."

"Federal interest" applies to U.S. government computers, computers of financial institutions and cases involving computers located in more than one state.

But at last week's hearing, Tompkins said "the statute does not in clear terms cover the intentional implantation of a computer virus in a computer which one is authorized to access, even if the perpetrator clearly intended harm or the virus in fact caused significant harm."

The question of intent has been raised in the federal court case pending against Robert Tappan Morris, 24, of Arnold, Md.

Morris, who at the time was a Cornell University graduate student, has been indicted in connection with the so-called "worm" which in November 1988 paralyzed about 6,000 computers connected to the Internet electronic network.

The case is slated to go to trial Nov. 29 in Syracuse, N.Y. If convicted, Morris faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Morris' attorney sought to have the indictment dismissed on several grounds, contending that Morris did not have the intent to cause losses of $1,000 or more. However, the government argued that the statute requires only that the defendant intend to access a federal interest computer without authorization.

Tompkins said "the fact that the intent requirement ... was the subject of serious dispute indicates that the provision should be reviewed."

He said the law also has been attacked as unconstitutionally vague.

"While these arguments are probably overstated, clarifying the statute might prevent such arguments from being raised and might encourage prosecutors to make more frequent use of the statute," he said.

Three anti-virus bills are pending in the House, sponsored by Reps. Wally Herger, R-Calif.; C. Thomas McMillen, D-Md.; and Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the Energy and Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications and finance.

Herger's bill would impose penalties of up to 20 years in prison on people convicted of "interfering with the operations of computers through the use of programs containing hidden commands that can cause harm."

The McMillen measure seeks to punish anyone who "willfully and knowingly sabotages the proper operation of a computer hardware system or the associated software."

Markey's bill would make the introduction of a computer virus into an interstate electronic network a federal crime.

At last week's hearing, the legislative initiatives were strongly criticized by John L. Pickett, president of the Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association, a Washington-based industry group whose member companies last year had combined sales of more than $230 billion.

"Like the swine flu vaccine of the 1970s, these anti-virus bills could end up doing more harm than good," he testified.

Pickett contended that "outlawing some of the programming techniques used to create computer viruses might prevent the use of similar programs for beneficial purposes, including countering a virus."

Also, he said, "the same sharing techniques which make computer networks vulnerable to virus attack can also be responsible for breakthroughs in electronics and telecommunications technology."

Connecticut's Top Police Official Out After Taping Inmates' Calls

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARTFORD, Conn. — The state's top police officer resigned under fire over secret taping of prisoners' telephone calls that defense attorneys say could be grounds for retrial of criminal cases as far back as 1980.

The taping "should not have been done, was wrong and cannot be tolerated," Gov. William A. O'Neill said Sunday in announcing the resignation of Cmdr. Lester J. Forst.

"Do I believe it was done with intent and malice aforethought? The answer to that is probably not...."

"I felt that I had ... responsibility to make sure that the people in the state of Connecticut have total trust in the state police department and certainly that their rights are protected."

Forst's resignation as state police commander and public safety commissioner came less than a week after it was revealed that officers recorded all incoming and outgoing calls at the 12 regional state police barracks.

The taping may have started nine years ago, attorneys said.

In a four-sentence letter to the governor, the 54-year-old Forst described his departure after eight years in the $81,000-a-year job as a resignation. He denied violating any laws and said he was unaware of the taping.

O'Neill named former Hartford Police Chief Bernard R. Sullivan, 46, to replace Forst. Sullivan has been security director for The Hartford insurance company since July.

The governor ordered an halt to taping of attorney-client calls.

After the taping was reported last week by TheHartford Courant, a defense lawyers' organization filed a class-action lawsuit contending that police could have illegally gathered evidence from tapes of attorney-client calls. If that is proven, prosecutions could be endangered, the lawyers said in announcing the federal suit seeking money damages for those whose conversations were taped.

"I would think that pending cases are subject to dismissal and that convictions are likely to be overturned," said Margaret Levy.

Ship Collision Kills U.S. Sailor

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SINGAPORE — A U.S. Navy destroyer and a merchant ship hobbled into Singapore's port today after a collision between them that killed one Navy crewman, injured five, and started fires on both vessels, the Navy said.

It was the latest in a series of fatal accidents involving Navy ships in the past two weeks.

The USS Kinkaid was bound from the Indian Ocean to Singapore for a visit early Sunday when it collided with the 430-foot freighter Kota Petani in the Malacca Strait, 240 miles northwest of Singapore.

Lt. Sean Michael McPhee, 24, of Santa Rosa, Calif., a navigator on the ship, was killed in the pre-dawn collision, said Cmdr. David Dillon, spokesman for the Naval Surface Force in San Diego, where the ship is based.

At Subic Bay in the Philippines, 7th Fleet spokesman Lt. Joe Gradisher said none of the five injured seamen was in serious condition.

Tugs were waiting to tow the Kinkaid into the Sembawang Shipyard on Tuesday for repairs.

Navy spokesmen did not explain how the accident occurred, but Lt. Cmdr. Bob Anderson, a spokesman for the Pacific Fleet headquarters at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, said the collision tore a 15-by-56-foot hole above the waterline on the right side of the destroyer.

The Kota Petani sustained major damage to its bow, but there were no injuries reported on the merchant ship, he said.

The strait where the collision occurred separates Malaysia and the Indonesian island of Sumatra and the damaged vessels were expected in Singapore waters late today or early Tuesday.

Fires that broke out on both ships were quickly put out with the help of the USS Rentz, a guided missile frigate accompanying the Kinkaid, said U.S. Embassy spokesman Richard Gong.

He said he assumed the Rentz was accompanying the damaged vessels to Singapore because they were "limping along, not fully operational" — though under their own power.

The 563-foot Kinkaid has a crew of 20 officers and 297 enlisted men.

The 13,687-ton freighter is owned by St. Vincent Grenadines of Panama and managed by Pacific International Lines of Singapore.

An International Lines executive said the freighter left Singapore last week with cargo for the Middle East.

The Navy is investigating the cause of the collision.

Echoing other recent Navy comments, Anderson said the string of shipboard accidents in the past two weeks were just bad luck.

"We don't feel it's a training problem, and these accidents are totally unrelated to each other, and it's just unfortunate," he said.

Bombs Strike Near Campsite

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DESERT CENTER, Calif. — Two U.S. Navy jets mistakenly dropped a dozen bombs about 300 yards from a campsite, leaving six campers shaken, including one who was slightly injured by shrapnel.

Two A-6 attack bombers from the Naval Air Facility in El Centro accidentally dropped the round of explosives three miles north of the Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range, a Navy spokesman said Sunday.

"It was definitely a mistake, but as to why I don't know," said Mike Ray, public affairs officer for the El Centro station. Saturday's bombing was under investigation and Ray said he had no further comment.

YOUR EYEGLASS PRESCRIPTION

What does the Federal Trade Commission say about "Eyeglass Prescriptions"

- Q. Can I charge my patients an extra fee for releasing the prescription?
A. No. The Rule makes it illegal for you to charge your patients any fee in excess of your normal examination fee as a charge for releasing the prescription. So if your normal examination fee is $30, you cannot add an extra $5 or $10 for releasing the prescription.
- Q. When do I have to give out a prescription?
A. The prescription must be given to your patient immediately after you complete the eye examination. This means that you must give your patient his or her prescription before you begin your dispensing procedures (if you also dispense eyeglasses).
- Q. What if my patient doesn't ask for the prescription? Do I still have to give it out to my patient?
A. Yes. The Rule requires that you prepare the prescription and physically offer it to the patient. Of course, you can't force the patient to take it, but you must offer him or her the written prescription. Simply asking your patients whether they want their prescription is not sufficient. We found that many consumers had never seen a prescription for corrective eyewear, and thus were unaware that they could take that piece of paper and use it to comparison shop.
- Q. What is the penalty for violating the Rule?
A. The penalty for violating the Rule is up to $10,000 per violation.
- Q. How can I report violations of the Rule?
A. You can contact us directly in Washington, D.C. Our mailing address in Washington is: Eyeglasses TRR, Federal Trade Commission, Room 281, Washington, DC 20580

Monday Quarterback:

With two football games left on the 1989 schedule, East Carolina's Pirates can look ahead to two more chances to claim their first winning season since 1983 and only the third winner in the decade. They'll probably also look back at some time and wonder how much difference four fewer seconds, or one more good offensive or one more good defensive play would have made against Syracuse. Or perhaps they'll look back on the Louisiana Tech game and wonder about a couple of more good offensive or defensive plays there. For right now, the Pirates could easily have been 7-2 on the season. And, if that were so, who knows what might have happened in the other two games. Certainly Miami is more talented. With Todd Ellis, South Carolina is a much more explosive team. But, in the whacky world of football, what if...

Next year, the Pirate slate may be a fraction easier than this year's, if you look at won-lost records.

ECU will open the season at home against Louisiana Tech then travel to Florida State. They have other home dates against Virginia Tech, Southern Mississippi, Cincinnati and Northern Illinois. Road dates also include Southwestern Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, Temple and Memphis State.

Five of this year's opponents, currently 29-16-1, drop off the schedule and five new ones, currently 29-19, come on.

The five newcomers include Florida State, Southwestern, Georgia, Memphis State and Northern Illinois. Only Memphis State, 2-8, has a losing record. Northern Illinois, not well known in this part of the country, is 8-2, the best record among the newcomers.

To this point in the season, ECU's 1989 opponents are 50-50-5 while next year's foes are 50-53-4. Only three teams on this year's schedule, Southern Miss, Cincinnati and Temple have losing records right now and all return. That would give ECU's 1990 schedule four teams with losing marks.

However, it might be noted that six of this year's foes had losing records last season.

And what if Fayetteville's Seventy-First High School had lost to Anson County High School this past Friday.

Rose High, by beating Jacksonville, earned a home game for the second round of the State High School 4-A Playoffs this Friday night. The Rampants will entertain Seventy-First in the game.

However, if Anson County had won, almost a full-house would have been guaranteed for Daniels Field this weekend. The coach of the Anson County team is former East Carolina head coach Ed Emory.

ECU Injuries At Critical Stage

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

By late season, most college football teams are pretty bruised up, but the situation has reached an extreme at East Carolina.

The Pirates face one of their toughest games of the year Saturday at Pittsburgh, but must overcome a recent bad rash of injuries.

"I think as the season goes on, guys are beginning to get banged up," ECU linebacker Robert Jones said. "A lot of guys are hurt, but they're still playing. It's sort of like freak accidents among all of us. I guess that's football."

ECU went into this past Saturday's game against Temple, a 31-24 Pirate win, with thinned ranks, especially at tailback where the top three players were already out of action.

