Scientists Marvel At Voyager Photos

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Voyager 2 sent "mind-blowing" new pictures of Uranus' largest moons home to Earth on Saturday as scientists said the spacecraft discovered the planet has a 10th ring, a 15th moon, a north pole that angles downward and an ultraviolet, electrical glow.

The highest-quality photographs of some of the Uranian moons, snapped by Voyager about the time of its closest lunar encounters Friday, were recorded aboard the probe and transmitted Saturday to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

They revealed one portion of the moon Miranda has huge, swirling patterns — resembling a series of oval-shaped racetracks nestled within each other — while other parts of the moon have numerous craters and unusual, square-cornered geologic features, which geologists were at a loss to explain.

The photos, among more than 4,300 taken by Voyager since it started observing the Uranian system Nov. 4, also showed that Ariel, Miranda and Titania have large valleys formed by faults.

Other photographs, taken somewhat earlier, showed craters up to 250 miles across on Titania. They also revealed that the moon Oberon has a three-mile-high mountain and that a crater there appears to be filled with a "slurry of carbon-rich material" that apparently flowed out from the moon's interior, said U.S. Geological Survey geologist Larry Soderblom.

He said the mountain probably was created when a meteorite rebounded after smashing into the moon, creating the crater in which the mountain sits.

"My God, how incredible it is," University of Arizona scientist Robert Strom said as he looked at a high-resolution photo of Miranda. "This is just mind-blowing."

By Saturday night, Voyager was more than 1.1 million miles past Uranus. The craft, launched in 1977, traveled a curving 3 billion-mile path to reach Uranus, 1.8 billion miles from Earth.

The 10th ring and 15th moon orbiting the solar system's third-largest planet were found before Voyager swept 50,679 miles over Uranus' clouds on Friday, but the discovereies were announced Saturday by imaging team leader Brad Smith.

The newly discovered ring, designated 1986U1R, is located between the epsilon and delta rings, which had been Uranus' two outermost rings, Smith said.

The new moon, designated 1986U9, is the 10th moon discovered by Voyager. The five largest moons were discovered previously from telescopes on Earth.

The latest moon measures about 30 miles in diameter and orbits the planet every 10 hours, 23 minutes at a distance of about 31,000 miles — inside orbits of seven of the moons Voyager discovered and outside those of the two "shepherd moons" the probe found herding the epsilon, or outermost, ring into its narrow shape, Smith said.

Scientist Norman Ness said study of Uranus' magnetic field showed that what scientists had thought was the planet's south rotational pole is actually the north pole, pointing toward and below the sun at an angle below the plane in which the planets orbit the sun. Uranus is tipped on its

Growth Of Pitt Court System Has Officials In A Bind For Space

BY DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The rapid growth of the Pitt County court system has created a shortage of courtrooms, office and storage space, and taken sheriff's deputies off the streets to staff procedings, local officials said.

"We're way out of space," said Sandra Gaskins, clerk of the court in Greenville. "We need to add court rooms, office space and storage space."

"There are people sitting elbow to elbow, and the offices are cluttered with filing cabinets," she said, adding that child support cases are being conducted in the county commissioner's meeting room at the county office.

Court records show that the amount of criminal cases alone heard in the county since 1982 has increased by more than 57 percent, from 16,309 cases to 28,398.

Pitt County District Attorney Tom Haigwood said the increase in criminal court cases is due to more active law enforcement.

"There is much more of an emphasis on DWI (Driving While Im-

Lilley Seeks Board Seat

Dr. Leonard D. Lilley Jr. of the Pactolus community recently filed for election to the Pitt County Board of Education representing the Carolina-Pactolus Township District.

"My farming experience and interests convince me that our schools must recognize the changes that are taking place in Pitt County and prepare our young people to meet the new challenges," Lilley said.

Citing his educational and professional background which includes teaching, coaching and administration, Lilley said, "I believe my interest in and concern for our school system, together with my related experience in and with our public schools, make me well qualified for this seat.

Lilley is a member of the Advisory Council of Pactolus Elementary School. He serves as chairman of the Pitt County Community Schools Advisory Committee, and is a former member of the Falkland Elementary School Advisory Council.

Lilley, principal of the Belvoir-Falkland Schools from 1962-65, is coordinator of Adult Education at

Greenville Says No

A majority of Ayden and Grifton residents recently voted for extended area service with Ayden and Greenville in a recent mail-in poll, but Greenville residents voted against replacing the long-distance service with toll free service with Grifton.

Extended area service already exists between Ayden and Grifton, officials at Carolina Telephone and Telegraph Company said.

Of the 57.1 percent of Grifton residents who voted, 977 were for the service and 101 were against it. In Ayden, of the 35.8 percent customers who voted, 920 voted for the plan and 382 voted against it, said Dick Flye, district commericial manager of Carolina Telephone.

Voting against the proposal were 8,279 Greenville residents. Flye said 2,785 residents voted for the plan. About 35.8 percent of the Greenville residents mailed in their vote.

The results of the survey have been forwarded to the North Carolina Utilities Commission, and a public announcement of the decision will be made when they rule, Flye said. "Adoption of the extended area services plan is subject to the approval of the North Carolina Utilities Commission," he said.

Top Building Year

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The construction of new buildings in Greenville and Pitt County may have hit an all-time record during 1985, according to figures from the city and county inspections departments.

The total value of new construction authorized within the city and its extraterritorial jurisdiction area amounted to some $76.21 million last year, while total new construction authorized in the county during 1985 amounted to about $15.72 million.

Although records were not available from the county for past years — the inspections department only started keeping such records in 1984 — the county's chief building inspector, John Payne, said he believes the activity last year would top any previous year.

The city began keeping records in 1971, and 1985 was the best year since that time. The two previous high's came in 1979 when total construction totaled some $63 million, and in 1982 which saw $58 million worth of building.

Greenville's total in 1985 included, among other things, 169 single family dwellings valued at $11.78 million, 12 duplexes valued at $542,400, 27 multi-family structures valued at $5.17 million, 59 businesses with a value of $12.88 million, and three industrial buildings with a value of $5.03 million, and a $5 million retirement home.

Top Teacher Wants To Be Role Model

By MARY C. SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

Patricia Mitchell wants to become a better teacher and be a good role model for future teachers of the world, she says.

Forecasts of shrinking numbers of teachers, especially minorities, give that statement special meaning because Ms. Mitchell — Pitt County's 1986-87 Teacher of the Year — is black.

"The greatest factor which influenced my decision to become a teacher was the relationship I had with my teachers through my school years," said Ms. Mitchell, third grade teacher at Pactolus Elementary School. Ms. Mitchell was selected Friday as outstanding teacher of the Pitt and Greenville school systems.

Her own teachers "caring for me as a student gave me the incentive to care about myself," she said. "I hope to become a better teacher and to be a good role model for the future teachers of the world."

A seven-person selection committee interviewed nominees from 22 schools Thursday. Three finalists were then re-interviewed, and Ms. Mitchell was selected as top teacher.

Ms. Mitchell, 27, has taught at Pactolus Elementary for four years. Before, she was a remediation teacher at Bertie Senior High School for one year. She is a 1980 graduate of North Carolina Central University.

A native of Ahoskie, she said "growing up in a family where teaching was the chosen profession of several aunts and cousins greatly influenced my decision to become a teacher."

In addition, she said, "a large number of the professionals in my community were and still are very dedicated teachers" and that "seeing their love and dedication for teaching helped to direct me toward the teaching profession."

Ms. Mitchell said she believes a teacher must show students that he or she respects them, is willing to listen to them and is working to help them become well-rounded individuals."

A teacher "must be able to communicate with the parents of the students," she said. "Since learning does not begin or end in the classroom, the home must be included in the learning process."

In addition, Ms. Mitchell said she feels a teacher "must be more concerned with the abilities of his or her students than the disabilities.

"Encouraging each child to work to his or her potential should be the major objective of teaching," she said.

Ms. Mitchell is a member of the North Carolina Association of Educators and served as a North Carolina competency testing reviewer. She is a member of New Ahoskie Baptist Church.

paired), and there's a higher level of law enforcement which led to the increase in cases," Haigwood said.

"There's a need for construction of all courts, and, until something is done, we'll just have to make do with what we have," Ms. Gaskins said.

Presently, there are three courtrooms in the Pitt County Courthouse in use.

Pitt County Sheriff Ralph Tyson agrees something should be done to alleviate the busy court schedule.

"We need some more deputies. They're taken from the field and put in the courtrooms," Tyson said. "There's juvenile court, civil court, criminal court, domestic court and it's all growing fast."

Tyson says he too is feeling the crunch of limited space.

"We're cramped. We're forced to use other buildings to store recovered property," he said.

Tyson doesn't know of any efforts to eliminate the problem, but he does feel the temporary solution of holding night court could alleviate congestion in the courtrooms.

"Night court would enable us to utilize the courtrooms to a fuller extent, and it would make it easier for people off the job to come to court," he said.

He said the move would not bother his officers because they continue to work "'round the clock, anyway."

County officials have recognized the problem, but they say improvements could be a long time coming.

"Right now, we are in the process of dealing with the situation," said Reginald Gray, county manager.

Gray said he's been requesting the assistance of the State Department Administrative Office of the Courts planning division for six months.

"They promised to come here this month or by Feb. 1," Gray said.

After examining the court system, the Office of the Courts will offer statistical information and projection of needs for the system.

After the projections are received, Gray said they will initiate the proper procedures.

"We're talking about building courtrooms, and that runs into a lot of money," said Gray, who doesn't expect the problem to go away.

"They may have to resort to night court or holding court session in the county's other two court buildings in Ayden and Farmville," he said.

Pitt County District Attorney Tom Haigwood has looked at the methods suggested to alleviate the problem, but he says there are limitations to what can be done.

"The court facilities are operated by the state, but furnished by the county government," he said. "In order to hold night court, the state would have to authorize the election of additional judges and the hiring of clerks, court personnel and prosecutors. That's not the county's expense."

Holding court in Ayden and Farmville is an impractical solution because of security and transportation problems, according to Haigwood.

"We don't have any judges to hold court in Ayden and Farmville, and there are substantial security risks in holding sessions," outside of the Pitt County Courthouse, he said.

For security reasons, utilizing other offices to accomodate court cases as an alternative to courtrooms is impractical, Haigwood said.

"The county is growing dramatically, and what you see is the beginning of a substantial problem," he said.

side compared with other planets.

On Earth, the axis around which the planet spins points up and down, while the axis of the magnetic field is tilted about 12 degrees, meaning the true north pole and magnetic north pole are about 12 degrees apart.

On Uranus, the rotational and magnetic axes are separated by 55 degrees. That means that while the planet rotates, its true north pole keeps angling downward, but the magnetic north pole wobbles, alternately pointing up and down during each Uranian day.

Observations of Uranus' ultraviolet light emissions reveal the planet has an "electroglow," which occurs when speeding electrons collide with hydrogen gas in the planet's atmosphere, electrically illuminating the gas with an ultraviolet glow, said University of Arizona researcher A. Lyle Broadfoot.

The electroglow is somewhat akin to Earth's auroras, or northern and southern lights, which occur when speeding electrons from solar wind collide with and illuminate gases in the polar regions of Earth's atmosphere.

But Earth's auroras occur during day and night, and only around the planet's poles. Uranus' electroglow occurs only in sunlight but over a broader region of the planet, Voyager project scientist Ed Stone said, adding that the electrons also move more slowly and come from an unknown source.

Project manager Dick Laeser said an 8½-minute failure of a pointing mechanism at a dish-shaped Voyager tracking antenna in Australia on Friday night caused the loss of a picture of 1985U1, the first new moon discovered by Voyager, in late December. But he indicated that the photo might be retransmitted later.

JPL astronomer Richard Terrile said researchers were suprised by the "paucity of dust" in Uranus' rings as Voyager photographed them against a backdrop of sunlight. Ring dust was found when Voyager 1 and 2 explored Jupiter and Saturn between 1979 and 1981, he said.

Scientists still aren't sure what the rings are made of. But they expect to learn more from Voyager, which is now heading on a 3½-year trip to Neptune, while unloading the information it collected Friday.

Pump Prices Don't Reflect Crude Dip

By SUE MANNING
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Although the price of crude oil has plunged $8 a barrel in the past 10 days, pump prices have dipped only 1.5 cents a gallon and "there is no sign of a price war in the retail marketplace," an industry analyst said Saturday.

"Dealers aren't taking advantage," said Dan Lundberg. "They are merely realigning themselves and catching up with the market."

Ten days ago, when Saudi Arabian oil minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani announced that the price of crude could dip to $15 a barrel, the price dropped to a seven-year low of $20 a barrel.

There were widespread reports that wholesale and retail prices also would dive.

But pump prices dropped an average of only 1.5 cents, while wholesale prices dipped 3 cents a gallon, he said.

Lundberg said he found about 700 stations selling regular leaded at self-service pumps for less than $1 a gallon. A year ago, 1,560 stations were selling the same grade at less than $1.

The overall average gasoline price, including taxes, was $1.19 a gallon, down 1.59 cents from two weeks ago.

ED DuFRESNE

January 26 & 27

Sunday 6:00 p.m.

Monday 7:30 p.m.

Ed DuFresne was marked by God in 1973. Since receiving the Heavenly vision in 1973, Brother DuFresne has obeyed God by carrying the message of Salvation, Healing, and Deliverance to the uttermost parts of the earth. His teaching is simple, but powerful and unique in its ability to touch mankind in spirit, soul, and body.

A native of Southern California, Brother DuFresne founded and pastored a church there for eight years. In 1983, Brother DuFresne entrusted both of these ministries to other men of God so that he might obey the Lord in entering the travelling ministry on a fulltime basis.

As Brother DuFresne ministers, God confirms His Word with signs following. Many receive creative miracles. In addition to the strong healing anointing that accompanies Brother DuFresne's ministry, there is also an outpouring of revelation knowledge from the Throne of God. Many lives are transformed and many ministries move into a stronger anointing as God uses Brother DuFresne in the office of a prophet.

Come expecting your miracle! Truly, God is stretching forth His hand to heal as mighty signs and wonders are being done in the Name of His Holy Child, Jesus.

Khadafy Meets Fleet In Armed Patrol Vessel

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

MISURATA, Libya (AP) — Col. Moammar Khadafy, dressed in a blue-and-green ski suit and an admiral's cap, sailed out into the Mediterranean on Saturday to meet the U.S. 6th Fleet in a 350-ton patrol boat loaded with four missiles.

"Libya cannot be patient forever to live under America's international terrorism," the Libyan leader told a shipboard news conference in Misurata harbor, 125 miles east of Tripoli. "I am going out to the parallel 32.5, which is the line of death, where we will stand and fight with our backs to the wall."

The parallel he referred to is the northern boundary of the Gulf of Sidra. It runs roughly from Misurata to Benghazi, on the eastern side of the gulf, and encloses what is "indisputably part of Libyan territory," Khadafy said.

Khadafy delivered his new challenge to the United States one day after the U.S. 6th Fleet announced naval air exercises off the Libyan coast, including the Gulf of Sidra.

"The Gulf of Sirte (Sidra) is part and parcel of Libyan territory," Khadafy said. "We call on the international community to prevent the United States carrying out military maneuvers inside Libya's economic zone ... which stretches to the continental shelf of Malta and Italy."

There was no indication whether any vessel of the 6th Fleet was in the area, and Khadafy did not indicate what he would do if he met one.

The United States and all other Western powers have refused to recognize Khadafy's claim to the strategic gulf as within Libyan territorial waters beyond the traditional 12-mile limit.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said she had no comment on Khadafy's trip or what he had to say about it.

In addition to the dispute over Libyan rights to the Gulf, Khadafy said he was proclaiming "a new confrontation with the United States" over Libya's claim to the entire continental shelf zone in the central Mediterranean between Libya and the continental shelf of Malta and Italy.

Such a claim would give Libya exclusive rights to the seabed in an additional area 800 miles long and more than 200 miles wide from south of the Italian island of Lampedusa to the greek island of Crete. According to Khadafy, it would also give him the right to control navigation in that area.

Military exercises anywhere in that area risked damaging Libyan oil and gas rigs and other installations, Khadafy declared, adding: "I call upon the entire world community to stop America carrying out military maneuvers in this Libyan economic zone."

The 6th Fleet, including the carriers Saratoga and Coral sea, is now holding extensive air exercises throughout the offshore zone claimed by Khadafy.

Recycling Project

"Did you know that the energy wasted by not recycling an empty aluminum can is equal to filling the same can half full of gasoline and then pouring it out on the ground?" Ruth Moskop asks.

Mrs. Moskop is a member of the Greenville Recycling Committee recently formed to begin looking at the possibility of having area residents separate their refuse so it can be recycled. A pilot project of having newspapers, aluminum and glass bottles picked up at curbside will be carried out in the Tar River Neighborhood beginning in February.

Newspapers will be picked up the first Saturday in February, with a rain date set for the second Saturday. The first Wednesday, clear glass bottles will be picked up; the third Saturday, aluminum cans.

The public works department will provide vehicles for the work and labor will be supplied by the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center, the Pitt County Mental Health Services, and the Pitt Planning Office.

For information or to join the Recycling Committee, call Ruth Moskop, 752-5023.

High Utility Bills

Frigid temperatures, dipping to as low as 10 degrees, have caused Greenville Utilities Commission customers to receive higher-than-usual utility bills in January, said George Reel, customer assistance supervisor.

"Some bills we're sending out now are more than double those sent out last month," he said.

If the weather cooperates, next month's bills should be more normal for this time of the year, said Reel.

Sunday Opinion

Effort Should Be Made To Save Center's Pool

Available: one outstanding indoor swimming pool. Prospective users only have to pay cost of operation and maintenance.

That seems to be the situation at the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center.

The Pitt County commissioners last week heard a request for $15,000 to operate the center's pool for three months. Joe Gantz, chairman of the board, said the center has been able to pay the cost of operating the pool for several years. Now, however, the cost of operating the pool for one year is $53,500.

Some 300 persons, mostly retired people, use the pool each month and fees charged come to $19,906. The direct loss is thus $33,594. Overhead, including $60,000 for heating, is figured at $113,235, creating a total annual loss of $146,000 per year.

"Everybody wants to use our pool and nobody wants to pay for it," Gantz said. He added that the center cannot afford to shoulder the loss either. He asked for $15,000 to keep the pool open until spring and allow the center time to look for ways to keep it operating.

Daneel le Roux, the center's excutive director, said that while the pool offers recreation for the community that is not the center's primary mission.

He said ECVC did not wish to close down the pool but "we feel like it is unfair to our staff ... to produce the money to keep the pool open."

What to do? Unfortunately we have an outstanding swimming pool facility in the community that may be too far removed from the population centers to be of maximum value. Perhaps all this should have been considered in the process of planning such a facility, but that is water under the bridge.

A one-time appropriation from the county of $15,000 would seem appropriate to give the center time to find other revenues. What the other revenues will be remains to be seen. The idea of city involvement now rests with the Recreation and Parks Commission. The county has little financial involvement in recreation. Perhaps the facility could serve as an additional pool for East Carolina University, although it now operates two indoor pools. Other possibilities might be Pitt Community College or the Pitt County Memorial Hospital-ECU Medical School, although proximity would be a problem.

There may be no alternative to ending the operation of the pool, but with such an elaborate facility already existing in the area — the only one of its kind — we should certainly attempt to find adequate use and revenue for it.

Britannia Pays Bills As It Goes

Some Americans are wont to look at their Colonial beginnings and presume early ties to England mean similarities with the people. It's an unsafe premise. We differ in the ways we think. Take the matter of the royal yacht as a case in point.

The British have a different concept than we on a yacht for the "first family."

The Britannia is an ocean-going ship that sails any and all oceans. For our part, a presidential yacht is provided as an accessory for a few days (or hours) of escaping official stress. When there is a presidential yacht it is usually a smallish vessel virtually useless except for recreation.

When not in use by the royal family, the Britannia may be sailing the world and serving as a mobile base of operations for bettering international relations or in other valuable roles.

The yacht was in an arm of the Indian Ocean ... near Yemen ... when it was summoned to help evacuate many hundreds of people (of 42 nationalities) from the scene of combat.

Inevitably rescue by the royal yacht will be engraved in memories of the people who were given help, and individual appreciation will be associated with gratitude to the queen. In a manner of speaking, the Britannia pays its way.

Sunday Morning Notes

Alvin Taylor

Bill Lloyd of Goldsboro called from his hospital bed at Pitt County Memorial Hospital recently.

He said he was in the hospital for ruptured disk surgery and he was impressed with the facilities. "The people of Greenville should be proud," he said. "They have given me good treatment."

Lloyd said he was calling because he recalled the opening of the old hospital 36 years ago. At that time he was a sports writer for The Daily Reflector and he said he played make believe patient at the old hospital for a photo that Roy Hardee, then a Reflector photographer, took in connection with the dedication.

Now, 36 years later, he was a real patient in a facility that couldn't even have been dreamed of then.

Things do have a way of changing over the decades.

That man in Libya who President Reagan has called a "barbarian" knows how to pronounce his name. Spelling it in English is not so easy, however.

The Associated Press version, which is seen in this newspaper, is "Khadafy".

The Wall Street Journal spells it Qadhafi, while the New York Times and the Washington Post spell it "Qaddafi." Time magazine sees it as "Gaddafi".

Everybody can be right, of course, since the English spellings are our attempt to provide letters for the Arabic pronuciation of Khadafy's name. The Arabic letters just don't have English counterparts.

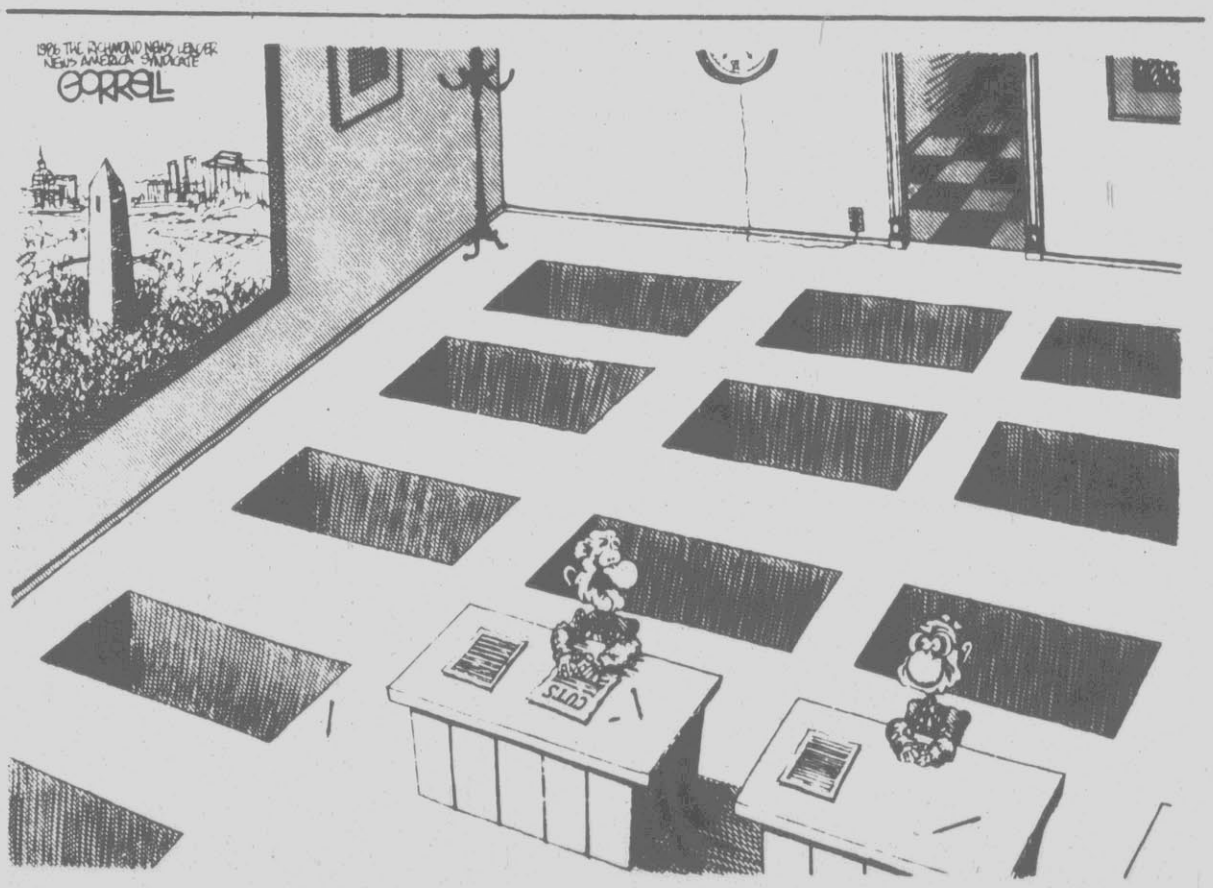

Thus anybody can have a shot at working out a spelling for the name — and if you don't want to bother you can always use the president's characterization, "Flaky."

Most newspapers now accept The Associated Press stylebook as the authority on such matters. So, too, do we. Anyway we're still trying to decide whether Vietnam is correct, or Viet Nam.

Art has taken some strange turns in recent decades. Some of the works which excite modern art lovers leave traditionists turned off. In art, as in everything else, however, there is plenty of room for difference of opinion and what is exciting to one viewer can well be infuriating to another.

One thing we can agree on is that nature's art often surpasses anything that man can devise. A snow-covered mountain, a rock sculptured by the elements over eons of time, the white sands of an ocean side beach are art in their way and it is art that man cannot easily duplicate.

Last Sunday, as the sun dropped in the western skies, nature produced a brilliant rainbow over the northwestern portion of the city. It was vivid enough and large enough to bring people out of their homes, and it hung there as long as a rainbow ever does. Has more exciting artwork ever been created? We doubt it.

How To Save Billions

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — More than 300 reporters turned out recently for a press briefing on the first round of blows under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Reduction Act. I have attended some strange press conferences over the past 45 years, but this one was in a class by itself. Nobody spoke much English.

Oh, the words were English words, all right, but the words had been robbed of meaning. Nobody spoke in terms of billions of dollars, or millions of dollars, or even thousands of dollars. They all spoke a kind of pidgin point talk.

What's the present guess on outlays for the current fiscal year? "Nine hundred ninety-six point five." What about revenues? "Seven seventy-six." So the deficit is? "Right. Two-twenty point five, less the eleven-seven being sequestered, for a net of two-oh-eight point eight. That's against the target of one seventy-one nine."

They were talking about billions of dollars. Billions! I cannot comprehend even $1 billion, let alone $996.5 billion, and that was all they talked about for a solid hour. They tossed around billions. The only figure I understood in an inch-thick document was a cut of $5,000 in funds for maintaining Vice President Bush's official residence out of the Naval Observatory. This I could grasp. Hard times, George, but we must all make do.

The purpose of the press conference was to announce $11.7 billion in "sequestrations" from the current fiscal budget. Half the cuts come from defense, half from non-defense. The law mandates these cuts for fiscal 1986 because the anticipated deficit of $220 billion far exceeds the target fixed by the act.

To arrive at the cuts, item by item, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) and the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) put together a list of 3,500 accounts for national defense and about 800 accounts for non-defense. Together, OMB and CBO estimated probable outlays for these accounts. Then, across the board, they multiplied these probable outlays by a factor of 4.9 for defense and 4.3 for non-defense.

You will understand that no judgments whatver entered into this process. By way of example, estimated outlays for the National Botanical Garden were $2,060.00. The cut is $80,000. The Department of Agriculture had expected to spend $401 million on research. It will spend $17.2 million less. The National Park Service had a budget of $502 million; $21.6 million has now been sequestered.

It is this aspect of the act that is so maddening. There is no human responsibility anywhere. Congress did not decree these particular cuts in spending. The president did not order them. OMB and CBO had no discretion. Who did it? The computer did it!

Computers are the most obedient devices ever invented, but they have no political judgment. The computer got to a budget of $3.2 billion for the Internal Revenue Service. It multiplied 3.2 by 4.3, and behold: The budget for the IRS will be cut by $139 million, including $100 million for examination and collection of income tax.

Now this is dumb. Stupid. Incredibl. IRS agents produce roughly $8 in revenue for every $1 of their expenses. In any sensible allocation of federal funds, the IRS would not get $100 million less. It would get $100 million more, but this dumb act does not work that way.

Thus the computer hummed away. It killed $792,000 in books for the blind, $176,000 in maintenance of the White House, $4.4 million for the Peace Corps, and $7 million at the Bureau of the Census. The computer nibbled away at flood control along the Mississippi, at Indian health and education, at the naval petroleum reserve, at the Bureau of Mines. The FBI will be cut by $45 million, drug enforcement by $14.6 million. The computer knocked 4.3 percent off budgets for rail safety, highway safety, air safety and boat safety. The Commission on Ukraine Famine and the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commisson took their lumps as well.

All these cuts added up to $11.7 billion. I was about to write "only" $11.7 billion, but that is pidgin point talk. It is one awesome amount of money. But you know what? To get to the 1987 target of $144 billion deficit, the computer will have to make cuts of at least $50 billion. As Al Joslon used to say, you ain't seen nothin' yet.

Loans, Not Grants

Paul T. O'Connor

RALEIGH — Tommy Rhodes, secretary of natural resources and community development, wants the state to get out of the business of giving money away for water and sewer projects.

Instead, the state should loan money to local governments to help them with these projects even though those loans would surely drive local water and sewer rates higher.

There are now 115 communities in North Carolina which cannot grow because their sewer systems cannot handle any new hook-ups. These communities can't build new houses or bring in new industry. Other communities are on the brink of such a shutdown. The price tag for meeting local water and sewer needs across the state is in the neighborhood of $1 billion, Rhodes recently told the Legislature's Study Committee on Infrastructure.

In the early 1970s, the federal government began making grants for water and sewer improvements that amounted to 75 percent of their cost. The state quickly decided to chip in with another 12 1/2 percent, leaving the local communities to pay for only one-eighth of a plant's costs.

Those days are gone. The feds cut their share to 55 percent last year. Now, with major budget cuts coming, Congress will probably cut sharply the amount of money the feds will share at that ratio.

It is generally agreed that state and local governments must go ahead and fund these water and sewer projects, even with the reduced federal help. In an interview before the study committee meeting, Rhodes said a state revolving loan fund was only one option he may recommend to his boss, Gov. Jim Martin. But when he appeared before the legislative committee he sounded as if he'd already chosen his alternative.

The 1985 General Assembly has already appropriated $120 million over two years for water and sewer grants to local governments. Rhodes wants the June session of the assembly to redirect any unspent money in this program to a revolving loan fund. He also would like to see a bit more seed money thrown in in June to get the fund off to a good start.

Local governments would then borrow from the fund, at favorable terms, to finance their portions of water and sewer projects. As the loans were paid back, the state would have money to loan out again for other projects.

Rhodes said the Congress may add an incentive for North Carolina to move in this direction. In both the (U.S.) House and Senate budgets currently being considered, there are provisions for extra water and sewer grants for those states which establish revolving funds. It would serve as seed money to help get the funds going.

There's a downside to this, however. It will raise the final local government cost of water and sewer plants. That will mean higher water and sewer rates in the towns which didn't get the state money for free, as in the past. (Rhodes predicts that federal grants will eventually be phased out in favor of loans, also.)

Rhodes said those higher rates don't bother him. They'd mean that the price of new water and sewer plants was being borne by the user rather than the taxpayer.

In some very poor communities, loans might drive the water and sewer rates beyond the budgets of most residents, Rhodes said. Therefore, he suggests that communities which have a median income level below a certain point be eligible for outright state grants instead of loans.

Confusion Still Reigns Over Retribution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five years after President Reagan promised "swift and effective retribution" for terrorist attacks against Americans, his top advisers remain divided on whether such action is wise, or even possible.

A special task force on terrorism, headed by Vice President George Bush, has sent a report to the White House that is ambiguous on the question of retribution, neither recommending it nor ruling it out.

"Some people thought it was supposed to define what retribution should be, but the task force never saw it that way," a Bush aide who asked not to be identified said last week. "Some people may be disappointed."

The report focuses on capabilities, responsibilities and coordination of the government's reponse to terrorism, the aide said. A public version may be released next month.

At the extremes in the debate over responding to terrorism are Secretary of State George P. Shultz, increasingly outspoken as an advocate of an American retaliatory strike against countries which support terrorism, and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who argues that anything other than a precision strike against known terrorists could make matters worse.

As the administration agonized over its response in the aftermath of the attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports last month, in which five Americans were among the 19 dead, Shultz and Weinberger made speeches and statements on successive days for nearly a week contradicting one another's views.

"It must be clearly and unequivocally the policy of the United States to fight back," Shultz asid.

"I think there are a lot of people who would get instant gratification from some kind of bombing attack somewhere without being too worried about the details," Weinberger said.

Although such public arguments between two senior Cabinet members are unusual, an aide to Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said it probably reflects uncertainties among the American people.

"Some, like Shultz, say 'strike back,'" said Mark Helmke, the Lugar aide. "Others say strike back only if you can win. In a sense, the Shultz-Weinberger debate may help people come to a conclusion."

Nothing has caused the Reagan administration more agony than deciding how to confront terrorism.

It was on Jan. 27, 1981, that the new president welcomed home the 52 American hostages following their 444-day captivity in Iran.

Said Reagan: "Let terrorists be aware that when the rules of international behavior are violated, our policy will be one of swift and effective retribution. We hear it said that we live in an era of limits to our powers. Well, let it also be understood, there are limits to our patience."

Since then, more than 300 Americans have been killed in terrorist acts, many more than during the previous administration, and six Americans remain kidnap hostages in Lebanon — two of them held longer than the Americans in Iran.

One consideration of those who argue against retaliation is the danger of inciting revenge-seeking, Mideast-style terrorism in the United States, especially if innocent people are killed. So far, the nation has been spared such terrorism, even though Americans have been targets abroad.

Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy threatened that if attacked he would send terrorist suicide squads to the United States, and the threat is taken seriously.

But Shultz, in a controversial 1984 speech in which he said innocent lives might have to be put at risk, declared, "We cannot allow ourselves to become the Hamlet of nations, worrying endlessly over whether and how to respond."

For the moment, Reagan has taken the Weinberger view and decided against use of armed force except in a few isolated instances, such as the seizing of the aircraft carrying hijackers of the Achille Lauro cruise ship.

He stresses the need to be sure attacks are carried out only against those reponsible, and that innocents are not harmed, which is the Weinberger position as well.

Reagan said at a Jan. 7 news conference he knew Americans were frustrated that "it appears that we sit here and are not doing anything." But he said U.S. authorities have prevented 126 terrorist actions in the previous year, although neither he nor other federal officials would detail them.

Prevention is also the course recommended by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who argues against military retaliation against countries such as Libya, citing Britain's own long experience in fighting Irish terrorism.

Shultz, normally loath to publicly disagree with an ally, did just that at a conference on terrorism last week.

"It is absurd to argue that international law prohibits us from capturing terrorists in international waters or airspace," he said, "from attacking them on the soil of other nations even for the purpose of rescuing hostages, or from using force against states that support, train and harbor terrorists or guerrillas."

At the same conference Weinberger warned against "killing women and children" and insisted, "We have to consider the appropriateness of the response and whether what we are doing will diminish and discourage terrorism in the future."

In the memory of Pentagon planners is the 241 Americans killed in the 1983 suicide attack at the Marine headquarters in Lebanon. Weinberger had resisted sending the Marines in the first place, while Shultz wanted them sent. But Reagan decided in Shultz' favor.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Why doesn't Greenville have an amateur band for people of all ages to get together and play music just for the fun of it? With all the interest in the arts and music through the colleges and other organizations, there should be something for non-professionals to enjoy, also.

When I moved here over four years ago, I soon read an article in your newspaper about the Farmville Community Band. They wanted interested people to join them, as they were few in number. As a former high school band saxaphone player, this was the answer to something I had wanted to get back to for years. I met this wonderful group of people and got very excited about the prospect of playing once more. I purchased a used alto saxaphone (which I had to learn how to play all over again) and met one night a week at Farmville Central High School. We played for the love of it. Age and inexperience didn't matter. It was a family thing for me as my 13-year-old daughter, who was in her school band at the time, carried along her trumpet and played with us.

I was very proud when I went back home to Elizabeth City to visit and told my former band director, Mr. Scott Callaway, that I was again playing a saxaphone after more than 20 years. You can also imagine his delight in hearing about this.

Now my saxaphone sits untouched for over a year or two. My love of joining others in making music was short-lived. The Farmville band director, Mr. Jerry Walters, who took the time and interest to help us, moved out of state. There was no one else to direct us and keep us together.

I really miss the friendship of these fine people and the fact that a little music has gone out of my life.

To the editor:

Thank you for your editorial showing concern for the tobacco farmer in the Daily Reflector recently. Your editorial was timely as you were showing or reminding your readers not only of how improtant tobacco farming is, but how the loss of it would eventually affect our whole country. Too few people seem to realize this.

Since people have been informed that tobacco can be harmful to their health, shouldn't they be given a choice about using it?

Why isn't equal time given to discourage drinking? With injuries and loss of life and the cost of alcoholic rehabilitation, we still hear more about smoking than against drinking.

Since tobacco is going to be grown somewhere and some people are going to smoke, shouldn't Congress give more consideration to the tobacco grower? Would Congress want to have all of the tobacco grown in other countries and have the profit from tobacco go there instead of to the United States?

Tobacco growing, though dwindling here, is not only important to this area but is important to the entire country.

Oil Prices Can Boomerang

NEW YORK (AP) — A sharp slide in crude oil prices promises a shot in the arm for the U.S. economy by creating jobs and putting more cash in consumers' pockets and corporate treasuries without fueling inflation.

Analysts say almost a million jobs could be created by increased economic growth and the typical American motorist could save more than $70 a year in gasoline for each $5 slide in the price of a barrel of oil.

Not everyone would benefit. Lower oil prices are bad news for the oil industry itself, companies and regions dependent on it and banks that have lent heavily to it and to oil-producing countries in the Third World.

But experts forecast that most oil producers, their suppliers and bankers could survive a sustained lower price for petroleum.

In markets where contracts for future delivery of oil are bought and sold, the price of a barrel of oil has plunged $5 in the past week and about $12 in the past two months.

In non-contract, or spot markets, major grades of U.S. and North Sea crude oil available on short notice both are hovering around $20 a barrel, a level last seen in 1979.

If the lower prices hold, and assuming the entire savings are passed on, the average price at the pump of all grades of gasoline could drop from $1.21 a gallon to $1.08 — a $70-a-year savings for the typical driver. Electric utility customers also would benefit, and trucking companies and airlines would see their fuel costs drop.

But unlike the pre-1981 days of federal controls on oil prices, savings no longer are automatically passed on.

Complicating factors include the cost of meeting new federal standards for reducing lead in gasoline, competitive pressures, sweeping retrenchments in the industry that have decimated the number of refineries and a general reluctance in the industry to pass up potentially huge profits following multibillion-dollar refining losses in recent lean years.

Lower prices would have far-reaching implications. Petroleum is among the basic building blocks of the chemical industry, which uses it in fabrics, plastic grocery bags, tires, recordings and building materials.

Lower oil prices also would mean moderation in utility rates. Consolidated Edison, the electric utility serving metropolitan New York, said recently its bills in 1985 were $132 million lower than the previous year, even though customers used more power. Lower fuel costs were a key factor.

For the economy as a whole, growth would rise by an additional 2 percent within two years if oil fell to $20 a barrel, creating 900,000 new jobs, according to a study by Data Resources Inc., a consulting firm.

The most important impact of a drop in oil prices to the United States would be a reduction in the bill for imported oil, with each $5 a barrel drop chopping nearly $25 million a day from the nation's tab for foreign oil. That could cut $9 billion a year off the nation's trade deficit, which was closing in on $150 billion last year.

"That money is available for consumers and businesses to spend on other things," said Lawrence Chimerine, chairman of Chase Econometrics, a forecasting and consulting firm.

Unlike a tax cut, which also puts more income in the hands of individuals and corporations, falling oil prices stimulate spending without adding to inflation.

It was an explosion in oil prices in the 1970s that contributed to double-digit inflation and a crippling global economic slowdown.

Before lower prices filter through to consumers, however, pressures have grown for new federal taxes on imported oil.

The theory is that the tax would leave prices unchanged, meaning that the government could cut its record deficit without having to cut as deeply in social programs. Consumers would lose the benefit of lower prices and the economy would not get as much stimulation in the short-term, but economic health might be served in the long-term by curbing deficits, Chimerine said.

Crises Aren't New To Friday

Surely at times Bill Friday must feel like muttering to himself: "This is where I came in."

Friday had scarcely gotten his office seat warm three decades ago when he was confronted with his first crisis involving intercollegiate athletics. And here he is only six months away from retiring as president of the University of North Carolina system, battling to preserve academic standards in the face of cries of alumni and studens for victory on the playing field at all costs.

Friday also must have had mixed emotions recently when UNC-Chapel Hill dedicated its new basketball arena — euphemistically called a student activities center — after having it built at a cost of nearly $34 million with funds contributed by fans.

Friday and every other college administrator in the state could not be blamed for dreaming about how wonderful it would be if the fans would match support of their favorite teams by giving comparable sums to college endowment funds so that they could recruit and retain more distinguished scholars on their faculties.

Dean Smith, in whose honor the new UNC arena was named and who has long bucked the tide by insisting to his players that studies come first and that degrees are as important to them as All-American honors, showed that he has maintained his sense of proportion despite the high honor paid him. He said he had serious reservations about the wisdom of the project at the start.

"We raised this money, $34 million, to play 12 basketball games a year," he said. "There are a lot better ways to spend money." However, Smith indicated backers of the project had dispelled his reservations somewhat by arguing that the arena gifts could have long-range benefits in other areas.

"I'm very concerned about teachers," Smith said. "They ought to be among our best-paid people. Maybe we can get more money now for the school of education." He pointed out donors for one project often follow it up later with gifts for other purposes.

This remains to be seen, but Friday and his fellow college administrators surely feel that much too much of their time is taken up with attempting to keep athletics in its proper place. They must often grow weary of trying to ensure that students who represent Old Siwash on the playing field will be able, at the very least, to sign their names — rather than affix an X — on their scholarship applications. Too often too much of their energy is consumed dealing with the problems raised by coaches and their assistants who fudge on the rules in recruiting by promising the athletes more than the rules permit.

They must have been appalled as they watched last year when the trustees of Clemson University took the side of the athletic director when he bucked the college's president, who was trying to restore a modicum of sanity in its athletic policies.

When he became president of the then-Consolidated University of North Carolina nearly 30 years ago, Friday came face to face with the way a crisis in intercollegiate athletics can develop. This came when the National Collegiate Athletic Association charged N.C. State College with recruiting violations and slapped it with the worst penalty it had ever assessed against a major college up to that time.

The NCAA charged that N.C. State had promised Jackie Moreland, a widely sought basketball player from Minden, La., a five-year scholarship; $1,000 a year as long as he attended State, and $200 a year to purchase clothing, and that he had been handed $80 to pay his transportation to Raleigh to enroll. The NCAA also charged that Moreland's girlfriend had been promised an expense-paid trip to visit him at Thanksgiving plus a seven-year medical school education at the college of her choice.

N.C. State denied the charges and demanded that the NCAA and the Atlantic Coast Conference conduct a public hearing to give the athletic officials involved — assistant basketball coach Vic Bubas, assistant athletic director Willis Casey and Wolfpack Club director Harry Steward — an opportunity to confront their accusers. The NCAA and ACC refused, saying their information had been received in confidence.

N.C. State subsequently reported to Friday that "it has not been established that any member of our staff has wilfully violated any of the rules of our conference or the NCAA."

Friday approved the report but submitted for the approval of the UNC Board of Trustees a "restatement and clarification" of athletic policy at N.C. State and UNC at Chapel Hill. It said that the faculties would continue to set admission and academic standards, that the athletic directors at each school "shall be responsible, under the chancellor, for the administration of the athletic program," and that State and UNC as members of the NCAA and ACC would "abide by the letter and spirit" of their regulations.

Friday's next crisis in athletics came in the spring of 1961 when he abolished the Dixie Classic, then the most successful of the Christmas holiday basketball tournaments and the top sports and social event of the holiday season in North Carolina. Friday's action came as the aftermath of scandals in which several N.C. State players and one UNC player were charged with accepting bribes from gamblers for shaving points in several games, including one Dixie Classic game, one ACC tourney game and several other contests.

In a recent interview, Friday said he acted after the Wake County prosecutor had informed him "these gamblers took our boys outside the (Reynolds) Coliseum and stuck a gun in their stomachs and said, 'Give me back the money. You didn't throw the game the way you promised.' Then you knew the Mafia-type mentality had taken over. The only way you could stop it was to abolish the event."

Asked if he had ever regretted the action, Friday said, "I wish I had done it sooner." However, the next session of the General Assembly saw the introduction of bills to revive the classic. These were defeated when Friday appealed to the lawmakers to leave such matters in the hands of the university's administrators.

During the past several years, Friday has spent countless hours working with a committee of the nation's college and university presidents concerned over an erosion of admission and elibility standards for athletes. The committee came up with a proposal to the NCAA — called Proposition 48 — that would have required freshmen athletes to score at least 700 on a SAT test or an ACT equivalent and to have a 2.0 — C minus — grade average. The NCAA convention adopted Proposition 48 three years ago and called for it to go into effect in August of this year. However, at its 1986 convention recently, the NCAA agreed to water down Proposition 48 somewhat during the first three years after hearing impassioned appeals from several black leaders who decried it as racism, elitism and a return to "slave days."

Friday attended the convention, spoke out against the move to water down the new rule and was unhappy when it carried. Since returning from the convention, Friday stated in an interview he would urge the university and the ACC to adhere to the higher standard called for in the original Proposition 48.

"Even though the NCAA has taken its action, we need not lower our academic requirements," Friday said. "More is involved here than an academic judgment about whether a freshman should participate in sports. It's also the judgment of the university about its academic standards."

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Recent Gallup survey results dispel the widely held notion of older Americans as an inactive, disinterested and poorly informed segment of society.

Evidence of the involvement of the 65-and-older group — which comprises about one-sixth of the adult population — includes the following:

One in three (34 percent) is engaged in charitable or social service activities such as helping the poor, sick or elderly; the comparable figure among people under 65 is 31 percent.

Older people (80 percent) are considerably more likely than younger people (69 percent) to be members of a church or synagogue and to attend services weekly (49 percent vs. 40 percent).

Persons 65 and older are just as likely as those under 65 to exercise regularly, with 44 percent in each age group saying they perform some form of daily exercise to keep fit.

Older people are more active in the political process. Higher proportions of th 65-and-older group, together with their slightly younger (50-64) counterparts, are registered to vote and to cast their ballots in national elections, than are those under 50.

The "Star Wars" and war risk results are based on in-person interviews with 285 persons, 65 and older, and 1,250 persons under 65, conducted in more than 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period Oct. 11-14.

The results on capital punishment are based on telephone interviews with 125 persons, 65 and older, and 875 persons under 65, conducted Nov. 11-18.

The Reagan performance ratings are based on in-person interviews with 1,250 persons, 65 and older, and 5,400 persons under 65, conducted between July and December 1985.

For results based on subsamples of these sizes, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could range from plus or minus 11 percent for the smallest subsample (125 interviews), to 2 percent for the largest (5,400 interviews).

In addition to sampling error, the reader should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.

28 Feared Dead In Explosion

IQUIQUE, Chile (AP) — A massive blast ripped through an arms and explosives factory Saturday and it was feared that as many as 28 workers were killed.

Cardoen Explosives Co. issued a statement in Santiago, the Chilean capital, saying four workers were killed, 24 were missing and 11 were injured but only two required hospitalization.

A police officer in this northern city told The Associated Press that the missing "are almost certainly dead." He had reported earlier that four bodies were recovered and 23 workers were missing while 15 were injured.

Irene Rojas, a reporter for the Iquique newspaper La Estrella, said the missing workers "were killed. The explosion disintegrated their bodies, there is nothing left there."

The police spokesman said the midmorning explosion destroyed one section of the sprawling four-section Cardoen plant in Alto Hospicio, an industrial suburb of this port city 1,150 miles north of Santiago.

He said an investigation was under way to determine the cause of the explosion, but it appeared to be accidental.

The Cardoen communique said the blast occurred in the section where ammunition was assembled for the 500-pound cluster bombs that are one of the firm's main products. Among the countries known to buy the bombs is Iraq, which has been at war with Iran since September 1980.

Rescue teams were careful in their search for the missing victims because of the possibility of "secondary explosions" and gas leaks, said the police spokesman who declined to give his name.

Cardoen is Chile's largest arms and explosives manufacturer with plants in Santiago and Iquique.

The company communique was issued at its Santiago headquarters by a manager, Julio Rodriguez, who refused to answer reporters' questions.

X-Car Recall Debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department renewed its request Friday that a federal judge order General Motors Corp. to recall and fix its 1980 X-cars and pay $4 million in fines.

GM, which also submitted a lengthy document to U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson on Friday, reiterated its contention that the goverment is wrong in alleging the cars contain a brake defect which can cause drivers to lose control of their vehicles when braking.

Warning Labels Urged By NCSL

By DOUG ROBERSON
ECU News Bureau

North Carolina student legislators passed a resolution Saturday recommending the placement of warning labels on containers of smokeless tobacco sold in North Carolina.

Citing the dangers of smokeless tobacco along with its increased use by teen-agers, the legislature approved the labeling recommendation in hopes of dispelling what it feels is a misconception that the product is a safe alternative to cigarettes.

The North Carolina Student Legislature is an organization of college and university students from across the state. More than 100 delegates attended the weekend meeting at East Carolina University's Jenkins Fine Arts Auditorium.

Among other resolutions approved by the NCSL was an endorsement of open hearings on congressional ethics in the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.

The students' support of open hearings was in response to congressional members' alleged use of postage-free mailings to solicit political support. "Incumbents have an inherent advantage in our system of government, and we need to ensure that postage-free mailings aren't abused in order to increase their political advantage," said a delegate from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The NCSL "postponed indefinitely" a resolution recommending an amendment to a North Carolina statute which makes it unlawful to carry weapons into assemblies requiring paid admission.

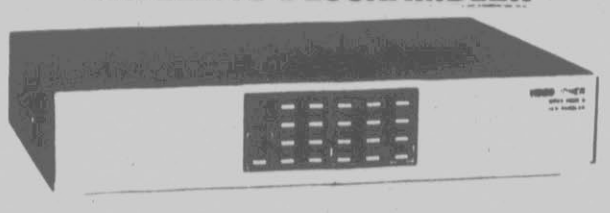

The defeated resolution would have recommended an amendment permitting persons to carry any unloaded weapon into assemblies where admission is paid.

Sunday, student legislators are scheduled to discuss resolutions concerning acts of terrorism; liability suits against tobacco companies; mail order sales of martial arts weapons; Coast Guard budget cuts; increased environmental protection; Medicare payments to the elderly; and euthanasia pro choice.

Although the NCSL is not a lawmaking body, more than 40 percent of its legislative ideas have been written into law. NCSL Governor Billy Miller said, "We are very proud of the fact that state legislators take our ideas seriously. But our main purpose is to educate students about the political process and to develop leadership qualities." Miller is a student at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

The NCSL, a non-profit and nonpartisan educational corporation, is the oldest active student legislature in the United States with more than 5,000 student members from 25 public and private institutions of higher learning in North Carolina. Former members include James B. Hunt, James Holshouser and Robert Morgan.

Presidential Election Campaign One Of Contrasts

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Philippines presidential election campaign is entering its final phases in a style as disparate as the two leading candidates themselves. It is a campaign of extravaganza vs. "people power."

