Intercepted Ship Arrives In Port, Navy Following Merchant Vessels

FUJAIRA, United Arab Emirates (AP) — An American cargo ship that was intercepted and searched by the Iranian navy in international waters arrived in this port today, and U.S. warships were reported to be escorting other American vessels in nearby shipping lanes.

The U.S. ambassador to the United Arab Emirates, George Quincey Lumsden, visited the 39,000-ton President Taylor after it entered port and listened to a report on the incident by the ship's captain, Robert Reimann.

Malcolm Stafford, general manager of Fujaira National Shipping Co., agents of the President Taylor, said, "Everybody (aboard) is safe, everything is fine."

The vessel with its 43-man crew was scheduled to leave Tuesday for India, he said.

A maritime shipping agent who spoke on condition he not be identified said, "Units of the U.S. Navy have been physically shadowing American merchant ships in and near gulf sea lanes, protecting them against the eventuality of being harassed by the Iranians."

The shipping agent contended the Iranians were "merely flexing their muscle, apparently to demonstrate solidarity with Libya."

The Reagan administration accuses Libya of supporting the terrorist group that is believed to be responsible for attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports Dec. 27 in which 19 people died. Last week, President Reagan announced an end to all economic activity between the United States and Libya, and ordered Americans living in the North African country to leave.

No arms were found aboard the ship, which is owned by American President Lines, Ltd., of Oakland, Calif.

"Seven armed Iranian soldiers and officers boarded the ship and opened three boxes of cargo," one Arab diplomat told The Associated Press. "What we know is that the boxes contain cotton. The President Taylor had to stop and allow the Iranians to come aboard when these Iranians threatened to blow it up."

It was the first American vessel boarded by the Iranians, who have boarded cargo ships from other countries in an effort to block arms shipments to neighboring Iraq. Iran and Iraq have been at war since September 1980.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency confirmed the interception of the ship in a report monitored today in Nicosia, Cyprus. The news agency said seven sailors boarded the ship Sunday, and that it was released two hours later.

IRNA quoted an Iranian naval officer as "repeating once more that in the Persian Gulf, Iran will seize ships suspected of carrying military hardware for the Baghdad regime." It also said no arms were found on the ship.

Sources in the Persian Gulf said the sailors boarded the ship in the Gulf of Oman about 30 miles southeast of Fujairah and 20 miles off the coast of Oman.

White House spokesman Peter Rousell said President Reagan had been informed of the incident. The president returned Sunday afternoon from a weekend at Camp David, the presidential retreat in Maryland, but made no comment to reporters.

"Obviously, it is a matter of serious concern," he said.

In an interview Sunday night on Cable News Network, the Iranian ambassador to the United Nations, Dr. Said Rajaie-Khorassani, defended the boarding.

"We think it is justified according to international law because it is not tolerable for us to see that ships are carrying or may be carrying armaments to Iraq," he said.

A U.S. government official who spoke on condition he not be identified said the Iranian boarding party consisted of three officers and four sailors "described as businesslike and non-threatening."

Richard Tavrow, a senior vice president and general counsel of the shipping company, said the vessel was stopped by one Iranian navy ship.

"They requested the ship to stop," apparently by radio, said Tavrow. "The master protested and said the ship was in international waters, but they in effect said you'd better stop because they had an armed vessel."

"We're certainly concerned because we serve Fujaira and we are a major U.S. line company. To that extent we have to be very concerned about anything" that interferes with shipping traffic, he said.

None of the 23 ships operated by American President Lines serve Iran or Iraq, Tavrow said.

The United States declared neutrality after the Iran-Iraq war broke out.

No Action

The missing private grant funds for South Greenville Schools were discussed, without any action being taken, at an early morning special call meeting today of the Greenville City Board of Education.

Superintendent Dr. Eddie West said "I brought board members up to date on the status of the investigation being conducted on that matter."

The missing funds are part of the total $100,000 earmarked for South Greenville, from an Atlantic-Richfield private grant for use by the school over a three-year period.

Asked for details on the update he presented to the school board, West said "the investigation by the State Department of Public Instruction is continuing, at this point with no immediate investigation at the local level. Beyond that I cannot comment."

The second item discussed in executive session dealt with property options for land on which to construct a facility to eventually house the program now at Agnes Fullilove School. "We discussed several property options, but no decision was made at the meeting this morning," West said.

Security Tightened As Alert Advances

By ABNER KATZMAN
Associated Press Writer

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Authorities barricaded approaches to the U.S. Embassy and sent more police to patrol near other possible American targets of Palestinian terrorists thought to be preparing a strike against Americans, Israelis, or Jews.

But officials who spoke Sunday on condition they not be identified said it would be virtually impossible to guard all the potential targets. "Our police are at a loss what to do," a source said.

"Imagine all the Israeli, Jewish or American (targets) in a community. How do you guard them?" asked the source. "The embassy or consulate, that's easy. But just private things?"

The Justice Ministry said Sunday that a high alert began Thursday because of an Interpol warning against a possible attack by the Abu Nidal terror group against Israelis or Jews in the Netherlands or Scandinavia was expanded Sunday to include possible U.S. targets.

"There had been talk for a few days that American targets could be endangered," ministry spokeswoman Toos Faber said. "But this morning it became more conclusive. There is an extension of the targets."

The alert came less than two weeks before scheduled two-day visit to the Netherlands by Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres. The Israeli Embassy in The Hague said the visit would go on as scheduled.

Authorities blocked the access road to the U.S. Embassy in The Hague with sand-filled dumpsters late Sunday, and police converged within minutes to investigate the flash of a photographer's camera.

Police spokesman Klaas Wilting said other U.S. facilities were under heavy guard.

About 10 synagogues, Jewish historical sites such as the Anne Frank House, and Israeli diplomatic and commercial buildings were put under close guard, and surveillance was intensified at airports, border crossings and ports.

Many American companies, such as IBM, Hilton, Marriott and McDonald's have high-visibility operations in the Netherlands, and there also is a large American diplomatic and business community.

The U.S. government has blamed Abu Nidal's dissident offshoot of the Palestine Liberation Organization, for Dec. 27 terrorist attacks near the check-in counters of the Israeli El Al airline in Vienna and Rome that left 19 dead, including five Americans.

Scandinavian officials said their alert had not been expanded to include American targets. No terrorist-related incidents or arrests were reported in the Netherlands or Scandinavia over the weekend.

The alert by Interpol, the international police organization, was based on a tip from a Western European intelligence service that tracked an anti-Israeli terrorist group.

Over 2,000 N.C. Farmers Said Behind On Payments

RALEIGH (AP) — Some 2,400 North Carolina farmers behind in repaying their loans to the Farmers Home Administration could lose their farms by midsummer if they don't answer warning letters being mailed this month by the agency.

"It's important that they do respond," Larry Godwin, FmHA state director, said in a recent interview. "Failure to respond is going to cause them problems. It's important that they not say 'this is another piece of mail' and throw it into the garbage."

The letters mark the end of a two-year nationwide moratorium on farm foreclosures by the FmHA, which lends money to farmers who can't get credit elsewhere. Delinquent borrowers will be asked to select one of seven options for reducing their debts.

Foreclosure proceedings will be initiated against borrowers who do not reply within 30 days.

Some agriculture experts across the country say the letters mean that waves of FmHA borrowers will be forced out of farming.

"This opens up the gates for there to be more foreclosures and liquidations."

Speeches, Songs, Mark King Tribute

By The Associated Press

American voices were raised in prayer, in oratory and in song to begin a week of homage to Martin Luther King Jr., the slain civil rights leader and "drum major for justice" honored with a national holiday on Jan. 20.

"We are not here because Martin Luther King died. We are here because he lives," Rev. Cameron Alexander told a gathering of 1,500 people Sunday at Atlanta's Big Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church.

Although the federal holiday honoring the Nobel Peace Prize winner is Jan. 20, King actually was born Jan. 15, 1929. He was shot to death by James Earl Ray on April 4, 1968.

"Dr. King celebrated his own birthday by praying and planning to fight for justice, feed the hungry and empower the poor," the Rev. Jesse Jackson, a former King aide, told a Brooklyn congregation Sunday.

"In life, King projected himself as a drum major for justice," Jackson was quoted by his press secretary as saying. "That is what he truly was. In death he is being projected by the media as a 'non-threatening dreamer.'"

Marion Wright Edelman Lobbies for Children

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A preacher's daughter, Marion Wright Edelman vividly recalls the injustices she felt and saw growing up poor and black in the segregated South.

But she also remembers the values her parents pushed: working hard, getting an education, helping others. To this day, she is following their lead.

As president of the Children's Defense Fund, Mrs. Edelman is a voice for the nation's children, particularly the 13 million who are poverty-stricken. Frequently they are black, and live in households headed by women.

"There are certain things that are critically important to women and children and we ought to be out there pushing for those regardless of the political atmosphere," Mrs. Edelman says.

Started in 1973, the children's organization has grown into a $4 million national operation with 60 staff members. There are offices in Mississippi and Ohio and state projects in Minnesota and Texas.

"Our goal is to educate the nation about the needs of children and encourage preventive investment in them before they get sick, drop out of school or get into trouble," says an official of the fund.

Its concerns include nutrition and health care for children and pregnant women, prevention of teen-age pregnancy, child care, child abuse and education.

To maintain its objectivity, the organization refuses even a penny of government money, getting it instead from foundations, corporate grants and individual donations.

"What we do today for kids is going to determine who is going to pay our Social Security in 20 years," Mrs. Edelman said during an interview at the defense fund's offices in the shadow of the capital.

Mrs. Edelman, 46, is a thin woman with a big smile who talks quickly, using the kind of verbal imagery her preacher-father might have used in his black Baptist church in Bennettsville, S.C., a town of 9,000 in the heart of the state's tobacco-growing country.

The youngest of five children, Mrs. Edelman's family was poor, but not as poor as many blacks eking out an existence in the days of the Depression and Jim Crow.

Although she described her childhood as happy, she is still appalled that black children in her town had no swimming pool so they played in a watering hole polluted with sewage.