The situation worsened as starting strong safety Derrick Fields and starting tailback Cedric Van Buren both went down with ankle injuries.

"At the beginning of the season we were coming along with good without the injuries," ECU fullback Dave Daniels said. "Then it seemed like all of the injuries are coming at once."

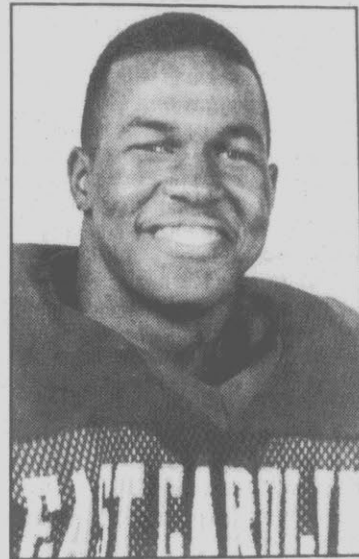

Fields has a severely twisted ankle and is probably out for the remaining two games of the season. That's a big loss for the Pirates.

Fields calls defensive signals for the Bucs and is one of the hardest hitters on the team.

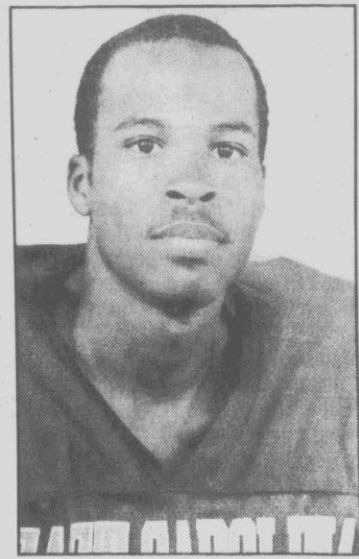

"It was a concern for us going into the ball game," ECU defensive coordinator Tom McMahon said. "He was (already) banged up."

"Earnest Tynes is the other player who has played a lot back there. We'll also look at Ed Brogdon."

Van Buren also twisted an ankle, but he might be able to play against Pittsburgh.

"I don't know what's wrong with it," Van Buren said. "The only thing I know is the back of my tendon is hurting pretty bad when I try to step up on my toes."

"I wanted to get back in there. I tried to jog on the sideline. I couldn't get any cuts in there. I just hope I can get back in there next weekend."

Daniels will continue to handle double duty in the backfield at his regular position of fullback and at tailback.

The injury list began to grow just before the Bucs met Syracuse Oct. 28 as tailbacks Eric Booker and Denell Harper both went down with injuries in practice prior to the game. Backup offensive tackle Tod Creech also went down with a knee injury that week.

Linebacker George Koonce broke his wrist and backup defensive back Donald Porch injured a knee against the Orangemen.

Starting tailback Willie Lewis had his season ended by a knee injury the following week against Miami. Wide receiver Walter Wilson re-injured a separated shoulder against the Hurricanes but has continued to play hurt.

"We'll have to regroup and be as strong and healthy as we can get our football team as we travel to Pittsburgh for what will be a tremendous challenge," ECU coach Bill Lewis said. "We'll be going up there somewhat shorthanded."

The injuries have created playing time for a number for some of the Pirates' reserves.

Tynes, Brogdon and converted receiver Darren Bynum have seen considerable action in the secondary. Van Buren, a freshman, got his first start of the season last Saturday. Wide receiver Hunter Gallimore has spelled Wilson at times.

"Since our starting tailback is hurt and Derrick Fields is hurt, a lot of guys have stepped in and done a great job," Jones said. "Earnest Tynes made a couple of big plays (Saturday). We have a lot of guys that just need the opportunity."

They'll get that chance Saturday against 14th-ranked Pittsburgh, — —, which is coming off a 24-3 loss to Miami Saturday.

"We're hurting bad all over," Wilson said. "A lot of guys have major injuries. It's out of the ordinary. I just hope we can get healthy. We need all the manpower we can get against Pittsburgh because they're tough."

Giants Crash In L.A.; 49ers Alone With 9-1 Mark

Rams Regain Magic Touch

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Just as mysteriously as they had abruptly taken up losing, the Los Angeles Rams suddenly rediscovered the winning touch.

And the New York Giants' bubble has burst, at least for the moment.

The Rams, mentioned as Super Bowl material when they opened with five straight victories, took on that look again Sunday by dominating the Giants 31-10.

Between the hot start and the impressive victory over New York, however, Los Angeles slogged through a four-game losing streak.

"We've come through a tough period, the toughest I've been through as a coach," the Rams' John Robinson said. "It was a huge game for us, a HUGE game."

"We played the kind of football I think the Rams are capable of playing. It certainly put us back in the hunt. Now I think we have something to look forward to."

The victory gave the Rams a 6-4 record, brightening their prospects for a wild-card playoff berth. They're a distant second in the NFC West, three games behind the San Francisco 49ers.

Lending credence to the Rams' resurgence was the fact that they beat one of the league's hottest teams. The Giants came to Anaheim with a four-game winning streak and an 8-1 record that matched San Francisco for the NFL's best mark.

Despite losing, New York maintained a two-game lead in the NFC East thanks to Philadelphia's 10-3 loss to Washington.

"We didn't lose any ground, but the Rams just outplayed us," Giants coach Bill Parcells said.

New York didn't gain much ground, either. Dominated defensively by the Rams, the Giants managed just 6 yards rushing on 10 carries.

Phil Simms, back at quarterback after a two-week absence due to an ankle injury, moved the Giants better through the air, going 25 of 38 for 237 yards. But his passing produced no points.

The Rams' Jim Everett, on the other hand, led his team's return to respectability, completing 18 in a row at one point and finishing 23 of 33 for 295 yards and two scores.

Those two touchdowns, within a 14-second span of the final minute of the first half, put the Rams in control with a 24-3 lead.

Everett, who looked like an All-Pro in the Rams' first five games but struggled during the losing streak, was relieved.

"Going four weeks like that, it's not a monkey on your back; that was a gorilla," Everett said. "I'm glad we got rid of that."

Bengals Enter House Of Pain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Houston Oilers coach Jerry Glanville has fond memories of the Cincinnati Bengals' last visit to the Astrodome. He'd like to see a repeat performance.

The Oilers sent the Bengals home red-faced after a 41-6 victory in the Astrodome last Dec. 8, and Glanville spent last week reminding his team how they beat the Super Bowl-bound Bengals to avenge an earlier rout.

"What we need to do is execute like we did last time they came to the House of Pain (Astrodome)," Glanville said as his team prepared to host the Bengals tonight. "That was as fine a game as the Oilers have played."

The two teams are 5-4 this season and neither is playing up to the playoff form they demonstrated last season.

Cincinnati has lost three of its last four games and the Oilers have retained the dual personality that has kept their fans guessing the past three years.

"I watched us play Cincinnati last year and we're not as good as we were then and they aren't as good either," Glanville said.

"It's a shock watching us play last year and how good we really should be. We've got to get healthy, get well and reach that peak like we were a year ago."

In each of the past two seasons, the Oilers have reached the playoffs with at least one hot streak. Glanville hopes the same is true this year: The Oilers have won three of their last four.

It took Warren Moon's best performance of the year for the Oilers to get past the Detroit Lions 35-31 eight days ago while the Bengals were losing to the Los Angeles Raiders 28-7 — and losing quarterback Boomer Esiason in the process.

Esiason suffered a bruised lung against the Raiders but he's expected to be ready for the Oilers.

"I guess this is the rubber match," Cincinnati coach Sam Wyche said. "We embarrassed them up here and they embarrassed us down there."

Despite blowouts in their last two meetings, Glanville anticipates a tight game.

"It's a series where the team with the ball last usually has a chance to win the ball game," Glanville said. "Last year, they blew us away and then we blew them away."

"I look for it to go back to that, whoever has the ball last has a chance to win."

Moon is the No. 2 rated passer in the AFC behind Buffalo's Jim Kelly and Esiason is rated No. 3.

Cincinnati's defense has dropped to No. 18 in the NFL.

"We aren't getting pounded, we're just getting beat with the long pass or the one breakaway run and that's something we've got to stop," Wyche said.

The Oilers' defense has sagged on pass coverage and Glanville says a return to hard-nosed man-to-man coverage will be a part of the solution.

"The bottom line is that you have to play man-to-man and if people don't want to do it, they have to come out of the game," Glanville said. "If you're not good enough to plan man against a good throwing team, you're not going to win."

Houston is ranked No. 2 in the NFL against the run but is 19th against the pass. The Bengals rank No. 1 in rushing offense and No. 18 in passing.

Cincinnati is 6-10 in Monday night games, including a string of three straight victories. Houston is 7-6 in Monday night games.

Montana-Rice Tandem Scorches Falcons, 45-3

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The San Francisco 49ers and New York Giants went into the weekend on the West Coast tied for the best record in the NFL. Now, two weeks before their showdown at Candlestick Park, they seem miles apart.

The 49ers crushed Atlanta 45-3 Sunday, their biggest rout in two seasons. The Giants crashed in Los Angeles, losing 31-10 to the Rams.

"I think we finally arrived as far as putting all four quarters together and being dominating and executing well," Roger Craig said after running for 109 yards as San Francisco improved to 9-1.

The 49ers stayed three games ahead of the Rams in the NFC West. The Giants maintained their two-game lead in the NFC East over Philadelphia, which lost 10-3 to Washington.

Elsewhere, Denver rallied past Dallas 24-20, Phoenix got by Kansas City 16-13, Buffalo beat Indianapolis 30-7, Detroit downed Green Bay 31-22, Chicago defeated Pittsburgh 20-0, Miami topped the New York Jets 31-23, New Orleans beat New England 28-24, Washington defeated Philadelphia 10-3, Cleveland stopped Seattle 17-7 and San Diego edged the Los Angeles Raiders 14-12.

Tonight, Cincinnati plays at Houston.

49ers 45, Falcons 3
Joe Montana threw three touchdown passes, two to Jerry Rice, as San Francisco won its sixth straight game. Montana was 16-for-19 for 270 yards in less than three quarters and Craig reached the 100-yard mark for the first time in nine weeks.

The 49ers held Atlanta (3-7, 0-6 on the road) to a 25-yard field goal by quarterback Chris Miller, who was pressed into service when kicker Paul McFadden was injured in pregame practice.