President Ferdinand E. Marcos' campaign is the one of extravaganza. With the accumulated resources of 20 years in office, he has used as many as seven airplanes at a time on his tou's The campaign is bolstered by movie stars, costly television and radio commercials, wide news media coverage, mammoth rallies and gifts for those who turn out to see and hear him.

Corazon "Cory" Aquino, 53, his opponent who has never held public office, is associated with people power. Her campaign has taken the unprecedented step for the Philippines of selling things, rather than giving them away. The articles sold to raise funds include yellow "Cory" dolls and stickers that can be pasted on bottle caps to become do-it-yourself campaign buttons. She gets sparse coverage in the major news media, heavily controlled or influenced by Marcos' relatives, friends or followers.

Yet, she has stirred a groundswell of support in roadside villages, at rallies generally bigger and more spontaneous than Marcos' extravaganzas in nearly all'ljor cities and in a wide variety of public apearances.

She has far outranged the 68-year-old Marcos on the campaign trail, having visited all but about 20 of the nation's 73 provinces with two weeks to go before election day, Feb. 7.

Even some of Mrs. Aquino's critics acknowledge that her campaign is an unprecedented display of people power, implicitly backed by high Roman Catholic clergy and influential business leaders.

Her supporters predict a landslide in the cities and large margins in the countryside if, they say, a citizens' poll-watching group can prevent cheating.

But Marcos also predicts victory — a lopsided 80 percent of the vote.

Last week, Marcos' record during Japanese occupatcoi in World War II became an issue. The New York Times published a report on U.S. Army documents compiled in 1947 that held Marcos' claims of leading a guerrilla unit to be fraudulent. His claims of heroism have come under attack before in the Philippines only to be overridden by his denials.

But Mrs. Dlvino maintains the American documents are proof of her allegations that Marcos deceives his people.

The campaign also has had it share of political intrigue, including speculation that Marcos will declare a state of emergency and call the election off if he sees himself losing. It also includes speculation that the president will put his wife, Imelda, in as the candidate at the last minute, pleading critical illness, which he now denies he has.

The major issue in the election is Marcos himself, who cut short his term by 15 months, saying he wants to prove that Filipiprove Filipinos are fed up with Marcos. She has become ¾nlreasingly blunt in her criticism of the president, calling him a f¾f¾, an overgrown child, a corrupt official and the one responsible for the killing of herh sband u oR his re'u¾n from exile in the United States in 1983.

She has the support of all major opposition groups.

An official4rjport Saturday said 13 killings have been linked to the campaign, and detailed allegations have been made of plans for cheating.

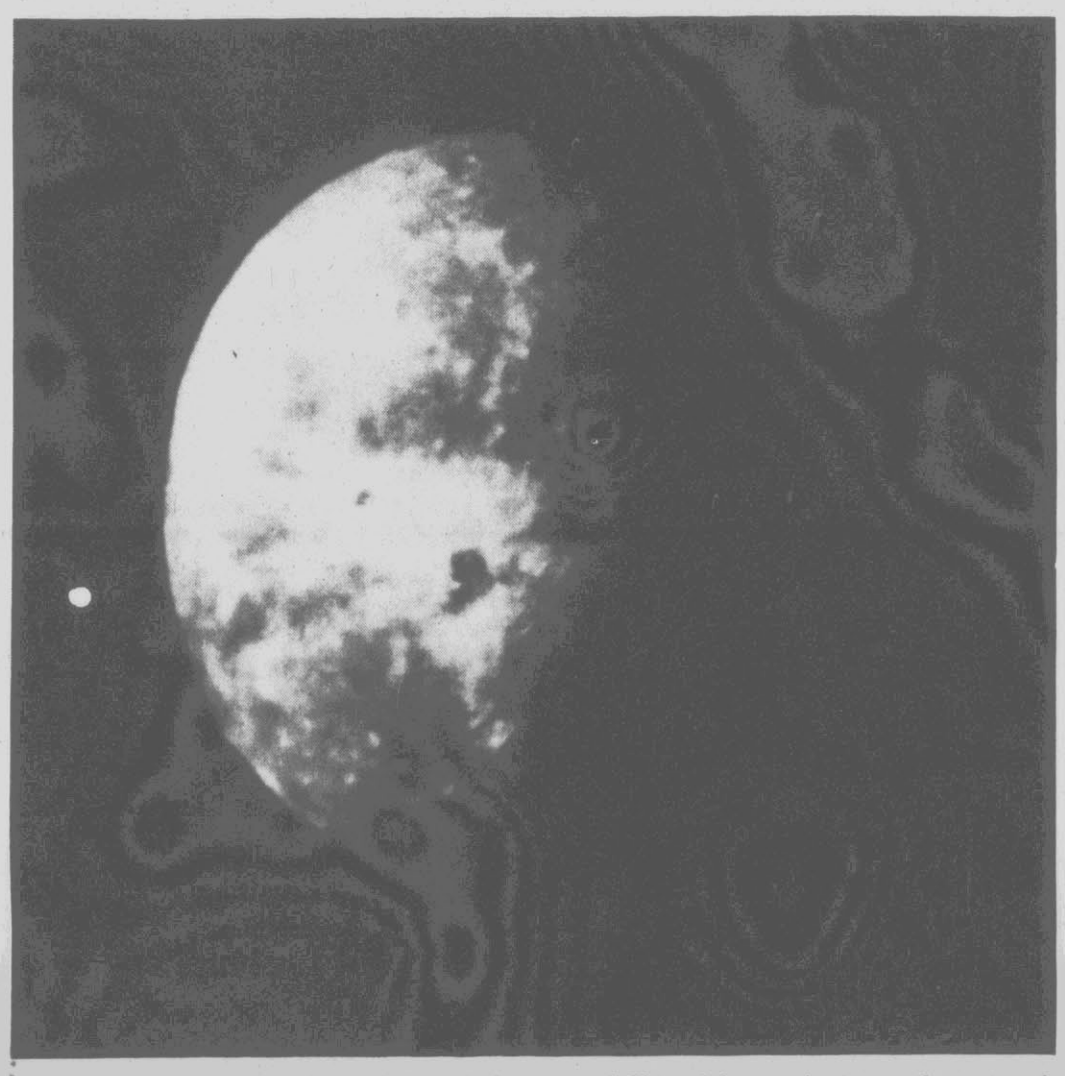

The campaigns of both sides are color-coordinated, with Marcos and his wife, as well as his vice presidentiansunning mate Arturo Tolentino, usually wearing red, a color that signifies battle.

Mrs. Aquino's campaign color is yellow, reminiscent of the yellow ribbon homecoming for her husband in 1983. She is welcomed everywhere by people with something yellow — blankets, mosquito nets, even papaya 3m ces, and yellow ribbons tied or everything from trees to goats.

Green, a symbol of growth and hope, is the color of her running mate, Salvador Laurel.

Marcos rallies include singing, dancing, jokes and free food. He also announces the release of funds for government projects wherever he goes. Most recently he ordered an 11 percent cut in fuel prices.

Marcos has made communism the single most important issue of the campliyn, repeatedly accusing the U.S.-educated Mrs. Aquino of planning to put Communists in her Cabinet. He also accuses her of planning to divide the country in two, giving southern islands to the Moslem minority.

OBERON — This Voyager 2 picture of Oberon is the best the spacecraft acquired of Uranus' outermost moon. The picture was taken shortly after 3:30 a.m., PST, Friday from a distance of 410,000 miles. Clearly visible are several large impact craters in Oberon's icy surface surrounded by bright rays similar to those seen on Jupiter's moon Callisto. Quite prominent near the center of Oberon's desk is a larger crater with a bright central peak and a floor partially covered with very dark material. A large mountain, about 4 miles high, peeks out of the lower left limb. (AP Laserphoto)

Awards Will Be Presented

The annual Greenville Jaycees' "Outstanding Citizen" awards will be presented at the organization's regular membership meeting Feb. 13.

The local winners will receive an award and represent Greenville in the statewide program sponsored by the North Carolina Jaycees. Winners at the state level will receive an award and recognition during the N.C. Jaycess awards weekend March 14-16.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Get busy with activities already started and make big headway. Don't permit others to take you away from your work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Your mate may not agree with some plan you have in mind during the day, but tonight will think differently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) A partner may be acting strangely during the day, so keep mum until the mood passes. Be happy with your mate.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You may not be pleased with your surroundings now but there is little you can do about it. Plan more work with partners tonight.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will have an overabundance of energy and can channel it in the right directions, so encourage in this or it could easily flow over on the wrong side. Little Support For Tax Repeal

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — There is almost no support on the Senate Finance Committee for total repeal of the deduction for state and local taxes paid, a major part of President Reagan's tax-overhaul plan, Chairman Bob Packwood said Saturday.

Packwood said members of the panel also reached informal agreement at an overnight retreat at a West Virginia resort that the tax-overhaul bill should not be used to raise taxes.

After members returned to Washington, Packwood told a news conference he is confident the panel will be able to write a bill this year. Most members also think the House-passed measure is too tough on business, he added. And on the major issue, Packwood said:

"It was very clear there was no support — or very little — for elimination of state real property (tax) deductions or local real property tax deductions. There was more support for elimination of personal property tax deductions and sales taxes. On (repeal of the deduction for state and local) income taxes, I did not get a sense one way or the other."

Reagan wants to wipe out the entire deduction for all state and local taxes on real estate, sales, personal property and income. The House, in passing a sweeping tax-overhaul bill in December, refused to tamper with those deductions.

The president wants repeal so the money can be used to lower individual and corporate tax rates across the board.

Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., whose high-tax state would lose most from repeal of the deduction, said a vote by the 20-member committee to repeal "would jeopardize the legislation here and in the House."

Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., said there was no in-depth discussion by members about Packwood's proposal to repeal the deduction for some but not all state and local taxes.

Despite the lack of support for total repeal of that major deduction, Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, who took part in the retreat, said he was pleased with the session.

"I think we would clearly not want to underestimate the difficulty of the task ahead," Baker said. "Having said that, it is fair to say we have taken the first steps toward Senate passage of a tax-reform bill."

Reagan, who opposes raising taxes to cut the federal deficit, could take heart from another straw vote of committee members. "Only four or five (senators) said this bill ought to be a tax-raising bill, a revenue-raising bill, in addition to a tax-reform bill." He added there was no sentiment among the committee members for writing a separate tax-increase bill this year.

Baker once again spelled out the administration's basic problems with the overhaul plan passed by the House — problems the president wants the Senate to correct.

"We'd like to see significantly greater reductions in rates from what the House finally ended up with," Baker said, "and we'd like to see some of the capital formation (business) elements addressed, particularly depreciation."

Packwood said most of the committee agreed that "the bill that came out of the House tilts away from encouraging capital formation and some changes should be made ... more likely in depreciation."

As for individual tax rates, the chairman said, "I think we'll try to start with 35 percent ... There were some that would just as soon have 38 percent."

Reagan wants the present top individual rate of 50 percent cut to 35 percent; the House voted 38 percent. He wants a $2,000-per-person exemption for all; the House approved $2,000 for those who do not itemize deductions and $1,500 for those who do.

Packwood said the Finance Committee, which will open a final round of public hearings on tax overhaul on Wednesday, agrees a $2,000 exemption is needed for low- and middle-income people but is not certain that should go to the rich.

The chairman also mentioned a concern of committee members that could make it more difficult for Congress to agree on tax overhaul. "If there was any single area that we were sensitive about, it was natural resources in general — not just oil, not just gas, but mining, timber," he said.

The House has voted to severely curtail special tax benefits for those resources, and Senate refusal to go along might jeopardize the bill.

Williams Not Bitter After Stay In Prison

By FRANK BAJAK
Associated Press Writer

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Former Sen. Harrison A. Williams, due to be released this week after two years in prison for his Abscam conviction, vows to establish his innocence and says he feels "not defeated or bowed or bitter, just stronger."

The 65-year-old Democrat, former chairman of the Senate's Labor and Human Resources Committee, also said in an interview Friday that his incarceration had exposed him to flaws in the judicial system that he intended to write about.

Once considered New Jersey's "senator for life," Williams said he felt gratified by finding jobs for at least six convicts at the Newark halfway house where he has been held since Nov. 4.

Williams is scheduled to be released Friday.

When he began his three-year sentence at a minimum-security federal prison Jan. 19, 1984, Williams became the first U.S. senator in 80 years to be jailed. He served four terms in the Senate before resigning in 1982.

Williams claims that while he was in prison, new evidence surfaced that would exonerate him in the retrial he is seeking on his bribery and conspiracy convictions.

His conviction in the Abscam probe, in which FBI agents posed as wealthy Arab sheiks seeking influence in Congress, was "contrived" and politically motivated entrapment, he said. "The whole thing was manufactured, an effort to get me to look like a criminal and I'm not. I want to prove that I'm not," said Williams.

He was convicted in 1981 of agreeing to take a hidden interest in a Virginia titanium mine and a $100 million loan in return for a promise to try to get government contracts for the mine.

Six congressmen and 13 other people were convicted in the Abscam operation.

Williams' attorney, Robert J. Flynn, petitioned the full 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in October to dismiss Williams' conviction on the grounds of government misconduct and to order a new trial.

Flynn said he expected a decision soon.

"I want to see all the facts before the court," said Williams. "The whole trial system is supposed to bring forth the truth. If you can't get the truth into a court of law, you're in Nazi Germany or Red Russia."

The new information, he said, would prove that a videotape of his 1980 meeting in a New York hotel with undercover agents was edited for the trial to delete a scene in which he was led to a drawer containing $40,000 and slammed it shut.

Gordon MacRae Dies Of Cancer

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Actor-singer Gordon MacRae, who crooned in a surrey with the fringe on top in "Oklahoma!" and later battled back from the blackouts of alcoholism, died Friday at age 64.

Edwin Shafer, director of development and public relations at the hospital, said MacRae died at 2:15 a.m. at Bryan Memorial Hospital. He had been hospitalized since Nov. 27 for treatment of cancer of the mouth and jaw, and Shafer said death was "related to cancer" but declined to be more specific.

"He died very peacefully in his sleep," MacRae's wife, Elizabeth, said in a telephone interview.

Mrs. MacRae said that although her husband suffered a stroke in 1982 and doctors said he would never be able to work again, he kept performing "out of sheer guts and willpower."

A memorial service was scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Monday at Sheridan Lutheran Church in Lincoln. A private burial was planned.

The family asked that memorials be sent to the National Council on Alcoholism. Since undergoing treatment for alcoholism in 1978, MacRae had spoken out on the disease and was honorary chairman of the National Council of Alcoholism.

MacRae's long career reached its peak on the screen in the mid-1950s with the musicals "Oklahoma!" in which he played the cowboy Curly, and "Carousel."

He fought a long battle against alcoholism, and once said that he had been so drunk during a concert in Greenville, S.C., that he couldn't remember any song lyrics.

"I think I'll always have a special place in my heart for Greenville because it was there that I finally came to my senses when I hit rock bottom," MacRae said when he returned to the city in 1983, for a concert sponsored by the North Greenville Alcoholism Treatment Program.

"You don't realize what's going on until you admit you are powerless over this creeping, cunning, dastardly powerful disease and that your life is unmanageable," MacRae said.

During the last year, cancer prented him from performing, Mrs. MacRae said.

"His last days were really spent trying to overcome this," she said. "Gordon was a very religious man and he spent most of his time in prayer.

"He was a very unusual person in show business in the sense that he never dwelt on his past achievements. He was always thinking about what he was going to do next."

Doris Day, who starred with MacRae in five films, said in Los Angeles that "he was so adorable and I loved him so.

"I spoke to him not long ago, and he said, 'Clara (his pet name for Miss Day), I'm going to beat this.' And, I thought he would," Miss Day said.

"His voice was magnificent, and no one sang like him. We had so much fun when we made films together, and our favorites were 'On Moonlight Bay' and 'By the Light of the Silvery Moon,'" the actress said.

MacRae was born March 21, 1921, in East Orange, N.J. After childhood roles on radio, MacRae joined the Millpond Playhouse at Roslyn, N.Y., where he met actress Sheila Stephens. They were married in 1941.

MacRae left the playhouse to work as a page with the National Broadcasting Company in New York. Horace Heidt heard the young baritone one day in 1941 and offered him a job as a vocalist in his orchestra.

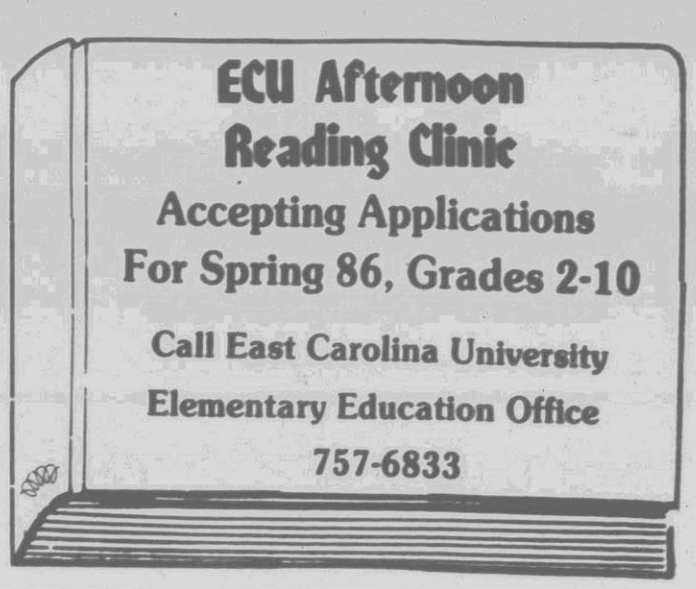

MacRae got a role as Tommy Arbuckle in the Broadway play "Junior Miss." At the same time, he was a singer in a radio chorus and worked on another radio program until June 1943, when he was drafted into the Army.

After wartime service as a navigator in the Army Air Corps, MacRae returned to radio and finally won a commercial show as star of the NBC "Teentimers" program. He was host of "The Railroad Hour" on radio from 1948 to 1954.

MacRae's career skyrocketed when he was signed to a contract by William Orr, a talent scout for Warner Bros.

MacRae's credits include, "The Big Punch," 1948, "Look for the Silver Lining," 1949, "Backfire," 1949, and "Return of the Frontiersman," 1950.

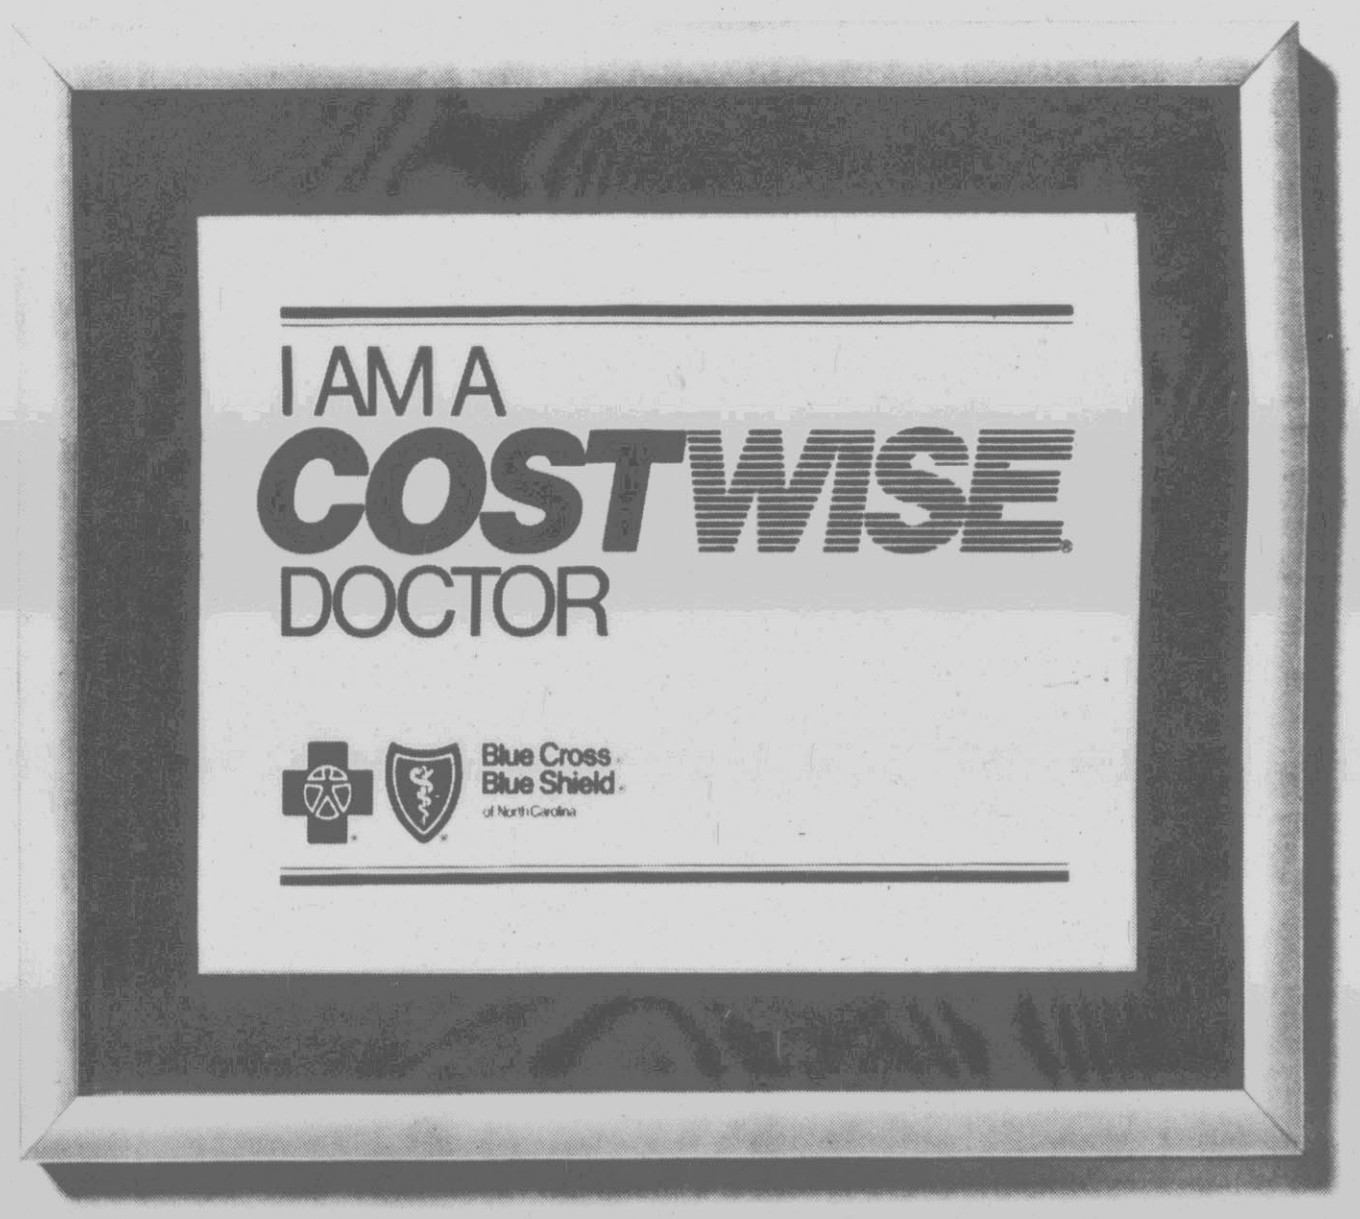

He was also in "Tea for Two," 1950, "West Point Story" 1951, "Oklahoma!" 1955, "Carousel," 1956 and "The Best Things in Life are Free," 1956.

CHECK YOUR DOCTOR'S VITAL SIGNS.

Signs like this are appearing in doctors' offices across the state. Doctors who display them have joined Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina in the battle against rising health care costs. They have become CostWise doctors. That's important for you to know. Because health care costs affect everyone. When costs go up, coverage premiums ultimately go up too.

Under the CostWise program, participating doctors agree to accept the amounts we allow for various treatments. In fact, you won't even have to file a claim form. The doctor will handle it for you. Your only obligation will be the co-payment, or deductible or non-covered services if applicable.

Of course, to benefit from all this you have to be a Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina member.

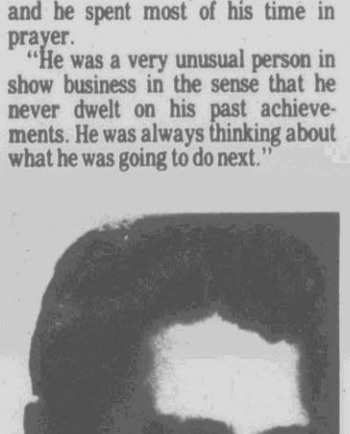

The CostWise doctors deserve a lot of credit. Because they're helping slow the rise in premiums and co-payments. Thanks to them, you'll be getting the best possible medical care at the lowest possible cost.

So check your doctor's vital signs. And if you see one that says CostWise, you'll know you're in the right place.

Sex Education Curriculum Changes Made

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system is altering its sex education curriculum to encourage family participation and emphasize teen-age sexual abstinence, but school officials say the changes did not come in response to a yearlong attack by conservative critics.

"Our curriculum was put on trial, and there was a pretty clear verdict that the vast majority in our community had not expressed discomfort with it," Superintendent Jay Robinson said. "But that doesn't mean we should not listen to all people and be sensitive to their concerns."

Under the changes, "We will no longer be teaching reproductive body parts vocabulary in kindergarten through third grades," Robinson said. "And we have also decided that nothing should be discussed in our elementary school curriculum that could be considered to undermine the value of a strong and positive family environment."

Critics such as Carl Horn III, president of the North Carolina Policy Council and the Rev. Joseph Chambers, president of the Concerned Charlotteans anti-pornography group, have pressed for changes since 1984, when three parents accused the schools of teaching sex education in an immoral manner.

"Progress is being made," Horn said. "But much remains to be done."

Robinson decided on the changes after recommendations from a 12-member committee and a nine-member citizens' advisory panel on sex education.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg's current health education curriculum is about 15 years old. In 1977, the tenth-grade Personal Health Issues class — the meat of the curriculum — became mandatory. The course includes discussing contraception (with parental permission), venereal disease and the risks of teen pregnancy.

In 1981, the curriculum was revised to include, among other things, vocabulary lessons on reproductive body parts for the lower elementary grades. The new changes delay such discussion until the fourth grade, with one exception — if a child asks a specific question, teachers are urged to answer with correct names for body parts.

Also, showing diagrams of the human body and touring girls' and boys' rest rooms are no longer suggested in the K-3 curriculum.

Other changes at the elementary level delete discussions of family activities that may be considered an invasion of privacy. Robinson said some parents have objected to teachers asking questions such as, "How do you feel when your parents fight?" or "Who makes the decisions in your family — your mother or your father?"

In junior high school, the seventh-grade Family-Health Sexuality guide and the eight-grade Adolescent Sexuality Guide will be rewritten to emphasize what Robinson called "the positive role of the family" and sexual abstinence.

In the ninth-grade elective course, the Planned Parenthood booklet "This is You" will be dropped because of how it portrays homosexual feelings.

"It could be interpreted as saying that homosexuality is normal," said Bob Sherrill, a Carmel Junior School health teacher and member of the teachers' review committee. "I don't think anyone in the Health Education Department would want to say that homosexuality is normal."

TRICKY SPOT — The driver of this Cadillac said that when he pulled out of a parking lot on Reynolds Road in Winston-Salem Friday he was blinded by the sun. The car's right wheels ran off the road, he said, and then the car climbed a utility pole guy wire. The driver wasn't injured, and a wrecker lifted the car off the wire, with little damage to the wire or the vehicle. 'I hate to think if I had been going 35 mph what would have happened," said the man who refused to give his name. (AP Laserphoto)

Hussey Still Prefers N.C.

ASHEBORO (AP) — Seagrove farmer Rufus Hussey, who made a guest appearance on Johnny Carson's "Tonight Show" Thursday, says California is just too glamorous for him.

"I'll tell you this, I'm not cut out for this," Hussey in a telephone interview with The Asheboro Courier-Tribune Friday. "We've been wearing our overalls. I think the people out here think we're the best dressed people around."

Hussey, clad in overalls, made the television appearance to demonstrate his ability with slingshots, which he has been making since he was 10 years old.

But Hussey, 66, was armed with more than a forked stick. Even though he had never been more than five miles from his Randolph County home, he gave the sharp-witted Carson a taste of homespun humor.

After Hussey told Carson he had watched his show for the first time in December, Carson asked, "Rufus, now what did you think?"

Asking Carson if he wanted the truth, Hussey replied, "I'll tell you, there's room for improvement."

Hussey said Friday he enjoyed being on the show although he'd rather be back home.

"This was just another little job," Hussey said. "He (Carson) is a good'en to talk to."

Carson and Hussey fired at targets, including eggs, during the show and Hussey later shot a corncob out of Carson's trembling hands.

Hussey said he didn't get an opportunity to talk to Carson after the show because Carson was in a big hurry.

"You don't have time for nothing out here," Hussey said. "We're just coming this way one time. We ain't got time to go all over the world."

Officers Acquitted

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A federal jury has acquitted a Cleveland business and three of its officers on charges they attempted to defraud the U.S. government by bribing a Greensboro man out of a Navy pipeline contract.

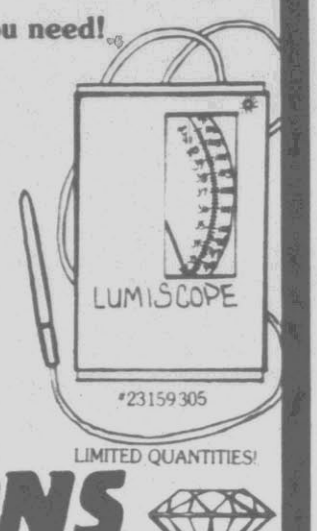

Acquitted were the M.J. Kelley Co. and Kelley executives Edward W. Brown III, the director of marketing; Lee A. Ross, the vice president of marketing and Raymond G. Zetts, the vice president-secretary.

Prosecutors contended the executives offered to pay $157,000 for $117,000 in pumps from Mark Pendergrass of the H.V. Allen Co. in Greensboro.

Assistant U.S. Attorney David B. Smith said the extra $40,000 amounted to a bribe to encourage Pendergrass to withdraw his low bid on the contract. Kelley Co. was the next lowest bidder.

A hazardous chemicals team has been organized within the Fire-Rescue Department in order that officers may be better prepared to respond to chemical fires and disasters. For information, call 752-4137.

Office Issue Draws Criticism

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Legislative leaders sharply criticized the Martin administration Friday for establishing an Eastern Governor's Office in New Bern despite the General Assembly's refusal to fund the office.

Jim Lofton, Martin's executive assistant and staff director, told the Joint Commission on Governmental Operations that through "belt tightening," the Governor's Office had found enough money in its budget to pay for the Eastern Office.

"If that practice goes on in state government, we've got a lot of problems because the Legislature has the power to authorize new programs," said Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell.

Martin promised during his 1984 campaign that if elected he would establish in the East an office similar to the Western Governor's Office in Asheville.

The Western Office was created during former Gov. Jim Hunt's administration because western politicians complained of the great distance their constituents had to travel to discuss their problems with state officials in Raleigh.

Funds for an Eastern Office were included in Martin's proposed budget last year, but the Legislature deleted the expenditure. Top Democratic lawmakers said Raleigh was in eastern North Carolina and privately accused Martin, a Republican, of trying to score political points among eastern voters by establishing the office.

Last November, Martin announced he had found enough money in his office's budget to pay for the Eastern Governor's Office. It was opened in the Jones House, part of the Tryon Palace historic complex.

On Friday, Lofton told the legislative watchdog committee that the Martin administration did not consider the Legislature's refusal to fund the Eastern Office a statement of disapproval of the proposed office.

"It was my understanding that you didn't turn it down, you just didn't fund it," Lofton said.

Asked in an interview whether the Legislature customarily signaled its objection to proposals by denying them funds, House Speaker Liston Ramsey said, "I would certainly think that would be the case."

Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, said state law prohibits shifting of funds among line items in the budget without legislative approval. But Marvin Dorman, deputy state budget director, said no funds were shifted.

Rand, a Fayetteville attorney, also complained that Martin had not made clear what counties were within the Eastern Office's jurisdiction. "Does this serve one part of the East at the expense of the other?" he asked, noting that Fayetteville is closer to Raleigh than to New Bern.

Sen. Russell Walker, D-Randolph, said the Eastern Office — which has two full-time staff members — flew in the face of Martin's hiring restrictions imposed this month to save state funds in light of pending cuts in federal aid to states.

Lofton, however, said the Eastern Office was opened last November, before Martin issued his order that vacant state jobs not be filled unless absolutely necessary.

"I don't think we ought to stop serving the people of North Carolina," Lofton said. "That's not the purpose of the (hiring) slowdown."

Ramsey said he believed the administration had violated "the spirit of the law" by creating the office without legislative authorization. But he said he did not plan to seek legislation ordering that the Eastern Office be closed.

Train's Fate Rests With Budget

RALEIGH (AP) — The Carolinian will be off the track until at least late summer and the passenger train could be derailed entirely if the Reagan Administration proposes the elimination of Amtrack funding in 1986, a state transportation official says.

Amtrak operated the state-subsidized passenger train between Raleigh and Charlotte last year on a 10-month trial basis. The train, which made two daily stops in Durham, also ran between Raleigh and Richmond, providing northbound connections to cities on the East Coast.

Citing heavy losses and budget cuts, Amtrak ended the trial on Labor Day, one month early.

State and Amtrak officials are working on a plan to resume the service on a seven-day basis, David King, director of public transportation for the Department of Transportation said Thursday. But Amtrak cannot make a final decision until the cloudy federal budget picture becomes clearer.

"The future is very much in doubt right now," King said. "The 'ifs' are substantial and they are largely out of state."

Amtrak is facing a 10 percent budget cut this year, King told the Joint Legislative Commission on Governmental Operation Thursday. If mandatory reductions under thee Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction bill are triggered, Amtrak would lose an additional 4.3 percent.

In addition, King said, the Reagan administration has proposed eliminating all Amtrak funding in the past, and is likely to do so again in the proposed budget for 1986.

Because of the budget uncertainty, Amtrak cannot make a final decision on resuming the Carolinian until early March, King said. That would not leave enough time to get the word out and start the train on March 26, the Wednesday before Easter.

Under a proposal being discussed by state and Amtrak officials, the Carolinian would run between Easter and mid-October, or the end of the State Fair. That period is the busiest travel time.

King said after the meeting that the Carolinian could resume service in late summer, if the budget picture clears up and the General Assembly gives a go-ahead in this year's short session.

"It's not out of the question," but the prospects are dim, King said. "The prognosis for getting clarifying statements (out of Washington) in the next 18 months are not very encouraging."

The proposal between Amtrak and the state also calls for the Carolinian to connect with the north-south Palmetto in Rocky Mount. During the trial period, the Carolinian made stops in Henderson and connected with the Palmetto in Richmond.

King said the re-routing will be necessary because Seaboard Railroad is connsidering abandoning it rail line between Henderson and Petersburg, Va.

The new route would save money by cutting about 100 miles from the state-subsidized run, King siad, but it would add about 40 minutes to the travel time to Washington.

As part of the new agreement, the state would reimburse Amtrak $388,625 in three yearly payments. The money would cover 45 percent of the train's operating losses. Including interest, the payment would total $157,000 each year.

The state has no legal obligation to pay Amtrak for the losses under its contract, King said, but Amtrak is insisting on the reimbursement before resuming service.

Amtrak's projections also call for a 15 percent increase in ticket prices, raising the cost of a ticket between Raleigh and Charlotte from a little more than $20 to about $23.

A total of 117,088 passengers rode the Carolinian during the trial, King said, or an average of 378 per day. That was 37 percent higher than projected. But the average trip length was 209 miles, 52 percent less than projected, so the revenues were lower than expected.

Ordinance Sought

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — State and county health officials have begun to press for an ordinance requiring landlords to remove lead-based paint from the walls of problem houses after hazardous levels of lead were found in some Lenoir County children.

Since last April, the Lenoir County Health Department has found 94 children whose bodies had lead levels high enough to warrant monitoring and further testing, officials said. Of those, 50 children had levels considered hazardous and 13 required extensive hospital treatment.

Polls Say Socialists May Lose Elections

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — The French will issue their verdict on five years of socialism March 16. If opinion polls hold up, the voters will decide they have had enough of the left and bring back the conservatives and centrists for another go.

The elections for a new National Assembly, the lower house of the French Parliament, follows earlier voting for municipal governments, the European Parliament, and county representatives, all of which have illustrated the left's eroding support.

It also raises the very real possibility that for the first time since Gen. Charles de Gaulle established the Fifth Republic in 1958 France will be governed by a president of one political color and a 577-member National Assembly of another. The number of seats are being increased in this election from 491 in the outgoing chamber.

In 1981, Socialist Francois Mitterrand was elected to a seven-year term as president. The National Assembly elected a month later, however, has only a five-year mandate. Mitterrand is not required to step down, and he has vowed that he will not.

Two of the main opposition leaders, Mayor Jacques Chirac of Paris and former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, have said they favor "co-habitation" with Mitterrand. A third, former Premier Raymond Barre, contends that the president's policies will have been rejected by the electorate and that he must resign.

With a long string of polls indicating the opposition strongly favored to win, the right has more and more been counting its chickens and the question of "co-habitation" frequently has obscured the issues themselves.

The theme of the left's campaign is that it has not done as badly as many seem to think and that the government's accomplishments must be better explained to the public.

To that end, Mitterrand has departed from the tradition of a president staying off the campaign trail for an election in which he is not a candidate.

In an appearancer Jan. 17 before 10,000 supporters in Grand-Quevilly, Premier Laurent Fabius' political stronghold west of Paris, Mitterrand defended his 5-year-old government's social and economic programs.

"If I had to sum up all that has been accomplished since 1981, I would say: great reforms and good management," Mitterrand said.

He listed as accomplishments a halt to the downward trend in the economy and social legislation that included retirement at age 60, increases in the minimum wage, increases in social security and the extension of paid vacations to a fifth week.

Inflation has dropped from about 12.5 percent to 4.7 percent, although many prices remain controlled and France's balance of payments should be in surplus this year.

The growth of unemployment has stopped for the first time in nearly two decades but still hovers at more than 10.5 percent. The left maintains that its austerity program is now beginning to bear fruit and re-election would allow the government to continue with a coherent program.

The right, however, claims the government has failed economically, that growth has remained stagnant and that the Socialists have been unable to get a handle on unemployment. The right wants to reduce taxes, de-nationalize many government-run industries and reduce the bureaucracy.

If the right seems sure of its victory, the left appeared defeatest at the outset of the campaign, illustrated by the Socialist Party's billboard theme, "Help, the right is coming back!"

In previous campaigns, the right has waved the red flag, raising the fear of a Communist role in the government. This time, the left is waving a flag of another color, saying the opposition cannot form a solid majority in the National Assembly without the extreme right National Front.

The Socialist goal is to win at least 30 percent of the vote in the hope of blocking any effective majority by the two main opposition parties: the conservative Rally for the Republic and the centrist Union for French Democracy.

Because of their break with the Communists two years ago, the Socialists would be unable to form a governing majority on the left, but with a large enough block of seats, they hope to nibble away at extreme left and centrist deputies and force the right to taint itself by dealing with the National Front.

The right appears confident it will win a majority of its own and its leadership has said it will not work with the extreme right.

The big question is how much of the vote will go to the myriad of minor parties and, equally important, how big the abstention rate will be.

Mitterrand, before going on the campaign trail in mid-January, made frequent highly political radio and television appearances.

Premier Fabius, whose popularity has been plummeting, has taken to the road with a number of other government ministers to support and explain the record of the Socialist government.

The right is fighting on two fronts — against the left as well as divisions within its own ranks. It hopes to stop a hemorrhage of votes to the National Front, which has announced a goal of 15 percent.

Army Says TCE Found

DENVER (AP) — Reversing earlier statements, the Army has admitted it found a poisonous chemical at the Rocky Mountain Arsenal five months before reports disclosed the chemical had polluted nearby drinking wells.

Until Friday, Army officials had claimed the toxic solvent TCE was discovered only after The Denver Post reported in July that the chemical had contaminated wells suplying 30,000 people in the South Adams County Water District.

It was in November, four months after the Post report, that the Army disclosed its finding of TCE in the arsenal's groundwater.

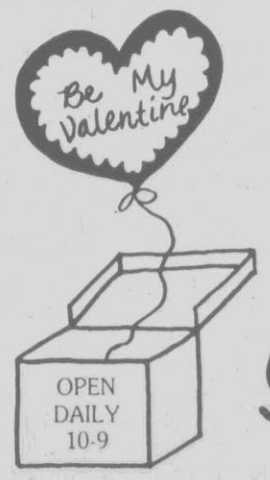

On Friday, however, arsenal spokeswoman Mary Ekis said the Army had the first test results from well samples last February. The results were buried in a mass of arsenal information placed on computer tapes and were not recovered until Thursday, she said.

Army officials said they did not have "a good answer" for why they took so long to disclose their findings after the July report.

TCE, or trichloroethylene, is widely used as a degreaser. It can damage the nervous system, kidneys and liver in humans and causes cancer in mice.

Kids Rejoin Parents After Program Airs In Alabama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — A 4-year-old boy got reacquainted with his father Saturday after a television show on missing children prompted the youth's mother to end three years of trying to hide him from private detectives.

The reunion of Christopher Fulmer and his father, Scott Fulmer, was the second in Birmingham to result from NBC's broadcast Wednesday night of "Missing: Have You Seen This Person?"

On Friday, a Kentucky woman got to hug her 5-year-old son, who had been missing for a year until he was discovered in Birmingham with his father.

Debra Denise Halpern gave Christopher Fulmer to her ex-husband at his attorney's office here Friday. Fulmer, who won custody of the boy in a divorce, said his ex-wife and son disappeared during a routine visit in September 1982.

Asked why she returned the child, Mrs. Halpern said, "He kept asking questions, wanting to know about his dad. He needs to know his father."

She said she had explained to Christopher that if he ever saw his father, he could no longer live with her. "Christopher understands he will be staying with his dad now," she said.

Fulmer's attorney, John Martin Galese, said Mrs. Halpern decided to end her odyssey after a drawing of Christopher and a photo of her were shown on television.

Mrs. Halpern, 25, has been charged her with kidnapping and interference with the custody of a child. She was released on $20,000 bond, police said Saturday.

Mrs. Halpern would not say where she lived last, but said she had remarried and then divorced since her divorce from Fulmer.

Fulmer, 26, a fire department paramedic, said he spent $75,000 hiring private investigators to track his ex-wife and child through Alabama, Wisconsin, Tennessee and Florida, but the investigators were always about two weeks behind them.

He said that when his wife first contacted him after the television show, "we thought this was some kind of trick."

After taking his son home Friday, Fulmer told him: "You know what your daddy does? He's a fireman. You want to ride on a fire truck?"

The child broke into a grin and nodded his head.

"I missed you, yes I have missed you for a long time," Fulmer said as he pushed back tears.

Earlier Friday, Jennifer Lee Studer of Covington, Ky., was reunited with her 5-year-old son, Benjamin Lee Studer, who disappeared on Jan. 5, 1985. The boy recognized his picture on the "Missing" program and told his babysitter, who notified police. That led to the arrest of his father, Benjamin Lester Studer, at a Birmingham bowling alley where he worked.

Studer, 33, was free on $2,500 bond on a kidnapping charge.

'Prizzi's Honor' Leads Globe Winners

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — "Prizzi's Honor," a movie about love and misdeeds in the Mafia, captured four top honors Friday at the 43rd annual Golden Globe Awards, while the lush "Out of Africa" won three awards.

Whoopi Goldberg, the standup comic, won best dramatic actress for her role as the heroine of "The Color Purple." The surprise win drew shouts and applause from the 1,100 guests at the Beverly Hilton dinner and television show.

The NBC television series "The Golden Girls" and "Miami Vice" each won two awards.

"Prizzi's Honor" won the best motion picture-comedy or musical category, while John Huston won best director for the movie.

Jack Nicholson won best actor in a musical or comedy movie for his role as the lovestruck Mafia soldier in the film. Kathleen Turner won best actress in the same category for her portrayal of Nicholson's deadly wife and partner in crime.

"Out of Africa" won three awards for best dramatic film, Klaus Maria Brandauer for best supporting dramatic actor and John Barry for best original score.

Meg Tilly won best supporting actress for a movie role for her portrayal of a disturbed young nun in the film "Agnes of God," about the murder of a newborn child in a convent.

Lionel Richie won best original song for a motion picture for his "Say You Say Me" from "White Knights."

Woody Allen won a best motion picture screenplay Golden Globe for writing "The Purple Rose of Cairo." An Argentine film, "The Official Story," won best foreign language film.

The last presenter was Bette Davis, who strode to the stage with a vigor belying rumors that she was terribly ill. She acknowleged the ovation and commented:

"Until this very moment, I hadn't realized how much I missed applause in the year's I've been gone."

Barbara Stanwyck drew cheers when introduced by Kirk Douglas as winner of the Foreign Press Association's Cecil B. DeMille Award for meritorious service to films.

In a rare tie, Estelle Getty and Cybill Shepherd each won for the category of best peformance by an actress in a television series, Miss Getty for her role in NBC-TV's "The Golden Girls" and Miss Shepherd for ABC's "Moonlighting."

"The Golden Girls" about four retired women, also won best television series — musical or comedy.

Don Johnson won best television drama actor for his role as street-smart and stylish Detective Sonny Crockett in "Miami Vice." Edward James Olmos won best supporting actor in a dramatic television series for his role as Johnson's superior, Lt. Martin Castillo.

Sharon Gless won a Golden Globe for best actress in a dramatic television series for her role as Det. Christine Cagney in the CBS-TV series.

Bill Cosby won best peformance by an actor in a television series for his role as the patriarch of a kinetic Brooklyn family in NBC-TV's "The Cosby Show." Cosby, who has in the past asked not to be considered for awards, was not on hand to receive his Golden Globe.

Dustin Hoffman won a Golden Globe for best performance in a movie or mini-series made for television for his portrayal of the broken-down Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman."

Liza Minelli won in the actress television movie or mini-series category for her portrayal of a mother taking care of a dying child in "A Time To Live."

"The Jewel In The Crown," a PBS series about the decay of British rule in India, won best mini-series or motion picture made for television.

Sylvia Sydney won a best supporting actress award in a television series, mini-series or movie for her role as an understanding grandmother in "An Early Frost," a television movie about an attorney who contracts AIDS.

The awards by the Hollywood Foreign Press Association, which divide films and star performance into two categories — drama and comedy-musical — are not an exact replica of the Oscars, but often they give an accurate indication of awards to come.

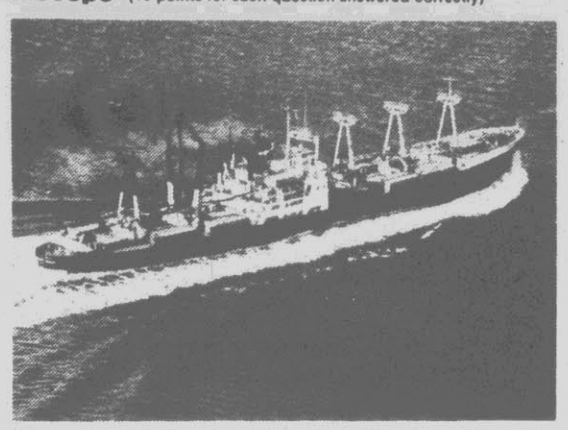

Charlton Heston and Donna Mills were emcees of the two-hour show, televised live in Los Angeles and 11 other cities, mostly in the West, and taped for broadcast in 80 markets Saturday. The two-hour show is syndicated by the Dick Clark Company.

Ark. Pileup Kills Eight

MARION, Ark. (AP) — Two tractor-trailers crumpled like accordions and a car was crushed in a 27-vehicle, chain-reaction pileup in dense fog Saturday that killed eight people and injured more than a dozen, police said.

"We kept hearing bang, bang, bang. There was a car horn blowing and then we could hear the screaming," said Marion Earnest, manager of a service station near the highway.

The series of accidents on Interstate 55 about four miles north of West Memphis, Ark., began about 9:30 a.m., said state police officer Howard Smith.

The highway, which is across the Mississippi River from Memphis, Tenn., and runs parallel with the river into southeastern Missouri, was expected to remain closed through the night. Large industrial cranes were sent in to clear the debris.

Fog had formed rapidly west of Marion during the morning.

The vehicles included eight tractor-trailer rigs loaded with pipe, wire, and charcoal, Patterson said. Two trailers were crumpled together and burned.

Soviet Economy Fell Short In Some Areas

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet oil output fell sharply in 1985 for the second straight year and industrial targets also were missed for steel, mineral fertilizers and plastics, according to economic statistics published Saturday. But overall industrial output achieved the planned 3.9 percent increase over 1984 and production of consumer goods rose by 6 percent, according to the partial statistics released by the oficial Tass news agency.

The agency reported a 3.1 percent increase, to 567 billion rubles or about $745 billion at the official exchange rate, in a figure called "national income used for consumption and accumulation."

The Soviet Union does not publish an equivalent of the Western concept of a gross national product.

Tass said per capita income rose by 2.5 percent, to about 525 rubles, or $693, per year and the average monthly industrial wage climbed from the equivalend of $344 to $353.

Figures for oil production showed output plunged to 3.77 billion barrels from the 3.89 billion achieved in 1984. That year saw the first overall drop in Soviet oil production since World War II, down from 3.91 billion barrels in 1983.

The Soviet Union is the world's largest oil producer and has traditionally earned hard currency to pay for grain and other imports with sales of oil and gas abroad.

Tass reported the targets for natural gas had been met. It gave no figures, but natural gas production was targeted at 630 billion cubic meters a year in 1981, the first year of the five-year plan that ended on Dec. 31.

The natural gas industry has performed well in recent years. The oil industry, by contrast, has come under repeated criticism, with a number of heads of oil-related ministries being replaced in the past year.

Soviet newspapers have published frequent articles criticizing performance in the Tyumen region of western Siberia, which produces some 60 percent of Soviet oil.

Tass said the increase in total industrial output was achieved by a 4.6 percent growth in the second half of 1985, 50 percent more than the growth rate for the first half of the year.

Communist Party leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who took power in March, and other Soviet officials criticized the slack performance in early 1985.

They said the unusually severe winter of 1984-85 was only partly to blame and asked industrial and agricultural workers to make better preparations for this winter.

There has been no official indication yet whether an unusually snowy winter, coupled with dramatic temperature fluctuations, is affecting economic performance now.

For the fifth straight year the Soviets did not release their grain production figure. Tass said only that "the supply of grain to the state in 1985 completely secures the supply of the country's population with bread and flour products."

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has estimated the 1985 harvest at roughly 190 million tons, while the Soviets have said they are aiming for annual harvests of up to 250 million tons. They make up the shortfall, mostly in animal fodder, by importing grain from the United States and other countries.

Tass said engineering was one field which made "particularly fast progress" in 1985, and reported without further detail that targets were met in the production of industrial robots, automobiles, grain and cotton harvesters and computers.

Other industries meeting their goals included the gas, coal, metal ore branches and some non-ferrous metals, the agency said.

Tap Water Safe Again

CATAWBA, Ohio (AP) — A year after residents of this western Ohio village were told not to drink the water because of nitrate contamination, they were able to turn on their taps last week and get fresh, clean water from new wells.

"Thank God it's over with," Mayor Marvin Ballard said as he prepared to push the button starting the pumps on the two new wells in this village about 30 miles west of Columbus.

For almost a year, the approximately 350 residents were asked to drink bottled water because of nitrate levels up to four times what is considered safe. A Springfield dairy supplied the bottled water for free.