Among her more pleasant memories, however, is knowing that her family didn't just talk about helping others. Mrs. Edelman's father started the first home for the aged — black or white — in Bennettsville, and her mother cared for foster children.

"She's always been committed," says Mrs. Edelman's older sister, Olive Covington. "She felt she never had a choice."

Her liberal values, her view that government has a responsibility to care for those who are poor and disenfranchised and her strong religious belief reflect her heritage and her active involvement in the 1960s civil rights struggle.

Under her leadership, the fund has branched out into many areas. Its legal staff initiates suits on behalf of children; its research staff churns out books, compiles statistics and provides technical help to state and local groups, and its lobbyists fight for children's programs on Capitol Hill.

Researcher Paul Smith says much of the staff's time is devoted to combating teen-age pregnancy, particularly among black girls.

Over the years, the defense fund has scored some impressive victories, especially in the legal field. Roughly 15 lawsuits are on the books at any one time.

Because of those suits, Louisiana no longer ships handicapped foster children to Texas and handicapped kids in Mississippi are afforded full educational opportunities. And in Texas, the Medicaid health program was stopped from reducing services that might harm poor children.

Since 1981, however, the fund's most publicized battles have been over money for federal programs.

In that arena, Mrs. Edelman has suffered setbacks.

With his first budget in fiscal year 1982, President Reagan managed to trim about $10 billion from programs affecting poor children, the fund says. The major chunks came out of Medicaid, Aid for Families with Dependent Children, food stamps, child nutrition programs, college aid and housing.

Those cuts slowed in the following years. "We're trying to recoup and get back to where we were in 1980," Mrs. Edelman said.

For instance, the fund worked to upgrade a remedial reading program that was trimmed in 1982 and it has pushed for a pattern of changes in Medicaid, including one making it easier for pregnant mothers to get care.

But she worries about the mood in Congress where lawmakers are toying with measures that would balance the budget with across-the-board cuts over time.

"It's like a hurricane coming through and it's uprooting the trees you've been nourishing and trying to plant and get to grow," she says, adding that children are the ones at risk.

Census Bureau figures indicate that the number of children mired in poverty has increased since 1979.

Between 1979 and 1983, the number of poor children increased by nearly 3.5 million, the bureau said. They declined by 520,000 in the following year, but that drop was entirely among white children. The poverty rate for black children was 46.2 percent in 1984.

Budget-cutting, combined the Reagan philosophy of reducing the role of federal government, irks Mrs. Edelman, and she's not afraid to speak her mind.

Although she agrees with conservatives on the need to stress family life, Mrs. Edelman calls them "absolute hypocrites, if I can be very blunt about it."

"I don't understand how you can be pro-life and not be out there fighting for pre-natal care ... not be out there fighting for the kind of child-care support and nutrition support that helps mothers do a good job with their families," she says.

For its part, the administration staunchly defends its record.

"Children are a top priority," says Enid Borden, a spokeswoman for the Department of Health and Human Services' office of human development services.

"We have not made cuts," she says. "They are wrong."

Whatever changes have been made were in the interest of targeting resources more effectively, she says. Among those programs emphasized by the administration are Head Start, the pre-school education program for poor kids and adoption programs.

Some conservatives think Mrs. Edelman's ideas, however noble, do not bring results.

Charles Murray, a senior fellow at the conservative Manhattan Institute and author of a book entitled "Losing Ground," which advocates cutting welfare programs, is one of them.

Everyone wants to help children, Murray says, adding that he believes in pouring money into education.

But he criticizes groups like the Children's Defense Fund for what he calls their failure to attach a moral stigma to out-of-wedlock teen-age pregnancies.

Without such reprobation, he fears a cycle of welfare will perpetuate itself. The federal government should stop making it possible for these mothers to keep their children without assuming any responsibility for their actions, he said.

Mrs. Edelman attended Spelman College, a black school in Atlanta from which she graduated No. 1 in her class. Later, she won a scholarship to Yale law school, graduating there in 1963. After a year in New York, she went to Jackson, Miss., where for four years she directed the NAACP's Legal Defense Fund.

Her husband is Peter Edelman, whom she met when, as an aide to the late Sen. Robert Kennedy, he visited Mississippi. Edelman is now a professor of law at Georgetown University. The couple has three sons, ages 16, 15, and 11.

This year Mrs. Edelman was awarded a MacArthur Foundation fellowship, which gives her more than $100,000 over the next five years. The awards go to people who have contributed to society.

Like a true believer, Mrs. Edelman believes that people will come around to her views "if we do a better job of presenting our case in this deficit atmosphere."

"We are making real progress and helping people understand that their self-interest lies in investing in children and families."

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Reader Has Magic Words To Shut Door To Her Unhappy Youth

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from the 30-year-old married woman who hated to go home for the holidays because her family kept repeating the stories about how fat, dumb and miserable she was as a child. (They all laughed and made a joke of it.)

I, too, was a fat (200 pounds), sullen, unhappy and unpopular teen-ager, but I grew older and wiser. I trimmed down and became a very successful professional woman. After 10 years in Overeaters Anonymous, I realized that my family could have mixed feelings of pride and jealousy about my adult accomplishments. Some people act more out of habit than malice. I broke my family of their habit of making my miserable past the focal point for family entertainment, or a topic of disclosure to strangers in my presence, with 12 simple words: "There is no need to discuss that now; let's change the subject."

I repeated them in the car, in the shower, to my husband and the mirror until it became automatic. Then every time they started in on my past, I repeated it. No explanations; repetition only. When family members became defensive or denied any intent to hurt me, I said, "That's OK. There is no need to discuss that now. Let's change the subject."

Once, out of pride, I'm sure, my mother started to tell an acquaintance what a fat, rebellious teen-ager I had been. I broke into her conversation with the magic words. Mother later said she was upset that I had publicly admonished her. I simply repeated the phrase.

I'm now 34, and my family seldom mentions my childhood. If they do, I remind them with: "There is no need to discuss that now; let's change the subject."

Abby, if you think my letter will help someone whose family insists on dredging up painful garbage from the past, feel free to use this, but not my name. Sign me ...

MOVING ON

DEAR MOVING: Thank you for a moving letter.

DEAR ABBY: Please inform "Just Asking," who wanted to know what might happen to her because of her husband's failure to file tax returns, that there are a wide variety of possible answers—most of them bad—depending on where they live, the actual income involved, and her actual or deemed knowledge of his reporting of income.

Assuming he earned above certain minimum income levels, it is likely that he should have reported his income, good records or not. The Internal Revenue Service may construct his income for him if he fails to do so, and probably not to his benefit.

If taxes are due, all of their marital property could be subject to a tax liability. She might have "innocent spouse" status for the unreported income; however, that protection would evaporate if she continues to acquiesce in the non-reporting of income.

A divorce will not protect her from past liability to the federal treasury, nor will she likely be able to avoid the tax debt in considering the division of marital property. Your advice was good — get to a tax professional (a CPA or tax attorney)

Proportion Helps Petites Hold Onto The Spotlight

By HARPER'S BAZAAR
A Hearst Magazine

Morgan Fairchild, Bernadette Peters and Apollonia are three examples of good things that come in small packages, and these petite stars keep their sense of proportion to look their best.

The importance of proportion in everything from hairstyle on down was among the fashion tips offered by the stars in the January issue of Harper's Bazaar for women 5-foot-4 and under.

Proportion is the rule when Bernadette Peters, 5-foot-3 star of Broadway's "Song and Dance," picks her wardrobe.

"I don't rule anything out, as long as the proportion's right," she said. "That's the main thing to watch when you're 5-foot-4 and under."

She likes this season's short, fitted shimmering jackets.

"This is the key to dressing for small size and terrific looks — cropped jackets," she said. "Besides being versatile, they put you right in the spotlight."

"Jackets are the mainstay of my wardrobe. They're fun — they can be strict or flamboyant, day or evening. I think of them as 'my' look."

When movie and TV star Morgan Fairchild, 5-foot-4, was asked the secret of looking tall, she answered in one word: "Proportion." And that starts at the top, with her hair.

Fairchild's hair stylist, Suga, advised short women not to wear hair longer than four inches below the shoulder, nor should it stand away from the head too much or it overshadows the body.

Fairchild works out with weights to keep her body in proportion. She eats anything — but only in half portions.

"Clothes play an important part in keeping a right size balance, too," she said. "I've learned to focus on a single item — the belt, the jewel — even a color. I'm after impact. I don't want to distract the eye. So I avoid anything that breaks up the silhouette. Solid colors are more effective than prints."

"I grew up with lots of incentive to stand tall. My 5-foot-9 sister can wear whatever she wants and look great in it. I can't. The trick is to make people think I can. You alone know your limits. You've done it right when they say, 'You're so lucky — you can wear anything.'"

Apollonia, now seen in CBS's "Falcon Crest," doesn't worry about distracting the eye when it comes to accessories.

"If you're short and adore accessories, the sky's the limit. Style is whatever makes you feel comfortable," she said, adding:

"Maybe being short makes you feisty. But I'm out to break the rules. None of this 'small-scale' stuff for me — I'm light years away from demure prints and delicate jewelry. From the time I was little, I remember playing with accessories, trying on everything from mother's fake diamonds to necklaces I'd string together myself, made of bottle caps. I'm an accessories fanatic — if it shines, it's mine."

Apollonia likes close-fitting, off-beat bare dresses.

"If you're small," she told Harper's Bazaar, "I think you have to choose outfits that follow — and show off — your body lines."

"And it's very attractive when a woman wears something so tight she has to walk like a lady."

Views On Dental Health

Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S., P.A.

BITING YOUR CHEEK AT NIGHT

If you've noticed that you sometimes bite your cheek at night when you're sleeping, this may indicate a combination of problems, such as tension, irregularities in teeth surfaces, or improperly aligned teeth. Some people express tension by clenching or grinding their teeth, either while awake or unconsciously when they're asleep. When the lower teeth are rubbed against the upper teeth this is called bruxism. If you grind your teeth from side to side this may result in a bite or damage to your cheek or lips.

