Shuttle Module May Be Intact

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Specialists examined at least five large chunks of shattered Challenger's fuselage today, and studied the possibility that a blowtorch of flame from a solid-fuel booster rocket triggered the explosion that destroyed the shuttle and its crew.

Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration were surprised that so many large pieces survived Tuesday's fireball. The size of the objects raised the possibility the pressurized module in which the seven astronauts rode might have survived the explosion and is intact at the bottom of the Atlantic.

Sonar detected a very large metal object on the ocean floor, 140 feet down, in the area where the fuselage parts were discovered, and divers were prepared to go down to look at it.

Aware of the possibility human remains might be found, NASA today issued this statement: "No comment will be made by NASA officials today on anything concerning personal effects or human remains out of respect for the astronauts' families."

The families were attending a memorial service today in Houston.

Some observers suggested that the pressurized cabin might have burst during the explosion and that the remains of the astronauts would not be found.

A NASA videotape of the unloading of debris from search search showed the Challenger's nose and part of the cabin, parts of a cargo bay door, and sections of wing and tail. The largest piece of the latest find was about 20 by 8 feet.

Ironically, on the side of the cabin area was a yellow arrow, with the word "rescue" pointing to an unit that rescuers would open in case the shuttle ditched at sea and was intact. Inside the unit are switches that would permit a rescue team to shut down the ship's electronic systems and blow the top off the cabin.

A member of one of the investigation team panels who did not want to be identified said, "The investigation was significantly helped by the amount of spacecraft parts recovered. We had worried that we would not come up with as many pieces as we have, and we're anxious to learn what the big object is on the bottom."

The wreckage was spotted floating about 60 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral and it was hoisted aboard the Coast Guard cutter Dallas.

Doctors at Patrick Air Force Base, meanwhile, examined a fragment of bone and tissue that floated ashore 35 miles south of Cape Canaveral to determine if it belonged to one of the seven astronauts. It was attached to a blue sock, and police said it probably was a foot bone.

The focus of the disaster shifted today to the Johnson Space Center in Houston where President and Mrs. Reagan were to attend a memorial service for the astronauts.

Those killed were Christa McAuliffe, a 37-year-old teacher from Concord, N.H., who was

C.D. Spangler Named Head Of UNC System

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — C.D. Spangler Jr., a Charlotte businessman and chairman of the State Board of Education, was elected president of the 16-campus University of North Carolina system today.

Spangler, 53, was selected by the UNC Board of Governors after a year-long search by an 11-member committee for a successor to retiring president William C. Friday.

Spangler runs the family owned C.D. Spangler Construction Co. of Charlotte and is a director of NCNB Corp.

Spangler is a former chairman of the board of the Bank of North Carolina and is credited with reversing the bank's fortunes and engineering its 1982 merger with NCNB Corp.

Spangler was appointed by Gov. Jim Hunt in 1982 to head the state board of education. Among his priorities have been a career ladder incentive program for teachers, a Basic Education Program to raise minimum education levels throughout the state and a longer school day and year.

Spangler was co-chairman of Hunt's Task Force on Education and Economic Growth, which laid the groundwork for the Basic Education Program, higher salaries for teachers and other recent education initiatives.

Others who have been mentioned as top contenders for the post are Frederick Davison, current president of the University of Georgia; Stuart Bondurant, dean of the medical school at UNC-Chapel Hill; Raymond H. Dawson, vice president for academic affairs of the UNC system; Thomas A. Barlett, chancellor of the University of Alabama system; and Ronald W.

'Baby Doc' Flight Report Erroneous

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier, who declared a 30-day state of siege today, went on the radio to deny reports his government had collapsed. He said he was "firm as a monkey's tail" and was seen riding through the capital city in an effort to dispel rumors he had fled the country.

"My dear friends, because of wild rumors and nonsense circulated by good for nothings for some times (sic) now, I'm obliged to take to the streets," he said.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes earlier had told reporters on board Air Force One that Duvalier's government had collapsed and Duvalier had fled the country.

"The president is here, strong, firm as a monkey's tail," according to a transcript of the broadcast provided by the U.S. Embassy. It was unclear whether the broadcast was taped or live.

The White House later, citing "conflicting reports," retracted Speakes' statement and said Duvalier appeared to still be in control of the impoverished Caribbean nation.

Haitians said Duvalier, with heavy

Tremor Strikes Northern U.S.

By The Associated Press
An earthquake rumbled beneath parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Illinois and Michigan today, but there were no immediate reports of damage or injuries.