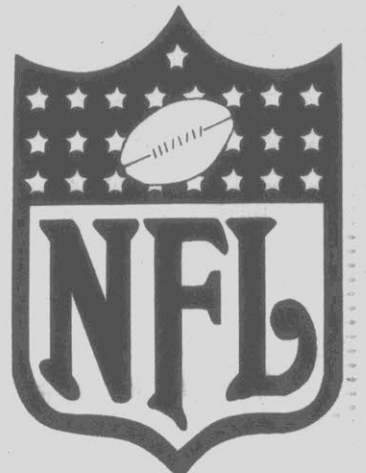

"I didn't know he was hurt until we called time out. The last time I kicked was some extra points my junior year in high school," said Miller, who made the finals of the NFL's Punt, Pass and Kick competition four times as a youngster.

Cardinals 24, Cowboys 20

Reserve quarterback Tom Tupa threw a 72-yard touchdown pass to Ernie Jones with 58 seconds left, rallying Phoenix over Dallas.

The visiting Cowboys (1-9) went ahead 20-17 with 1:43 left on Troy Aikman's 75-yard TD pass to James Dixon. But the Cardinals (5-5) came back when Tupa lofted a third-down pass that Jones caught near the sideline and carried for his second score of the game.

Tupa took over after Gary Hogeboom was benched at halftime. Hogeboom was 7-for-13 for 91 yards and Tupa was 14-for-22 for 245 yards.

Aikman, sidelined since breaking his left index finger Oct. 1, completed 21 of 40 passes for 379 yards. He was intercepted twice — both by Tim McDonald, who returned one 53 yards for a touchdown.

Broncos 16, Chiefs 13
David Treadwell kicked a 26-yard field goal with one second left as Denver won in Kansas City.

The Chiefs, playing without injured Christian Okoye, the NFL's leading rusher, made it 13-13 on Steve Pelluer's 3-yard TD pass to Emile Harry with 5:36 left.

John Elway then drove the Broncos 71 yards in 10 plays. On third-and-8 and the Chiefs' 39, Steve Sewell took a shovel pass and ran to the 9 with four seconds left.

Denver leads the AFC West at 8-2 and the Chiefs are 4-6.

Bears 20, Steelers 0
Chicago won in Pittsburgh for the first time since World War II as the Bears took advantage of six turnovers.

Jim Harbaugh passed for one touchdown and ran for another, helping Chicago convert two mistakes into 13 points in the final 2:07 of the first half.

Kevin Butler kicked two field goals, giving him 12 straight this season and 22 in a row over two seasons. The record is 23, set by Washington's Mark Moseley in 1981-82.

Lemuel Stinson intercepted two passes and William Perry had two sacks and a fumble recovery. Chicago (6-4) was ranked 19th defensively, but gave the Steelers (4-6) their third shutout in 10 games.

The Bears had been 0-1-1 in Pittsburgh since 1944.

Bills 20, Colts 7
Jim Kelly threw three touchdown passes, two to Andre Reed, and Buffalo capitalized on three fumble recoveries in the first quarter.

The host Bills, leading the AFC East at 7-3, got going when James Pruitt fumbled the opening kickoff. Eric Dickerson fumbled on In-

Satellite Will Study Radiation Left By 'Big Bang'

By Lee Siegel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — NASA this month plans to embark on a $400 million mission during which a satellite will study radiation left from the "big bang," the 15-billion-year-old blast that scientists say created the universe.

The space agency hopes the launch will produce the most comprehensive observations ever of the early universe and the processes that shaped it to form stars and galaxies.

The $150 million Cosmic Background Explorer, a 16-by-28-foot satellite, will be boosted into orbit 559 miles above Earth by NASA's last unmanned rocket, said George Diller, an agency spokesman.

The Vandenberg Air Force Base launch had been scheduled for Friday but has been delayed until at least Nov. 19 to replace a malfunctioning guidance computer on the two-stage Delta rocket.

The 116-foot rocket that will lift the 5,000-pound Explorer into orbit will be the 184th Delta launched by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the last expendable rocket NASA will ever launch, Diller said.

NASA stopped buying rockets in the early 1980s, deciding to launch payloads from shuttles after its booster inventory was exhausted. After the 1986 Challenger explosion, NASA said it was wrong to rely on the shuttle. Then President Reagan ordered the agency to stop launching commercial payloads and give such business to private industry.

After a 30-day shakedown, the solar-powered Explorer will spend up to two years using three sensitive detectors to study how the universe and its stars and galaxies developed, program scientist Larry Caroff said from Washington.

The instruments will measure "cosmic background" radiation. Such radiation is different than dangerous ionizing radiation. It includes microwaves, infrared light and "submillimeter" radiation left over from the big bang — the gargantuan explosion that scientists believe was the fireball of creation.

"If God created the universe, he or she did it about 15 billion years ago — and did it with a bang," Caroff said.

In an instant, a single point of matter expanded explosively into a hot, dense and extraordinarily uniform sphere of gas containing electrically charged particles, according to the theory.

"Think of a sphere with us at the center," Caroff said. The surface "is moving away from us very fast, glowing and emitting radiation. That sphere is the hot gas characteristic of the early universe. We have to look very, very far back in time, which means very far out in the universe, to see that hot surface."

By measuring cosmic background radiation, the Explorer will look back to certain times in the history of the universe, he explained.

One of Explorer's instruments will measure infrared light, or heat, emitted when the first atoms are believed to have formed 500,000 years after the big bang. That will help scientists learn if, between three minutes to 500,000 years after the big bang, the universe was shaped by exotic phenomena such as black holes, which are so dense their gravity sucks in light.

The satellite's microwave sensor will look for differences in the brightness of cosmic background radiation to determine if the big bang's fireball was equally bright in all directions.

"Out of that extraordinarily uniform collection of hot matter eventually had to come galaxies and stars — what is obviously a very lumpy distribution of matter," Caroff said. "The seeds of that lumpiness must have been present in the early universe, and the (microwave) instrument is meant to look for those seeds."

Navy Flights Resume

SMYRNA, Ga. (AP) — Military jets resumed flights over this Atlanta suburb three days after a Navy attack plane crashed into an apartment complex, killing two people and critically injuring two.

Officials of Naval Air Station Atlanta had said pilots were taking a few days off from training flights.

But Petty Officer Linda Herring said Sunday the Navy considered the crash an "isolated incident" and was not suspending any flight operations.

Funerals will be paid by the Navy, The Marietta Daily Journal reported today, quoting unidentified officials.

The jet was returning to the station adjacent to Dobbins Air Force Base 15 miles from downtown Atlanta when it went down.

On Saturday, residents of the 76-unit complex received $140,000 in interim compensation from the Navy and displaced families began retrieving possessions that survived the fire.

Twelve families whose apartments were destroyed have been relocated.

U.S. Sues Owners Of Grounded Ship

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The government is suing the owners of a Greek freighter that ran aground on a fragile coral reef in the Florida Keys, blaming negligence for the third such grounding in less than three weeks.

The U.S. Attorney's office filed the lawsuit Sunday with a federal magistrate.

Today, a Coast Guard board of inquiry was scheduled to begin taking testimony from officers and crew, said Justice Department spokeswoman Diane Cossin.

Federal agents already have seized the 470-foot freighter MV Elpis, which smashed living corals when it grounded Friday night on Elbow Reef in the Key Largo National Marine Sanctuary.

"At this point, we're alleging negligence on behalf of those in charge of the vessel," Ms. Cossin said. The U.S. District Court suit will demand payment of recovery costs and compensation for damage to the ocean ecosystem, but the amount hasn't been decided, Ms. Cossin said.

A similar suit in one of the earlier groundings seeks $9 million in damages.

The Elpis ran aground as its crew deliberately steered close to the reef, away from the northward currents of the Gulf Stream, to save time and fuel, said Michael White, manager of the Key Largo National Marine Sanctuary.

"They were a little bit confused by the (navigation) lights," said sanctuary officer Jayson Horadam. "They knew something was wrong, but as they were rechecking their position, they went aground."

The ship, carrying sugar and fuel oil, floated free at high tide Saturday. There were no reports of fuel leaking.

Federal agents boarded the vessel and moved it to an anchorage off Miami Beach, Ms. Cossin said.

The grounding did serious damage, said Billy Causey, a federal marine biologist who inspected the site Sunday to help prepare estimates for the lawsuit.

"Some of the major framework of the reef has been fractured and damaged considerably," Causey said.

Horadam said he spoke with the crew seven hours after the accident, and they were cooperative.

"At first they weren't comprehending what the big to-do was about," he said. "We explained to them it was like somebody destroying the Acropolis, and that totally got their attention."

Apparel Research Laboratory Brings Home Claim To Fame

By Bill Hughes
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Here in the Carolina foothills, where a lot of the local bragging has to do with football, Clemson University officials say there's something else to crow about.

It's not as flashy as a touchdown play, but in its own way the apparel research laboratory is a significant player in South Carolina's textile industry.

University officials describe the laboratory as "technically the most advanced shirt manufacturing facility in the world."

The laboratory began as part of an effort by the textile industry, Clemson and the Department of Defense to test new manufacturing and management techniques. The lab's founders last November opened its doors to the public to demonstrate state-of-the-art machinery.

Project Director Christine W. Jarvis said the 30,000-square-foot plant — located on a 40-acre tract near Pendleton — houses about $2.2 million worth of apparel machinery, most of it off-the-shelf equipment available to any buyer.

The entire site is owned by the Clemson Research Foundation which purchased it from Schubert & Salzer Machine Works for $840,000 — "a real steal," Ms. Jarvis said. The university operates the center under a lease arrangement with the foundation.

A similar plant built from scratch on the same amount of land likely would have cost up to $5 million, Ms. Jarvis said.

She said the center operates on a $3.2 million grant from the Defense Department. Additional grants and research money are expected to boost funding to about $10 million over five years.

The Clemson project, one of three of its type in the United States, was set up at the instigation of the Defense Department to show the public and the textile industry how a better job could be done in manufacturing clothing.

In looking about to see how U.S. troops would be clothed in the event of a war or a major mobilization, the department became concerned about the state of apparel manufacturing in the United States, Ms. Jarvis said.

Federal law requires military uniforms to be made by U.S. manufacturers, explaining the department's interest in the production conditions it encountered.

"It looked like a number of industries were not investing in new equipment and were not doing the kinds of things that were going to keep them in business for a long time," Ms. Jarvis said.

The demonstration project also was intended to show U.S. apparel against manufacturers how new equipment and methods can help them compete against the lower wages paid in the Third World, where large amounts of apparel sold in the United States are made.

"The equipment here at the site is not research equipment. It is equipment that anybody can go out and buy off the shelf. Bits and pieces of it are in use but nobody has put it together the way we have. The whole mess is here," Ms. Jarvis said.

Most of the machinery has been obtained on loan from manufacturers. Some has been purchased at discounted prices, said James E. Hill, site director for the project.

The equipment comes from a number of domestic companies, but also from foreign manufacturers in West Germany, Italy, Taiwan, Japan, Sweden, France and Canada.