You may be able to relieve the emotional aspects of the problem by trying to eliminate whatever is causing the tension. The dental aspects can be helped by your dentist. For instance, he can check the relationship of your bite to see if there are any irregularities in your teeth that are causing problems. He may suggest that you wear a Hawley-type appliance or a night guard to help break the bruxing habit. This will also give him another way of checking your bite to find out what dental problems should be corrected.

Your Social Security Disability Benefits

BENEFITS DENIED?
Have you been denied benefits under Social Security's disability benefits programs? Do not be discouraged. That happens to most people who apply the first time.

Have you asked for reconsideration of your disability claim and been turned down a second time? Again, don't be discouraged or give up. That's the way the disability system works today.

Take your case one step further and go before a Social Security Administrative Law Judge for a hearing with a qualified representative to present your case. Then the chances of your winning benefits are somewhere between 70% and 80%. The Judge will see you and hear your personal description of your physical or mental illness, and your representative will present your case as it applies to the complex rules of the Social Security Act.

If you have a hearing requested or scheduled before an Administrative Law Judge, call now for an immediate conference. There is no fee for an initial conference to discuss your eligibility for disability.

ECU Cycle Safety Class Only In State

By TONY M. RUMPLE
ECU News Bureau

You won't get a degree in "motorpsychology" by taking Dr. Alfred King's elective course in motorcycle driving at East Carolina University — the only such program in the state — but you will increase your chances of surviving in a four-wheeled world.

"I am not pushing motorcycles or the sale of motorcycles," King said in a recent interview. "I don't even recommend riding one, because of the safety factor."

A motorcyclist is 11 times more likely to be injured or killed in an accident than is the driver of a four-wheeled vehicle, King said. "My objective is not only to make safer operators, but for them to pass this information on to others," he explained.

King, coordinator of driver and safety education at ECU, saw the need for motorcycle-training classes while holding a similar post at Michigan State University during the mid-1960s. With gas shortages, the popularity of small, high-mileage motorcycles increased.

According to Wanda Daughtry of the information processing section of the North Carolina Department of Motor Vehicles, there were 67,814 motorcycles registered in the state in 1985.

King borrowed ideas from workshops and incorporated them into the ECU driver-ed program. The two semester-hour course which began in 1974 is taught year-round. "We don't lack for students," said King, who is certified to teach by the Motorcycle Safety Foundation in Costa Mesa, Calif.

One of King's students, Sue Farmer, a junior urban regional planning major from Ayden, has always had a love for motorcycles. "I had a couple of minibikes when I was younger and am thinking of getting a street bike. I thought it would be good to get some experience, to learn the do's and don'ts and get out of some of my bad habits," she said. One important thing she has learned is how to keep control of the bike while starting, stopping and maneuvering around obstacles.

After a student learns the location and function of the motorcycle controls, he moves on to a two-part riding course where he practices hesitating stops, stopping in curves, quick and emergency stops and evasive maneuvers. There are also two trail exercise areas where he can get the "feel" of the clutch and brakes. "Improper braking is the number one cause of accidents involving only the biker," King said.

Mike McNeal, a senior production management major from Fairfax, Va., heard about the course from a friend who had taken it. He has learned that driving slowly and controlling a motorcycle takes a lot of practice. "The U-turn is the hardest exercise I have. I go outside the cones a lot; it took me a while to learn that one," McNeal said.

The greatest hazard to a biker is the driver of another vehicle, King said. "An automobile making a left turn is the most dangerous situation a rider can be in. If you don't watch out for that, you won't last too long."

Denise Deaton, a graduate student instructor, said a student completing the class is qualified to get a motorcycle endorsement on his driver's license. Such an endorsement is required in North Carolina to operate a motorcycle.

Since the advent of electric starters, more female students have enrolled in the course. "I find that they usually end up being some of our better riders," said King. "They haven't developed as many bad habits as the males."

Karen Leonard, a senior business management major from Louisburg, decided to take the class because of an experience last summer. "A lot of my guy friends were riding their motorcycles and I wanted to try it, but they wouldn't let me, saying that I didn't know how," she said. "I decided to take this course so that they couldn't tell me that any more."

"It's fun and also a learning experience," she said, "and outside of school, there's not many people who will take the time to teach you."

Keenly aware of improvements in highway safety, King praised North Carolina's new seat belt law. "I think it's great that we finally had a legislature courageous enough to fight the battle. I believe that statistics are going to show a dramatic reduction in the number of serious and fatal injuries because of the law," he said. The only drawback he can see is that the law will not be enforced until January 1987. King said he thinks the safest device is the air bag, but said, "You'll still have to wear a lap belt or you might not hit the bag."

Drinking and driving is the major problem on highways, King said. "As long as alcohol is out there, people are going to drink and drive; it cannot be eliminated. But through education, it can be alleviated. We have to just keep pounding away and hope we get the message across," he said. He also said that the law which will return the drinking age in North Carolina to 21 will have a positive effect.

"What we really need and what I'm pushing for right now is a statewide safety education program for motorcycle and ATV (all-terrain-vehicles) operators. We don't have anything for them now," he said. King currently is writing a request for a grant that would establish such a program.

"While we are primarily in the business of producing driver education teachers for the public schools," said King, "we also contribute to the safety education of elementary school teachers in the areas of school bus, bicycle and pedestrian safety."

King is a member of the executive committee of the technical coordinating committee of the statewide Institute for Transportation Research and Education based at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and an active member in the North Carolina Driver and Traffic Safety Education Association.

Additionally, King is a member of and gives many presentations at meetings for the American Driver and Traffic Safety Education Association in Washington, D.C., and is co-chairman of the higher education program for the 1986 ADTSEA conference that will be held in Minneapolis. He is also a member and past chairman of the Greenville City Recreation and Parks Commission and a member and past president of the Pitt County Safety Council. King and his staff of seven, which includes four graduate students, teach between 175 and 225 students a semester. "We are small and we want to stay small," King said. "We could double our enrollment within a year just by offering more of the elective motorcycle and basic courses, but we're here for the purpose of turning out educators. I want every student to have the opportunity to get a job."

Teaching Diplomats To Stay Alive Abroad

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In its campaign against terrorism, the State Department is telling American diplomats to leave behind "your Rambo T-shirts and red, white and blue jogging suits" and take a cautious approach to living and working abroad.

"It's a sign of the times that I spend my first full day at the State Department attending a seminar on terrorism," said Margaret Heckler, the former secretary of health and human services who is headed to Ireland as U.S. ambassador.

Mrs. Heckler was one of 50 people attending the department's seminar on "Coping with Violence Abroad" last week. The one-day seminar teaches U.S. officials and their spouses how to avoid terrorists and what to do if they are attacked or taken hostage.

The course has been beefed up to cope with increasingly frequent and bloody attacks on Americans abroad. Further improvements are planned to face the growing threat, and to counter criticism from diplomats.

In the first 175 years of U.S. history, not one American diplomat was killed for political reasons, but in the last 20 years, 70, including six ambassadors, have died at the hands of political assassins, according to U. Alexis Johnson, a former ambassador.

Carol A. Madison, who was a public affairs officer in the U.S. Embassy in Beirut 1983-84 when it was bombed twice, doesn't think the State Department course takes the right direction.

"I found it largely inadequate for preparing foreign service personnel for the stresses — both physical and psychological — that are part of living with terrorism," Ms. Madison wrote in the Foreign Service Journal, a magazine for diplomats.

Ms. Madison called the seminar "counterproductive because, by raising fears and then demonstrating techniques that only experts can perform to avoid terrorist attacks, it is apt to make people feel they are helpless to deal with the entire subject of terrorism and security."

Her criticism highlights the tightrope diplomats must walk abroad: to be effective, they must have as much contact as possible with local people and officials, but to be safe they often must live and work in heavily guarded buildings and present as small a target as possible.

"We are not trying to create a paramilitary corps; our mission is diplomacy," said Arnie Campbell, the Foreign Service Institute official who coordinates the training seminar. He and other officials acknowledged that much of Ms. Madison's criticism was justified, and has helped them reshape the program.

U.S. Africa Expert Meeting With White-Led Government

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The State Department's top expert on Africa met with officials of the white-led government today, apparently to nudge South Africa toward compromise on its racial policies and control of neighboring South-West Africa.

After a morning meeting with President P.W. Botha at his Cape Town office, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Chester Crocker met with Foreign Minister R.F. Botha, officials said.

Crocker flew to Cape Town from Johannesburg late Sunday night after beginning a three-day visit marred by the brutal slaying by a gang of blacks of a community leader due to escort him on a tour of black townships near Johannesburg.

Ampie Mayisa, 58, was chased from his home late Saturday in Leandra township 74 miles east of Johannesburg and hacked to death by a gang, his son Joshua Mayisa said Sunday.

The slaying of Mayisa, considered a supporter of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid group, did not appear connected to Crocker's visit.

Cuomo's Blunder Scores Inexperience

Discord

A recent study published the bizarre finding that New York benefits more from tobacco money than North Carolina. This may not sound strange, but in the Tar Heel state — the top tobacco producer for the nation — the truth strikes a disharmonious chord.

North Carolina did rank second in economic benefit from tobacco, followed by Virginia, California and Ohio. Why do these faraway states get more dollars than the top tobacco producer? Heavy retail, wholesale, advertising and business employment are responsible, said the study. For example, when a North Carolina grower comes away from a season with a few dollars in his pocket and is able to buy a car or television set, it is unlikely these items came from North Carolina.

That may sound like a hint to state officials to recruit more electronics and automotive-related industries, but to us it proves the potential national impact of a dwindling leaf trade.

In short, if the demand is not there from the North Carolina tobacco grower for a car or television, then somebody in New York or California or Ohio will be hurting too.

Want more evidence? Consider these facts: First, direct and indirect tobacco employment accounted for 2.5 percent of the total civilian workforce in 1983. Second, California and New York ranked fourth and fifth in the nation in tobacco-related employment — taking a back seat only to leaf producers North Carolina, Kentucky and Virginia. In California and New York, 100,000 persons worked in tobacco-related jobs in 1983. Third, of the $28.3 billion spent in 1983 by consumers on tobacco products $13.5 billion — nearly half — went to federal, state and local governments in taxes.