The U.S. Geological Survey in Washington, D.C., estimated that the quake, which occurred at 11:49 a.m. EST, had a magnitude of 5.0 on the Richter scale of ground movement and was centered 30 miles northeast of Cleveland.

Police stations, newspapers and broadcast stations were flooded with calls. Reports of feeling the quake came from northwestern and western Pennsylvania and as far south as Pittsburgh. It also was felt in Cleveland and across southeastern Michigan. In Detroit, downtown office buildings jiggled. Bob Lacey at radio station WJOL in Bay City, Mich., 90 miles north of Detroit, said the station's offices "just shook. It was like somebody bumping into the desk. Then it happened a second time."

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. Thus a reading of 7.5 reflects an earthquake 10 times stronger than one of 6.5.

An earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage in the local area, 4 moderate damage, 5 considerable damage, 6 severe damage. A 7 reading is a "major" earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage; 8 is a "great" quake, capable of tremendous damage.

The San Francisco earthquake of 1906, which occurred before the Richter scale was devised, has been estimated at 8.3 on the Richter scale.

An earthquake measuring about 3.5 on the Richter scale was felt in Ohio, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia today, shaking buildings and prompting hundreds of telephone calls from concerned residents to police stations, newspapers and broadcast stations.

CATPICKUP

The Pitt County Humane Society has received several reports that a man in a beige pickup truck with a camper shell is traveling the main roads and back roads of Pitt County picking up cats. In some cases, he stops at farm houses and asks if people have cats they want to be rid of. I understand that what he's doing might be legal, but people also ought to know he's here and keep their cats confined or at least collared with their rabies tags showing so hopefully they won't be picked up by him. When we encountered this a few years ago,

Ingram 'Still Interested'

Former state Insurance Commissioner John Ingram on Thursday reiterated his interest in seeking the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination during a press conference in Greenville.

However, Ingram declined to say whether he would make his candidacy official in the face of interest shown by former Gov. Terry Sanford, who has reportedly asked Ingram to drop out of the race.

Ingram, who has until Monday to meet the filing deadline for the primary, said he did not feel that delaying his decision until the last minute would be harmful.

"If you'll look at the history," Ingram said, "the two times that I have filed on the last day, I won the primary without a runoff and went on to win the general election. That is a good omen for John Ingram."

During the conference, Ingram referred to a recent meeting in which Sanford asked Ingram to support his candidacy for the position now held by Sen. John East, R-N.C., of Greenville. He said Sanford "did not agree to pull out of the race ... and I did not agree to stay out." Sanford formally entered the race Jan. 11.

"He (Sanford) said to me that I would be a formidable candidate," Ingram said, adding "if you check your dictionary on formidable, it says that means a threat."

Ingram said he will be in contact with Sanford over the weekend and intends to review details of the former governor's voting record before he makes an announcement about his candidacy.

Other declared Democratic Senate candidates are Bill Belk, Katherine Harper and Fountain Odom, all of Charlotte, Milton Croom and Betty Wallace of Raleigh, Walt Atkins of Graham and Theodore Kinney of Fayetteville. On the GOP side, 10th District Rep. Jim Broyhill and David Funderbunk, former U.S. ambassador to Romania, are running for the nomination.

Ingram served as state insurance commissioner from 1973 to 1985. His last bid for political office came in 1984 when he sought the Democratic nomination for governor. He finished sixth out of a field of 10.

Chamber Names Leslie Pitt's 'Citizen Of Year'

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer

G. Henry Leslie was named "Citizen of the Year" by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce at the chamber's annual meeting Thursday.

"This is a caring, compassionate community," Leslie said in accepting the annual award. "This is the longest stay (in one community) I've ever had in my life. I think Myrt (his wife) said we had moved 17 times before we came here, and now we've been here 16 years."

"You're going to have a hard job getting rid of me."

Leslie moved to Greenville in 1970 when Burroughs Wellcome relocated here from Tuckahoe, N.Y. He served as plant manager until 1980, when he was named general manager of the Greenville site. He retired from the pharmaceuticals company in 1982.

Leslie is a member of the First Presbyterian Church in Greenville, where he has served several terms as an elder and recently headed the church's pastoral search committee.

In the early 1970s, he was chairman of the Gifts Committee of Pitt County Memorial Hospital. He became a member of the hospital's board of trustees in 1976, serving as chairman of the board for six years; he was appointed an honorary trustee when he retired from the board. The hospital named the educational center the Gaskins-Leslie Center in honor of Leslie and Charles Gaskins. Leslie currently is vice chairman of East Carolina Health Services, a subordinate body reporting to the board of trustees.

