NAACP Seeks District Changes To Add Blacks To Pitt's Board

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners has been asked by the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to add black members and to make changes in district lines to guarantee blacks will be elected as commissioners.

The letter to the board said, "The Pitt County Branch of the NAACP feels as though our organization has gone long enough with an all-white, all-male organization (Board of Commissioners), without any blacks or women on the board. We also feel that the 'at large' voting system that is used here in Pitt County to elect county commissioners violates ... the 1965 Voting Rights Act."

The letter, signed by Pitt NAACP Branch President D.D. Garrett and Secretary Brenda Weathington, concluded:

"It is our desire that these discrepancies be corrected on a local level; therefore, we are making the following recommendations: appoint 30 percent blacks to the present Board of County Commissioners; draw ward/district lines that would guarantee the election of blacks to the Board of County Commissioners; and put in place an affirmative action policy for Pitt County."

A search of records at the Board of Elections's office indicated that only one black has been a candidate for a seat on the Board of Commissioners since 1964. James "Jim" Rouse was unsuccessful in a bid for election to one of the Greenville Township seats on the board in the May 1984 primary.

Although no formal action has been taken, commissioners, in a letter to Garrett dated Jan. 29, suggested: "In order to have a frank and open discussion, the Pitt County Board of Commissioners would like to invite the executive committee of the NAACP and Mr. Robert Joyce of the Institute of Government staff, who can be of mutual assistance to all, to meet with them at a mutually agreeable time to discuss your concerns and explore the means available to the Pitt County Board of Commissioners to address those concerns in a legal and fair manner."

The letter, citing a meeting between Garrett, board Chairman Bruce Strickland and County Manager Reginald Gray on Monday, said

Still Dissatisfied

By STUART SAVAGE

A spokesman for the Concerned Citizens for Justice — a group concerned about minority representation on boards and commissions in the Pitt County — said Wednesday the group is still dissatisfied with legislation merging the city and county school systems.

The General Assembly last year enacted legislation merging the Pitt County and Greenville city school administrative units effective July 1, 1986. In other action, the Legislature amended the merger legislation to add three blacks to the interim board, which is scheduled to become the permanent board of education on July 1.

The interim board includes all eight members of the Pitt County Board of Education, four members of the Greenville city board, and the three additional blacks.

In October of last year, the CCJ, through its counsel, asked the interim board to cease its official actions and refrain from enacting any policies, making any appointments, or entering into any contracts until and unless preclearance from the U.S. Justice Department is received.

Then in December, the CCJ filed suit in federal court seeking an injunction to prevent the interim board from continuing until preclearance is received and asking that all actions taken by the interim board be voided.

Tuesday, "to avoid any questions of its actions prior to the anticipated date of preclearance," the interim board voted to halt its actions and adopted a resolution rescinding all previous actions taken by it in exchange for the dismissal of the CCJ suit.

Ernest Brown, a spokesman for the CCJ, said Wednesday that, "because the interim board in fact admitted its guilt of violation ... (of) the Voting Rights Act, CCJ will dismiss its lawsuit today."

But Brown said the CCJ "is still dissatisfied with the merger legislation and will submit its comments to the U.S. Justice Department."

Electronic Debris From Shuttle Found

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A Navy ship steamed into port with 1,000 more pounds of wreckage from shuttle Challenger today as NASA expanded the search for clues into the explosion of the ill-fated spaceship and its crew of five men and two women.

The debris included the first electronic pieces recovered from the sea.

At the Kennedy Space Center, on the road to Challenger's launch pad, someone planted seven American flags to honor the dead astronauts.

The search continued as the space agency impounded tapes that recorded performance of the shuttle's systems every one one-thousandth of a second. Officials said they might be the most crucial piece of evidence in the investigation.

The tapes could reveal whether the fireball that killed the astronauts Tuesday, 73 seconds after liftoff, was caused by something that went wrong with the spaceship's huge external fuel tank or whether the fault lay with one of the two solid fuel rocket boosters.

Experts have considered both theories, but shuttle director Jesse Moore said Wednesday: "I refuse to speculate on the cause. We intend to make a thorough examination of all the evidence and base our conclusions and recommendations on the findings."

After the boosters separated from the exploding spaceship and flew erratically through the sky, both were detonated by a radio signal when one of them headed toward a populated area.

The deliberate but necessary detonation could have wiped out vital clues.

"We need every piece," said Richard Smith, director of the Kennedy Space Center. "We don't know where the clue might be."

Moore said he was confident the cause would be found, but that could take months. Until then, there will be no more shuttle flights in a year in which the National Aeronautics and Space Administration had planned a record 15 missions.

An investigation board has impounded the high-speed tapes as well as spaceship debris washed ashore. The panel has also taken possession of film, photographs and work documents related to the shuttle.

The first 600 pounds of debris, most of it small pieces of thermal tiles, was brought into port Wednesday,

Retailers Seeking Members

By CAROL TYER

Representatives of the North Carolina Retail Merchants' Association visited Greenville this morning to discuss legislative issues affecting retail merchants and to kick off a membership campaign in this area.

It was announced that V. Parker Overton of Greenville, president of Overton's Inc., a retail and mail order seller of skis and other sports equipment, will chair a phone-a-thon membership campaign in this area Feb. 3-7. He and fellow members of the association want to add 100 members to the association.

William C. Rustin, president of the association, said "Retailing in North Carolina provides more than 425,000 jobs — one out of every six in our state. By working together — retailers and governmental decision-makers — we have been able to continue our environment as the place to be in retailing."

He said the association has been concerned for the past 20 years with reducing the burden of inventory tax on retail merchants. This year, for the first time, retailers will have to pay tax on only 90 percent of their merchandise held as of Dec. 31. Next year, the figure will be 80 percent.

He and Overton expressed the view that inventory tax creates an artificial merchandising situation which disrupts the cycle of business and causes layoff in manufacturing as well as in stores. They both say the

Percy Cox Enters Race For County Commissioner

Former Greenville mayor Percy Cox filed as a candidate for election to the Greenville Township seat on the Pitt County Board of Commissioners Wednesday.

"It is my earnest desire to serve as county commissioner for Pitt County, the most progressive county in the East," Cox said. "I would like the opportunity to help keep it growing in an orderly manner."

After filing, Cox said "my goals and high priorities are broadening the tax base through attracting new industries," as well as, "great interest focused on education and agricultural areas of our county. I am most interested in continuing to improve highways and transportation."

According to Cox, his 17 years in public office (as a member of the Greenville City Council and most recently as mayor) and "close association with all of Pitt County" have made him "aware of the needs and concerns of the people and the importance of all governing bodies working closely with each other for the good of Pitt County."

A Pitt County native, Cox served three terms as Greenville's mayor, four terms as mayor pro tem, and three years on the City Council. He is past president and founder of Cox Armature Works, has served as chairman of the East Carolina University Center for Applied Technology and is chairman elect of the Salvation Army advisory board.

Cox is a member of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, the Masons, Shriners, Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion. He attends Salter Path United Methodist Church and is on the board of directors of Branch Banking and Trust.

Self-Professed Workaholic: She Is True Woman Of Substance

By JUDIE GLAVE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A pair of pert 19th century pottery dogs stands erect in a brass trimmed bookcase lined in Hermes leather. Nearby in the airy, seven-room condominium of author Barbara Taylor Bradford, a delicate 19th century tea set sits on a black and gold Georgian papier-mache tray.

The dining room in the Sutton Place dwelling commands attention with its mirrored, beam ceiling and two-tiered Georgian crystal chandelier, while the bedroom is sedate with its William and Mary chest and walls lined with Italian linen.

Mrs. Bradford is clearly a woman of substance, and any resemblance between the best-selling author and Emma Hart, the heroine of her novel, "A Woman of Substance," is purely intentional.

Like the fictional Emma, an Irish servant at the turn of the century who builds a vast business empire and powerful family dynasty, Mrs. Bradford is a woman who wants, and has, it all: marriage, career and wealth.

However, wealth is not the only common denominator between author and heroine. "I gave Emma a lot of my characteristics," Mrs. Bradford said in an interview. "So whatever Emma does, it's usually something that I would do."

Barbara Taylor Bradford began writing 40 years ago at the age of 12 when, as a youngster in an upper middle-class family in Leeds, England, she sold her first story about a girl and her horse to a children's magazine.

"I think my destiny was sealed," she recalled.

However, her writing was put on hold while she set out to experience life. "I don't think you can earn a living at the age of 16 writing novels."

In her eagerness to gain that knowledge, she shunned college and became a typist at the Yorkshire Evening Post. Like Emma, she was determined and moved up fast. Tackling the job with the same single-mindedness she later bestowed upon her heroine, she was promoted to cub reporter in six months. A year later, at age 18, she became women's page editor and by age 20 moved to London's renowned newspaper row, Fleet Street.

She married American film producer Robert Bradford in 1963 and moved to New York. At the time, she was writing a syndicated column on interior design that ran in 185 U.S. newspapers.

But the desire to write fiction was still there and began to nudge her. She started her first novel in 1970.

"I got up to page 200 and said, 'This is not right,'" the author said. "So I went on to another one and I did that four times between 1970-75."

Then came "A Woman of Substance," which she describes as the story of "a strong woman who makes it in a man's world when women were not doing that."

"When I started to write those initial pages, I really felt very excited because I somehow knew in my bones ... this was the book I was going to finish and the book that would be right."

The hardcover version has sold 11 million copies since 1979 and the paperback topped The New York Times bestseller list for 43 weeks. It also was made into a syndicated TV miniseries which has been nominated for an Emmy award.

A second best-seller, "Voice of the Heart," which sold 2.5 million copies in the United States, quickly followed. Her latest novel, "Hold the Dream" (Doubleday, $17.95), has been on best-seller lists since the end of May, two weeks after its official release date.

The story follows the saga of the Hart clan and the professional rise and personal disasters that dog Emma's favorite granddaughter, Paula Fairley.

A self-professed workaholic, Mrs. Bradford has already started a new novel about three generations of women. She also has a mental outline ready for the third story involving the Hart clan, one that will tie up many of the questions remaining at the conclusion of "Hold the Dream."

"If I didn't write they'd have to put me in a straitjacket," she said. "Writing is essential to my well-being."

Unlike other best selling novelists who use sex to make their books sell, Mrs. Bradford does not believe in drowning the reader in page after page of steamy scenes.

"I think everybody knows what two people do in bed," she said, unconsciously straightening her shoulders and tossing back her chin-length blond hair in a gesture akin to disgust. "So why should I go into clinical detail about who's doing what to whom in rather vulgar terms."

"I prefer to talk about what they're thinking and feeling for each other when they're making love. I'm not giving a sex lesson," she said. "I'm trying to show emotions and feelings."

At Wit's End — By Erma Bombeck

They sound like something that attacks the foundation of your house. Actually, they're better known as "perks" and they're incentive-grabbers above and beyond a paycheck that come with a job to sweeten the pot.

At first they started out as a company car, medical expense payments, disability insurance, legal and financial counseling. Then they got to be a little more personal like flow-in kosher food, movable greenhouses, and a gym and club membership.

Perks spread to sports where amateur athletes got all kinds of them, none of which you could talk about without a lawyer present. Show business had a ton of perks that ranged from stars keeping their own wardrobe to having Dom Perignon replacing tap water in the dressing room. Probably one of the more bizarre perks was a proposal by the Independent Association of Publisher's Employee to the Wall Street Journal management that demanded cats be supplied for the editorial room and any other rodent-infested area. (They would even accept non-union cats.)

I got to thinking about perks for housewives. Little goodies have never been a part of the domestic scene which could account for the reason three-fourths of them have gone to where the perks are — out of the home and into the business world.

What added little incentives could be offered to lure women away from the marketplace and back into the home?

My own window? I got 80 of them already, but I have to clean them.

Freedom to go to lunch anytime I want? Big deal. I'm eating what everyone left on their plates from the night before.

No, I think we're talking about some real luxuries that would entice women back to the utility room. How about a key to our own restroom? A spot that is ours and ours alone where we wouldn't have to wipe out the sink, pick up the towels, put down lids and replace empty rolls with tissue.

A parking place to call our own would be nice. A permanent place near the front door where we wouldn't have to move the car when someone else wanted out or to have to carry groceries a whole block because the driveway was jammed.

A VCR to record the "soaps" while women are "on the road" transporting kids, groceries and cleaning. How about a contract that would give us Christmas, Thanksgiving and our birthday off?

For some reason, housewives have been regarded much like teachers and garbage collectors (sanitary engineers). We are considered public servants who are above striking, putting a price on what we do, being crass enough to discuss m-o-n-e-y or lowering ourselves to negotiating in the marketplace.

I don't know about the rest of you, but, sweetie, I can be bought!

To whom this may concern: friends, co-workers, relatives, past lovers, etc., I, Bobby Coward, want everyone to know that I love my wife, Bernice, very much. I am happily married and will do anything to make "her" happy and keep her happy and keep her. Don't underestimate my love for her from my past experiences. This is and she is my life.

Safety Despite Pressure For Speed

High Drama

We are witnessing a period of high drama in Asia where the one-time showpiece of American democracy is enduring crisis. Manila was known as the Pearl of the Pacific; but no more. Years of misrule are culminating amid threats of disaster.

The United States has a considerable stake ... not the least of which are large and strategically valuable naval and air installations in the Philippines. Our image as an ally and friend may also be damaged.

Odds are heavily against the upcoming Philippines election resolving that country's problems (and ours). As Ferdinand Marcos has warned, if he loses to Corazon Aquinas it is entirely possible the military will stage a coup. If Marcos wins (as expected) the criticism and allegations by American sources will broaden the gulf between the governments.

Too, opportunities will abound for growth of violent dissent and revolution by the peasants who have nothing to lose by espousing communist efforts, causes and philosophies.

Our government has done little to halt the too-familiar chain of events in the island country. Alarm bells should have been sounded when Marcos was shaping the future with his political and private maneuvers. There was really little room for maneuver.

For many years there was evidence at hand the U.S. Army never awarded Marcos the medals and commendations he claimed, and his World War II role is under a shadow. At this late hour the findings wouldn't impress his people because (a) they have believed it so long, (b) their news media reports only what is permitted, (c) at this stage it sounds contrived.

Investigations suggest the Marcos family has hundreds of millions of dollars invested in U.S. holdings. There was only one likely source for that kind of money and that would be "skimming" American foreign aid money. So far, no proof; but serious questions have been raised. Again, most Filipinos are unaware of all that.

Another unmistakable signal was the trend toward fortress-like homes for some officials and the wealthy who somehow grew ever richer in a country of people who were progressively growing poorer. The symptom has been witnessed in other parts of the world; some closer than the Philippines.

Physicians have a wealth of information at hand on symptoms of conditions which call for early attention. Too bad our foreign affairs experts are less well equipped for dealing with their fields.

Caring

As we face a future teacher shortage, it is appropriate to examine what caused North Carolina's present teachers to choose the profession.

Patricia Mitchell, who was named Pitt County's Teacher of the Year for 1986-87, said the factor which influenced her most was "the relationship I had with my teachers through my school years."

She said her own teachers caring about her as a student caused her to care about herself. Also a number of family members, several aunts and cousins, were teachers and that influenced her decision to enter the profession.

In addition a large number of professionals in her community were dedicated teachers. "Seeing their love and dedication for teaching helped to direct me toward the teaching profession," she said.

"I hope to become a better teacher and to be a good role model for the future teachers of the world," she said.

Ms. Mitchell said teachers must be more concerned with the abilities of students than their disabilities. "Encouraging each child to work to his or her potential should be the major objective of teaching," she said.