It is important to dispel the illusion that the economic impact of tobacco is felt in the southeastern United States alone. We think the facts about where leaf money goes are persuasive evidence. Many metaphors about the gold leaf losing its luster have been penned recently, but observers have considered only the impact on tobacco-producing areas. When tobacco dies, the entire nation will feel the pain.

WASHINGTON — Gov. Mario Cuomo's pre-Christmas blunder, heatedly protesting descriptions of the crime syndicate as the Mafia, confirms to his own supporters just how far he is from being ready to run for president in 1988.

It certainly makes no political sense for an Italo-American to blunder into the language used by mob lawyers. "Thankfully, it was buried by the holiday season," one prominent New York Democrat who supports Cuomo for president told us.

Indeed, a check of party leaders across the country showed little or no awareness of the incident. But Cuomo and his press secretary, Martin Steadman, have been on the telephone telling Washington-based reporters that he never denied the existence of the Mafia — only its use as a synonym for organized crime.

The significance is what this tells about Mario Cuomo two years away from presidential primaries. He remains a quintessential New York politician, geared more to local ethnic considerations than national coalition-building. Nor is he willing to forego semantic debate for his own political sake.

While close advisers are eager to enter national competition, the governor himself tells the truth when he says he is a long way from committed to that massive undertaking. Nothing could better show that than Cuomo insisting to us, one month afterwards, that his Mafia comments did not constitute one of 1985's blunders.

When mobster Paul Castellano was shot to death in front of a midtown Manhattan steakhouse the night of Dec. 16, Cuomo was mortified by the New York Post headline: "Mafia's No. 1 Blown Away." In Albany, he vented that exasperation to reporters — including the Post's Frederic Dicker. "You're telling me the Mafia is the organization and I'm telling you that is a lot of baloney," said Cuomo. "It is nothing. It is a word invented by people."

Those quotes came from what one bystander called "a 45-minute Cuomoesque, Socratic dialogue" with Dicker. The newsman insisted that Tony Buffalo, a small-time bookie in Cuomo's boyhood New York City neighborhood, must have had to pay off the Mafia; the governor called that nonsense.

Just what Cuomo was talking about was described over CNN's "Crossfire" program by the governor's fellow New York Democrat and sometime adversary, Mayor Edward Koch: "What I think the governor was trying to convey, perhaps inarticulately because of his emotions ..., is that organized crime is not only the Mafia." But Koch added that a visitor, Gov. Rosario Nicolosi of Sicily, when asked about organized crime trials on his island, replied, "What is this business with organized crime? It's the Mafia." Some Cuomo supporters attribute his vehemence to personal sensitivity about ethnic discrimination and pressure from Italo-American groups, representing 38 percent of his state's voters. He is genuinely outraged over treatment of Italo-American politicians, particularly by the right, and questioning of his record against organized crime.

More basically, the incident reveals the old Queens county lawyer's appetite for debate. A month after the incident, he does not concede Castellano belonged to the Mafia. Wondering out loud whether references to a slain mobster as a Mafioso "sums up images that are unfair" to Italo-Americans does not come with running for president.

Cuomo's political problem is described by a liberal member of the Democratic National Committee from the Deep South: "Between Richmond and Houston, there are no Cuomo's and damn few Marios." The philologic debate about the Mafia does not relieve that ethnic difficulty.

Cuomo proves he is not running for president in other ways, such as refusing to take positions on international affairs. When asked about the contras in an interview with the Village Voice, he replied: "Nicaragua, I'm not too good. I'm no expert on foreign policy issues."

In such primary states as Iowa and New Hampshire, there is no Cuomo presence. Democratic State Chairman Dave Nagle told us last year's enthusiasm in Iowa, when Cuomo was first choice of the party faithful for the Jefferson-Jackson dinner, is "rapidly evaporating." When the governor turned down the Iowa affair, Sen. Joseph Biden of Delaware accepted and turned it into the year's most successful visit to the state.

None of Cuomo's boosters expect him to join the presidential trail anytime soon. But they are hoping for too much if they expect him to pull away from the Mafia debate. One supporter said the governor is probably sorry he ever initiated the dispute. "Absolutely not," Cuomo told us, adding he has not finished talking about it. "I'm sure its bad politics," he said. That's an unusual admission for one of the nation's sure-footed politicians, but one with which his backers would agree.

Strength For Today

The Greek word for "household" used in the New Testament is "therapeia." From this we get the English word therapeutics, which means the science of healing. The ancient Greek-speaking world therefore looked upon the home as a place of healing — the place where the wounds of life are cleansed and the diseases of the mind and body cared for and healed.

A true home today is this very same place — a center wherein all that is hurt is healed, and all that is weak and immature tended with loving care.

But unfortunately there are households not of this nature. Some are places of bruising and cutting. And where this is true the members thereof need to ask themselves why they are turning something God intended to be good into a source of evil. When people make the home a center of bitterness and hate, they have transformed it into an engine to destroy the people housed within it.

Lack Of Preparation

RALEIGH — Rep. Theresa Esposito, R-Forsyth, had sat through two hours of hearings on North Carolina's readiness to handle a high level radioactive waste storage facility when she thought she heard something astonishing.

"Am I to understand that we in North Carolina have not had an extensive study on high level waste?" Mrs. Esposito asked, almost expecting to hear that she'd heard wrong. No, she'd heard right. A representative of the Governor's Waste Management Board told her no such study has ever been performed.

Members of the Legislature's Study Commission on High Level Radioactive Waste found out how ill-prepared North Carolina is for the upcoming battle over where such a storage facility will be located. The U.S. Department of Energy is looking for a site, they've had their eyes on North Carolina, but the state isn't ready to either fight its selection by DOE or to handle the problems such a site would bring.

"It's like no one's in charge," Sen. Charlie Hipps, D-Haywood, co-chairman of the study commission, said after the meeting. "We need someone in charge and we need an overall plan."

Thirty North Carolina rock formations are on DOE's list of 236 potential sites for an eastern high level radioactive waste storage facility. A western facility is likely to be built on one of three sites already identified. DOE is expected to reduce its list to 15 sites on Jan. 16.

If a North Carolina site is on the list of 15, the state will have 90 days to appeal. But Sen. David Parnell, D-Robeson, and Rep. Dave Diamont, D-Surry, said they doubted the state could put together a serious appeal in just three months because so little preparatory work has been done.

Hipps agreed. "Nobody is developing any criteria as to what is, or isn't, a good site" for a facility. "We have to be able to put together a good case if North Carolina is selected," the Waynesville lawyer said.

Hipps is particularly concerned that sites in his district could be chosen. He noted that a site in Henderson County is on the list of 236 even though that area is geologically unstable and prone to earthquakes. He charged that the state has not prepared a good method of making that case to DOE.

Steve Conrad, director of land resources for the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, said the state has tried to tell DOE that, but has had little luck. Conrad says the state does not offer the right geologic make-up for such a facility, he said.

Bill Holman, lobbyist for several environmental groups, said state law does not protect state interests should DOE choose a site in North Carolina. He recommended that the General Assembly pass laws in 1986 that would give the state a say in the site selection and exploration by DOE.

Even if a North Carolina site isn't selected for the storage facility, the state will have problems it cannot handle today, legislators said.

"If we're not on that short list, we're saved," said Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, in reference to the list of 15 sites that will come out this month. "But, we'll always have the transportation problem."

The transportation problem stems from North Carolina's location in the middle of the east. Placing a facility anywhere east of the Mississippi probably means that high level radioactive waste will be transported through the state on interstate highways.

But the Highway Patrol has neither the equipment nor the trained personnel to handle any emergencies that might arise from the transport of such material through the state, legislators said.

Still Wild

"You can never trust a buffalo" is literally the bottom line of a lengthy report from our wire service as to why growing buffalo herds are unlikely to anytime soon replace beef cattle on the at-home menu.

Rancher Tommy Keirse of Oklahoma has a herd of buffalo and considers the animal still "wild" though in order to make herds subject to state inspection laws he helped pass an Oklahoma law that says they are "domestic" animals.

Keirse has a herd of 350 animals and that's enough to warrant looking for a meat packer who will put buffalo steaks, stews, ribs, roasts and burgers on the dining-out menu.

Breeders say demand for the meat is growing and the buffalo heads and hides are very marketable. Small herds are being raised in many states. Unlike cattle, they are said to be a difficult to work with ... being capable of going through almost any fence built by man.

We hope they are never domesticated. Old tales of buffalo herds that stretched from horizon to horizon inflame imaginations and stir wonder and awe at the slaughter they inspired. It would be the crowning blow to those magnificent beasts to be reduced to a truly domestic status.

Air Force One Needs Replacing

WASHINGTON — It stands to reason that Air Force One, the specially fitted Boeing 707 that carries President Reagan and his entourage, is one of the most carefully-maintained aircraft around.

Yet of the two 707s that alternately boast the presidential seal, the younger was purchased in 1972. The other went into government service in 1963. It may be time to provide the White House with a new plane. The main question is, "Which kind?"

Some Reagan administration and Air Force officials have their hearts set on a jumbo jet such as the Boeing 747 or McDonnell Douglas DC-10. These partisans contend that the presidential aircraft should have extra room for additional communications equipment, medical facilities and a larger manifest of passengers. In fact, the 747, which in commercial layout seats roughly 400, would practically double the space afforded by the 707, which has been taken out of production.

But McDonnell Douglas is already manufacturing a cargo-tanker version of the DC-10 for the Air Force, even though the company says it is scheduled to cease production of the plane, the KC-10, next June — barring any new orders.

That contingency has put the squeeze on those involved in military procurement, since the Pentagon needs congressional approval for the most big-ticket purchases. Last month, the administration side-stopped the House and Senate Armed Services Committees to secure from the appropriations panels about $280 million for a new presidential aircraft. Yet the House Armed Services Committee still wants to exercise its right to authorize the money before the appropriations committees spend any.

Hearings on the new Air Force One, which are expected in early 1985, shouldn't be interpreted as yet another example of congressional confusion. It remains to be seen whether the president really needs a plane of DC-10 dimensions when smaller but amply spacious aircraft such as the Boeing 767 are readily available. If a jumbo's size would be enjoyed principally by the additional scores of politicians who could accompany a traveling president, a smaller jet would be a better way to fly.