He has led the Industrial Division of the United Way campaign on several occasions. He served as president of the United Way, and currently is a member of the board of directors.

Leslie was appointed to an eight-year term of the board of trustees of Pitt Community College by Gov. Jim Holshouser, and is serving another eight-year term from his reappointment by Gov. Jim Hunt.

He serves on the executive committee of the East Carolina University Foundation. He recently chaired

Hotelier Doesn't Have Opulent Lifestyle

CONNOISSEUR
A Hearst Magazine
The second richest woman in America lives frugally but runs a first rate group of luxury hotels that offer guests everything from a safe in the closet to an umbrella on the valet stand.
Caroline Schoellkopf of Dallas is a daughter of oil billionaire H.L. Hunt who, according to an article in the February issue of Connoisseur, at his death left her a trust fund now worth more than $1 billion. The only American woman who is richer is her sister, Margaret Hunt Hill, also of Dallas.

Schoellkopf decided in 1979 she wanted to invest some money in a business.
Today she owns Rosewood Hotels — which include the lavish Mansion on Turtle Creek in Dallas; Houston's small but palatial Remington; the sumptuous Bel-Air in Beverly Hills, and the Hana-Maui on the Hawaiian beach. More hotels are planned.
The new hotelier has never adopted an opulent lifestyle. She drives an Oldsmobile, usually does her own hair, has no cook or live-in help, and prunes the plantings around her home herself.
Her hotels are another matter. They offer guests, along with standard luxuries, such things in each room as fruit, fresh flowers, current magazines, decent art, preferably three telephones, deep bathtubs with whirlpool, a refrigerator and a wet bar with a gift bottle of decent wine, a safe or lockbox in the closet, an accurate bathroom scale, windows that open, and an umbrella.
In addition, the hotels have a staff ratio of 1.5 employees per guest or better, and switchboard operators who know guests' names and will screen calls on request.
Schoellkopf has been a serious cook all her life and at the heart of each of her hotels is a grand kitchen. At the Mansion in Dallas, where $40,000 worth of fresh fish is flown in each month, the owner sometimes sits knitting in the kitchen, observing and asking questions.
In a class all its own in the small Hana-Maui, which occupies 23.2 acres. It is surrounded by a 4,500-acre cattle ranch that Schoellkopf also bought. By the end of this year Rosewood will have spent $16 million refurbishing it.
The business has kept the family together as its founder hoped — three of her five children are active in the enterprise. Stephen, 39, runs the family real estate operations; Bunker, 36, is in charge of the ranching and farming interests, which involves him in the Maui property, and daughter Laurie, 29, works in the corporate end of Rosewood.

That doesn't mean Rosewood is a rich woman's expensive hobby.
"I always say if you don't look at the bottom line, you won't be in business for very long," she once remarked. On the other hand, her wealth gives her a free hand to do as she likes.
"We don't have to watch the penny today because we know there is going to be a dollar tomorrow," she said.
The Remington opened just as the Houston oil economy hit the skids. It has done a little better than most other Houston hotels, but it still ran $7 million to $9 million in the red in 1983.
The other Rosewood hotels are prospering, however, so Rosewood is planning a hotel for Washington, D.C., and opened the Crescent Court in Dallas, part of a Rosewood shopping and office complex. It was built above an underground parking cavern for 4,400 cars — the biggest hole ever dug in Dallas.
Schoellkopf considers being a watchdog part of her job at Rosewood, according to Walter McQuade in Connoisseur, and she frequently visits her hostleries, writing as many as 25 handwritten notes a week on their operation.
"For the first time," she said, "I have an excuse to live luxuriously."

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Texas Bachelor Is 'Settled'

DEAR ABBY: I am 28 years old and have read your column for years, but this is my first letter to you. I am a bachelor (by choice) and was very much offended by comments made by your readers concerning bachelors.

I am the one who works late, or comes in early when something special needs to be done at the office. I usually work on holidays because I have no wife or children at home, so I allow my married co-workers to enjoy theirs. I also host showers, company parties, neighborhood gatherings, etc. because living alone makes it simpler to be a host. But I am still asked, "When are you going to settle down?" (I have.) "Why don't you get out and meet people?" (I do.) "Are you gay?" (I am not.) And if this isn't enough, I am viewed with suspicion if I'm too attentive to a married woman.

In spite of its drawbacks, I am single, and I like it. I don't appreciate being compared to a mule, or told that I remain single to avoid responsibility.