Ballard said he asked adults to abstain from drinking tap water because he was afraid that children, who are most affected by nitrates, might imitate them.

Experts say nitrates, which can get into groundwater from fertilizer that washes off farm fields during rain, from animal waste and from other sources, can cause a rare disease called methemoglobonimeia in little children. In addition, nitrates may possibly combine with other chemicals in the body to form substances that cause cancer.

About two months ago, nitrate in the water from the old 37-foot-deep wells next to Buck Creek dropped to safe levels and the bottled water was stopped, Ballard said. But the new wells, on a hill and about 360 feet deep, were still needed as a permanent solution to the contaminant problem, he said.

The Ohio Environmental Protection Agency has not been able to find the source of the contamination in the old water system.

"They've throwed it around that it was a cattle lot up the creek, that it was nitrates running off farm fields. But we've never had any problem until they dynamited the bridge down the road there," he said, motioning toward a reconstructed highway bridge over the creek, about 10 yards from the 30-year-old wells.

Some residents said they appreciated the new wells, but didn't understand all the hoopla.

"To tell you the truth, I've been drinking it all along," Nancy Douglas said. Postmaster Donna Mingus called it "kind of an old topic of conversation at this point."

The new wells and pumping equipment cost about $100,000, Ballard said. About $57,000 of that came from the state and county, and the village took out a loan from the Ohio Water Development Authority for the rest.

Village water bills have gone from $7.05 a month to more than $15 as a result. "I think to get this water and use all you want for another $8 is cheap," Ballard said.

Train Explosion

HONG KONG (AP) — A Communist newspaper said a man trying to commit suicide deliberately detonated an explosion on a Chinese express train, killing himself and six other people.

The Wen Wei Po said authorities identified the man as a 27-year-old farmer from Hunan province in southeastern China, but did not give his name. It said he had an argument with his family, and that he told his wife and girl friend he planned to commit suicide.

The paper said he bought eight pounds of explosives and a fuse and detonated the explosion on a train Jan. 15.

Artist Dies

DUESSELDORF, West Germany (AP) — Joseph Beuys, 64, one of West Germany's leading avant-garde artists, died Thursday of a heart attack.

Beuys specialized in making art objects out of unusual materials, including animal fat, felt and sausages. His artistic "happenings" included filling a piano with washing machine soap, bundling up old newspapers and whispering verses from the poet Johann Wolfgang von Goethe before an audience.

Fighter Equipment Sale To China Eyed

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is asking Congress and U.S. allies to approve its decision to sell about $500 million worth of radar and navigation equipment to China's air force, administration and congressional sources said Friday.

The sale would strengthen U.S. ties with the communist government in Peking but could cause strains with Japan, Taiwan and West European countries who are likely to register objections on security and commercial grounds.

State Department officials briefed the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee behind closed doors in the morning and were scheduled for a similar, secret appearance before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in the afternoon.

Japan is known to be concerned about the purchase of sophisticated military equipment by its giant neighbor, while West Germany and Italy are in avionics competition with American firms and would like to undertake such technology sales themselves, an administration official said.

He said consultation with Japan and the West Europeans, in a grouping known as COCOM, would take several months and that ultimate approval was expected. "Fundamentally, it will all fly," said the official.

In a special gesture, a U.S. delegation will be sent to Tokyo to discuss the projected sale with Japanese leaders, said another official, who also spoke on condition of anonymity. "The Japanese are always sensitive about our relationship with China," he explained.

The equipment is designed to upgrade China's F-8 interceptor planes. The sale, under discussion for at least a year, would be the second since the United States established diplomatic relations with Peking in 1979.

The first was a relatively minor $98 million sale of equipment and a design for China to build a factory for artillery and other ammunition.

The State Department, responding to reports of the deal, said it had been "under consideration for some time." Other officials confirmed the deal had been completed but said formal announcement was being withheld until Congress was consulted.

Taiwan, which keeps a wary eye on the strengthening of U.S. ties with China, has been trying unsuccessfully for years to purchase a squadron of all-weather fighter planes. Despite its conservative politics, the Reagan administration decided in 1982 to sharply reduce U.S. arms assistance to the Nationalist government on the island.

The United States, in establishing relations with Peking, accepted the principle that Taiwan is properly part of China.

Pirates Run Past Mason, 75-67

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Four East Carolina players scored in double-figures Saturday night as the Pirates used a well-balanced attack to offset a quick George Mason University team 75-67 in Colonial Athletic Association basketball action.

The Pirates, who led by as many as 14 points, survived a late George Mason rally which saw the lead dwindle to one to come away with the win.

Guard Curt Vanderhorst led the way with 17 points, while Marchell Henry poured in 15, Leon Bass had 14 and Keith Sledge 12.

Freshmam guard Kenny Sanders came off the bench to lead James Mason with 20 points. Rob Rose had 12 and Ricky Wilson 11 in a losing effort.

The Pirates shot a torrid 63 percent from the field and made 85 percent from the line, most of them coming late in the contest.

East Carolina head coach Charlie Harrison liked the shooting of his Pirates but said there was a reason.

"We took high percentage shots throughout the game. We were taking good shots," he said, adding that the guards used "improved passing angles" to get the ball inside for the shots.

"We played hard, and we did some nice things when we had to do them," he said.

Harrison cited the work of point guard Scott Hardy, who tallied eight points and handed off three assists, as one of the mainstays in the victory.

"Scotty did a good job of handling the ball" against the full-court press used by the Patriots, Harrison said.

George Mason pressed the Pirates throughout the game, but Harrison said ECU was ready.

"We prepared the last few days against the various presses they like to use, so we were ready," he said. "We handled the press and the traps and knew where they were coming from."

The game see-sawed back and forth in the first few minutes and George Mason pulled ahead 8-6 on 10-foot jumper by Kenny Sanders. That was the last time the Patriots led.

With just over 15 minutes remaining in the first half, Leon Bass scored six points in a row as the Pirates went on to score 13 unanswered points to lead 19-8 with 11:21 to play.

ECU stretched the lead to 31-19 on a 14-foot jumper by Vanderhorst with 43 seconds remaining in the half.

Kenny Sanders matched the bucket with a layup to close it to 31-21 with just seconds left on the clock.

Vanderhorst put the Pirates ahead 33-21 at halftime with a layup on a rebound off a shot by Manuel Jones.

The Pirates jumped out to a commanding 52-38 lead on a three-point play by Henry with 10:19 to go in the game.

However, the Pirate lead began to slip away as Sanders led the Patriots back and closed the score to 61-60 on a layup with 1:58 remaining.

Henry sank two free throws with 1:33 left to give the Pirates a 63-60 lead.

The Patriots missed a chance to close the gap when Sanders missed two free-throws.

George Mason missed several crucial free throws in the second half and shot only 36 percent from the charity stripe on the game.

The Pirates upped their lead to 65-60 when Hardy hit both ends of a one-and-one situation, but Sanders brought the Patriots back, 65-63, with a three-point play.

With 57 seconds left, Harrison called a timeout.

"All I told them was that they were going to win and to calm down," he said.

When play resumed, ECU put the game out of reach on two dunks by Jones and two free throws from Sledge.

Miller scored on a layup with 12 seconds but two free throws by Henry countered that. Mosley then hit with five seconds to go, but Vanderhorst's two free throws set the final 75-67 margin.

The Pirates upped their record to 3-3 in the CAA and 8-9 overall.

Meanwhile, George Mason fell to 3-3 in the CAA and 9-9 overall.

ECU hosts James Madison University in another CAA contest Monday night at 7:30 p.m.

Helmick Says Rule Violated

Bob Helmick, former assistant athletic director at East Carolina University, said Saturday that he has turned himself into the NCAA for a violation that occurred during the tenure of former coach Ed Emory.

Helmick, who resigned last fall after serving as the number two man in the ECU Athletic Department for a number of years, said he had no idea he had broken an NCAA rule until he saw former ECU graduate assistant Robbie Barrow on television earlier this week.

Barrow, in the interview, talked about a recruiting trip he and (now assistant coach) Jeff Farrington took to Valdosta, Ga., against NCAA rules. In the ECU report to the NCAA on alleged violations one charge was that former ECU coach Ed Emory used graduate assistants to recruit — not allowed by the NCAA.

Barrow said that Helmick gave him a car and money and was apparently was aware of the purpose of the trip.

Helmick, after seeing the interview, contacted assistant athletic director John Welborn for a clairification of the rule, and was told that he did, indeed, break an NCAA rule.

"I called the NCAA (Friday) to report the violation to them and the guy handling the ECU report said that he would add it to the report and get back with me. I expect to go out there later this week to talk with the NCAA," Helmick said Saturday.

Helmick said that it was standard proceedure on out-of-town football trips by the ECU team to rent several cars to allow coaches to drive to and attend high school football games in the area on Friday nights. The indicdent involving Barrow occurred during an ECU trip to Tallahassee, Fla., to play Florida State.

"Several (full-time assistants) had already gone out when Robbie asked him for the car, and I just never thought about it, but gave him the car and some money for gas."

Lady Pirates Defeat Pats

FAIRFAX, Va. — East Carolina's Lady Pirates, battling not only the road but injuries, pulled out a 72-61 victory over George Mason Saturday night to remain unbeaten in Colonial Athletic Association play.

The Pirates made the two-game trip — they wind up at James Madison Monday — without one starter and their two top reserves. Loraine Foster missed the trip with continuing problems she is suffering following the accident the Lady Pirates were involved in earlier this season. Also missing were Monique Pompili, out with a fractured tailbone, and Chris O'Connor, sidelined following knee surgery. Both of the latter are expected back in a couple of weeks. Foster's absence is a day-to-day situation.

Nevertheless, the Lady Pirates were able to surge past the Lady Patriots for their fifth CAA victory of the season.

That sets up a key meeting with James Madison, also unbeaten in the conference, on Monday night. Madison was the 21st team among those receiving votes on the Associated Press women's poll this past week.

"Foul shooting made a big difference at the end of the game," Coach Emily Manwaring said. ECU made 20 of 27 shots at the stripe for the game. "Overall, it was an offensive rather than a defensive victory. We really ran the ball at 'em."

Manwaring said she was pleased that the Lady Pirates had a well-balanced attack, hitting well from the outside and inside. "I'm very pleased with Therese Durkin's performance in filling in for Loraine tonight," the coach added. "I also thought we got good play from Gretta O'Neal and Jodi Rodriquez, coming off the bench in reserve roles."

East Carolina got off to a slow start in the game, and trailed with 10:54 left, 19-14. But the Lady Pirates picked up the tempo at that point and with 5:06 remaining in the half, had charged into a 29-21 lead, outscoring the Lady Patriots 15-2 over the five-minute period.

They extended that lead to 35-27 at the end of the half. In the second half, the Lady Pirates led all the way to wrap up the win.

Sylvia Bragg led the Lady Pirates with 22 points, while Alma Bethea had 16 and Delphine Mabry added 16. Lisa Squirewell led East Carolina's rebounding effort with a game-high ten.

Wanda Williams and Veronice Gilliard each had 16 points to pace George Mason.

The Lady Pirates are now 15-5 overall and 5-0 in CAA play. George Mason drops to 3-2 in the league and 8-10 overall.

Tar Heels Top Jackets

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — North Carolina's big man, Brad Daugherty, outdueled Georgia Tech's 7-foot John Salley Saturday to lead the top-ranked Tar Heels into first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball race with an 85-77 victory.

Daugherty, a 6-11¾ senior, connected on 10 of 17 short-range shots for 23 points and grabbed 11 rebounds as the Tar Heels snapped No. 4 Georgia Tech's 15-game winning streak and boosted their record to 20-0.

Joe Wolf, a 6-10 junior who had been averaging 8.1 points a game, scored a career-high 22 points as the Tar Heels increased their conference mark to 5-0. The Yellow Jackets dropped to 16-2 and 5-1.

"Nobody said it would be easy, nor did we expect it to be, and it wasn't," North Carolina Coach Dean Smith said. "It doesn't mean a lot in the conference standings. We still have to go to Georgia Tech and to Duke. There's still a lot of basketball left.

"You can never let up against a great team like Georgia Tech. They didn't seem awed by the new building at all. ... We have to thank Steve Hale and Kenny Smith for getting it inside to Joe Wolf and Brad Daugherty."

Wolf made 10 of 11 field goal attempts and pulled down eight rebounds. Salley, a senior, scored 11 points on three-of-seven shooting from the field and grabbed five rebounds.

Smith credited the team's offensive rebounding for a big part in the Tar Heels' 42-31 halftime lead. Georgia Tech also committed 13 of its 17 turnovers in the first half.

Georgia Tech Coach Bobby Cremins said, "I thought we were ready for their trapping defense, but we really didn't handle it well. I thought we handled it very, very poorly.

"I think they are a great team," Cremins added. "They really hurt us inside. They took us out of our offense. The one bright thing is we didn't give up."

Georgia Tech shot 59 percent from the floor to Carolina's 52 percent. But the Tar Heels outrebounded the Yellow Jackets 37-27.

The Tar Heels broke a 16-16 tie and took command for good with a 16-4 spree as North Carolina dominated the boards and capitalized on Yellow Jacket turnovers. Daugherty scored seven points and Wolf five during the run to give North Carolina a 32-20 advantage.

The Tar Heels, beaten three straight times by Tech last year, moved ahead 40-26 and were in front at intermission 42-31.

In the second half, the Tar Heels, with Daugherty's power game inside leading the way, built up their biggest margin at 72-58 as Salley and 6-8 freshman Tommy Hammonds, were ineffective.

Georgia Tech twice closed to within seven points.

Bruce Dalrymple's driving goal cut the deficit to 78-71, but the Georgia Tech forward drew a charging foul on the play, his fifth personal, at 3:16.

The last time Georgia Tech pulled to within seven points, 80-73, was on Mark Price's jumper with about three minutes left.

Freshman Jeff Lebo added 12 points for the Tar Heels.

Price, a senior guard, topped the Yellow Jackets with 22 points, followed by Hammonds with 13, and Duane Ferrell and Salley with 11 apiece.

Hammonds fouled out with 6:36 remaining and Dalrymple with 3:16 left.

North Carolina will play 15th-ranked Notre Dame Sunday.

Wolfpack Outlasts Virginia, 55-53

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina State coach Jim Valvano says he saw freshman Walker Lambiotte grow up a litte Saturday when the Wolfpack defeated Virginia 55-53 in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball.

Before Lambiotte took a shot with 6:28 left, the Wolfpack was three of 14 from the field in the second half and trailed 48-45.

"Everyone could tell — the fans included — that we weren't on fire," Lambiotte said.

But Lambiotte, who finished with 10 points, scored six points over the next two minutes to spark a comeback that lifted N.C. State to a 13-5 and 5-2 record.

"I felt his offensive potential was what we needed at that point," Valvano said. "The kid can shoot, he can take it to the hole. I had some questions (because he was a freshman) whether or not he would do it in that big a game. But he hit the shot and drove inside. I thought it was a remarkable performance for a freshman."

The shots for Lambiotte weren't planned.

"We were running our offense, trying to run the break — it came to me on the wing a couple of times and I felt confident and stuck it," Lambiotte said.

Virginia coach Terry Holland said the two-minute stretch when the freshman took over the Wolfpack offense was Virginia's downfall.

"Lambiotte rebounded one that he put back in," Holland said. "I think that stretch there really hurt us because we could have at least played great defense even though we weren't playing well at the offensive end of the floor."

Dawkins Sparks Blue Devil Win

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

DURHAM (AP) — Johnny Dawkins scored 24 points as No. 2 Duke snapped a two-game Atlantic Coast Conference losing streak with an 80-68 basketball victory over Maryland Saturday night.

Duke went to 17-2 and 5-2 in the ACC. Maryland dropped to 10-8 and suffered its sixth ACC loss without a victory. It was also Maryland's fifth straight loss and dimmed a career-high 41-point performance by Len Bias.

It was the first 40-point effort in an ACC game since Hawkeye Whitney tossed in 43 against Clemson in January 1979.

Bias scored Maryland's first 10 points, but the Blue Devils held an 13-10 edge on a layup by Dawkins at the 15:21 mark. Tony Massenburg's two free throws pulled Maryland to within 13-12, but David Henderson canned a pair of free throws to open a 12-0 spree that left Duke in command, 25-12, with 11:21 left before halftime.

A seven-point run later in the period pushed the Blue Devils to a 38-19 advantage at the 6:53 mark. Duke led 49-31 at halftime.

Duke increased its lead to 53-31 on a Dawkins jumper from the corner almost two minutes into the second half. With Bias leading the way and Duke's shooting going cold, Maryland cut into that deficit and got within 70-60 on two free throws by David Dickerson with 6:10 left. That was as close as Maryland would get.

Bias finished with 14 of 20 from the field and hit all 13 free throws.

Mark Alarie added 17 and David Henderson added 12 for the Blue Devils.

Patriots May Take To Air To Keep Bears Off Balance

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — New England might run less to keep the Chicago Bears from running away with the Super Bowl.

The Patriots, who leaned heavily on their outstanding ground attack to win their first three playoff games, say they are confident they can throw the ball well enough Sunday to upset the Bears.

"Our football team has the capability of being completely balanced," Coach Raymond Berry said.

The Patriots, who pride themselves on consistency of emotion and performance, say they also must have a turnover advantage, control the ball and minimize mistakes against the Bears' top-ranked defense.

"I think it's a misconception to say you can't ever do anything," Berry said. "People have had difficulty doing it (running against the Bears) and we may not be able to do it Sunday. But I never say you can't do anything."

If the Bears blitz often and commit eight people to the rush, they can be burned if quarterback Tony Eason takes a quicker drop and throws short passes to backs and tight ends or bombs to wide receivers in man-to-man coverage.

"That eight-man front puts so much pressure on the running game that it opens them up to that entire spectrum of the passing game," guard Ron Wooten said.

"I don't think we can go at them and just run because if you do that they bring (free safety Gary) Fencik up on the line of scrimmage," said guard John Hannah.

"I don't think a team that goes in without balance has a very good chance of winning," Berry said. "Anytime you get overbalanced you're in danger of getting beat by a better football team."

The Patriots have been overbalanced in the playoffs, averaging 49 runs and 14 passes per game.

"We have all the confidence in the world in Tony (Eason)," running back Tony Collins said. "When the pressure's on he's going to throw the ball and get the job done."

Running the ball against Chicago will not be easy.

The Patriots averaged 170 rushing yards in their three playoff games, including 255 in their AFC Championship victory over the Miami Dolphins. The Bears gave up 82.4 yards per game on the ground during the regular season and 59 in the playoffs.

That puts the burden on a strong offensive line of Brian Holloway, Hannah, Pete Brock, Wooten and Steve Moore. They must get blocking help from tight ends Lin Dawson and Derrick Ramsey and the running backs when Chicago rushes eight men.

"There are probably 27 other teams in the league that would love to have a tandem like Wooten and Moore," said running back Craig James. "They're overshadowed because of Hannah and Holloway."

The offensive line, Berry said, "is where games are won and lost every week. It starts with your big boys up front. In this particular game, we're up against the best defense in the league, so obviously our offensive line will be critical to our success."

Although Chicago led the NFL in rushing defense, Collins said the Patriots won't give up on their ground game if it doesn't work early.

"We're going to keep pounding them," he said. "We've been a second-half team and we wear teams down in the fourth quarter."

The Patriots had a 16-4 advantage in turnovers in the playoffs. The Bears lost just 31 turnovers during the regular season and led the NFL with 54 takeaways.

The discipline of the Patriots' defensive front seven against mobile quarterback Jim McMahon is important. So is field position.

"If you've got 20 yards to go, it's easier to score," said wide receiver Cedric Jones.

When the Patriots take possession near their own goal line, they could accomplish two things by moving the ball well — scoring and keeping it away from McMahon and running back Walter Payton.

For Chicago, Super Bowl Outcome Is On 'The Line'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Chicago Bears are putting their Super Bowl hopes on the line — literally.

"The key will be up front," said Bears Coach Mike Ditka. "Their offensive line against our defensive line and vice versa."

Simply put, the Bears must do two things to beat the New England Patriots:

—Overpower the Patriots' renowned offensive line to pressure quarterback Tony Eason and stop the New England running backs.

—Protect Chicago quarterback Jim McMahon, who has been nursing a tender backside this week, and give Walter Payton room to run.

That comes down to a bruise battle.

"This is not just another game," Ditka said. "This is the Super Bowl. It will be one of the most physical games we'll play all year."

McMahon's conduct — prowling Bourbon Street and mooning helicopters — has been zany to say the least, but he remains the key to the Bears' chance for a victory.

His aching lower back and sore left buttock have responded to acupuncture treatment, much to Ditka's delight.

"He looked good and he was moving well," Ditka said late in the week. "He should be 100 percent by Sunday. I'm happy to see that."

Has McMahon's conduct brought on added pressure? When the final quarter ends, will he have left his game in the French Quarter?

"Pressure is not a bad thing if you can handle it," Ditka said. "If Jim has created pressure, he can deal with it."

Payton, the NFL's all-time leading rusher, can control the tempo of the game with his running once the Bears have taken a lead. But McMahon has to provide that lead.

Payton rushed for 93 yards in the playoff victory over the Giants, but it was McMahon who put the Bears in front with touchdown passes of 23 and 20 yards to Dennis McKinnon.

Payton gained only 32 yards in the triumph over the Rams, but it was McMahon who scored on a 16-yard broken pass play and it was McMahon who locked it up with a 22-yard touchdown pass to Willie Gault.

McMahon and the Bears also must guard against turnovers.

"Both teams got here on defense," Ditka said. "Both teams do not have flashy offenses. Both teams thrive on turnovers."

While the Patriots were scoring their three playoff victories on the road by intercepting passes and recovering fumbles, the Bears have had only one turnover in their two playoff games — and that one was a fluke when a punt hit a Chicago player.

McMahon has not thrown an interception in the playoffs. During the season and as in most of his career, he has more touchdown passes than interceptions. During the regular season he had 15 touchdown passes against 11 interceptions.

But he has been injury prone throughout his career. Last season he missed the last seven games and the playoffs because of a lacerated kidney.

This season he did not start in five games because of various ailments.

When McMahon does not play, he is replaced by Steve Fuller, and the Bear offense becomes less imaginative.

Ditka, though, promises not to abandon his biggest innovation this year.

He said 300-pound-plus William "The Refrigerator" Perry could see action on offense.

"We could use him in goal-line situations, but we will not use him in short-yardage situations."

When he's not on offense, Perry is part of the defense, the team's strong point.

The Bear defense, led by middle linebacker Mike Singletary and rushing linemen Richard Dent and Dan Hampton, will be seeking a third straight playoff shutout.

And Bear linebacker Otis Wilson, caught up in the unbelievable crush of media questions, has predicted just that.

"There have never been three shutouts in a row in the playoffs," Wilson said.

No Retirement For Petty

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

Richard Petty says he's as serious about stock car racing as he has ever been.

Petty, 48, is preparing for his 28th season of racing on NASCAR's premier circuit. But, even though he's coming off major gall bladder surgery, "The King" of stock car racing claims that thoughts of retirement rarely enter his mind.

"I'll keep doing it as long as I feel good doing it, as long as it's a challenge and as long as I think I can be competitive," said Petty, who leads all NASCAR stock car drivers with 200 victories, seven championships and seven Daytona 500 wins.

The challenge for Petty in the upcoming season are numerous.

First, he has put the family team, Petty Enterprises, back together after an upheaval that lasted several years and saw Petty leave, his son, Kyle, leave and, finally, brother Maurice close the doors after failing to come up with sponsorship in 1985.

Richard has reopened the shops in Level Cross, N.C., hired a new crew and engine builder and brought back long-time team manager Dale Inman, his first cousin. Inman was one of the catalysts in the long-running success of the Petty team prior to 1983, when things began to turn sour. His leaving that year was part of the downfall of the team.

If he needs more of a challenge, it could be that Petty, who spent the last two seasons driving for Mike Curb, has not won a race since the Firecracker 400 in July 1984, when he took his 200th victory in front of President Reagan at Daytona International Speedway.

And the team will be trying to win with a brand new car — Pontiac's downsized Grand Prix 2+2.

"This year is no different than any of the 27 seasons," said Petty. "You start the year with two major goals: the Daytona 500 and the Winston Cup championship."

Petty has not won the season-opening race at Daytona since 1981 or the championship since 1979.

"We're a lot better off than we were last year with this new Pontiac," he said. "But we're going to have to wait until we get to Daytona for qualifying to really see what everyone is running. Practice times aren't always a true indication. Plus, we need to wait to see what Bill (Elliott) and Cale (Yarborough) run. They are still going to be the ones to watch."

Elliott, the defending Daytona 500 champion, set a qualifying record of 205.115 mph at the 2.5-mile track last year. That launched him and his Ford Thunderbird on a season that saw 11 poles, 11 victories, an all-time stock car qualifying record of 209.358 and an unprecedented $2.4 million in earnings.

Yarborough, a three-time Winston Cup champion and always a top competitor, switched to Fords last season and struggled through an inconsistent year. Now, Yarborough and crew chief-engine builder Waddell Wilson say they have caught up to Elliott.

But Petty is making progress, too. With the new car, it's rear window sloped far more aerodynamically than the Pontiacs he was driving last year, Petty has topped 200 mph at Daytona for the first time. In winter testing, he has hit 202.474.

Best of all, though, Petty says the car is not only faster but more comfortable to drive at high speed

"We feel real good about this new car," Petty said. "I think it's going to run three or four miles an hour faster just because the wind resistance is improved by that back glass. And we'll get another mile or two from better engines.

"These new (General Motors) cars are going to all be more stable at 200 than the cars were last year at 195. Last year, going through the turns, we had a lot of lift on the back of the car. You'd be going 195 or so and the (rear) wheels would come right off the ground. This year, those sloped windows are putting a lot more weight (downforce) on the back wheels.

"But all that means is that we'll be three or four mile an hour behind (Elliott and Yarborough) than seven or eight like we were last year."

But Petty is not nearly as pessimistic as he would have you believe. When he talks about Daytona, his eyes light up.

Qualifying begins Saturday, Feb. 8, with the race on Sunday, Feb. 16.

"It seems every time I win the 500, I have a good year," Petty said. "And I want to win another championship."

Time For Talking Is Over

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jim McMahon Week is over. Now it's time to see if it's Jim McMahon Day.

A week ago, the plot for Super Bowl XX looked simple. The upstart New England Patriots would try to cap an unexpected climb from the NFL pack by beating the unbeatable Chicago Bears in a collision of masses resembling the Super Bowl week crush on Bourbon Street.

Instead, it's simply the climax to a multi-ring extravaganza starring the Chicago quarterback, featuring the hitherto anonymous duo of Hiroshi Shiraishi and Buddy Diliberto, and relegating last week's heroes — Walter Payton, Irving Fryar and even the Refrigerator — to supporting roles.

The Super Bowl became a sideshow to the McMahon show.

Patriots quarterback Tony Eason provided a measure of suspense when he came down with a 24-hour virus and missed workouts Friday and Saturday, though he threw a couple of passes in street clothes on Saturday. Coach Raymond Berry said Eason will start "if he can."

"His conditioning is encouraging," Berry said. About Sunday, the coach said, "We'll just have to wait and see."

The game itself presents the same contrast it has since the principals were decided two weeks ago.

The NFC is represented by the mighty Bears, 17-1, including two straight playoff shutouts, 10½-point favorites and unarguably the NFL's most dominant team this year. Their main weapon: Buddy Ryan's unique "46" defense, which can throw the best-honed offense into chaos.

The AFC is represented by the Patriots, first team to get to the Super Bowl by winning three straight road games. They did it because they forced 16 turnovers and because some higher power bounced the ball in the right direction at the right time.

They'll probably need both the turnovers and the higher power on Sunday.

But this past week has belonged to McMahon, the Chicago quarterback who peers (and often sneers) at the world through tinted glasses and who counts among his heroes Randle Patrick McMurphy, protagonist of "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest."

"Everyone thought he was crazy, but he wasn't," McMahon says. "That's the way I am. I'm just trying to be myself. There's nothing calculated about me. I don't sit around and think up all these weird things. They just happen."

They began happening Monday evening when McMahon arrived for the sixth Super Bowl to be held in New Orleans, a city that traditionally surrounds the NFL's championship game with the atmosphere of a fraternity party at Mardi Gras time.

He was already an established flake for his shades and headbands and his habit of saying "no" when the rest of the world was saying "yes." The reputation was enhanced when he flashed on national television during the Rams game a "Rozelle" headband to protest an order by the NFL commissioner to shed a headband bearing the advertising logo "adidas."

Predictably, "Rozelle" headbands were the hottest-selling souvenir in the French Quarter this week, while jerseys bearing Payton's "34" and William Perry's "72" hung limply on the racks.

McMahon's first task was to complain that the Bears' management had refused to fly in an acupuncturist who had been treating a buttock bruised by the helmet of Los Angeles linebacker Jim Collins in Chicago's 24-0 shutout of the Rams in the NFC championship game. His second was to head for Bourbon Street in the French Quarter, where he took advantage of the Bears' last night without a curfew, interrupting the party to hassle with a photographer who tried to take his picture.

Shiraishi, the official acupuncturist of the Japanese track team, was finally permitted to come to town on Wednesday. Almost immediately, McMahon reported the injury 100 percent improved.

But that was only one development in a week in which as many reporters clustered around an empty chair waiting for McMahon to appear as clustered around the other 44 Bears combined. It left Payton, the NFL's leading all-time rusher, and William "The Refrigerator" Perry, the NFL's leading all-time media phenomenon, to tell their tales to relatively few.

It left Fryar, the New England speedster whose sliced little finger had created a McMahon-like stir before the AFC title game, almost forgotten.

There was McMahon mooning a helicopter ("I wanted to show them where it hurts," he said); there was McMahon leading, Pied Piper style, a parade down Bourbon Street; and there was the report by Diliberto, a New Orleans sportscaster, that McMahon had allegedly called New Orleans women "sluts."

Diliberto publicly apologized for airing "unverified statements" and was indefinitely suspended by his station. But it didn't keep a group of two dozen women from picketing the Bears' hotel and several citizens from telephoning threats to McMahon.

All this kept most minds off football, the main order of business Sunday. Coach Mike Ditka said it may have even relaxed the Bears.

"I think it was a sane week," said Ditka, himself something of a hell-raiser during his playing days.

"All the McMahon stuff took the pressure off Payton and Perry. Now if he took off Wednesday night to rob a McDonald's — that's a lack of sanity."

When attention finally turned to football, the major question was whether anything could be done to keep the hurtling bodies of Otis Wilson, Richard Dent, Dan Hampton and Mike Singletary from pounding the relatively inexperienced Eason into the turf. That's what happened the second week of the season, when the Bears beat the Pats 20-7 at Chicago's Soldier Field and that's what Wilson implied would happen Sunday when he brashly predicted a shutout.

The answer to that seemed to lie in the New England offensive line, featuring guard John Hannah, who may be the best ever to play the game. In a matchup worth the $75 ticket, he will often be head-to-head with the 300-pound Perry, who made it to the world of commercials by carrying the ball but whose future depends on muscling his way around the Hannahs to get to the Easons.

Hannah and his cohorts, one of the top offensive lines in the NFL, must move out the league's stingiest defense to make room for running backs Craig James and Tony Collins. And they must give Eason time to find his wide receivers in a secondary often left in one-on-one coverage by Ryan's blitzes. They didn't in the first game — New England ran for just 27 yards.

"That's where the game will be won or lost. Our front five against their front," says Eason, who threw just 12 passes in the 31-14 win over Miami that gave the Patriots the AFC championship. Meanwhile, the Patriots gained 255 yards on the ground.

The Chicago offense features Payton, Payton and Payton plus the improvisational play of McMahon, whose demeanor on the field is often as unpredictable as his demeanor off it. In the Rams game, he threw out a draw play sent in from the bench and rolled out to throw a 22-yard touchdown pass to Wilie Gault.

"I'm not sure even he knows what he'll do from one minute to the next," Ditka says. "He tells me he shocks himself sometimes."

But McMahon must have room to improvise and Payton must have room to ramble, and that depends, once again, on the bodies up front — Jimbo Covert, Keith Van Horne, Mark Bortz, Tom Thayer and Jay Hilgenberg.

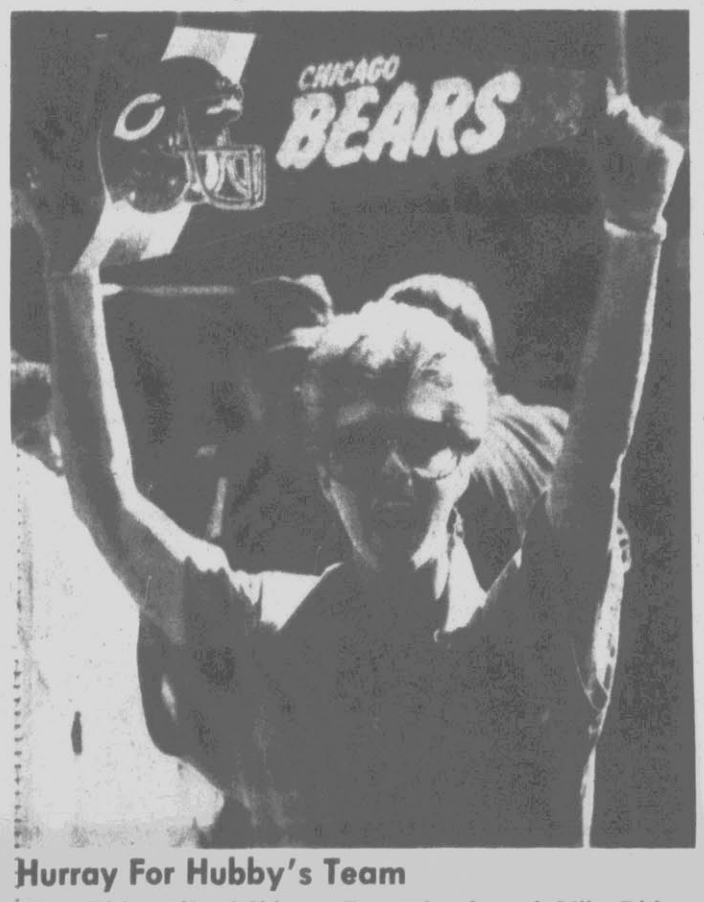

They'll be facing a much more conventional defense than their own, one that has allowed more than two touchdowns just three times in the last 14 games. New England, which finished with an 11-5 regular-season record, has won 12 of those, including road wins over the New York Jets, Los Angeles Raiders and Dolphins in the playoffs, the last to break an 18-game losing streak at the Orange Bowl.

At the heart of that defense are the linebackers — Andre Tippett, Don Blackmon, Steve Nelson and Larry McGrew, nearly as intimidating a group as the Chicago defense.

They're looking forward to an alley fight with the Bears' front.

"I know some of those guys," says Tippett, who played at Iowa with Bortz and Hilgenberg. "Basically, they're all fighters. If I had to go into a shady area with them, I wouldn't worry because they wouldn't run out on me.

"You look at the Super Bowl and you know it's going to be a physical game."

Clemson Rallies Past Slow Deacs

By RICK SCOPPE
Associated Press Writer

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Clemson used its superior height and speed to rally against Wake Forest's slow-down offense, but it took some clutch free throw shooting to carry the Tigers over the top.

Glen McCants hit two foul shots and Grayson Marshall made one in the final minute as the Tigers rallied to defeat Wake Forest 46-43 in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game Saturday.

"I thought Wake Forest controlled the ball in the first half," Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said. "We were not as patient as we needed to be. We forced some things from the outside.

"In the second half, we were more patient and moved the ball inside without forcing it. We held our composure in the second half," Ellis added. "It was important for our confidence to win this close basketball game."

Wake Forest coach Bob Staak said his club executed its controlled offense well, but its 39.6 percent shooting from the field was the difference in the game. Clemson hit 57.1 percent from the floor.

"We started out slow in the second half, but we basically did everything we wanted to do in the game," said Staak, who is still searching for his first ACC victory. "It just didn't work out.

"Today the difference was that we didn't make our shots," he said. "We're not going to make every shot — we make every shot, we win going away."

McCants, who scored a career-high and game-high 18 points, swished both ends of a one-and-one free throw opportunity with 52 seconds left to give Clemson a 45-43 lead.

After a Wake Forest turnover, Horace Grant, who had 12 points, missed the front end of a one-and-one with 17 seconds left. But Mark Cline, who led Wake Forest with 12 points, missed a jumper with 12 seconds left and fouled Marshall.

Marshall hit the front end of a one-and-one with nine seconds left as the Tigers rallied from a 23-18 halftime deficit to run their record to 13-5 and 2-3 in the ACC.

Wake Forest fell to 6-13 and 0-8.

The Demon Deacons trailed by as many as eight points in the first half, but outscored the Tigers 17-4 over the final 12 minutes — including a 10-point run in which Clemson went scoreless for nearly nine minutes — to grab a five-point halftime lead.

The teams exchanged leads seven times in the first 15½ minutes of the second half before Grant's short baseline jumper gave the Tigers a 40-39 lead with 4:37 left.

The Demon Deacons tied the score at 43-43 with 1:12 left on a jumper by Rod Watson before the Tigers hit their free throws.

Larry Middleton added 10 points for the Tigers.

Virginia Tech (20).....86
Florida State.....73

BLACKSBURG, Va. (AP) — Dave Burgess' dunk with 4:53 remaining put Virginia Tech ahead for good and the 20th-ranked Hokies, who blew a 19-point second half lead, went on to defeat Florida State's Seminoles 86-73 in a Metro Conference basketball game Saturday.

The Hokies improved to 16-3 overall and 3-1 in the conference while the Seminoles fell to 7-10, 1-3.

Virginia Tech led 38-31 at intermission and opened the second half with a 14-2 surge to take a 52-33 lead with 15:05 remaining.

But the Seminoles, switching to a zone defense that cooled off the Hokies, battled back to take a 66-65 lead on Pee Wee Barber's jumper with 5:10 remaining.

That lead was short-lived, however, as Burgess' score 17 seconds later put Virginia Tech ahead to stay, and the Hokies pulled away down the stretch.

Guard Dell Curry paced the Hokies with 26 points, nine rebounds and five assists. Bobby Beecher added 20 points and 10 rebounds and Keith Colbert scored 14 points.

Barber led the Seminoles with 26 points followed by Raleigh Choice with 20 and Jerome Fiutchett with 10 points and 10 rebounds.

The Hokies controlled the boards 42-38.

Kansas (7).....71
Louisville (13).....69

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — After spending almost the entire first half on the bench, Greg Dreiling fueled a second half rally that brought seventh-ranked Kansas a 71-69 nonconference college basketball victory Saturday over Louisville.

Dreiling scored 18 second-half points for the Jayhawks, the last two on a pair of free throws with 1:14 left in the game that provided the margin of victory.

Kansas Coach Larry Brown pulled the 7-1 senior center after he picked up two quick fouls in the first 21 seconds of the game and the Jayhawks fell behind.

Senior guard Milt Wagner of Louisville, who led all scorers with 23 points, gave the Cardinals a 13-point lead at 28-15 with 6:43 left in the half, after stealing the ball and driving the length of the court for a basket.

Ron Kellogg, who led Kansas with 19 points, brought the Jayhawks to within five at 36-31 on a long shot at the first half buzzer. After a tip-in by Archie Marshall with six seconds to go, Louisville lost the ball out of bounds with one second on the clock.

Kellogg, standing in front of the Louisville bench, brought the Allen Field House crowd to its feet with a 25-foot swisher.

The victory improved Kansas to 19-2.

The 13th-ranked Cardinals, who lost to Kansas 83-78 in the semifinals of the Big Apple NIT Tournament earlier this season, are 11-6.

St. John's (8).....68

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Walter Berry poured in 34 points, 22 in the second half, as eighth-ranked St. John's rallied from a 15-point deficit to edge Pittsburgh 68-67 Saturday in the Big East Conference.

Ron Rowan hit a 15-foot baseline jumper with 1:06 to play for the winning basket as the Redmen, 19-2, won for the 17th time in 18 games after rebounding from a 22-7 first-half Pitt lead.

Rowan's basket made it 68-66 before Keith Armstrong cut the Redmen's lead to one point by making one of two free throws with 41 seconds left. St. John's then ran the clock down to 11 seconds before Rowan missed the front end of a 1-and-1.

Pitt rebounded, but Demetreus Gore missed a 22-foot shot with three seconds left, preserving St. John's sixth victory in seven Big East games. Pitt fell to 13-6 overall and 4-4 in the Big East in losing for the first time in nine home games this season.

St. John's, trailing 40-28 at the half, outscored Pittsburgh 14-2 over a five-minute span — keyed by a pair of Berry three-point plays — after Panthers' star Charles Smith went to the bench with four fouls with 15:26 to play.

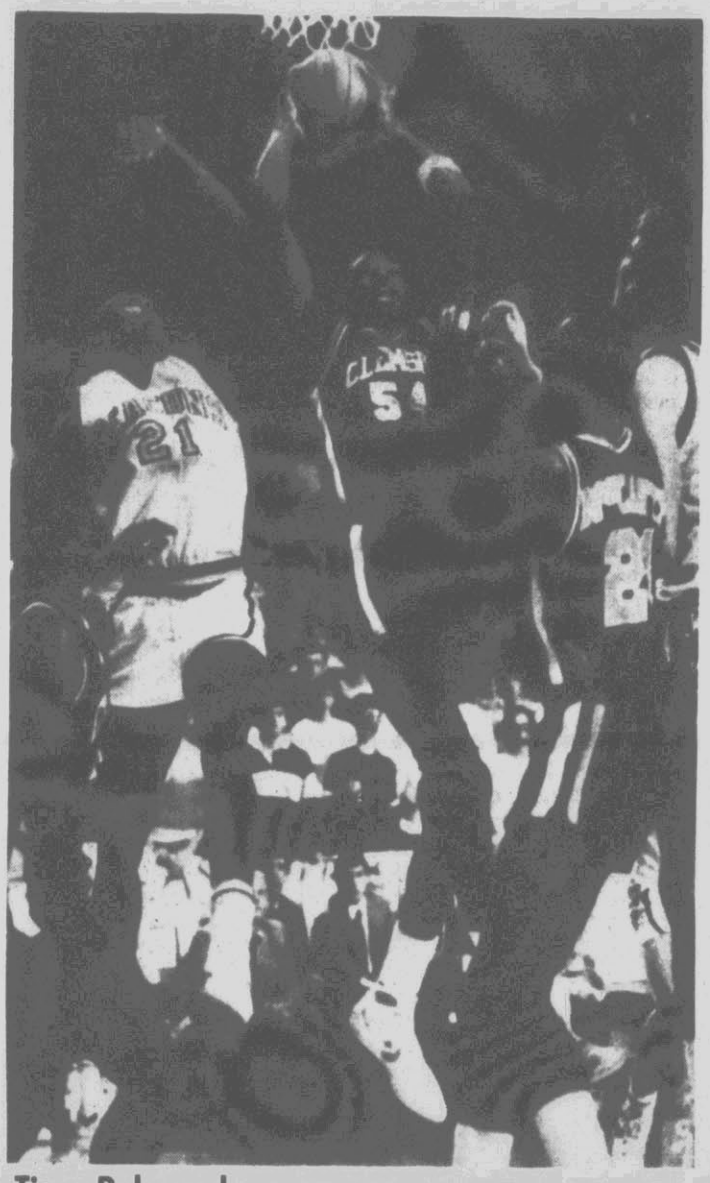

Berry hit a short jumper and a free throw with 14:25 left, then gave St. John's its first lead at 49-48 with a slam dunk and free throw just 21 seconds later.

Berry constantly worked his way free in the lane for second-half baskets as Smith and Pitt center Keith Armstrong each battled foul problems. Smith ended with 22 points, but scored only eight in the final 16 minutes of play.

Pitt's last lead came at 50-49 before the Redmen reeled off seven consecutive points, including a Rown three-point play, to take their biggest lead at 56-50.

Rowan added 17 points, while Gore had 18 and Armstrong 13 for Pitt.

Kentucky (11).....74
Tennessee 57

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Junior forward Winston Bennett scored a career-high 26 points, including three three-point plays, to power 11th-ranked Kentucky to a 74-57 victory over Tennessee in Southeastern Conference basketball Saturday.

Kentucky hiked its record to 16-2 overall and 7-1 in conference play while Tennessee fell to 10-7 and 3-5.

After Tennessee center Rob Jones connected under the basket to start the second half, Bennett completed a three-point play and scored again on an inside power move to give Kentucky a 36-28 lead with 16:54 to go.

Tennessee closed the gap to 42-36 on Sam Arterburn's rebound basket at 12:33, but Bennett countered with a three-point play 19 seconds later to push Kentucky's lead to nine points.

The closest Tennessee could get was 53-45 on Jones' free throw at 7:11. Bennett came back with another three-point play 23 seconds later to give Kentucky an 11-point margin.

Kentucky coasted the rest of the way, with the final score the biggest margin in the game.

Forward Kenny Walker finished with 17 points for Kentucky, followed by forward Richard Madison with 13 and guard Ed Davender with 12.

Tennessee was led by guard Tony White with 28 points and forward Anthony Richardson with 12.

Davender keyed a 10-2 spurt with four baskets that took Kentucky from an 18-16 deficit to a 26-20 lead with 4:59 remaining in the half.

Tennessee played without junior guard Fred Jenkins, who suffered ligament damage in his left ankle on Wednesday. He underwent surgery Thursday and will be out for the remainder of the season.

McCalister's free throws put the Sooners ahead 82-75. The Wildcats scored the next five points on a free throw by Norris Coleman and two free throws and a basket by Joe Wright, whose 10-footer brought Kansas State within two points with five seconds left.

After a Kansas State timeout, Sooners guard Linwood Davis was fouled by Ty Walker. Davis sank one free throw and missed the next after Oklahoma called a timeout between the shots.

Sutton Ups Phoenix Lead To Four

PHOENIX (AP) - Front-runner Hal Sutton overcame a balky putter with a 3-under-par 68 and stretched his lead to four strokes Saturday in the third round of the $500,000 Phoenix Open Golf Tournament.

"It could have been a lot lower," the former PGA champion said. "I had some opportunities I didn't capitalize on."

Sutton completed three trips over the Phoenix Country Club course in 196, 17 shots under par and the lowest 54-hole total on the PGA Tour since Larry Nelson had the same in the 1984 Walt Disney World Open.

But Sutton was far from satisfied.

"I haven't beat the golf course as much as I want to beat it," he said.

And, even with a four-shot lead, he's taking nothing for granted going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

"If I lay back, rest on my laurels, try to play par golf, somebody is going to come out and catch me. I'm going to play aggressively. I'm going to try to make as many birdies as I can," said the man who, in 12 rounds this year, has scored 67 birdies.

Veteran Howard Twitty, a Phoenix native, could do no better than a 70 in the warm, sunny weather, but retained second at 200.

"I never could get started. I just couldn't get anything going," Twitty said. "I wasn't as comfortable as I'd like to have been."

And he was well aware than he faces a formidable task in attempting to overtake Sutton.

"He's going to be tough to catch," Twitty said.

Calvin Peete, the defending titleholder, ran a 173-yard, 5-iron shot into the cup for an eagle-2 on the 11th hole and was five shots off the pace at 201.

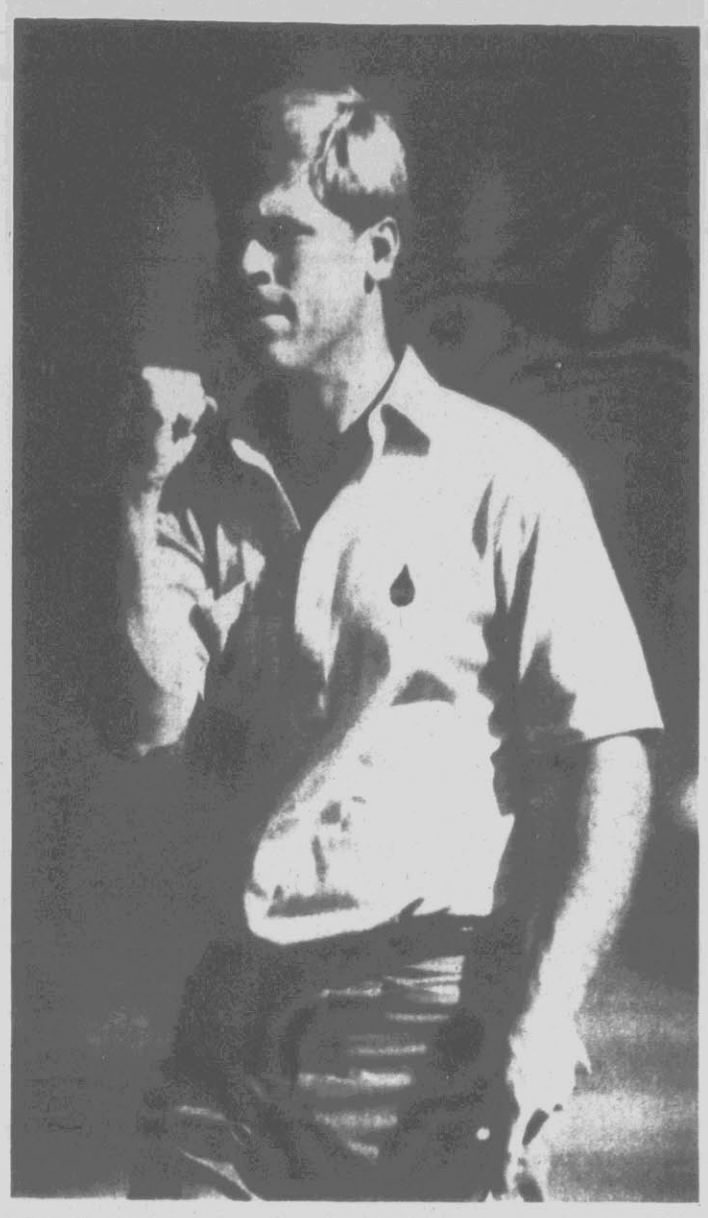

Peete, who had a 68, was tied at 12-under par with 1985 leading money-winner Curtis Strange, Australian Greg Norman, Ronnie Black and tony Sills. Sills and Strange each had a 65. Norman shot 66, and Black had a 69. Jack Nicklaus, not really in title contention, drove the green on the 320-yard, par-4 fifth hole and made a long putt for eagle-2, the highlight of a 69 that left him at 210.

Sutton, who had a two-shot lead when the day's play started, struggled and scrambled out of rough and from behind trees over the first seven holes but was 2-under par for the day until he made his first bogey of the tournament on the eighth.

"I'd had a few breaks up to that point," Sutton said.

He saved par from difficult positions on the 10th and 12th, then pulled away from Twitty with a 20-foot birdie putt on the 14th and a 12-footer on the 15th.

He bogeyed the 16th after a poor drive, then got the shot back with a 9-iron approach that left him a 40-inch putt on the 17th.

Pam Pack Tops Tarboro, 74-68

WASHINGTON — Washington High School swept a pair of non-conference games from Tarboro Saturday night. The Pam Pack took a 74-68 win, while the unbeaten Lady Pack came away with a 58-39 victory.

Washington and Tarboro were knotted up at 13-13 after one period in the boys' game, but the Vikings pulled away with a 22-18 margin in the second period. That left Tarboro up, 35-31, at intermission.

Washington rallied, 22-8, in the third quarter, to charge into a 53-44 lead and they held off Tarboro's 24-21 rally in the final frame to take the win.

Frankie Warren led Washington with 26 points while Alton Ore added 23. Taro Knight led Tarboro with 16 while John Hinton had 12 and Corey Smith hit 11.

Washington's girls rolled up a 20-5 margin in the first period and were never in trouble after that. They upped the lead to 32-14 at halftime and led by 44-24 at the end of the third quarter.