During Friday demonstration runs, the laboratory manufactures a limited number of uniform shirts for the Army and a small number of high-quality dress shirts for the Lands End label. Production volume is limited to the amount needed to show the plant can do what it's designed to do, Hill said.

Ms. Jarvis said the contract with Lands End is important to show that the facility can produce for both the military and civilian markets. The Defense Department would rather buy military apparel from a manufacturer which also has a sizeable civilian production, she said.

The center is host to apparel industry seminars, she said, adding that the project "fits in well with Clemson's mission as a land grant university."

The apparel industry in South Carolina accounts for about 43,000 jobs, Ms. Jarvis said. Apparel operations are supported by some 103,000 textile workers and about 30,000 workers in chemical plants directly tied to textiles.

She said Clemson computer science experts have written a piece of software that can help a manufacturer decide whether a particular machine is cost effective at this plant.

The program is entitled Apparel Manufacturing Capital Investment Advisor and is available to interested industry officials.

Hill said the center also operates a computer bulletin board to let the industry and government agencies know what's new in products or services, and to allow users to exchange electronic mail.

Ms. Jarvis said one of the first projects funded at the center was a computerized cost accounting system put together by Clemson's School of Accounting.

Another research project is aimed at improving work flow and production efficiency.

It takes about 12 minutes to manufacture a shirt in a traditional apparel environment. But six weeks may pass between the time the cloth enters a plant to when it is shipped out as a finished product, she said.

Plant Lilies For Spring

The Associated Press

Lilies were the backbone of many gardens decades ago. Planted in September, Better Homes and Gardens Country Kitchen Ideas magazine says lilies will grace a garden next year with exotic blooms on 2-to-8-foot-tall stems.

Today's hybrids are hardier than strains planted years ago. Recommended early flowering varieties include Enchantment, Nova, and Regale Improved Strain.

Because lily bulbs are never completely dormant, plant immediately. Place bulbs 4 to 8 inches deep (plant Madonna lilies 1 inch deep) in a sunny, well drained location. Mix organic matter with the soil.

For winter protection, cover plants with a generous layer of straw. Remove the straw in early spring.

Wear Makeup With Contacts

NEW YORK (AP) — Contact lens wearers can accent their eyes with makeup without irritation by following a few simple rules.

Kathleen Walas, fashion and beauty director at Avon, says to apply shadow with a sponge-tip applicator rather than a cotton swab so no fibers get into the eye, avoid the inner rim of the lid when applying eyeliner and use hypoallergenic mascara. Never dilute mascara to make it last longer because bacteria can grow in it. Replace it every three months.

Chapter Has Fall Rush

Fall rush was held by Alpha Omega chapter of Epsilon Sigma Alpha last week for Connie Harrell and Peggy Brinn.

Barbara Woods extended greetings from the N.C. State Council and told of philanthropic activities on local and state levels. She is state philanthropic chairman.

The education theme for the year is "ESA in Flight." Education programs were announced by Joan Robinson, chairman. A special program was discussed by Jean Carson. Members will provide a Thanksgiving meal for 15 needy children.

Social Security Opposition Mounting

By Nancy Benac
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Depression-era law that cuts Social Security benefits for older people who work faces growing opposition from congressional critics who say it pushes seniors out of the labor force when the nation needs them.

Benefit reductions from the so-called "earnings test" can combine with federal, state and local taxes to produce such high marginal tax rates that many older workers do just as well staying home, foes say.

"It is a tremendous disincentive to work and a tremendous incentive to just give up and throw in the towel," said Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo. "The marginal tax rate on some people is easily 80 percent and in some cases more."

Workers aged 65-69 this year lose $1 in Social Security benefits for every $2 earned over $8,880, and beneficiaries under 65 face a similar reduction for earnings in excess of $6,480 — a 50 percent effective marginal tax rate by itself. There is no limit for those 70 and older.

In 1990, the threshold is scheduled to rise to $9,360 for those 65-69 and $6,840 for those under 65, and the penalty will be less severe for those 65 and above: a $1 reduction in benefits for every $3 in excess earnings.

But several proposals in Congress would relax the limits further, and calls for repeal are gaining new allies.

Each year almost 1 million Social Security beneficiaries aged 65-69 lose some or all of their benefits because of the earnings test, and another 100,000 don't file for benefits because of it. Others stop working, deliberately hold their earnings to just under the threshold or hide excess wages from the government to avoid the loss of benefits.

A 67-year-old woman who works at a county courthouse in Illinois recently wrote to her congressman that "because of the earnings limit, it just doesn't pay to work beyond the $8,880 limit."

A Haeworth Robinson, chief actuary for the Social Security Administration from 1975-78, once had a maid who quit because he insisted on paying Social Security taxes on her wages, which would have alerted the government to her earnings. Robinson believes the earnings test is justified, but predicted its days are numbered because of mounting opposition.

Those seeking to relax the limits include Rep. Tom Tauke, R-Iowa, who recalled that the woman who took care of his son faced such a big tax bite on her wages due to the earnings test that she "would've been better off if we had simply given her big presents" at Christmas and other holidays.

"It certainly made it clear to us that the system needed to be changed," Tauke said. "This will be around for a while, but certainly the trend and the momentum is toward elimination."

Critics say the earnings test — created along with Social Security in the Depression when older Americans were being encouraged to retire to free up jobs for young workers — is an anachronism at a time when policymakers are trying to keep older people working longer and labor markets are tight.

They also argue that it discriminates against working-class Americans because the benefit reductions are linked only to earnings, and are unaffected by unearned income such as pensions, rent and dividends.

Supporters, meanwhile, maintain it is only fair to limit the retirement benefits paid to those still pulling in a paycheck.

Robert Ball, who headed the Social Security Administration from 1962-73, said there is merit to the original concept of paying Social Security benefits to make up for earnings lost because of retirement. "We've already departed from that a long way and I don't see any reason to go further in the direction of making the program a straight annuity," he said.

That view is shared by Robinson, who said too many people believe Social Security benefits are an earned right they bought and paid for.

Most workers get back far more in benefits than they paid in taxes, government figures show. A typical worker who retired at 65 in 1988 had paid about $12,000 in Social Security taxes, which will be recovered in benefits in two years. The average retiree goes on to collect benefits for 15 to 20 years.

"If you repeal it, you're giving in to this propaganda that this is a pension, that it bears some relationship to what you paid in taxes, and that is just not true," Robinson said.

After years of unsuccessful legislative jostling on the earnings test, Congress appears ready to relax the restrictions over the next two years. The House this fall passed a proposal to boost the earnings threshold to $9,720 next year and $10,440 in 1991. The Senate Finance Committee passed a more generous plan to up the limits to $11,700 next year and then to $14,520.

'Drugstore Cowboy' Movie Based On Convict's Life

By John K. Wiley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WALLA WALLA, Wash. — James Fogle's vivid memories of his life on the outside help him to forget the much longer time he has spent inside prison walls.

His current address is the Washington State Penitentiary, but he has been in juvenile halls, county jails or state and federal lockups for nearly 35 of his 53 years. Most of the crimes were committed to feed a drug addiction.

Now, characters from his life as a junkie and convict have come to life in a movie based on Fogle's jailhouse novel, "Drugstore Cowboy," starring Matt Dillon.

Fogle sits on his bunk in Unit 8 of this state's oldest and largest maximum security prison, his denim blues neatly pressed, and politely answers a reporter's questions about his fledgling writing career.

"I've been locked up so much that I remember everything I did outside. It's like looking at things through a magnifying glass," he said of his writing. "I might even have a better perception of what was happening when I was out there than most people who are out there."

"Drugstore Cowboy" is one of four unpublished novels Fogle has written in prison.

Dillon's character, Bob Hughes, is a composite of himself, cellmate Leonard Hystad and others he has known both inside and outside prisons, Fogle said.

The movie, about a junkie and three friends who commit a series of drugstore holdups in the Northwest, is based on a period of his life when he lived in Portland, Ore.

"I got out of here in 1974 and I was running with a group of people and we were doing the same kind of things. It was just the type of people and things they were doing," he said.

But the movie is more fictional, he said. "None of that is really true. It was all things we started to do and didn't do." In the movie, a female junkie dies of an overdose.

"That never happened to me," Fogle said. "My girlfriend that was with me at that time did end up getting murdered, but that was later when I was back in here."

Fogle gave Dillon a pack of cigarettes when the actor visited him in July 1988 and later sent the actor a ring he made in a prison shop. During the 2 1/2-hour visit, Dillon asked questions about Fogle's life as a junkie.

"He wanted to know a little bit about mannerisms of addicts. I told him, 'man, they all got different ones anyway, so whatever you do is going to be right.' We hit it off pretty well," he said.

The film, which received favorable reviews in openings in Los Angeles and New York, is playing in a dozen major cities and is scheduled for wider distribution this month.

Fogle has seen the movie twice, once in color and once on the small black and white television set in his cell.

"The first time I seen it, I was with people (in a Narcotics Anonymous session) and I didn't know what to expect," he said. "It was a kind of emotional release. I started perspiring. Sweat just started running off me."

But it wasn't until he saw it a second time in black and white that he came to appreciate the film. "Things just sort of blended better, all those things he tried to do," Fogle said of Dillon's performance. "Its got some parts where it's supposed to be like a dope fiend tripping on dope. In black and white it really came out good, more realistic. I think it was better in black and white for me."

His own gray existence as a junkie began at age 25, after serving 8 1/2 years on an auto theft conviction. At first he sold drugs to make a living. Later, he began using them. The search for drugs led to a string of pharmacy robberies, first in California, then in Oregon and Washington state.

Reeling off his pharmaceuticals of choice like a waiter repeating a restaurant menu, Fogle recounts the nearly 20 years he spent rustling drugstores.

At first, there were sympathetic doctors who would prescribe medications. Later, there were forged prescriptions, burglaries and disabling drugstore alarm systems. His favorite method was the "crash and dash" — driving an automobile through a drugstore's front window, snatching up handfuls of drugs and out before police could respond.

He and a partner were not fast enough in Elcho, Wis., his birthplace, while robbing a pharmacy in 1979. His partner was shot and killed by police and Fogle was shipped back to Washington to begin serving a concurrent 22-year prison term for the robbery of a Cowitz County drugstore.

Fogle, who has kicked a smoking habit and regularly attends Narcotics Anonymous sessions, began writing seriously in 1971 after he bought a typewriter with $50 his father sent him. After classes in physics and math in the mornings, he spends most afternoons on his bunk, writing stories in longhand, which he later types.

After writing and then throwing out an autobiography in 1980 — "it was so pointless" — Fogle began working on "Drugstore Cowboy."