It takes many things to be a teacher, among them training, ability to communicate and patience. The best in the profession, however, have something in common and that is enthusiasm. Ms. Mitchell exhibits that trait and if all teachers do the same we are certain that more young people will view education as a desirable profession.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Always the pressure was on NASA to fly more, to carry more, to earn back more of the enormous cost of the space shuttle program.

"Fast turnaround" became a way of life. On each work day, as they passed through the Kennedy Space Center gates, engineers and janitors alike were reminded by signboards of how many days it was until launch.

The National Aeronautics and Space Agency went to great lengths to shave a day here and there off the turnaround time. On the last mission, the shuttle was kept aloft two extra days in the vain hope that weather would permit a Florida landing and trim six days off the preparation for the next flight.

And yet, NASA never hesitated to delay a flight for safety reasons, even at the risk of offending the customers for whom it was delivering satellites to orbit. The weather had to be right, the ship had to be right. On a few occasions, computers ordered launch pad shutdowns because one instrument reading did not agree with another.

"We always strive in every flight that we perform to be as reliable and as safe as we possibly can and to do everything that we can to ensure that the vehicle and the systems are all ready to fly," shuttle director Jesse Moore said Tuesday. "Flight safety is our No. 1 priority in the space shuttle program."

The pressures on NASA came from all around. From the Air Force, from NASA's European competition, from Congress, from friends and from critics.

The agency's goal was 24 launches a year, beginning in 1988, with the four spacecraft — Columbia, Challenger, Discovery and Atlantis — flying six times each. This year, 1986, was to be the most ambitious to date, with 15 flights pencilled in.

But the year started badly. The first mission was an embarrassment. Five times the crew entered the shuttle Columbia, only to climb out again hours later because of a scrub. Two more launch dates were set, then postponed until the shuttle finally made it aloft, 25 days late.

NASA promised the fastest turnaround ever, seven days from Columbia's landing to Challenger's launch. It would be tight, but the schedule would be maintained. For the first time in the shuttle program, a second launch pad was available and Challenger lifted off a respectable three days late.

"There was absolutely no pressure to get this particular launch off," said Moore.

There is no doubt, however, that NASA has been feeling the heat.

The Air Force argued vehemently that it was unwise to depend on the shuttle alone to deliver critical satellites into space. NASA contended that was "a heavy-handed scheme by the Air Force to give the shuttle a black eye" and said it counted on Air Force business for one-third of its revenue.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger finally ended the competition, by deciding the Air Force would buy an improved version of the Titan rocket. The service will buy 10, launching satellites on them at the rate of two a year.

The European consortium Arianespace has been giving NASA intense competition for the satellite dollar, winning several contracts that would otherwise have gone to the space shuttle. Arianespace officials have said they hope to win one-third of the satellite communications business by 1995, but they, too, had a rocket blow up recently, destroying two satellites.

China announced last year it was open for commercial launch business and Japan is developing its own capability. India has joined space-launching nations and Brazil is building a rocket base. The Soviet Union, too, is beginning to compete for launch business.

Rep. Bill Nelson, whose district includes Cape Canaveral and who flew on Columbia earlier this month, is a shuttle booster who has been pushing hard for a fifth orbiter. But there are others in Congress who are not as friendly to the shuttle — Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., would prefer money be spent on unmanned flights.

Now the pressure on NASA is to find out what happened. It's certain to be a while before the signboards at the gates again promise a launch in a few days.

Strength For Today

There is nothing stronger in the world than love. We are told that God is love (1 John 4:8) — not just that God is loving or lovable. Love is the substance of His being. We usually think of love as something within the circles of family life and friendship, but divine love is a universal power so strong that it constitutes the basis of all creation.

Crime is a struggle on the part of evil men against love. Family dissension is a violation of love. International policies which call for extermination or subjugation of people is something which flies in the face of all God's providence.

We make a mistake when we keep love too much within the circle of sentiment. Love should be carried into business, industry, politics, and international relations. "God is love." And this love is the divine power bringing all things into the orbit of God's purpose.

REMEMBER THE GOOD OLD DAYS?

— James J. Kilpatrick —

Question Of Legal Tender

WASHINGTON — I wrote a column last month having to do with frivolous lawsuits. My observations were touched off by an order of the Supreme Court in a case involving attorney John Hyde of Hammond, Ind. In my column I made two errors of fact. Let me correct these; let me make amends to Mr. Hyde; and let me return to the subject.

The case began in 1981 when Victor Lepucki, an employee of Inland Steel, filed a form claiming complete exemption from withholding of federal income taxes. The company sent the form to the Internal Revenue Service, and the IRS bounced it back with an order to proceed with the withholding. At about the same time, Kenneth Pazdur, an employee of Blaw-Knox Foundry & Mill Machinery, also challenged federal authority. Both Lepucki and Pazdur retained Hyde to represent them.

The cases wound up in the U.S. District Court for the northern district of Indiana. Hyde sued not only the companies, but also an Inland paymaster, an agent of the IRS and Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan. He argued that "this nation's monetary and income tax systems are an outrageous fraud upon the people."

Hyde's principal contention was that Federal Reserve notes are not "dollars" in the constitutional sense. Such notes may be "money," but "they are not dollars and cannot be made legal tender for the payment of debts." Only gold and silver are truly legal tender. I said in my column that Hyde regarded the 18th-century Spanish gold doubloon as a standard of value for the founding fathers. This was in error. Hyde's conviction is that the framers of the Constitution had in mind the Spanish milled dollar of 1786, a coin containing 371.25 grains of fine silver.

Both the trial court and the Seventh U.S. Circuit dismissed Hyde's contentions out of hand. The appellate court termed Hyde's litigation "outrageous — so absurd that it merits no response." The court regarded his suit as "yet another disturbing example of a patently frivolous appeal filed by abusers of the tax system merely to delay and harass the collection of public revenues." Hyde was ordered to pay $500 in damages to each company. Hyde then sought an appeal to the Supreme Court on the grounds that "the judgment is for dollars and there are no lawful dollars now in circulation so that it is not possible for me to comply with the order of the court."

The Supreme Court refused to accept this line of reasoning. I said in my column that the high court "imposed a fine" of $1,000 on Hyde. This was wrong. The court affirmed the award of $1,000 in damages under Rule 49.2, which covers "frivolous" petitions for review.

In his petition to the Supreme Court, Hyde argued earnestly, and with manifest sincerity, that questions of constitutional law must forever be kept open to judicial review. In theory this may be quite true. Hyde's basic argument is plausible: If we believe, as many scholars and jurists do believe, that the Constitution should be interpreted in terms of the "intention of the framers," what interpretation should we put on the word "dollars"? Hyde argues that the word should mean today "whatever a dollar meant to the people who inserted it into the Constitution."

Yet there comes a time when some questions have to be regarded as absolutely settled — and the question of legal tender has been settled for more than a hundred years. We might as usefully go to court on the issue of secession. Were the Reconstruction amendments validly ratified? Citing the doctrines of equal protection, an ingenious litigant might challenge the system by which even the smallest state has two members of the Senate. Our overburdened courts simply do not have the time to waste on such litigation.

Chief Justice Burger dwelled on this point in his year-end review. He noted that in the past two years, lower federal courts have approved nearly a hundred requests for punitive sanctions. The development, he said, is long overdue. "No one wishes to suppress hard-fought advocacy, but a line needs to be drawn between fair blows and fouls; zealous representation is our ideal, not dilatory or abusive gamesmanship."

I'm sorry I said Hyde was "fined." He wasn't fined. He was ordered to pay damages for bringing "patently frivolous" litigation. Such sanctions are sound in principle. Our courts have better things to do than to ponder the Spanish milled dollar of 1786.

To the editor:

I would like to reply to the woman who has been writing to you complaining about the effort to establish toll-free telephone service between Grifton and Greenville. She has said Greenville people don't call Grifton often enough to warrant this, and that the only people who want to see this service are Chamber of Commerce members looking for their own profit.

Not so! For 15 years before the Chamber endorsed the project, Grifton citizens had been asking the telephone company to establish toll-free service between Grifton and Greenville. We have boxes of petitions attesting to this fact. The current efforts of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce are a civic-minded recognition of the importance of all citizens being afforded equal access to county services.

Although our tax dollars help pay the capital and operating expenses of county services such as hospital, Social Service agencies, library and schools, any telephone contact from them to us or from us to them requires a toll charge. This means even our school principal and teachers and parents of children at Grifton Elementary School have to pay long-distance charges to reach the central school offices and vice versa. Because Ayden and Grifton share a common high school, but not a common phone system, even calls among classmates are toll calls.

When it costs the organization and individual members to make phone calls, it's difficult for civic-minded citizens in Grifton to maintain contact with groups such as the Arts Council, community college and other organizations which encourage a broad county participation.

To the civic-minded citizens of Greenville who voted "Yes" in the recent telephone poll, we in Grifton say a heartfelt "thanks" for your fair-mindedness. We hope the Utilities Commission will be as open-minded and will realize that, without their help, we will continue to be denied equal access to county services we help pay for.

Scientists Dispute Impact Of Second-Hand Smoke

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — People who complain about smokers' cigarettes aren't being finicky, they are rebelling against a potentially deadly health hazard, says a government health-safety official.

Cigarette smoke can be life-threatening, even if it's somebody else puffing, the official said Wednesday, arguing that tough restraints on "passive smoke" could save thousands of people from dying of lung cancer or other diseases.

"The non-smokers' rights movement has been portrayed by tobacco interests as an assemblage of finicky busybodies intent on imposing their values on smokers," said John C. Topping Jr., staff director of the Environmental Protection Agency's Office of Air and Radiation.

"In the past year, the passive smoking issue has taken on new dimensions as evidence has mounted that involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke may be one of the leading environmental sources of death," he said.

Topping, who made his comments at a National Academy of Sciences public hearing, got support from some scientists at the meeting but also got strong disagreement from others.

Professor S. James Kilpatrick of the department of biostatistics of the Medical College of Virginia stated flatly, "The current epidemiological literature consists of seriously flawed studies that have, by their very nature, been unable to establish any causal relationships."

But the author of one study Kilpatrick criticized, Dr. Lawrence Garfinkel of the Coalition on Smoking or Health, said: "The question of whether the involuntary smoker faces a health risk has been answered. The time to act is now."

About 20 scientists and others made presentations to the Committee on Passive Smoking of the National Research Council, which the National Academy of Sciences describes as its agent "in the conduct of studies and investigations in the public interest."

A report is expected late this year.

Topping said the EPA was not proposing cigarette-smoke regulations. But he also said current research linking passive smoke to disease, though fragmentary, "seems sufficient to warrant strong steps" to reduce exposure.

He spoke approvingly of cities such as San Francisco that have passed laws on the subject. And saying he was speaking only for himself, he also called for public health warnings, including some on cigarette packs.

The official contended that:

—Last year's projection, by EPA and other researchers, of 5,000 annual lung-cancer deaths from non-smokers' exposure to passive smoke has "gained acceptance in the public health community."

—A "mountain of evidence" now links parents who smoke with illnesses in their infants.

—Studies have indicated exposure to passive smoke "may significantly increase risks of heart attack."

—Freeing non-smokers from cigarette smoke "would save the lives of thousands of non-smokers annually" and would save many more smokers' lives, too, since their opportunities to light up would be restricted in any such program, he said.

On the other hand, pharmacology Professor Sorell L. Schwartz of Georgetown University Medical Center said information so far "is inadequate" to show a real relationship between passive smoke ex-posure and the presence of certain chemicals in a non-smoker's blood. And he said studies cited by non-smoker groups have lacked scientific rigor.

He cited studies in which a link between disease and passive smoke depends on answers to questionnaires given to lung cancer victims, relatives or friends to determine such crucial information as whether those victims ever smoked and how much exposure they had to other smokers.

"The questionnaire is questionable as to its ability to determine dose," he said.

Garfinkel, who used such question-

Medical Costs Rise, Death Rate Drops

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — America paid an average of $1,580 per person for health care in 1984, more than 10 percent of the nation's gross national product, but the investment is paying off in lower death rates from killer diseases, a new study says.

The annual report on the nation's health, released Wednesday by the Health and Human Services Department, says life expectancy once again has hit a record high, while infant mortality once again has set a record low.

Death rates from heart disease have fallen by 28 percent since 1970, while death rates from stroke have fallen 49 percent. Changes in personal health habits — fewer people smoking, more watching their blood pressure and cholesterol levels — are credited with part of the gain. But the country also has paid for the changes in dollars.

The United States spent $387.4 billion in 1984 to support a medical industry that employs 7.9 million people. Exotic technology has flourished. The number of sophisticated CAT-scan diagnostic procedures more than quadrupled from 1979 to 1983; ultrasound diagnostic scannings tripled.

Altogether, health spending increased by 9.1 percent in 1984. And the medical inflation rate of 6.2 percent far exceeded the overall inflation rate of 4.3 percent.

Still, the increases in medical inflation and in overall spending were lower than previous years. The 9.1 percent increase was the smallest in 20 years, and medical inflation was in double digits only five years ago.

Problems remain. Black infants are at twice the risk of white infants of dying in their first year of life, a gap that has remained virtually constant for at least 25 years. And infant mortality, a key indicator of a nation's health, is no longer falling at the rate it maintained through the 1970s.

But overall, said HHS Secretary

Otis R. Bowen, "this country's health record is impressive."

"We continue to make new gains against the major causes of death, and at the same time, we are seeing a pronounced slowing in health cost increases," he said. "This report paints a clear picture of medical achievement and progress against the health cost spiral."

Among his figures:

—Infant mortality fell to 10.6 deaths per 1,000 births in 1984, based on tentative data. That is better than the 12.6 deaths per thousand rate of 1980, or the 1970 rate of 20.0 or the 1960 rate of 26.0. But on the world stage, it is mediocre; Finland's rate is 6.5; and the United States ranks only 14th in the world.

—The rate of decline of infant mortality is slowing, averaging about 2.6 percent a year in the last three years compared with about 4.5 percent during the 1970s.

—The death rate among white infants was 9.7 per 1,000 births; among black infants it was 19.2. The ratio of about 1.9 black infant deaths for each white infant death extends back to at least 1960.

—A child born in 1983 could expect to live 74.6 years, a record high. The longest life expectancy is enjoyed by white females, 78.7 years; the shortest by black males, 65.4 years.

—On average, a man who turned 45 in 1983 could expect to live to 74.7, more than three years longer than his 1950 counterpart. A woman celebrating her 45th birthday in 1983 could expect to live to 80.4, more than 4½ years longer than her counterpart of 1950.

—Smoking is declining in both sexes. The decline is dramatic for men — from 52.1 percent in 1965 to 35.4 percent in 1983 — but small for women — 34.2 percent to 29.9 percent.

—Lung cancer death rates continue to increase, a 35-year trend attributed to the aging of the population with the highest percentages of smokers. The rate of increase is slowing for men and accelerating for women, the study said, reflecting the change in smoking patterns in the last 20 years. Lung cancer soon will surpass breast cancer as a killer of women, the study said. Among women aged 55 to 74, it already has.

Type Of Medical Care Offered Varies Across Nation

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The discovery that such common medical procedures as coronary bypass operations are done far more often in some parts of the country than in others "may reflect substantial inappropriate overuse" of these treatments among the elderly, a study today concludes.

The researchers found that some forms of treatment are done 10 or 20 times more often in one region than another.

"We do not know whether physicians in high-use areas performed too many procedures, whether physicians in low-use areas performed too few, or whether neither or both of these explanations are accurate," the researchers wrote in the New England Journal of Medicine. "However, we do know that the differences are too large to ignore."