Sarah Gray led Washington with 20 points while Gloria Sherrod had 14. Belinda Winegan had 18 and Tawanda Wiggins had 14 for Tarboro.

Washington plays host to East Carteret on Tuesday.

Thomas Leads Mazda Event

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Barb Thomas, who hasn't finished better than fourth in any event during her three years on the LPGA tour, fired a 6-under-par 66 Saturday and emerged with a one-stroke leading heading into the final round of the $200,000 Mazda Classic.

The best round of her professional career gave Thomas a 54-hole total of 8-under 208 over the 6,368-yard course at the new Stonebridge Golf and Country Club.

Sally Little also came out of the pack Saturday, shooting a 67 to stand alone in second place at 209 going into Sunday's final round.

Robin Walton is at 210 after a third-round 71, and defending champion Hollis Stacy is joined at 211 by Val Skinner, Patty Sheehan and Sandra Palmer.

Oddly enough, Thomas started her round with a bogey on the first hole. She quickly rebounded, scoring seven birdies and no bogeys the rest of the way.

She started the day 2-under and was 6-under at the turn following a five-foot birdie putt at the third hole, a chip-in from 30 feet off the fourth green and birdie putts of 10 to 20 feet at the sixth, seventh and ninth holes.

Thomas, who celebrated her 25th birthday Tuesday, sank a 20-footer for a birdie at the 11th green and an 18-foot birdie putt at the 16th to gain the lead. The Sibley, Iowa, native nearly gained another stroke at the 18th, where her 30-foot putt stopped a shade short.

"My attitude is good," said Thomas, whose best previous professional round was a 68. "I proved that at the very start after I got a bogey on the first hole."

Jaguars Nip Panthers In OT

Jumper

Farmville Central Don May (24) leaps up for a jumper against the guard of North Pitt's Ashley Sheppard (40) during Friday night's action in the Panther gym. Farmville nipped the Panthers, 50-48, in an overtime game. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

BETHEL — Junior Reggie Mitchell tossed in two free throws with 29 seconds left in overtime and Farmville Central survived North Pitt, 50-48, Friday night.

North Pitt's girls, still unbeaten in Eastern Plains Conference action, downed the Lady Jaguars, 47-25.

The varsity boys' game was close throughout. North Pitt never led by more than six and the Jaguars never took more than a three-point lead. The final period was a back and forth affair that saw the lead change hands four times and the score tied on four other occasions, ending in a 42-42 deadlock.

In the overtime, Dennis Tripp powered back a missed shot for a 44-42 Jaguars lead after just 20 seconds. Nearly a minute later — after a Panther miss, Kennedy Williams dropped in a pair of free throws for a 46-42 lead.

But North Pitt rallied on a basket by Olinka Little and the first of two free throws by Greg Whitaker, cutting it to 46-45.

Both teams then hit from the floor before Mitchell made his free throws. Darone Dancy followed by making the second of two to trim it to two again, 50-48.

Farmville missed at the line, and North Pitt got the rebound, only to throw it away in an attempt for a long pass downcourt. The Jags again missed at the line with ten seconds to go, and Derrick Mullins was fouled shooting right at the horn.

He went to the line with the chance to tie it once more, but the pressure proved too great and the first bounced off the rim, as did the second — then meaningless — shot.

If there was a difference in the game it was the foul line. Farmville cashed in on 12 of 22 shots from the stripe while the Panthers were a pitiful 8 of 25.

"You can't win anything shooting like that," Panther Coach Cobby Deans said afterwards. "But I was pleased by the way we came back on them. We got hurt by a few offensive boards and by our own foul shooting.

"I thought that Mullins and (Ashley) Sheppard and (Greg) Whitaker all played well for us at both ends. I was just pleased with the effort. I only wish we could have hit our free throws."

Farmville's Mike Terrell thought his team played much better in the second half — and when it came to shooting he couldn't have been more correct. The Jaguars were a miserable four of 22 (18.2 percent) from the floor in the first half, but improved to 13 of 27 (48.1) in the second.

"They showed a lot of determination," Terrell said of his Jaguars. "They played hard, and it was a heck of a high school basketball game. North Pitt played hard too.

"Tripp did a good job for us rebounding and I thought we kept Sheppard from getting the ball in shooting position late in the game. We put (Bernard) Taylor on him in the late stages. I just think we played as hard as we could in the second half."

Both teams started slowly. North Pitt hit first but then missed on six straight shots before connecting again. Meanwhile Tripp and Taylor connected for a 4-2 lead by Farmville, extended to 5-2 on a free throw by Tripp. The period ended with Mullins hitting on a break away at the horn — although Farmville objected the shot came well after the buzzer. Nevertheless, it cut the lead to 7-6.

North Pitt used the break to gain a little momentum and scored the first three baskets of the second period, by Sheppard, Mullins and Whitaker to power out to a 12-7 lead. North Pitt maintained its lead throughout the period and took an 18-12 lead into the dressing rooms.

Farmville began to fight back in the third period, but it took a double technical foul on Deans before they actually tied it up. The first tech came when Deans arose from the bench to protest a call by the officials. The second came when he was too vocal in his protests over the first tech.

However, Farmville, facing a possible six-point play, saw Williams make only two of the four free throws, and the Jags then missed on the possession following, leaving it knotted at 22-22.

North Pitt held onto the lead, 25-22, on three of four free throws, but Mitchell hit a jumper with 1:42 left to give the Jags the lead again, 26-25. North Pitt tied it with a free throw and the two exchanged baskets in the final seconds, Maurice Jones hitting just before the horn for the Panthers to make it 28-28.

Tripp returned the lead to Farmville with a three-point play to open the fourth quarter, but North Pitt moved back out on a pair of baskets by Mullins. The Jaguars tied it up three times before regaining the lead, 39-38, on a basket by Tripp. Sheppard put the Panthers back up, but Taylor countered and then added one of two free throws for a 42-40 lead with 1:52 left. Jones hit a jumper with 1:40 to go to again knot it and Farmville ran down the clock for a final shot only to see it fail to find the mark.

That brought on the overtime and the Jaguar win.

Taylor led Farmville with 17 points while Tripp added 14. Mullins had 15 and Sheppard, 14, for North Pitt.

In contrast, the girls' game was a runaway. Farmville managed a 4-0 lead before North Pitt finally got its offense in gear but after that it was all Pant-HERS.

Behind a season-high performance by Clemmie Jenkins, North Pitt pushed out into an 11-4 lead, scoring 11 straight points, eight of them by Jenkins.

The second quarter saw the Pant-HERS continue to build the lead. It reached 17 midway the period at 17-6, and North Pitt maintained it for a 21-10 margin at intermission.

The lead continued to grow in the third period, reaching 24 points at the end of the period at 38-14.

The apex came on a free throw by Mel Harrington that made it 39-14 seconds into the final period. After that, the Pant-HERS went to the bench freely, and Farmville managed to come back with an 11-9 margin in the frame.

"We did just what we wanted to do on defense," Coach Randy Avery said. "We pinned (Lisa) Lang with two players every time she went inside." As a result, Lang never was able to get going and finished with just three field goals and ten points. All three field goals came on drives to the basket.

"We kept her from scoring 32 this time," Avery said in reference to their first meeting of the year. "She's still such a good athlete, though."

He praised Jenkins' scoring and rebounding in the game. "She still missed a lot of easy shots, but so did a lot of people tonight. She did do a good job of keeping Lang off the boards."

Farmville's Hilda Worthington felt that the defense worked well on Lang and she got little help from her teammates. "They never could set a pick for her, all night long. We just can't play two in a row (Thursday and Friday night). We're exhausted from that and exams. Going on the road two straight twice in two days is too much for a young team like ours."

Jenkins finished with 16 points while Gwen Pilgreen added 13 for the Pant-HERS. Lisa's ten was high for Farmville.

Farmville's boys are now 4-3 in Eastern Plains action and 7-8 overall. North Pitt slips to 1-6, 4-12. The Pant-HERS climb to 7-0 in the league and 14-3 overall. Farmville is now 2-5, 4-12.

The Panthers return to action on Tuesday, traveling to C.B. Aycock while Farmville entertains South Lenoir.

Jesse Campbell led West Craven with 20 points while Gary Blount added 18 and Mickey Rasberry had 13. Washington was led by Alton Ore with 20 and Frankie Warren with 18.

Eagles Fly Past Rose, 70-57

ELIZABETH CITY — Northeastern High School got 22 points each from Kenneth Williams and Anthony Carver and scored a hard-fought 70-57 Big East basketball win over Greenville Rose.

Rose's girls took a 47-38 victory in their meeting with the Lady Eagles.

Northeastern used the foul line to great advantage in the final minutes of the game, making good on 16 of 22 for the game as compared to three of seven by Rose. Both teams made 27 field goals.

Both teams also shot well from the floor. Rose hit 56.3 percent of its shots while Northeastern made 60.0 percent.

The Eagles, featuring a taller starting lineup, also outrebounded Rose, 35-21.

Williams, a 6-10 sophomore, put the Eagles on the board first after a Rose turnover, but Errol Wooten put Rose up 4-2. After an 8-8 tie, Northeastern moved out by four, 12-8 on baskets by Carver. Rose was unable to catch up, however, as the Eagles held a 14-12 lead at the end of the period.

Wooten and Glenn Duffie combined for ten second period points to lead Rose through the second period, with Duffie hitting at the horn to give Rose a 28-26 lead to take into intermission.

Rose then added the first four points of the second half to lead, 32-26. Rose finally got its biggest lead at 40-32 but the Eagles then rallied and finally tied it up on a basket by Williams at 45-45. Both teams scored again in the final seconds of the period to make it 47-47 as the frame ended.

After both scored early baskets, Northeastern took the lead on a three-point play, 52-49. Then, after David Lee pulled Rose within one again, Northeastern scored the next six points for a 58-51 lead. Rose never got closer than six after that, 61-55, and a 40-footer by Carver at the horn made the final margin 13 points.

Steve Price added 14 points for the Eagles.

Rose was led by Wooten with 16 points while Lenny Langley hit 14.

Rose's girls also had a battle on their hands most of the way. Rose held only a 12-10 lead after on period but was able to stretch that out to 22-16 by the end of the first half.

In the third period, the Rampettes upped their lead to 37-28 and both teams scored ten points each in the final quarter.

Pam Smith led Rose with 14 points while Kim Bridges added 12. White paced Northeastern with 22.

"We played fairly well," Coach Bill Kuykendall said, "steady, but not outstanding. Pam Smith, Chris Holec and Kim Dupree all rebounded well and kept them off the boards. We also stopped their leading scorer, Dashielle, and held her to only two points."

Rose is now 3-3 in Big East play and 9-5 overall while the Rampettes climb to 4-2, 10-5. Northeastern's boys are 5-1, 12-2 while the girls are 1-4, 4-8.

Ayden-Grifton Holds Off Devils By 67-63 Score

DEEP RUN — Doug Anderson gave Ayden-Grifton a 67-63 lead in the final ten seconds of the game Friday night, and the Chargers hung on for a 67-65 win over South Lenoir.

South Lenoir's girls took a 38-34 decision over the Lady Chargers in their meeting.

Ayden-Grifton, still unbeaten in league play, held an 18-15 lead in the first period of the contest but South Lenoir stayed close and trailed by only 34-33 at intermission.

Ayden-Grifton inched back out again in the third period, 51-48. Then, in the final period, the Chargers got late baskets from Marvin Smith, Maurice Berry and Anderson to move out by four with ten seconds left. They then allowed an uncontested basket at the other end as time ran out.

Danny West led Ayden-Grifton with 17 points while Smith had 15, Berry had 12, Anderson had 11 and Eric Blount had 10.

South Lenoir's Mike Isler led all scorers with 29 points, hitting 11 from the floor and 7 of 12 at the line.

"We were a little flat on defense," Coach Bob Murphrey said. "I think we were tired from playing two nights in a row. They were more rested, having last played on Tuesday.

"Isler was just unbelievable tonight. Most of what he hit was from long range. West shot the ball well for us in the first half and having five in double figures helped us too. Again, our free throw shooting almost killed us." The Chargers made 11 of 23 as compared to 13 of 18 for the Blue Devils.

Ayden-Grifton's girls zoomed out into a 12-4 lead in the first period, but South Lenoir held the Lady Chargers to just three second period points, scoring nine of their own to cut the lead to 15-13.

In the third period, South Lenoir powered ahead, 12-4, and gained a 25-19 lead. Ayden-Grifton's 15-13 rally in the final period was not enough.

Soyna King led South Lenoir with 18 while Treva Hartsell added 14. No one scored in double figures for Ayden-Grifton.

Ayden-Grifton is now 7-0 in league play and 15-1 overall. The girls falls to 3-4, 4-12. South Lenoir's boys are 4-3, 11-6 while the girls are 4-3, 6-11.

Duggins Lost For Year; 'Skins Sweep Williamston

WILLIAMSTON — There was good news and bad news in the Roanoke High School basketball camp Friday night.

Roanoke girls coach Robbie Calfee told his team prior to its game with Williamston that Gloria Duggins, the area's leading scorer and one of the top college prospects in the state, had undergone knee surgery and would be out for the remainder of the season. That was the bad news.

The good news is that Roanoke still went out and won, downing Williamston, 40-30.

Roanoke's boys also came away with a win, taking a 46-42 decision.

The Redskins pushed out into a 12-11 lead in the first period of the boys' game but Williamston took command in a slow second period to take a 17-16 lead into the locker rooms.

Roanoke came back to knot it up at the end of a tight third period, 31-31, then outscored the Tigers, 15-14, in the last period to pull out the win.

Richard Moore and Derrick Boyd led Roanoke with 12 points each while Ricky Taylor had 10. Robert Slade led the Tigers with 10 points.

Williamston pushed into a 4-1 lead after one period of the girls' game and extended that to 14-7 by halftime.

But Roanoke gathered itself in the third period and outhit the Lady Tigers, 12-5, to tie it at 19-19. Then, in the last period, Roanoke outshot Williamston, 21-11, to take the win.

Joyce Outlaw led Roanoke with 14 point while Debbie Atkinson had 12. Monique Pou led Williamston with 11.

"The girls learned about Gloria just before the game, and they played like they didn't know what they were going to do in the first half. But at the half, they saw that they would have to do it themselves, and they did."

Roanoke is now 2-5 in Northeastern play and 4-10 overall. The Lady 'Skins are 4-3, 10-7. Williamston's boys drop to 2-5, 5-11, while the girls are 2-5, 4-12.

Lakers Lose Rare Two In A Row

By The Associated Press

Los Angeles Lakers Coach Pat Riley almost saw it coming.

The Lakers were injured, tired and susceptible. And Friday night, they were beaten by the Los Angeles Clippers, 120-109, losing for a second straight time for the first time in more than a year.

"If there was a perfect setup for the Clippers to win, this was it," the Lakers coach said. "We had just lost to Boston (110-95 Wednesday night). We're flying cross-country to play them.

"We had Earvin (Johnson) and Kurt (Rambis) out. They had won three straight and we had beaten them nine in a row. They sensed it and leaped at it and jumped at it," Riley said.

In the rest of the National Basketball Association, it was Boston 135, Golden State 114; Atlanta 117, New York 100; Milwaukee 117, Indiana 92; Philadelphia 121, Cleveland 114; Detroit 129, Dallas 120, and San Antonio 113, Denver 97.

Marques Johnson scored 22 points for the Clippers, who beat the Lakers for the first time since moving from San Diego. The last time the Lakers had lost two games straight was on Jan. 15-16, 1985, when they dropped consecutive games to the Milwaukee Bucks and the Celtics.

"It feels good. The nightmare is over," Clippers forward Michael Cage said.

The Clippers blocked 10 shots in the game. They took a 66-52 halftime lead by outscoring the Lakers 11-2, and they extended the advantage to 98-79 with 1:48 left in the tird period. The Lakers could get no closer than seven points the rest of the way.

James Worthy scored 26 points and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar added 25 for the Lakers.

Celtics 135, Warriors 114

Larry Bird scored 25 points, and Boston coasted to its seventh straight victory. The Celtics now have won 11 of 12, while the Warriors have lost 23 of their 25 road games. Golden State has not won in Boston since March 3, 1977.

The Celtics' victory came despite the absence of starting forward Kevin McHale, who is out with a strained Achilles tendon. Filling in for McHale, Scott Wedman scored 21 points and had 13 rebounds.

Boston led 63-53 at halftime and 93-78 after three quarters.

Chris Mullin, who did not start, paced the Warriors with 24 points.

Hawks 117, Knicks 100

Dominique Wilkins scored 36 points, and Atlanta outscored New York 8-2 to close out the second quarter with a 68-53 lead. Atlanta scored the game's first eight points and never trailed, building a lead of as many as 24 points, 113-89, with 3:24 to play.

Wilkins scored eight of his points in an 11-4 Atlanta run midway through the third quarter as the Hawks built an 88-70 lead.

Doc Rivers had 16 assists for the Hawks, who have won 10 of their last 12. Patrick Ewing paced the Knicks with 24.

Knicks center Bill Cartwright was playing in his first game in two seasons after breaking his foot in training camp before last season. He scored 11.

Bucks 117, Pacers 92

Milwaukee built a 64-40 halftime lead and never allowed Indiana any closer than 11 points in handing the Pacers their ninth loss in 10 games. Charles Davis led the Bucks with 24 points and 13 rebounds, while Terry Cummings added 22 points.

The Pacers scored the firt 10 points of the third quarter, then closed within 11 points with 10:38 left in the frame.

Wayman Tisdale led the Pacers with 16 points.

76ers 121, Cavaliers 114

The 76ers won for the 17th time in 19 games, getting a season-high 30 points from Maurice Cheeks and another 28 from Moses Malone. Philadelphia scored on its first 13 possessions, making its first 10 shots from the field.

Cleveland trailed only 89-85 entering the fourth quarter and took a 91-89 lead on Dirk Minniefield's layup with 9:56 left. But Philadelphia, which has won four in a row, outscored the Cavaliers 12-2 over the next three minutes to build a 101-93 advantage.

World B. Free led Cleveland with 28 points, while rookie Keith Lee had 25 in his first NBA start.

Pistons 129, Mavericks 120

Isiah Thomas scored Detroit's first 17 points of the fourth quarter, including eight straight shots to lift the Pistons from a 98-94 deficit to a 111-105 lead. The Mavericks got within 113-112 with 3:10 left, but Thomas hit a layup that helped the Piston win going away.

Thomas finished with 28 points, while Kelly Tripucka led the Pistons with 32, tying his season high. Mark Aguirre scored 35 points for Dallas but missed a pair of free throws with 2:12 left that could have pulled the Mavs within three points.

Spurs 113, Nuggets 97

David Greenwood hit two free throws and scored on a three-point play to move San Antonio from a 91-91 tie to a 96-91 lead with three minutes left, and the Spurs went on to win for the 18th time in 22 games at Denver. Greenwood's points started a run 13 straight points that gave the Spurs a commanding 12-point lead.

The Spurs, meanwhile, held the league's leading scorer, Alex English, to just 14 points. San Antonio had three players top the 20-point mark, Artis Gilmore with 23 to go along with his 19 rebounds, Mike Mitchell with 22 and Alvin Robinson with 21.

Bears Not Taking Patriots Lightly

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Veteran safety Gary Fencik wants the New England Patriots to know the Chicago Bears are not taking their Super Bowl opponents lightly.

"We have people who do a lot of talking, but they can back up their words," said Fencik. "We have some great athletes on this team. We have a lot of confidence, but we are not cocky.

"The Patriots might be thinking that we are not taking them seriously, and that would be a mistake," added Fencik, a 10-year veteran has seen the bad times with the Bears and now is basking in the good times. "There was a time when we had to play a perfect game to win. Now, we can win without having to execute to perfection."

Fencik is considered the Bears' Yuppie.

"A Yuppie is a young professional who lives in the city and has a lot of fun," said Fencik. "I have a lot of fun. I don't own a cuisinart or a car, but I do have a lot of fun."

Fencik is a Yale graduate with a degree in history. He spent the summer of 1975 studying in London.

He originally was drafted and cut by the Miami Dolphins before the Bears signed him as a free agent in 1976.

Fencik has been selected twice for the Pro Bowl and there are those who think it was an oversight that he didn't make it this season.

Fencik led the Bears in tackles with 118 during the regular season and had five interceptions, giving him a career total of 35, two short of the team record held by Richie Pettibon.

Fencik laughed when he was recently lumped with a group of players as being the dirtiest in the NFL.

"I don't think I'm a dirty player," said Fencik, who teamed in the Bears' secondary for years with Doug Plank. Plank had a reputation for being a late hitter.

"I think people confused me with Doug," said Fencik. "I'm really a nice guy."

Fencik didn't like being overlooked for the Pro Bowl and is serious about rectifying the matter.

"I'll just have to work harder next year," he said. "I have to rededicate myself."

A world traveler who spent one summer in Spain and ran with the bulls because "I had a friend who thought it was a good idea," Fencik will change his off-season activities. Last year he spent the off-season in the Far East.

"I'm not going to travel in the off-season," he said. "I'm going to pump iron and work on weights. I want to get on a program to improve my quickness and hopefully my speed.

"I know the older you get, the harder it is to get into shape. I'm in pretty good shape, but I can get in better shape."

At 31, Fencik is concerned about retiring.

"I still enjoy playing. I can't see more than a couple of more years, but you never know," he said. "I'm not saying next year won't be my last, but if I stay healthy, I'll be back."

Defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan has talked to Fencik about retirement.

"Buddy has told me I'm at the point where I have to start thinking about retirement, but that will be on a year-to-year basis," said Fencik.

As for the Super Bowl, Fencik said New England's offense "is similar to ours. It's run-oriented. Field position will dictate the outcome of the game.

Northeastern Downs Aycock

Northeastern Junior High School took a pair of basketball games from E.B. Aycock Junior High Friday.

Northeastern won the girls game, 38-32. Donna Bivens led Aycock with 12 points.

In the boys' contest, Northeastern came away with an 84-72 win. Billy Carr led Aycock with 14 points while James Teele has 12 and Willie Woolard had 10.

Aycock is now 2-4 and plays at Hunt on Tuesday.

Michigan Must Watch Spartans

By The Associated Press

The difference in this cross-state rivalry is simple, Michigan State Coach Jud Heathcote says.

"Michigan can play a mediocre game and win. We have to play an inspired game to win."

The sixth-ranked Wolverines took a 17-1 record into Michigan State Saturnight as most of the nation's ranked college basketball teams see action after a night off Friday.

Michigan, enjoying an overwhelming height advantage over Michigan State, is 5-1 and in first place in the Big Ten Conference, while Michigan State is 11-5 and 2-4 in the Big Ten.

"Our backs are to the wall," Heathcote said. "We're down in the never-never land of the second division, and now we're going to play the best team in the conference. They may be a great team."

If the Spartans enjoyrany advantage, it's in speed and the home court. Michigan State is 8-1 at home this season.

"State poses a lot of problems for us defensively," Michigan Coach Bill Frieder said. "In basketball, one of the toughest things to defend against is the transition game. There's a quick pass, a dribble or two and a shot. There's not time to get your people where they have to get."

Michigan State guard Scott Skiles is second in the conference with a 25.4 scoring average.

In Friday night's games:

Unranked

Kerry Trotter scored 17 points to lead Marquette to a 66-55 victory at the University of Hartford. Marquette, coming off a two-point loss to North Carolina last Sunday, never trailed in the game, leading 37-25 at halftime and 50-33 after scoring 13 of the first 17 points in the second half.

Forward Johnny Brown scored 19 points, and New Mexico outscored Colorado State 10-3 over a five-minute stretch in the second half to beat the Rams 64-51 in a Western Athletic Conference game.

In the Big Sky Conference, Walt Tyler scored 28 points to lead Weber State to an 89-68 victory over Nevada-Reno. Weber State led by as many as 16 points in the first half. Bruce Gaitor, Mike Graefe and Donn Holston combined to hit 16 consecutive free throws in the final 2½ minutes as Idaho State beat Northern Arizona 78-72. Ken Luckett scored 24 points to lead Idaho over Montana, 70-64.

In a West Coast Athletic Conference game, Eric White scored 22 points to lead Pepperdine to a 78-66 victory over San Francisco.

Minnesota Players Face Charges

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Three members of the University of Minnesota basketball team have been jailed in an alleged attack on an 18-year-old college coed, who said she was sexually assaulted at the team's hotel.

Forwards Mitchell Allen Lee, 20; Kevin Andre Smith, 21; and George Williams, 19, were arrested Friday after police stopped the team from leaving the Dane County Regional Airport.

Other team members and Coach Jim Dutcher also were questioned, but were allowed to return to Minnesota.

The three were booked into the Dane County Jail on a count of second-degree sexaul assault and were held without bond, said Madison Police Officer Joe Durkin. The charge carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Dane County Assistant District Attorney Steven Tinker said a decision would be made by Monday whether to bring formal charges against the three.

"The investigation is still continuing, so until we have a chance to review everything and decide in our own minds what happened, I can't say one way or the other," Tinker said.

Lee, a 6-foot-9 forward, was found innocent of third-degree sexual conduct Jan. 14 in Minneapolis. The Carol City, Fla., native had been charged with raping a female student in January 1984 in a dormitory.

Smith is a 6-7 forward from Lansing, Mich., and a prep All-America selection in 1983. Williams is a 6-9 sophomore from Oakland, Calif.

The woman, a student at the Madison Area Technical College, reported to police about 7 a.m. Friday that she had been attacked in The Concourse Hotel downtown, Durkin said. The team stayed there after defeating Wisconsin 67-65 in a Big Ten basketball game Thursday night.

She was taken to a local hospital for treatment, Durkin said.

Dutcher and other university officials refused to comment on the incident, but assistant coach Jimmy Williams said he would remain in Madison today "to be available."

A spokesman for the Big Ten Conference, headquartered in Chicago, said Commissioner Wayne Duke spoke with University of Minnesota officials Friday morning.

"Our office is aware of the situation in Madison," said Mark Rudner. "Commissioner Duke received a report from the university."

Top Volleyball Player Is Dead

TOKYO (AP) — For years they worked together, aiming for the same goal — the women's volleyball gold medal at the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics.

When the dream was shattered by China, there were tears, bitter tears born of defeat.

On Friday, the hurt was even deeper when Flo Hyman, the leader of the U.S. team, collapsed and died while playing for Daiei in a Japanese women's volleyball league game in Matsue City, 380 miles west of Tokyo.

"She was the finest female volleyball player in the world," U.S. Olympic Committee Secretary General George D. Miller said of the 6-foot-5 Hyman, 31, of El Toro, Calif.

Hyman sat down on the bench after a player change, then collapsed. She never regained consciousness.

Rose Magers of Big Spring, Texas, also a member of the 1984 U.S. Olympic volleyball team, was in Japan and watching the Daiei match on television when Hyman collapsed.

"Rose ... saw the whole thing," Aia Selinger, wife of U.S. Olympic volleyball coach Arie Selinger, said from her home in Laguna Niguel, Calif. "She called me immediately and said, 'Please don't get panicked but I think something bad happened to Flo because they interrupted the match and said that Flo was rushed to the hospital.'

"Rita Crockett, who was playing with Flo, called me a half-hour later and gave me the bad news."

Kazunori Yoneda, the Daiei team manager, said Hyman "seemed well at the player change. She called out to the new players to play hard. Those were her last words."

Japanese television showed Hyman being carried out of the gymnasium on a stretcher. She was taken by ambulance to Matsue Red Cross hospital, where she later was pronounced dead.

Crockett, a Daiei teammate and also a veteran of the U.S. national team, was with Hyman in the emergency room, the spokeswoman said.

Hyman, who began playing Daiei in November 1982, was considered one of the most dominant players in the sport. She became a member of the U.S. team in 1975 and competed in every major competition for which the United States qualified.

In 1981, she was among six players selected to the All World Cup Team, and was honored as the best hitter at that competition.

Debbie Green of Westminster, Calif., also a member of the U.S. Olympic team and the All World Cup Team, was obviously in tears when she said in a telephone conversation: "It's sort of obvious how I feel. I just remember Flo came to my wedding in October. That's the last time I saw her.

"She was the one person on the team who trained the longest; she was the most dedicated player there was. ... She gave so much. It was her time to start getting things."

Rose Marie Ruddins of Inglewood, Calif., the mother of Kim Ruddins, another member of the U.S. Olympic team, said her daughter called her from Sacramento, Calif., to find out if the news of Hyman's death was true.

"She could hardly talk to me with all her crying," Mrs. Ruddins said. "We all so shocked. She (Kim) is going to fly home whenever we hear the particulars. It's such a terrible shock."

With Hyman the star of the team, the United States was considered the best in the world in 1980. But then came the American boycott of the Moscow Olympics, and the volleyball team decided to stay together for the 1984 Games.

Miller, at his Colorado Springs, Colo., office said, "the shock of her death affects all of us in the Olympic movement."

"She was one of those rare athletes who was the best, and unselfishly gave back effort and support to her sport at all times," Miller added.

Citations to be Awarded

Almost 2,300 citations will be awarded to anglers who caught qualifying fish in the 1985 North Carolina Salt Water Fishing Tournament.

Record highs for the 12-year-old tournament were reached for barracuda, black sea bass, dolphin, king mackerel and wahoo. But sharp declines in tuna and bluefish from a year ago were reported.

Winners of each species category were announced by the North Carolina Travel and Tourism Division, which sponsors the tournament that runs from mid-March through Dec. 31 each year.

State records were broken by two winning catches. They were a 67-pound, seven-ounce barracuda caught by Buddy Garten of Atlantic Beach and a 79-pound king mackerel caught by Clifton Moss, also of Atlantic Beach. Both fish were caught off Cape Lookout.

The total number of catches registered in the tournament was down 17 percent from 1984, according to Joel Arrington, tournament director.

"The fall bluefish run was weak last year," he said, "and overall, bluefish were down 77 percent, but I doubt if it means the Atlantic Coast population is necessarily down."

In addition, tuna declined 75 percent from the previous year and no gray trout were reported. Red drum, or channel bass, were also down 16 percent.

More awards were made for Spanish mackerel and dolphin than for other species. Spanish mackerel increased 48 percent over 1984 to an all-time high in the tournament of 303. Dolphin increased 83 percent to 300.

Arrington also announced rule changes for the 1986 contest:

☐ The minimum weight for amberjack will be lowered from 60 to 50 pounds.

☐ Special release plaques for the five species eligible for release will be awarded to anglers credited with the most releases of each species. The species eligible for release are blue and white marlin, sailfish, red drum and tarpon.

Other rules for the 1986 North Carolina Salt Water Fishing Tournament will be available after March 15 from the N.C. Travel and Tourism Division, 430 N. Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611, or by calling toll-free: 1-800-VISIT NC.

Grogan Is Ready If He's Needed

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Steve Grogan rescued New England once when Tony Eason was sidelined. It's far from certain, but he may have to do it again Sunday in the biggest game in Patriots' history.

Until Friday, Grogan harbored no illusions about his chances of playing quarterback in the Super Bowl against the Chicago Bears.

"I don't expect to play," the 11-year veteran, who wasn't on a winning playoff team until this season, said this week. "I'm not saying it can't happen. It more than likely won't."

But Eason began feeling ill Thursday night. He missed practice Friday with what team physician Bertram Zarins described as a "a mild viral illness."

Zarins said it "doesn't look serious" and added that Eason's condition was improved Friday afternoon.

Coach Raymond Berry wasn't as optimistic.

"There's a possibility it could be a whopper," he said. "There's a couple of types (of the virus). One might be over quickly. The other might not be over quickly. I don't think they really know which one it is right now."

Grogan, who hasn't played a single down since suffering a broken leg and an injured knee Nov. 24, took all the snaps during Friday's workout. New England planned its final practice, a one-hour session, this afternoon and there was a possibility that Eason could go into the Super Bowl without having practiced since Thursday.

There also was a possibility that Grogan's dream would be fulfilled.

"When the year started, I told my wife my dream was to come off the bench and win the Super Bowl," he said before Eason became ill. "It's probably not going to happen, but you've got to dream."

If it does happen, Grogan thinks he may be rusty. But that may not keep the tough quarterback, known for his leadership abilities, from playing well.

"I don't know whether I'm ready or not," he said. "When I came off the bench against Buffalo, I wasn't ready."

That happened in the sixth game of the season after Eason suffered a separated shoulder. Grogan threw for 282 yards and a touchdown in a little more than a half to rally New England from a 3-0 deficit to a 14-3 victory.

The Patriots were struggling at the time. They had lost three of their first five games. But the victory over the Bills was the first of six in a row before Grogan was hurt in a loss to the New York Jets. He went on injured reserve Nov. 30 and was activated Jan. 3.

"When you've been around as long as I have, you don't have to play a lot," he said. "But you have to be mentally ready and know what you're doing."

Grogan is very familiar with the offense Berry installed this season because it is similar to the one the Patriots had when Berry was their receivers coach from 1978-1981.

"I'd just as soon face the backup (quarterback) any time," said Chicago strong safety Dave Duerson. "Grogan is more experienced, but he's not as mobile. We can apply a lot of pressure up the middle knowing Grogan can't get outside."

"The quarterbacks who have done well against the Bear defense in the past have been the experienced quarterbacks," said Chicago free safety Gary Fencik. "Steve is an experienced quarterback. Because of what he accomplished in the earlier season, they have a lot of faith in him."

Eason has engineered three consecutive upset victories in the playoffs.

"The thing that makes it easier is the fact I played six games and helped us get where we are," Grogan said.

He would settle for less than throwing the decisive pass or scoring the winning touchdown. He would love simply to get onto the field.

"It's not life or death," he said, "but it's close. I've been joking with the special teams coach (Dante Scarnecchia) that I'd go in on an extra point or field goal and he thinks I'm joking."

Berry said that won't happen. In that case, Grogan said he and third-string quarterback Tom Ramsey are considering taking matters into their own hands.

"We're trying to figure out how we can get on the field on special teams," said Grogan. "Maybe we'll run out and pick up the tee after a kickoff. I'm not going to divulge all my strategy."

Before learning of Eason's sickness, Grogan allowed himself to discuss more important strategy that, as things have turned out, may be quite useful.

"You have to take what the Bears are giving you," he said. "You can't go in against the Bears and say all you're going to do is throw short passes, or throw long passes, or just run. You just have to do what you do best."

The Police Department issues permits for parades and non-profit solicitations.

McMahon Starts Puncture Roll

CHICAGO (AP) — His teammates may have needled him for it, but Bears quarterback Jim McMahon's acupuncture treatment for a bruised buttock has given the ancient Chinese practice a big shot in the arm.

"It was an idea whose time had almost come, before," said state Rep. Alan Greiman. "Now it's here."

Greiman, D-Skokie, is sponsor of a bill that would allow acupuncturists to be licensed as independent practitioners in Illinois.

"Roughly 20 states" have similar laws, said Steven Finando, a member of the American Association of Acupuncturists and Oriental Medicine in Manhasset, N.Y.

Western medicine still views the needle treatment with skepticism. But the McMahon flap, coming as the Bears prepare to battle the New England Patriots in the Super Bowl, has helped bring acupuncture out of the shadows of Chinatowns across the country and into the limelight, Finando said.

McMahon says he's doing "200 percent" better since Chicago Bears management changed their minds and let a Japanese acupuncturist treat his bruised backside in New Orleans.

"The acupuncturists in Illinois are being besieged by inquiries," Finando said in a telephone interview Friday.

"We've gotten some calls," said Finando, who also heads the examining board of the National Commission for the Certification of Acupuncturists.

"I think it's wonderful when people recognize that acupuncture is being used by a lot of people," he said of the McMahon-generated publicity. "It's an extremely effective treatment for speeding up healing."

Phones "are ringing off the hook" at the Midwest School for the Study of Oriental Medicine in Chicago, said spokeswoman Lila Berry.

The publicity is "relieving some of people's misconceptions about acupuncture, that it's just voodoo or that you have to believe in it for it to work," said Joe Mitchell, an acupuncturist at the North Side school.

"Acupuncture is the use of Chinese medical principles to manipulate the flow of energy in the system to affect a variety of physiological activities and functions using stimulation of specific body points by needles ... or use of heated herbs," Finando said.

The procedure is used to treat ailments ranging from bronchitis to hemorrhoids, he said. Patients are conscious during the procedure, which most describe as painless.

"We see it as being a complement" to traditional medicine, Finando said.

For example, someone with high blood pressure first will go to a medical doctor to get medication. "Then they can work with an acupuncturist to bring the pressure down more and wean them from the medicine," Finandi said.

Practitioners of Western medicine, however, don't view acupuncture as an accepted procedure.

The AMA believes "acupuncture in the United States is an experimental medical procedure," said spokeswoman Martha Boyce.

Trained acupuncturists generally have three years of post-graduate instruction in the procedure, including a year of interning, Finando said.

Rozelle: USFL Can Forget Any Hope Of A Merger

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Commissioner Pete Rozelle has some advice for anyone interested in obtaining a National Football League franchise.

First, it would be helpful to be a United States city. The NFL does not have any great interest in expanding beyond this country, although it is considering again putting an exhibition game in England.

Patience also would be a virtue. Rozelle said that expansion is unlikely until the league settles its pending problems, some of which have been lingering for as long as four years.

And finally, any United States Football League owner counting on a merger to supply the NFL imprimateur can forget it. The commissioner said the NFL owners are not interested in admitting USFL teams, even as a condition for settling the younger league's pending $1.3 billion antitrust suit.

"There will not be a merger settlement to the USFL case," Rozelle promised at his annual "State of the NFL" news conference Friday, two days before the Super Bowl.

That does not mean, however, that the two leagues have not been in contact. "Merger talks have been held," Rozelle conceded, "always at the instigation of the USFL, one of their owners talking to one of ours, their attorneys talking to our attorneys.

"There are no continuing discussions, no ongoing settlement talks."

The USFL suit is only part of the NFL's continuing problem with litigation. Still pending is the league's appeal of the $49 million damage award won by the Los Angeles Raiders, a case whose price tag could swell to $70 million when legal fees are added.

"The (appellate) court has had it for 15 months," Rozelle said. "We are awaiting a result, hopefully early this year."

Also on the league's agenda in the next year are negotiations for new television contracts with the three major networks, a new collective bargaining agreement with the players association and continuing pursuit of antitrust exemption legislation.

Until these matters are settled, the commissioner said, expansion could not be considered. "It is a matter of getting these problems out of the way for stability," he said. "There's no anti-expansion policy, and we'll do it . . . initially by two teams . . . when we don't have unknown factors."

And where would the new teams be located?

"We would weigh all factors, virgin territories and cities (like Oakland and Baltimore) that have lost teams," he said.

Foreign cities, however, would not be considered. "There are enough United States cities seeking teams that we would want to satisfy them first," Rozelle said.

He added that the league is examining the possibility of putting a preseason game between two playoff teams in London's Wembley Stadium before the start of the full exhibition season. Such a plan would require approval of the players' union.

Rozelle said increased ratings on all three networks this season were encouraging as the league approaches new TV negotiations. The last contract yielded $2.1 billion for five years.

"We've got a good arrangement with the three networks," Rozelle said. "We would consider cable only if we were forced to . . . if litigation (like the USFL suit) knocked one or two of the contracts out and we needed an escape valve."

Pete Recognizes A Hot Property

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle knows a hot property when he sees one.

"Jim McMahon is fascinating, a folk hero," Rozelle said Friday. "I want him sold, not knocked."

But that doesn't mean the Chicago Bears' quarterback has carte blanche when it comes to headbands.

"I do feel he sometimes crosses the line," Rozelle said. "I realize there's a line, and it's difficult when you cross it to avoid criticism."

One of those line-crossings occurred when McMahon sported a headband advertising Adidas sporting goods on it. The commissioner fined him $5,000.

"There are no restrictions on headbands," Rozelle said. "We just don't want players looking like race drivers with advertisements all over them."

McMahon got even at the NFC championship game when he wore a headband marked "Rozelle." The commissioner laughed at the antic and considered a little payback of his own for his news conference Friday.

"I was going to wear one that said 'McMahon,'" Rozelle disclosed. "I decided not to because it's become something of a cliche."

Rozelle said he was concerned that allowing advertisements on headbands could get out of hand. He offered an example:

"You could have a big center with 'Big Mac' on his fanny and the camera could pick it up.

"Sixty percent of our money comes from television. Put yourself in the shoes of a company spending $1.1 million for one minute to sponsor an ad on the Super Bowl. If there are other logos promoting other products for free, they'd have a right to be offended."

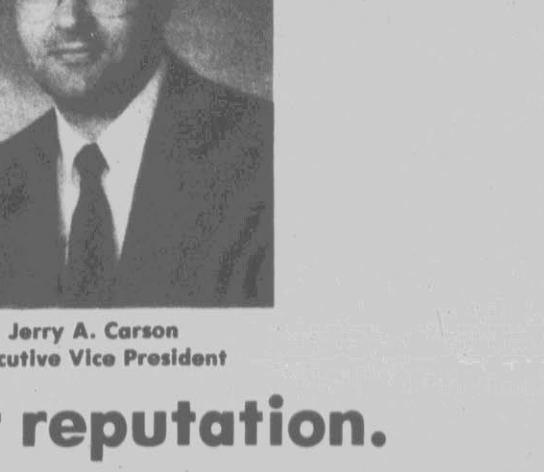

Karl May Go To Pitt

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — George Karl, coach of the Cleveland Cavaliers, has been unhappy with his contract situation with the NBA team and might be willing to consider a move to the University of Pittsburgh, a published report says.

A source in the Pittsburgh athletic department told The (Akron) Beacon Journal that Karl is being considered as a possible replacement for Roy Chipman, who has resigned effective at the end of this season.

"We don't think it is in anyone's best interest to speculate on possible coaching candidates," said Pitt Athletic Director Dean Billick. "We won't confirm or deny any names, although I will say that we haven't officially contacted anyone for the basketball position."

What do big banks do with interest they don't pay you? %

Ever wondered why First Federal's federally-insured investment accounts pay consistently higher rates than the big banks' federally-insured investment accounts? Good question.

But the difference in our rates and their rates is no great wonder. As the only financial institution that operates offices only in Pitt County, we neither need nor can afford, a huge television advertising campaign. Or a huge, granite building. No big operating centers with big computers—our smaller computer systems service our customers nicely. And since our offices are all close by, we save quite a bit on courier services too.

At First Federal, we feel that some of the larger financial institutions spend too much time and money being big and too little time and money on what made them big: their customers. That's why we take the time to learn your name and spend the money on higher interest rates. We don't skimp on products and services either. You'll find most every financial service you're likely to need at First Federal.

When you add it all up, a bigger bank isn't necessarily a better place for your investments. It's only, well, bigger.

FIRST FEDERAL
The best place to bank.

GOREN BRIDGE
BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

© 1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—My partner and I play a five-card major system. Recently, we have spent a lot of time discussing whether or not to open one no trump when the hand contains a five-card major. What's your opinion?—L. J., Staten Island, N.Y.

A.—You are not alone. Even the experts are divided on what to open when you have a balanced hand of 16-18 points that includes a five-card major. Even your columnists are not in complete agreement on this one: Omar Sharif does not mind opening one no trump with a bad five-card major but won't do it with a good suit; I think it is better to get the hand off your chest with the most descriptive bid available—one no trump.

You don't have all that much of a problem when your suit is spades. That is because the only response that might prove embarrassing is one no trump. But what about when your suit is hearts? Look at this hand:

♠Kx ♡AJxxx Q10x ♣AQ10

If you elect to open one heart and partner responds one spade, you have an almost insurmountable problem. One no trump is an underbid and a jump to two no trump is a distinct overbid. You probably have to compromise with a waiting bid of two clubs and hope that partner doesn't pass that.

I realize that, if I open one no trump, I will on occasion play in an inferior no trump spot when there is a superior heart contract available when partner has three- or four-card support for my five-card suit. But I think that is the lesser of evils.

That does not mean I think it is wrong to bar opening one no trump with a five-card major. I just feel that the complications that ensue can prove troublesome, and that bidding is easier if you open all balanced 16-18 point hands with one no trump. However, if for purposes of suit play your hand values to 19, open the five-card major; your hand is too strong for one no trump.

Q.—We play forcing no trump responses to five-card major openings, I opened one heart and partner responded one no trump. I held:

♠8753 ♡K10643 ♢A6 ♣AQ What should my rebid have been?—P. N., Chicago Ill.

A.—A very awkward hand. Two spades would be a reverse; two hearts would show a six-card suit; and two of a minor would promise at least three cards in the suit bid.

Obviously, you have to lie about something. I think I would choose to treat my club holding as if it were three cards long and rebid two clubs. I realize that could lead to problems, and I sympathize with your dilemma.

TOM

LARRY

BILL

Pitt County Group Home Truly Is Home

"I don't live at Caswell any more. I live at the Pitt County Group Home," Larry tells you often. "I'm not going back to Caswell."

Larry, a 25-year-old diagnosed as having both mental retardation and autism, lived in Caswell Training School, the state institution for the mentally retarded in Kinston, until last year. Now he's happier than he's ever been at the intermediate care facility in Grifton, planned and run to meet the daily living needs of autistic mentally retarded adults.

Larry joined Robbie, 21, Bill, 37, Tom, 28, and Allen, 23, at the facility which is licensed for five men and opened March 16, 1984. All of the five are said to have both mental retardation and autism. All must have constant care and supervision.

"Every parent of an autistic or a mentally retarded child worries about what will happen to him once the parents become unable to be responsible for him," Mrs. Nancy Hemingway, Bill's mother said. "We kept Bill at home till he was almost 18, then sent him to Caswell, because we were told then that he couldn't enter Caswell after he was 18 and we felt that long-range he would have to be cared for in an institution. You just can't imagine the joy it is to us to see Bill in a wonderful place like this home in Grifton. The guys really are a family and we're just so glad it's come about, a place where Bill can live comfortably with the hope that this or something similar will continue as long as he lives."

Marie Horne, Robbie's mother, said he got along very well in the school programs throughout his childhood, but was not happy just staying home once he became too old to go to school. He was enrolled in the Adult Development Activities Program in Greenville, but didn't like attending. "Now that he's in the group home, going to ADAP along with the other guys, he likes it fine," she said.

Mrs. Horne was instrumental in starting the group home. She serves on the board which formulated the plan for the home, brought it into reality and continues to make major decisions for its operation. The beautiful five-bedroom home with a small additional apartment for staff is owned jointly by the local Association for Retarded Citizens and the federal Housing and Urban Development agency. It is located in a Grifton residential area. The board pays a set amount of rent each month for each of its residents. Five is the maximum enrollment and so far the number has never varied from five.

The nature of autism is that the person either has withdrawn behavior or acting out behavior or both. "All of these guys have for virtually all their lives been involved in whatever special education programs were available in their areas," Mary Grace Bright, the home director, said, "and we're continuing a high level of care and training into their adult years. Each has a development program which has input from a team of professionals in the mental health field. Especially in this small a group, it's been possible to effectively work out ways to deal with inappropriate behavior and usually eliminate it over a period of time. We have a very peaceful, happy home most of the time."

"The guys," as Mrs. Bright refers to the residents collectively, all attend he Adult Developmental Activities Program in Greenville each weekday from about 9 a.m. to about 3 p.m. "They fit in very well here," Carl Rothrock, ADAP director said. "Right now all of them are involved in a vocational training project which seeks to teach work-site behaviors like staying at a task, working without distracting one's neighbors, and doing a quality job. They're all involved in building dog houses, toy boxes and sun chairs which are sold to the public to help meet the expenses of the program."

A GROUP HOME PORTRAIT — with residents and a portion of the staff

During home hours, each can either enjoy the privacy of his own room or participate in group activities. There is always supervision. At least two staff members are always on duty. Outings like going to movies and shopping centers are planned often for the group, and the staff also takes them out individually or in twos occasionally.

Bill is the greatest animal lover of the group and recently he's become a horseback rider. "Bill started talking about riding a horse one day," Mrs. Bright said, "and I said, 'No, Bill, you can't do that.' He asked several more times and I answered no. Then he asked why and I couldn't think of a good reason. So we arranged for horseback riding lessons at Hayfield Farms near Ayden and he's just loved going there and enjoying the horses and other animals."

Robbie is the more ardent musician of the group. He has a rare capability — perfect pitch — and plays the piano and ukelele and is learning guitar. All five enjoy music and participate in music therapy conducted by Dr. Rosemary Fischer of East Carolina University. At Christmas they performed at the group home for their parents and other guests and at St. Timothy's Episcopal Church in Greenville.

Although all the men take some interest, Bill is the gardening enthusiast in the group. During the growing season, he's often the one who's out in the home's vegetable garden finding the ripest best tomato for use in that night's supper.

Larry and Allen often turn on the stereo and dance for the group. The whole group has also attended organized dances at the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center.

Tom does not talk at all, but is pleasant and has a good sense of humor that he expresses non-verbally. He's enjoys mechanical things.

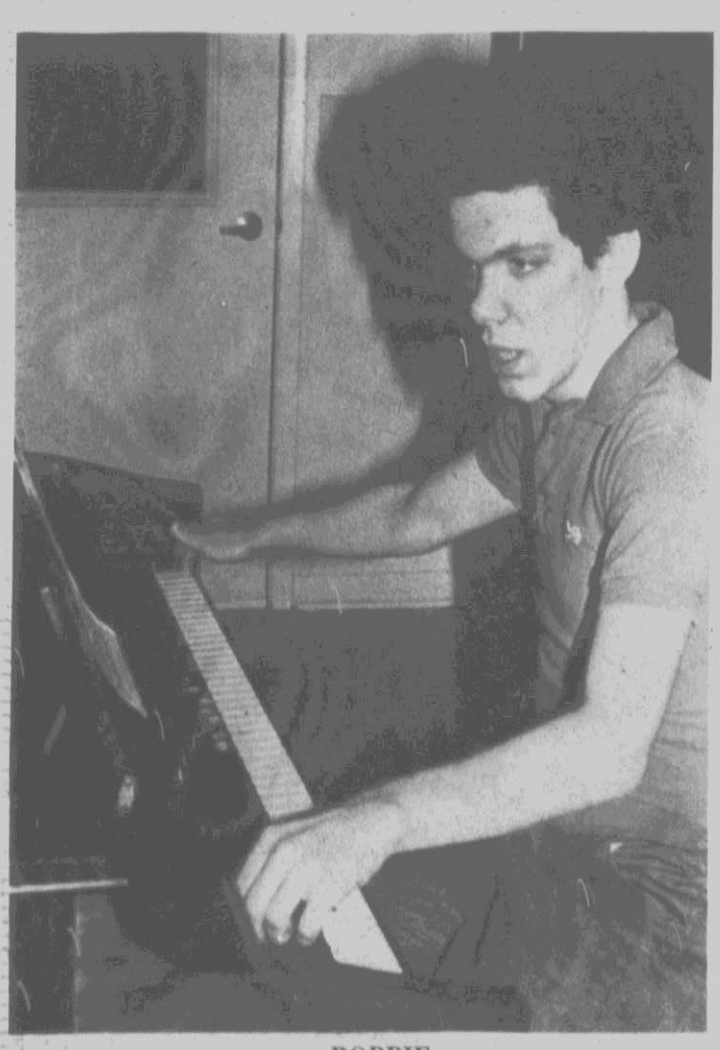

Each keeps his own room and decorates it to his own taste. Some are neater than others.

All five have a good relationship with a part-terrier who moved in uninvited and won their hearts several months ago. His name is Scruffy and he has his very own house, built by the guys themselves at ADAP.