Reports that Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone will not seek a third term next year may be premature, suggests an American Japan expert and Nakasone intimate, Nathaniel Thayer. Nakasone, who under the rules of his Liberal Democratic Party can serve only two successive two-year terms as party president (a prerequisite for the prime ministership), is said to be considering several options for keeping his hand on the country's helm.

One option would be to press for a change in the party rules to allow the prime minister and LDP president to be two different people. Another, said Thayer, would call for Nakasone to step down at the height of his popularity with the intent of maintaining an advisory role in anticipation of a comeback two years later. Nakasone "hasn't made up his mind on what to do," said confidant Thayer.

Amid Reagan administration charges that the Nicaraguan government has tried to make money off the drug trade come allegations that U.S.-backed anti-Sandinista guerrillas have peddled some dope themselves. According to The Guardian of London, such "contra" groups as the Nicaragua Democratic Force (FDN) have trafficked cocaine through Costa Rica to help pay for their war to overthrow the Managua regime. The newspaper refers to a classified CIA report that alludes to at least $250,000 worth of arms purchases made from drug profits by one contra group alone.

The U.S. has invited Argentina to participate in the Star Wars program, more formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). Washington doesn't want to limit outside participation to its allies in Europe and Japan. The U.S. believes that Argentina, which is said to have the capacity to produce nuclear weapons, has the "technological potential" to supply parts for command and control centers.

Retiring Chairman Praises Sports

By GEORGE A. THREEWITTS
ECU News Bureau

"I've never really been impressed with sports except as a test of what you have done in your training," said Dr. Ray Martinez, a one-time engineering student whose coaching brought a trophy case full of glittering championships to East Carolina University in the 1950s and 1960s.

"To me the most important thing (about sports) is practice," said Martinez, who was East Carolina's first collegiate swimming and diving coach.

"To tell you the truth, I think that an age group swim meet where you have all these kids swimming together is about as exciting as watching the grass grow. The important thing is how well the child did. Did he learn anything?"

Martinez, professor and chairman of the Department of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Safety for the past six years, plans to retire at the end of this academic year after 32 years at ECU. He was a pioneer in developing and using scientific techniques in coaching and his swimmers and divers brought ECU two NAIA national championships. He produced 20 national championship swimmers and 45 All Americans.

By studying swim strokes and dives with motion pictures and computers, applying the principles of mechanics and motion, he was able to convert wildly thrashing arms and legs into smoothly-functioning windmills in the water. By today's standards, such use of technology in athletics is called biomechanics. Martinez was years ahead of his time.

He completed two years of engineering studies at Louisiana State University. But while in the Army Air Force in World War II, he developed an interest in swimming. When he returned to LSU it was to pursue a double major in math and physical education. With a master's degree earned in 1950, he became a special field representative in first aid and water safety for the American Red Cross and was a Red Cross researcher at the Helsinki Olympics in 1952.

He also worked as an instructor at the Red Cross Aquatic school in Brevard, and there came in contact with East Carolina officials. In 1953, he was hired by ECC President John D. Messick to become swimming coach.

Pretty soon, Martinez also was teaching first aid classes for Greenville's first rescue squad — a squad that also was to win national championships and international recognition.

He completed doctoral degree work at the University of Iowa in 1960 and also opened a swim training facility in Greenville which attracted swimmers from all over the United States, Canada and foreign countries.

Part of his success as a swim coach was because of "doing things differently in training," he said. "We had weight training when few coaches were pushing it for swimmers. Also, isometric exercises were used. We took chances and experimented with different regimens of exercise."

"But it all paid off. It made more of a thinking man's type of workout," he recalled. The highlight of his career as a coach came in 1968, his last as a coach. ECU hosted the AAU Indoor National Championships, a qualifying meet for the world Olympics in Mexico City. The event was held in the new Mingos Coliseum natatorium.

"By every standard, we put on the best meet that has ever been held," he said.

Now, Martinez says, "we need a biomechanist to work with the medical school, physical therapy, physics, biology and the performing arts."

"If we had a biomechanist in association with what we already have — the medical school, the human performance lab, the special education lab and sports medicine — we could become a satellite to the Olympic Training Village in Colorado," Martinez said.

Both victims, who had been separated for about two weeks, had been shot in the head and a .22 caliber pistol was found next to Turner's body, Gosnell said.

Couple Slain In Domestic Fight

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte man and his wife were killed Sunday night and her 15-year-old son was stabbed in what police think was a domestic fight.

John W. Hopkins, 42, was stabbed to death and his wife, Joanne, 33, was shot in the face, police said.

Police and neighbors said the man apparently shot his wife, then fought with his stepson, whom he apparently stabbed. During the struggle the stepfather was also stabbed.

The bleeding teen-ager fled the scene, running about 100 yards to a neighbor's house, which had a bloodstained front door.

The neighbor said the boy told her, "My stepfather just stabbed me."

The boy also told them he had seen his father "blow his mother's head off," and that he had stabbed his father more than 30 times, the woman said.

Farm Deeded By Andrew Jackson

Alabama Farmer Loses Land, Family Heritage

By ALVIN BENN
The Advertiser

SAFFORD, Ala. (AP) — It looked like a scene out of one of those movies about farmers on the financial ropes. Big, burly men bundled in heavy coats to ward off the bitter December chill walked slowly to the auctioneer's stand.

There was little enthusiasm. The items were called off one by one. Bids were asked, but not always given.

Off to one side stood 77-year-old Robert B. Caine and his 43-year-old son, Robert M. Caine.

It was their land and they were watching a farm funeral, one marking the possible end of a 155-year family tradition.

For auctioneer Roy Hereford of Faunsdale, it was an all-too-familiar scene — standing before his friends to sell their prized possessions. He estimated he had done it about 20 times in Alabama's western Black Belt region in 1985. He expects more this year.

This auction was a bit different, though, because it reached to the very soul of Alabama's family farm.

The Caines trace their Alabama family tree to 1830 when Andrew Jackson gave Anderson Holmes a presidential deed to help settle the young state. Alabama had entered the Union 11 years before Holmes' arrival from South Carolina, and there was plenty of land to till.

Holmes and his descendants quickly prospered. They grew cotton, raised cattle and helped build the little Safford community 30 miles southwest of Selma.

The Caine clan became leaders in the Safford Baptist Church, served their country in war and built a reputation based on responsibility and the American work ethic.

Like all farm families, they experienced many ups and downs. The Depression years of the 1930s exacted a heavy toll, but they persevered and managed to remain solvent for nearly half a century.

Several factors in the late 1970s and early 1980s combined to drive the Caines to the auctioneer's block. Back-to-back droughts, sandwiched between a grain embargo, soaring interest rates and low commodity prices, struck with resounding thuds.

They needed cash to fund their operations and got it from a lending institution after mortgaging their farm. The end came when the lender foreclosed for nonpayment of the debt.

They have until May to reclaim their property by coming up with the money, but father and son both admit it will be a difficult uphill road to hoe.

"The Lord performs miracles and that's what we're asking for," said the younger Caine, a big man with leathery hands and steel in his eyes.

Faith is about all they have left these days, and it has helped get them through some very trying times.

The pressure once became so unbearable that the senior Caine stood in church one Sunday morning and called on his friends for support.

"I confided in them," he said. "I knew some farmers were on the verge of cracking up. I read about some doing that up in Iowa. I asked members of my church for their prayers and they were quick to give them to us."

Caine said he has spent 70 of his 77 years in the church and is a deacon accustomed to helping others. He said the strength his family has received from the membership is worth much.

Those who attended the auction could see the hurt in both men and, for some, they couldn't bear to watch, let alone submit a bid.

"I just feel so sorry for them," said one farmer, who showed up for moral support and then left. "They're good farmers and do an excellent job. What's happened to that old man shouldn't happen to a dog."

Father and son won't accept pity and have made it clear they refuse to quit. While they may be hoping for a miracle from above, they are pragmatists who know the wheeling and dealing will have to come on earth.

When their lender foreclosed, the Caines lost nearly 700 acres of the land they owned. Their debt today stands at about $500,000. They also owe a commercial bank another $30,000.

These are staggering amounts for most people to comprehend, but farmers know all too well that big risk often can lead to ruin as well as wealth.

What makes it tough for the Caines is the knowledge they didn't live beyond their means. Much of what was earned was plowed back into their farming operation for the next year's crop.

The senior Caine lives in a modest white farm house across the road from his son. He knows there isn't a lot of time left, and when he looks into the future he doesn't find it very bright for his family.

In 1960, he said, they owned about 1,000 acres. With the foreclosure, all they own free and clear are 28 acres.

"I didn't bring anything into this world and I can't take anything out with me," he said, as he looked away from the auction. "All I ever had was my heritage and I wanted to pass it on."

His grandchildren represent the seventh generation since Anderson Holmes' arrival in 1830 to get that presidential deed from Andy Jackson.

Decline In Southern Pine Forests Worries Industry

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The growth of southeastern pine forests — one of the nation's largest sources of wood — is declining mysteriously after decades of increase, according to a federal study, and the trend is worrying the forest products industry and environmentalists.

From the Piedmont uplands to the coastal plain, from Virginia to Florida, fewer softwoods are growing on fewer acres to the point where the U.S. Forest Service estimates pines are being cut as fast as they are replenished.

But industry experts and environmentalists say the most disturbing finding in the study of non-professionally managed pine stands in the Southeast is that the surviving trees are not growing as large as they once did.

Tom Mills, an economics researcher with the Forest Service, says this is the first time the agency's periodic studies of trees around the nation has turned up such diminished growth.

And while the study does not pinpoint an exact cause, it notes that a slowing of tree growth was discovered in European forests long before the appearance of the more visible damage that environmentalists claim is caused by air pollution.

The study, released recently by the Southeastern Forest Experiment Station in Asheville, N.C., says that because of population growth in the region — and its encroachment on previously forested areas — timberland acreage in the Southeast has fallen to 85 million acres, from a peak of 91 million acres in 1963.

Also contributing to the reduction in the net annual growth of pine are inadequate regeneration of new stocks and a sharp increase in annual mortality of trees — yellow pine mortality stands at 15 percent, compared with 9 percent a decade ago.