The researchers compared the use of various treatments in 1981 for Medicare patients in 13 geographic areas in eight states — Arkansas, California, Colorado, Iowa, Massachusetts, Montana, Pennsylvania and South Carolina. In all, 4.4 million Medicare patients are enrolled in these areas.

They studied 123 surgical and diagnostic procedures. For 67 of them, there was at least a threefold difference in their use between regions of the country.

The greatest variation was in the use of injections to treat hemorrhoids. This was done 26 times more often in the region with the highest rate than in the area with the lowest.

Partial hip joint replacements were 11 times more common in one region than another. There also were major differences in the frequency of surgical removal of non-cancerous skin disease, repair of arm fractures, removal of fluid from swollen joints, coronary bypass surgery and hiatus hernia repair, among other common treatments.

"These are very large differences," said the study's director, Dr. Mark R. Chassin of the Rand Corp. in Santa Monica, Calif. "They cannot be accounted for by the behavior of one hospital or a small number of physicians. We are dealing with major differences among communities."

The researchers turned up no clear evidence of outright overuse. But they wrote, "For any given procedure, geographic differences may reflect substantial inappropriate overuse in the high-use areas with very little inappropriate use in the low-use areas."

On the other hand, they continued, "the variations may have occurred because physicians in the low-use areas were not providing enough services to those who needed them."

Chassin said that health planners, intent on cutting medical costs, are apt to assume that "high use is overuse," and he said his data shouldn't be interpreted this way.

"They ought not to be used as grounds for policy decisions to restrict access to these procedures in high-use areas, just as we can't say that they ought to be used to increase access to them in low-use areas," he said in an interview. "Those policies could easily be dangerous in denying access to care for people who need these procedures if the assumptions prove wrong."

In an editorial published in the journal with the study, Dr. John Wennberg of Dartmouth said that unless doctors decide which rate is right, "others will see to it that the 'least is always best' theory dominates by default. After all, if physicians can't agree on what is best, why do more?"

The researchers did not identify the geographic areas with unusually high or low use of various procedures. They said they withheld this information to ensure cooperation from doctors and hospitals as they perform followup studies that will try to figure out whether all the care is necessary.

U.S. Human Rights Stance 'Improved'

By ROBERT PARRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration continued to ignore reports of atrocities by pro-U.S. forces in Central America last year, but its overall record on handling human rights issues improved, four private groups reported today.

The groups — Americas Watch, Asia Watch, Helsinki Watch and the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights — said the administration took a stronger stand against abuses in Chile, Haiti, South Korea, Liberia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, South Africa, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

But they criticized the administration for what they termed its one-sided approach to human rights in Central America, particularly in Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala.

"The U.S. undercuts effectiveness in addressing abuses that warrant condemnation by exaggerating and distorting" actions by Nicaragua's leftist government "and by acting as an apologist for gross abuses by the Contras (rebel fighters)," the groups said in a 155-page report.

The organizations also criticized the administration for failing to denounce continued human rights abuses in El Salvador and Guatemala, where government security forces have been accused of widespread murder of political opponents.

"Our quarrel with the administration is in part because it insists that the advent of elected civilian governments (in those nations) signifies an end to human rights abuses, whereas we believe that they must also demonstrate that the rule of law prevails," the report said.

While citing administration improvement in a number of countries, the report also noted "major shortcomings" in its actions.

In Chile, for example, the report praised the U.S. Embassy in Santiago for establishing contacts with the human rights community there, but criticized U.S. support for large loans to the government of Gen. Augusto Pinochet.

"The administration continues to act in the human rights field as if it considered that whatever it interprets as good for the United States is good for human rights. We hope the administration's policies and practices will evolve further and that it will come to adopt the view that what is good for human rights is good for the United States," the report said.

Since taking office in 1981, the Reagan administration has advocated a system of "quiet diplomacy" in trying to convince allied governments to correct human rights abuses, while taking a more public approach in denouncing abuses in pro-Soviet governments.

James Thyden, director of the State Department's human rights office, said he had not yet seen the report and had no comment.

The watch committees monitor human rights in Soviet bloc countries, Latin America and Asia. The lawyers committee is a New York-based group that examines international compliance with human rights standards.

Weinberger Builds Case For More Funds To Save Military Buildup

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Stepping up his campaign to salvage the president's military buildup, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said today the nation's security was in danger of being "held hostage to the accountant's pencil." In a biting attack on congressional critics, Weinberger said he had hoped all Americans had "learned a lesson" from the country's lack of preparedness in the early days of World War II.

"We stretched our luck to the limit, and we tempted fate and tyrants," he said.

And yet, Weinberger continued, the president will unveil the fiscal 1987 budget plan next week at a time when

"concern with the deficit has caused a wavering of congressional commitment to national security."

"The fiscal 1987 defense budget represents a critical challenge to our willingness to pay the price for peace in the future," Weinberger said.

"We are entering a period in which national strategy may be held hostage to the accountant's pencil — in which the desire for reduced deficits and domestic comfort overwhelms our common sense, narrows our perspective and compels us to shrink from our obligation to resist the most tyrannical forces in the world."

Weinberger delivered his speech, which he billed as a preview of the military posture statement he will present to Congress along with the budget, during a luncheon appearance before the Economic Club of Detroit. A text was released in advance at the Pentagon.

The defense secretary at several points referred to the new Gramm-Rudman balanced-budget law, noting the cuts required by the act during the current year would put the Pentagon's budget $35 billion below the president's original request.

He also noted the president's intent to request further reductions in domestic programs to provide the Pentagon a budget increase in fiscal 1987. Administration sources have said the president will request a 1987 defense budget of roughly $312 billion to $314 billion, compared to the $276.1 billion expected this year after the latest cuts.

Weinberger said he applauded efforts to reduce the federal deficit but was "deeply concerned" by Congress' failure "to discriminate between defense, which exists to ensure our freedom, and domestic programs, which exist because of our freedom."

"They are simply not equals — and should not be treated as if they were. It ignores the reality that defense is not an economic tool, but a means to national security and world peace — and nothing less than that."

Weinberger said he would proudly inform Congress that "significant progress" had been made in the past five years in restoring U.S. military might. Strategic nuclear weapons are finally being modernized, new and better conventional weapons are being fielded, and the all-volunteer military is in the best shape ever, off, he continued.

More important than those gauges, however, are "the freedoms preserved, the wars deterred, the confidence of our allies and the restraint of our adversaries." And that is where the buildup is paying

The Soviets have returned to arms control negotiations and "for the first time ever, begun to talk seriously about deep cuts in nuclear arsenals — an American idea that used to fall on deaf ears in Moscow."

Pentagon Assessing Impact Of Shuttle's Loss

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger has ordered an assessment of the space shuttle Challenger's loss to the Pentagon, but the department is already convinced the impact on the military will be serious, officials say.

The Defense Department enjoys top priority and "first call" on shuttle launches. But the explosion Tuesday that destroyed the Challenger reduces the fleet of orbiters to just three "and there will be no easy way to compensate for that," explained one source.

Moreover, if the loss of the Challenger results in a lengthy grounding of the three remaining shuttles, experiments for President Reagan's "Star Wars" program could be delayed. The Star Wars proposal is for exotic, space-based weapons that would destroy missiles before they could reach their targets. The only public assessment of the shuttle tragedy offered at the Pentagon Wednesday came from chief spokesman Bob Sims. While refusing to go into detail, Sims said Weinberger had already met several times with top deputies to discuss the issue.

"We know it will have an impact on us," Sims said. "It clearly has a serious impact on defense programs. ... Our intention would be to continue to carry out the national security missions that we have planned and will make every effort to do that. But at the moment, we do not have a full assessment."

Pentagon and Air Force space managers refused to elaborate publicly, but several agreed to discuss the matter if not identified.

"Long term, the only conclusion you can reach is we either have to build a replacement shuttle, bump commercial cargoes or plan on buying more unmanned rockets," said one source.

"No one knows what caused this or what the fix is going to be," said another. "But we were on a tight schedule as it was."

The Defense Department is the National Aeronautical and Space Administration's largest and — under the terms of a National Space Policy approved by President Reagan — most important customer.

One official said Wednesday the Pentagon could bump commercial payloads once the shuttles began flying again to satisfy "near-term priorities." But this official and others stressed the larger problem was not the flight delays that would accompany NASA's investigation, but the fact that the NASA shuttle fleet is down to three orbiters.

The Pentagon has signed up for a third of the available shuttle flights over the next 10 years. It pays more than $50 million per flight, and starting in fiscal 1989 will boost that to $60 million.

To date, only two Pentagon missions have been flown by the shuttle. Only four military flights are scheduled this year, the first in July. But the Pentagon is planning to use the shuttle at least nine times every year by 1988.

"Unless a replacement shuttle is built, I don't see how that schedule can stand up," one source said.

The vast majority of the military flights were for launching different types of satellites.

"It's the shuttle that gives us the heavy-lift capability," explained one official. "We don't have any unmanned rocket that can lift as much weight into orbit."

The Pentagon relies on four different types of expendable launch vehicles, or unmanned rockets, to boost its spy, navigation and positioning satellites into orbit. The largest is the Titan III 34D, which can boost a 4,100-pound satellite into high earth orbit.

The Pentagon has already begun building heavier, more sophisticated satellites that only the shuttle can lift. Launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla., the shuttle is capable of inserting a satellite weighing as much as 10,000 pounds into high orbit.

The Washington Post quoted unidentified sources Wednesday as saying the Air Force was planning to use the shuttle in September to launch a new-generation KH-12 intelligence satellite that "is too large to be launched by the older booster rockets."

The exception to the Pentagon's reliance on the shuttle involves the development of a new, much larger version of the Titan. Although NASA initially objected, Congress authorized the Pentagon last year to buy 10 of the new rockets as a backstop in the event of a national emergency.

Those rockets will not be available before 1988, however, and the Air Force had planned to use only two of them per year.

The sources also noted Wednesday that unmanned rockets are not even an option for the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization, the Pentagon office that is overseeing Star Wars. It had planned to begin using half of the shuttle's huge cargo bay at least twice a year starting in 1987 for experiments.

"We didn't have a lot planned in the immediate future," said one Star Wars official. "But by definition, we are working on anti-missile defensive systems that can only be designed through experiments in space, conducted by scientists. Let's just say we'd like to see the shuttles flying again soon."

'Life Has To Go On'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is carrying his message that "life has to go on and so does the space program" to students in the New Hampshire high school where Christa McAuliffe taught social studies before embarking on the space mission that cost her life.

The White House on Wednesday said Reagan sent a written message to the students of Concord High School in Concord, N.H., and it would be read to the young people today. The White House was not planning to release the text, spokesman Larry Speakes said.

In Concord, School Superintendent Mark Beauvais scheduled a news conference for today.

The president's message was expected to renew the note Reagan has struck in the two days since McAuliffe and the six other crew members of the space shuttle Challenger died in a fiery explosion after blastoff from Cape Canaveral, Fla.

On Wednesday, asked about his feelings as the impact of the disaster sank in, Reagan said, "I think all of us have kind of escaped the numbness of shock that we all felt. But life has to go on, and so does the space program."

In his televised speech Tuesday, five hours after the explosion, the president spoke directly to school children and said, "I know it is hard to understand, but sometimes painful things like this happen. It's all part of the process of exploration and discovery."

A White House aide who spoke only on condition of anonymity said of the message to the students, "I would think it probably strikes a similar tone."

McAuliffe joined the Concord High faculty in 1982.

The president spent part of Wednesday speaking by telephone with relatives of the seven Challenger crew members. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced Reagan will attend memorial services Friday for the Challenger crew at the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

House Approves Bill Creating Uniform Poll Closing Time

By BILL McCLOSKEY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Polling places across the nation would close at the same time — 9 p.m. EST — on presidential Election Day under legislation awaiting Senate action.
The bill, passed by the House Wednesday evening, also delays the start of Standard Time in the West for two weeks, so polls there would close at 7 p.m. local time.
In the Central Time Zone polls would close at 8 p.m. Closing time in the Mountain Time Zone would be 7 p.m.
One-fourth of the states would have no change in poll closing time.
The bill exempts Alaska and Hawaii.
The measure, coupled with an agreement by the television networks to withhold statewide election projections until the polls close throughout the state, is designed to keep Americans from knowing the winner of an election before everyone has had a chance to vote.

Rep. William M. Thomas, R-Calif., said today's computer technology means the networks can project with an amazing degree of accuracy.
Supporters of the bill said there was evidence that some voters in the West walked away from polling places when they learned that early projections showed Ronald Reagan a landslide winner over President Carter in 1980.
Carter compounded the problem by conceding defeat long before the polls closed in the West.

The legislation will "ensure every voter has a chance to cast a ballot before the results are announced," said Rep. Al Swift, D-Wash., himself a former TV newscaster.
Opponents rejected reports that potential voters did not cast their ballots and argued that the networks couldn't be trusted to keep their word.

An amendment that would require the networks to repeat their pledge just prior to each presidential election was defeated 10-8.
Before approving the measure on a 204-171 vote, the House adopted an amendment that would allow Dixville Notch, N.H., and other small places to retain their practice of closing the polls once every eligible voter in the town has voted.

Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., argued against the legislation saying: "We have no guarantee that presidential candidates will not concede early. If they do, the same discouragement will take place."

In 1984, Reagan and Vice President Walter F. Mondale, the defeated Democratic contender, agreed to make no concession announcements until 11 p.m. EST.

Vessel's Captain Says Racism Wasn't Cause Of Killing

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A white Navy officer killed by a black sailor was sensitive to racial problems, and the ship on which the two served had an extraordinary record of racial harmony, the vessel's captain testified at the sailor's court-martial.

Cmdr. William A. Coleman, who is black, was called Wednesday by a Navy prosecutor to rebut defense claims that racism aboard the USS Miller prompted Petty Officer Mitchell T. Garraway Jr. to fatally stab Lt. James K. Sterner.

An eight-member military jury was expected to begin deliberations today after hearing closing arguments.

Garraway, 21, of Suitland, Md., has pleaded guilty to carrying a concealed weapon and unpremeditated murder in the June 16, 1985, slaying while the ship was off the Bermuda coast.

But the Navy is seeking a conviction on a premeditated murder charge, which carries either a life sentence or capital punishment.

The defense maintains Garraway's attack on Sterner was a spontaneous act prompted by a belief the 35-year-old officer unfairly blocked a promotion. It also says Garraway's "schizoid personality" was deeply affected by real and perceived racism aboard the ship.

But the Navy used Coleman and two other members of the Miller's crew Wednesday to counter those claims and bolster its contention the slaying was premeditated.

Coleman testified that he personally requested Sterner be assigned to his vessel after being impressed with his initiative and maturity when they met during a war games exercise.

He said he never heard Sterner utter a racial epithet, and when asked by Navy prosecutor Lt. Daniel E.

O'Toole whether Sterner was a racist, he said, "In my opinion, far from it."

Coleman also said he gave the lieutenant the highest possible rating on a fitness report in the equal opportunity category.

The ship's captain said Garraway came to him to complain about his blocked promotion, but never substantiated charges that Sterner and another sailor were racially motivated in recommending he remain at his current rank.

The prosecution also called a white officer and a black enlisted man to stress that Sterner never showed any signs of racism.

Lt. Cmdr. Anthony J. Abbruzzi testified the reason Garraway's promotion was blocked was because he performed his duties poorly.

Before rebuttal testimony began, the defense rested its case without calling Garraway.

Defense lawyer Trevor L. Brooks said his client was "displaying some psychological problems."

"We fear how he may react on the stand. The pressure has affected him in incarceration," Brooks said.

The lawyer also said he was confident the defense had presented enough evidence to acquit Garraway on the premeditated-murder charge.