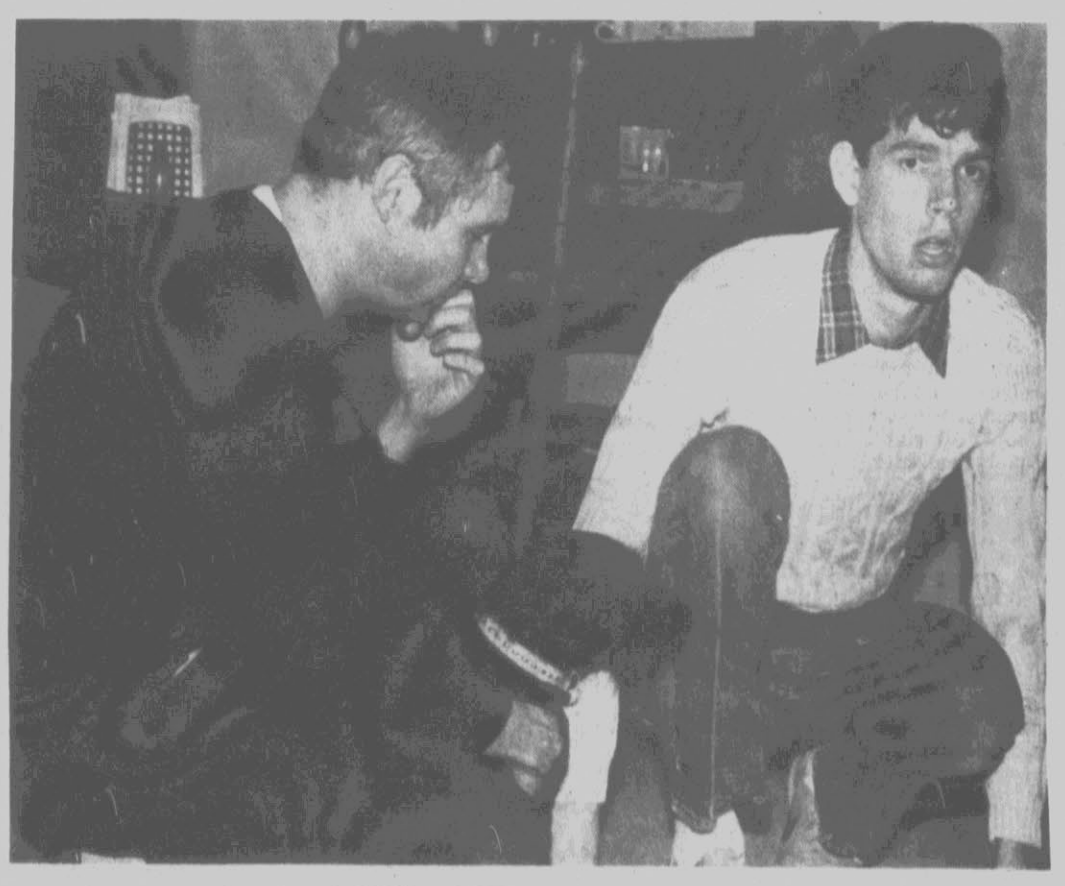

Each of the five enjoys seeing his families often. Families are encouraged to visit at any time they wish and to keep in touch by telephone. Holidays and other special occasions can be celebrated at home. Allen spent his birthday last week at home with his parents.

"This is the most intense level of care offered at the local level," Debbie Conklin, director of mental retardation programs in Pitt County, said of the Grifton group home. "We're just so pleased with what a fine facility we have and what good staff. The staff members have done a great job with these men and have even contributed their expertise to other components of our county program."

Florida Man Is Grower of Pineapples

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

LAKE PLACID, Fla. (AP) — With only five acres of crop this year, Harold "Jake" Emminger won't compete with Hawaii. But he may well be the pineapple king of Florida.

"I don't know why someone else hasn't copied this," comments Emminger, in his small roadside shop on U.S. 27 where travelers stop for cold pineapple juice. "I think this is the only pineapple plantation in the state now."

Emminger, 66, never thought about raising the bromeliad fruit (pineapple is not citrus) as a young man in Philadelphia.

But in World War II, he served as a navigator on B-26s and became enamored with Florida while stationed at MacDill Air Force Base near Tampa. Emminger came here in 1952 and bought 35 acres about four miles south of Lake Placid. "I didn't know what I was going to do," he said. "I thought about raising bullfrogs or asparagus. Then I tasted a pineapple and I decided."

He also attributes his decision to the late D.S. Radebaugh, who at that time had been raising pineapples in the area for 40 years.

"I sent away for books and Radebaugh taught me," Emminger explains.

In 1957, a freeze reduced his plants by half. To save the fruit, he began making preserves, which continue to be one of the big sellers at his Plantation Paradise. In a 12-by-12 kitchen to the side of the small retail shop, Emminger uses four gas burners and some open kettles to make nine combinations of preserves using pineapple as the base.

Two types of wine made for him in Tampa are also on the shelves along with candies and other items, all from pineapples.

Although Emminger has cultivated as much at 15 acres of pineapples over the years, he's cut down the acreage as he admittedly enters semiretirement.

He says growing pineapples offers fewer problems than citrus, but says they are more susceptible to cold temperatures.

Each pineapple plant produces one fruit per year. With 60,000 to 80,000 plants, Emminger harvests 30,000-40,000 pineapples between June and August each year.

When those are gone, Emminger imports more from Mexico. "It's getting so it's just as cheap to import them as to raise them," he said.

The mature pineapple plants average about 3 feet in height and the fruit weighs 4-8 pounds.

Pineapples have been grown in Florida since 1860, about 40 years before Hawaii started growing them, and production reached over a million boxes a year by 1910. Most of the fruit was grown in Indian River, St. Lucie, Martin, Charlotte and Lee counties, as well as in some of the Florida Keys.

In 1914, the United States lifted a tariff on Cuban pineapples, which soon put Florida plantations out of business. Emminger doesn't have to worry about Cuban competition these days, as all Cuban imports have been banned since the United States imposed an economic embargo in 1961.

Emminger has found that few visitors know a lot about pineapples.

"Some people think they grow under the ground like radishes or carrots," he said. "Others think they grow on palm trees."

After a moment, he added: "I'm not sure I knew, either, before I started growing them."

PREVENTION OF CHIMNEY FIRES

A buildup of creosote in the chimney is the cause of chimney fires, and as little as 1/4 inch of creosote can be enough to fuel a chimney fire. Although creosote can never be eliminated, the rate of buildup can be reduced by a few practical steps.

Firewood selection is important. People commonly like to burn firewood that has been cut and dried for at least six months. Recent testing has shown that at a medium to high burn rate, more creosote is built up when dry wood is used. At a low burn rate, creosote is produced equally by moist or dry wood. If softwood is burned, it is a good idea to mix the softwood with larger amounts of hardwood in each fire.

If the heater is too large, the wood must be burned slowly to keep from overheating the house. Slow burning increases the amount of smoke and the amount of creosote formed. Smaller loads of wood in a properly sized heater burn hotter and cleaner.

When the heater is used daily, a hot fire should be built and allowed to burn for five to 30 minutes depending on your type of chimney. Factory-built chimneys require less time than masonry chimneys. Place a stovepipe or oven temperature near the heater on the first section of stovepipe. Allow the surface temperture of the stovepipe to reach 450 to 500 degrees Farenheit. Small creosote deposits will burn off the heater, stovepipe and chimney lining.

Check the smoke leaving your chimney. If there is little visible smoke, this indicates that your heater is operating near optimum and little creosote buildup should occur. Optimum burn conditions normally produce a surface temperature reading on the stovepipe of between 300 to 350 degrees Farenheit.

In case of chimney fire, do these things:

•Call the fire department.

•Cut off air to the fire. If it is a wood stove, close the draft and damper controls. If it is a fireplace, cover the opening with a rigid, non-combustible material. Do not close the fireplace damper because smoke will enter the room.

•Get everyone out of the house.

•Do not pour or spray water down the chimney because the masonry may crack or the stainless steel liner may distort.

•Wet roof down to prevent sparks from setting it on fire.

•After fire is out, clean the chimney thoroughly and inspect for damage.

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Funeral's Likely To End Feuding

DEAR ABBY: I am a senior citizen who wrote to the editor of my local paper asking him to repeat an article of yours that appeared 15 years ago because it made a big difference in my family, and I thought it could help others.

He told me he couldn't do it, so I am sending it to you hoping you will repeat that one letter. I know of a family that needs to see that article, and I am sure there must be plenty of others.

MRS. S.
ON BOSLEY STREET

DEAR MRS. S.: I agree. It's worth another run:

DEAR ABBY: I just read about the mother who was brokenhearted because her son and daughter (both married with families) hadn't spoken to each other for years and were the reason she could not have complete family get-togethers.

If my own experience means anything, tell that mother not to worry. Eventually they'll make up. And although she won't live to see it, she will be the cause of it, because it will take place at her funeral!

Since everyone will be crying anyway, the two who finally decided to make up won't be conspicuous—even though they'll be crying twice as hard as everyone else. And with good reason.

Think about it, kids. Sign me ...

CRIED ME A RIVER

DEAR CRIED: I wonder how many others have to bury a relative before they bury the hatchet. It's something to think about, all right. Thanks for a timely reminder.

DEAR ABBY: My wife refuses to have sex with me. She refuses to touch me, or let me touch her. This has been going on for six weeks because of something she says I said to her during an argument. (She won't tell me what it was.) Further, she says she will continue to withhold sex until she is ready to change—it may be another week, month or year.

I say she is using sex as a weapon to prove there is an area over which she has absolute control. What should I do? I can't live this way, and I don't want to end our marriage—but I think physical love is a necessary part of marriage.

OUT IN THE COLD

DEAR OUT: If your wife enjoyed the physical part of your marriage as much as you, she wouldn't be denying herself that pleasure for six weeks—or "maybe a year"—in order to punish you. Airing your differences openly and honestly is as important in marriage as physical love. I urge you to seek counseling before this stalemate continues for another day—not to mention the nights.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Please, please, please, stop with the how-to-eat-a-banana bit! Here is the solution: Line up 10 monkeys, each with three bananas. Place 10 observers from Eastern finishing schools each with a secret ballot, and have them vote on which monkey has the preferred method of eating a banana, based on neatness, speed of consumption and thoroughness.

I'll bet you find that the bananas should be eaten three at a time, skin and all. It's a jungle out there!

THE MISSING LINK

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend is really a neat guy and we don't have any problems, but there is one thing that bothers me. He likes to drive out to the cemetery to make out. I'm not superstitious or anything like that, but it is kind of spooky parked up there with all the tombstones.

I love him a lot and don't want to say anything to spoil our relationship, but how can I tell him I wish he could find another place to park?

FREDDY'S GIRL

DEAR GIRL: Tell Freddy you don't mean to put him down, but you don't dig the surroundings, so how about finding a place that's not so down to earth.

* * *

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

For the first time in the history of professional football, fans are being given a timeout.

A spokesman for NBC sports said that for one full minute during today's pre-game show of the Super Bowl, the screen will go black and give viewers a chance to hit the refrigerator or the bathroom. That interlude will cost the network $600,000 in advertising revenue. What a guy.

They didn't have to do that. The Super Bowl only has two hours of pre-game show, 3½ hours of game and a half-hour of post-game. Men have sat through six hours of sports before and never complained. Bionic kidneys are a part of the whole macho make-up.

When I told my husband about the decision, however, he was less than excited about it.

"Who called a timeout?" he asked angrily.

"The network."

"What am I supposed to do for a whole minute?"

"I guess some men felt the need to leave their chair."

"Look," he said, "watching football is not a game for sissies. No pain! Does anyone leave their seats at Wimbledon? Do they signal timeout for fans watching the World Series? Do the hockey team fans go out for a break? Next thing you know they'll allow viewers to talk during a game."

"Get hold of yourself," I said.

"What do they think they're dealing with? Amateur Armchair Quarterbacks? I'm a pro. Remember the time in '79 when the Steelers and the Cowboys were playing in Miami? I thought I was going to blackout, but I hung in there. Armchair quarterbacks have their rules, too, you know."

"What rules?"

"Did you ever see me fumble a flip-top can? Miss my mouth with the popcorn and have to leave the game with an eye injury? Call time out to answer a phone call or say hello to my mother? Have I ever been penalized for unnecessary conversation?"

"You blinked once when you watched three bowls on New Year's Day."

"That was different. I was out of shape. I don't like the idea of censoring a whole minute of the game. Today, a minute. Tomorrow, the replays."

"It's not a game," I said. "It's only the activities before the game begins. Just look upon it as another bowl event: Super Flush Sunday."

"We're going to have to come up with a rule to cover it," he mused. "Anyone who gets back late should have to move their chair back 15 yards from the TV screen."

FOCUS On... Ayden-Grifton High School

By DANA TYNDALL

Who had the face that launched a thousand ships? What is a substance that turns litmus paper red? Most people wouldn't know the answers to these questions, but a member of the Ayden-Grifton Quiz Bowl team could immediately inform you that the famous face belonged to Helen of Troy and acid turns litmus paper red.

Members of the school's Quiz Bowl team this year are Jeremy Shadle, Meredith Page, Bob Rodebaugh, and Kathy Day. Alternates include Billy Coggins, Michael Little, Todd Pfalzgraf, Missy Rose, Lesley Thibodeaux, Michael Tripp, and Curtis Wilson.

Though the alternates' main job is to be available in case a member is unable to attend a Quiz Bowl, they practice as much as the members. Once a week for about an hour after school, the members and alternates separate into teams and go through practice rounds under the supervision of Linda Leich, their sponsor. The questions are much like ones you would find in a Trivial Pursuit game, and they deal with all areas of study and entertainment--history, science, literature, sports, and current events to name just a few. The pressure on these students to know so much about so many things would seem to be strenuous enough, but according to them, that doesn't compare with the pressure of actually being on stage. Says Billy Coggins, "You really sweat when your turn comes!" However, they all agree the satisfaction is worth the effort, and as Meredith Page adds, "You do learn a lot. Quiz Bowl is really the pursuit of knowledge."

After a preview on January 25, which consists of a practice session and an explanation of rules and procedures, the team will go on to the county Quiz Bowl. On Saturday, Feb. 1 at 10 a.m. the Ayden-Grifton team will compete with teams from D.H. Conley, North Pitt, Farmville Central, and Rose High. The Quiz Bowl will be at the East Branch Library (2000 Cedar Lane, Greenville) and is open to the public.

THE ROMANTIC MEANINGS OF FLOWERS FOR VALENTINES

While Valentines use all flowers today to express their romantic feelings, there was a time when certain blooms had specific meanings, according to Cox Floral Service of Greenville, N.C.

In the Victorian era, a number of authors wrote little books titled "The Language of Flowers" so that lovers could exchange hidden messages with their floral gifts.

White roses with yellow tulips, for example, meant, "I am worthy of you and hopelessly in love."

A swain in hot water with his beloved might have sent a bouquet of daisies and chrysanthemums to say, "I am innocent and telling the truth."

Bachelors who wanted to stay that way sent, naturally, bachelor's buttons while those interested in marriage included ivy in their bouquets.

Fern meant you were fascinated and a yellow rose said you were jealous. Turndowns also were possible, with a striped carnation denoting refusal and a yellow carnation standing for disdain.

For the emphatic, a four-leaf clover, if it could be found, demanded: "Be mine!" An equally strong retort could have been an ice plant, which says, "Your looks freeze me."

Tuscaroras Criticize Membership Sales

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Chief Wise Owl says his mail-order sales of $20 honorary memberships in the Tuscarora tribe benefit the whole tribe, but other chiefs in the splintered North Carolina Indian band say Wise Owl is alone in his enterprise.

"I'm trying to build a showcase reservation to show them that Indians can get involved, that we don't have to stand around with our hands out to the government," said Wise Owl of the Drowning Creek Reservation near Maxton in Robeson County, about 100 miles east of Charlotte.

But other Tuscaroras, noting that the reservation is not recognized by the state or federal governments, say Wise Owl is not a real chief and the money he earns doesn't help the tribe as a whole.

"I know what makes him tick — a dollar — but I don't know what he's up to," said Bob Brewington, chief of the Tuscarora Nation. "He don't have anything to do with our nation at all."

Brawleigh Graham, chief of the Tuscarora Tribe of North Carolina, said Wise Owl is "just representing himself."

"He don't have a tribe as such," said Graham. "I really don't know what he is doing with the money."

The chiefs of two other factions of the Tuscarora — Keever Locklear of the Eastern Carolina Tuscarora and Vernon Locklear of the Hatteras Tuscarora — could not be reached for comment.

Chief Wise Owl, whose given name is Huel Cummings, declined a reporter's request to visit Drowning Creek. He also declined to give his age, but he said he weighs 648 pounds — down from 859 a few years ago.

He has an ad with his photograph in the December issue of California Magazine that says, "Your help is urgently needed by the Tuscarora Indian Tribe on Drowning Creek Reservation."

The ad invites the reader to become an honorary lifetime member of the tribe and says a "contribution of $20 or more will help American Indians of limited means to purchase the necessities of life."

Cummings said he didn't know how much money the ads have brought in. But he said he has given away thousands of honorary memberships for free.

"Thousands of children write me and say, 'Dear Chief, please let me be a member,'" he said. "I send them the card — the money's not important. ... Children who are terminally ill, whole clubs of Boy Scouts — you'd be amazed how glad they are."

Cummings said it "breaks my heart" that other Tuscaroras don't think he's legitimate.

Graham, also known as Chief Young Bear, said all five Tuscarora factions agreed on Sept. 2, 1983, to unite and elect him tribal chief. But disputes arose and they split up again.

The tribe, which claims up to 10,000 members, has a confusing history. Lumbee Indians in the area claim the Tuscarora are simply a faction of Lumbees, but the Tuscarora have been trying to get state and federal recognition as a separate group.

Federal recognition as Indians — which even the Lumbees don't have — could lead to land and financial benefits. The trouble is the lingering disagreement over who the Lumbees and Tuscarora really are.

Some have theorized that the Lumbees are descendants of settlers from Sir Walter Raleigh's Lost Colony, others say they may be a mixture of Tuscarora, Cheraw and Waccamaw Indians. Others say they are mixed white and black.

Tuscarora Indians lived in North Carolina during the 1700s, but most were forced to move to New York State before the turn of the century, said Bruce Jones, executive director of the state Commission of Indian Affairs. It's possible a remnant remained in the state, he said.

In 1885, Congress recognized the Indians in Robeson County as Croatan Indians. But it said they would not be entitled to the benefits other Indians got, said Julian Pierce, director of Lumbee River Legal Services, which has been fighting a legal battle for full recognition.

In 1911, the tribal name Croatan was changed to the Indians of Robeson County, he said. In 1913, they became the Cherokee Indians of Robeson County.

Cherokees in the western part of the state objected, and in a 1953 referendum in Robeson County, the name was changed to Lumbee Indians, Pierce said.

By 1972, distrust had developed between the rural Robeson County Indians and those living in Pembroke, said Pierce. The rural Indians felt that the Indians in town were not fighting hard enough to keep their separate school system, which was being integrated with other schools, he said.

Pierce said the rural Indians went to court, and a judge suggested that they start calling themselves Tuscarora.

Tuscaroras, of course, dispute that scenario, saying they have traced their ancestry back to the original Tuscaroras.

In 1935, said Graham, scientists tested blood and skull shapes of Indians living in Robeson County and found 209 "pureblood" Indians. Today's Tuscarora — and many Lumbees — are their descendants, he said.

"That's the crux of the whole thing," he said. "They (the scientists) said 209 people were legitimately entitled for benefits from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, but the government refused to give us benefits. ... We have to go through the process of proving the linkage. It's been a problem."

Cummings said remnants of the Tuscarora — his ancestors — moved to the Drowning Creek area in the 1800s. Even by 1920, he said, some were still fluent in the Tuscarora language.

But most of the heritage has been lost, he said.

"American Indians have always taken the back seat," Cummings said. "We've never been involved like we should. It's part of being called a minority when we should be called American."

Civil War Scenes Shown

BEAUFORT — Similar in style to the recently exhibited Currier and Ives lithographs, the "New Bern In the News" display is comprised of 13 Civil War era engravings of battles which occured during the Burnside expedition. The show is now on view at the N.C. Maritime Museum, Beaufort.

"Harpers Weekly" and "Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper" were the two major newspapers of the North during this time. Artists and reporters were assigned to document the battles at Hatteras Island, Roanoke Island, New Bern and Morehead City during the Civil War.

Although these accounts of northern newspapers are biased, they remain the only visual documentation of Civil War activity in the area.

Editions dated 1882 and 1883 show the storming of Fort Thompson and other scenes of New Bern, and other scenes of Washington, N.C., Beaufort and Fort Macon.

Loaned to the N.C. Maritime Museum by the Tryon Palace Restoration Complex, this exhibit may be viewed though March 7. Museum hours are weekdays 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays, 2-5 p.m.

Herman Concert

RALEIGH — The Woody Herman Band will be in concert at 8 p.m. Friday in Stewart Theatre on the North Carolina State University campus. Tickets are priced at $9 and can be reserved by calling the box office at 737-3104.

The Pilgrim ships Mayflower and Speedwell sailed from England in 1620.

Hartigan Lecture Set

RALEIGH — Abstract expressionist artist Grace Hartigan will speak on "Thirty-Five Years of Painting" at 8 p.m. Thursday at the North Carolina Museum of Art, Raleigh. The program is free and open to the public. One of her paintings, "Interior with Mexican Doll" is in NCMA's permanent collection.

New Stamp Issues Are Outlined

By SYD KRONISH
AP Newsfeatures

Human rights activist Sojourner Truth will be honored on a new 22-cent U.S. stamp — the latest in the Black Heritage Series.

Sojourner Truth, born about 1797 in Hurley, N.Y., spent her early adult life in slavery. When she acquired her freedom she went to New York City to seek her livelihood. However, in 1843, she decided to travel to many states lecturing against slavery.

After the Civil War, Sojourner Truth dedicated her life to the total enfranchisement and education of the newly freed slaves. She noted that "they have to learn to be free" because their minds were still enslaved even though their bodies had been freed. She died Nov. 26, 1883.

First day cancellations are available in the usual two methods.

Collectors desiring to affix their own stamps may purchase them at their local post office and place in the upper right corner. Peelable address labels are recommended. No remittance is required. Send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Sojourner Truth Stamp, New Paltz, NY 12561-9991. Your envelopes should be postmarked no later than March 6.

If you prefer to have the U.S. Postal Service affix the stamps, enclose a money order for 22 cents per stamp. Send to: Sojourner Truth Stamp, Postmaster, New Paltz, NY 12561-9992. Deadline date is March 6.

The 1985 Commemorative Mint Set is now on sale at philatelic centers and post offices normally selling philatelic products. It costs $8.00 and also is available by mail order from the Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, D.C. 20265-9997.

The mint set contains a total of 27 stamps; three blocks of four and 15 single issues, including the Love stamp. The stamps are enclosed in a 28-page, full-color illustrated album with an interesting background story on each stamp. Plastic mounts are included.

The special philatelic cover and insert card commemorating the centennial of the Statue of Liberty is now available, reports the USPS.

The $10.00 item is being sold at selected post offices and philatelic centers nationwide. You may order by mail, but enclose an additional 50 cents as a handling fee. Send to: Statue of Liberty Cover, Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, D.C. 20265-9978.

Belize will overprint a sheetlet of 10 different stamps and one souvenir sheet marking the 50th anniversary of the first British Empire Commonwealth-wide philatelic omnibus in order to publicize the 1986 World Cup Football (soccer) championship in neighboring Mexico.

A set of eight stamps and four souvenir sheets were scheduled to be issued by the British Virgin Islands last July 22. The stamps were to honor singer Michael Jackson as part of a new series of "Popular Musicians." A last minute decision by the Foreign Office canceled the set because of a longstanding policy that the only living persons depicted on their stamps are members of the British Monarchy.

JACKSON STATUE — Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., is working to raise $150,000 to erect a copy of the equestrian statue of Andrew Jackson (shown above) that stands in Lafayette Park in Washington, D.C., to be erected in Jacksonville, Fla. Bennett has raised $45,000 towards a copy of the sculpture by Clark Mills which shows a victorious Jackson reviewing his troops after the battle of New Orleans in 1815. (AP Laserphoto by J. Trip To Mayan Land

CULLOWHEE — Two Western Carolina University (WCU) anthropologits will lead a 17-day trip to the Yucatan in Mexico from May 12-28 for students or others interested in the Mayan culture.

Ann Rogers, archaeologist, and Patrick Morris, ethnologist, are the two heading the study course. They have led five trips to the Yucatan and will teach courses about the Mayan culture in conjunction with the trip.

Those taking the trip will visit more than 20 archaeological sites, colonial towns and villages, as well as the Gulf of Mexico and Caribbean coasts of Mexico. Some of the sites were occupied as along as 3,000 years ago, but most Mayan structures were built between 500 and 1,200 A.D.

Among sites to be visited are Sayil, Kabah, Uxmal, Labna, Mayapan, Chichen Itza, Tulum, Ticul and Valladolid.

The trip is open to any interested person, but all participants must register for the two courses. Students may receive six hours undergraduate or graduate credit, or the courses may be taken without credit.

Cost per person is $950, plus tuition, and covers round trip air fare from Atlanta to Merida in the Yucatan, accommodations in Mexico, ground transportation, etc.

Reservations must be made by Feb. 17. For additional information or to register, contact Rogers or Morris at WCU, telephone 704/227-7268.

Raising large reptiles is easy, says Clemons. They need no personal care and are content with once-weekly feedings.

On alternating weeks they eat a ton of dead chickens discarded by local poultry farms or an equal amount of "trash" fish that local fisheries can't use.

Raising Gators Is Easy

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

PALMDALE, Fla. (AP) — Cecil Clemons is a farmer. He doesn't plant anything, harvests only when he has a customer and spends most of his time talking to tourists who visit his place on U.S. 27 in central Florida.

Although the 16 acres and home he has here are in a rather lonely spot, Clemons has no fear of burglars or trespassers.

He owns "Gatorama."

"You don't make a house pet out of them," laughs Clemons at the entrance, where $2.50 provides a visit with about 2,000 reptiles — 1,500 alligators and 500 crocodiles. The latter makes "Gatorama" the largest crocodile farm in the United States, says Clemons, who was born in Kissimmee 60-odd years ago.

Clemons says he has been around gators "since I was big enough to tote a gun." He's never been seriously hurt by them, he says, explaining that he has due respect for the species.

And, he says, "I'm a little more particular with crocodiles."

In the 1940s and 1950s, Clemons had an alligator side show on the New Jersey coast and in 1957 moved here to build his reptile farm.

He purchased his initial stock in Wilmington, N.C., and, in 1961, spent four months in Jamaica trapping the lizard-like creatures that became the basis of his breeding stock.

Clemons sells and ships gators and crocodiles around the world, ostensibly to others who need breeding stock. Because of his long attachment to the reptiles, he will not sell to anyone admitting plans to use them for their meat or hides.

Invitation To Display

DURHAM — The North Carolina Museum of Life and Science has issued an open invitation to amateur collectors in the fields of natural history and science to share their collections with the public.

On Sunday, Feb. 2, registered exhibitors can mount displays at the museum. The museum is accepting registrants on a first come, first served basis. For more details, call 477-0431.

Student Musicians To Get Instruction

The Eastern Carolina Orchestra and Chamber Music Association (ECONCMA) will again sponsor chamber music instruction for students in the consolidated Pitt County Schools. This year's program includes strings, b...ss and piano.

The program of instruction will include weekly rehearsal-coaching sessions at East Carolina University in February, March and April. A public performance will be held in May on the ECU campus.

Sponsored in part by a grant from Pitt/Greenville Arts Council, the program will hold brief auditions at 7 p.m. Feb. 3 in the A.J. Fletcher Music Center on the campus. The auditions will be 8 to 10 minutes and will include only the performance of a piece prepared in advance by the student.

For more information, contact Mrs. Joanne Bath at 756-0379; Dr. Charles Moore at 756-0562; or Robert Hause at 756-5793.

NCNB To Sponsor Art Show at GMA

The Greenville Museum of Art will exhibit selections from the NCNB Corporate Collection during February. The show will include a variety of media, drawings, oils and acrylics, mixed media, watercolors and prints, all created by North Carolina artists.

NCNB owns more than 3,000 works of art and their Corporate Art Program actively supports the development of major regional artists. Hugh L. McColl, chairman of the Corporation's board, said, "We believe that when the arts thrive, our communities thrive. Active support in the arts can make the difference between an average community and a great one."

Program On Preserving Paper Items

BEAUFORT — At 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, in the auditorium of the North Carolina Maritime Museum, Lee Bumgarner, museum conservator, will present a program on ways to protect old documents and photographs at home. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Bumgarner will discuss enemies of paper and photographs, show slides of their destructive habits, and offer ways to combat these harmful predators.

Persons attending are asked to bring an item or two — albums, photos, letters, etc. for advice or referral.

A continuing service, PAPARS (Photographic and Paper Artifact Advisory and Referral Service), is available to the public by appointment. Persons who wish to avail themselves of this service are to phone the museum weekdays at 728-7317 to set up an appointment with Bumgarner.

Capture The Boating Party Colors To Celebrate The Pleasures Of Spring!

The sun is high, the air is sweet, and out of the water the scene is set for Estee Lauder's Boating Party Colors, her new makeup collection for spring. A fresh, clean, country-time scene where everything is splashed with color from cool green shore to cool green shore . . . a world of pastoral pleasures and picnics on the grass. Estee Lauder captures these enticing shades for her brilliant new Boating Party colors, in three important palettes:
Garden Brights. Lively pink, green and iris for eyes. Peony, fresh raspberry and ripe melon lips and cheeks. Watercolors. Pale gray, blue and yellow on eyes. Cheeks and lips look innocent in soft rose, shy pink, and pearly nude beige. Twilight Shadows. Mysterious teal, rich wine and mellow peach for eyes. New brown roses and reds color cheeks and lips. These are the new colors that move right along with spring fashion, where batiks and primitives, flower prints, plaids and checks splash it up together, in simple body-conscious shapes. And this is the way Estee Lauder celebrates it all, with her good-to-be-alive, bright and breezy, come-to-the-party colors. Don't miss the boat.

Figurative Art At NCMA

By Sharon Broom
N.C. Museum of Art

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Museum of Art will present "American Figurative Painting Since 1950," an exhibition of 15 works from the Sara Roby Foundation Collection, Feb. 1-April 27.

The Foundation was established in 1955 by Mrs. Roby, a long-time resident of New York City. She currently resides in Nantucket, Mass. Her primary purpose was to form a collection of works in various media by American artists and to lend them to institutions throughout the U.S. and abroad. Mrs. Roby sought to combat the apparent tyranny of abstract movements in art by demonstrating that the realist tradition continued to thrive. Her collection, with its wide diversity, represents realism in its many forms.

Included in the exhibition are paintings by Edward Hopper and Reginald Marsh, whose work is characterized by an uncompromising realism. In Hopper's "Cape Cod Morning" (1950), the subject is a woman gazing from a window. The isolated figure, however, is presented in a straightforward rather than of sentimental manner.

Works by a slightly younger generation of artists, including Paul Cadmus, Honore Sharrer and George Tooker, demonstrate their interest in "magic realism," which emphasizes the inexplicable and surreal. Realism as social commentary is seen in works by Philip Evergood and Jacob Lawrence, while satire and fantasy are employed by Roy de Forest.

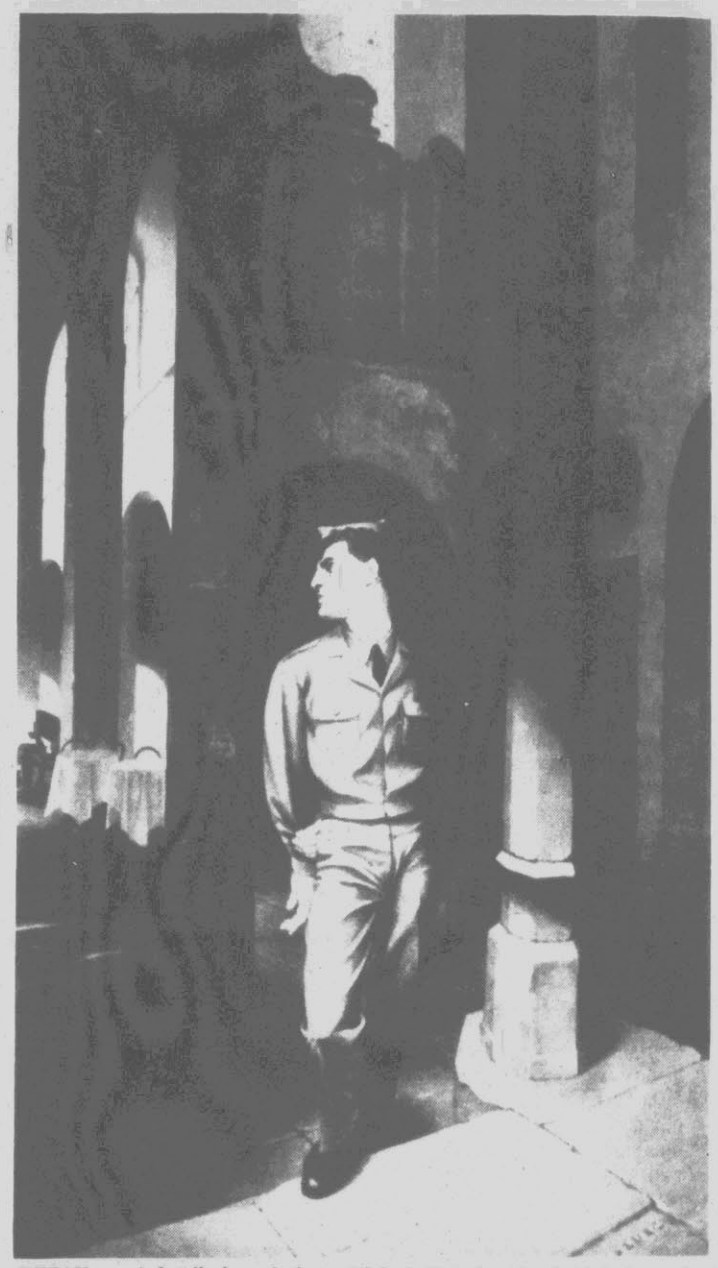

Other artists represented in the exhibition are Charles Burchfield, Yasuo Kuniyoshi, Bruce Kurland, Gregory Gillespie, Raphael Soyer and Saul Steinberg.

The exhibition is accompanied by a free gallery guide written by Huston Paschal, assistant curator at the North Carolina Museum of Art. A poster which illustrates Hopper's "Cape Cod Morning" is available in the Museum Shop.

In conjunction with the exhibition, films on the work of Edward Hopper and Jacob Lawerence will be shown Feb. 2 at 3 p.m. A film on Paul Cadmus will be shown March 2 at 3 p.m. The free programs are part of a series of films on American artists.

The exhbition has been lent by the Sara Roby Foundation Collection, courtesy of the American Federation of the Arts. It is supported in part by the North Carolina Museum of Art Foundation.

Museum hours are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday; 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday; noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. The museum is closed on Monday and Tuesday. There is no admission charge. For more information, call 833-1935.

Grifton Forms Folklore Group

GRIFTON — A group of Pitt and Lenoir County citizens recently met at the Grifton Civic Center with Dr. Karen Baldwin of East Carolina University in the first of a series of workshops designed to teach local citizens how to identify area folk artists and how to record information so others may learn traditional arts and crafts.

The project is funded by a grant to Grifton by the North Carolina Arts Council, with local support and volunteer help. Interested persons are welcome to participate. (Call Mrs. Charlotte Betts at 524-5356).

As defined by Dr. Baldwin, traditional folk artists and craftspersons are those whose creative skills have been learned from family and friends, rather than through formal class training.

During the workshop, Dr. Baldwin discussed basic techniques for locating, identifying and recording the traditional work of these folk artists, and showed slides of typical Eastern North Carolina folk skills, such as quilting, crocheting with twine, basketmaking with pine needles, wood carving and turning, soapmaking and traditional cooking. Other types of folk crafts might include making nets, hunting knives and other tools for farm and rural living.

Leads on persons engaged in folk art will be talked to and perhaps tape recorded on the "how to's" as well as photograph the work of area resource persons.

The study group's aim is to collect information about the folk cultural heritage of the Pitt-Lenoir County area. The recordings, photographs and written descriptions of local traditions will become part of the collection of the Grifton Historical Museum. Some of the local folk artists will be demonstrators at the annual Grifton Shad Festival on April 12-13.

Another workshop is scheduled at the Grifton Civic Center at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Dr. Baldwin is an associate professor of English and director of the ECU Folklore Archive. She has been on the faculty at ECU for nine years teaching courses in American folklore. She has also taught at Wayne University in Detroit and at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. She is a professional folklorist with a master's in folklore and a doctorate in folklore-folklife from the University of Pennsylvania. As a George C. Marshall Fellow, she also studied and did research in Copenhagen, Denmark.

Particular areas of interest to Dr. Baldwin are in family folklore, women's traditions, folklore and education, folk narrative, folk art and folk medicine. She has published several articles in these areas. She is now vice president of North Carolina Folklore Society.

Dr. Baldwin has given talks and workshops dealing with folklore in North Carolina for a number of community-based programs and organizations, including the Appalachian Women's Council, Lenoir County Arts Council, the Hiddenite Arts Center in Alexander County, the Davidson County Historical Museum, the N.C. Sea Grant Marine Resources Center in Manteo and the Greenville city schools.

For the past five years she has worked with curriculum development for folk arts as a consultant to the N.C. State Department of Public Instruction, Arts Education Division.

ECU News Bureau

Applications are being accepted for the 1986 East Carolina University program in Costa Rica, to be conducted during the first summer session from May 17-June 24. The program is open to interested, qualified community persons as well as students.

The program, which is the oldest of ECU's international study programs, gives students the opportunity to live and study in the Central American country and receive credit for between six and seven hours for courses taught in English and directed by two ECU professors.

Courses being offered are anthropology, peoples of South and Central America, geology, environmental geology, Spanish, and conversational Spanish practiced in a Spanish-speaking country. Spanish language courses are taught by a bilingual faculty member of the Universidad Nacional de Costa Rica. Other courses will be taught by Dr. John Bort of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Economics and Dr. Richard Mauger of the Department of Geology.

Projected costs are $975 for North Carolina residents and $1,686 for non-resident students.

The Costa Rica program is headquartered on the campus of the Universidad Nacional de Costa Rica at Heredia, Costa Rica, about seven miles from the capital, San Jose.

In addition to classroom instruction, the program offers such activities as field excursions to both the Pacific and Caribbean coasts; visits to banana plantations, national parks, lowland tropical forests, volcanoes and cloud forests, a coffee farm and processing plant, and excursions to San Jose and Cartego, major cities and cultural centers.

Complete information and application forms are available from the Coordinator of International Programs, College of Arts and Sciences, Brewster A-102, East Carolina University, Greenville, 757-6249.

Last Week For ECU Faculty Show

. . . a pastel drawing by Alix Hitchcock

. . . mixed media piece by Betty Petteway

Area art patrons who have made it an annual ritual to take in the yearly exhibition of art by faculty members of the School of Art at East Carolina University have only the coming week to see the 1986 offering. The show, which features one or more pieces by faculty members in all areas of the art school, is on view at the Gray Gallery in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center on the ECU campus.

Basically, the show is trend-revealing without projecting dramatic new developments. Gallery director Terry Nesbitt has hung the show with a nice feel for pleasing contrasts in art work diverse in size, style and material inherent in an exhibition dealing with a large number of artists each represented by a limited number of pieces.

The design of the spacious Gray Gallery, somewhat like a covered rectangular atrium lighted by windows on one side and at back, with movable dividers available to shape the space into a variety of areas, makes possible a wide choice of presentations.

In this year's show, there's one thing out of kilter with the basic format of the show — the presence of Edward Levine's large structural sculpture of pressed wood. The shape of the piece, a pie-shaped wedge with curved walls is interesting, but because of its size, it blocks the general view that would otherwise exist from any vantage point in the gallery. And the piece itself suffers from the lack of outdoors air and space that it needs for best advantage.

Viewers familiar with the contents of shows in past years will notice some discernible trends. Gone this year is the considerable display of some years past of ceramic and textile art.

Unless I inadvertantly missed some items, the only pieces of ceramics in the show are wall pieces by Charles Chamberlain and a single free-standing form, a plant pot by Joe Buske. In textiles, the single lonely example is a handsome squared hanging piece of white linen and subtle small squares in pale colored metallic threads.

A few brief general observations:

• Photography is fairly well represented with color photographs shown by Mindy Machanic, Henry Stindt and Dorothy Satterfield. Machanic has a discerning eye for lovely isolated details in earth colors; Stindt focuses on the rural element that includes the head portrait of a mule, and Satterfield is an effective storyteller with photographs taken in the Orient — bright eyes and big smiles of the childen of Muslem weavers in India, and a marvelous still-life photograph of weather-colored decorated rocks and faded prayer flags in Nepal are examples.

• Donald Sexauer's introspective self portrait, whimsical and yet bordering on a whisper of the sinister, is totally different in mood from a more traditional watercolor of Nova Scotia and one of his sketches of Viet Nam made on an assignment some years ago with the U.S. Army.

• There's a bit of a surprise in Norman Keller's standing sculpture "Farewell to Post-Modernism," a mixed media piece with a distinct classical form far different from his usual horizontal rugged pieces that suggest organic forms in nature shaped to his personal viewpoint.

• Mel Stanforth has ventured into heavier textures and colors than he employed in times past in near-minimal work; Clarence Morgan shows (for the first time I can recall) a black and white study, on a scale as large as his thick-textured paintings, and Trans Gordly continues his exploration of the male nude following a period of concentration on tropical-hued fruits and vegetables.

• Roxanne Reep has diversified the size of her elegant abstractions, and proves that in small as well as medium-sized work she has a fine lyrical touch. For this viewer, Paul Hartley's new work is something of a puzzle — crowded groups of figures on canvas that resemble oversize versions of rubbery children's toys — a decided turn-away from his art of recent years.

• Two faculty members who have not been on the scene as long as many of the older hands at the art school are Alix Hitchcock and Gary Mencosky. Hitchcock's pastel pieces, rich in symbols and Nemcosky's glowing colors in squares and circles depictions of man and wife are images with a high degree of visual appeal.

The evidence in this show is that the School of Art faculty artists, for the most part, are not resting on past laurels, but are searching out new avenues, new concepts in art.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

Continuing last week's theme, a common mis-take is having everything so matched it looks as if a decorator just left.

It is much more interesting to have a lid off a jar in a display. Flower arrangements, for example, are much more realistic looking if they are not in such a fixed position and a natural look is much more interesting. Remember, even in flower arranging odd numbers of a variety of different flowers adds interest. Different textures and mediums in an arrangement, such as Eucalyptus, Babies Breath and Iris for example, add a lot of variety. Three, five or seven stems are much more interesting.

Remember, a near miss is better than having all colors perfectly matched. A blend and light tints and dark shades of a hue create a more interesting look.

If one has a flower arrangement on a dining table it should be low enough so the guests can see each other.

Tasteful and interesting decorating is no simple matter and can always benefit from professional help. At Betsy Drake Interiors we have both the skills and resources required to add spark to your decor and help you achieve that special, unique look you are seeking. We invite you to visit our showroom or call to schedule an appointment in your home or business.

Viet Veterans Seek Design For Memorial

WINSTON-SALEM — The Vietnam Veterans Highway Memorial Design Competition has been set to begin March 1. The purpose of the competition is to find an original design for a monument that will pay honor to all Americans who served in Vietnam, with special focus on the North Carolinians who served.

The monument, to be built on a site off Interstate-85, south of Lexington, will include more than 58,000 bricks donated by the Brick Association of North Carolina member manufacturers. Each brick is to represent an American who was killed or listed as missing in action in Vietnam. The monument may also include other design elements.

The Vietnam Veterans Highway Memorial Competition is open to anyone residing in the United States, other than those associated with the competition and their immediate families. The competition is sponsored by the Brick Association of North Carolina, and is coordinated by the North Carolina State University School of Design and the Sawtooth Center for Visual Design.

The competition is scheduled to run from March 1 through May 9. For more information about the competition guidelines and procedures, write to the N.C. Vietnam Veterans Leadership Program, P.O. Box 11706, Winston-Salem, N.C., 27106.

'Progressive Farmer' Marks Its 100th Anniversary

By HOYT HARWELL
Associated Press Writer

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — From a black-and-white publication with downhome advice, corny jokes and suggestions that would set a modern career woman on edge, the Progressive Farmer has grown in 100 years into a slick magazine with 525,000 subscribers.

"Cold tea should be saved for your vinegar barrel; it sours easily and gives color and flavor," advised the first issue, eight pages published in Winston (now Winston-Salem), N.C., and sent to 500 subscribers in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia for $2 a year.

Now the monthly magazine's circulation covers 17 states from Arizona to Maryland and costs $12 a year.

"'My little boy,' said a gentleman, 'you ought not to eat those green apples. They are not good for little boys.' 'They hain't, eh?' the boy replied, with his mouth full. 'Guess you don't know much about 'em, mister. Three of these apples'll keep me out of school for a week.'"

That's a sample of a column of jokes appearing in the initial issue, published Feb. 10, 1886, and advertising "good stock buggies from fifty dollars, to the finest Columbus Phaeton."

Only two articles were on the front page, one devoted to tobacco and "how to manage it" and the other dealing with ensilage and silos.

Under an item entitled "Our Daughters Should be Taught Housework," a writer cautioned: "If our girls were taught to be domestic and home-loving, though not necessarily 'home-keeping' always, there would be fewer unhappy marriages, fewer houses made miserable by dissension between the heads, fewer complaints of servants, fewer causes of complaint."

The first publisher was Col. L.L. Polk, a former Confederate military leader who decided to fight for progress for farmers; his main weapon was a newspaper devoted to "agriculture and all its problems."

His effort started what has become Southern Progress Corp., the largest regional publisher of books and magazines in the country: Progressive Farmer, Southern Living, Creative Ideas for Living, Southern Accents, Oxmoor Books, and related businesses.

Last February, Time Inc. bought the Birmingham-based conglomerate for $480 million, the most ever paid for a magazine publishing company.

"Long before the word 'ecology' came into our everyday vocabulary, Progressive Farmer was urging readers each month to 'help make the South a land of plenty, a land of beauty, and a land of rural comradeship," said the chairman of Southern Progress Corp., Emory Cunningham.

Progressive Farmer's anniversary issue, due out shortly, includes a commemorative section with a cover painting of a rural scene, by Newell Wyeth, father of Andrew Wyeth, and text by Charles Kuralt, "On the Road" correspondent for CBS Television.

"I predict that we'll adjust and hang on and make do, as Southerners always have done," wrote Kuralt. "And that's why we — the South, the Southerner — will keep on surviving. We know how it's done."

Winterville Native Receives ALAN Award

ASHEVILLE — Author Sue Ellen Bridgers, a native of Winterville and daughter of Bett Abbott Hunsucker, was recently awarded the 1985 ALAN award for her contributions to the field of literature for adolescents by the Assembly of Literature for Adolescents of the National Council of Teachers of English.

Bridgers is the author of four young-adult books; "Home Before Dark," "All Together Now," "Notes for Another Life" and "Sara Will."

Her books have also received "The School Library Journal's Best Books for Young Adults" award, a Christopher Medal and a nomination for an American Book Award. "Sara Will" is scheduled to become a feature-length motion picture. A new book will be released by Harper & Row this year.

Brider's books deal about the land and people of the South.

The ALAN Award was established in 1973 by The Assembly on Literature for Adolescents of NCTE. The award is presented annually to either an author, scholar or educator who has made significant contributions to the field of young adult literature.

The award is not presented for a single work or event, but rather for a career of excellence in the field. Bridger's award comes not only for the literary quality of her fiction, but also for her efforts on behalf of adolescents and their literature.

UNC-CH Library Acquires Rare Early Americana Books

CHAPEL HILL — The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has acquired a collection of rare books tracing the discovery, conquest, exploration and colonization of the New World.

UNC purchased the collection — which includes original 16th, 17th and 18th century editions of the works of the Spanish chroniclers, or "cronistas" — from Bernard J. Flatow, a 1941 UNC alumnus who lives in Chapel Hill.

"My interest in the topics in the collection was started when I was a student here at the university," said Flatow, who spent 40 years gathering the sources in Latin America, North America and Europe.

"I always had it in my mind that some day I wanted this collection to be here at Carolina. It's a research resource that never can be duplicated again."

The acquisition means UNC's library holdings now rank with international centers with specialized collections in early Americana such as the John Carter Brown Library, the New York Public Library, the Library of Congress, the Harvard University Library, the Yale University Library, the British Library and the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris.

Although those libraries have larger overall collections of early Americana, none have all of the items in UNC's new collection, said UNC Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III.

"We appreciate Mr. Flatow's interest in the collection coming to his alma mater," Fordham said. "It will immeasurably enhance the library's research holdings in the area of early Spanish America history."

James F. Govan, university librarian, said, "This addition to our rare books immediately puts the university in the front rank of centers for research on Spanish exploration of the New World and significantly strengthens our other 16th century holdings."

UNC's academic affairs library received special contributions from the chancellor's office, the Arts and Sciences Foundation Inc. and the 16-campus UNC System's General Administration to use with its own funds to acquire the collection.

The final contribution came from the Educational Foundation Inc. — the organization which oversees UNC's endowment program for athletics — and made the purchase possible.

The collection includes 77 titles, many of which are in several volumes, of the works of the cronistas. Nearly two-thirds of the titles are in Spanish. The rest are in Italian, Latin or French. Sixteen additional titles of rare bibliographical sources that can be used for the study of those works also are part of the collection.

The earliest book in the collection, Augustinian monk Jacapo Foresti's "The Latest Reflections of All History," was published in 1503 and contains one of the first printed accounts of Christopher Columbus' voyages and discoveries.

Another book, published in 1555, "Relation and Commentaries," is a narration by Alvar Nunez Cabeza de Vaca on his expeditions through Florida to Mexico through territory that now is part of the southern border of the United States.

Other works contain the writings of military leaders and soldiers who were part of the expeditions that led to the conquests of Central America, South America and Mexico.

For example, Ferdinand Cortez' correspondences to Charles V are represented by a 1524 translation, "Ferdinand Cortez' Illustrious Account Concerning New Spain." Cortez, one of the Spanish conquistadors, conquered Mexico in 1519.

Books in the collection also provide accounts of the expeditions of other famous Spanish explorers of the New World such as Hernando de Soto, who discovered the Mississippi in 1541.

The new acquisition, called the Bernard J. Flatow Collection of Latin American Cronistas, is housed in the Rare Book Collection at the Louis R. Wilson Library. Although much of the library now is being renovated, the Rare Book Collection remains open to the public on the library's 7th floor. The temporary public entrance to the library is across from the Bell Tower.

A Compact History Of Past And Present Carolina Indians

NATIVE CAROLINIANS. THE INDIANS OF NORTH CAROLINA. By Theda Perdue. Raleigh, N.C., Division of Archives and History, North Carolina Department of Cultural Resources. 1985. Illustrated, paper, 74 pages. $3.00.

To a small degree, "Native Carolinians, the Indians of North Carolina," overlaps in coverage the contents of another book dealing with North Carolina Indians, "Indian Wars in North Carolina, 1663-1763," recently republished by the Division of Archives and History.

To a greater degree, the two volumes complement each other. The long years of tribal wars, skirmishes that as a rule had been limited conflicts, escalated into more complex forms of warfare after the arrival of the Europeans. By and large the Indians of what is now North Carolina were politically naive in dealing with the intruders into their lives and land.

It is against this background that author Perdue unfolds the verifiable history of North Carolina Indians, scrupulously avoiding what must be a temptation to enliven such a history with color and romance not part of the known record.