The unpublished manuscript found its way to screenwriter and producer Dan Yost, a free-lance writer in Portland, Ore., who has since moved to Los Angeles. Yost serves as Fogle's agent and co-writer.

Fogle's works "truly amazed me. I had a hard time putting them down," Yost said. "They are not 600 to 700 pages of great prose ... but they're not shallow either."

"He's never immoral or amoral. There is a strong base of ethics. His characters care about each other.

They're not overly violent." Fogle, who is not sure when he will be free, talks of becoming a mechanic at an Alaska cannery. Most of the $12,000 he received for the rights to his screenplay went toward buying mechanics tools, he said.

"I'm 53. I'm not letting it go to my head," he said of the increasing demands for interviews after the movie's release. "Everybody's got a story to tell."

Soprano Gives Last U.S. Show

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Dame Joan Sutherland says she knows when it's time to step aside and leave the opera spotlight to younger singers.

"I'd rather leave you with a pleasant sound in your ears than start croaking too much," the 63-year-old soprano told fans Saturday at her final U.S. opera performance, at the Music Hall at Fair Park.

The appearance, in the title role in "The Merry Widow," featured a fond farewell message from President Bush, who wrote, "Dame Joan's coloratura soprano echos in the minds of all who have been privileged to hear her sing."

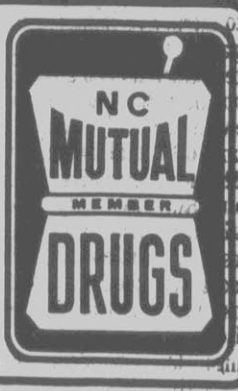

After the opera — on the stage where the Australian native made her U.S. debut 29 years ago — she said plans to continue giving concerts, but only two more operas, in London and in Australia.

Miss Sutherland said she is retiring so she can spend more time at her home in Switzerland.

Life Along The Border Is One Filled With Tension

Many Jordanians Face The Unknown Enemy

By John Rice
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ADASSIYEH, Jordan — Hassan Humayed and his 10 children were sleeping on his rooftop one hot night when a Katyusha rocket hissed over and ricocheted off the concrete roof through a stone wall without exploding.

"The people who launch the rockets don't hurt the enemy," Humayed fumed. "They hurt us." The people who fired the rocket were Palestinian guerrillas in a mountain above town. It was aimed at Israel, 1 1/2 miles west of Humayed's house on the northern end of the border. A second missile exploded harmlessly in an Israeli field.

A few days later, Humayed said, Israeli troops fired a flare onto the Jordanian side of the Yarmouk River, apparently to burn brush guerrillas could use for cover. But instead the resulting fire burned 60 of his family's orange trees.

The missiles and several recent guerrilla attacks on Israel have interrupted years of relative calm along Jordan's 300-mile border, prompting veiled Israeli threats of retaliation if they continue.

The Palestinian attacks pose a security problem for Israel. But for Jordanians the issue has wider, strategic implications — survival against a more powerful foe.

A senior military official, who cannot be identified because of Jordanian army regulations, said the Jordanians are doing their best to stop the Palestinian attacks.

Twelve members of the Syrian-based Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine were arrested after the rocket attack.

Military officials said the guerrillas who fired the Katyushas crossed from Syria, which takes a militant stand against Israel and sponsors hardline guerrilla factions.

At the same time, the guerrillas are hostile to efforts by Jordan and Yasser Arafat's mainstream Palestine Liberation Organization to reach a diplomatic settlement with Israel.

"We don't believe this sort of action will solve the Palestinian problem," the Jordanian military official said. "If the Israelis retaliate, it might hurt our citizens."

He suggested Syrian-backed radical Palestinians were trying to undermine Arafat's peace initiative.

Jordanians are alarmed by right-wing Israeli calls to establish a Palestinian state in Jordan or for Israel to take control of Jordanian territory under what they consider to be biblical precedent.

"We take every word said by the Israeli leaders seriously... because we've learned they mean it," the senior officer said.

Aqaba, Jordan's only port, along with its most important farmlands, water systems and potash industry are within Israeli artillery range.

All of Jordan's urban centers are only a few minutes' flying time from Israeli air bases.

Israeli jets regularly fly into Jordanian airspace, diplomats said. But the military official noted: "Nobody has reported to me that the Israelis are trying to be aggressive against Jordanian soldiers."

Farmers Carry Rifles And Radios To Work

By Nicolas B. Tatro

KIBBUTZ ASHDOT YAACOV, Israel — Farmers growing cotton, avocados and dates in this commune carry rifles and two-way radios when they go down to the Jordan River to tend their crops.

After 20 years of calm along the 300-mile Israeli-Jordanian border, recent attacks from inside Jordan have raised tensions.

"We're not retreating or panicking," said Zvi Zexer, 65, a high school teacher on the commune of 650 people 75 miles north of Jerusalem. "The events of today are nothing compared to the past."

Eight members of the kibbutz, one of 73 such communal settlements along the frontier, were killed by shells, mines and cross-border raids by Palestinian guerrillas in the 1967-70 war of attrition.

According to army figures, 165 soldiers and 32 civilians died in 5,270 terrorist incidents in that period.

In the latest attacks, the heaviest since the 1960s, three Israeli soldiers have been killed, a half-dozen wounded and one kidnapped and held briefly in seven cross-border attacks this year, the Israelis say. In one incident, rockets were fired into Israel.

Sgt. Maj. Tomer, patrolling the dusty border in a jeep armed with a machine gun, recalled that in one attack two Israeli soldiers were wounded near this kibbutz Sept. 16, by someone who appeared to them to be a Jordanian soldier, although Jordan says its soldiers are not involved in attacks on Israel.

"It was daylight, about 6 a.m., on the sabbath," Tomer said. "He was hiding in the date palms. He jumped up and fired — 15 rounds, semi-automatic." The attacker got away.

Israeli officials see the attacks as a sign that the 22-month-old Palestinian uprising in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip is spilling over into Jordan.

Many of the 1.7 million Palestinians in the occupied territories have relatives in Jordan.

Col. Gidi, commander of a unit stationed along the border, said the Palestine Liberation Organization appeared to be behind some of the attacks.

Several attacks have been claimed by radical Syrian-based Palestinian factions; the PLO says it now wants a peaceful settlement with Israel.

"There are many Palestinians in the Jordanian army," Gidi said. "They have connections with Palestinians here. Maybe they're trying to show their families they want to help and identify with the uprising."

Some Israelis view the attacks as a sign that Jordan's 74,000-man army, which has prevented most such attacks in the past, has become less disciplined in the wake of April's anti-government riots in Jordan.

Col. Renaan Gissin, deputy spokesman for the Israeli army, noted that if the guerrillas feel "there's some laxity in the discipline in the Jordanian army, or some weakening in Jordanian resolve, of course they'll try to infiltrate from this area."

Lebanon Gets New Premier In Effort To Bring On Unity

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Lebanon's new Christian president today named Moslem leader Salim Hoss as premier, entrusting him with the task of forming a united national government to end the country's civil war.

Staccato bursts of gunfire interspersed with shell blasts resounded across the capital as the president spoke.

Police said Syrian-backed Moslem militiamen were fighting Christian army units across Beirut's sectarian Green Line. There was no immediate report of casualties.

Hoss' appointment puts him in a direct confrontation with Christian army commander Gen. Michel Aoun, who heads a three-man interim military cabinet that competed with Hoss' Syrian-backed Moslem government. Aoun governs the Christian enclave north and northeast of Beirut.

President Rene Mouawad, a Maronite, made today's announcement at his temporary office in Moslem west Beirut after three days of consultations with Parliament leaders.

Hoss, 59, a Sunni Moslem banker-turned-politician, accepted his fourth premiership in 13 years, pledging to carry out an Arab-brokered peace accord that provides for equal power between Moslems and Christians.

After his announcement today, Mouawad, flanked by Hoss and Parliament speaker Hussein Husseini, received in audience all ambassadors to Lebanon.

"I call upon all of you to join our march toward peace," Mouawad said in brief remarks. "We consider the Taif accord an introduction to peace and a launching pad for a new republic."

"I pledge to whole world to consolidate the unity and sovereignty of Lebanon and to rebuild its constitutional institutions."

Mouawad urged the international community to pressure Israel into evacuating a border enclave it occupied in south Lebanon in 1985 to serve as a buffer against cross-border guerrilla raids.

He made no mention of the 40,000 Syrian troops who control 70 percent of Lebanon.

The meeting underscored the widespread international recognition of Mouawad's election and Aoun's diplomatic isolation.

There was no U.S. diplomat at today's meeting. The United States closed its Lebanon embassy Sept. 6 after Aoun's supporters surrounded it during a protest.

The peace accord increasing the influence of the Moslems was approved by the Lebanese Parliament on Oct. 22 after a 23-day special session in Saudi Arabia's summer resort of Taif under the auspices of an Arab League committee.

Nine days ago, Parliament moved to advance the pact by electing Mouawad, 64, for the presidency that had been vacant for 409 days.

Zhao Loses His Last Party Job

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — The Communist Party Central Committee has formally ousted former party chief Zhao Ziyang from its ranks, sources said today, nearly six months after he was accused of supporting the student-led democracy movement.

The Nov. 6-9 plenary session of the committee voted that Zhao, who was ousted from office in June, would be removed from all his duties in the committee, according to sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Central Committee, meeting for the first time since the June session during which Zhao was purged, did not mention Zhao in its final communique, leaving open the question of how the party would handle his case.

Some party hard-liners reportedly hoped to put Zhao on trial on charges of fomenting counter-revolutionary rebellion, but others, including senior leader Deng Xiaoping, are believed to have resisted.

It was unclear whether Zhao had been stripped of his party membership as well or would be allowed to remain a member of the 47-million-member party he once headed.

Zhao, 70, one of the architects and main proponents of the market-oriented reforms that have brought prosperity to millions of Chinese, still commands wide popular support.

He has not been seen in public since an emotional meeting with student hunger strikers on May 19, and is believed to be under house arrest.

The June 24 Central Committee meeting that accused him of making serious mistakes in the "anti-party, anti-socialism turmoil" approved his dismissal from all his party posts, including his seat on the 170-member Central Committee.

Last week's vote apparently gave a formal stamp to that decision.

Sinhalese Leader Killed In Custody

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — The leader of the Sinhalese group that has been waging an anti-government campaign of terror was shot to death by government forces today while in custody, the foreign minister said today.

Rohana Wijeweera, head of the People's Liberation Front, was arrested Sunday afternoon in the central hill district, the official, Ranjan Wijeratne, told a news conference.

Wijeweera subsequently agreed to lead government security men to one of the front's offices in a Colombo suburb, Wijeratne said.