"We didn't want to go for overkill," he said.

The defense called six witnesses over three days; the prosecution called 17 over four days in the Newport Naval Base courtroom. The prosecution also called four rebuttal witnesses. One defense rebuttal witness was expected today.

A premeditated murder conviction would require guilty votes by six of the eight members of the court-martial jury made up of Navy and Marine officers and enlisted men.

Mexican Plane Crash Kills 21

LOS MOCHIS, Mexico (AP) — The charred pages of a school book were among the few identifiable belongings left after the crash of an AeroCalifornia DC-3 airliner in this Mexican Pacific coast city that claimed the lives of all 21 people aboard.

Investigators studied the wreckage to try to determine why the propeller-driven plane slammed into a hill Wednesday morning and burst into flames. Airline officials said the pilot tried to land in heavy fog at a small airstrip near a hotel.

The plane, carrying 18 passengers and three crew members, left Ciudad Constitucion on the Baja California peninsula, and was scheduled to arrive at Los Mochis nearly an hour later.

All aboard were Mexicans, said Mara Castellon, spokeswoman for AeroCalifornia's main office in La Paz, Baja California.

Los Mochis' main airstrip was closed due to thick fog. Small commercial planes in the area were advised by the control tower to land at airports north or south of Los Mochis.

Instead, pilot Modesto Copado Hernandez made a decision to try landing at an airstrip near the Colinas Hotel, said Enrique Gomez Llanos, AeroCalifornia's general manager in Los Mochis.

This reporter, flying above Los Mochis when the crash occurred, saw that the AeroCalifornia plane could not land on its first attempt. But when the plane came around and started to climb over the hill, its wing dipped and it crashed into the side of the hill.

Police officer Victor Manuel Sarnudo Romanillo said he arrived about 15 minutes after the crash. "It was a big mess and the bodies were all burned up. But they were still in the plane."

Los Mochis in Sinaloa state is across the Gulf of California from Baja California. It is a fishing community, center of a prosperous agricultural area and has a small community of retired Americans.

AeroCalifornia, a regional, privately owned company, also flies to Guadalajara and Tijuana.

Arab League Set To Discuss Libya's Call For Boycott

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — Arab foreign ministers meet in special session today to discuss Libya's call for a pan-Arab boycott of the United States in retaliation for U.S. sanctions against Libya and purported American military threats.

However, the reaction from some Arab nations, many of which have close economic ties with the United States, was expected to be lukewarm. Arab diplomatic sources said it was very unlikely that the Arab League would decide to take any radical action against the United States.

The opening of today's session was delayed due to the late arrival of some delegations, Arab League officials said.

President Reagan has frozen Libyan assets in the United States and declared an economic boycott of the North African nation for allegedly backing the Palestinian terrorists who staged the Dec. 27 attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports that killed 20 people, including five Americans.

Libya denied any involvement in the machine-gun and hand-grenade massacres, though leader Col. Moammar Khadafy repeatedly has voiced support for the Palestinian cause.

Tensions between Washington and Tripoli escalated further last Friday, when the U.S. 6th Fleet began naval and air maneuvers off Libya.

In retaliation for U.S. actions, Libyan Foreign Minister Ali Abdussalam Treiki, who arrived in Tunis on Wednesday, has said he wants the 21-member Arab League to implement an economic boycott of the United States and withdraw all Arab funds from American banks.

Withdrawing Arab funds from the United States would risk creating serious economic consequences for some countries, particularly in the oil-rich Persian Gulf.

There was little doubt, however, that Washington's attitude toward Libya has created sympathy for the North African nation among Arabs and many Third World countries, even those that have no particular love for Khadafy.

At today's session, the Arab League's 20 member nations, plus the Palestine Liberation Organization, will hear a report from league Secretary General Chedli Klibi, who finished a European tour last weekend in which he explained the Arabs' position.

The results of Klibi's trip were not immediately known, but foreign ministers of the 12 European Common Market countries failed to take strong action when they met Monday to discuss how to deal with terrorism and the U.S. request for action to isolate Libya economically.

The Common Market ministers issued a statement that condemned terrorism and pledged not to fill the void caused by U.S. sanctions, but declined to impose sanctions themselves and did not specifically name Libya.

The members of the European trading bloc said they would refrain from selling arms to countries implicated in terrorism. However, that would have little practical effect on Libya because none of Western Europe's major arms exporters sell it weapons. The Soviet Union is Libya's major supplier of military equipment.

Libya was expected to run into similar problems at the Arab League meeting over its request for a boycott of the United States. While Arab countries have been willing to condemn purported U.S. military threats and economic sanctions against Libya, there has been less enthusiasm for specific retaliatory measures.

At a meeting earlier this month of the Islamic Conference Organization in Fez, Morocco, which grouped representatives of 45 Moslem countries, Libya won approval of two anti-American resolutions but was not able to forge a consensus on any retaliatory action.

Two separate meetings of delegates from Arab countries attending the Fez conference also failed to decide on joint countermeasures.

Egypt, a close U.S. ally, had its Arab League membership suspended following its 1979 treaty with Israel, which made it the Arab world's only country to recognize the Jewish state.

Ban On Political Banners Is Revoked

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government today revoked a day-old police order that would have barred bumper stickers, posters and T-shirts emblazoned with political slogans in Cape Town as Parliament opened there.

The Wednesday order from Brig. Chris Swart, police commander in Cape Town, would have banned all visual means of political expression in six Cape Town districts for two weeks under state-of-emergency powers, beginning today.

The order was ridiculed by white opponents of the white-led government, with one calling it "stupid." A liberal newspaper, The Cape Times, said the measure was "reminiscent of a banana republic."

Minister of Law and Order Louis le Grange, responsible for police matters, said after meeting with Swart today that the ban had been rescinded, but said police would not hesitate to act if demonstrations or protests threaten public order in the next two weeks during ceremonies for the opening of Parliament, scheduled to begin Friday.

Le Grange said the original intent of the ban had been to prevent public gatherings that would threaten order. He did not explain why the order had included bumper stickers, T-shirts and other means of individual political expression.

Initial reports had indicated that the ban would encompass a larger area than just the Cape Town vicinity.

South Africans opposed to apartheid, the system of racial separation that disenfranchises the 24-million member black majority and guarantees privileges for the country's 5 million whites, often wear shirts bearing slogans like "The People Shall Govern."

Frederick van Zyl Slabbert, leader of the opposition Progressive Federal Party in the white chamber of Parliament, was among the critics of the ban.

Slabbert and others noted it came just before President P.W. Botha's opening address to Parliament on Friday, and said, "I always try to comfort myself that this government cannot come up with anything more stupid than they have just done. But they always manage to disappoint me."

Voyager Ends Scan Of Close-Up Uranus

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Voyager 2 ended its close-up exploration of Uranus after discovering another ring encircling the planet, as triumphant scientists poured champagne and declared, "We're on our way to Neptune!"

Voyager 2 will pitch back at Uranus for more pictures and measurements through late February.

But the near-encounter phase of the Uranus mission ended Wednesday with a final news conference by researchers overjoyed about what astronomer Brad Smith called an incredibly successful exploration.

The unmanned spacecraft, launched in 1977, explored Saturn in 1979 and Jupiter in 1981 and "is in almost perfect condition," said Dick Laeser, Voyager project manager at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory. "We're all set to keep going."

"We're on our way to Neptune!" project scientist Ed Stone said. "The Voyager spacecraft will fly within 2,000 miles of Neptune (and within 6,000 miles of its moon Triton on Aug.

25, 1989). It's going to be a spectacular fly-by."

Voyager scientists and NASA officials poured champagne and joked with reporters Wednesday afternoon, exhilarated by Voyager's nearly flawless performance.

Their spirits had rebounded from the gloom they felt Wednesday morning over Tuesday's fiery explosion of space shuttle Challenger that killed the crew of seven.

"We are deeply saddened at the loss of seven members of our NASA family," JPL director Lew Allen said.

Voyager's latest discovery — a nearly invisible, 1,900-mile-wide ring orbiting Uranus — was announced by NASA scientist Jeff Cuzzi.

The new ring is at least the 11th found encircling Uranus.

Reagan Wants To Upgrade Security For U.S. Diplomats

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan intends to ask Congress for an additional $700 million for this year to upgrade security at American diplomatic outposts around the world, congressional sources say.

The request would launch a comprehensive new effort to protect American diplomats and property with an ultimate cost of several billion dollars. It would come just as many federal programs are being cut because of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law.

The congressional sources, who asked not to be identified, said Wednesday

Reagan intends to include the first installment of the embassy security program in supplemental 1986 funding requests that will be sent to the House and Senate next week, along with the president's budget for the 1987 fiscal year.

The administration decided to embark on the program after receiving a report from a panel established in the wake of the bombings at the embassy in Beirut, which killed 49 people, and at the Beirut airport, which killed 241 Marines.

The panel, headed by former CIA official Bobby Inman, recommended a $4.2 billion program including construction of 62 new diplomatic facilities and major renovation at 40 to 50 other posts.

No details were immediately available about how the administration would use the $700 million it will request from Congress, and no estimate of the size of a second installment the president would seek for the program in his 1987 budget.

Congressional officials predicted that the House and Senate would probably be willing to provide at least some initial funding for the program.

Mexican, Venezuelan Leaders Confer On Oil Crisis

By ISAAC A. LEVI
Associated Press Writer
CANCUN, Mexico (AP) — The presidents of Mexico and Venezuela, Latin America's two largest oil producers, meet in this Caribbean resort today to discuss the crippling effect of the world oil glut on their heavily indebted economies.

The welfare of both countries is closely linked to the price of oil, which has fallen to below $20 a barrel on some markets recently. The two countries' treasury ministers say a sustained drop below that price could devastate their countries.

Mexico and Venezuela are among the Third World's largest debtors.

Mexico has a foreign debt of $96.4 billion and Venezuela owes foreign creditors $35 billion, both mostly to American banks.

Venezuela depends on oil for 90 percent of its export earnings, and petroleum makes up 70 percent of Mexico's foreign earnings. Both nations' ability to repay their foreign debts has been threatened by the drop in oil prices.

"We are going through an emergency, a very real one which, if not acted upon with speed and wisdom, could make the summer of 1982 (when oil prices first started dropping) look like a relatively calm and quiet period," Mexico's oil minister, Jesus Silva Herzog, was quoted in media reports as saying in London, where he is attending a conference on the international debt issue.

Venezuela's energy minister, Arturo Hernandez Grisanti said in Caracas that the oil market should not have "any illusions that all the problems of the market are going to be solved" by the meeting between Presidents Miguel de la Madrid of Mexico and Jaime Lusinchi of Venezuela.

However, Venezuela was expected to pressure Mexico to change its pricing tactics.

Hernandez Grisanti currently is president of OPEC. He is a leading proponent of cutting exports worldwide to maintain prices, but Mexico, through its state oil monopoly PEMEX, has been trying defend its export level at 1.5 million barrels daily even if it has to sacrifice some revenue.

Mexico is an independent producer which until last year refused to follow OPEC guidelines.

About half of Mexico's oil goes to the United States, providing 13 percent of America's oil imports and making it the United States' biggest foreign supplier.

Roughly 40 percent of Venezuela's exports of 1.51 million barrels a day are sold to the United States.

NAACP ..

"as discussed with you" county officials have met with Joyce and "Jim Wallace of the North Carolina Attorney General's Office, both of whom are knowledgeable in the laws of North Carolina and the 1965 Voting Rights Act. As representatives of all the people of Pitt County, the board is sincerely making every effort to investigate avenues available to address the concerns expressed in your letter...."

The commissioner's letter concluded: "Please advise as to the date and time it will be convenient for your members in order for us to set up the meeting when all parties can participate. We will appreciate your giving us several dates and times in case of conflicts."

Asked to comment on the NAACP request, Strickland said Wednesday, "We don't really know what to do," suggesting the board will need expert advice about how to proceed. But Strickland emphasized, "we want to comply with the law," as did other commissioners contacted Wednesday.

The county is divided into five districts for the purpose of electing members of the board. Although commissioners must live in the district they represent, they are elected by county-wide vote. Four of the districts have one representative, while the Greenville Township district is represented by two commissioners.

The districts and representation are fixed by legislation enacted by the N.C. General Assembly. The present five districts were established in the 1950s, along with the provision for staggered terms for members of the board. After the 1960 census, the General Assembly added an additional member to the board from Greenville Township, based on population.

Commenting on the NAACP request Wednesday, Garrett characterized the meeting with Gray and Strickland on Monday as "low key and friendly," and said the officials "indicated they are trying to move forward on this issue."

According to Garrett, "we are hopeful that we can get some black representation on the board not later than May '86. That's an election (and) we feel we'll have to wait another two to four years" if blacks are not represented on the board by then. "We're anxious to get somebody on there by then."

Garrett noted, "I'm not in a position to state" what course of action the NAACP would take if nothing is done by May to insure black representation.

"If they do it, I'll be happy," Garrett said, emphasizing that the NAACP would rather have black representation added to the board through local action "rather than by the court. If we can do it without court action or litigation, it would save all of us best (and) save a lot of money."

Asked if it is realistic to expect any changes by May, in light of the fact that the General Assembly does not meet again until June, Garrett said, "It's not a matter now of what is realistic. It's a matter of what you have to do... what has to be done."

"What we're asking now... you've gone this long doing it like you want to do it. What we're asking now is make amends. You might have to cut some red tape to do it."

"If they do it, I'll be happy," Garrett said.

Saying the "CCJ remains committed to the Greenville and Pitt County schools," Brown said the CCJ "will fully endorse preclearance if:

"The legislation is amended to declare that all of the Consolidated Board seats will expire in November 1987 and that an election for all vacated seats will be held in November 1987;"

If "the Consolidated Board will consist of nine district and three at-large seats (and) district lines will be drawn such that a majority black population will be reflected in at least three districts;"

And if "the consolidated school superintendent's contract will be renewed in 1988."

Saying the requests are "consistent with fair and equitable representation for the Pitt County black community," Brown suggested that the interim board "could facilitate full endorsement of preclearance by the interim board is willing to negotiate."

"If merger fails, it will be because the interim board is not willing to listen to reason," Brown suggested. "We want to see the sysyems merged, but we also want to see that justice is carried out."

association will continue to work for decreasing this tax farther.

Legislation pushed by the association this past year made collection of bad checks more effective for merchants, Ruskins said. Merchants can now take a person to court and collect three times the face value of a check if the person refuses to make it good prior.

Methods of reporting and improving shoplifters were also improved for merchants this past year, Rustin said.

A major issue before North Carolina legislators this year will be House Bill 1314, a proposed constitutional amendment introduced by Rep. Joe Mavretic which would replace property tax with an eight per cent sale tax. Rustin said the Retail Merchants' Association as yet has no official stand on the proposal, but he and Overton both voiced personal opinions that the move would adversely affect both merchants and consumers.

and the Coast Guard, Navy and Air Force expanded the search fleet today from 8 to 13 ships and from 9 to 13 aircraft.

"The ships have begun picking up a great deal more debris, larger and more varied pieces," Lt. Cmdr. James Simpson of the Coast Guard said today. "One ship alone is bringing in 1,000 pounds of debris. They're finding tubing, they're finding electronic-looking pieces — I don't know whether they're control panels or what they are."

"They've got wiring and gauges and so forth," he said. "Some sizes range from 15 by 10 feet to 30 by 5 feet."

Simpson said ships expected to retrieve today two heavy cone-ference and a member of the Brotherhood Club.