So, to you married men who fear bachelors: I am happy you have found someone to share your life with, but don't criticize bachelors. If your marriage turns sour, you will probably turn to a single friend for comfort. And as for that reader who called bachelors jackasses, you owe us an apology. Of course we'll never get one because jackasses (no matter how many legs) do not talk. They just make noise.

JOHN H., GARLAND, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: Recently you had a letter from "Louisiana Libra," who didn't know what to say when she was asked, "How's your love life?" You suggested, "It's none of your business," which is true, but it's also rude.

In the early years of my marriage, I was frequently asked, "How come you don't have any children yet?" I replied, "I don't know."

Sometimes, they pursued it further with, "Whose fault is it, yours or your wife's?" I repeated my original answer, "I don't know."

To every question, I kept saying, "I don't know." They soon got tired of asking, and shut up.

I'm over 75 and still use that response to questions I don't want to answer, and it always works.

JUST H.R.

DEAR JUST: Good suggestion. Another response to a question one does not care to answer: "Why do you want to know?"

DEAR ABBY: I'm 17 and have a 9-month-old daughter, and I'm pregnant again. But that's not my problem. I'm receiving state assistance and free medical coverage, but the state refuses to pay for getting my tubes tied, which is what I want. They told me that when I reach the age of 21, they will, but not until. They say it's the law.

I don't want to risk having another baby. I can't take the pill for medical reasons, and the other methods are not 100 percent safe, plus they are a lot of bother. What should I do?

CONFUSED IN CONNECTICUT

DEAR CONFUSED: I am glad you wrote. Please contact your local family planning facility at once for instructions on the various methods of birth control. While some methods may seem like "a lot of bother," they would not be nearly as much bother as five children before your 21st birthday. A counselor at the clinic can also explain why a tubal ligation is not an appropriate method of birth control at age 17.

Black's Candidacy Not Meant To Be Divisive

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Black political activist Ted Kinney is not trying to divert support from former Gov. Terry Sanford, but Kinney's U.S. Senate candidacy is partly motivated by blacks' dissatisfaction with the Democratic Party's refusal to endorse abolishing the runoff primary system, Kinney's campaign manager says.

"I think it's healthy that a black is running," Marion Rex Harris said. "It's unfair for the Democratic Party or the press to react as if we are trying to destroy the ... party. If you can have eight or nine white (candidates), why not a black?"

Harris, interviewed by telephone from New York where he was on a business trip, said untrue rumors were circulating in North Carolina that Kinney's candidacy was intended to hurt Sanford, who generally is seen as the front-runner among eight hopefuls for the Democratic nomination.

"There are rumors that we are trying to dilute" black votes for Sanford, Harris said. "We are not. I think a lot of Terry Sanford. We will endorse whoever wins the Democratic nomination."

Harris acknowledged, however, that Kinney was motivated in part by dissatisfaction among the black leadership with the Democratic Party's refusal to endorse abolishing the runoff primary system.

ty's refusal to endorse abolishing the runoff primary system.

In fact, Harris said he had met with civil rights lawyer Julius Chambers in New York to discuss a possible lawsuit that would challenge the constitutionality of second primaries.

"We are determined that if we cannot win our case at the ballot box, we will have to win in court," Harris said.

Black leaders have complained for years that blacks have been taken advantage of by the Democratic Party, which continually garners an overwhelming majority of the black vote.

State law requires that if no candidate receives more than 50 percent of the vote in a primary, the second-place finisher can call for a runoff. Critics say blacks have been the front-runner in numerous first primaries, only to lose in the runoff to a white.

Harris said a suit probably will not be filed until after the June legislative session, when the fate of a bill that would abolish runoff primaries is known. The bill, sponsored by Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, is bottled up in a House committee.

In the meantime, Harris said, Kinney and his supporters will mount a vigorous campaign for the Democratic nomination to succeed Republican Sen. John East, who is not seeking re-election.

Harris said Kinney, a Fayetteville real estate agent and a vice president of the North Carolina Black Leadership Caucus, hoped to raise $500,000 for his campaign, with the help of national black leaders including the Rev. Jesse Jackson. Harris was state coordinator of Jackson's 1984 presidential campaign.

"We are running to win, no question," Harris said, adding that Jackson would appear with Kinney at a Charlotte news conference Sunday to kick off his campaign.

In related developments Thursday: Former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram said he would hold further talks with Sanford and review Sanford's record as governor this weekend before deciding whether to enter the Senate race.

To be eligible, candidates must file at the State Board of Elections by noon Monday.

At a Greenville news conference, Ingram said Sanford had urged him not to enter the race when the two met this week. Ingram said he made no promises.