The study says about two-thirds of the reduction in volume growth in South Carolina, for example, is due to less growing area, insufficient replacement of harvested trees and mortality largely attributed to pine bark beetles.

But in that state and the rest of the region, the remainder of the lost volume is attributed to trees simply not growing as large as before. The study says the rate of radial growth — the growth of the tree trunk — is down 30 percent to 50 percent from the 1957-66 survey period.

"There is not sufficient evidence to determine what might be causing the growth reductions," the study says.

It's A Man's World Down On The Farm, Report Says

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the government's latest census figures are any guide, farming is still a man's world — numerically, anyway.

Census experts say that proportionately there are more males living on farms than there are in the cities, a higher proportion of farm people are married and living as members of families, and that farm women have more children than their city cousins.

The latest analysis was released last week by the Census Bureau and the Agriculture Department. Most of the information was for 1984.

"In 1984, there were 107 males per 100 females living on farms, compared with just 93 males per 100 females in the non-farm population," the report said. "This difference appears for most age groups but is significant only for the 20-to-24-year-old group and for those 65 years old and over." The report said the U.S. farm population in 1984 was 5,754,000 people, including 2,975,000 males and 2,779,000 females.

In the group 20 to 24 years old, those included 243,000 males and 183,000 females. Together, the age group made up 7.4 percent of the farm population.

No Balance At Expense Of Farmers

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — The president of the American Farm Bureau Federation vowed to fight any congressional attempts to balance the federal budget at the expense of farmers.

Farm Bureau President Robert Delano said during a news conference Sunday his organization had supported the Gramm-Rudman bill, which mandates a balanced budget by 1991.

He said farmers are willing to accept a fair share of spending cuts to reach the budget goal, but warned, "Congress must not be allowed to balance the budget on the backs of farmers or through new taxes and increasing tax rates."

Economic issues are expected to dominate the Farm Bureau's 67th annual meeting, which has attracted about 4,600 members from around the country. The convention will feature workshops, speeches and the election of new officers.

Georgia Gov. Joe Frank Harris and Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., were scheduled to address the delegates today.

Farm Scene

By MITCH SMITH

With the arrival of January, many tobacco growers have begun the task of plant bed fumigation. With that task comes the decision of which variety to plant for the upcoming season. As one considers this decision, there are a number of factors to observe.

The most important factor to consider in choosing a variety is disease history. In order to successfully implement a disease program, it is important to know the history of a particular farm and which diseases pose potential threats to the production of a normal crop. This is especially important to the management of a disease such as Granville Wilt. Planting a susceptible variety in a field which has this disease can result in severe reductions of profits per acre.

Yield and quality are the next factors to consider in varietal selection. Over the past three years, growers have moved from being rewarded for the poundage they produce to the quality of the product placed upon the warehouse floor. This can become especially important with the implementation of the new tobacco legislation which will permit 103 percent of a crop being sold in contrast to 110 percent in the past few years. No longer will it become feasible for extra poundage to be produced and allow valuable capital to be invested in stored leaf.

Quality may also be coupled with disease resistance in the case of a disease such as Tobacco Mosaic Virus. As indicated by the 1986 Tobacco Information Guide, Coker 176 and NC 567 offer excellent quality while carrying resistance to TMV. These varieties often exhibit characteristics of slow nitrogen breakdown and thus should be fertilized with a lower rate of nitrogen. This rate should be cut 10 percent.

The agronomic traits of a certain variety should also be considered. These traits involve such things as sucker counts and leaf spacing. Sucker counts reflect a variety's tendency to flower prematurely while leaf spacing relates the ease of which a variety can be harvested mechanically.

This information as well as other important details can be found in the 1986 Tobacco Information Guide. These guides are available at your local Agricultural Extension Office.

Last year's event in Hertford attracted 70 farmers from seven North Carolina counties and Virginia Beach.

tions," Betty T. Bailey of Pittsboro, a spokesman for the Rural Advancement Fund, a farmer advocacy group, said in a telephone interview.

But the FmHA says the warnings are meant to keep farmers on their land, not run them off.

"There will be some foreclosures, yes, but there will be no wave of foreclosures," Godwin said. "Farmers Home is the most lenient lender in the history of mankind. There isn't any way a commercial bank or other lenders will go as far."

The FmHA, an agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, was financing 9,522 Tar Heel farmers as of September 1985. The FmHA figures show 230 of its borrowers in the state had been forced by financial problems to quit farming during fiscal year 1984-85.

Godwin estimated that 2,400 or about one-quarter of FmHA borrowers in the state had been at least $100 delinquent on loan payments since January 1985 and would receive the new warning letters.

In fiscal 1982-83, the agency foreclosed on 32 North Carolina farmers. It had 12 foreclosures in fiscal 1983-84 that had begun before the moratorium was ordered and 11 in fiscal 1984-85.

Financially strapped farmers may have some help from the federal government this spring. Congress is considering creating a whole new bankruptcy category for farmers' needs. One proposal would allow debt rescheduling, higher debt limits to $1 million and other flexibility, said Nathan Garren, a North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service lawyer.

Also, the farm bill signed into law last month requires that at least 25 percent of all FmHA farm ownership and operating loans be offered at the lower "limited resource" interest rates mentioned in the new letters to delinquent borrowers.

have been asked to broadcast highlights of King's "I have a dream" speech at 12:15 p.m. EST on Jan. 20.

Dick Harris, president of Group W Radio and chairman of the Radio Advertising Bureau, pushed distribution of the five-minute, edited version of the 17-minute speech that electrified an audience in Washington on Aug. 28, 1963.

"I have a dream," King told 250,000 civil rights protesters at the Lincoln Memorial, "that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.'"

In Alabama, a week of commemorative events also was scheduled, most concentrating on the city of Selma, location of the Edmund Pettus Bridge where lawmen and civil rights marchers met in a bloody confrontation in 1965.

About two weeks after the Selma violence, King successfully led a group of marchers across the bridge and on to the state Capitol in Montgomery.

Martin Luther King III today was scheduled to send 42 runners on a three-day relay run from Selma's Brown Chapel AME Church, through Montgomery and Birmingham and Atlanta.

Former President Jimmy Carter would join the final leg of the run in Georgia, said the Rev. James Orange of Atlanta, coordinator of the event.

At the Atlanta service, King's widow, Coretta Scott King, president of the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, led a procession of clergymen into the interfaith service.

Readings followed from four sacred works, including the Torah, the Bible, the Koran and Hindu writings, and Rev. Ceasar A.W. Clark of Dallas, president at-large of the National Baptist Convention, delivered the sermon.

"Like Moses, he was a leader for the people," Clark said. "Like Jeremiah, he worked for the state of the human family and like John the Baptist, he was a voice crying in the wilderness of our contemporary social crisis, challenging men to make in the desert a highway for God."

The service concluded with a rendition of "We Shall Overcome," with the choir's voices rolling down from the balcony.

The King center Sunday named Bishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa as 1986 recipient of its Martin Luther King Jr. Nonviolent Peace Prize.

Sister's Search Makes No Difference

Homeless Man Chooses Street

By KILEY ARMSTRONG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The streets are home to Manny Rosario, and that's where he wants to stay.

Rosario's sister, Luz Maria, searched a sea of homeless men Saturday before finding her brother. But after their tearful reunion, Rosario said he would stay on the streets that have been his home for more than a year.

"I'm sorry," Rosario told his sister, who had begged him to live in her Brooklyn home.

Ms. Rosario had lost track of her 33-year-old brother and once heard that he was dead. Then she spotted him on a television news report last week about the homeless.

"We started getting phone calls from some of the family who had seen him on television, too. Everybody was crying," said Ms. Rosario's husband, Vincent Tripoli.

Tripoli made telephone calls for two days and learned that his brother-in-law had been seen nightly near a truck that dispenses food to the homeless outside Grand Central Terminal.

Saturday night, Ms. Rosario, with her husband and 18-year-old son, searched among the men loitering or sleeping on floors and benches in the terminal. She fought back tears as she bent down to peer into their faces, searching for her brother.

Word circulated that she was looking for Manny, and suddenly, someone called out that he was across the waiting room.

She ran to the pudgy man with the shock of unkempt, black hair. He smiled when he saw her.

But he said he would not go home with her.

She pleaded, then shouted.

She said their family would buy him a plane ticket to Puerto Rico to visit his mother, whom he hadn't seen in seven years. After his final refusal, she gently touched his face, then tearfully turned and walked away, tightly clutching her husband's hand.

"He said he can't leave his friends. He said he was fighting for all the people who live on the streets. He's got a lot of people who care about him on the streets," said Tripoli, serving as an interpreter from Spanish for his wife.

Rosario had been arrested Thursday because he was "shouting (and disorderly)," said Tito Davila, a Metro-North Railroad spokeswoman. The charges of disorderly conduct and trespassing later were dropped.

MANNY ROSARIO

Police singled out Rosario because he had complained publicly that they failed to help a homeless woman known only as "Mama," who died at Grand Central on Christmas Day, supporters said.

"When he sees somebody who needs help, he likes to do something to help the person out," Tripoli said. "He probably had a few drinks in him and talked 'not nice' to the police."

Ms. Rosario said her brother, whom she remembered as a "fun person who loved to talk and be happy," had become distraught after his wife left with their four children about three years ago. Gradually, he cut off all contact with family members.

"He couldn't face the fact that he lost his wife and his kids," Ms. Rosario said.

"He was a hard-working man, clean clothes, a good father. He worked hard. Because she left him, he probably started drinking," Tripoli said. "We can't understand. He used to come over and see his kids. The oldest one he loved the most," he said. "Then for year and a half, nothing. It's unbelievable."

Tripoli said Rosario had lived in Brooklyn before the marital breakup and had worked as a factory manager in New Jersey.

The couple's children, ranging in age from 10 to 6, now live with their maternal grandmother in Brooklyn, Ms. Rosario said.

"I don't understand how he just forgot about his family," Tripoli said, his voice quivering. "It's hard. How could you just forget?"

Is He A $16 Million Winner?