Surviving are four sons, Robert Little of the home, Bernard, Martin and Ronald Little, all of Greenville; a daughter, Rosa Little of Greenville; his parents, Wilbur Little Sr. and Letha Little, both of the home; three brothers, Lavern Little of Wilmington, William B. Little of Philadelphia, and Robert E. Little of Brooklyn, N.Y.; a foster brother, Stetinus Hemby of Greenville, and his grandfather, Roger Moore of Greenville.

Tech Rallies Past Wolfpack

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Third-ranked Georgia Tech overcame an eight-point deficit to post a 67-54 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over North Carolina State. Now, the Yellow Jackets cast their eyes toward Virginia.

Georgia Tech's victory raised its ACC record to 6-1, good enough for second place and still within striking distance of top-ranked, unbeaten and first-place North Carolina. Tonight, the Tar Heels, 5-0 in the ACC, face Virginia at Charlottesville. A Cavalier victory not only would force a change atop the top 20 college basketball poll, but also would give Georgia Tech first place by percentage points as league play heads into the weekend.

Mark Price scored 20 points Wednesday night for Georgia Tech, which was coming off a loss to the Tar Heels last weekend.

"We have a great bunch of young men and they came back with a little pride," Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said. "If we had lost tonight and played hard, hey, that's life. But I was disappointed in the way we played last time and I was glad to see us come out and play a little more inspired basketball."

The Yellow Jackets are 17-2 overall, and got 14 points each from John Salley and Duane Ferrell. Freshman Tom Hammonds added 12 for Georgia Tech.

N.C. State squandered its early lead and fell 10 points behind early in the second half. The final score represented Georgia Tech's biggest lead.

Farrow's Jumper Wins For Vikes

HOLLYWOOD — Ricky Farrow hit a jumper with six seconds left to give D.H. Conley's Vikings a 42-40 Coastal Conference basketball victory over West Carteret last night.

West Carteret's girls came away with a 57-45 win in their game.

The loss was only the second in league play for the Patriots, who slump to 6-2 in league action. West Carteret is 12-5 overall. For Conley it was the third win against four losses and topped the overall mark to 9-8.

West Carteret jumped out to a 17-7 lead in the first period, but the Vikings fought back in the second period to outscore the Patriots, 18-6. That allowed the Vikings to take a 25-24 lead into the dressing rooms.

Conley managed to maintain its lead at the end of the third quarter, 32-30, but West Carteret fought back to regain the lead. Conley was back up, 38-36 with 2:43 to go when Sammy Gibson made two free throws to tie it up. Just six seconds later, Troy Ebron hit a pair for Conley to return the Vikings to the lead, 40-38. Eric Lewis then tied it with a jumper at 40-40 with 2:21 to play.

Conley held the ball until 42 seconds were left, then called time out. After missing a couple of chances, Conley had the ball out of bounds and Farrow hit off the inbound pass with six seconds left for the final 42-40 score.

Farrow led Conley with 13 points while Ebron added 10. Gibson paced West Carteret with 13 while Win-

Neagle and Roger Mills each had ten.

In the girls' contest, West Carteret took a 12-8 lead in the first period and was never caught again. The Lady Pats stretched their lead to 31-18 by halftime but Conley was able to cut it back to 39-30 in the third period. West Carteret held off Conley, 18-15, in the final period, however.

Cindy Murdoch led the Pats with 12 points while Laura Brown had 10. Trellaney Boyd led Conley with 24 points while Kim Payton had 15.

Conley's girls are now 0-7 in league play and 5-13 overall. West Carteret is now 4-4, 13-4.

Conley plays host to Washington on Friday.

North Pitt Girls Close On Title

PIKEVILLE — North Pitt's girls basketball team took a giant leap forward last night with a 43-38 victory over Charles B. Aycock, moving ever closer to clinching the Eastern Plains Conference title.

Meanwhile, Aycock's boys held off North Pitt, 56-55, to win their meeting.

The Pant-HERS improved their league record to 8-0 on the year and 15-3 overall. Aycock, in second place, drops to 6-2, 13-2. Both of their losses have come to North Pitt meaning the Pant-HERS would have to lose three of their remaining four games to fail to reach top seeding — and a first round bye — in the league tournament.

The Pant-HERS held only a 12-10 lead after one period but managed to stretch that to 23-18 by halftime. The action slowed in the third quarter as North Pitt inched out to 29-23. Aycock tried to rally in the final period, but fell well short.

Regina Cox led North Pitt with 13 points while Gwen Pilgreen added 10. Kelly Malpass paced Aycock with 12. In the boys' game, North Pitt led 14-12 after one period but Aycock took command in the second period with a 20-10 margin. That pushed the Falcons out to a 32-24 halftime lead.

Aycock padded that to 44-35 during the third period. North Pitt then tried to rally in the final period, outscoring Aycock, 20-12, but it wasn't enough. The Panthers were never able to catch up during the final frame.

Tim Fuller led Aycock with 17 while Travis Spells added 16. Maurice Jones had 20 and Greg Whitaker had 10 for North Pitt.

UNC Tankers Defeat Pirates

The University of North Carolina's swimming teams ran away from East Carolina last night, both the men and women recording 80-33 victories.

East Carolina won three events during the men's meet, with Bruce Brockschmidt setting a new pool and varsity record in the 400-meter individual medley in 4:08.57. David Kileen won the 1,000 freestyle and Keith Kaut won the 100 freestyle.

For the women, Jenni Pierson won the 100 butterfly and Susie Wentink won the 100 breaststroke for the only ECU wins.

"We swam real fast and I was pleased with our performance," Coach Rick Kobe said. "I feel that we have accomplished our goal for this regular season. I was really pleased with Brockschmidt and with Pierson and Brenda Horton. I feel very confident going into the post-season meets."

East Carolina, however, travels to Duke on Friday for a dual meet. Summaries:

Players Group May Sue Patriots

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The unprecedented, overwhelming vote by New England Patriots players to submit to drug testing by the National Football League team has unleashed a storm of controversy that threatens the program before it gets off the ground.

The first action could come today, with the NFL Players Association saying it will file charges against the Patriots. Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFLPA, was quoted by the Boston Globe as saying the union would file with the National Labor Relations Board in New York.

"We intend to protect the innocent," Upshaw said.

The union contends a voluntary testing program violates its collective bargaining agreement with the NFL.

The team's player representative said the naming of six Patriots who allegedly used illegal drugs will kill the plan and could lead to a strike.

And one player said "my name shouldn't be involved in this mess."

Further developments were expected today when New England General Manager Patrick Sullivan and Dr. Armand Nicholi Jr., who said he is in charge of testing the players for drugs, planned to release a statement.

The Patriots' 46-10 loss to the Chicago Bears in last Sunday's Super Bowl was barely 12 hours old when the players voted Monday morning in New Orleans to become the first NFL team to approve voluntary drug testing.

Repercussions were swift. Upshaw said Tuesday that a voluntary testing program "is in direct opposition to our collective bargaining agreement."

That agreement provides for testing only if a player had a known drug problem and had tested positively, or if the team physician has cause to believe a player has a drug problem.

On Wednesday, the Boston Globe reported that Raymond Clayborn, Tony Collins, Irving Fryar, Roland James, Kenneth Sims and Stephen Starring admitted to Coach Raymond Berry that they used illegal drugs. Sullivan said he told the Globe he would not deny such a report.

Offensive tackle Brian Holloway, the Patriots' player representative who is in Hawaii for Sunday's Pro Bowl, was quoted in Wednesday's Pittsburgh Press as saying, "I can guarantee you, with the release of those players' names, you have seen the end of the voluntary program with the Patriots."

In Washington, Doug Allen, secretary-treasurer of the Federation of Professional Athletes, said Wednesday, "It's incredible to me that the Patriots breeched confidentiality."

"As I understand it, the players had insisted on confidentiality. If that was one of the conditions, management has ignored the agreement."

Allen's federation is an umbrella organization for player associations of the National Football League, United States Football League and Major Indoor Soccer League.

Holloway also was quoted by the Press as saying, "You're going to see a dramatic strike taken by the union."

He later toned down his remarks and said, "one thing that needs to be done is for someone to sit down and talk firsthand with Gene Upshaw. There are so many allegations flying around, a national situation, we need to sit down at a table and talk about it. I reserve comment beyond that."

Offensive tackle Ron Wooten, the Patriots' assistant player representative, said Tuesday that 96 percent of the team's players took part in Monday's voting. Of those voting, 86 percent supported voluntary testing.

Sullivan said he is surprised by the controversy that followed that decision.

"I can't believe what a mess this has become," he said.

Berry said he was willing to endure the difficulties spawned by the vote if it would lead to a voluntary testing program that would save players from using drugs.

"Believe me, this issue is important enough to deal with that we'll take what comes with it," he said.

"The only alternative is not to deal with it and that's worse. I didn't have any illusions that things would go smooth as butter. I can hope but I'm a realist."

Holloway said confidentiality was one of the conditions for the program. Sullivan and Berry denied that, saying that even if they refused to comment, there was no guarantee that drug users' names wouldn't be published.

"I told the players it's a possibility that their names would become known, Berry said. "There's nothing I could do about that. I hoped they wouldn't but that was out of my hands."

Patriots' guard John Hannah, in Hawaii for the Pro Bowl, called the Globe account "a typical Boston press story trying to distort what we accomplished. There was no drug problem as far as I know. I've been playing with them, around them in the locker room and I saw no indication of drugs."

"It's a crying shame the names were brought out. In my opinion, it was wrong. ... I was very shocked. All these guys played great football."

Hannah called the vote on the program "strictly an act of selfishness. We put our egos and self-interests aside to help other people."

Holloway told the Press that a "terrible injustice has been done with the naming of the alleged players. The idea that those names have come out does not mean that they have used drugs."

Sullivan said, "Some of those guys have been in a (rehabilitation) program and they're not on drugs any more."

"It really breeches my confidence that he (Sullivan) would say something like that," Sims was quoted as saying by The Patriot Ledger of Quincy. "I've been seeing my physician weekly and sending in specimens for well over a year. In my case, it should have said were, not are, drug users."

"My name shouldn't be involved in this mess," said Clayborn, a cornerback also in Hawaii for the Pro Bowl. "I'll take a urinalysis for anyone."

"The guys are taking steps toward getting the team cleaned up," said Fryar, a punt returner on the AFC's Pro Bowl team. "I was one of the guys who voted for it (the testing program). I'm drug-free, baby. Test me today if you want."

Collins said he also voted for the voluntary drug-testing program but said it was based on a trust he no longer is sure exists.

"The program is dead," he told the Herald in an interview published today.

"I don't know who to trust anymore so I'm not going to trust anybody," he also said. "I thought I could trust Pat (Sullivan) but when he put those names out, I knew I couldn't. I'm clean but I'd never go along with the program now."

But, Collins added, he would go along with the program "if coach Berry says he'd resign if the program wasn't voted in."

He said the publication of his name has affected his entire family.

"Using those names makes it look like our whole team is on drugs," Collins said. "It's torn down our whole season that we worked months to build. It's frustrating and disappointing."

Attempts to reach Starring through his agent were unsuccessful.

The Patriots players won support for a voluntary testing program from Cincinnati Bengals player representative M.L. Harris. "They're saying, 'Let's stop this drug issue and show the public.' We're losing too many guys doing drugs," he said.

Berry said he first learned of drug use on the Patriots shortly after succeeding the fired Ron Meyer as coach on Oct. 25, 1984. He said that between the end of the 1984 season and the beginning of the 1985 season he talked with all 59 players on the team's roster or injured reserve list at the end of the 1984 campaign.

"In the off-season, there were two players who I had information on. They were helped and came to training camp free of the problem," Berry said. He added that he later got proof that other players also were using drugs.

He said he gave them the alternative of undergoing counseling and testing or being suspended. All chose counseling and testing, he said.

"All the players that we've been able to identify we've been able to help them and clean them up," he said. "Marijuana has been the main problem and cocaine has been the second problem ... but, in my opinion, it's much more dangerous."

"Any player who is smoking marijuana or using cocaine who is not identified (and) who is playing definitely is playing with impaired performance, no doubt about that," he added.

He said that after Patriot drug users were treated and tested, "they played great football because they were free of drug use."

Berry maintained that, despite the controversy, his goal remains to set up a formal structure to stop drug use, with testing as a deterrent.

"People's lives are still more important than all that," he said. "I didn't expect that anything was going to be perfect but I know the direction and also I still feel that people's lives are the main thing involved here."

"When I was with the Baltimore Colts I had a teammate who died from drugs," he said. "In another situation, I saw a player's career destroyed and I don't want to let it happen again."

Harden's Long Shot Nips Tigers For Kentucky Five

By The Associated Press

The clock ticked 3-2-1 as Kentucky guard Roger Harden took two long strides across the midcourt stripe. The scoreboard read: Kentucky 52, Visitors 52.

With only eight points thus far in the game against Louisiana State, Harden led fly with a running jumper.

"I knew I was going to shoot the minute I got my hands on the ball at the baseline," Harden said. "To be honest, I knew it was down the minute it left my hands."

Harden's shot, from about 22 feet, swished through the basket at the buzzer, and eighth-ranked Kentucky had a 54-52 victory over 17th-ranked LSU in a Southeastern Conference matchup at Baton Rouge, La.

Other Top Twenty results: No. 3 Georgia Tech 67, North Carolina State 54; No. 5 Duke 89, Clemson 78; No. 6 Oklahoma 87, Nebraska 60; No. 7 St. John's 81, Villanova 61, and No. 14 Notre Dame 94, Utah 64.

The victory left Kentucky with a 17-2 record, 8-1 to lead the SEC. LSU, playing without team captain Nikita Wilson and leading scorer John Williams, fell to 16-4 and 4-4 in the SEC. Wilson was declared academically ineligible, and Williams had chicken pox.

LSU tied the score 52-52 on a 20-foot jumper by Derrick Taylor with three seconds left. The score was tied five times and the lead changed hands twice in the first seven minutes of the second half. Winston Bennett's basket gave Kentucky its biggest lead of five points midway through the second half.

Bennett led Kentucky with 16 points, and Taylor had 20 for LSU.

No. 3 Ga. Tech 67, N.C. State 54

Georgia Tech, trailing by as many as eight points early in the first half, took a 33-29 halftime lead and outscored North Carolina State 11-5 to start the second half en route to a sixth Atlantic Coast Conference victory. N.C. State could get no closer than six points thereafter.

Mark Price scored 20 points for Tech, 17-2. Chris Washburn led N.C. State with 18 points.

Tech fell behind 16-8 with 13:31 left in the first half, but recovered by scoring 10 of the final 13 points before intermission.

No. 5 Duke 89, Clemson 78

Duke built a 51-34 halftime lead, then survived a cold-shooting second half to beat Clemson in another ACC game. Mark Alarie scored 29 points for the Blue Devils, 19-2 and 6-2 in the ACC.

Duke shot 70 percent in the first half and built a 61-38 lead on a jumper by Johnny Dawkins with 16:18 to play. But Clemson got consecutive three-point plays by Glen McCants and Horace Grant, then another basket by Grant to cut the lead to 61-46 with 14:41 left. Clemson got no closer than 81-72 on a Grant jumper with 1:34 to play.

McCants and Larry Middleton had 20 apiece for Clemson.

No. 6 Oklahoma 87, Nebraska 60

Oklahoma moved into a tie with Kansas for the Big Eight Conference lead, getting 20 points apiece from Darryl Kennedy and Tim McCalister to beat Nebraska. With their 44th straight homecourt victory, the Sooners moved to 4-1 in the conference, 19-1 overall.

Oklahoma led 42-30 at halftime. Nebraska pulled within eight by scoring the first four points of the second half, but that was as close as the Cornhuskers would come. Dave Hoppen led Nebraska with 28 points.