She begins her history with a recapitulation of the generally held theory that evidence points "to the migration of man from Asia to North America during the last stages of the Ice Age." From there she treads lightly in delving into conjectures that have a probable basis for truth in facts established through archaeological findings, before moving into the area of the patterns of lifestyles being confirmed through continuing archaeological discoveries and research.

At the time of the arrival of the first European, the languages spoken by Indians of present day North Carolina "can be grouped into three families: Alonquian, Siouan, and Iroquoian. The speakers of Algonquian languages lived primarily along the coast . . . Siouan-speaking tribes occupied the Cape Fear region and the piedmont . . . and those who spoke Iroquoian lived between the Siouan and Algonquian tribes on the coastal plain and in the western mountains."

Languages tended to separate the native Indians — the Iroquoian speaking Cherokee of the west were unable to understand the Iroquoian Tuscarora.

Nevertheless, the Indians "shared certain cultural traits" such as the wearing of few clothes and being "led rather than ruled" in the manner in which they were governed.

English settlers, characterized by a background of Protestant Christianity, a commercial economy and male-dominated household, were, with few exceptions, cruelly intolerant of the Indian way of life.

The lifestyle of the Indians was one of a fragile existence, depending on living in harmony with nature, subsisting on hunting, fishing, farming and gathering wild and cultivated fruits of the earth. This life-system was incompatible with the higher ambitions of the European settlers, who armed with weaponry and tools far more sophisticated than that of the native Indian, had a decided advantage in the struggle for ownership of the wilderness land.

It did not take long for intensified warfare and the ravages of introduced diseases to greatly depopulate the number of native Indians.

After establishing the background against which North Carolina Indians lived for long centuries, and outlining the warfares, broken promises and betrayals that marked the sad history of early European settlement, author Perdue deals with the history of the two remaining major tribes in North Carolina — the Cherokee and the Lumbee, and the smaller groups that are recognized by the state as contemporary Indian tribes — the Coharie, Waccamaw-Siouan, and Haliwa-Saponi.

It is in this portion of Indian history in North Carolina that less has been written about previously, and consequently author Perdue's writing shed considerable light on an area not as throughly covered in the work of earlier authors.

She shows clearly that even as late as well into the 20th century, North Carolina Indians were subjected to the callous disregard of their basic rights and were relegated essentially to the status of non-citizen. It is only within recent years that the mood of North Carolinians, including the government, has resulted in a growing desire to recognize and understand the history and hopes of our native Indians.

The value of this volume is enhanced by an eight page appendix of "Important Dates in North Carolina Indian History," compiled by the North Carolina Commission of Indian Affairs, along with an extensive suggested sources for additinal reading. More than 40 black and white photographs are helpful.

"Native North Carolinians" should do much in 1986, designated as The Year of The Native American in North Carolina, to foster a sincere interest and a fuller, more compassionate understanding of the proud heritage of our Indians — a heritage which they have somehow held onto despite centuries of obstacles they have had to overcome in order to survive.

Facsimile of First North Carolina Book

A COLLECTION OF MANY CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCES, SENTENCES, AND SEVERAL PLACES OF SCRIPTURE IMPROVED. By Clement Hall, with an introduction by William S. Powell. Raleigh, N.C., Historical Publications Section, Divison of Archives and History. Hardcover. Pp., xxv, plus 51. (Facsimile reproduction), $5.00.

Clement Hall, an English missionary sent in the 1700s to that foreign shore known as North Carolina, has the distinction of writing the first book ever published in this state.

His book, called "A Collection of Many Christian Experiences, Sentences, and Several Places of Scriptures Improved," contained proverbs, prayers and spiritual instruction for the parishioners that he traveled an average of 2,000 miles a year to visit.

It was printed in New Bern in 1753 by James Davies, whose previous jobs had been to print money and legal documents. It is highly likely that the paper on which Hall's book was printed came from Benjamin Franklin, since Davis was buying his supplies from Franklin at that time.

Because the Rare Book Room at Duke University's Perkins Library holds the only known copy of "A Collection of Many Christian Experiences," the N. C. Department of Archives and History has published a facsimile edition. Since Hall's "magnum opus," in spite of its long title, is only 51 pages, the facsimile includes an introduction by William S. Powell detailing the facts of Hall's life.

It is thought that the missionary wrote his book during an extended period of ill heatlh. Perhaps that is why he devotes more than a fourth of the book to advice and prayers for the sick.

Besides these sections, the book contains a set of proverbs adapted from various sources including the Old Testament. My favorite line from this section is "Many think they are wise, when indeed they are otherwise."

The rest of the book contains prayers and instructions on how to behave at church services. Like St. Paul to the Corinthians, Hall had to admonish the congregation to listen to the service instead of chattering (something that never happens in churches today, of course).

Although not something most people would choose for recreational reading, the facsimile will be of interest to collectors and those with a tase for history. It gives a picture of what life was like for Chkristians in colonial North Carolina, and as such, might also be a useful addition to a church library.

Book News

From Sheppard Memorial Library

By DIANE TAYLOR

Biographies of movie stars are always popular and two new additions at Sheppard Memorial Library are sure to interest movie fans.

"The Other Side of the Moon" by Sheridan Morley is the first biography of David Niven. Even though Niven wrote two autobiographies, readers will still find this book informative since Morley gives a more realistic account of Niven's life.

Born into a well-to-do family with several estates, his life changed dramatically when his father died in World War I. He did not get along with his step-father and was expelled from prep school. He eventually found himself in Hollywood playing bit parts for $100 a week. After several affairs, including one with with Merle Oberon, he returned to England to serve his country during World War II. There he met Primmie, his first wife. They had a wonderful, happy marriage which ended tragically when she fell down a flight of stairs and died.

Both Niven's second marriage and career had many problems. Ironically, even though Niven made many movies, his real success and pride came from his books. He died in 1983 from a motor neuron disease.

Reports of what Barbara Streisand is really like vary greatly. Shaun Considine tries to present the truth in his book, "Barbra Streisand: The Woman, The Myth, The Music." Streisand is loved by her fans for her extraordinary singing voice and her acting ability. However, those who work with her complain about her insistence on perfection, her toughness and her determination to have things her own way. The author's interviews with people she has worked with, reveal the constant fighting between Streisand and her co-stars, such as Walter Matthau in "Hello, Dolly" and Kris Kristofferson in "A Star Is Born." The book covers her career from clubs in New York to her movie, "Yentl."

First Play By Novelist Is Premiered

By ANDREW J. SHERRY
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — "Dreaming Emmett" awoke in Toni Morrison's imagination in an airport waiting room, where her novelist's eye focused on a black youth clearly brimming with enthusiasm at the thought of an impending voyage.

As he strode across the room to join a group of friends, the boy cut a swath of excitement through the sedentary rows of travel-weary passengers.

"There was such life and joy, and something very attractive about him and that group," recalled Morrison.

But as she watched him, her thoughts turned to the violence that can intrude upon the lives of so many youths before they reach manhood.

"I couldn't help thinking, what if he were stopped — right at that age," she said. "What do you lose when a 14-year-old is killed? A 'teen-ager'? We say that like it's a disease. A short adult?"

A 14-year-old is killed in "Dreaming Emmett," the first play by the internationally acclaimed author of the novels "The Bluest Eye," "Sula," "Tar Baby" and "Song of Solomon," the latter of which earned her the National Book Critics Circle Award in 1977.

The play premiered Saturday at the Capital Repertory Company's Market Theater in Albany. It hasn't been reviewed by New York drama critics. However, Bob Goepfert of the Albany Knickerbocker-News said:

"The first act is a highly stylized segment that is visually intriguing but too loaded with information to be dramatically satisfying. The second act is a compelling piece of theater that burns with passion.

"The virtues of the latter make up for the flaws of the former. Combined with Morrison's ability to create beautiful language throughout, the total event becomes a thoughtful experience."

The play involves the death of Emmett Till, a black youth from Chicago who was brutally beaten and shot to death 30 years ago during a visit to Mississippi, apparently because he whistled at a white woman.

In a case that made headlines around the world, the two white men accused in the murder were acquitted by an all-male, all-white jury.

Morrison did not venture into playwrighting in order to put a 14-year-old to death. Rather, she wrote "Dreaming Emmett" to bring that boy, his era and ours to life with a power and intimacy that can only be created on the stage.

"There's something so immediate, so skin-close in theater," Morrison said in an interview. "I want the audience to feel the excitement of being the characters. I want them to experience the play, think about it and make it part of their lives."

Literary critics have applauded Morrison's ability to draw readers into her novels with powerful webs of description. When she wrote "Dreaming Emmett," she sacrificed description and staked success on dialogue.

She did not take the risk unaided, however. The task of creating theatrical images to fill out the verbal framework of "Dreaming Emmett" was accepted by director Gilbert Moses, who received a Tony nomination for "Ain't Supposed to Die a Natural Death," and an Emmy nomination for directing two segments of "Roots."

"There were passages of dialogue which Toni purposefuly made vague," said Moses. "The metaphor for the idea was present, but the action that would specify the meaning was left up to my imagination and the imagination of the actors."

Moses and Morrison, who met several years ago, had often discussed the possiblity of collaborating on a play. But it wasn't until September 1984 that "Dreaming Emmett" became a working project.

"That's when the Writers Institute came along," Morrison said.

The New York State Writers Institute, headed by Pulitzer Prize-winning author William Kennedy, is associated with the State University at Albany, where Morrison is a professor of humanities. The Institute commissioned "Dreaming Emmett" to commemorate the first federal holiday celebrating the birthday of the late Martin Luther King Jr.

Moses agreed to direct it, even though Morrison was a novice playwright.

"I trust her implicitly," he said. "She obviously has a unique voice in literature. The play is the result of her ability to find a unique voice in theater."

The uniqueness that attracted Moses to the play can be found in the idea that forms its very structure — a dream within a dream.

"A kid who died unsatisfied with the kind of death he had comes back to claim a sort of notoriety in death," said Gilbert.

As he strives to overcome the anonymity of his death, Emmett collides with a young woman from the present who is suffering from her own kind of anonymity.

Political and personal themes are intertwined in "Dreaming Emmett."

MONDAY PERFORMANCE . . . The Bach Aria Group, which specializes in Bach's arias and cantatas, will perform in concert at Hendrix Theater on the ECU campus at 8 p.m. Monday. Tickets are available in advance at the Central Ticket Office or at the door. The performance is sponsored by the Department of University Unions as part of the 1985-86 Artists Series.

Bach Aria Group To Perform Monday

The Bach Area Group will perform at East Carolina University at 8 p.m. Monday in Hendrix Theatre on the ECU campus. Their appearance in Greenville is sponsored by the Department of University Unions as part of the 1985-86 Artists Series.

The ensemble was founded in 1946 by William Scheide, a devotee of Bach's work, particulary the littl-known cantatas and arias. He had an encyclopedic knowledge oif Bach's music, and a strong sense of its universality and relevance to our modern time. Scheilde was keenly awae of the gaps in the public image of Bach's music, with some works ell known, much studied and perfomed, while others of his works were known by only a small number of people.

At the time of founding, Scheide united a nine-member group of vocalists and instrumentalists capable of the reiorous soloistic demands and the needed ensemble skills.

In 1980, following Scheide's retirement, the Bach Aria Group was reorganized to expand their repertoire to include other Bach works as well as his arias.

Flutist Samuel Baron is the group's musical director. Musicians performing under his direction are violinist Daniel Phillips, cellist Timothy Eddy, oboist Ronald Roseman, keyboard player Yehudi Wyner, soprano Sylvia McNair, contralto Janice Taylor, tenor John Humphrey and bass Thomas Paul.

The Bach Aria Group attempts to cultivate apprecation of the Bach arias. The artists feel that through the reconciliation of the verbal and musical meaning of these complex textural works, musicians and audiences alike are brought to a new understanding of his other, better known compositions.

In their performing tours throughout the nation, the Bach Aria Group has received accolodes from critics and audiences. Additionally, the group has in recent years branched out into other activities. Each year in June they hold an annual summer event at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, Long Island. Additionally, the Bach Aria Group conducts master classes and three-day mini festivals with a host orchestra as apart of its touring program.

A one-hour televison program, "In Search of Bach," which included performances and master classes, was the subject of a broadcst in 1985 over PBS as the centerpiece of public teleivison's commemoration of the Bach tricentennial.

Tickets to the Monday performance of the Bach Aria Group are available from the Central Ticket Office. The ticket centrer is open weekdays from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tickets are priced at $5 for youth high school age and younger, and $10 for adults. All tickets at the door are priced at $10.

For reservations or other information, call 757-6611, extension 266.

Lucarelli — Big League Oboe Soloist

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As a child growing up in Chicago, Humbert Lucarelli was a promising pitcher in the Little League.

Then he was in an automobile accident when he was 12, and he couldn't walk for 1½ years. His father, a cabinetmaker, thought the boy needed something special until he could go back to baseball. He suggested that young Bert play the instrument whose sound he liked best, the oboe.

"What's an oboe," he asked his father.

"Find out," his dad replied.

Lucarelli did, and instead of becoming a major league baseball player, he's now a big-league oboist.

"The minute I picked up the instrument, I knew what I wanted to do," the musician said in an interview.

Lucarelli played in the Chicago Lyric Opera Orchestra for six years, was an extra for the Chicago Symphony and went to the Florida Symphony. He turned down offers from symphonies in Indianapolis, Houston and Baltimore and in 1962 moved to New York for further study and, he hoped, free-lance playing.

As a kind of audition, he gave a concert at Carnegie Recital Hall and invited the musical contractors who put together orchestras and small groups. He also got reviewed. "The New York Times critic said I was wonderful but the oboe is not a solo instrument. I thought, 'I'm going to prove that man wrong.'"

Lucarelli is one of the few Americans giving solo oboe concerts. He gives about 60 concerts a year. There are some half dozen Europeans who perform in Europe; in the mid-1800s there were 20 or more.

Now 49, Lucarelli also is chairman of the woodwind department at the Hartt School of Music at the University of Hartford in Connecticut.

Lucarelli believes the time of the oboe has come in the United States. "Making it happen is one of the challenges I've taken on," he said.

He set up a competition for oboists on Jan. 4 at Carnegie Hall. It was won by Alex Klein, 21, of Brazil. There was a concert Jan. 16 at Carnegie Hall to celebrate the 100th birthday of the modern oboe.

For the anniversary of the modern oboe, Lucarelli had to pick a date because he didn't know when the first one was actually made.

"The factory of the most important oboe maker in Paris was sold in 1881 to its foreman, Francois Loree," Lucarelli said. "Loree, with the help of Georges Gillet, designed a new keyboard in the next decade. Gillet taught at the Paris Conservatory, at that time possibly the most important music school in the world.

"That oboe became known as the conservatory model, and in not too long a time took over worldwide as the standard instrument. It was a very significant development for composers and players."

The oboe is the oldest of the woodwinds. The 100th anniversary concert includes Mozart's "Oboe Quartet," which Lucarelli says is as appropriate for the modern oboe as for the oboe Mozart knew.

Most music written for oboe, Lucarelli said, is Baroque or contemporary. "It's a repertory which is uplifting. It has vision. It has joy. I feel very strongly that tends to affect my personality. My grandmother used to say you're known by your friends. My friends are Vivaldi, Bach and Telemann.

"Mozart's writing for the oboe is jolly," Lucarelli said. "If I ever get depressed, all I have to do is put a record of Mozart on. In his saddest music there's a ray of hope. It's the best medicine I can find."

When Lucarelli was preparing himself in New York to make a career as a solo oboist, one thing he did was attend voice recitals. "I imagined the oboe as the most vocal instrument," he said. "It's a singer. I also studied acting for a while, studied painting, sculpting and yoga, all kinds of things that would teach me something about the creative process. Absorbing people's time for two hours is a creative thing; it's not just showing people how good an instrumentalist you are."

Oboists make their own reeds. "There's a quote of Aristotle about how difficult it was to get good oboe reeds. You see, it has been a problem for a long time," Lucarelli said.

"The best cane you can find is in Frejus in the south of France. Cane is like wine grapes, varying by soil and the amount of rainfall. You can go from one farm to another and the cane will be different," he continued.

"The reed affects the tone quality of the instrument. When you find cane you like, you buy it. I have a freezer full of cane. I ran into a wonderful batch of cane 10 years ago. I bought enough of it, I hope, to take me into my retirement."

Hindu Temple In Ohio Draws Worshipers From Afar

DOUG FISHER
Associated Press Writer

BEAVERCREEK, Ohio (AP) — There is no sign that the white concrete building was designed for worship. It has no spires, no domes, no religious symbols visible from the road. But the windows overlooking the brown stubble of a cornfield are placed to catch the first rays of sun that wake the deity.

It is the site of a temple to celebrate the 3,000-year traditions of Hinduism, which teaches that building a temple, serene and alone, is deserving of heavenly reward. The site is deceiving, however. This temple is in the middle of one of the fastest-growing areas of suburban Dayton.

"Every Hindu has in his house a version of the god," said Nanda Balwally, an official of the Hindu Community Organization. "Without the temple we could do worship and be Hindus. But to bring the community together, we feel the temple plays an important part."

Dayton's Hindu community numbers about 350 families, Balwally said. But because the temple is unique in Ohio, it draws worshipers from as far as Columbus, Indianapolis and Lexington, Ky., he said.

The temple took nine years of planning, a year of construction and about $500,000, plus land donated by a local partnership of doctors who are Hindus. It is a year old and still unfinished.

That could cost another $200,000 to bring artisans from India skilled in carving the three domes, or gopurams, Balwally said. They now look like three unfinished, squat chimneys.

Underneath the domes, in marble-lined alcoves, are statues representative of deities believed to live in the temple. It is the duty of the priest, Rangaswamy Iyyangar, to wake them, bathe, feed and dress them and attend to their needs.

Hindus do not worship many gods, said Balwally. There really is only one, Brahman, who is so perfect there is no human way to describe him or form his image.

"The idols really are representations of god to make god easy to understand to man," he said.

This temple celebrates Lord Vishnu, also called Venkateshwara, the preserver, one of the major incarnations. The four-armed figure was carved by Indian artisans out of special black granite from the Himalayas, Iyyangar said. Other idols, such as Krishna and Rama, represent incarnations of Vishnu.

There are 108 names for each of 10 incarnations, and the priest chants all 1,080 twice daily. Communal worship is held every third Sunday, and there are festivals throughout the year.

Hindus celebrate a religion of individualism, with many pathways to perfection through one's deeds and reincarnations. It explains their tolerance for other religions and the temple open-door policy.

"Any day there is worship, I open the temple," said the priest.

Balwally says he is typical of Indians living in the area, a high proportion of them professionals.

A first generation immigrant and former worker for the Indian railroad, Balwally came here for a degree in mathematics.

"I wanted to go back, but there were no opportunities back there to use my knowledge as I wanted," he said. Balwally now works as a research analyst at the Defense Electronics Supply Center.

"We felt we needed a temple because in India the temple is a place to teach our children religion ... We wanted to preserve what we had learned back there," Balwally said.

But he rejects Americans' popular notion of Hinduism, practiced by more than 400 million people worldwide, as akin to Hare Krisnha, isolated and mysterious.

"When we are here, we have to be Americans," he said. "Hindu is our religion, but we do not want to live as though we are in India."

Publicity about the temple and visits of local church groups has helped, Balwally said.

"It gives us the impression that Hinduism as a religion is accepted by the Dayton community. It is no longer a curiosity," he said.

Call Letters Granted

WASHINGTON, N.C. — The Federal Communications Commission, Washington, D.C., has granted the assignment of call letters WFXI to a new FM radio station to be constructed for the Washington-Greenville-New Bern area. The station plans to sign on-the-air April 1. A total black format will be broadcast in stereo with local, regional and national black news to be aired hourly along with local black public affairs.

A Dramatic Play Of Sunlight On Towering January Clouds

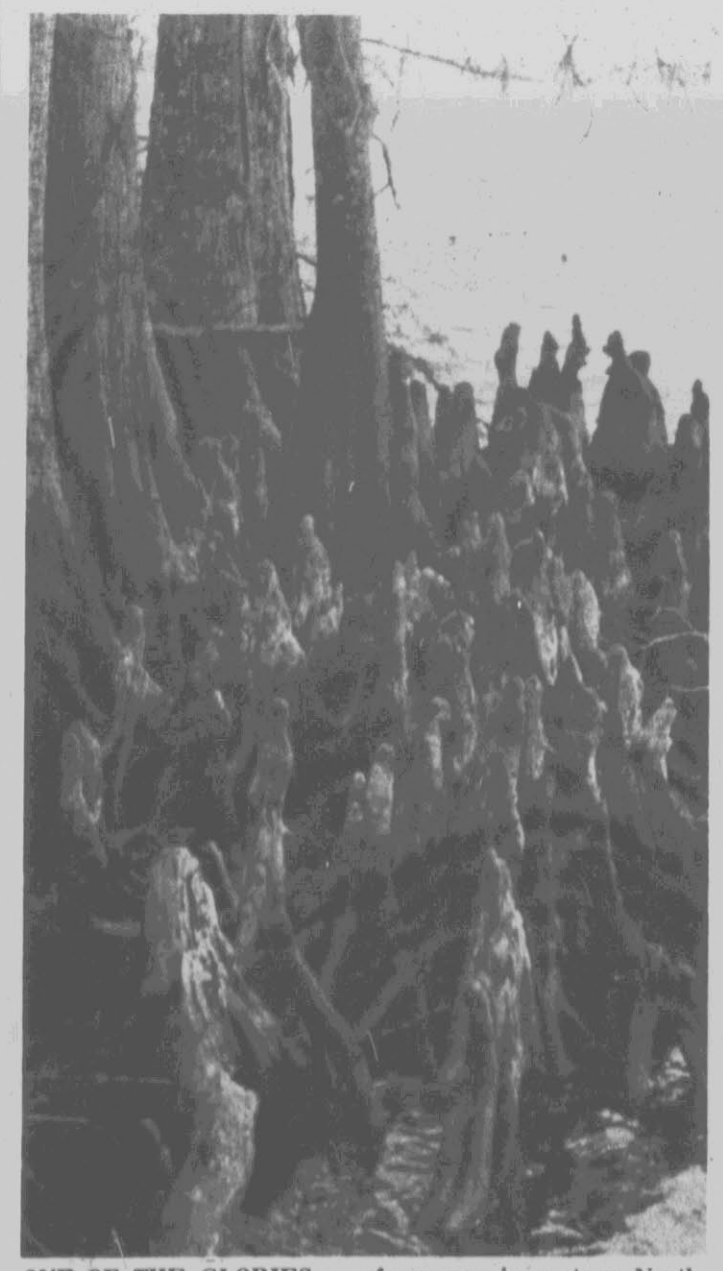

. . . a line of cypress and other trees on the east bank of the Neuse River at the Wildlife Access point in Bridgeton, across the river from New Bern, provide a lacy foreground for a dramatic background display of winter clouds. The scene, photographed in the late hours of Sunday, January 11, reveals a skyscape crowded with towering clouds, a rather unusual occurrence in winter months. The near-setting sun carves a valley of brilliant gold between temporarily parted clouds and outlines the edges of higher clouds. A rainbow assortment of colors appear, disappear and reappear overhead as the clouds travel beneath the distant rays of the descending sun.

ECU Biologists Studying Black Needle Rush Marsh

ONE OF THE GLORIES — of swamps in eastern North Carolina are stands of cypress knees in intriguing shapes. This group, on the shore of Neuse River, gives the visual illusion of a congregation of robed monks emerginy from the water on an uphill trek to a cathedral of cypress trees with their distinctive fluter lower trunks. Little is known about the ecology of the irregularly flooded salt marshes that line the sound and rivers along the coast of North Carolina. These mysterious wetlands are able to withstand hurricanes and flooding, and seem to thrive on fire.

What upsets the natural cycle of this marsh most may be man. Some researchers believe that much of the marsh's value is lost when it is diked to promote its usefulness as a duck refuge.

To learn more, biologists at East Carolina University are beginning a three-year, $300,000 study of the Black Needle Rush marsh of Cedar Island National Wildlife Refuge under a cooperative grant with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

"There are two types of saltwater wetlands found up and down the coast of North Carolina," said Dr. Mark Brinson, professor of biology who is principal investigator and coordinator of the study.

"There are the regularly flooded marshes that flood twice a day with the tides, and the kind that flood irregularly, depending on the direction of the wind, whether a hurricane comes through, and during other natural occurrences.

"Of these two types, most of the work has been done on the regularly flooded ones because they are the predominant form along the southeast Atlantic coast," Brinson said.

"But North Carolina is unique because it has more of these irregularly flooded marshes." There are nearly twice as many acres of irregularly flooded salt marshes here in North Carolina as there are the regularly flooded ones, according to a report issued by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

The purpose of the study, according to Brinson, is "to find out how these irregularly flooded marshes in North Carolina operate — what controls what grows there and to what extent the estuary is interacting with the salt marsh."

"We just don't know. That's one of the reasons for doing the study," Brinson said.

Another reason is to determine the effect of altering the salt marshes to improve them for waterfowl, he said.

"The way this is done is to put a dike around parts of the marsh and cut them off from the estuary so that they aren't exchanging nutrients, fish and other organisms. The water levels within the impoundment are carefully controlled by pumping water to and from the estuary. By controlling this water level, plants that serve as excellent duck food grow in abundance.

"But without knowing what the value of the salt marsh is and how it functions, naturally you don't know how you're changing the situation once you make one of these waterfowl areas. That is, if we alter them, what are we losing?

"This study is just part of an overall process of trying to understand the functions of marshes. The study will end, but our learning about marshes will not. We'll probably continue the study after this funding runs out — take the results and go beyond."

Brinson said the Fish and Wildlife Service is funding the study because there are certain divisions of the service that would like to improve the waterfowl habitat.

The Black Needle Rush marsh where the research is being conducted is named for the predominant plant growing there, and is "not the best area for waterfowl," in Brinson's view.

"There are more obscure birds that live in Black Needle Rush marshes such as Clapper Rails, Black Rails and Marsh Wrens. Well, duck hunters don't go after these birds, they go after ducks. So, in order to help satisfy some of the public demand for duck hunting, the refuges tend to be managed for that purpose," he explained.

"On the other hand, you've got the conservationists who want to leave marshes in their natural state. So one of the reasons for doing this study is to find out what some of the other functions of the marsh are besides growing birds."

The question is, according to Brinson, if the marshes are left as they are, how are they important to the estuary? If altered, what are the consequences?

"There are certain patterns in the marsh that researchers don't understand," he said. "Fire may be very important as one of the factors that affect the marsh. Marshes are also adapted to flooding. A hurricane doesn't do a thing to hurt a marsh because it is so well adapted. So flooding, and surprisingly — fire — become very important factors along with salinity, which is related to both flooding and to rainfall.

"Those are the principal things that seem to determine what's growing there and what makes that salt marsh different from others. There may be other factors involved as well," he said.

Brinson said he expects to learn how irregularly flooded marshes are "similar to or different from the regularly flooded ones in terms of nutrients and organic matter that are exchanged between the salt marshes and the estuaries." The results of this study will be compared with what is already known of the regularly flooded areas.

Besides their role in nutrient exchange, marshes are often important habitats for estuarine fish, Brinson said. "The crew from the National Marine Fisheries Service will go out to the marsh with seines and block off some of the creeks that run into the marsh and sample them for fish at different times of the year," he said.

"They will also sink buckets into the surface of the marsh so that when the marsh floods and drains, the fish will be caught in depressions that the buckets create. Then the crew will be able to see what kinds of fish are growing there and how far they are penetrating into the marsh."

Brinson said the research team will go out to the marsh once or twice weekly to take measurements, to ensure that their instruments are functioning properly and to collect samples.

He said the work will include "collecting water samples to determine what the quality of the water is in terms of nutrients that come onto the marsh when it floods, and how that quality changes when the water drains off the marsh and the estuary. Every time we go out we'll collect samples and bring them back to the lab for analysis."

Brinson said, "The other thing we're going to be doing in terms of describing the structure of the marsh is surveying to learn what the differences in surface elevation are, and to measure how thick the peat is across the marsh."

Other questions Brinson hopes to answer are, "Was this once a barrier island? Does the topography underneath have anything to do with what's growing on the surface? These are routine things that have to be done, and aren't very experimental in nature — just descriptive."

The study's research team is comprised of the National Marine Fisheries Service and ECU researchers. Brinson says he would like to get more students and faculty from ECU involved.

The study will be conducted over a three-year period, he said, because "it takes half a year to get set up so that aspects such as the water quality and growth of vegetation can be monitored. Vegetation is on an annual cycle, so there must be a minimum of a year to follow a one-year effect.

"Since some years are different from others, very seldom does one study anything on an average year. We must look for variations between years so that our conclusions aren't based on one freak year. Then, a half a year is needed to work up the data and come up with a final report," Brinson said.

THE DIFFICULTY IN BUYING A USED SAAB IS FINDING AN OWNER WHO WILL PART WITH IT.

Gene Zeitlin is one of the lucky few who did manage to find a used Saab for sale.

He bought his 1970 Saab 96 in 1973 and claims that he's never had a major problem with it since. Nor does he use it only for local errands. Mr. Zeitlin has driven his Saab from his home in Connecticut to California and back three times in the last 12 years.

"Quite unabashedly, I can tell you I love my car," he said.

Like an awful lot of used Saabs, Mr. Zeitlin's car is not for sale.

Photographs Useful In Identifying Antiques

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

One of the pitfalls of buying old furniture is separating the authentically antique from later reproductions that may look good, but are considerably less rare and valuable.

Revivals of earlier styles occurred regularly at the end of the 19th and the beginning of the 20th centuries, and, indeed, are still being introduced today.

Even the experts sometimes have difficulty separating the sheep from the goats, so a tyro is even more likely to make mistakes.

What's needed, according to Judith Miller, an English collector, is a full range of photographs that illustrate the development of a particular piece and show characteristics of the style in various periods.

Recently Miller and her husband, Martin Miller, a photographer, decided to create "the book we wished had existed when we began collecting old furniture in the 1960s," Miller said by telephone from her home in England.

The resulting volume, "The Antiques Directory: Furniture" was recently published in England and the United States. The book has 640 pages more than 7,000 photographs, and it's hefty enough to go head to head with an unabridged dictionary.

"When I started this project three years ago I didn't realize how much material there would be," she said. The undertaking got to be so unwieldy that the Millers brought in an outside group of authorities to help them identify and catalogue the many kinds of furniture pictured.

Though the most space is devoted to the 18th and 19th centuries — what she calls the golden age of furniture making — in England, France and the United States, the book covers the periods between the 15th century and the early 20th century. Besides the three countries mentioned, the Netherlands, Italy, Germany, Austria, Spain, Portugal and the Orient are also represented.

After studying all this furniture, she has come to the conclusion that the 18th and 19th centuries represent the height of the furniture making art. Today's furniture, for example, is almost completely based on the styles and methods originated or perfected in this 200 year period.

Given that as a fact, how do you tell a revival piece from an original? According to Miller "there are pointers. The methods used in various eras are very well documented and descriptions and pictures reveal the differences," she said.

For example, in the classical revival style a particular wood was commonly used whereas in an earlier period a different wood was common.

There are also stylistic differences from one country to another. For example, American chairs may be based on an English style but have different arm and leg details.

She has found that as one increases one's knowledge, the differences become evident. One way of gaining familiarity with the originals is to look at them in museums and restorations, especially in the United States where documentation is generally excellent.

The greatest stylistic differences are found from one country to another in provincial furniture which was made locally by individuals who usually did not travel and thus were less influenced by the fashions of the day. These individuals would modify designs of other nearby cabinetmakers. Thus, over time a particular style became differentiated from its origins.

With the longtime interest old furniture has been generating, one might question whether any pieces are left at affordable prices.

According to Miller, the answer is yes. Prices generally fluctuate as different styles go in and out of fashion. Currently she says the demand for 19th century pieces has got some 18th century furniture underpriced. Since the recently completed book lists price categories for the furniture described, Miller should qualify as an expert on the subject.

She noted that "mid-range" (not grand) mahogany chests of drawers were recently selling for around $150 in England. She feels pieces from the low countries such as Belgium and Holland are also good buys at present.

There are few secrets to getting a bargain in Miller's opinion: "What you must do is to buy anything that isn't currently popular."

("The Antiques Directory: Furniture" is published by G. K. Hall & Co.)

Garden Clinic

Q. What is the difference between butterfly weed and butterfly bush?

A. Butterfly weed (Asclepias tuberosa) is a native, herbaceous perennial which produces flat clusters of bright orange flowers in early summer. Butterfly bush (Buddleia davidii) is a large shrub with terminal panicles of lavender, pink, white or purple flowers. It blooms in the late summer. Both plants get their names because their flowers attract many butterflies.

Q. I would like some information on producing herbs commercially.

A. On Feb. 22, there will be a one-day seminar on herb production. The program will be conducted from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Guilford County Agricultural Center in Greensboro. Registration is $8 before Feb. 1 and $10 at the door. Lunch is $6 per person. To pre-register, call either Dick Tippett (919-567-2705), Jim Best (919-732-6617) or Ross Williams (919-733-7136). You will be invited to join the formation of a state association of herb growers.

Q. Could you give me some information on creating a garden especially for children or things to do to spark an interest in gardening for children?

A. Sharing a parent's garden doesn't always work well. Give your young person his own corner of the yard or a half-barrel and pots to grow plants in. Let him choose some seeds from the seed catalogue, but make sure you pick some fail-safe flowers and vegetables as well. Many children like to plant things that are unusual, big, fast-growing, fragrant or flamboyant. They like flowers, fruits and vegetables that they can pick and possibly give away. (Gardening may be a good way to introduce children to eating vegetables they might avoid or ignore.) Some plants you may consider letting your child grow are marigold, sunflower, crocus, honesty or money plant, snapdragon, radishes, cherry tomatoes, gourds, cucumbers, lamb's ears, evening primroses, spearmint or another mint, scented geraniums (lemon, orange or rose, for example), begonia, coleus, daffodil and zinnia. Be patient. A child does not have your strength or patience when it comes to weeding and some other chores. An excellent source of information is the handbook entitled "Gardening With Children" which is available for $3.05 from the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, 1000 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11225. Contact your county agricultural extension agent for information on 4-H gardening projects. Again, be patient. Don't stifle an interest which has brought you so much pleasure.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Whether the art in your house is a collection of valuable paintings or a series of family portraits or something in between, it's nice if people notice it.

If you want the art to get even passing attention, you have to do something that attracts such attention. Merely hanging the paintings or pictures on a wall is not the answer. In fact, whether your guests appreciate the art or ignore it may depend more on its surroundings than the object itself. Kent Homchick, who heads the design technology department at United States International University in San Diego, Calif., puts it this way:

"Even great art can be disrupted by its surroundings. If you want people to react to your art, perhaps you should try something out of the ordinary."

Among the things to consider, he notes, are the size of the art in relation to the wall space, the colors used on the walls, and floors and lighting in the room where you will display the art.

"If you have Van Gogh's 'Starry Night' or a Degas in a very big gilt frame and you put it the center of a white wall, it is going to dominate the room. But if you have a 20-foot by 10-foot wall and the only art on it is a 6-inch by 8-inch painting up in one corner, you create a totally different kind of interest," Homchick says.

The best way to hang art is to try it in what you think will be a good spot, then stand back and take a look from across the room. Sometimes it's a good idea to contemplate, or even live with, the art for awhile and see how you like it rather than putting up one painting, another next to it and a third next to that.

You can put focus on your art not only by where it is hung, but by how you light it. Having a pin spotlight on one picture in a relatively dark room will really focus attention on it. "And," adds Homchick, "if the art is three-dimensional, as in sculpture, you will get an entirely different perception of it by lighting it from different angles."

Fluorescent light affects color in a distinctive way from the incandescent lamps in your home. Keep that in mind when making a purchase in a store or gallery. If you don't, says Homchick, "it's like expecting the stereo system that sounded wonderful in the soundproof room at the store to sound the same in a home with lots of wood and concrete surfaces."

When you choose colors in a room where you will display your art, you can either opt to match the painting's hue or strive instead to make the colors clash tremendously.

"Matching your decor to your paintings is no different than matching the color of your sheets to the color of the rug. If you choose to clash colors, it can add a real vibrancy to the room. Clashes can really draw attention to your art and make people feel awake and alive. Color choices may depend on the atmosphere you wish the art to project."

If you are planning to purchase art and you are wondering what colors or sizes would fit in with your existing decor, you might try an inexpensive trick Homchick suggests. He says:

"When we build scenery for a show, we always start with a miniature model so we can find out if things will fit together in a pleasing perspective. One way to do something similar in your home would be to buy some different colored poster boards, cut them into different shapes and sizes and stick them on the walls with tape. It will help you to get a perspective on the size of art that will fit a wall, for example, or on colors that will be pleasing or displeasing."

A frame should not be too conspicuous. "The wrong frame can result in you looking at the frame more than the picture," says Homchick, whose personal taste in art is simplicity, but who adds that the bottom line is whether you like what you see.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful data in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Here's the Answer

Q. — I once heard or read somewhere about a way to tell whether air is leaking into your refrigerator through a door that isn't quite airtight. Can you tell what it is?

A. — If you place a dollar bill in the door frame so that half of it is inside and half is out, the bill should be so secure that it cannot be pulled out. If it comes out with a little tugging, then the door probably isn't airtight at that point. To make a complete test, you have to repeat it at different points along the door. If there is a leak only at one point, you can fix it by placing some tape there, but if there are several leaks, you are better off to buy a new seal.

Q. — We have some moss on part of our roof that is shielded from the sun by a large overhanging tree. Could this be the cause of the moss?

A. — Definitely, yes. When the sun's rays cannot get through, that area of the roof remains damp longer than the other parts of it. The dampness generates growth of the moss. See if the removal of a single branch of the tree will permit the sun to shine through.

Q. — Settle an argument. I say clay roofing tiles come only in a natural reddish color. My friend says they come in many colors. Who is right?

A. — Your friend is. Red is the natural color of clay tiles, but they can — and are — colored merely by adding certain pigments before the clay is fired.

Q. — There is a slight leak in our garage, which has a flat roof. Is there some way to find where there is an opening.

A. — On a flat roof, the area where the leak shows usually is the area where the water is entering, which isn't always true with different kinds of roofs. Also, on a flat roof, a leak occurs where water collects. Just after a rain, examine the roof to see the place or places where the water remains. A single leak can be patched with roofing cement. A lot of leaks calls for a new roof coverng.

Q. — I have located where a leak is on our asphalt shingled roof. It is from a loose shingle. What do I use to cement it?

A. — Regular roofing cement. Lift the loose part gently and push the cement under it. Press it down with a piece of board.

Q. — I have recently taken up home repairs and am still learning. Can I use a hacksaw to cut regular pipe.

A. — Yes, but you'll get a better cut with a pipe cutter. Also, if it's copper tubing, use a tube cutter.

Q. — I have some repairs to make on my driveway. There are cracks and holes in several places. I have never done this kind of work before and wonder whether I can handle it. What's the difference between the patching material and the sealer? Please give me whatever tips you can.

Q. Why the wide variety among deodar cedars?

A. North Carolina nurseryman commonly grow deodar cedar (Cedrus deodara) from seed. Trees and ornamentals grown from seed can vary widely from plant to plant. The winter of 1985 killed many of the less-hardy seedlings in North Carolina. Plants with improved color, form and growth rate can be obtained by grafting instead of raising deodar cedar from seed.

(A booklet titled "Guide to Quality Roofing," including an asphalt shingle color guide, can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

No. 10417 — The Burton
Kitchen Is Homemakers' Haven

Inside and out, this design speaks of space and luxury. Outside, cedar shake roofing contrasts nicely with brick veneer to complement arched and leaded windows and false dormers. Double entry doors usher you into a two-story entrance with staircase curving gently to second level rooms. Ten-foot ceilings throughout the lower level and 9-foot ceilings upstairs add to the spaciousness already created by large sized rooms. What homemaker wouldn't be excited about the kitchen features — 60 sq. ft. of counter space, 5 x 6 step-saving island cooking range, desk area, windowed eating nook and nearby patio access?

The Week's Offerings: What's Old Is New

By Robert DiMatteo

It may be a new year, but the operative phrase for this TV movie week is: What's old is new. The offerings are either repeats or works that depend upon the past for their subject matter.

One of the week's repeats is not too bad. Murder with Mirrors (CBS, Jan. 26), the made-for that paired Helen Hayes and an alarmingly frail post-stroke Bette Davis, will not be anybody's idea of the definitive Miss Marple mystery, but it certainly passes the time as we watch these two old pros act together. Helen Hayes' Miss Marple oozes sweetness compared to, say, Margaret Rutherford (who starred in the series of English films from the same Agatha Christie source material), yet Miss Hayes' warm interpretation works. Bette Davis' contribution is far more limited — probably because of her impaired condition. The mystery plot will not knock you out, but it has a few felicitous twists and turns.

A reprise rather than a repeat is what is offered in CBS's Kung Fu: The Movie (Feb. 1). The gifted and seldom well-used actor David Carradine recreates the role of the Chinese-American Shaolin priest and martial-arts master that he originated for the early 70s TV series of the same name. This two-hour version, of the sort of material that the series dealt with in an hour, pivots on an opium-smuggling ring, and allows Carradine a further chance to blend the stolid and the spiritual in his portrayal of Kwai Chang Caine.

You can't get a much better lead-in for a series pilot than the Super Bowl, which is what NBC's The Last Precinct (Jan. 26) will have. Scheduled to debut in series form as a mid-season replacement, "Precinct" is an action-comedy-drama from "A-Team" mastermind Stephen J. Cannell. Not surprisingly, its bent is law and order, with lots of madcap and visceral antics to keep us entertained. The two-hour "pilot" stars Adam West as the captain of an unorthodox yet effective team of big-city policemen. West is far removed from his "Batman" days, though there's still plenty of Pow-Bop-Bang!!!

HBO's current made-for-cable movie may be the best the pay service has done to date. Called simply, Murrow (Jan. 27 and 30), this biographical portrait of the legendary deep-voiced, cigarette-puffing TV broadcaster features a remarkable performance by Daniel J. Travanti in the title role, and a fine, change-of-pace supporting performance by Dabney Coleman as CBS Chairman William S. Paley. Written by Ernest Kinoy and directed by Jack Gold ("Sakharov"), "Murrow" contains the seeds of controversy in its portrayals of Paley and Frank Stanton: Both men are still living, though neither was consulted by the film makers.

If ratings are any indication, "Growing Pains" measures up as a hit. Joanna Kerns and Alan Thicke portray Maggie and Jason Seaver in the comedy series, airing Tuesday, Jan. 28 on ABC.

Americans in Paris

Members of CBS's "Sins" cast had diverse reasons for choosing to appear in the seven-hour miniseries slated to air February 2, 3 and 4. Gene Kelly, fervent Frenchman at heart, took the opportunity to snatch up some Parisian ambience and a family vacation as well. During filming, the sinfully seductive Joan Collins had her own rationale. "Well, the title ain't bad," she quipped.

Aussie Action

"Blue Lightening," a CBS made-for-TV film currently in production, stars Sam Elliott and Robert Culp as a hard-nosed San Francisco private eye and an international terrorist, respectively. The action takes the Culp-chasing Elliott Down Under as he attempts to recover a valuable gem exhorted from one of his clients. The movie is being filmed on location in Australia.

Carradine Convinced 'Kung Fu' Will Return

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — The network and his producers may be awaiting viewers' verdicts before committing themselves, but actor David Carradine is in no doubt whatever that this week's CBS movie heralds the triumphant return of "Kung Fu" to next fall's prime-time schedule.

When I met Carradine at the Antelope Valley location for this week's "Kung Fu: The Movie," it seemed appropriate the cast and crew were working feverishly to finish before sundown so that a "Twilight Zone" company could move in to shoot an episode about leprechauns.

There was something distinctly other-worldly about talking to Carradine as he sat resplendent in an Oriental outfit, spattered with stage gore and holding a cigarette in one hand and a can of diet soft drink in the other. Carradine is adamant that Kwai Chang Caine will be delivering weekly philosophy tutorials again come the fall, because it's all part of a grand plan he's been hatching since he walked (philosophically) away from the hit series in 1975.

"We'd been on the air for almost three seasons, and I wanted to end it before we started doing what every series does after that length of time — repeating ourselves and permitting the quality of our work to suffer," he says.

"The timing was right then, and it's right again now," he says. " 'Kung Fu' is still popular all over the world, because we left the audience wanting more. Now, we're giving it to them."

Carradine doesn't risk much of an argument when he points out that "Kung Fu" sparked worldwide interest in martial-arts adventures, although he adds: "I don't like the way what was always meant to be a physical manifestation of Oriental philosophy has been corrupted into an excuse for gratuitous violence. "Just as before, Caine will only use his skills to defend himself."

Carradine has recruited Brandon Lee, son of the late martial-arts cult hero Bruce Lee, to help him update Caine for the '80s.

"It's worked out perfectly," Carradine says. "Brandon will learn from me just as I learned from Master Po in the first series. We'll run for another couple of years or so, take a rest, and then maybe I'll be blinded in a fight and I'll become the new Master Po."

Carradine is never in a hurry: It took him seven years to bring his movie "Americana" to the screen for an indifferent critical reception. He has mapped out a 15-year production schedule for his next project, a film about the life of the fabled spy, Mata Hari.

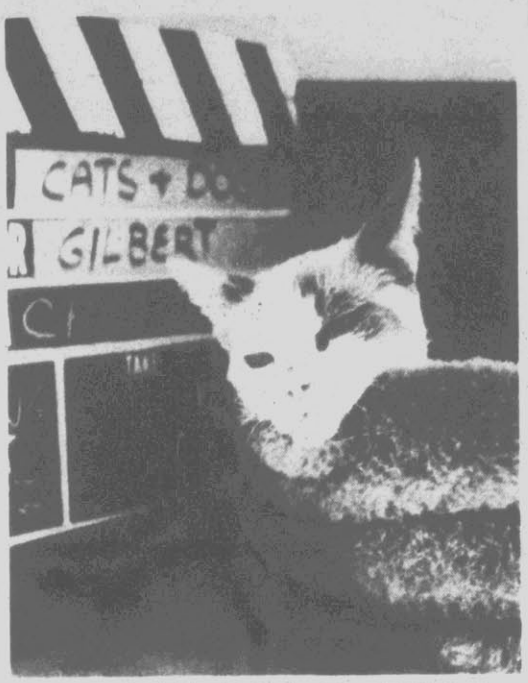

Yana Nirvana stars as Martha "Ziplock" Haggerty, a physical-training specialist who can pump iron with the best of them, in "The Last Precinct," airing Sunday, Jan. 26 on NBC. The following week, the new show becomes a weekly series.

Scholarly Specials

WNET's repeat airing of the nine-part "Heritage: Civilization and the Jews," hosted by scholar-diplomat Abba Eban, gives viewers a second chance to experience the 3,000-year history of the Jewish people from Ararat to Auschwitz. The encore presentation is supplemented by two new interview programs moderated by Bill Moyers, airing Feb. 15 and 17. Moyers will interview leading Judaic scholars to discuss issues raised in the "Heritage" broadcasts.

TV Chatter

Attention Fido! Morris! Smokey! Bonnie! Hints for pooches and pussycats will be given in "Cats & Dogs," a new 26-week pet-care series premiering Saturday, Feb. 1 on PBS. It sounds like the cat's meow. (Check local listings.)

Bette Davis, making her first TV appearance since she suffered a stroke in 1983, stars as a potential murder victim in "Agatha Christie's Murder with Mirrors," airing Sunday, Jan. 26 on CBS. (Rebroadcast)

She was the screen's most glamorous sex symbol, a busty bleached blonde with brains and bravura. Now, the life and loves of Lana Turner are coming to the small screen. CBS and Warner Bros. are planning a four-hour miniseries based on Miss Turner's best-selling 1982 memoir "Lana: The Lady, The Legend, The Truth," but there's one giant obstacle: casting. Miss Turner told TV UPDATE she'd like Morgan Fairchild to portray her, but Miss Fairchild says she won't acccept the role "because Lana's not a nice lady." "Chorus Line" star Audrey Landers has also put dibs on the role. But the producers want former "V" star Faye Grant. "She has the looks, personality and charm to play Lana," says a source for the miniseries. "We're going to hold out until we get her."

Who's says it's a dog's life? First Mr. Jones, Don Johnson's golden retriever, was sent to obedience school because of his, um, control problem. Now, the pooch is enrolled in stud school. "When we were making 'Long, Hot Summer,' my five-year-old daughter took Mr. Jones for long walks all over the set," recalls director Stuart Cooper. "She fell in love with the dog, but knew she couldn't keep him because Don was also in love with him." So the "Miami Vice" star made his young canine-keeper a promise. "He sent Mr. Jones out to be mated," adds Cooper, "and is going to give us the first puppy." So far, there's been no word on Mr. Jones or his, er, performance.

It certainly doesn't seem like what the doctor ordered: for an actor to appear in a movie, his face entirely covered in latex, with only his eyelids exposed. Yet that's exactly what Louis Gossett Jr. did for "Enemy Mine," the new sci-fi thriller in which the actor plays an alien. "The make-up was so severe we had to have a doctor on the set the whole time we shot," confesses Chris Walas, the creature's creator. "Lou wore two sets of contact lenses, and at times even his body was covered with latex. When it got to be too much, the doctor would ask Lou to stop working." Gossett kept his face hidden for 50 days, but he didn't seem to mind the special effects. "They made me look like a combination of a lizard, kangaroo, bird, dog and a little bit of Stevie Wonder," he said proudly.

She was once strong and invincible, but in recent years, Helen Reddy was just about invisible. The singer's been away from the spotlight because she's been busy preparing a book and miniseries on her Australian ancestors — Aussie folk who just happened to be on the wrong side of the law. Miss Reddy says she readying her projects with the help of ghostwriters: "I've been in touch with my ancestral spirits, and they're helping me write the book," she says. ... June Allyson may have starred in scores of motion pictures, but nothing prepared her for the sizzling role she recently played in real life. The 68-year-old actress was among the thousands of homeowners caught in the path of numerous brush fires that devastated areas of Southern California. Miss Allyson lives in Ojai, nearly 75 miles north of Los Angeles, and the raging fires destroyed all her landscape — but not, luckily, her home. "The problem with the fire," the actress says, "was that there wasn't a director around to yell 'Cut!'"

Martha Byrne Plays A Typical Teenager

By Connie Passalacqua

There's an overwhelming difference between Lily Walsh of "As the World Turns," played by Martha Byrne, 16, and other teenage-girl soap characters, who are frequently overly cute or perky or habitually scantily clad. Lily is a for-real teen.

Perpetually fighting with her mother, the cloyingly nervous villainess Lucinda Walsh (Elizabeth Hubbard), whining about school life or distracted by dreams of first love, Lily is the kind of kid you used to be — or whom you might now be raising.

A good part of Lily's naturalness is due to the acting of Miss Byrne, who still has a tad of her baby fat and whose personality is seemingly unaffected for a child actor.

"I got into show business entirely on chance," she recalls among frequent giggles and "you knows." " I liked to sing and my sister dared me to go to an audition for (the Broadway version of) 'Annie.' I stood in line with all the girls. And I got to play one of the orphans, July, for two years and be the understudy to the actress who played Annie."

Miss Byrne played the role while commuting to her suburban New Jersey home, which she shares with her father, a tree surgeon, her housewife mother and two older brothers and a sister. She's now a junior at a Catholic high school.

"The best part about 'Annie' — and show business, too — is that you really get to be close, and I mean really close, to the people you work with, like a family. 'As the World Turns' is like that, too," she says. Backstage, her two best "ATWT" friends are two who would make your average teen swoon: 16-year-old Emmy winner Brian Bloom (who plays Dusty Donovan) and 20-year-old Jon Hensley (Holden Snyder).