CHICAGO (AP) — If he lives to be 100, Frank Maggio will never forget the weekend he scratched off $10 million in winning contest entries. If Beatrice Companies Inc. has to pay off, it may never forget Frank Maggio.

"I've already learned that nothing is sacred, that money changes everything," said Maggio, 23, a sales representative from Decatur, Ga. "I've also learned it's easy to spend what you don't have."

What Maggio doesn't have right now is any of the more than $16 million he claims he earned by breaking the pattern of the scratch-off cards in Beatrice's "Monday Night Winning Line-up" contest and completing 4,018 winning entries.

Breaking the contest was the easy part; collecting on it could be tough. Beatrice canceled the contest two weeks ahead of schedule, triggering a lawsuit by Maggio.

"As soon as Mr. Maggio indicated he'd won millions and millions of dollars," said Bill Blodgett, West Coast spokesman for Beatrice, "we knew we had a problem."

Maggio, who works for Procter & Gamble Inc., Beatrice's direct competitor, started playing the game in mid-October when he grabbed 50 cards off a Beatrice display rack at a grocery store.

Although he didn't crack the contest design for another month, Maggio said he detected a pattern in that first batch within hours and won a color television set.

Beatrice canceled the contest Nov. 29, nearly two weeks before the Dec. 6 deadline set on the back of the game cards. The promotion offered prizes ranging from food coupons to a Super Bowl trip for eight in a private jet — or cash equivalents.

In a widely distributed newspaper advertisement, the Chicago-based food and home products conglomerate said "Line-up" was being canceled because the company had learned it could be manipulated.

The revelation came from Maggio. The game required players to

Drinking Cut

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Swedish youths have cut their alcohol consumption in half over a period of six years, according to three official surveys published recently.

The surveys taken for the period 1978-84 indicated youths are drinking less, drinking less often and starting to drink later in life. More and more are abstaining altogether.

As in other Western countries, alcohol consumption is also declining among adults, but the development is especially marked among Swedish youth, the polls show.

They attribute most of the decline to the government's anti-alcohol campaigns and more restrictive alcohol policies.

"Even though there is still a limited group of young people with problems who take to the bottle, I would agree that use has declined among more normal children," said social worker Rolf Ahlstrom.

scratch the cards' surface to correctly pick the winners and the numbers of touchdowns and field goals in eight televised Monday night National Football League contests from Oct. 7 through Nov. 25. Three million game cards were to be distributed.

After detecting the handful of patterns in his first batch of cards, Maggio feverishly began collecting them, grabbing cards off display racks in stores, writing Beatrice for more and asking the company's sales reps for leftovers.

By Nov. 11, he'd won three more TVs. The game had become an obsession.

On Nov. 16, Maggio had been out late and couldn't sleep, so he began scratching game cards.

"Suddenly, it dawned on me. I was beginning to find more and more patterns that I'd seen somewhere else, on other cards," he said.

Turkey Torture

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Ali Inan was 17 years old when police picked him up on an Istanbul street Sept. 11, 1980, the day before the military took over Turkey in a coup.

Seventeen days later his father, Bekir Inan, found his son's body in the morgue of Hardapasa military hospital. The autopsy report said he had died from cerebral hemorrhage resulting from a severe blow to the head. The medical examiner found contusions on 40 different parts of the body.

Ali Inan, a high school student, had been brought to the hospital from the police station where he had been questioned, hospital documents say.

Today his case is part of a campaign undertaken by Cuneyt Canver, a 33-year-old Social Democrat member of Parliament, and a small but increasingly vocal group of Turks who seek to eradicate torture in Turkey's prisons and police stations.

As the result of demands by Ali Inan's father, six policemen who were present during the boy's interrogation have been brought before an Istanbul criminal court on charges of causing death by torture.

The father recently went to Canver's office to seek his help in speeding up the trial.

"We are all mortal," Bekir Inan said. "It is not his death I mind so much as the inhuman way he died, without dignity, at the hand of officials who are supposed to protect us."

"This has got to stop," Canver told a reporter present in the room. "It can happen to anybody. It can happen to you."

Another who has joined the campaign is Erbil Tusalp, correspondent for leftist newspaper Cumhuriyet, who has written a book on human rights and specific cases of torture. His "One Thousand Men" made Turkey's best-seller list in December.

Import Restraints May Be Extended

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's voluntary restraints on auto exports to the United States may be extended when they end March 30, the nationally circulated newspaper Mainichi Shimbun reported Sunday.

Without identifying its sources, the paper said the government has "almost decided" to extend restrictions for fiscal 1986, which begins April 1, after 13 members of the U.S.

Congress requested the continuation in a letter.

It said the letter was handed to the Japanese government by Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., who arrived in Tokyo on Friday on a five-day mission focused on U.S.-Japan trade problems.

Mainichi said the government may extend the restraints because of an increase in the market share of Japanese passenger cars in the United States from 19.7 percent in 1984 to a record 21.8 percent in 1985, and the planned start of auto exports to the United States by Daihatsu Motor Co., a Japanese sub-compact carmaker.

If the restraints are lifted, the government expects car exports to the United States to rise sharply, Mainichi said.

Singer Ike Turner Arrested

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Rock 'n' roll musician Ike Turner was in custody Sunday for investigation of cocaine possession after being pulled over for a traffic violation, authorities said.

Turner, 56, of Los Angeles, was arrested with a 31-year-old friend, Demetrius Anderson, when sheriff's deputies pulled over their 1975 Mustang Saturday night, said Deputy Sam Jones.

unpaid tickets, and Anderson was booked for investigation of receiving stolen property, she said.

Turner, who began his career in the '50s, sang with then-wife Tina Turner in the '60s and '70s. The couple divorced in 1976, and Tina Turner went solo with such hits as "What's Love Got To Do With It," and "Better Be Good to Me."

Deputies ordered Turner, Anderson and a third person, who was not identified, from the vehicle when they saw what appeared to be a handgun on the front floorboard of the car, Jones said.

The weapon turned out to be a pellet gun, but a search of the car revealed a loaded .45-caliber automatic, some drug-related paraphernalia and a "sizable amount of cocaine," Jones said, adding that he did not know the exact amount.

Bail was set at $2,500 for Turner and $1,000 for Anderson, said sheriff's Deputy Kathy Daniel. Both also were held on traffic warrants for

Murrow Colleagues Lukewarm About New Movie

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Douglas Edwards and Richard C. Hottel, two of "Ed Murrow's boys," gave lukewarm reviews to the upcoming TV movie about their legendary leader, saying it captured the mannerisms but not the man.

"Murrow," the $5 million docudrama that will be shown on Home Box Office Sunday night and three other times this month, stars Daniel J. Travanti of "Hill Street Blues" as Edward R. Murrow, the CBS correspondent whose radio reports in World War II and TV news productions in the 1950s became basic blueprints for broadcast journalism.

Edwards, who worked in London with Murrow in the 1940s, said the characterization and script captured Murrow's high principles and integrity, but it missed his strength and larger-than-life qualities.

"Maybe no one could play him adequately," Edwards said. "It wasn't a disservice, but it wasn't satisfying. Travanti had some of the Murrow expressions and postures, but he did not have the commanding Murrow voice. Maybe Travanti figured he couldn't duplicate Murrow, so he underplayed him. He came out a weaker Murrow than Murrow was."

Hottel, who served under Murrow as a radio war correspondent, said the HBO production only captured his on-air persona, including his ever-present cigarette and his tapping foot under the broadcast desk.

"He comes across as a passively interesting soap-opera Murrow, a man depicted exclusively as fighting the dragon," said Hottel. "There was a lot more to him than that."

In one scene, Murrow objects, but only mildly, when a sponsor sacks a correspondent, allegedly for his liberal tendencies. Hottel called that Murrow depiction "flabby. Was he a liberal or a wimp here? What are they trying to say?"

The comment underscores Hottel's discomfort with the docudrama form. "We never know what's real and what isn't," he said.

Hottel and Edwards said Murrow's wife, Janet, was laughably drawn. "That was real bad," said Hottel. "She was a strong character in her own right and was involved in some of the things he was doing. But in the film she's only a pretty girl looking adoringly at her husband. She's not even a caricature in this; she's a pleasant, affectionate nothing."

"Murrow," shot in London and New York and written by Ernest Kinoy ("Roots") from books, public records and interviews he conducted with Murrow's friends and colleagues, starts with Murrow's famed World War II reporting from the rooftops of London, then moves quickly to his work in the fledgling TV news business back home at CBS.

No one disputes the tension among journalism, entertainment and profits that existed in Murrow's time, just as these elements form an uncomfortable mix in broadcast news today. (Remember Phyllis George on the "CBS Morning News?")

Burns Begins Birthday Bash

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — He's not quite 90, but comedian George Burns celebrated his birthday ahead of time with a little help from his show business friends, including Ronald Reagan.

Seated in a Wilshire Theatre box surrounded by a gaggle of glamour girls, Burns smiled broadly Saturday night as a parade of celebrities praised him amid affectionate barbs during "The George Burns 90th Birthday Special," to be broadcast Friday night on CBS.

"OK, so I'm 90, but I'm still here," he said at the show's climax. "After hearing all those compliments, I'm beginning to wonder."

Jack Lemmon, Carol Channing, Milton Berle, Red Buttons, Bob Hope and Rich Little were among the stars represented by film clips. The onstage entertainers were Ann-Margret, Diahann Carroll, Billy Crystal, John Denver, Walter Matthau and emcee John Forsythe.

Burns was introduced in a message from his former Beverly Hills neighbor, President Reagan. Reagan cited Burns' beginnings with the Peewee Quartet at the age of 7 and added: "Eighty-three years of sustained popularity — it's unheard of, especially in a business that makes politics seem secure."

In his stand-up routine, Burns remarked: "People keep asking me when am I going to retire. Retire? I'm going to star in show business until I'm the only one left. I can't retire. Who would support my mother and father?"

Afterward, Burns hosted a supper at Chasen's restaurant. Said owner Maude Chasen: "This is the first time in 49 years that we have been closed to the public. We'd do anything for George."

Dogs Set To Sniff Drug Sales

NEW YORK (AP) — Although Capital Cities-ABC Inc. may employ drug-sniffing dogs and surveillance cameras to block the sale and use of illegal drugs on its property, the head of the media company says urine testing is "not contemplated."