Once in the office, Wijeweera instructed front Politburo member H.B. Herath to hand over some documents, he added.

Herath pretended to do so but instead pulled a gun and fired at Wijeweera, and then government forces opened fire, killing both Wijeweera and Herath, the minister said.

President Ranasinghe Premadasa has ordered an investigation into the shooting. Wijeratne, who is also deputy defense minister, said security forces had already cremated the bodies of Wijeweera and Herath under emergency regulations that allow them to dispose of bodies without further inquiry.

The circumstances of Wijeweera's death, if uncorroborated, seemed likely to prompt charges he was murdered by security forces. Such charges could aggravate the violence in the Sinhalese heartland.

Wijeweera's organization accuses the Sinhalese-dominated government of selling out the country's Sinhalese majority in an effort to make peace with ethnic Tamil guerrillas.

More than 6,000 people have been killed in the past two years in the struggle between the government and the People's Liberation Front.

Mixed-Race Officer Arrested In Protest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Lt. Gregory Rockman, a dissident police officer who publicly accused riot squad members of brutality, was arrested today while leading a protest against orders to transfer him.

Also arrested, according to Rockman's lawyer, were another policeman and 12 prison guards who recently joined a new union headed by the mixed-race lieutenant.

Eight journalists covering their protest were detained for two hours, then released.

The dissident security officers were protesting in the mixed-race township of Mitchell's Plain, Rockman's hometown, against police orders to transfer him to a quartermaster's unit in a white area of Cape Town.

Police also ordered the transfer of Col. John Manuel, the commander of the Mitchell's Plain police station, who had supported Rockman.

Police headquarters confirmed Rockman's arrest, but said further details were not immediately available. Essa Moosa, Rockman's lawyer, said the lieutenant and the other arrested officers were to appear in court this afternoon on charges of defeating the ends of justice and attending an illegal gathering.

The arrests occurred after Rockman and the other dissident officers marched through a shopping area of Mitchell's Plain, chanting in support of their union and against Rockman's transfer order.

Rockman told a crowd of supporters that local residents should have a right to choose their own station commander.

Scores of riot police arrived, gave the crowd five minutes to disperse, then took the dissident officers and the journalists into custody. The journalists, including a television crew from the U.S. network ABC, were released after about two hours.

Rockman came into prominence in September, when he accused members of an all-white police riot squad of behaving like "wild dogs" when they dispersed and beat protesters in Mitchell's Plain who were demonstrating against the exclusion of blacks from national elections.

That protest occurred at the same shopping plaza where Rockman was arrested today.

Two white officers were charged with assault in connection with the September incident. They were acquitted last month.

On Nov. 6, Rockman announced the formation of a union for police officers and security guards. He said seven policemen and 21 guards, all of them mixed-race, had joined.

Police officials said officers were not allowed to join an unauthorized union and launched an investigation. Rockman already was under investigation for defying an order not to communicate with the media.

Rockman said last week that police had told him he was to be transferred as punishment for speaking to the press.

RALEIGH — Leanne Cherry and Rachel Alpers of Rose's Gymnastics Training Center qualified for the state gymnastics meet over the weekend during a Level 5 and Level 6 qualifying meet at North Raleigh Gymnastics.

Cherry, competing in the Level 5 ages 8-11 division, earned ribbons in each event en route to a 30.35 all-around score. Cherry had a mark of 7.75 on vault, 8.2 on uneven bars, 7.4 on balance beam and 7.0 in the floor exercise.

Ribbons were awarded to all competitors scoring 7.0 or above.

Alpers had a 7.25 on vault and a 7.8 on uneven bars. She finished with a 26.30 all-around score to qualify for the state meet, which will be held at the Raleigh School of Gymnastics Dec. 2-3.

Brianne McCoy (7.0) and Julia Thompson (7.25) earned ribbons in the vault.

In Level 6 competition, Jennifer Shaw was the top Rose's performer with a fourth-place showing in the all-around with a total of 25.30. Shaw was sixth in the vault with a 7.5.

Lisa McCoy and Hayden Litchfield tied for third in the vault with a 7.7. McCoy was third in the floor exercise with a 7.0 and fifth in the all-around with a 24.80.

Kathryn Lennox took second on vault with a 7.75.

ECU Spikers Fall In CAA Tournament

HARRISONBURG, Va. — The East Carolina volleyball team continued its hard luck in postseason tournament play Friday by dropping two matches in the Colonial Athletic Association tournament in Harrisonburg, Va.

The Lady Pirates, who have never won a CAA tournament match and finished sixth, fell to James Madison 15-13, 16-14, 13-15, 15-4 then was defeated by UNC-Wilmington 15-1, 14-16, 15-6, 15-10.

ECU finished the season 16-15. It was their first winning season since 1982.

Senior hitter Jemma Holley was selected to the All-CAA first-team, while Michelle McIntosh was selected second-team All-CAA.

Coody Wins Three-Way Playoff

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Charles Coody sank a six-foot birdie putt on the second hole of sudden death to win the Las Vegas Senior Classic on Sunday. Coody, who led by one entering the final round, had to save par on the 18th hole to force a playoff with Bob Charles and Chi Chi Rodriguez at 205, 11-under-par. After the three made par on the first extra hole, Coody dropped in the straightaway putt for his first win of any kind since 1973. He earned $45,000.

UNC's Williams Out 2-3 Weeks

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — North Carolina starting center Scott Williams underwent an appendectomy Friday and will be lost to the team for two to three weeks, school officials said.

Williams, a 6-foot-11, 247-pound senior, was the Tar Heels' leading rebounder last season, averaging 7.3 per game. He also averaged 11.4 points and was the second-leading shot blocker in the Atlantic Coast Conference with 50.

"I'm really sorry for Scott," said Tar Heel coach Dean Smith. "He had particularly come on the last couple of practices when he wasn't trying to replace (J.R.) Reid by himself. We surely need him because our freshman big men won't be ready for our games against the Soviet Union next week and then James Madison."

Williams was admitted to the Carolina Student Infirmary during the morning and underwent surgery in the afternoon. The operation was performed by Dr. Chip Baker.

The Tar Heels are scheduled to play the Soviets next Friday.

Gamecocks Eliminate Blue Devils, 2-1

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Ruben Tufino scored with 4:31 to play as South Carolina defeated Duke 2-1 Sunday in the first round of the NCAA soccer tournament.

The Gamecocks (16-2-2) will meet Wake Forest (15-3-2) in the second round at a site and date to be announced Monday. Wake Forest defeated Old Dominion 2-1 in Winston-Salem, N.C.

"We started to put some more pressure on them because we didn't want to go into overtime. We wanted to finish in 90 minutes," said Tufino, who scored off an assist from Greg Strehmel.

Duke ended the season at 10-5-4.

"That goal at the end really surprised us," Duke coach John Rennie said. "We just didn't have enough continuity between the offense and defense because some of our players were playing different positions."

Steve Knull of Duke had tied the game with 17:32 when he scored on a header off a corner kick by Joey Valenti.

The teams played a scoreless first half. The Gamecocks took a 1-0 lead with 24:53 left when Jonas Gudjonsson passed to Andrew Coggins, who beat Duke goalie Jonah Goldstein.

Wake Forest Slips Past Old Dominion

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Geraint Davies scored a pair of first period goals to advance the Demon Deacons past Old Dominion 2-1 in opening round play of the NCAA soccer tournament on Sunday.

Jeff Phillips hurled a throw-in from the left corner that found the head of Davies for a three yard strike right of the goal at 10:07. Wake Forest went to 2-0 at 21:09 when Davies once again beat Monarch goalkeeper Joey Mallia from eight yards.

The scoring threat began when Neil Covone served a corner kick from the right side to Davies, who headed a shot on goal. The ball caromed off Mallia and Davies rebounded the ball into the net for the deciding goal.

"We came out very strongly," said Wake Forest coach Walt Chyzowych. "We jumped all over Old Dominion and scored two quick goals. We tried to come out in the second half just as strongly to get that third goal, but things didn't materialize. Then Old Dominion scored their goal, and it became a war."

The lone tally of the second period came at 62:15 as sophomore Gunther Glockner blasted a 24-yard goal past Demon Deacon goal keeper Matthew Olson. The two teams managed only seven shots in the second period, as both defenses held strong.

"We were at a disadvantage not playing at home and not playing on turf," said Old Dominion coach Mike Berticelli. "We've only played on grass three times this year. We're a small team, and if we had played on turf, we could have kept the ball on the ground more."

Wake Forest advances to the second round against South Carolina, a 2-1 victor over Duke. The site and time of the match will be announced Monday.

UNC Women Roll Past Hartford

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Shannon Higgins scored two goals and had two assists as top-ranked North Carolina breezed past Hartford 9-0 Sunday in the quarterfinals of the NCAA women's soccer tournament.

The Tar Heel victory was the most lopsided in NCAA tournament play, besting North Carolina's 8-0 victory over California-Santa Barbara in 1986. Hartford ended its season at 17-4.

North Carolina, undefeated in 93 games and 22-0-1 this season, will play North Carolina State, a 2-1 winner over William & Mary, in the semifinals.

"That's about as well as we can play," North Carolina coach Anson Dornance said. "The girls played extremely well tactically and also played with a lot of emotion."

Former Olympic Champion In Coma

MONTREAL (AP) — Swimming champion Victor Davis, in a coma after being struck by a car outside a suburban bar, was given 48 hours to show signs of life or doctors will consider his case hopeless, a hospital spokesman said Sunday.

Davis, a gold and silver medalist at the 1984 Olympic Games, former world record holder in the 200-meter breaststroke, suffered spinal injuries and fractures to the skull, a shoulder and a finger, the spokesman said.

Lendl Captures 83rd Singles Crown

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Ivan Lendl won his 83rd career singles title on Sunday, taking the Stockholm Open over Magnus Gustafsson 7-5, 6-0, 6-3.

The world's top ranked player, Lendl won the Stockholm crown for the first time, earning $200,000.

third-longest in NFL history.

Redskins 10, Eagles 3. Washington held Randall Cunningham in check and the banged-up Redskins won in Philadelphia.

The Eagles (6-4) crossed midfield only four times. Cunningham was sacked three times, all by Dexter Manley, and the Redskins (5-5) intercepted a pass and recovered a fumble.

Doug Williams' 24-yard pass on a fourth-and-inches play in the second quarter set up Earnest Byner's 1-yard touchdown run.

The Redskins began the day without offensive linemen Jim Lachey and Mark May, cornerbacks Darrell Green and Barry Wilburn and running back Gerald Riggs, all out with injuries. Offensive tackle Joe Jacoby was hurt in the first quarter and Byner was ejected in the third because of unsportsmanlike conduct.