No. 7 St. John's 81, Villanova 61

Walter Berry scored 28 points, and St. John's went on a 14-2 run that stretched a 61-57 lead over Villanova to 75-59 with 2:45 to play. The run was sparked by Willie Glass, who converted two steals into slam dunks.

With their sixth straight victory, the Redmen are now 20-2 and 7-1 in the Big East Conference.

St. John's outscored Villanova 13-5 for a 37-29 first-half lead, but Villanova scored six of the final eight points in the half to trail 39-37 at intermission. Harold Pressley led the Wildcats with 15 points.

No. 14 Notre Dame 94, Utah 64

Notre Dame went on a first-half run, scoring eight straight points in one stretch, to build a 16-point lead, then coasted to victory over Utah. Scott Hicks and Ken Barlow had 14 points each for the Fighting Irish, 13-3.

Notre Dame led 43-28 at halftime, and the Irish defense held Utah's high scorer, Jerry Stroman, to just 12 points. Stroman, averaging 18.1 points, scored just once after getting into foul trouble with 12 minutes left.

Maverick's Free Throws Help Defeat San Antonio

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD AP Basketball Writer The best things in life were free for the Dallas Mavericks.

Dallas hit 37 consecutive free throws Tuesday night in its 126-114 victory over the San Antonio Spurs before rookie Detlef Schrempf missed with 4:13 left in the game, stopping the Mavericks two short of the NBA record set by Utah on Dec. 12, 1982.

"We've been concentrating more in free throws in practice and it paid off," Mavericks Coach Dick Motta said after his team finished 38-for-41 from the line for the game. "I knew we didn't miss any free throws in the first half and I couldn't remember if we had missed any free throws in the second half going into the fourth quarter."

"We just need to practice more," Spurs Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said after San Antonio was 17-for-32 at the free-throw line. "I told our players that it is embarrassing to be a pro and miss that many free throws. I want them practicing free throws now instead of shooting one-on-one against each other."

Rolando Blackman scored 25 points and Mark Aguirre 22 for Dallas, while Mike Mitchell and Alvin Robertson had 20 each for San Antonio.

In other games, it was Utah 107,

Philadelphia 86; Indiana 92, Washington 88; Detroit 107, Atlanta 94; and Phoenix 118, Los Angeles Clippers 108.

The Dallas victory was overshadowed by the continuing feud between Motta and Aguirre, who blamed his coach for his failure to make the All-Star team.

"Dick has no feeling for me and I have no feeling for him, but I can survive," said Aguirre, who last month was suspended by Motta for three games because he helped Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins to his feat while the ball was in play. "I knew I wasn't going to make it after my run-in with Dick. I knew I had blown it all."

He added, "I could be playing the starting small forward (in the All-Star game) if I was with some other teams."

Dallas extended its seven-point halftime lead to 95-80 after three periods and built a 23-point bulge in the final quarter.

Jazz 107, 76ers 86 Adrian Dantley scored 14 of his 30 points in the third period as Utah handed Philadelphia only its third loss in 13 games.

Dantley, who moved past Bob Cousy into 25th place on the NBA's all-time scoring list, helped the Jazz extend a 44-38 halftime lead to 77-64 after three quarters. The 76ers cut the deficit to 91-84 with three minutes to go, but a three-point goal by Dantley sparked a 16-2 Jazz spur the rest of the way.

Moses Malone led Philadelphia with 21 points.

Pistons 107, Hawks 94 Vinnie Johnson scored 18 of his 24 points while Detroit was outscoring Atlanta 32-18 in the fourth quarter.

The Hawks started the final quarter with a 76-75 lead and they were still in the game midway through the period before Johnson scored nine consecutive points to spark a 15-4 streak that gave the Pistons a 98-89 lead with 2:26 left.

Bill Laimbeer added 20 points for Detroit, while Atlanta's Dominique Wilkins led all scorers with 30.

Suns 118, Clippers 108 Walter Davis and Larry Nance combined for all of Phoenix's points during a 19-11 run in the fourth quarter that turned a one-point deficit into a 113-106 lead with 1:20 to play against Los Angeles.

The lead changed hands six times in a span of 1:33 before Davis connected on a pair of free throws to give Phoenix the lead for good at 102-100 with 4:57 left in the game.

Davis scored 30 points and Nance 24 for the Suns, while Rory White scored a career-high 32 for Los Angeles.

Pacers 92, Bullets 88 Indiana scored only 16 points in the fourth quarter, but still defeated Washington by holding the Bullets to 13 in the same span.

The game was tied 10 times and there were 26 lead changes before Steve Stipanovich's layup with 6:40 left gave the Pacers the lead to stay at 83-81. Washington, which had its four-game winning streak snapped, was 1-for-11 from the field in the first nine minutes of the final quarter.

Herb Williams, who led Indiana with 25 points, hit two free throws with 2:13 to go and a baseline jumper with 1:47 left to give the Pacers their biggest lead of the game at 89-84. Jeff Ruland, coming back after missing 24 games with a fractured ankle, and Gus Williams led the Bullets with 18 points each.

Ryan Takes Eagle Reigns Beating Out Mora, Shula

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Buddy Ryan didn't know it, but he was on his way to becoming head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles last Dec. 1.

Eagles owner Norman Braman recalled becoming aware of Ryan when he read about the Chicago Bears' defensive coordinator in a newspaper article.

Braman mentioned the story on Wednesday after naming Ryan as the Eagles' new coach.

"Buddy Ryan became my guy from that point on. I did a lot of follow-up on Buddy, and so did (General Manager) Harry Gamble.

"We had a significant problem because of the playoff situation and Super Bowl but thank God we had the patience to hold back and wait until the situation developed, and we weren't stampeded into making another decision."

As Braman read about Ryan, the Eagles still had a coach, Marion Campbell. And even after Campbell was fired two weeks later, Braman came within a whisker of signing first David Shula and then Jim Mora.

Braman said that on Dec. 1, he was hoping that Campbell could save his job by winning the last three games. But the Eagles lost twice and Campbell was fired with one game left.

Shula, the 26-year-old son of, and assistant coach for, Miami Dolphins Coach Don Shula, apparently had the Eagles job until he refused a five-year option clause after a five-year contract.

Mora, the successful coach of the Baltimore Stars of the United States Football League, came within an eyelash of signing an Eagles' contract, but an 11th hour snafu eventually sent him to the New Orleans Saints.

"I don't think I was a third choice," Ryan said after being introduced at a news conference.

"You could read anything you want in the newspapers, but I was confident I'd be head coach of the Eagles after talking with Harry Gamble a few weeks ago."

The Eagles also had indicated interest in Tony Dungy, 30-year-old defensive coordinator of the Pittsburgh Steelers, and Fred Bruney, an assistant to Campbell.

Ryan, an assistant for eight years with the New York Jets, two at Minnesota and eight at Chicago, went to the Super Bowl once with each team.

"Our plan is to take the fourth team there, the Eagles," said Ryan, who promised the Eagles would make the playoffs within two years.

Ryan, whose '46' defense triggered the Bears' 46-10 victory over the New England Patriots in the Super Bowl, said he was aware that a number of successful assistants flopped when they got the head job.

"First, you have to win. That's the name of the game. And a lot of guys personality changes. They become big deals all of a sudden. You have to be yourself. But the bottom line is winning."

The Eagles, who were 7-9 this season and haven't had a winning record since 1981, have been pictured as lacking a killer instinct. They get ahead and more often than not retire into a shell and lose.

"That (killer instinct) is part of coaching," Ryan said. "You have to create that kind of attitude."

Braman said he believed he had signed the best coach in the NFL and that Ryan will be the next Vince Lombardi, legendary coach of the Green Bay Packers whose team won the first two Super Bowls.

"Buddy believes in attacking offensively," said the owner. "You don't come up with the most advanced defense without understanding offense and he understands offense."

Ryan agreed, saying he has defended every good offense in the NFL.

"So, I'm qualified to know about it more than most offensive coordinators."

Chicago Coach Mike Ditka was philosophical about losing Ryan.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — When Ray Perkins succeeded Bear Bryant as Alabama's head coach in 1983, he took a good long look at Ohio State, where Earle Bruce had taken over for Woody Hayes, another legend, four years earlier.

"Earle Bruce was one of the people I reflected on as having followed a great legend, a great coach, and having success," Perkins recalled Wednesday as Alabama and Ohio State were named to play in the season-opening Kickoff Classic on either Aug. 27 or 28.

"A lot of writers conjured up stories about how tough it is following a legend, but if you do your homework, you'll find more success than otherwise."

Perkins had some initial success with an 8-4 record, but Alabama slipped to 5-6 in 1984 — its first losing season since 1957 — before rebounding to 9-2-1 and a No. 13 Associated Press national ranking last fall.

Bruce's first year as Hayes' successor was his best — an 11-0 regular season and a No. 1 ranking before blowing the national championship — Alabama won it — by losing 17-16 to Southern Cal in the Rose Bowl.

"It's not like I watched every (Ohio State) game," said Perkins, who was in the first of his four years as head coach of the New York Giants. "But I saw them play on TV and they came pretty close to winning the national championship."

Prison Work Set Stage For Studies

By PAMELA S. JOHNSON
ECU News Bureau

William Smith's first job was in a new prison set up in an old military base. What had been part of Camp Butner, near Durham, during World War II became an institution for youthful felons.

"They said, 'You can have this street and these five or six barracks as your prison,'" he recalled. The authorities enclosed the area with a fence, probably because they thought prisons were "supposed to have fences," said Smith. "But we tore it down in the course of a year. And it has never had a fence around it since."

Now a member of the criminal justice faculty in the East Carolina University School of Allied Health and Social Work, Dr. Smith recalls that he and the youth prison job seemed right for each other, even though his training and ambition lay in the direction of athletic coaching.

"Correctional institutions were looking for people who could drive buses, manage softball teams and live in the dorms with the inmates. Anything that was to be done, we could do it. There were no guards; we, the staff, did everything, and there was a lot to be done."

With this beginning — a 24-hour-a-day job as a residential prison counselor — William Carter Smith was set upon a path that led him to advanced studies and more work with the state Department of Corrections. He has also come within the scope of the social work field, by natural association, and into education and mental health administration. The corrections and social work fields, Smith believes, are happily married in his academic unit at ECU, where he is a professor in the ECU Division of Social Work.

drive," which is good, but there are still a lot of people who are dying from alcoholism.

"We as individuals and a society have a kind of philosophy that if you throw enough money at it and set up enough programs, a problem will go away," he added, noting ironically that "as public awareness (of the problem of alcohol and drug-related crime) goes up, public interest goes down."

Another hindrance to realistic perceptions of alcoholism, in Smith's view, is the traditional stereotyped image of the alcoholic.

Economic Gauge Shows Strong Rise In December

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main gauge of future economic activity rose a sharp 0.9 percent in December, the best showing in 11 months, the Commerce Department reported today.

The December performance for the Index of Leading Indicators marked the eighth consecutive increase and the strongest gain since January 1985, when the index surged 1.3 percent.

The good showing was certain to be cited as evidence to support the Reagan administration's optimistic view that the economy has finally rebounded from a period of sluggish growth.

The December advance matched a 0.9 percent August gain and followed revised increases of just 0.2 percent in November and 0.6 percent in October. The changes left the index at 173.6 percent of its 1967 base.

Many private economists cautioned that the big December rise was overstating the current strength of the economy. They noted that U.S. manufacturers are still being battered by soaring trade deficits.

In a separate report today, the Commerce Department said the U.S. trade deficit soared to a record $148.5 billion last year.

And the deficit was growing worse as the year ended with December's imbalance setting a monthly record of $17.4 billion as imports soared by 8.7 percent while exports fell by 5.3 percent.

Many economists have said that for the economy to stage a long-lasting rebound the dollar will have to decline further to relieve some of the competitive pressures on manufacturers who have seen their overseas markets dry up as they had to fight a flood of cheaper imports at home.

Indeed, the dollar has declined 24 percent in value since its peak last March.

For 1985, however, the nation's disastrous trading performance held back overall growth. The economy, as measured by the gross national product, grew only 2.3 percent, the weakest showing since the recession year of 1982.

On the other hand, the administration is predicting a substantial rebound with the GNP growing at a 4 percent rate this year, a full percentage point above what many private analysts feel is likely.

The administration received a big boost for its projections during December, a month when a wide number of economic barometers pointed upward.

Employment rose sharply during the month, sending the unemployment rate down to 6.9 percent, its lowest level since April 1980, while consumer spending, industrial production and personal income all posted their best gains in months.

These strong increases were reflected in the big rise in the leading index.

For the year, the index rose 5.8 percent compared to a slight 0.4 percent rise in 1984.

Economists said the better increase last year was a good sign that growth this year will be stronger. The index is designed to predict the course of the economy six to nine months in the future.

The index had soared by 16 percent in 1983, a giant gain that accurately forecast the robust 6.6 percent growth in the GNP in 1984.

The December advance came as seven of the 11 indicators showed strength.

The biggest positive factor came from a surge in building permits. Other positive forces in descending order of their contribution were a big rise in stock prices in December, a rise in the average workweek, changes in the length of time it took to get orders filled, growth in plant and equipment contracts, growth in the money supply and changes in sensitive material prices.

Four indicators held the index back. The biggest negative influence came from a decline in net business formation followed by a rise in weekly unemployment claims, a drop in orders for consumer goods and a drop in consumer and business credit.

Despite the widespread gains in December, many economists cautioned against reading too much into the gain.

David Berson, an economist with Wharton Econometrics, a private forecasting firm, said he believed GNP growth in the January-March quarter will be 2.8 percent, only a slight improvement from the 2.4 percent growth registered from October through December.

"The economy is not as strong as December showed," he said. "It was a one-month blip. The indicators in coming months almost certainly will not be as strong."

Berson said Wharton does forecast a pickup in growth, but not until the final half of the year. He said that by that time lower interest rates and declines in the foreign exchange value of the dollar will be enough to spur faster growth of around 4.5 percent for the final half of the year.

The Reagan administration, however, believes growth will average a solid 4 percent in each quarter of 1986.

Beryl Sprinkel, the president's chief economist, said recently that he realized this forecast was above the consensus from private economists but he predicted they would be revising their projections upward in coming months as further evidence of a reviving economy is revealed.

Trade Deficit Widens

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit widened to a record $148.5 billion in 1985, as imports in December alone outpaced exports by $17.4 billion, the government reported today.

The December deficit itself was an all-time monthly high. For the first 11 months of 1985, the deficit had averaged $12.0 billion a month.

In advance of today's report, however, many economists said that the deficit may have peaked last year and could head down as imports gradually become more expensive with declines in the value of the dollar.

But the Commerce Department's merchandise trade report showed that such a turnaround had not materialized by year's end.

The 1985 trade deficit was up 20.4 percent from the then-record $123.3 deficit of the year before.

In all, U.S. imports totaled $361.6 billion in 1985, up 6 percent from the preceding year. Exports totaled $213.1 billion, falling 2.2 percent from 1984, the report said.

Japan accounted for roughly one-third of the overall deficit. Imports from Japan exceeded exports by $49.7 billion in 1985, up from $37 billion the year before.

The U.S. deficit with Western Europe in 1985 was $27.4 billion, $22.2 billion with Canada, $13.1 billion with Taiwan, and $11.6 billion with members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

December's trade deficit was up 27 percent from the $13.7 billion of November.

Exports during the month fell by 5.3 percent, to $17.0 billion, while imports soared by 8.7 percent, to $34.4 billion, more than double the export total.

Helping to propel the December deficit upwards were $4.1 billion in new car imports, up 5.9 percent from the month before.