ABC's new president, John B. Sias, said a company drug policy developed over the last two years includes an educational program and counseling for employees who seek it.

Dogs, surveillance cameras and private investigation are potential means of occasional monitoring at various locations to enforce the drug policy and "keep the workplace free from illegal substances," Sias said.

There are no plans to require all new workers to take urine tests, but Sias did not rule out such a requirement in the future.

"No urine testing has taken place and it is not contemplated," Sias said in a telephone interview Saturday from his Connecticut home.

The policy grew out of three separate incidents of drug use and sale on company property, Sias said.

After an incident in which an individual had to be taken to a hospital, "it became clear that there was a problem with dealing," Sias said. "We had no other alternative but to respond."

Wonders Why He Left Court

GREENEVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Former Majority Leader Howard Baker, practicing law for the first time in 20 years, wonders why he left the courtroom for three terms in the U.S. Senate.

"It wasn't long before I remembered why I enjoy practicing law so much," he said Friday after successfully arguing a case before U.S. District Judge Thomas G. Hull.

Baker, a Republican, is working out of offices in Knoxville and his hometown of Huntsville while planning a 1988 presidential bid.

His re-entry into practice came in the courtroom of a judge he had recommended for the federal bench in 1982.

Baker argued his case against lawyer Fred Thompson, the chief minority counsel and a Baker ally during the 1973 Watergate hearings.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Traditionalists rejoice. The greenback is staying green.

No more jokes about the dollar being dead the day it's colored red.

In fact, the upcoming changes in U.S. currency aimed at making it harder to counterfeit may not even be noticeable at first glance.

"We are not going to change the color and we are not changing the portraits. Any changes will be subtle," U.S. Treasurer Katherine Ortega said in an interview.

While Mrs. Ortega's words are aimed at calming jittery nerves over just what the government has in store for the money, not everyone is assured.

Ron Paul, a former Republican congressman from Texas who was defeated in a 1984 Senate bid, questions the government's motives in making the changes, charging that something other than a desire to thwart counterfeiters is at work.

"The deep down motivation is to find out where the money is," he warns. "It is a direct attack on the privacy of people."

Paul paints a scenario where the government would put metal threads in the currency and then use metal detectors to find where people have stashed large sums of cash.

Another possibility, Paul contends, is that the government will require that the old cash be turned in for new money, all under the eagle eye of the Internal Revenue Service.

But Treasury Department officials say these fears are groundless.

They say that the new bills will move into circulation gradually as old bills are withdrawn and all old currency will remain legal tender.

Mrs. Ortega said no final decisions on changes have been made by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III.

But some officials suggested that Baker may decide to adopt a two-phase approach, making relatively minor adjustments first and then delaying decisions on more complicated approaches until more study is completed.

"One school of thought argues to go ahead and do what can be done now with the things that are proven technology and fairly cheap to put in place," said Kenneth Swab, counsel to the House Banking subcommittee on coinage.

Chief among the possible changes in the first phase is the addition of a security thread, a thin strip of plastic, running from the top of the bill down to the bottom. The thread, put inside the paper as it is made, would appear as a faint line until it is held up to a light. Under close examination, tiny printing, perhaps the initials U.S.A., could be seen.

Another possibility in the first phase is addition of a watermark on one side of the portrait on the front of a bill. A counterfeiter would have to make his own paper to copy the watermark.

Another change, the addition of a hologram, is expected to be delayed pending further development. A hologram produces a three-dimensional image that seems to project out from the paper.

Holograms, which are virtually impossible to duplicate, are already being incorporated on MasterCard and Visa credit cards, but the prototypes examined so far have failed to pass the durability tests required for the rough handling currency receives.

Another proposal is use of parallel plastic ridges known as diffraction grating. The tightly packed ridges reflect different colors of light depending on how they are held. But this proposal also has failed to pass durability tests.

Mrs. Ortega said whatever changes Baker approves will take 12 to 18 months to put into effect. Thus, Americans are not likely to see even minor changes in the currency much before 1988.

Government officials say the changes will be coming just in time. A new generation of copying machines, capable of producing high-quality color reproductions, should begin showing up in offices next year.

American Bills Will Keep Color

The new machines threaten to turn counterfeiting, which now requires skill, equipment and planning, into an impulse crime, much like shoplifting. The nightmare of Secret Service agents is that office boys will begin running off $20s on the new copying machines.

A government-sponsored study done by the Battelle Institute of Columbus, Ohio, predicts that the number of bogus bills could double between 1987 and 1992 as possibly one in five people with access to one of the new color copiers tries a hand at making phony money.

Such changes threaten to return the country to the days at the end of the Civil War when an estimated one-third of all U.S. currency was counterfeit.

The Secret Service says it now is able to seize nearly 90 percent of all counterfeit currency prior to circulation, but this success rate could easily be eroded without changes to the money, officials warn.

"It seems we are now in a footrace of sorts where technology can either work for or against us, and where time is definitely a factor," says Joseph R. Carlon, assistant director for protective research for the Secret Service.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠A106 ♥AK93 ♦A32 ♣A105

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♥ Pass 2 ♥ Pass

What do you bid now?

A. — A bid of two no trump would be only invitational and would not do justice to your hand. Your choice lies between a jump to three no trump and four hearts. Although your hand is suit oriented, we would choose three no trump just in case partner raised with three trumps and a reasonably balanced hand. With an unbalanced hand, partner can still convert to four hearts.

Q.2 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A105 ♥965 ♦KQ876 ♣93

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South West

1 ♦ 1 ♥ 2 ♦ Pass

3 ♦ Pass ?

What action do you take?

A. — Although you did no more than raise, partner is looking for game. You have a good hand, and should be delighted to cooperate. Bid three spades. That leaves room for three no trump should partner have a heart stopper and prefer to play for nine tricks rather than 11.

Q.3 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A1096 ♦AK763 ♣AQ85

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♦ Pass 1 NT Pass

What do you bid now?

A. — It is a close decision between a reverse to two spades or a jump shift to three clubs. While partner's no trump response tends to deny a four-card major, even a 4-3 spade fit might be a playable spot. And if we do elect to reverse we might still get a chance to introduce our club suit, whereas a jump to three clubs would effectively shut out the major suit.

Q.4 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠J983 ♥Q ♦AJ73 ♣AK85

The bidding has proceeded:

East South West North

1 ♥ Dble 1 ♠ Dble

Pass Pass 2 ♥ Pass

Pass ?

What action do you take?

A. — In view of partner's penalty double of one spade, you should not let West's "baby" psychic bid throw you out of kilter. It sounds as if West has a weak hand, not much in spades and long hearts. Expose his tactic by bidding two spades.

Q.5 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠Q72 ♥763 ♦KQ10 ♣J854

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South West

Pass Pass Pass 1 ♠

Pass 1 ♠ Pass Pass

Dble Pass ?

What action do you take?

A. — Since partner passed originally, he cannot be making a penalty double. He simply doesn't want to sell out to the opponents at the one-level, and he is asking you to select between the red suits. Since you have three cards in each, choose your stronger — bid two diamonds. Should the opponents buy the hand, that is the suit you want led.

Q.6 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠954 ♥J106 ♦K9 ♣J10763

Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?

A. — In terms of point count you might be a bit light, but we suggest you respond one no trump. You have a couple of tens and nines to give your hand body, two honor cards in partner's suit which will help provide a source of tricks, and a five-card suit of your own. Despite the ruffing value, we don't much like a raise to two hearts, which sounds rather more encouraging than your hand merits.

'Toughen Up' Phase Begins

WASHINGTON (AP) — "What's a good vice president?" asked William Simon, who said he was once considered for the job. "What the hell's a vice ever done?"

"I think there is a difference between cheerleading and leading," said former Gov. Pete DuPont.

Welcome to the start of the "get tough" phase of the 1988 presidential campaign.

The remarks of Simon and DuPont, who have White House dreams of their own, were early shots at Republican front-runner George Bush. They were included in a series of interviews published in the latest edition of Conservative Digest, a publication not notably supportive of the vice president.

Bush was among those interviewed. Others included Republicans Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas, former U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick, Pat Robertson, the television evangelist, Lewis Lehrman, who runs a grass-roots group that lobbies for President Reagan's agenda, and Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas.

The questions and answers offered some insights into the issues conservatives care about as they look ahead to 1988 and how various potential candidates would handle those concerns.

Abortion, school prayer, a balanced budget amendment, the gold standard, how to deal with the State Department bureaucracy, the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission were among the issues raised.

Simon and DuPont were the only ones who took advantage of the opportunity to get off shots at Bush.

Simon, a former Treasury secretary, was more circumspect.

He didn't take a direct shot at Bush; he just belittled the vice president's job. "I was up for vice president," he said. "I was one of the 'finalists' considered by Gerald Ford (in 1976) and Ronald Reagan (in 1980). I thought about it a lot and at that time I would have accepted.

Two World War II Stragglers Said Working For Communists

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Communist rebels in the jungles along the Thai-Malaysian border are holding two Japanese World War II soldiers who didn't find out the war was over until the late 1970s, a news report said Sunday.

The national news agency Bernama, quoting anonymous security officials, said the banned Communist Party of Malaya found the soldiers in 1948 and the two now are apparently doing "forced labor" for the rebels at a camp in southern Thailand.

Bernama said the Japanese soldiers wandered in the jungles on the Malaysian peninsula after the war ended there in 1944, and the guerrillas came across them while setting up a network of bases and supply and infiltration routes.

Captured communist guerrillas have told security officials the two Japanese look to be in their mid-60s and in apparent good health.

The two were deluded into thinking the war was still going on, the communists were aiding Japan, and security forces were Allied troops, according to the report.

Bernama said the Japanese discovered the truth when a purge occurred within the rebels' ranks in the later part of the 1970s.

According to intelligence reports, the two then wanted to emerge from the jungle and contact either Malaysian or Thai authorities so they could return to Japan but the rebels refused, said the report.

Security officials are speculating that the Japanese could have been part of a platoon that got lost in the jungles, and their ranks depleted by death.