Chargers 14, Raiders 12. San Diego came back from a 12-0 deficit as Anthony Miller returned a kickoff 91 yards for a touchdown and Tim Spencer atoned for a goal-line fumble with a fourth-quarter touchdown against the Raiders.

Spencer, who fumbled inside the Raiders' 1-yard line earlier in the fourth period, put the Chargers on top with a 5-yard run with 8:48 to play. The touchdown run was set up when the Chargers' Ken Woodard partially blocked Jeff Gossett's punt.

Jeff Jaeger kicked four field goals for all of Los Angeles' points, but Miller returned the kickoff after the last one for his touchdown.

The Raiders fell to 5-5 despite Bo Jackson's third 100-yard rushing game. He had 103 yards on 21 carries.

Saints 28, Patriots 24. Dalton Hilliard ran for 106 yards and two touchdowns and New Orleans turned three turnovers into 21 points in the second quarter at New England.

The Saints (5-5) led 28-0 before the Dolphins 31, Jets 23. Dan Marino threw three touchdown passes as Miami won at Giants Stadium for the first time in five years.

The Dolphins trailed 20-3 late in the second quarter before Marino hit Mark Clayton for a 78-yard TD and connected with Scott Schwedes for a 65-yard score in the third period.

Miami is 6-4. The Jets are 2-8, 0-5 at home.

Miami rookie Pete Stoyanovich kicked a 59-yard field goal, the game, his string of 18 straight completions was just two shy of the NFL single-game record held by former Cincinnati quarterback Ken Anderson.

"I feel a lot better; it definitely feels good to win," said Everett, who was among the NFL's top-rated passers until the losing streak.

A major difference in the victory and the four games the Rams lost was the fact that Everett had considerably more time to throw and was not sacked.

"We had a lot of great effort, especially the offensive line," he said. "I can't remember not being touched like that the entire game."

"Irv Pankey was doing a good job on L.T. (Giant linebacker Lawrence Taylor) and then we had a chance to break open the running game. The offensive line started everything."

With Los Angeles leading 10-3 and at its 22-yard line with 1:44 remaining in the first half, Everett moved his team quickly downfield and threw a 51-yard touchdown pass to Aaron Cox as the clock ticked down to 53 seconds.

The Giants' Dave Meggett fumbled the ensuing kickoff. Los Angeles' George Bethune recovered at the New York 21, and Everett threw a TD pass to Willie Anderson on the next play.

New York was held to a 22-yard field goal by Raul Allegre until the final quarter, when Otis Anderson scored on a 1-yard run.

Parcells said he had no explanation for the one-sided loss.

"The Rams outplayed us; I don't know why," he said. "Every time something did happen, a guy would fall down, we'd fumble."

"That wasn't much of a contest out there. There is no use in sugar-coating it. They were a lot more aggressive than we were."

Halvorsen, Jennings Win In Old Reliable

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Olympians John Halvorsen and Lynn Jennings had to beat the heat and weather pressure from their racing peers Sunday to emerge as the men's and women's champions in The Old Reliable Run.

Halvorsen, a Norwegian who now calls Canada home, lived up to his favorite's billing with a clocking of 28 minutes, 36 seconds in warmer-than-normal 79-degree weather. And Jennings, who set a U.S. women's record of 31:34 on a much cooler day last year, won the women's race for a second consecutive year, this time in 32:16.

Each runner collected $3,000, but each realized before the 6.2-mile race through downtown Raleigh was over that the temperature was too high to achieve a record-breaking performance.

"I was going for it," Jennings said. "I was on an American-record pace for three miles, but then I slowed down. As lovely as it was today, it was not a perfect racing day. It was very warm. But I'm not that disappointed. It showed that I'm very strong and very fit."

Halvorsen knew erasing the course record of 28:07 set by John Grogorek in 1987 was improbable.

Keith Brantly placed fourth overall at 28:55 and was the first American finisher, which gave him the U.S. men's 10,000 meters championship.

Peele Column...

Emory has returned to the school — then called Wadesboro Bowman — where he started his coaching career and has done very well there, thank you. Anson was a perennial doormat when Emory regained the head coaching job there, but the Bearcats went 8-2 during the regular season. They lost only to undefeated 2-A power Forest Hills and to top-ranked and unbeaten Richmond County before falling 7-0 to Seventy-First.

It would thus have been a homecoming of sorts for Emory, who'd probably like nothing better than to come back to Greenville and show his stuff on the sidelines once again.

Walesa Comes As Hero

WASHINGTON — Lech Walesa heads for a hero's welcome in Washington today as Europe echoes with the sound of sledgehammers against the Berlin Wall.

Walesa arrives with his head high and his hand out, applauded for forging the first non-Communist government in the Warsaw Pact and seeking money for its survival.

"We are building an America of the East," but that requires billions of dollars from the West, Walesa said in an interview before leaving Poland.

Walesa's visit will give President Bush and Congress a chance to applaud in decibels and dollars the changes that are sweeping the Soviet bloc, and that led last week to the opening of the Berlin Wall.

There will be plenty of praise in Washington for the mustachioed electrician who rocketed to world fame in August 1980 by clambering over another wall, that around the Gdansk shipyard, where he led the strike that forged Solidarity, the first independent trade union in the Communist bloc.

Walesa is not likely to leave Washington empty-handed, as Congress and the administration hammer out a deal to send up to $989 million over three years to bolster the sweeping reforms enacted in Poland and Hungary.

After leaving Poland last Friday, Walesa's first stop was Canada, where he was to meet today with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. Then he was to fly to Washington to attend a White House reception tonight, address an AFL-CIO convention and become the first private foreign citizen in 175 years to address a joint meeting of Congress.

Before heading home, Walesa also was to visit New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Caracas, Venezuela.

AFL-CIO Could Move On To More Militant Stance

By John King
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The AFL-CIO opens its biennial convention today, savoring its role in the success of Poland's Solidarity union and determined to end what may be the American labor movement's worst decade on a positive note.

However, there also appears to be a move to a more militant stance.

Delegates to the 14.1 million-member federation's convention will have a busy week: welcoming Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, plotting future support for several major strikes and hearing from a U.S. president for the first time in a decade.

Also on tap are addresses from Democratic congressional leaders and the election of the federation's officers, with President Lane Kirkland a lock for a sixth two-year term.

Walesa's appearance to thank U.S. unions for their support in Solidarity's struggle will be by far the most captivating public event.

Walesa will finally receive the George Meany Human Rights Award, which the union bestowed on him eight years ago. He was not allowed to leave Poland to receive it.

Labor leaders will meet privately with Walesa to determine how the AFL-CIO can assist Solidarity now that Poland has a sympathetic, non-Communist government, and how to emulate the success of the Polish labor movement in other European countries, such as East Germany, Hungary and Lithuania.

"We don't have to seek out our clients," Kirkland said in an interview last week. "They come to us. We are, in spite of what our detractors say in this country, the largest, in many ways the strongest, the most unified and the most deeply involved trade union federation around the world."

The federation provided Solidarity with an estimated $5 million worth of communications and other equipment and support.

"Wherever working people are trying to lift themselves up and form free trade associations, they always come to us for help," Kirkland said. "As these movements are developing in central and Eastern Europe we are going to have increasing demands upon us and we'll do our best to respond."

The celebration of the success abroad comes at a time of uncertainty at home for the labor movement, which has struggled throughout the 1980s with the losses in the industrial sector — its traditional organizing strength — and its battle with the Reagan administration over issues ranging from the minimum wage to child care to plant closings.

Kirkland just a month ago referred to President Bush as "Reagan Lite," but last week said the president's willingness to strike a compromise on raising the minimum wage showed there had been some improvement over the strained relations with the Reagan White House.

"We have channels of communication that I think are superior to those that we had during the Reagan years," he said. "Things are not so ideologically hostile."

Bush has agreed to address the convention Wednesday.

Reagan refused to speak in 1981 and was never invited again. Jimmy Carter was the last president to address a federation convention, in 1979.

Supreme Court Approves Tests For Police Officers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court today permitted random drug testing of Boston police officers, providing new evidence that the justices are willing to allow widespread testing of government employees in jobs affecting public safety.

The court, without comment, left intact a ruling that forcing police officers to undergo the tests — even when there is no reason to suspect drug abuse — does not violate their privacy rights.

In its first drug-testing rulings last March, the court upheld drug and alcohol tests for railway workers involved in accidents and U.S. Customs Service employees applying for drug-enforcement jobs or those positions that require carrying a firearm.

Neither of those rulings directly addressed the question of random tests, however.

The 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals nevertheless relied on those decisions in upholding the constitutionality of random urinalysis tests for Boston police officers who carry firearms or enforce drug laws.

The appeals court last May overturned a federal judge's decision that the tests violate the officers' rights.

"Since we can find no relevant distinction between a customs officer and a police officer, we hold the police department's drug-testing rule to be constitutional," the appeals court said.

The Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, in seeking to ban the tests, said the Boston policy is more far-reaching than that governing the customs officers.

The customs workers have to undergo tests only if they "seek promotion or transfer to safety-sensitive positions" and not if they remain in their current jobs, the police union argued.

The union said privacy rights of its members were being sacrificed to "exaggerated fears" of drug use. American society "has always been willing to accept certain risks in exchange for the freedom it so cherishes — but which appears to be so rapidly dwindling," the union's lawyers said.

U.S. District Judge Robert E. Keeton, who was overruled by the 1st Circuit court, said the Boston tests were unjustified because the same purpose could be accomplished by testing individual officers when there was reason to believe they are using drugs.

"Despite the intensive media attention devoted to drug abuse, (the department) has proffered no evidence that any police department in the nation suffers from a drug abuse problem," Keeton said.

Department officials said the tests are needed to assure public confidence and to prevent officers from becoming susceptible to bribery because of a drug habit.

The case is Guiney vs. Roache, 89-205.

RESULTS OF WATER TESTING

The Town of Bethel had a Trihalomethanes testing done of the water supply in October of 1989. The samples were taken from Blount's Texaco Station, Rives Street and the Wastewater Facility site in Bethel. The test was done by Environment I, Inc. of Greenville, N.C. In every test case all results were less than one (1) microgram per liter. (This is the same as parts per billion). When the results are less than this amount, they are below detection limits. The Town of Bethel has no Trihalomethanes in the water supply. A copy of the report is available in the Town Office.

Merger Of Papers Upheld

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An evenly divided Supreme Court today upheld the planned partial merger of Detroit's two daily newspapers.

The justices, by a 4-4 vote, affirmed a ruling that former Attorney General Edwin Meese III acted reasonably last year when he approved a joint operating agreement for the two papers, the Detroit Free Press and The Detroit News.