Julian Stands Alone On 'Stand By Me'

By Martin Levine

Film and video have already shown the power to make stars of recording artists and turn established stars into gods of the pop and rock world. Just how much more it can accomplish in any one project is debatable, but for Julian Lennon, his first home video, "Julian Lennon: Stand by Me" (MCA Home Video, $29.95), is more than your average expanded series of promo clips.

For starters, there's the ghost of his father, John, who pops in and out when Julian cocks his head. It's an evocative mannerism. There's also the ongoing "interview" monologue that is interspersed with concert and documentary footage from Lennon's first tour. "Stand by Me" is the younger Lennon's attempt to meet his family connection head on, embrace it and then move past it.

"There was no way I could avoid it," Lennon says of the family legacy. Quite the opposite is true on tape as documentary footage quotes ticket buyers admitting they came at least partly because of the Lennon name, with a quick segue to Lennon performing a new song, "Big Momma," and then discussing his relationship with Yoko Ono. If "Big Momma" has a touch of bitterness, Lennon says that he and his stepmother have come to terms: "We're getting along really well now, she's lightened up." But of the song's inclusion on the tape, he adds, "It was just opportune."

The genesis of the project was simple. "My first thought was I'd like to have a home video for myself," explains Lennon. "I'd like to keep a record for myself."

But projects often take on unexpected lives of their own. What emerges on tape is an engaging and carefully drawn portrait of a rising star, enhanced by a bluntly honest monologue. Though there is an interviewer behind the camera asking the questions, it's only Lennon and his responses that we see and hear. We hear him remembering his father and the night John Lennon was shot outside the Dakota apartments in New York, followed immediately by Julian Lennon singing "Stand by Me." If young Lennon's rendition lacks the power and presence of his father's, it also shows his ability to take a rock standard and make it his own.

The darker side of that Lennon connection can be seen in a quick onstage moment that on the surface appears amusing and innocent: A young girl jumps on stage and nearly tackles Lennon before security guards hustle her away. "It gave me a bloody heart attack," Lennon recalls. "It only takes a second for something to happen." Thinking back to his father's shooting and the excesses of fan worship, he adds, "I don't think you'll ever stop it."

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: How old is actor Ron Ely? Was he ever in the Army, Navy, Air Force or Marines? — NONA MEREDITH, ELMA, WASH.

Ron Ely was born Ronald Pierce on June 21, 1938 in Hereford, Tex. He first appeared on the small screen on Sept. 12, 1960 in an episode of "Father Knows Best." This led to his starring role inthe CBS series "Malibu Run," originally titled "The Aquanauts," during the 1960-61 TV season. After the show was canceled, Ely enlisted in the Air National Guard. Upon his discharge, he took a two-year trip around the world. The 6-foot-5-inch actor returned to television in NBC's "Tarzan" from 1966-68. CBS aired reruns of the series in 1969, and some of the episodes were edited together and released as feature films. He has since been seen in a variety of roles, including game-show host and emcee for the Miss America pageant.

Dear Michele: I recall seeing Jeannie Wilson of "Simon & Simon" on the "Merv Griffin Show" when she mentioned a film she was going to make with her "Simon & Simon" co-stars. Is there any truth to this rumor? — CAROLYN GEIGES, LIMERICK, PA.

Indeed! Miss Wilson didn't return to "Simon & Simon" this season, but she was seen in the now-canceled CBS series "Stir Crazy." She will be seen in the soon-to-be released feature "Jackals" with former co-stars Parker and McRaney.

Dear Michele: Please tell me all about "Dynasty" star Michael Praed. — TERESITA A. YOUNG, SAN LEANDRO, CALIF.

When girlfriend Finola Hughes left her native England for a starring role in "Staying Alive" in 1983, Praed, 24, stayed behind to star in BBC-produced series. He came to this country to star in "The Three Musketeers" on Broadway in 1984, and was soon hired to play Prince Michael on "Dynasty." The actor is still not clear why the show's producers chose him as the heir apparent. Praed and Miss Hughes now live together in the Westwood section of Los Angeles, a far cry from his Moldavian palace.

Lincoln Continental becomes the first American car to offer a compact disc player as an option, starting with '86-model luxury vehicles rolling off the assembly line in the spring. The CD will add another $500 or so to the auto's hefty price tag. CD's are already a common accessory on cars in Australia, where the computerized discs are now almost as important in the marketplace as the vinyl versions.

CBC Drama Examines Cold War Controversy

By Jay Carman

Was John Grierson a Red? Or a communist sympathizer? Or simply an idealist who wound up the innocent victim of a ruthless witch hunt — a witch hunt that happened right here in Canada, before Joe McCarthy got into high gear in the United States?

These are the questions that prompted Toronto playwright Rick Salutin to write "Grierson and Gouzenko," a haunting drama that airs Thursday, Jan. 30 on CBC channels.

What is of absolutely no doubt in any quarter is that Grierson was a genius of a filmmaker who practically invented the documentary back in his native Scotland and England in the late 1930s. And no one would deny that he was the father of Canada's world-acclaimed National Film Board and an inspiration to almost all of our contemporary filmmakers.

Igor Gouzenko, on the other hand, was a lowly clerk at the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa. If he hadn't decided to defect, and to do it in the politically critical year of 1945, when the Cold War first began to heat up, no one would ever have heard of him.

What was the connection between Grierson and Gouzenko? According to the film, as well as news accounts of the time, there was no connection. The two men apparently chatted briefly at an embassy party one evening. Yet Gouzenko inadvertently managed to destroy Grierson's illustrious career.

The ingredients of this unusual drama sound like they're straight out of a pulp thriller. But they're demonstrably true and they illuminate a shocking moment in Canadian history.

Prime Minister MacKenzie King had personally approved Grierson's appointment to the NFB in 1939. During his time at the helm, the Board churned out a number of superb, strongly humanist films. Grierson then moved on to another challenging film position in New York.

But he fell into a trap that, according to Salutin, had been set years earlier by FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover, who considered Grierson a communist. When Gouzenko defected, he turned over a raft of documents and notes to the Canadian government, who apparently shared them with the Americans. Among the papers was a speculative note Gouzenko had made to the effect that there were left-leaning employees at the NFB during Grierson's time.

Incredible as it now seems, that was enough to get Grierson hauled back to Canada, grilled by a Royal Commission and virtually accused of treason. By the time the officials were done with him, Grierson's career was in shreds.

Eric Peterson, who's best known as Billy Bishop and as Screamin' John in last year's "The King of Friday Night," plays Grierson brilliantly. And Saul Rubinek, who starred last week in "The Suicide Murders," plays the smaller role of Gouzenko as a sort of bumbling Buster Keaton.

By the time you've finished watching "Grierson and Gouzenko," you may or may not be convinced of just who the villains were back then. But no matter. It's a fascinating slice of home-grown history just the same.

CINDY SAYS

Anka's abode goes on the sale for $5.5 mil

By Cindy Adams

Paul Anka is looking to unload his five-bedroom shack. It's 14,000 square feet that sits on 15 wooden acres at Jack's Peak in Carmel, Calif., overlooking the Pacific. There's a master bedroom with three dressing rooms, a mirror-lined gym, a two-story art gallery, a movie theater, a temperature-controlled 3000-bottle wine cellar, a complete children's playground and tennis courts. Oh yes, the tennis courts come with their own service building.

Paul Anka

Then there's much, much more, and it can be yours for a measly $5.5 million. This may seem high, but consider one particularly essential feature: The area is zoned for horses.

After New York's grandest dame, Miss Liberty, gets fussed over on July 4, there's still her actual birthday, Oct. 28. For that day, many first ladies will amass to honor our First Lady of the Harbor. Nancy Reagan will be hostess to a party at Lincoln Center. The evening will star Bob Hope. France's first lady, Mme. Mitterrand, has already sent in her affirmative R.S.V.P. Matilda Cuomo, the governor's wife, will show up. So, it is hoped, will the wives of all our states' governors. A dormitory for them all — probably the Waldorf Astoria — is currently being worked out. It would be nice is everyone showed up, because if there's one thing that's certain, it's this: Miss Liberty, that 100-year-old spinster, will have a helluva party.

Nancy Reagan

Sir John Gielgud is studying Hebrew and Yiddish. In the upcoming ABC miniseries "War and Remembrance," Herman Wouk's sequel to "The Winds of War," the actor's playing a Jewish man caught in a concentration camp. Sir John's being tutored twice a day by a rabbi in London.

HBO documentary examines our values

By Debra Morgenstern Katz

"The Gift of Life," airing Tuesday, Jan. 28 on HBO, aims to present a message of miracles. The hour-long documentary, however, ends so heartbreakingly that a viewer can't help but wonder — at least for a little while — at the value of the "gift."

Aric Alexander

The gift is the technology and knowledge that has evolved, in the last two decades, to save the lives of critically ill babies. This latest episode of "America Undercover" follows the stories of two such babies, 7-month-old Meredith Brandon and 4-year-old Aric Alexander, both of whom suffer from the same disease, a congenital heart defect called truncus arteriosis. Even at such a young age, Meredith has already had two open-heart surgeries.

The parents of both youngsters discuss the emotional trauma of giving birth to such children, the dashed expectations, the sacrifice and commitment to caring every minute of the day for a baby who might, at any moment, stop breathing — something which has happened to Meredith on more than one occasion. There is the terrible ordeal of watching a young child withstand the rigors and pain of repeated surgery. When 4-year-old Aric screams, "I want to go home" after a doctor inserts an intravenous needle, his pain and fear reach out for us.

When Aric undergoes surgery to replace a valve in his heart, we hold our breath waiting for the outcome. He is a charming, gentle boy whose zest for life practically bubbles out of him. When he survives yet another operation to control bleeding, we cheer for him; but three months later, when he goes to the doctor for a sore throat, he unexpectedly dies — and we weep.

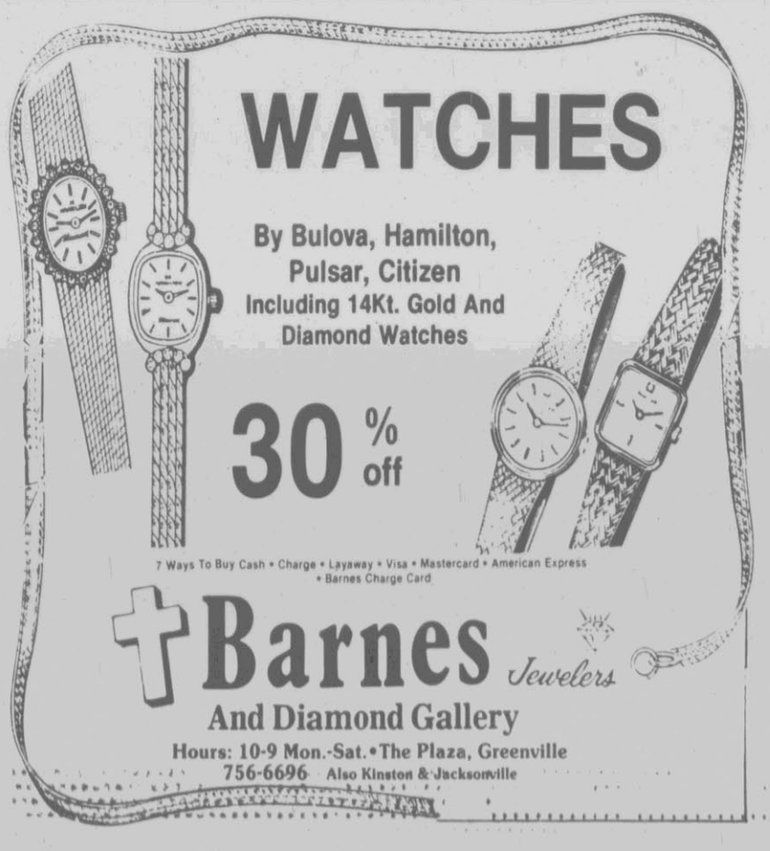

This is a story of miracles, but it has an unfair ending. We fall in love with Aric, and he is not saved. It feels like a betrayal; yet, it is not for the viewer to judge the value of Aric's short life. His parents, and the parents of Meredith, display such courage and wisdom; it is only their grief and judgment that matter.

"People might think that it's cruel to take a child that could die and give him a life-saving operation knowing that, in a few years, he could possibly die," says Aric's father, Michael, after his son's death. "But you can't think that way. You have to have hope."

Super Bowl

By Andrew J. Edelstein

It's Sunday, Jan. 26, and a hush descends over the world. This is no ordinary day. In Washington D.C., Ronald Reagan offers a prayer of deliverance for the helmeted combatants soon to take the field. In Ulster, the warring Catholics and Protestants lay down their arms. In Moscow, Mikhail Gorbachev, having lost a bundle on the Ivan Drago-Rocky Balboa bout, excuses himself from a Politburo meeting and discreetly places a call to Vegas for the latest odds.

This is arma-get-it-on! We're talking history here, bub. This is Super Sunday. But this is no plain old Super Sunday. No siree, this is Super Sunday XX. Twenty years of Super Bowls, 20 years of Roman numerals, 20 years of hype that follows what we shall call Cosell's Law: As the level of hype goes up, the memorability of the game goes down.

For instance, how many of you really remember last year's war to settle the score? The battle between Hulk Hogan and Rowdy Roddy Piper will linger in people's memories longer. Give up? It was the showdown between Dan Marino of the Miami Dolphins and Joe Montana of the San Francisco 49ers. The biggest battle of gunslingers since Wyatt Earp faced down Billy the Kid, or so the press trumpeted daily from Palo Alto. So what happens? The Dolphins went belly up. They played as if the cast of "The Golden Girls" was running interference for them. They lost 38-16.

But that doesn't mean there haven't been a few memorable Super Bowl games out of all those XXs. Only that the three most memorable tilts happened when the price of gas was still about 30 cents agallon and Giants Stadium was just a New Jersey swamp.

Here are those memorable games:

Jan. 15, 1967 (Los Angeles Coliseum): The first one — when the notion of applying Roman numerals to Super Bowls was a mere glint in Pete Rozelle's eye. The Green Bay Packers — the NFL team of the '60s — led by aging receiver Max McGee (who admits that he came to town on game day at 7:30 a.m., after a night of partying — "I met some blonde the night before and was on my way out to pay my respects," he later said) rolled over the upstart AFL champs, the Kansas City Chiefs.

Jan. 12, 1969 (Orange Bowl): Max McGee, of course, was a party piker compared to Broadway Joe Namath, the hero of Super Bowl III. The brash New York Jets quarterback shot his mouth off during Super Bowl week: "The Jets will win Sunday. I guarantee it." Most people thought Namath's thought processes had gotten as fluffy as his white llama rug. But when Sunday came around, Namath led the Jets over the Baltimore Colts, 16-7, the first victory by an AFL squad.

Jan. 14, 1973 (back to the L.A. Coliseum): The Dolphins topped their undefeated season (the last in the NFL) with a victory over Richard Nixon's favorite team, the Washinton Redskins. The buffoonery of the Watergate burglars had made front-page news during the just-concluded season, but it was the Dolphins who gave the game its equivalent of the Tough Tony Ulasewicz. Little Garo Yepremian, the Dolphins' kicker, had a field goal blocked. He picked up the ball and, thinking he was Garo Unitas, threw a pass with all the aplomb of someone in girl's gym. The ball was caught by Skin cornerback Mike Bass, who sprinted 49 yards for Washington's only score.

Memorable Moments From Past XIX Bowls

By Adam Beckerman

Super Bowl XX airs Sunday, Jan. 26 on NBC. Let's reminisce about the 19 previous contests.

The first Super Bowl, between the NFL's Green Bay Packers and the AFL's Kansas City Chiefs, was so named because Chief owner Lamar Hunt had recently seen his kids bounce a Wham-O Super Ball above his garage.

The Second: The name Otto was the most common name on the 1967 Raiders: There was LB Gus and center Jim.

The Third: Things started poorly for the Colts when, in the pre-game festivities on the 50-yard line, the shower curtain surrounding their mascot wouldn't descend, and he suffered steam burns.

The Fourth: The Chiefs became the first Wild Card team ever to win and the last from the AFL.

V: The dawn of Roman numerology heralds comedy, as the Colts and Cowboys have us rolling on our sofas before Baltimore's Jim O'Brien kicks a 32-yarder with V seconds to go.

VI: Dallas finally wins one, and they've never let us forget.

VII: Redskin guru George Allen has his kick returners practice looking into the Los Angeles sun. The 16-0 Dolphins enter as three-point underdogs.

VIII: Again Miami wins, lulling us to sleep, again.

IX: Pittsburgh prevails, its Steel Curtain attaining national prominence. Joe Greene was Mean, L.C. Greenwood wore gold shoes, Ernie Holmes shaved an arrow on his head and Dwight White just played like a mad dog.

X: If I could have one Super Bowl performance, it would be as Lynn Swann torturing poor Marc Washington of Dallas.

XI: Raider Punter Ray Guy has a punt blocked for the first time. But the Vikes can't punch it over from the 1 and Tarkenton loses No. 3.

XII. Broncos got us drinking Orange Crush again. Sales have slipped since.

XIII: Again Terry beats Roger by four, and again Roger had last licks but came up one completion short.

XIV: The Tampa Bay Bucs were nearly in this one.

XV: Pete Rozelle had to present the Lombardi Trophy to Al Davis, the man suing the league for $50 million.

XVI: Bill Walsh's white sweater. Forrest Gregg's black eyebrows.

XVII: The strike year. So John Riggins' fourth-and-one TD romp has a big fat asterisk beside it.

XVIII. Reagan declares Raider back Marcus Allen a multiple warhead.

XIX. Marino vs. Montana. Shula vs. Walsh. Shula loses his fourth Super Bowl. Marino, his first. What bums, huh?

"1985 WILL BE REMEMBERED AS A GOOD YEAR..."

It hardly seems possible that another 12 months have passed! It seems that only yesterday we were beginning the year, and now we are reflecting on our City's annual accomplishments.

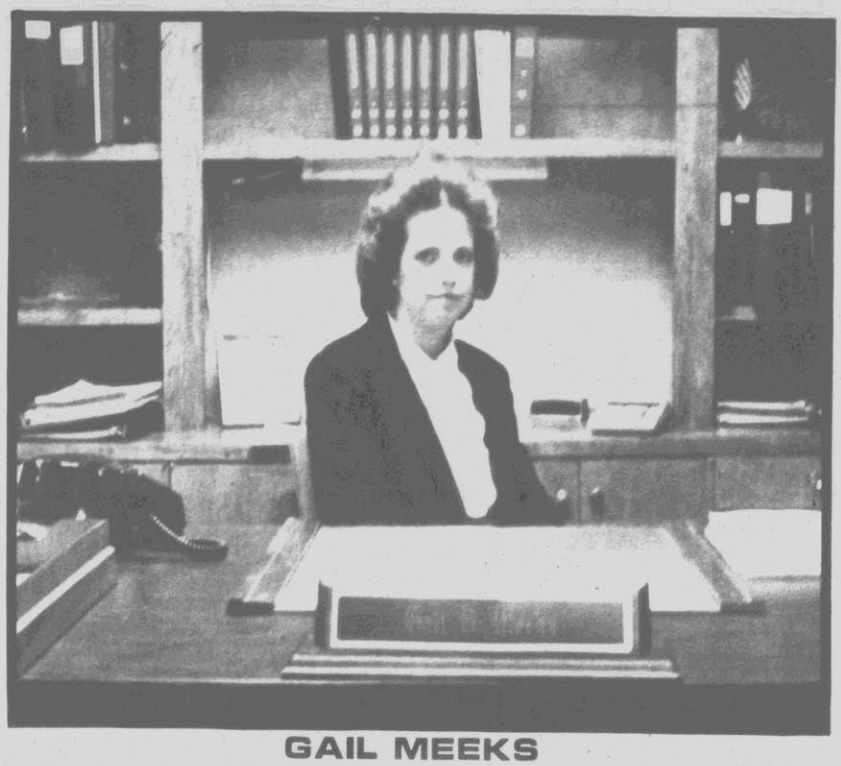

It was another busy and progressive year for the City of Greenville. Many new programs were initiated and many new projects were undertaken. In every area of our municipal operations, significant improvements were seen. Productivity was at an all-time high. Substantial advancements were made in the City's financial position. Particular attention was given to future capital improvement needs and the establishment of designated capital reserve funds.

All in all, 1985 will be remembered as a good year. The City is deeply grateful to its employees who worked so diligently throughout the year, always dedicating themselves to providing outstanding municipal services to the people of Greenville.

Although North Carolina's municipalities face cutbacks in the coming months, we move into 1986 determined to do even more, to attain higher goals, and holding to the strong belief that 1986 will be an even greater year for our city.

CLERK'S OFFICE

The City Clerk's Office closed the books on another busy year. It seems the City Council is required to meet more and more frequently, and it is the Clerk's responsibility to take detailed notes and officially record the minutes of all of the Council's meetings. In addition, all contracts, ordinances, and resolutions adopted by the City Council must be properly recorded, and the Clerk must insure that State requirements regarding the keeping of public records and documents are correctly followed.

At the 1985 North Carolina League of Municipalities Convention held in November, City Clerk Lois Worthington was elected to the League's Board of Directors. Mrs. Worthington was nominated by the North Carolina Association of Municipal Clerks and endorsed by Greenville's Mayor, City Council, and City Manager. Her primary responsibilities will be representation of the North Carolina Association of Municipal Clerks and other League affiliate organizations and to provide League officials with information regarding Clerks' activities.

A TALENT BANK FOR BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS...

In 1980, the City of Greenville established a Talent Bank to provide the citizens of Greenville an opportunity to volunteer their time, talent and expertise to the various boards and commissions appointed by the City Council. If you do not have a resume in the Talent Bank and would like to serve on any of the City's boards and commissions, please call or write the City Clerk's Office, Post Office Box 7207, Greenville, North Carolina, 27835, or telephone 752-4137, Extension 219. The Clerk will be more than happy to furnish you with a resume and answer any questions you may have. Citizen participation is solicited, and we encourage you to get involved.

LOIS WORTHINGTON, CITY CLERK

PERSONNEL

The City's Personnel Department was involved in a number of new or expanded programs for 1985. During the year, the City's FLEXPAY Program was implemented which allows employees to choose among a variety of optional benefits, as well as a core of benefits. This program allows an employee the opportunity to better individualize his benefit needs. The employees may elect to purchase medical and life insurance benefits on a before-tax basis. The other before-tax components of FLEXPAY include a dependent care spending account and a non-covered medical care spending account.

A supplemental retirement program was made available to City employees during 1985. Sponsored by the International City Management Association (ICMA), this program allows employees to place tax-deferred contributions into the supplemental plan.

SELF-FUNDED HOSPITAL INSURANCE PROGRAM IS SUCCESSFUL...

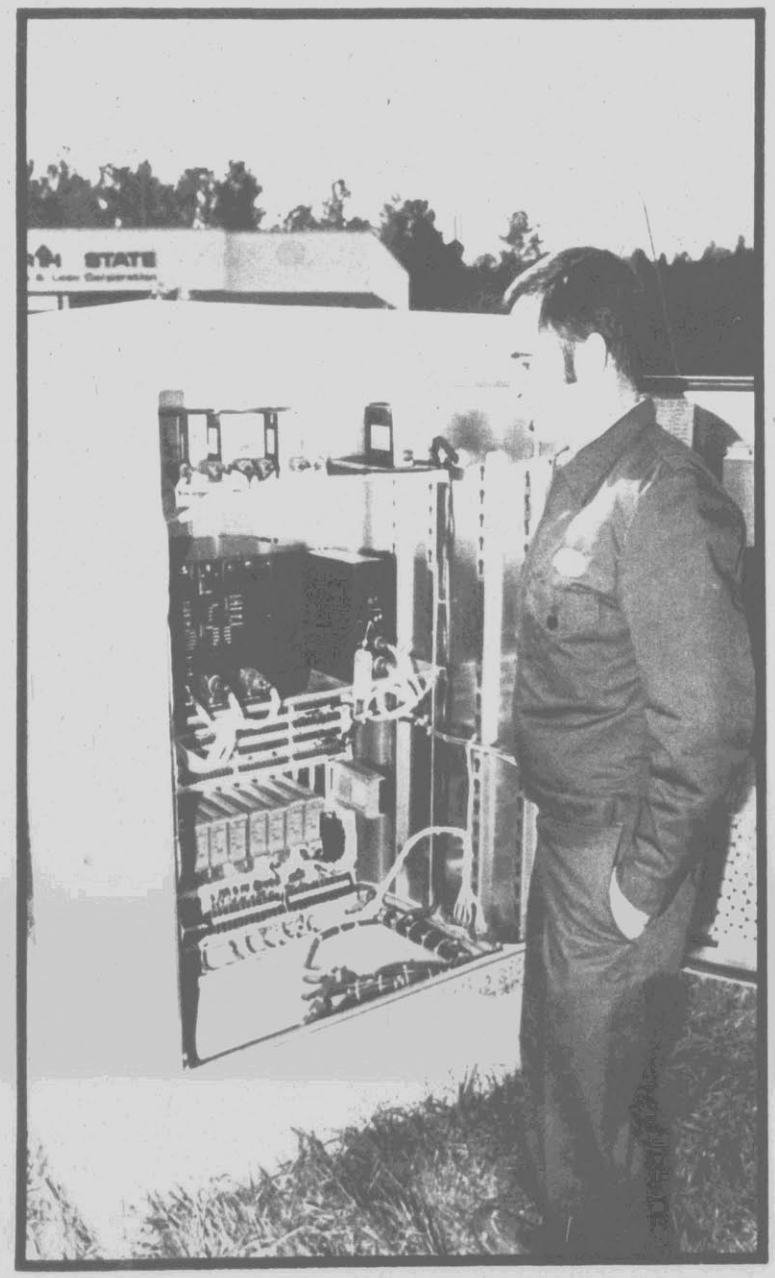

Due to the continued success of the City's self-funding hospitalization program, approval was granted for the implementation of a direct reimbursement dental program. This program provides a 50 percent reimbursement for necessary dental expenses up to a specified maximum during the calendar year.

For the third consecutive year, the City received a refund on its Workers' Compensation Insurance because of employees' efforts in maintaining low injury and accident rates.

JERRY COX, DIRECTOR

ENGINEERING & INSPECTIONS

During 1985, the Engineering and Inspections Department provided engineering services as needed by the citizens of Greenville and in the daily operation of the City. Code enforcement and building inspection were also provided so as to maintain the quality of life and a high standard of land development throughout Greenville and the surrounding area.

City engineers designed the computerized traffic control system for the Arlington-Red Banks intersection, shown here by Public Works Traffic Services Supervisor Gerald Crisp.

Major accomplishments of the Department in the area of engineering include completion of the 1984 Street Resurfacing Project at an approximate cost of $633,000, signalization and street improvements to the Arlington Boulevard/Red Banks Road intersection, and drainage improvements at Hooker Road and Dickinson Avenue. The Engineering Division also provided plans and project administration for improvements to Pitt Street from Fourteenth Street to Twelfth Street and sidewalk installation in the South Evans area as part of the City's Community Development Block Grant Program. Design work was initiated for the replacement of the Hooker Road Bridge over Green Mill Run as part of the N. C. Department of Transportation's Municipal Bridge Replacement Program. Also, in a cooperative effort with the NCDOT, the Greenville Thoroughfare Plan is in the process of being updated.

Working with maps and charts is an everyday job for Engineer Bill Shaw.

In regard to public building improvements for 1985, the Engineering Division provided construction contract administration for expansion of the children's area of Sheppard Memorial Library, the re-roofing of Moyewood Center, and renovations to City Hall and the Community Building. Design of a new fire station to be constructed at the intersection of N. C. Highway 43 and Red Banks Road is underway.

Engineering activities have been and are expected to remain at a high level as a result of continuing growth in the Greenville area and a renewed capital improvement program for the City.

NEW CONSTRUCTION TOPS $45 MILLION...

The Inspections Division continues overlooking all new construction, as well as alterations and additions. Approximately 600 new construction permits were issued in 1985 at an estimated cost of $45,000,000. Alteration and addition permits were issued at a development cost of $23,400,000. Total revenues from permit and inspection fees exceeded $125,000. Throughout the year, the Inspections Division responded to 3,400 code violations and another 450 citizen concerns. Total inspection and miscellaneous call responses exceeded 5,000.

Permit Officer Ginger Barber is responsible for issuing building permits.

An indepth review of the City's building permit fees was conducted during 1985. Extra effort has been put forth to expedite the clean-up of burned and/or dilapidated buildings in the aftermath of an unusual number of building fires within the city. So as to maintain the level of service provided by the Inspections Division, building inspectors are being cross-trained in all aspects of building code enforcement and an involved system for distributing the number of required inspections among available personnel is being used.

TOM TYSINGER, DIRECTOR

FINANCE

"We have examined the combined financial statements of the City of Greenville, North Carolina, as of and for the year ended June 30, 1985. In our opinion, the financial statements of the governmental fund types, fiduciary fund type, and the account groups present fairly the financial position of such fund types and account groups of the City of Greenville, North Carolina, as of June 30, 1985, and the results of operations of such fund types for the year then ended, in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles applied on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year."

McGladrey, Hendrickson & Pullen
Certified Public Accountants

In brief, this statement by the City's auditors means the financial state of the City is excellent. The comparative chart at the bottom of this page indicates the significant financial improvements which have steadily occurred during the past three years.

Finance Director Ron Kimble and Charlotte Mills, Deputy Finance Director, review the 1985 audit.

During 1985, the Finance Department continued progress towards audit consolidation for all agencies and jurisdictions for which the City is ultimately responsible. The City of Greenville complied with federal and state grant audit requirements one year earlier than mandated.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT HAS FINANCIAL IMPACT...

Advances in payroll and personnel areas, allowing for implementation of deferred compensation plans, pre-tax health and life insurance premium deductions, and dependent-care and non-covered medical spending accounts, were implemented during the year. These advances also allowed the City to prepare for the new Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), which is effective April 15, 1986, for all public agencies. It took the City four months to hammer out a FLSA plan that was fair and equitable in its approach, yet protected the financial interest of the City and its legal obligation to its employees.

Finance chaired the committee which hired a consultant to acquire state-of-the-art radio communications equipment and a telephone communications system to meet the City's present and future needs.

The Department continues to monitor the progress of President Reagan's Tax Reform proposal with regard to the loss of certain key federal funds such as, Revenue Sharing, Community Development Block Grant, Transit Operating Assistance, and Transit Capital Grants, to name a few.

Finance must continually evaluate the impact of new federal and state rules such as reporting of 1099's to "contractors" earning more than $600 annually from the City, taxes on the imputed cost of employer provided commuting vehicles for its employees, and changes in the North Carolina tax code with respect to inventory taxes, intangible taxes, and additional senior citizens exclusions on property taxes. Things are getting more rather than less complicated, and Finance has become the watchdog for the City in many of these areas.

COMPARATIVE FINANCIAL DATA

Greenville has undergone significant growth during the past three fiscal years. An indication of this growth is reflected in these financial statistics:

FIRE-RESCUE DEPARTMENT

Officers at the Greenville Fire-Rescue Department will remember 1985 as a busy year. There were six major business structure fires during the year--Spain's Foodland, the old Garris-Evans Lumber Company, Star-Planters Warehouse, Norcott Funeral Home, Mid-Eastern Brokers, and the Keel Peanut Warehouse. The loss of one life occurred during a house fire in May.

The Greenville Fire-Rescue Department responded to six major business structure fires in 1985.

Late in September, the threat of a major hurricane plaqued the North Carolina coast for several days, and Greenville appeared to be in the direct path of Hurricane Gloria's fury. Fire-Rescue officers were placed on emergency alert during this impending crisis.

ALL OFFICERS ARE EMT-CERTIFIED...

Emphasis continued on the training and professional development of Fire-Rescue personnel. With the EMT-certification of four new employees, all of the Department's shift personnel are now qualified and certified Emergency Medical Technicians.

During 1985, the Fire-Rescue Department was awarded a special "Certificate of Appreciation" for the continued support given to the National Guard and Reserve Program.

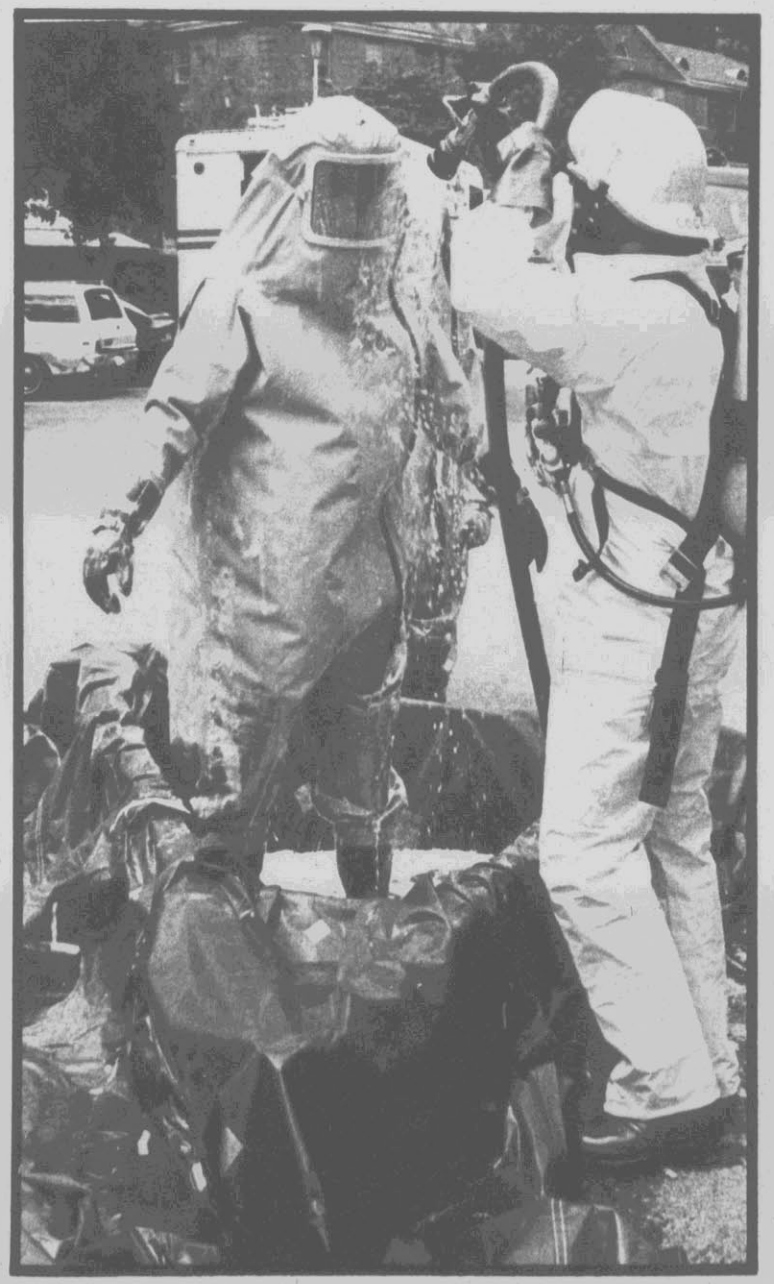

The Department initiated sponsorship of a Boy Scout Explorer Post in January, and the group was chartered with eight members. These Explorer Scouts have devoted over 1,100 hours to training and participation in various Department activities.

Snorkel truck will reach heights of 85 feet to aid in extinguishing fires.

HAZARDOUS MATERIALS RESPONSE TEAM...

In July, the Hazardous Materials Response Team answered a call to a chemical spill in the Chemistry Department, Flanagan Building, East Carolina University. The spill occurred in a refrigerator unit, and poisonous vapors filled several classrooms. Due to the quick and efficient response of the Team, no serious injuries occurred because of the spill.

PLANNING & COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

The 1985 calendar year proved to be a very busy and productive year for the Planning and Community Development Department. Ongoing assistance is provided by the staff to the Planning and Zoning Commission, Subdivision Review Board, Board of Adjustment, Environmental Advisory Commission, and Human Relations Council.

Several other projects have played a major role in planning activities. The Medical District Study Committee, EVERGREEN of Greenville, Inc., the zoning ordinance update, Historic Properties Commission, Planned Residential Development ordinance, and the Pitt-Greenville Airport Master Plan have all required Planning staff input during the year.

During 1985, the Planning and Zoning Commission approved 21 preliminary subdivision plats, representing 96 lots and tracts for development and 344 multi-family residential units. The Subdivision Review Board approved 72 final plats representing 215 lots and tracts for development (103 were single-family residential lots), 263 multi-family residential units (72 were conversions from apartments to townhouse or condominium units) and 36 office condominium units, as well as 30 soil erosion and sedimentation control plans. The Planning Office was responsible for reviewing all of the preliminary and final subdivision maps.

There were nine annexations approved during 1985, comprising 71.708 acres. Eight covenants of voluntary annexation were approved, comprising 57.927 acres. Three covenants of voluntary annexation are pending, involving 33.359 acres. The Planning Office processed 36 rezoning requests during the past year, encompassing 447.93 acres.

Forty-three (43) special use permits were heard by the Board of Adjustment, of which 38 were approved. The Board also heard one request for a variance. Planners approved 680 zoning compliance permits for new construction, additions, and accessory structures. In addition, 240 business license applications were approved.

A new look in the South Evans Neighborhood.

PROVIDING HUMAN RELATIONS ASSISTANCE...

Human relations assistance is provided by the Community Relations Officer. A number of complaints were investigated during the year. These complaints pertained to many areas but the majority of them pertained to tenant/landlord disagreements and the second highest number of complaints pertained to employment discrimination. In addition to investigating complaints, a large number of families and individuals received counseling and referral services for human needs. The staff also provided assistance to the Human Relations Council. Steps were taken during the year to update the status and direction of the New Horizons Task Force which will work to develop an improved Fair Housing resolution or ordinance for the City of Greenville.

MEDICAL DISTRICT STUDY COMPLETED...

The Planning Office was engaged in assisting the Medical District Study Committee, which held its first meeting on January 14, 1985. Since that time, the Committee has received input from a variety of resource contributors, representing City and County government, the Greenville Utilities Commission, the development community, property owners, local businesses and the previous Medical District Study Committee. The information gathered has recently culminated in the completion of a report regarding long-range development of the Medical Arts District, that area surrounding the ECU Medical School and Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The report was presented to the City Council on December 9, 1985, and has been forwarded to the Planning and Zoning Commission for review and recommendations regarding necessary action.

Lynne James, Planner, provided staff support to the Medical District Study Committee.

FUNDING FOR SOUTH EVANS PROJECT...

In the area of Community Development, the South Evans Project was the major focus of the 1985 work program. The City, through the use of Community Development Block Grant funds, spent in excess of $800,000 in 1985 on housing rehabilitation; acquisition and demolition of dilapidated structures; family relocation assistance; water, sewer, and gas improvements; sidewalk construction; and, street construction.

Several old, dilapidated houses were purchased and moved to West Twelfth Street, where they have been completely renovated and will shortly be available for sale. The paving of Pitt Street, between Twelfth and Fourteenth Streets, was accomplished during 1985. The revitalization effort was enhanced by the installation of several sidewalks throughout the neighborhood.

An application to request determination of eligibility under the Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG) program was developed by the Community Development staff. The City's request has been approved by the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. Various projects are currently being reviewed which may be suitable for the program. A successful grant application could provide additional revenues and jobs in Greenville.

The Community Development Office received approval of an application which may provide up to $250,000 assistance for housing rehabilitation of substandard rental properties in several neighborhoods in West Greenville. This program will also provide rental assistance for low income families who occupy these units. A number of structures have been rehabilitated under this program.

BOBBY ROBERSON, DIRECTOR

POLICE DEPARTMENT

The Greenville Police Department continually strives to improve the quality and effectiveness of police service to the community. Toward this goal, several improvements were made in the Department during 1985.

Significant changes were made in the Investigative Division. In addition to having personnel assigned for General Investigations and Special Investigations, the Division now has a Community Services Section responsible for community relations, juvenile services, and crime prevention. A Crime Prevention Officer was added to the staff to ensure that more community service work would be done related to the prevention of crimes.

Crime Analysis and Response Section implemented.

A Crime Analysis and Response Section was also added to the Investigative Division to provide analytical work to assist in the identification of series of offenses, suspects, and locations where offenses are likely to take place. A daily evaluation of crime is conducted in addition to long-term analysis. When problems are identified, the Stakeout Team members of this section are assigned as needed.

Changes also occurred in the Patrol Division. Additional personnel were added on the day and midnight shifts based on an increase in calls for service. More patrol officers now possess the ability to process arrestees, allowing Identification Specialists more time to handle complex evidence collection and processing tasks.

Pitt-Greenville Animal Shelter opens in July.

During 1985, the City of Greenville and County of Pitt joined efforts in consolidating animal control services and opening a City-County Animal Shelter, which is located on the Old County Home Road (State Road 1725) near Bells Fork.

Police Advisory Committee reviews needs and future goals.

A Police Advisory Committee composed of local citizens was formed to review the impact of improvements made in the Police Department and to assist in identifying future goals. This Committee will serve to improve the Department's ability to provide high quality police service and will serve as a vehicle for enhancing channels of communication within the community.

Police training is an important part of annual work program.

Training again played a significant role in improving the quality and effectiveness of police service to the Greenville community. Staff members attended nearly 18,000 hours of training in order to acquire new skills or to expand current skills. Emphasis was placed on providing advanced in-service training in criminal investigations and patrol practices. In addition, the Department continued its efforts toward developing state certified instructors to meet training needs.

TED HOLMES, CHIEF

PUBLIC WORKS

Public Works, the largest department in the City, will remember 1985 as a year when it assumed new responsibilities, a year when new services were provided to Greenville citizens, and a year of tremendous accomplishment.

The Sanitation Division continued to accept additional responsibilities without any new staff. During the past 12 months, 109 large containers were added to the container loader routes, making a total of 1,479 containers receiving service in Greenville. Approximately 150 homes and many apartments were added to the general refuse collection routes giving a total of 9,757 homes receiving service. Volunteer roll-out cart service increased by 43 families during 1985, making a total of 437 homes utilizing roll-out refuse carts.

Street Maintenance crew pours new sidewalk on Pitt Street.

The Public Works Street Maintenance Division was given the Pitt Street project. Its construction crew did all the curb and gutter work. The South Evans sidewalk project was also completed by the construction crew, as was earth moving and landscaping of the shoulders. Storm drainage improvements were made throughout the year. Every open ditch within the city limits was cleared and several hundred linear feet of pipe were installed. The Street Maintenance Division was assigned the project of filling all cracks in the street system, thereby reducing the need for resurfacing several streets.

The entrance to Greenwood Cemetery is landscaped.

City Garage repairs and maintains ECU Transit System buses.

The Public Works Cemetery Division was given the additional responsibility of opening and closing all graves within City cemeteries. During the past 12 months, 206 graves have been opened and closed. A major landscaping project was begun in Greenwood Cemetery. The entrance will have year-round flowers, green shrubs, and beautiful trees.

GREAT charter service provided for hotels and businesses.

Ridership on the City's bus system, GREAT, totalled 261,190 passengers for the year, with one month reaching as high as 25,585 riders, representing nearly 1,000 riders per day. Four additional bus stop shelters were installed by the City. Local charter and convention services became quite popular, providing transportation service for meetings, special services, and banquets for citizens and visitors to Greenville.

Installing traffic signals at Red Banks and Arlington.

Building and Grounds crew installs compressor at City Hall.

The Traffic Services Division takes care of traffic lights, markings, traffic signs, and the paint shop. Maintenance of two-way radios is also a responsibility of this Division. Street signs with block numbers are now being installed. This Division provides an outstanding preventative maintenance program for traffic lights. Because of the high quality of work done by the Traffic Services Division, the N. C. Department of Transportation increased its fee to the City for maintaining State-owned traffic lights, commended the work performed by this Division, and recommended our type of maintenance be performed across the state.

The Building and Grounds Division was added to Public Works through a reorganization plan effective July 1, 1985. This Division is responsible for painting, wallpapering, carpeting, and general plumbing and electrical repairs. In addition, these employees build and refinish furniture. This Division is also responsible for landscaping and beautifying the City's rights-of-way, parking lots, and median strips.

In 1985, the Garage Division continued to provide good preventative maintenance and general and major repairs to City-owned vehicles and equipment. The Garage now provides maintenance and repairs to East Carolina University Transit System buses. Several cab enclosures and small utility trailers were constructed by the Garage welding shop, eliminating the purchase of these items with Revenue Sharing funds.

RECREATION & PARKS

During 1985, the Recreation and Parks Department offered several new programs in addition to the regular seasonal programs. These included a coed exercise class, River Birch '85 tennis program, a scrabble club, new outdoor adventure programs, an adult soccer club, bird walks and special programs at River Park North, and new classes in youth dance and exercise at West Greenville and South Greenville Recreation Centers. The "Sunday in the Park" program continues to be very popular, attracting large crowds. Participants in the senior games program, now in its second year of existence, have greatly increased in number.

The 1985 Back-To-School Ice Cream Fling Bing was an enjoyable event.

Volleyball -- a popular team activity.

Development of a new 1.5-acre park in the Westhaven Subdivision began in late October. Plans for the park include a picnic shelter with tables and grills, playground equipment, and split rail fencing surrounding the park. The installation of a carpet floor at the Elm Street Gymnasium was also a new addition. This type of floor can be used for a variety of programs including volleyball, basketball, and exercise/aerobic programs.

EMPLOYEES' WELLNESS PROGRAMS...

In September, the Department assumed the additional responsibility of coordinating the City of Greenville and Greenville Utilities Commission's Wellness Programs. The purpose of the Wellness Program is to address the needs and concerns for the health and well-being of City and Greenville Utilities employees, and in doing so, to help contain escalating health care costs. The Wellness Program is basically designed to encourage habits and lifestyles that affect wellness and to provide programs that encourage behavioral changes to improve general health and well-being.

During the 1984-85 Fiscal Year, the Department received a matching Federal Land and Water Conservation Grant for $25,000 from the Department of Interior for the development and construction of an outdoor amphitheatre at the Town Common. The project is expected to be completed in late 1986.

Happy are the children who participate in Recreation and Parks programs!

PITT-GREENVILLE AIRPORT

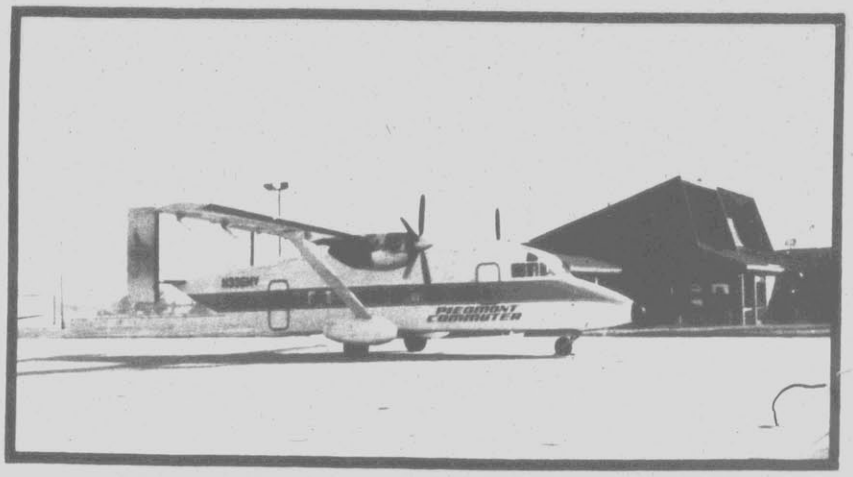

The Pitt-Greenville Airport is a continually improving facility which mirrors the high standards of this community. As the "aerial gateway" to Greenville and Pitt County, the Airport is a vital link for the continued and enhanced growth of this region. The operation, maintenance, and improvement of the Airport is under the direction of the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority. Current members, appointed by the Greenville City Council and the Pitt County Commissioners, are Della Dayson, Chairman; Jerry W. Powell, Vice Chairman; Garrie W. Moore, Secretary; Jack A. Farrior; James T. Little; Julian W. (Bubba) Rawl; Nancy Jenkins, City Councilwoman; and, Burney L. Tucker, County Commissioner.

The Airport continued to make progress in the improvement of its facility and services. In 1985, several important Federal and State projects were completed. Additional projects underway include the rehabilitation and upgrading of visual and navigational aids, the construction of a corporate hangar taxiway system, installation of security and perimeter fencing, and the installation of additional security and ramp lighting. The Airport Authority has received a grant offer from the Federal Aviation Administration to undertake a comprehensive long range study for the Airport in order to project and identify its growth and needs for the next twenty years. The FAA has also approved a grant so that the existing runway lighting system may be rehabilitated and upgraded.

Piedmont begins commuter service in May.

Our air-traveling citizens continue to enjoy the accessibility and ease of flying from their own airport. With the commencement of service by Piedmont Commuter to the Pitt-Greenville Airport in May of 1985, our outlook for commercial air service is very positive. By increasing their daily arrivals and departures and offering competitive pricing in parity with other Piedmont service points, passenger loads to and from the Pitt-Greenville Area continue to increase dramatically. In early 1986, Piedmont Commuter will introduce new and larger aircraft to serve the needs of our community.

In addition to the Airport's administrative offices and the airline, other services located at the aerodrome include air charter service, flight training and aircraft rental, air freight, aircraft maintenance, and auto rental facilities. Further, there are over 50 aircraft based at the Airport belonging to local businesses and individuals.

With planned and orderly growth, the Pitt-Greenville Airport will continue to be a showcase for our rapidly developing community and its citizens.

SHEPPARD LIBRARY

1985 was a record year for use at Sheppard Memorial Library. Circulation for the system was the highest in history, topping 323,000 loans. This represents a seven percent (7%) increase over use during the previous year. Additionally, the library system continued to respond to the growing number of information requests from the community, with staff members answering over 44,000 questions during the year.

Programs for youngsters and adults attracted over 32,000 participants. Over 1,000 young people took part in the 1985 summer reading program sponsored at the library, while thousands of others attended story hours and book related activities.

Sheppard was one of the first libraries in North Carolina to take part in the "Let's Talk About It" book discussion series sponsored by the American Library Association and the National Endowment for the Humanities. Built on the theme "Not For Children Only", the program allowed adults to meet and discuss some of the best children's literature. In the fall, the library sponsored another book discussion group for adults based on Greek and Shakespearean drama.

A major highlight of the year was the completion of the Children's Room expansion at the Main Library. Funded by the City of Greenville, this project increased the children's area to four and one-half times its original size. Opened on March 1, 1985, the attractive new area has met with universal praise from users. In addition, the extra space has produced a dramatic increase in children's services.