Meanwhile, agricultural exports declined in December by 0.22 percent, to $2.5 billion, while oil imports increased by 10.1 percent, to $3.5 billion.

In a separate report, the Commerce Department said that the index of leading indicators — the government's main gauge of future economic activity — rose a sharp 0.9 percent in December.

Budget-Cutting Could Affect Everyone

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Farmers struggling to shield crops from disease, boat operators navigating treacherous coastal waters, and travelers needing up-to-date information about an approaching storm soon may share a common problem in North Carolina.

All have come to rely on — and even take for granted — services that may be curtailed or eliminated should the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings federal budget act be implemented in its purest form.

Officials of a number of federal agencies with operations in the state said Wednesday they'd just begun to assess the impact that the budget-balancing law would have on their offices and the people they serve.

Most said it was too early to know for sure. They said they already were cutting back on hiring, equipment purchases, travel and other non-essential expenditures, but were determined to reduce operations only as a last resort.

"If we have to do more with less, we will do our damndest to do it," said Ensign Al Keith, training officer of the U.S. Coast Guard's station at Fort Macon. "Whether we succeed or not is another question. It will be up to others to judge that."

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill is designed to produce a balanced federal budget within five years by setting annual deficit-reduction targets. If Congress and the president cannot agree on spending cuts or tax increases that would produce the required savings, across-the-board cuts would be made in domestic and defense programs.

It is estimated that, unless Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is repealed or struck down by the courts, the amount of federal funds authorized for programs in North Carolina would be reduced by $214.1 million over the next two fiscal years.

Cuts would be made in a vast array of programs ranging from water and sewer system construction to the "Head Start" program for underprivileged school children to mass transit, low-income housing improvements, health centers for migrant farmworkers, and highway construction.

But these programs and the formula that produced the $214.1 million loss estimate do not include the in-state operations of a number of federal departments and agencies.

Among those agencies, in addition to the Coast Guard, are branches of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health and Human Services, the National Weather Service, federal courts, the FBI, the Environmental Protection Agency, Federal Aviation Administration, Internal Revenue Service, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Postal Service and the Fish and Wildlife Service.

According to Keith, there is no indication that the budget balancing law would jeopardize life and property by cutting Coast Guard resources so deeply that it could not carry out rescue missions.

"We've been operating on 75 percent of the budget that we had last year," he said. "The official line is that we will continue to give service to the public to the fullest of our ability."

Higher-ups have ordered that the Guard undertake missions "only of absolute necessity," Keith said. "If there's the slightest suggestion of danger, we will go. But we've cut back on routine patrols, training patrols."

Additionally, he said, the Guard is less inclined to provide navigation assistance to private vessels.

The Agricultural Extension Service, partially funded with federal money, has drastically curtailed hiring, said director Chester Black. He said the service would have little choice but to eliminate positions should deep cuts be required.

"We've just about bitten the last bullet," Black said. The service is printing fewer publications and local agents are making fewer visits to farms, which is unfortunate because the visits enable agents to test new production methods, he said.

The extension service keeps farmers abreast of the latest agricultural technology and developments in planting and harvesting procedures, disease prevention and pest control. Local agents advise farmers on record keeping and even give city dwellers tips on their backyard gardens.

"Rural North Carolina is hurting very badly, and I see ... knowledge as one of the ways they can compete," Black said. "I would hate very much for that resource to be taken from them."

Air travelers eventually could encounter delays at airports should Gramm-Rudman-Hollings result in cutbacks in control towers, said Jim Baggett, assistant air traffic manager at Raleigh-Durham Airport.

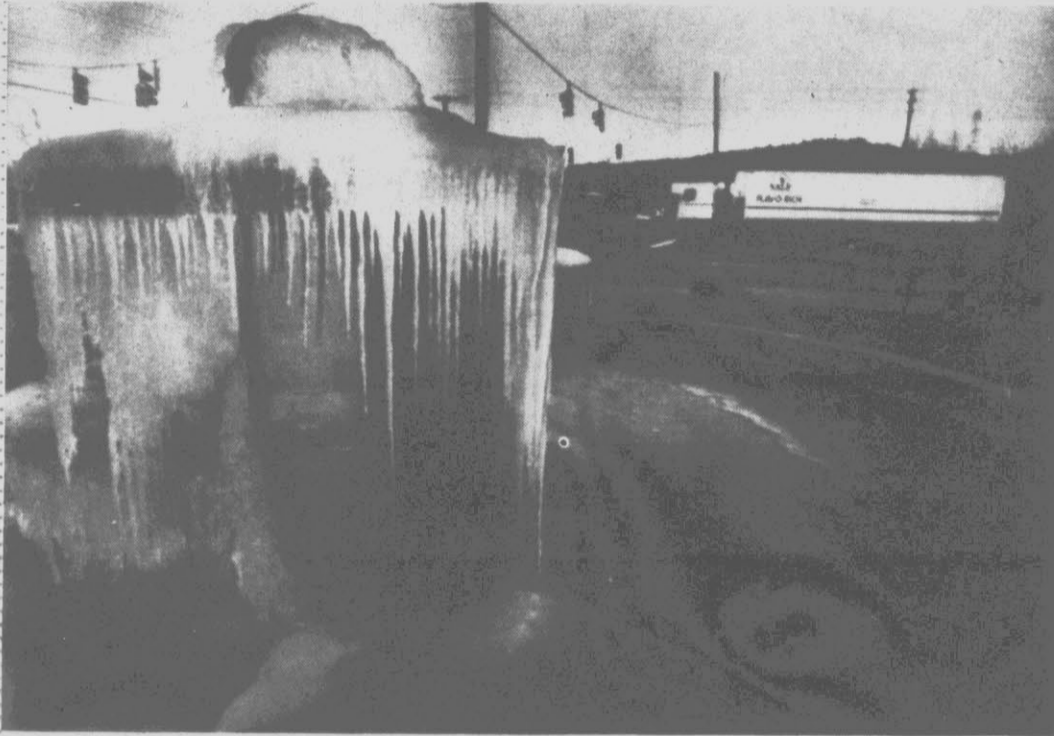

The Raleigh tower already is reducing overtime and travel, Baggett said. Also, prospects are not good for receiving additional staffers needed to handle increased traffic with the opening of a new American Airlines hub, which is expected to double traffic volume at RDU, he said.

The state's six National Weather Service bureaus are operating normally despite leaving vacancies unfilled and buying less equipment, said Bob Muller, the North Carolina area manager. But if the spending cuts projected for 1987 take effect, there could be staffing reductions and altered forecast schedules, Muller said.

"We'll be able to provide warnings to the public about bad weather," he said. "But for the routine public services, giving people weather information on the phone, we'd not be as available as we are now."

"If you have only one person working some night shifts where you used to have two, you have to do the high-priority things first. That means flipping on that button (and activating a recording) saying this phone is not in operation."

IT WAS SO COLD — After the temperature hit a record 2 degrees below zero early Wednesday, this fountain in a Morganton city park froze. Temperatures in western North Carolina are expected to moderate by this weekend, but the fountain obviously will need some warming weather to thaw. (AP Laserphoto)

Solon Seeks Separate Leaf Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A foe of the federal tobacco program has launched a campaign to defeat legislation meant to save the program, but Rep. Charlie Rose says it's not a serious threat as long as the measure stays attached to the budget bill.

In a letter to House members delivered Tuesday, U.S. Rep. Thomas Petri, R-Wis., called the tobacco legislation forged in the Senate a "billion-dollar bailout" of the tobacco industry. He urged House members to unite against the measure, which is part of a stalled deficit-reduction bill.

"Where today most actual tobacco farmers are serfs to absentee landlord allotment holders, tomorrow, if this passes, they will both be vassals of the cigarette companies," he said.

Petri said in an interview Wednesday that he would try to uncouple the tobacco provisions for a separate House vote.

Rose, D-N.C., chairman of the House tobacco subcommittee, said Petri's move was not a serious threat as long as the tobacco bill is "protected from a separate assault."

"A separate vote poses a serious problem," he said.

The legislation was designed by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Senate allies to engineer a buy-out of surpluses by the major cigarette manufacturers.

The companies would buy the surplus under discounts that would cost taxpayers an estimated $1 billion in losses on outstanding government loans.

Petri said in his letter that the tobacco bill conflicted with Congress' effort to implement the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings act for balancing the federal budget.

Anti-Death Group Schedules Vigils

DURHAM (AP) — A group opposed to the death penalty is planning weekly vigils in Raleigh and Charlotte to protest the scheduled Feb. 14 execution of John William Rook.

Officials of North Carolinians Against the Death Penalty, based in Durham, said the vigils will be held every Thursday at noon in front of the courthouses in Mecklenburg and Wake counties.

Rook was convicted in 1980 in the kidnapping and murder of Ann Marie Roche, a 25-year-old nurse. Miss Roche's body was discovered in an isolated area near Dorothea Dix Hospital one day after she was kidnapped from a Raleigh street.

Ingram Undecided About Candidacy

RALEIGH (AP) — Former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram says he remains undecided after a meeting with Terry Sanford whether to run against the former governor in the Democratic primary for U.S. Senate.

"I discussed some issues with him and he is supposed to be getting some information for me," Ingram said. He declined to specify the issues except to say "they affect the pocket-books of the people."

Sanford, who entered the race Jan. 11, had requested the luncheon meeting Wednesday to urge Ingram to stay out of the increasingly crowded field of candidates hoping to succeed Sen. John East, R-N.C.

"I ought not try to talk anybody out of running, but I did tell him why I'm running and that I hope he would support me," said Sanford, who was in Charlotte to attend a fundraiser Wednesday night for 9th Congressional District Democratic candidate D.G. Martin.

The former Duke University president said he had no idea whether Ingram would run.

Ingram said he and Sanford agreed to talk again this weekend before Ingram decides whether to run. That decision, Ingram said, probably would come Monday morning, hours before the noon filing deadline.

Between now and his next meeting with Sanford, Ingram said he also will meet with some of his own supporters.

"There are some people that want me to be their next U.S. senator," Ingram said. "My folks have been geared up to go and they want me to run."

Credit Cards Go To School

ELON COLLEGE, N.C. (AP) — It's not Master Card or American Express. But the "Gold Card" is winning honor roll students at Western Alamance High School discounts on items at the school store, time off from class and free entry to sporting events.

The "Gold Card" is issued to students who make the "A" honor roll in a six-week grading period and is valid until the next grading period.

The program is the brainchild of Principal Carl Herman, who issued cards to about 40 students on Monday. "Students receive letters for performing in athletics," he said, "why not for academic performance?"

Under a class time release, card-bearing students may use up to two days per six weeks to work on projects or classwork in another course. Students also get "Guest of Honor" privileges at the school cafeteria that entitle them to a special dessert.

The credit card program isn't the only innovative program Herman

Chemicals Missing From Lab

RALEIGH (AP) — Chemicals sufficient to make 130 pounds of synthetic cocaine, with a street value of about $25 million, are missing from a State Bureau of Investigation laboratory in Buncombe County, a newspaper has learned.

"We're trying our best to see if there is something that we can find that we can bring an indictment for," SBI Director Robert Morgan said. "I've got two men working full time on it right now."

Morgan confirmed Tuesday that the "precursor" chemicals were missing from the Western Regional Laboratory at Swannanoa and that a probe is under way.

The Swannanoa lab is one of two SBI drug labs in the state. The other is in Raleigh.

Morgan acknowledged that security at the two labs is inadequate and said he would seek funding from the Legislature to boost security.

An SBI source told the News and Observer of Raleigh that to test security, SBI agents broke into the Raleigh lab last week and stayed more than an hour without being detected.

Morgan would not confirm or deny there was such a security test, but he said steps had been taken to increase security at both labs.

"We're doing all we can with the money we have," he said. "We've had high-priced SBI agents standing guard over here."

The chemicals missing from the Swannanoa lab were seized April 24, 1981, in a raid by state, federal and local agents on an underground lab near Banner Elk. The SBI learned they were missing in October.

A source said the agency also is missing its laboratory file report relating to the chemicals, and information relating to the case has been canceled from the Police Information Network computer, the News and Observer reported today.

Less than a year ago, the SBI announced that Charles H. McDonald, a forensic chemist who had worked at the Swannanoa lab, had admitted taking some $300,000 worth of drugs from the lab.

Jury Convicts Man In Anti-Smut Case

ASHEVILLE (AP) — The first conviction under North Carolina's new anti-smut law does not signal the start of a wave of censorship, says the man who successfully prosecuted a Georgia man for selling obscene material.

"This law is aimed at hardcore pornography," said Buncombe County District Attorney Ron Brown, adding that the law is very specific in defining what is and is not obscene material.

A Buncombe County Superior Court jury Wednesday found Todd Jason Hawkins, 23, guilty of six counts of conspiracy, sale and possession with intent to sell magazines, described by the prosecution as pornographic.

Judge Lamar Gudger delayed sentencing until this afternoon to allow time for character witnesses to travel from Georgia.

Hawkins' trial marked the second test of the new obscenity law that went into effect Oct. 1. In the first test last week, a Wilmington man was acquitted of charges involving the sale of a video tape.

Michael Nelson Moore, 20, of Asheville, who was charged along with Hawkins, testified for the state Tuesday as part of an agreement with prosecutors to get his charges reduced or dropped.

In his closing arguments to the jury, Brown read from a story he said described how women enjoy being forced to have sex. Pornography is a male-oriented business that turns women into sex objects, he said.

"It says to deviates who want to read it that women really want to be raped," Brown said.

Brown said Hawkins owned and operated the Asheville News. Hawkins' claim that he sold his interest in the business to FICAE Inc. was a "legal gimmick to avoid responsibility," Brown said.

Defense attorney Scott Jarvis told jurors Brown's argument was based on emotion rather than facts.

"This is not a matter of passion and prejudice," Jarvis said. "The issue is the guilt or innocence of this young man. That is the issue in this case."

TV's Soap Fans Complain Over Network Coverage

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The three major commercial networks lost about $9 million when they preempted entertainment programming during their coverage of the shuttle disaster, but some viewers, angry about the loss of their beloved soap operas, were not sympathetic.

Dave Poltrack, CBS' vice president for research, said that ABC, CBS and NBC probably lost about $5.5 million during the afternoon coverage and $3.5 million for their hour-long news broadcasts in Tuesday's prime time.

The subject of carrying commercials during the news specials was never discussed, said George Schweitzer, CBS' vice president for communications, because "it wouldn't have been appropriate."

Gerald Jaffe, NBC's vice president for research projects, said the networks can never recoup the daytime financial losses. "Time is perishable," he said. "We have original programs every day of the year."

Cable News Network, the only network that was covering the space shot live when Challenger burst into flames, went with shuttle news exclusively for 7½ consecutive hours Tuesday, during which there were no commercial interruptions. Judi Borza, a CNN spokeswoman, said figures on revenue loss were not available.

National ratings figures also were not available Wednesday, but Poltrack predicted the combined audiences of the networks' three nightly newscasts the night of the tragedy would be bigger than Sunday's Super Bowl, which was seen in nearly half the nation's 85.9 million homes with television.

people say. "Yes, it's a tragedy all right. I can't watch 'As the World Turns,'" said Renee Gordon, a KSL-TV secretary. "Gee, you can't help but feel a little angry when you hear this."

"It makes you wonder about society," said Neida Garcia, KTVX-TV receptionist. "How could they care so much about a soap opera? People said they were tired of watching space shuttle coverage all day — they wanted their entertainment."

Lee Greenwood Displayed Spirit Of Patriotism In Writing His Song

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press Writer
LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Lee Greenwood wanted to capture the spirit of America, "to see how the rest of the country felt," when he penned his popular hit "God Bless the U.S.A." two years ago.