The federal Newspaper Preservation Act of 1970 authorizes the attorney general to give financially failing newspapers an exemption from federal antitrust laws. Today's ruling was the court's first on a joint operating agreement between newspapers.

The partial merger had been challenged by a group of Michigan advertisers and readers.

Under the 100-year agreement, the two newspapers would combine their business, advertising and production departments but maintain separate news and editorial staffs.

The News would receive 55 percent of the merged company's profits during the first year but that percentage would drop to 50 percent by the seventh year. Thereafter, the profits would be evenly divided.

Today's 4-4 split, which under the high court's rules automatically upheld a federal appeals court decision, was set up when Justice Byron R. White disqualified himself from the case for unexplained "personal reasons."

Today's ruling was announced in a one-sentence decision that did not disclose which four justices voted to allow the partial merger and which four voted against it.

Legal arguments in the case were heard by the justices on Oct. 30.

The Detroit News is owned by Gannett Co., the nation's largest newspaper publishing group. The Free Press is owned by Knight-Ridder Inc., the second largest. The organizations proposed the partial merger in 1986.

Opponents of the deal, calling themselves Michigan Citizens for an Independent Press, contend that the Free Press is not a failing newspaper even though it lost $10 million between 1981 and 1986.

The opponents say the Free Press and the News, which lost $50 million in the same period, were unprofitable solely because both papers cut prices in an unsuccessful effort to force each other out of business.

Scientists Find Chink in Bugs' Natural Armor

By Ed Schaefer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — Using modern-day nuclear magnetic resonance imaging, Jacob Schaefer has found what may be a chink in cockroaches' prehistoric armor.

It's the place where chemicals are produced to make the ultra-hard exoskeleton, said Schaefer, a Washington University chemist.

"My collaborators are now isolating the essential enzymes and metabolites that help make the structure. Hopefully, they may be able to develop an inhibitor molecule, one that thwarts the enzyme's mode of action."

That could lead to an insecticide that would kill the pests by keeping them from developing the hard shell that holds them together.

However, that's something that may be easier said than done.

"There may not even be a compound that will work," said team member Karl J. Kramer, a Kansas State University chemist who works with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Research Service. "Now that we know a little bit more about the structure, maybe we'll have a little more luck, eventually."

In NMR, a sophisticated radio receiver-transmitter called a spectrometer identifies atoms by their distinct response to a magnetic field, so scientists can determine the makeup of a sample, such as an insect's shell.

"It's now time for the organic chemists and the pesticide chemists to look at that structure and come up with something that can use it," said Kramer.

A new approach to the problem has been called for by people concerned over insects' ability to adapt to poisons and even biological controls.

"The short-sighted and irresponsible use of pesticides and antibiotics is producing strains of monster-bugs that are resistant to our chemical weapons," said Robert L. Metcalf, professor emeritus at the University of Illinois who is outspoken on the subject of pesticide misuse.

"I doubt if we will ever be able to eradicate insect pests entirely," he said. "Insects in every case become resistant to chemicals after a period of continued exposure, and they become resistant to the biological controls. But we can improve our methods of less toxic controls and it is clear we don't want to keep relying on chemicals that are poisonous to both insects and man."

Pesticides have found their way into groundwater and killed fish, wildlife and people. The World Health Organization estimates 500,000 poisonings of humans and 20,000 deaths worldwide from insecticide each year.

Metcalf said Schaefer's pioneering use of NMR "a unique approach and an exciting contribution to the new-wave of insecticide research."

The Associated Press

Schaefer and Allyson Christensen examine research gear

Schaefer emphasized that much work needs to be done before his findings can be of direct benefit. "We hope to find that the cross-link is different in each kind of insect. Any insecticide will have to be selective."

"You don't want to kill every insect in the field — some of them are beneficial. But now, at least, scientists can make a reasonable guess about what chemicals to look at."

One of the problems in the past, he said, is that there was not enough communication between the disciplines in the scientific community. Chemists, biologists and entomologists tended to go their separate ways.

"My whole strategy is to hook up with the best I can find in every field. So far, we haven't worked with microbiologists doing genetic engineering. But we're at least in the talking stage now."

FDA Ending Probe Of Blood Disorder

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Reports of a rare blood disease spread after the government warned consumers to temporarily stop taking L-tryptophan, a dietary supplement suspected of causing the outbreak.

Investigators from the Food and Drug Administration on Sunday finished interviewing people with the disorder and collecting samples of L-tryptophan from stores in New Mexico, which has the greatest number of cases, said Nancy Hunter, spokeswoman for the state's Health and Environment Department.

The team will test for contamination of the non-prescription remedy touted as "nature's sleeping pill" and sold in health food stores to treat sleeplessness and premenstrual syndrome.

The number of reported cases of the potentially fatal disorder eosinophilia climbed to 55 over the weekend as California, Virginia and Minnesota joined six other states already reporting the syndrome, said

Dr. Edwin Kilbourne of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. There were 21 in New Mexico, four in Oregon, three in Texas and one each from Arizona, Missouri and Mississippi.

At least 11 patients with eosinophilia have been hospitalized, including nine in New Mexico.

The increase in cases prompted the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to warn consumers to temporarily discontinue use of L-tryptophan, an amino acid.

The FDA said a joint investigation with the CDC had yet to determine a cause-and-effect association with the blood condition but "affected persons in most of the cases have reported taking L-tryptophan products before becoming ill."

Symptoms of the disorder include sharp muscular pain, fatigue, fever and rashes. The syndrome usually is associated with bronchial asthma, allergies, parasitic infections or reactions to medicine.

It is called eosinophilia because it is characterized by high counts of a type of white blood cells called eosinophils.

Space Study Could Help Explain Cells

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Tests on the skin of a chameleon heading for space on Wednesday could help scientists understand more about cell structure and offer clues to down-to-earth human problems like osteoporosis.

"In space, cells apparently make their normal products but sometimes these products can't get out," said Roy Hammerstedt. He hopes to learn if cells that secrete hormones malfunction in low gravity because their structure is changed.

The experiment will treat chameleon cells with hormones that change skin color from green to brown or brown to green.

Christmas Spirit Tested Three Months Early

Dear Abby: I can remember when Christmas decorations didn't appear until the day after Thanksgiving; now they are thrust upon us in September! I couldn't believe my eyes when I saw a TV commercial advertising Christmas albums the day after my kids went back to school.

Now the department stores put up their Christmas decorations in the middle of September. I don't enjoy browsing in the stores anymore because I feel pressured to do my Christmas shopping before the leaves have started to fall off the trees.

Do we really need the sights and sounds of Christmas for a quarter of the entire year — three months in advance? Christmas cards and wrapping paper are displayed across the aisle from the Halloween paraphernalia. Heaven help us. What's the rush? I am not ready to do my Christmas shopping yet.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Does anybody else feel this way? — Bah, Humbug In September

Dear Bah: Count me in. However, my Christmas shopping won't take long this year because instead of sending gifts to people who don't "need" anything, I'm sending a nice check to the American Red Cross earmarked for the San Francisco earthquake victims. Readers, how about you?

Dear Abby: My "lost treasures" story had a happy ending, but your reply to "Depressed" did, indeed, put the loss of material things in perspective for me.

For a long time I had planned to write a family history for my kids and was going to use my photograph collection to illustrate the stories of people and events. One day, I went to the "safe place" where I kept the photographs, only to find they were gone. With every box, drawer or closet that I searched, the feeling of panic, then depression, worsened.

Family photographs are treasured by most of us because they represent not only memories from our past, but something we can pass on to our children and grandchildren.

The nagging feeling of loss continued until the day I read your reply to "Depressed." I realized that I had not experienced a major loss — like the loss of a loved one. I had just lost my pictures. I still had my memories, and my children would have to settle for a written account of their history.

I eventually found my pictures, Abby, but the experience brought home exactly the message you intended to share with your readers. — Louise Schwed, Red Hook, N.Y.

Dear Abby: I agree with "A Teacher in Laramie," who stated that a teacher should never lower a student's grade as punishment. (In this case, two girls cheated — one gave the other the answers during a test — so the teacher gave both students a failing grade.)

I am a senior in college, and in all of my classes, if a student misses X number of days (usually three), that student's grade is lowered a whole letter grade for the entire course. It doesn't matter if that student is a straight-A student and all his or her assignments were turned in on time.

I think this is very unfair. Grades should reflect scholarship — nothing else. — Sandy In Chattanooga, Tenn.

Dear Sandy: That's also my opinion, but you and I were out-numbered at least 100-to-1.

Confidential To Big Mouth In Hobbs, N.M.: Tell her you are sorry you told her secret and ask her to forgive you. Strange how most people can learn to talk in two years, but it takes a lifetime to learn to keep quiet.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. box 6940, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Records Don't Comfort Montgomery

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — All the records in the NCAA guide won't help North Carolina State quarterback Shane Montgomery get over the two numbers he saw as he walked back to the locker room: Duke 35, N.C. State 26.

"I'd rather win. I'd rather throw for a hundred yards and win than throw for 300, 400 and lose," Montgomery said. "I don't really try to think about them now. I'm just going to try to get the offense back in gear and help us be more consistent next week."

One week ago, Montgomery suffered a concussion that knocked him out of action. He put up some dizzying numbers against the Blue Devils, though, throwing for an NCAA record 73 times, including 32 passes in the third quarter alone to tie another NCAA record. His 535 passing yards set an Atlantic Coast Conference record, and three N.C. State marks fell in the process.

But Blue Devil wide receiver Clarkston Hines made some history on Saturday as well, catching two touchdown passes from Dave Brown to surpass the career record of 34 set by Houston's Elmo Wright from 1968-70. He raised his total to 35 in a 21-point second quarter that put the Wolfpack away.

"I was just happy we got some more points on the board," Hines said.

Hines didn't have the record by himself for long, though. A few hours later, Terance Mathis of New Mexico caught three touchdowns to give him 35 career TDs as well.

Hines' two touchdowns came in handy when the Wolfpack mounted their second-half comeback. N.C. State had no running plays after the six-minute mark of the third period.

"We made a few adjustments in the second half, but nothing earth-shattering," N.C. State coach Dick Spurrier said. "We just forced them to punt a few times and our offense kept the ball away from them more."

Several published reports on Sunday had the Blue Devils going to the All-American Bowl in Birmingham, Ala., to face Georgia. Coach Steve Spurrier's team also can win the ACC championship if it beats North Carolina and Virginia loses to Maryland next weekend.

"I told the team that we've got a great, great chance to go to a bowl," Spurrier said. "I can't tell them officially, but I can tell them it looks good. I think that word is out, but I can't officially say."