HOUSING AUTHORITY

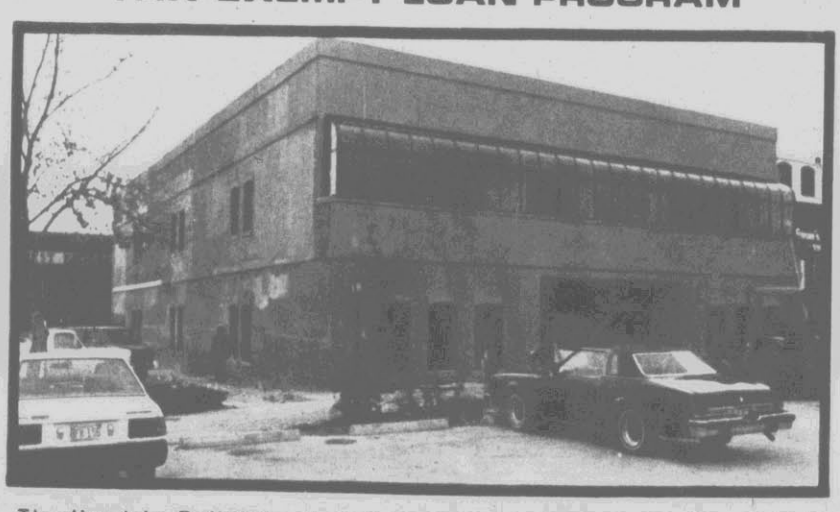

The Housing Authority did not receive funding for additional units during 1985 but was afforded an opportunity to make application. The 742 public housing units owned and managed by the Housing Authority are fully occupied and provide standard housing for approximately 2,500 residents, 44 percent of whom are widows, elderly, or disabled. An additional 34 percent are low-income working families who receive no public assistance, and 22 percent are residents who receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

Prominent endeavors of the Housing Authority continue to be in the area of modernization of older projects. Phase II of the Kearney Park modernization project, financed by the U. S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, is approximately 75 percent complete. In addition, during 1985 the Housing Authority undertook the "in-house" financed modernization of Meadowbrook, and this project is 98 percent complete, at a cost of approximately $340,000. These efforts have paid off in the substantial reduction of utility costs. The Housing Authority is looking forward to continuing this modernization and preservation of the housing stock.

The Housing Authority has worked with the City Planning and Community Development Department in its Rental Rehabilitation program. Together, significant headway has been made in providing low-income housing assistance to those who qualify and to assist landlords in improving this private housing stock.

CITY INITIATES TAX-EXEMPT LOAN PROGRAM

The Hendrix Building, a Loan Program project on the Evans Mall, nears completion.

In January, 1985, the City Council approved two low-interest rate loan programs, the Separate Loan Program and the Loan Pool Program. Both programs can be used, with certain exceptions, for financing either rehabilitation or enlargement of existing commercial structures, new construction of commercial structures, or for new construction of residential rental property. These projects must be located within the boundaries of a section of the City which has been designated "The Heart of the City".

Loan funds may not be used to provide working capital, to finance inventory, alcoholic beverage facilities, or for facilities where more than 25 percent of the funds are used for restaurant purposes. On September 13, 1985, both programs were amended to also allow acquisition costs as eligible expenses, with certain limitations.

The Loan Pool Program consists of funds pooled from four local lending institutions and is available for projects $25,000 and up. A Loan Pool Committee considers loans of this nature. The Separate Loan Program involves a borrower and the lender of their choice considering projects $10,000 and up and submitting them to the City's loan representative, Finance Director Ron Kimble, for review.

The City has received more than 30 inquiries about the loan programs, and several loan applications are complete and construction is underway.

ATTORNEY'S OFFICE

The Office of the City Attorney is responsible for advising the Council, the Manager, and Department Heads on matters of local, state, and federal laws as they relate to municipal operations. In carrying out these duties, the City's legal staff prepares ordinance revisions; drafts contracts, deeds, and other legal documents; provides training on current legal topics to City employees; and assists in the research and development of new policy.

During 1985, the City won or negotiated an acceptable settlement in several lawsuits and there were no decisions against the City in any pending cases in state or federal court.

UTILITIES COMMISSION

The Greenville Utilities Commission, which provides electricity, water, sewer, and gas services, is owned by the citizens of Greenville.

A continuation of the heavy demand by new customers for utility services was seen in 1985. Despite the record usage of utility services by existing customers, all these services were maintained with minimal interruptions. On January 21, 1985, Greenville's temperature fell to -4°F, an all-time low. The electric peak consumption that day was 29 percent above any previous winter period.

The spring of 1985 proved to be a dry season in the Greenville area and placed heavy demands on utility services. Peak day water consumption in May was 8.2 percent higher than any previous usage.

Wastewater Treatment Plant opened in April.

Utility highlights of 1985 include construction of a new 115-KV electric transmission line, completing the western loop around the city; a second electric power transformer was added to the Eastside Substation; and the new $10.4 million Wastewater Treatment Plant was placed in service on April 11.

A Charles Dance is 39, stands 6 feet 3, was born in Plymouth, England. He and his wife of 15 years, Joanna, an artist, live in a North London home with their children, Oliver, 11, and Rebecca, 5. Dance learned how to act by working in several repertory companies. He has acted in only two films, however: "For Your Eyes Only," a James Bond thriller in which he had a two-word part; and more recently in "Plenty," opposite Meryl Streep. In "Plenty," Dance plays an unhappy British diplomat married to a fiercely ambitious woman (Streep) who is recognized for her wartime heroics.

The Ayatollah Khomeini and his followers hold her in low light—as they do any family member of the late Shah—but, to date, Soraya has not been a target, and there is no conclusive evidence that they have marked her for assassination. From time to time, in fact, Soraya openly attends leading charity and social functions in Paris.

Prince Charles and Diana: Who's taller?

A In an interview some time ago on Channel 4, an independent TV outlet in Great Britain, Paul McCartney attributed the dissolution of the Beatles and his friendship with John Lennon to the dislike of the rock group's manager. "It all started," McCartney explained, "because I didn't like Allen Klein. The others and John wanted to go with with him [after the death of the Beatles' first manager, Brian Epstein, in 1967]. I thought it was a bad thing to do. Later I was proved right . . . Once, when we were Lennon and McCartney, we were equal. Then . . . John moved away to New York. The business stuff made us very bitchy with each other. John was slagging me off and calling me Engelbert Humperdinck. I really didn't want to come back at him. I knew we would just have a big media row." The Beatles dissolved their band in 1970, and Lennon was murdered on Dec. 8, 1980, in front of his Manhattan apartment. McCartney—a multimillionaire who in 1984 wrote and starred in the flop movie "Give My Regards to Broad Street"—has accused the media of comparing him in ruthless ambition to J.R. Ewing, the fictive, despicable oil tycoon in the TV series "Dallas."

There never has been a motion picture like Gone with the Wind. Or a heroine like Scarlett O'Hara, who so completely captured the hearts of millions of movie-goers around the world. Her upper body is formed of fine bisque porcelain in one delicately sculptured piece, and her porcelain feet and legs are sculptured with the same meticulous care. Her unforgettable heart-shaped face is lovingly painted by hand.

Her dress is a thoroughly romantic creation of green crepe de chine, its voluminous skirt and fitted bodice setting off to perfection Scarlett's southern beauty.

The result is enchanting. A work to delight the most discerning collector . . . to cherish, to lovingly hand down from mother to daughter through the years to come.

'Vivien Leigh as Scarlett O'Hara' will bear the distinguishing marks of M-G-M and of Franklin Heirloom Dolls, identifying it as an original—and exclusive—issue. YOU CAN STILL MAKE A MILLION DOLLARS

Darius Azari, Eric and Chris Goode and Shawn Hausman (l-r) in AREA, the club that made them rich.

ALL SHE HAD was a simple idea. If you produced a soda pop that not only was made with all-natural ingredients but also tasted good, Sophia Collier thought, a person might earn a few dollars peddling it to the health-conscious American public.

So, about eight years ago, Sophia toyed around in her Brooklyn kitchen, stirring up batch after batch of fruit-punch syrup, inviting the neighbors in for a taste, finally persuading a local health-food store to carry her carbonated creation. At the start, her Soho Natural Soda didn't pop off the shelf; during her first winter as a beverage magnate, Sophia paid the bills by running a typing service. But she stuck to the task, relentlessly, until one day she noticed something was missing in her warehouse—the crates of soda. Consumers finally had caught up with Sophia's notion.

"It's a basic fact that ideas are a dime a dozen," she says. "The important thing is whether you can do it, whether you'll work on it and carry it through. I knew my idea would go as far as I would."

Sophia Collier, at age 29, is a millionaire who likes to say she's working on her first $100 million.

A million dollars may not be what it used to be, but it's still a tidy sum, still the barometer of American financial success. Getting there isn't easy, either: Just 410,000 persons in the U.S. (17 out of every 10,000 of us) are worth that much. And with more than three-quarters of this fraternity over the age of 50, being a millionaire before one's 30th birthday becomes even more extraordinary.

America's handful of young millionaires rely less on luck than on talent, tenacity and creativity. They display enormous energy, patience and resolve in getting what they want—which, often, is the personal satisfaction of having done something profitably and well. Wealth often was seen in the past as an end in itself, but today's generation views accumulating cash as secondary to having a good time.

"If you love money but hate what you do," warns Darius Azari, "that's bad."

Azari and three boyhood friends—Shawn Hausman and the brothers Christopher and Eric Goode—have all become rich as co-owners of AREA, Manhattan's hottest night spot. The four transplanted Californians, all with artistic backgrounds, are in their 20s. None had even the most minimal business experience when they plotted AREA's opening in 1983. Nor did they have money.

"We all got tired of working for other people and wanted to do something on our own," says Chris. "The idea never was to get to be millionaires, it was to have a playground for ourselves . . . to do the sort of stuff we were interested in."

No bank would finance their elaborate scheme to open a great showcase where art, music and drink could attract midnight revelers. So, instead, the four went after private investors—typical of young entrepreneurs—ruling out any who demanded an element of artistic control in return for their loans.

They discovered imaginative ways of staying one step ahead of the bill collectors. "There was one plumbing company that gave us credit, and we used it as a reference," Chris recalls. "When we couldn't pay, we went to another company and this time used our lumber company as a reference."

Operating on a shoestring, they virtually built the club with their own hands. It took more than a year. At AREA's grand opening, the owners cleaned the glassware themselves; they couldn't afford a dishwasher. Three months later, all debts were paid and the club was operating in the black.

Success. AREA employs 130 workers and grosses millions of dollars annually. The partners have saved their earnings, cut back on their 80-hour workweeks, learned how to divide authority and are considering new challenges.

Kent Post grew up in the oil industry, spending his high school vacations toiling for his father in the Southwest drilling fields. He came East to study English in college but was lured by Oklahoma. There, he started Geo-Sun Corp., a big name for a company that began with barely enough money for its first payroll.

"I saw a void in the oil business," says Post, now 25. "There were people who owned wells without the time or patience for them. So we began a service that operated their wells for them—sort of an apartment management company."

Working with just six employees, he soon made a name—and the beginnings of a fortune—for himself. If there was a problem, it was only that he was getting restless for a bit more chancy action. "What we did paid the bills," Post says, "but it was kind of like mowing a cemetery. I never got to do the fun stuff."

In the petroleum business, "fun" equals risk. Though it was far-removed from the safety of his original concept, Post expanded into exploration. "In the management end, what you put in, you get out," he says. "With exploration, the problem is you can think something through, work very hard at it, and still it amounts to a lot of luck."

Post and his company have garnered millions since starting in 1981 and seem to be weathering the current oil glut. Post has learned not to panic. "I understand how all businesses are very cyclical and that, eventually, it'll come back," he says. "I used to lose a whole lot of sleep worrying, but now I roll with the punches. I'm not obsessed."

But Phil Akin is. A singular vision has made Akin, at 23, not just a millionaire but also president of a company about to be traded on the stock exchange. "I never thought, 'Will it work?'" he says. "If you want something, you must make it work. You can't rely on luck."

Akin's Duds 'n Suds may be the McDonald's of the Laundromat busi-business. In 1982, while majoring in telecommunications at Iowa State, Akin borrowed $90,000 from a bank and opened an unusually attractive self-service laundry in a small town near Ames. It was successful, and soon he was back for an even bigger loan.

"I wanted to do something unique," says Akin, who admits he was scared by the prospect of signing a 10-year, $2240-a-month lease. "I wanted it to be in Ames, near the college community there, and draw the student crowd." The result was a Laundromat unlike any other: carpeted, oak-paneled with brass fittings, complete with a snack bar and pub. Patrons could do their wash while sipping a beer and lounging on a sofa in front of a big-screen TV. "In the first three days, we had 3500 customers," says Akin. "And within the first hour, someone made me an offer to buy the place for double what it cost me."

Soon, he researched the intricacies of franchising. Federal regulations were explored, manuals and systems drawn up and, 18 months later, the first Duds 'n Suds franchise was sold. By the end of last year, 40 were operational; in April, the company will go public.

"It isn't how smart you are or how much money you have, it's how persistent you are," says Akin. "Your venture has to outweigh everything else in your life. There can't be two goals: If your goal is to make your business a success, your goal can't be to own a Ferrari."

Some entrepreneurs spend a lifetime on their first lucrative idea. Brett Johnson, 27, already has shucked his first million-dollar venture and started on a completely different one, using the lessons of his first to fuel the second.

While still a sophomore at Harvard, Johnson had an idea: Print corporate logos on painter's caps, then sell them to promotion-conscious companies and consumers. He began by peddling caps with a red "H" at the Harvard-Yale game. Soon, he left school to pursue the profitable enterprise full time.

"The funny thing is," Johnson says, "I always thought the hats were stupid. I couldn't understand why people wanted them, but they did." Back home in Minneapolis, he established Crowd Caps Inc. and began imprinting custom-made hats with the symbols of such manufacturers as Skoal and the likenesses of rock stars. "I didn't know anything about business or business planning," he says. "I was just kind of out there, mucking around trying to figure it all out."

He did a fairly good job. With a growth rate of 800 percent a year, 80 employees and sales topping $7 million, the future seemed boundless.

"All of a sudden," Johnson remembers, "the market went soft." In 1983, he got out and started fresh.

"The mentality has got to be that there are hundreds of ideas out there," he says, "so let's blow this one out and get on to the next one." Result: Brett Johnson has initiated the publication Situations and Opportunities, Inc. With it, he hopes to pair up those with moneymaking potential and those who can help realize their dreams.

To the computer industry, Bill Gates always was seen as a young man in a hurry. The inventor of the operating system now built into every IBM and Apple home computer, Gates became a business legend before his 21st birthday. He founded his company, Microsoft, with money he earned as a teenage programming consultant and has never had to borrow a cent from a bank. Last June, the company's sales exceeded $140 million.

Gates, now 30, has been the model entrepreneur. Not only has he added constantly to Microsoft's innovative product line, he also has made the leap from sole proprietor to guiding force and delegator. "It's hard to have 1000 employees moving in one direction and have them feel good about it," says Gates, "so it's important to hire people to bear the burden of finance and planning. If you have a vision of great products and want to have an impact on the marketplace, you need the leverage that comes from professional managers."

Gates is unlikely ever to switch careers. "There's a big difference between a guy who sells chocolate chip cookies and makes a couple of million dollars because the cookies are a big fad this year," he says, "and someone who sees a technology that has the opportunity to be an enduring thing over many decades. We wanted to be a leader in the goal of putting a computer onto every desk and into every home in America. It would be a great failure not to see that through."

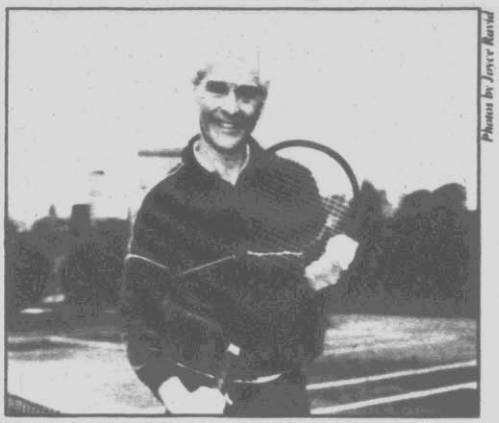

Debbi Fields, 29, has done very well indeed with chocolate chip cookies, Bill Gates' comment notwithstanding. Mrs. Fields, a native of Oakland, Calif., couldn't have started much smaller—baking cookies for meetings held by her wealthy financial-consultant husband. She couldn't help but hear the munches as her homemade recipe was devoured. So she opened a little cookie shop in Palo Alto. "Not a single customer showed up," she says. "I began walking up and down the block with my cookies, asking people to try them." Today, Mrs. Fields has more than 300 company-owned stores, with 1000 employees and annual sales of about $50 million.

"I never expected it to grow to these proportions," says Mrs. Fields. She maintains a hands-on, people-oriented style of management (every worker got a handwritten Christmas card from the boss), stringent quality controls and winning recipes. "I'm driven to perfection," she says, adding that she's still not through even after her usual 12-hour day at her headquarters in Park City, Utah: Once her three girls are in bed, she works some more. "It's part of me," she says. "My name's on the bag."

For all their money, these new millionaires share a modesty of lifestyles. Sophia Collier allows herself just one indulgence: flying first class. Kent Post bought a big car but soon traded it in for a Toyota. Bill Gates spent his first windfall on a Porsche 911, and a few of the AREA owners bought motorcycles they once could only dream of.

They're talented, certainly, and lucky too. For every Xavier Roberts, who has raked in millions since creating the Cabbage Patch doll, there are hundreds of others who somehow slipped along the way. Still, these young moguls expect to keep doing business as long as they wish. Their ventures may change, but not their drive.

"Sometimes, I 'd like to act like a kid again," Kent Post says with a chuckle. "Every time June comes around, I feel I should get three months off. I don't."

ADJUST YOUR LIFESTYLE TO CUT THE RISK OF HEART ATTACK AND STROKE. Health Editor Earl Ubell gets regular, brisk, sustained exercise on the tennis court.

A Quiz That Can Save Your Life

EAT WISELY—BUT NOT TOO WELL. Ubell's food choices—pasta and beans, whole-grain breads, vegetables—are all free of unhealthy animal fat.

FOR THE FIRST TIME IN DECADES, heart specialists are tremendously optimistic about the No. 1 health problem in the United States—cardiovascular disease. Each year, 550,000 Americans die of heart attacks and 200,000 from strokes. Now doctors see ways to cut down those gruesome death rates as well as $60 billion in annual medical costs.

Listen to Dr. Claude Lenfant, director of the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute: "Only in the last five years have we had effective medical treatments; only in the last 10 have we discovered ways in which people can lower their danger."

So, in 10 to 20 years, we will see a 25% to 50% reduction in the death toll from heart disease, predicts Dr. Lenfant. "We will give people more years of useful life," he says.

To help the readers of PARADE understand the giant steps that have been taken to control heart disease and strokes, here is an adaptation of the heart-health I.Q. test developed at the institute. If you score high—and apply your knowledge—you may live longer. —EARL UBELL, Health Editor

TRUE OR FALSE:

1 The three most potentially dangerous conditions that you can do something about are high blood pressure, high cholesterol in your blood and smoking.
TRUE. If you have all three of these risk factors, you run eight times the risk of heart disease as someone with none of them. But you can reduce blood pressure and cholesterol and quit smoking.

There are other risk factors, like age and a family history of heart attacks, but you cannot change these. And if you are overweight, do no exercise and live a high-stress life, you are at greater risk too.

2 A heart attack or stroke is often the first symptom of high blood pressure or cholesterol or both.
TRUE. If you have high blood pressure or high cholesterol, you may feel fine and look great. But both conditions work silently until, without warning, a heart attack or stroke occurs.

3 People with high blood pressure are generally nervous, tense people.
FALSE. Calm people also have high blood pressure. High blood pressure means that the blood flowing in your arteries is pressing too hard against the blood-vessel walls. It does not mean that you are too tense.

4 A blood pressure of 140/90 or more is generally considered to be too high.
TRUE. The higher your blood pressure, the greater your risk of heart disease or stroke. The number 140 is the pressure in your arteries when your heart contracts; 90 is the pressure when your heart relaxes. A better pressure would be 120/80. To reduce blood pressure: a) bring your weight down to normal; b) decrease your sodium intake, not only table salt but in snacks and processed foods; c) take prescribed medicine regularly. Many doctors also prescribe exercise and relaxation training to lower blood pressure.

5 It is only a scientific theory that elevated blood cholesterol is related to heart disease.
FALSE. If you have too much cholesterol in your blood, scientific studies show, it will stick to and clog the inside of your arteries. If your cholesterol level is over 265 mg/dl (milligrams per deciliter of blood), your risk of a heart attack is four times that of a person with 190 mg/dl. Reducing cholesterol either by diet or medication can reduce the risk to your heart.

MONITOR YOUR BLOOD PRESSURE AND CHOLESTEROL REGULARLY. Ubell has his doctor (or other health professional) check these levels periodically.

6 The most effective dietary way to lower blood-cholesterol levels is by eating less cholesterol.
FALSE. You do get cholesterol in your blood by eating foods containing the chemical, but your liver also makes cholesterol. When you eat saturated fat (fat that is usually solid at room temperature), you trigger your liver to make more cholesterol. If you substitute polyunsaturated fat (liquid at room temperature), you reduce your blood cholesterol. So avoid cholesterol-rich foods—eggs, red meats, fried foods and such dairy products as whole milk, cream, cheese and butter—as well as foods high in saturated fat. Choose instead lean meats, skinless chicken and turkey, fish, low-fat dairy products.

7 A food product labeled "no cholesterol" is safe for people with elevated cholesterol.
FALSE. It may contain large amounts of saturated fats, including coconut and palm oils or a heavily hydrogenated vegetable oil. Look for oils high in polyunsaturated fats—safflower, corn and soybean.

8 Smoking increases your risk of heart attack.
TRUE. The heart disease rate among smokers is 70% percent higher than among nonsmokers. If you also have a high blood cholesterol, your chances of a heart attack jump dramatically. In addition, you put yourself at higher risk for cancer and for emphysema, a deadly lung disease that makes it difficult to breathe.

9 Heart disease is the No. 2 killer of women.
FALSE. Heart disease is the No. 1 killer of women in the U.S. Of the 750,000 Americans who die each year of heart disease, 350,000 are women. And almost 100,000 women die each year from strokes.

10 Physical inactivity is related to heart disease.
TRUE. People who are inactive tend to have more heart disease than people who are physically active. Regular, brisk and sustained exercise often can reduce blood pressure and help you to lose weight and may even help you to stop smoking.

HOW TO RETIRE ON $400 PER MONTH!

Most Americans have no idea that even a minimal retirement income could enable them to live graciously in beautiful surroundings, a climate that is comfortable year-round and in a community of many others with like interests. But many thousands are discovering that it can be done south of the border.

This book provides detailed information on retirement havens in all parts of Mexico—the housing, recreation, health care and community service opportunities they offer. It tells how to avoid the costly mistakes that many tourists and retirees make and instructs in how to become a happy resident of this neighborly land.

CHOOSE MEXICO explodes myths that have kept many Americans from discovering how delightful life can be in Mexico. The authors who have visited every corner of the country draw upon conversations and correspondence with hundreds of retired Americans there. The book is loaded with up-to-date information on almost everything you need to know to take advantage of this greatest of retirement bargains.

Food, finances, laws, travel, recreation, community service opportunities, health services—where to live, how to get there, what it will cost—all are covered in detail.

The value of the dollar has skyrocketed from about 12 to well over 400 Mexican Pesos in the last few years. Retirees who made the mistake (cautioned against in this book) of converting their funds into Mexican currency were severely hurt. Those who continue to draw upon dollars deposited in the U.S. are prospering. CHOOSE MEXICO is full of useful advice on managing your funds so as to make the most of Mexico's bargains and maintain your financial security.

Four hundred dollars a month will provide a couple with a two-bedroom house, ample and delicious food and full-time help! Any money left over from this $400 can be used for travel and entertainment, including trips back to the US for visits with family and friends.

Why struggle with high living costs, winter snow and cold or summer heat and humidity, unsafe city streets and lonely evenings when in Mexico you can find:

- Food, housing and recreation costs a small fraction of those in the U.S.
- Springlike weather year round.
- Friendly communities of retired Americans.
- Safety and security in a country where violent crime is far less common than in the U.S.
- A government and a people who extend a gracious welcome to Americans who choose to settle there.

Dance, drama and music are reaching out to everyone

Showtime, USA!

Ballet West, a company aided by the National Endowment, dances "The Nutcracker."

WOULD YOU LIKE TO see more live theater, dance and music in your town? Then perhaps you should become better acquainted with the activities of the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency that for 20 years has been giving financial aid to organizations and individuals involved in cultural undertakings.

Frank Hodsoll, who has just been appointed to a second four-year term as head of the Endowment, would like to see as many Americans as possible enjoying ballet, symphony, opera, painting, literature and other aspects of what he calls "nonprofit creative activity." To assist financially, the Endowment has established a presence in every state of the union, although it operates with a budget of only $164 million (minuscule by Washington standards) and a staff of 260 (likewise).

"The arts used to be concentrated in a few cities," says Hodsoll, 47, who came to the Endowment from the Reagan White House staff. "Now they have spread out all over the country. You no longer have to come to New York to see good theater, opera and ballet. You can do it on your home grounds. We've encouraged regional and local operations. We've made it respectable for governors, mayors and local authorities to talk about culture."

The Endowment doesn't put on shows itself, but it provides aid to organizations, both large and small, that do. Much of its aid takes the form of "challenge grants"—that is, it will give a specified amount to an arts organization which then must raise matching funds consisting of donations from other sources, usually $3 for every $1 put in by the government.

"Most artistic enterprises are simply unable to run at a profit or even to cover their costs," says Hodsoll. "There are a number of reasons. Most people simply assume that a Greek play, let's say, is more difficult to comprehend than a television sit-com. They also feel that the arts too often represent the past. Also, the major marketing media don't push the arts. If Hollywood puts $10 million into a movie, they'll put another $10 million into promoting it.

"Too often it's assumed that the audience is not there for an artistic event, so nothing is put into promoting it. But we think the audience is there. Look at the movie Amadeus. Whatever you think of it artistically, after it came out there was a tremendous increase in the sale of Mozart's recordings. That's marketing.

"Surveys show that 39 percent of American adults attend artistic events. That means approximately 64 million people, which is a lot of people. Of course, that figure also means that 61 percent do not go, which is something we're working on."

One of the Endowment's most successful undertakings has been its Dance Touring Program, which since 1968 has been exposing audiences in many cities and towns to ballet and modern dance performances for the first time. As a result, the dance audience today is 20 times larger than it was in 1965, and ballet companies—many of them of top quality—are flourishing throughout the country. Similarly, there has been a great upsurge in regional theaters, which hardly existed prior to the Endowment. "Theater productions today are being created by people out there, not just by people on Broadway," Hodsoll says with satisfaction.

The Endowment finances the programs of established, major institutions, which Hodsoll feels establish a "benchmark" of performance quality, but much of its assistance goes to small, struggling organizations that have demonstrated artistic merit and potential. Deciding who gets the grants is a function of "peer review panels," consisting of traveling experts whose recommendations are usually followed by the Endowment authorities. Awards also are made to individuals in various fields whose work is deemed worthy of encouragement. The first step is up to the prospective recipients, who must fill out the necessary applications outlining why they think their work in the cultural field merits an Endowment grant.

Among the newest of Hodsoll's undertakings is a plan to improve and broaden arts education in the nation's schools. "We want to encourage state agencies to work with local groups and school boards to see how the arts can be made part of education," he says. "I'm not talking about marching bands; I mean trying to produce students who are literate in the arts when they graduate."

In an average year, the Endowment receives about 18,000 applications from organizations seeking grants. About one in four is given funding.

"There still is a myth that the arts are the province of the wealthy," says Hodsoll. "But we care about everybody, even if we don't fund everybody. We feel that if we can keep up the momentum that has been established, the arts will become a majority occupation in America. Perhaps we can't increase genius itself, but we can increase the number of people who appreciate it."

FROM JULIA CHILD'S KITCHEN

An Array Of Irresistible Apple Desserts

I don't think I've ever met anyone who didn't like apples, especially apple desserts. We've a dandy group here, beginning with a full-bodied applesauce that stands proudly on its own and can also be used in an Apple-and-Almond Pizza or in a modern version of Mrs. Beeton's Famous Apple Snow.

We also have Baked Apple Slices, basted generously with the best butter, sweetened with sugar and flavored with cinnamon. These too are delicious as is, or you can fatten them up with sauces or cream. Or, for a smashing dessert when you have company, bake them in a caramelized bowl, unmold them, and you have an Apple Caramel Mountain plus a first-rate (and easy-to-make) caramel sauce. But we're not through yet—those tender apple slices also appear on our Apple-and-Almond Pizza and as a filling for flaming Apple Crèpes.

CHOOSE THE RIGHT APPLE

All of these recipes call for fine, fresh, firm apples with plenty of texture, because they must either form a thick, full-bodied sauce or hold their shape in slices as they cook. Here are some of the best varieties:

- Granny Smiths and Golden Delicious are always reliable, always available standbys.
- Other suggestions, depending on where you live: Baldwin, Northern Spy, Newtown Pippin, Rhode Island Greening, Rome Beauty, York Imperial.

From down-home applesauce to exotic apple-and-almond pizza, with wonderful surprises in between Starting with a good, thick applesauce or slices of apple, you can make (clockwise from left): Apple-and-Almond Pizza, Apple Crèpes, Apple Caramel Mountain, Oven-Baked Apple Slices and Apple Snow. Enjoy!

Applesauce

6 to 8 large Granny Smith apples (3½ lbs. make 4 cups of sauce)
1 medium-sized lemon
1/2 tsp cinnamon
1/2 cup sugar, more if needed
1/2 tsp pure vanilla extract

Wash and quarter apples, core out the seeds, halve the quarters but do not peel (the peel will give flavor and body). Place apples in a heavy pan along with the juice of the lemon and the zest (yellow part of peel), the cinnamon and 1/2 cup of sugar. Cover pan and set over moderately low heat; apples will slowly soften and render their juices. Stir and mash frequently until tender throughout—about 30 minutes. Purée through a vegetable mill or sieve back into the pan; simmer, stirring, for a few minutes, adding more sugar to taste. The applesauce should be thick enough to hold its shape in a spoon. Stir in the vanilla.

Apple Snow

For about 6 cups, serving 6 to 8:

3 cups cold, thick applesauce
4 stiffly beaten egg whites
1/2 cup caramel sauce (next page)

By half-cupfuls, fold the applesauce into the egg whites; beat for several minutes, until stiff. Turn into wide-mouthed glass coupes, as shown, or into bowls; dribble over each serving a generous spoonful of thick homemade caramel sauce.

Caramel Sauce

For about 1½ cups:

1 cup sugar and 1/3 cup water
3/4 cup heavy cream, heated
1/2 tsp pure vanilla extract

Bring the sugar and water to the boil in a small, heavy saucepan. Remove from heat and swirl pan by its handle (never stir!) until sugar has completely dissolved and liquid is clear. Put on a tight-fitting cover and boil over moderately high heat for several minutes. When bubbles are thick, remove cover and boil, swirling pan, until syrup turns a light caramel brown. Let cool to about the same temperature as the heated cream. Pour in the cream: The caramel will lump. Simmer, stirring, for a few minutes to melt caramel and blend it with the cream. Stir in the vanilla. Serve warm or cold. (If too thick, simmer with a little more cream. If too thin, boil it down, stirring.)

Oven-Baked Apple Slices

For about 3 cups, serving 4 people:

6 medium apples (Granny Smith or Golden Delicious type)
1/4 cup sugar blended with 1/4 tsp cinnamon; more if needed
2 Tbs lemon juice
4 Tbs (1/2 stick) melted butter

SPECIAL EQUIPMENT
A 4-qt. mixing bowl; large rubber spatula; baking dish about 6 by 9 by 2½ inches; bulb baster

Preparing the apples. Quarter, core and peel the apples; cut the quarters into lengthwise thirds to make slices about 1/2-inch wide at the outside edge. Toss in a bowl with the sugar, then with the lemon juice and finally with the melted butter. Let sit 3 or 4 minutes to render juices and absorb flavor; taste and fold in more sugar if needed. (Meanwhile, preheat oven to 425F.)

Baking—30 to 40 minutes. Turn apples into baking dish and set in the middle level of the oven, basting every 8 to 10 minutes with accumulated juices. Apples are done when slices are thoroughly tender but hold their shape; they should color lightly and be perfectly delicious—baste with more seasonings if necessary. If juices have not reduced to a thick syrup, remove with a bulb baster and boil down in a small saucepan; pour over the apples.

Serving suggestions: Serve as is or with heavy cream, sour cream, lightly whipped sweetened cream, custard sauce or vanilla ice cream.

Mrs. Beeton's Apple Snow

Looking around for interesting ideas using applesauce, I ran into England's renowned cookery compendium, Mrs. Beeton's Book of Household Management. In my weighty 2056-page 1909 edition, I found Apple Snow—four versions of that single dessert.

The two I liked were slightly differing recipes for applesauce and egg whites beaten together until stiff—something I'd never have thought would work. But it does. Quick and easy, it's a light dessert that pleases even sophisticates, especially when you dress it up with a dollop of caramel sauce.

Mrs. Beeton came to the rescue again last month: Our fragrant Plum Pudding was due to her inspiration. I had found nothing really appealing until I picked up the facsimile of her original 1861 edition (Farrar Straus & Giroux. New York, 1969). She had not one, but five plum puddings, most of which were boiled in pudding cloths! They also called for suet—the fine creamy fat from around beef kidneys—not easy to find nowadays. Changing from suet to butter and pudding cloth to bowl, our Christmas pudding was otherwise all hers.

Isabella Beeton was only 25 when the first Mrs. Beeton's Book of Household Management appeared in London, published by her husband's firm. It almost immediately became a best-seller and has remained the standard English household cookery book ever since. As the eminent English writer Elizabeth David has pointed out, here was "a young woman with capacities and intelligence, drive and will-power far and away beyond the ordinary." With an active married life, two young sons, a large household to run, and fashion and cookery articles to write as well, it is incredible that she managed to produce that book. Tragically, four years later, at 29, Isabella died of puerperal fever, after the birth of her fourth son.

Mrs. Beeton's book has gone through so many enlargements and re-editings that her original is hardly recognizable. The new 1500-page tome has its hundreds of recipes; its menus; its appendices; lavish illustrations of table settings, napkin foldings, trussings of fowl and carvings of roasts; as well as cookery for invalids, home medicine and the like. The more modest 1861 facsimile—like an old Fanny Farmer—is an endearing look into the last century, but it also has its practical uses, as we have seen.

Apple-and-Almond Pizza

For 4 to 6 people:

- 1½ cups (12 oz.) chilled pie dough
- 1/4 cup strained apricot jam
- 1¼ to 1½ cups chilled, thick, delicious Applesauce (see recipe)
- 30 to 40 Oven-Baked Apple Slices (see recipe)
- 1 Tbs dark rum (optional)
- 1/3 cup blanched almonds coarsely ground with 3 Tbs sugar
- 3 to 4 Tbs melted butter

RECOMMENDED EQUIPMENT: a pizza baking stone and a pizza paddle

Preliminaries. Preheat oven to 425F, set rack in lower-middle level and place the pizza stone on it.

Assembling. Roll the chilled dough into a disk 13 inches in diameter and 1/8 inch thick; unroll onto a sheet of buttered heavy-duty foil and slide it onto the pizza paddle. Paint a 1/2-inch border of cold water around edge of dough and fold it over to make a rim, pressing it in place with your fingers. Prick interior of pastry all over with the tines of a fork; paint surface with the jam. Spread the applesauce over the jam and strew the apple slices attractively on top—they are not supposed to be neat. Sprinkle the rum over the apples, spread on the almond-sugar and drizzle melted butter over all. (Refrigerate if you are not proceeding to bake now.)

Baking and serving. Slide the pizza, in its foil, onto the hot stone; bake 15 minutes, reduce thermostat to 400F and bake 5 to 10 minutes more, or until pastry has crisped and has browned lightly on the bottom. Slide onto a serving board; cut into wedges, like a pizza.

Apple Mountain

For an 8-cup mold, serving 10 to 12:

- 4 lbs. medium apples (Granny Smith or Golden Delicious type)
- 1/2 cup sugar mixed with 3/4 tsp cinnamon
- 1/4 cup fresh lemon juice
- 1 stick (4 oz.) unsalted butter, melted

THE CARAMEL

- 1½ cups sugar and 1/2 cup water
- 1/2 to 3/4 cup heavy cream, heated (for sauce)
- 1/2 tsp vanilla (for sauce)

OTHER INGREDIENTS

- 4 "large" eggs
- 1 egg white
- 1/4 cup bourbon whiskey
- A little sugar, if needed

The apple slices. Slice apples; season and bake them as described on previous page. Let cool 10 minutes before proceeding. Preheat oven to 325F.

The caramel—for mold and sauce. Bring sugar and water to the boil; swirl pan off heat to dissolve sugar completely, then cover tightly and boil to a light caramel color. Pour 1/3 into an 8-cup stainless steel (round-bottomed) bowl, turning bowl in all directions to coat bottom and sides until caramel ceases to run. Use remaining caramel for the sauce, making it with the cream and vanilla as described on preceding page.

Assembling. Whisk eggs and egg white in a large mixing bowl with the bourbon. To sweeten apple slices, beat in a little sugar. Gently fold the warm apples into the egg mixture by large spoonfuls. Turn into the caramelized bowl.

Baking. Set bowl on rack in a roomy casserole and pour in boiling water to come halfway up bowl; place in lower-middle level of the 325F oven. Regulate oven heat so water in casserole is barely bubbling, not boiling. (Be sure there is always water in the casserole!) The dessert is done in about 30 minutes—when a skewer plunged down through the center comes out almost clean, with a few grains of custard showing. Remove bowl from casserole and let cool 30 minutes. Unmold onto a serving platter.

Serving. Serve warm or cold, spooning on the caramel sauce just before bringing it to the table—it slides off rather rapidly. You may also wish to pass lightly whipped cream or custard sauce.

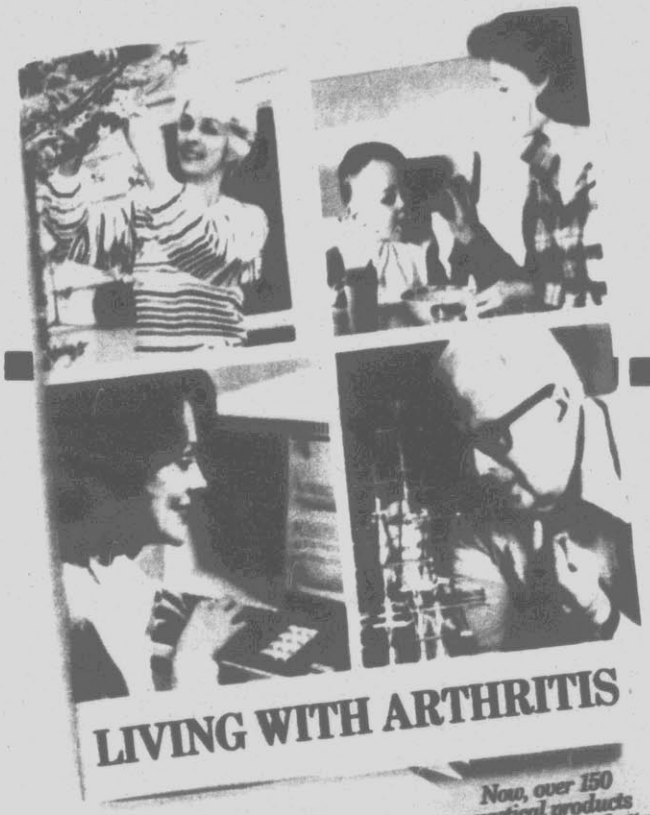

Apple Crèpes

For 4 people, 2 crèpes each:

- 32 to 48 Oven-Baked Apple Slices
- 8 crèpes 8 inches in diameter (your favorite crèpe recipe)
- 2 Tbs sugar
- 1/4 cup melted butter
- 1/2 cup bourbon, rum or Cognac

Arrange 4 to 6 apple slices on one half of each crèpe (the under or less attractive side); fold other half over. As you fill crèpes, place slightly overlapping in a buttered baking dish. Sprinkle on the sugar, drizzle on the butter and bake in the upper third of a preheated 425F oven for 5 minutes, or until hot throughout and beginning to caramelize.

To serve, pour the spirits into a small pan, warm and ignite it; pour it flaming over the hot crèpes.

The Reagan Rumor

In political circles, the rumor persists that Ronald Reagan, who will be 75 on Feb. 6, may not finish his second term. Scuttlebutt has it that—if he contracts another serious illness—Reagan may resign so that Vice President George Bush, 61, can assume the Presidency and run as the incumbent in the 1988 election, possibly against Lee Iacocca.

The only U.S. President to resign from office was Richard Nixon, who quit on Aug. 9, 1974, realizing he faced almost certain impeachment on three grounds: obstruction of justice, abuse of power and failure to comply with Congressional subpoenas. Nixon, however, admitted nothing but errors in judgment. He decided to resign, he said in his farewell speech, because "to continue to fight through the months ahead for my personal vindication would almost totally absorb the time and attention of both the President and the Congress in a period when our entire focus should be on the great issues of peace abroad and prosperity without inflation at home."

A Reagan resignation? Some say he would step down—make Bush an incumbent

How To Strengthen Your Bones

Since 1945, the fluoridation of drinking water in Finland has reduced tooth decay and strengthened tooth enamel. Armed with that fact, two researchers, Olli Simonen and Ossi Laitinen of Helsinki, wondered if fluoride also would strengthen bones and prevent bone-thinning and hip fractures in people 50 and over.

Their study, reported last Aug. 24 in The Lancet, suggests that elderly Finnish people who drink fluoridated water have stronger bones than those who don't and that they consequently suffer fewer broken hips.

Simonen and Laitinen studied the incidence of hip fractures in two similar towns in central Finland, Kuopio and Jyväskylä. "Both towns," they write, "have fluoride in trace quantities in their natural water supplies, but Kuopio [also] has fluoridated its drinking water since 1959 to the level of one part per million."

Their study shows that the residents of Kuopio suffered fewer hip fractures in the period 1967-78 than those of Jyväskylä. Drinking fluoridated water seemed particularly effective for women over 70.

The researchers do not flatly declare that fluoride will prevent bone fragility and osteoporosis, but they do state: "The lower incidence of fracture in Kuopio suggests that fluoride is an essential mineral for the strengthening of bone tissue and that it is possible to reduce osteoporotic fracture incidence with the use of fluorides."

Two Years Later

Cliff Robertson (center) in AT&T ad: He's one of the few helped by deregulation

Approximately two years after the dissolution of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. (AT&T), the cost of phone service in this country has increased and its quality has decreased. The word that best describes the availability of new phones, the repair of old phones and the installation and care of telephone lines is confusion.

The dissolution of AT&T was ordered by a federal judge in 1982 but not put into effect until Jan. 1, 1984. Since then, one of the few persons helped by phone-company deregulation has been Cliff Robertson. For months, the 60-year-old actor has appeared in TV commercials plugging the virtues of AT&T.

FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH

FOR MEN OVER 40

BY A. DUGAN AND THE EDITORS OF CONSUMER GUIDE®

WHAT DIET ALONE WON'T DO, AND SIT-UPS WON'T DO— THIS BOOK CAN DO FOR MEN OVER 40 . . . OR YOUR MONEY BACK!

It's never too late to flatten your stomach and narrow your waistline. But as you have probably noticed, diets alone are not enough.

That is especially true as you get older. Even if you keep your weight down and get some exercise, your stomach may bulge and sag because your abdominal muscles are not properly toned.

Sit-ups alone work on only some of these muscles. But unless you exercise all four major abdominal muscles—your stomach may be hard, but it won't be flat.

This new book shows you how to flatten your stomach by exercising all—and not just some—of your stomach muscles. And it is specially designed to meet the needs of men over 40. Strenuous exercises are avoided . . . so you need not be in shape to get started.* After you get going, you progress at your own speed to intermediate and advanced programs. And each level includes exercises to strengthen your back and give your cardiovascular system vital aerobic conditioning.

Give this NEW QUICK, EASY WAY TO FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH FOR MEN OVER 40 a try. It has easy-to-follow directions. All exercises are fully illustrated in color. Plus it's spiral bound to stay open and lie flat while you exercise. See if you don't feel more fit, energetic and self-confident in just a few short weeks. You must get the results you want or we'll give you your money back. So don't wait any longer. Put your order in the mail today!

*We recommend you check with your doctor before starting this or any other exercise program.

IN STEP WITH: BY JAMES BRADY

Yves Saint Laurent

Michael Comte

The designer at work. An unexpectedly tough cookie.

BRADY'S BITS

Last year in Normandy, I asked the Countess de Breteuil if she had ever been to Saint Laurent's house in Marrakesh. "Yes," she said, "it is fabulous. He has two pianos [swimming pools]." "Why two?" I said. "Yves takes to swim with anyone else. One is for him. The other is for the rest of us."

BORN: Aug. 1, 1936, in Oran, Algeria.
GIVEN NAME: Yves Mathieu.
CAREER TURNING POINT: House of Dior fashion show, 1958.
CLASSICS: Women's pea jacket, Mondrian-inspired dresses, the safari jacket.
MOST RADICAL FASHION STATEMENTS: Legitimizing pants for women in the '60s, bringing back romantic femininity in the '70s.
SPINOFFS: Menswear Cosmetics Furnishings Perfume Costumes (dance, theater, film).

In 1957, the most celebrated fashion designer in the world, Christian Dior, died suddenly on a trip his astrologer had warned him not to take. Unkind folk say Dior ate himself to death. Whatever the cause, an international fashion empire was at risk and a successor had to be found.

On Wednesday of this week in a lovely house in Paris, Dior's heir, Yves Saint Laurent, will show his latest collection of $5000 and $10,000 dresses and suits. Fashion editors will exult, department-store and boutique buyers will blow their budgets, and Saint Laurent's status as Dior's anointed successor will again be affirmed.

What a difference from 1961, when Yves and I sat over lunch in a Paris restaurant called Laperouse. He was out of work, he'd just had a nervous breakdown and been discharged from the French army, and he was suing the House of Dior for handing his job to someone else while he was trying, disastrously, to become a soldier. His life had fallen apart; he would try to patch it together.

Here's how it all happened, triumph to tragedy and back again:

Yves was 21 years old, a skinny, shy, bespectacled young Frenchman born in North Africa, and the chief assistant in the Dior design studios when the master died. He was thrown into the breach and came through, magnificently. A brilliant new fashion star had been born. The Algerian war was raging, but Dior's owners pulled strings, and young Yves was deferred.

This Wednesday, he'll be selling dresses in Paris for $10,000 apiece. He's the king of fashion. Getting there wasn't easy.

Deferred until a few years later, when one of his collections flopped and, with exquisite cynicism, the Dior management threw up its hands. France was at war and needed every soldier for the battle. Yves was drafted, underwent a severe hazing in boot camp and rather predictably collapsed. The French army, sensibly, sent him home. But there was no GI Bill over there, and his design job had been given to another.

Obviously, he was bitter, hurt, betrayed. But this delicate young man was also an unexpectedly tough cookie.

With a savvy partner named Pierre Berge, with the money he won by suing Dior, with a helping hand from an American banker named Mack Robinson, he launched a small fashion house of his own to compete with Dior and the other giants. He has been growing ever since, creating enormously profitable perfumes, opening chains of shops, designing menswear and home furnishings, creating tasteful, beautiful clothes and turning himself into a millionaire who drives a Rolls-Royce, a man not yet 50 years old reigning atop a savagely competitive craft.

Think of Yves Saint Laurent the next time you dismiss fashion designers as elegant wimps waving soft hands and throwing kisses.

HAL'S PALS! Dear Hal: Should children be paid for being good? Dear Pal: Would you rather have them good for nothing? Dear Hal: If you are losing your hair what can you use to keep it in? Dear Pal: You might try a box or a bureau drawer. Dear Hal: What makes head colds so contagious? Dear Pal: No one nose.

● Sum Number! There is a two-digit number under 100 that cannot be evenly divided (other than by itself), yet will evenly divide 111, 222, 333, 444, 555, 666, 777, 888, 999. What number?

The number is 37.

BOXING MATCH

"What's in your package?" asked the clerk at the delivery office.

"An antique wooden fishing pole. It's five feet long and in one piece," responded the customer.

"Too big," said the counterman. "Company rules say we can't accept any article over four feet long."

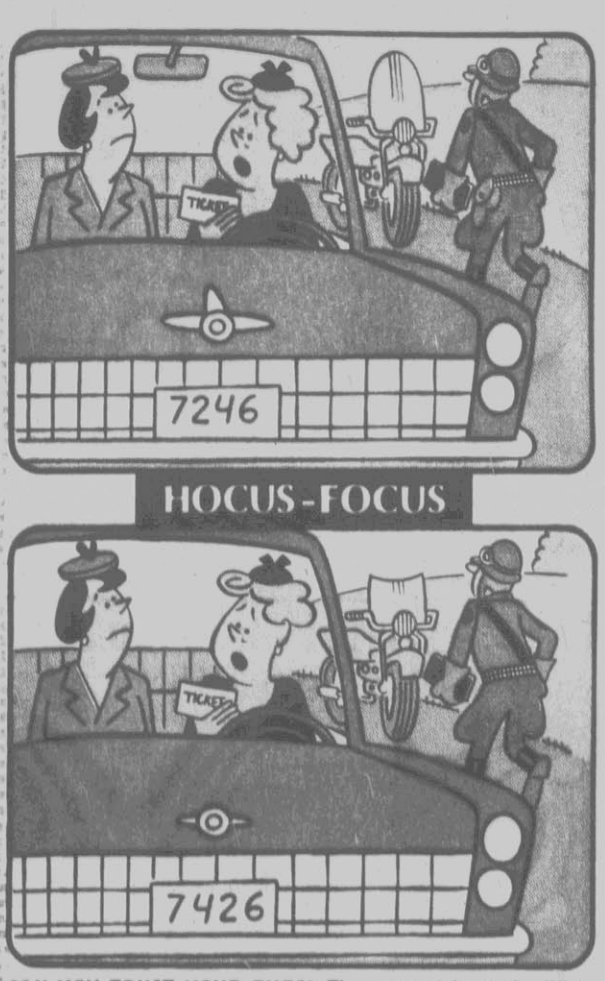

"OK," replied the customer, "I'll take care of that." And in short order he found a way to overcome the delivery company's regulation.

What did he do?

He packed the pole diagonally in a box four feet long.

Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

created by HAL FOSTER

Our Story:

PRINCE VALIANT HAS COME SEEKING PROVISIONS. AS ILL LUCK WOULD HAVE IT HE LANDS ON THE ISLE OF COVETOUSNESS, WHERE NO ONE WILL SHARE AND ALL WANT WHAT BELONGS TO OTHERS. "I MUST HAVE THAT SWORD," SAYS ONE, "GIVE IT TO ME." "NO, I WANT IT," DEMANDS ANOTHER. "IT'S MINE," CRIES A THIRD.

ALETA'S RICH GARMENTS ATTRACT A CROWD OF ADMIRERS. THE CLOAK IS RIPPED FROM HER BACK AND OVER IT A FIGHT BREAKS OUT.

A STRANGE FEELING CREEPS OVER VAL: THE POSSESSIONS OF A PRINCE NO LONGER SEEM ENOUGH. HE SATISFIES A GREAT URGE AND RIPS A SPLENDID DAGGER FROM ITS OWNER'S BELT. BUT ALETA, TOO, FEELS AN URGE AND SNATCHES IT AWAY.

SOON THE WHOLE LANDING PARTY COMES TO BLOWS. ARE THEY DOOMED TO WRANGLE FOREVER? A SMALL CORNER OF VAL'S HEART HOLDS OUT AGAINST THE ISLAND'S CURSE. HE KNOWS WHAT HE MUST DO. HE DRAWS THE 'SINGING SWORD' AND STANDS AT THE DOORWAY.

"FINDER'S, KEEPERS," VAL CRIES AS HE HEAVES THE 'SINGING SWORD' TOWARD THE BOAT. THERE IS A MAD RUSH TO CLAIM IT. BUT VAL GETS THERE FIRST AND THROWS THE BLADE ONCE MORE. AGAIN AND AGAIN HE THROWS IT UNTIL THE MOB REACHES THE SHORE. THERE, FAR FROM THE CASTLE, THE CURSE BEGINS TO WEAKEN.