The song did that and more as it became a central theme in President Reagan's re-election and was last October, named song of the year by the Country Music Association.

"The spirit of patriotism is strong within me," Greenwood said during a recent headline stint in this city where he once dealt cards and worked Strip lounges. "I wanted to put that spirit to music. I wanted to do something that would uplift the country."

Sacramento the day he graduated from high school for a job in a Reno lounge. The group moved on to Las Vegas for a stint at the Stardust Hotel but in 1963 the dream of finding stardom in the desert evaporated.

For the next 18 years he spent much of his time in Las Vegas and Los Angeles, working as a music arranger, band leader, show tune writer, backup singer, piano bar performer, casino dealer and fried chicken cook.

Working lounges at the Tropicana, Desert Inn and Flamingo hotels fanned his dream of stardom.

"I had that dream," he recalled recently while performing at the Frontier Hotel. "You couldn't help but have it. I watched a lot of people around me, including Seals & Croft and Wayne Newton make it. I asked myself the same question every lounge act asks: 'Why not me?' So I kept writing songs and working in the lounges."

Between stays in Las Vegas, Greenwood hired on as a sax player with Sandu Scott and The Scotties. Arriving in New York for an appearance on "The Ed Sullivan Show," Scott decided to get married and fold the group, leaving the band stranded.

Two of the members, Dino Danelli and Felix Cavaliere, suggested Greenwood form a new group with them. He declined and returned to what he saw as the financial security of Las Vegas. Three months later Danelli and Cavaliere burst onto the charts as The Young Rascals, and became one of the hottest groups in America.

Stung by the near-miss with the Rascals, Greenwood was finally able to land a recording contract, arriving in Los Angeles Feb. 8, 1971, the day before the worst earthquake to hit Southern California in half a century. It was an omen of bad luck for what Greenwood recalls as "the worst period of my life."

Shortly after he signed a five-year recording pact, the company was sold and a Greenwood project was shelved. Bound by a contract he couldn't break, no one would hire him or sign him to a new deal. Mired in debt, Greenwood lost his house and car, then returned to Las Vegas, spending nights on his chosen trade and dealing cards in casinos by day, as he sought to recover financially and feed his family.

In 1981, 21 years after he left Sacramento for fame and fortune, Greenwood vaulted onto the charts with his hit single, "It Turns Me Inside Out."

Greenwood's 1986 schedule includes tour dates with Kenny Rogers, fairs, rodeos, roles in "Gambler III" with Rogers and "Black Veil" with Mel Tillis, a video and more records.

"It seems every time there's a crisis, or a need to rally behind a cause, America turns to its music."

Greenwood had already established his music credentials before his patriotic hit. However, the song solidly entrenched him with his country-music following and opened up a whole new array of fans.

At the National Finals Rodeo in Las Vegas last month, Greenwood's appearance drew a standing ovation from the crowd of 16,000, surpassing the reception given any other Strip headliner appearing at the nine-day event.

The rousing ovation was a heady experience for the 42-year-old father of four who never lost faith in his ability to write and deliver a song.

Born in Los Angeles and raised in central California, Greenwood left his Sacramento home in 1960 to chase a dream. It would take three big gambles, and two misses, to realize it. His circuitous route to stardom took him to Reno, Las Vegas, Hawaii, New York, Nashville and a laundry list of stops in between.

Veteran Actor Dies Of Cancer

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Leif Erickson, best remembered for his role in the television series "The High Chaparral," has died of cancer. He was 74.

Erickson, who portrayed character Big Jon Cannon for the television show, lost his battle Wednesday night with the disease that first sickened him in March, said his brother-in-law, W.T. Cooper.

LEIF ERICKSON

Born William Wycliff Anderson, the actor changed his name the year after his 1937 Broadway debut as Lewis in "Golden Boy." His first effort with the new name was playing John Merritt, M.D. in "All the Living."

His career included starring roles opposite Bette Davis, Helen Hayes and Greta Garbo.

Erickson's film career began in the 30s when he starred in a Greta Garbo film, and other television programs he appeared in were "Wagon Train," "Alcoa Hour" and "Hazel."

His films include "Joan of Arc," "Show Boat," "With a Song in My Heart" and "The Carpetbaggers."

He had attended the University of California at Los Angeles and held an honorary doctor of letters degree from the University of West Florida here.

Little Richard Faces Charges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock 'n' roll legend Little Richard was charged with reckless driving and other counts in an October traffic accident that put him in the hospital for three weeks, an official says.

The 53-year-old singer, whose real name is Richard Wayne Penniman, also was charged Wednesday with driving without a license, said district attorney's spokesman Al Albergate.

Penniman, now a preacher and gospel singer, suffered a broken thigh bone and cuts after the sports car he was driving smashed into a metal traffic control box and a wooden pole Oct. 8, sheriff's deputies said. He was driving at least 50 mph in a 30 mph zone, deputies said.

Hope Lange Weds Theater Producer

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Hope Lange married theater producer Charles Hollerith Jr. in a private ceremony at the home of friends in Monterey, Calif., a publicist says.

The marriage Wednesday was the third for Miss Lange, 54, and the second for Hollerith, 58, said publicist John Springer. She previously was married to actor Don Murray and director Alan Pakula. Hollerith's first wife, Helen, died in 1981.

Miss Lange won two Emmy Awards for her 1968-69 television series "The Ghost and Mrs. Muir." She has also appeared in a number of films, including the 1957 Oscar nominee "Peyton Place."

Church Ministries Expands Local Work

Church Ministries United greatly increased its work in the Greenville community during 1985. A non-profit organization established in 1982 to coordinate the administration of benevolences from Greenville area churches, it made $27,921 in disbursements in 1985, contrasted with $16,786 in 1984. Staff members made 730 interviews, contrasted with 559 in 1984. Eighty-seven requests from other agencies were handled, compared with 31 in 1984. Total income from churches was $27,394.09. Churches participating were St. James Methodist, Jarvis Memorial Methodist, Holy Trinity Methodist, First Free Will Baptist, Grace Free Will Baptist, Oakmont Baptist, Memorial Baptist, Immanuel Baptist, First Christian, Hooker Memorial Christian, Red Oak Christian, St. Paul's Episcopal, St. Peter's Catholic, St. Gabriel's Catholic, Our Redeemer Lutheran, Gloria Dei Lutheran, First Presbyterian, Hollywood Presbyterian, Peace Presbyterian, Boyd Memorial Presbyterian, Christian Scientist, First Pentecostal Holiness, Greenville Seventh-Day Adventist, and Unity Christ Church. Income from other sources including individuals' gifts, club gifts, and denominational grants totaled $4,427. Of the disbursements, 248 went toward utilities — $16,088; 84 toward rents — $8,911; 29 toward heating fuels — $1,749; 20 toward transportation — $300; 10 toward prescriptions — $423; two toward mortgages — $386; one toward car repair — $39; one toward telephone — $36; and one toward dental work — $15. Staffed almost totally by volunteers, the agency had $1,594 operating expenses. The number of churches participating was up from

19 to 24. Mrs. Jack W. Wilkerson is director of the organization. She said she is pleased that the Farmville Ministerial Association has recently established a similar organization to meet needs in the Farmville area. Churches in other communities in the county are also being asked to combine efforts to meet the needs in their areas, she said.

The bidding:
 South West North East
 1 ♠ Pass 2 ♥ Pass
 4 ♣ Pass Pass Pass
 Opening lead: Queen of ♣

You don't have to be a mathematical genius to be a good bridge player. But a knowledge of the basic probabilities is essential to success. Study this hand.

There is considerable difference of opinion about whether South should open the bidding with one club or one spade with five cards in each black suit. Regardless of which he chooses, his side should reach a contract of four spades in comfort.

West led the queen of hearts, taken by dummy's ace as declarer sluffed a diamond. If declarer had to lose only one trump, he could afford to lose two tricks in the minors; if he had two trump losers, he could not give up more than one trick in the minors. How would you play the hand?

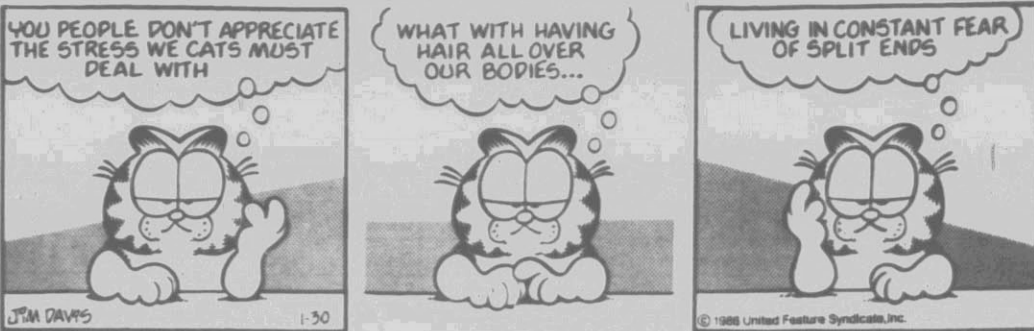

Since he had escaped a diamond lead, declarer realized that, if clubs broke 3-2 (a 68 percent chance), he could afford to ignore the spade finesse, which offered only a 50 percent chance of success. He could afford to concede two trump tricks since his diamond loser would go away on a good club.

At trick two declarer led a club to the ace and returned the suit to the king. When both defenders followed, the contract was laydown as long as trumps were no worse than 3-1. South simply led a trump to the ace and, when neither defender showed out, he abandoned spades in order to concede a club trick to the opponents.

Now East shifted to a diamond, but it was too late. Declarer won and led a club, discarding a diamond from the table. Whether or not West ruffed was immaterial—the defenders could score only two trump tricks in addition to the club.

Note that declarer would have been defeated had he tried the trump finesse at trick two. West wins and shifts to a diamond, and declarer must concede a trick in each minor as well as two spades.

Here Comes The Sun

You may find it hard to believe, but the Earth is closest to the Sun in January, and farthest from the Sun in July. The variation in distance is 3 million miles — relatively small compared with the 92.9 million-mile average distance between the Earth and Sun. That's why the seasons aren't affected. Seasonal change is due to the angle of the Earth's axis in relation to the Sun. This angle determines the directness of the Sun's rays on Earth, and the length of the day.

DO YOU KNOW — What Greek god represented the Sun, light and purity?

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — Warren G. Harding was elected President in 1920.

Knowledge Unlimited, Inc. 1986

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll-call votes between Jan. 20-24, the opening days of the Second Session of the 99th Congress.

House
CHECK HOLDS BY BANKS — By a vote of 80 for and 211 against, the House rejected a substitute version of legislation addressing the practice of banks, thrifts and credit unions putting lengthy holds on deposited checks.

Backed by the banking lobby, the substitute sought to remove much of the clout from the pending bill (HR 2443), which later was passed and sent to the Senate by an overwhelming margin.

Scores of members who voted for the substitute, to gut the bill, then worked the other side of the political street and voted for the bill on final passage. The final vote was 282-11.

In part, the substitute eliminated statutory limits on how long institutions can hold checks, and ordered the Federal Reserve Board to propose regulations for dealing with the problem of excessive holds.

Consumer lobbyists said the statutory limits are needed because depository institutions reap unjustified "float" revenue by routinely holding checks drawn on local banks for a week or longer and out-of-town checks for as long as three weeks.

Members said during debate that less than one percent of deposited checks eventually bounce.

As sent to the Senate, the bill over three years phases in limits on how long checks can be held. For the typical depositor, local checks would have to be made payable within two or three days and non-local checks within seven days.

Beginning in the fourth year, local checks would become payable within one business day and all other checks within four days.

Supporter David Dreier, R-Calif., said the bill would "require a multi-billion dollar investment in computers, software and electronic clearing equipment, the cost of which will again be passed on to the people we're trying to protect, the American consumer."

Opponent Fernand St Germain, D-R.I., said: "My heart cannot bleed for an industry that makes $290 million a year in check floats by holding onto your money and your money and your money, not to mention the $3.5 billion a year reaped from returned check fees."

Members voting yes wanted to defang the bill by removing its limits on check holds and leaving regulation up to the Federal Reserve Board.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were William Cobey, R-4; Alex McMillan, R-9; James Broyhill, R-10, and Bill Hendon, R-11.

Those voting no were Walter Jones, D-1; Tim Valentine, D-2; Stephen Neal, D-5, and W.G. Hefner, D-8.

Not voting were Charles Whitley, D-3; Howard Coble, R-6, and Charles Rose, D-7.

"REASONABLE BELIEF" — The House adopted, 156 for and 146 against, an amendment to HR 2443 (above) that enables depository institutions to waive the check hold limits on a check-by-check basis if they have "a reasonable belief" that certain conditions are present.

For example, the institution could disregard the limits if it suspects the solvency of the author of the check, that the check is forged, or that the depositor is trying to kite the check.

Sponsor Norman Shumway, R-Calif., said: "Without this kind of amendment, we're going to be looking at banks suffering increased losses ... that will be passed on to consumers. We are going to give banks another reason, or excuse, to pass on more service fees."

Opponent Doug Barnard Jr., D-Ga., said the "reasonable belief" test is "so broad ... a bank can hide behind its provisions." He said the better protection for banks is to refuse to accept a suspect check.

Members voting yes favored the amendment.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Cobey, Neal, Rose, McMillan, Broyhill and Hendon.

Those voting no were Jones, Valentine, Whitley and Hefner.

Coble did not vote.

Senate
CONRAIL — The Senate voted, 90 for and seven against, to end a filibuster that had been blocking debate on the merits of legislation to sell Conrail, the federally owned rail freight system, to a private buyer.

The talkathon was led by senators who do not want Conrail sold to the Norfolk Southern Corp. for $1.2 billion, as recommended by the Department of Transportation. They say this would concentrate too much economic power in the resulting railroad.

These senators generally prefer either the $1.4 billion offer from a syndicate headed by Morgan Stanley & Co. or the $1.6 billion offer from an investor group organized by First Boston Corp. and Allen & Co. of New York.

The merits of the competing offers now will be debated on the Senate floor.

Senators voting yes wanted to begin floor debate on the proposed sale of Conrail to the private sector.

North Carolina Sens. John East, R, and Jesse Helms, R, both voted yes.

WHY LEASE?

Why finance one car for 60 months when you'd like to trade for a different car every 36 months? BECAUSE...at Hastings Ford, with Red Carpet Lease you only pay for what you use! Why have to come up with a large down payment to purchase a new car, when all you have to pay is the first month's payment and a REFUNDABLE Security Deposit to lease the same new car? Also, with Hastings Ford's Red Carpet Lease, property tax is already included in the monthly payment! If you are interested in this program, come by to see one of our salespeople today and remember... Red Carpet Lease is no longer designed just for the businessman, Red Carpet Lease is designed for today's personal use - business or pleasure!

Lower Initial Cash Outlay
With a Red Carpet Lease, your initial cash outlay is usually lower than the cash investment needed in the financing of a retail purchase. You don't need a major down payment.

You Can Lease with an Option to Buy
If you feel you may want to purchase the vehicle when the lease expires, you can stipulate that option during lease negotiations. Your purchase price will be set at the time you lease. However, if you later decide you don't want to purchase the vehicle, there are no penalties.

You Don't Tie Up Your Money in Vehicle Ownership
Under the Red Carpet Lease plan, you pay a monthly payment for the use of the vehicle—your payments don't include the cost to accumulate equity. It's simply the idea of paying for the value of the product you use up instead of the full price of the car. And there are no depreciation worries—you have no further obligation at lease end except for excess wear and tear and excess mileage.

Today's Cryptogram clue: D equals G

Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.