Sanford "said to me that I would be a formidable candidate," Ingram said. "If you check your dictionary on 'formidable,' it says that means a threat."

Area Office Suggested

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK (AP) — Organizers of the "Triangle East" manufacturing area between Raleigh, Rocky Mount and Wilson should consider buying a tract of land in the area for an office and industrial park, a study says.

The Research Triangle Institute also suggests in the study that the group should raise $200,000 to $300,000, mostly from the private sector, to launch the new "triangle."

The study recommends setting up a non-profit corporation to launch the triangle and suggests that the triangle concentrate on attracting service and light manufacturing or assembly companies.

Triangle East is the brainchild of former Gov. Jim Hunt, who is promoting it as a complement to the Research Triangle Park and a way to encourage growth in the eastern part of the state.

Hunt envisions Triangle East as a place where companies with research operations in the Research Triangle Park could locate their own plants or where other firms supplying those companies could locate. Hunt said Thursday that no one has begun trying to recruit companies yet.

Candidate

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A former state legislator who resigned his seat after moving out of his district has filed as a Republican candidate for the state House in his new district.

Jim Cole, a retired vice chancellor at Appalachian State University, served his first term in the 1985 General Assembly representing Watauga, Ashe, Alleghany, Surry and Stokes counties.

IN THE STATE

Tobacco Bill Signed

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill postponing a flue-cured tobacco referendum for up to 45 days was signed into law by President Reagan Thursday, although federal officials already had postponed the voting that had been set for this week.

The delay, which is to give Congress time to act on legislation to revamp the tobacco program, was approved by Congress last week. Expecting Reagan to sign the bill, U.S. Department of Agriculture officials canceled plans for this week's referendum.

Under the new law, the secretary of agriculture has until March 15 to hold a referendum.

Martin Names Council

RALEIGH (AP) — A permanent council on state government's efforts to help youthful drug and alcohol abusers will try to deter abuse and will study community-based programs for treatment, Gov. Jim Martin says.

"This ... will bring to North Carolina a new awareness of a terrifying problem among our young people," Martin said Thursday in announcing the council, which will replace a temporary panel set up by former Gov. Jim Hunt.

The Governor's Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse Among Children and Youth will try to coordinate the programs and efforts under way across the state and encourage creation of programs in areas where there are none, Martin said.

Pornographer Sentenced

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Todd Jason Hawkins, the first person convicted under the state's new anti-pornography law, was sentenced Thursday by Buncombe County Superior Court Judge Lamar Gudger to serve two years in prison as a youthful offender and fined $2,500.

Hawkins, 22, of Stone Mountain, Ga., also received a consecutive three-year sentence, which Gudger suspended, and was placed on supervised probation for five years.

Gudger recommended that Hawkins' probation be modified to unsupervised, however, after he paid the fine, provided he remained under supervised probation for a period of two years.

Courts

What is a big revenue business, a growth industry and badly in need of additional physical facilities?

In Pitt County it is the courts, of course.

As the county grows so, too, does litigation, and county officials report there is a shortage of courtrooms, office and storage space. The sheriff's department also reports that more of the deputies' time is being devoted to court supervision which means less time for patrolling and other police work.

The clerk of court, Sandra Gaskins, says her office is out of space and needs more courtrooms, office space and storage space. Criminal cases heard in the county since 1982 have increased from 16,309 to 28,398, or 57 percent. We would all rather there had not been such an increase, but the fact is that it is there and the increases are likely to go on as the county grows.

Officials will be looking at ways to handle the deluge of cases. A possibility could be night court, which would make more extensive use of the available three courtrooms in the Pitt County Courthouse.

The county is also looking to the state Administrative Office of the Courts' planning division for assistance. That division will do a study and offer projections of needs for the system.

Long range, the answer is obvious. "We're talking about building courtrooms and that runs into a lot of money," County Manager Reginald Gray said.

Clearly expansion of court, clerk of court and sheriff's facilities will be coming. That will require financing that must be planned for immediately.

Telephones

It is distressing that those who voted in Greenville were heavily against replacing long distance service to Grifton with toll free service.

The vote in Greenville was 8,279 against and 2,785 in favor with about 35.8 percent voting.

Grifton residents favored the toll free plan 977 to 101, while Ayden voted in favor 920 to 382. Results of the survey have been sent to the N.C. Utilities Commission, which will have final approval of the new service.

It is true that the toll free service to Grifton would mean a modest increase in Greenville monthly phone bills, but it would also provide access to many more phones without paying toll charges. It is also true that some of us would rarely call a Grifton phone. Nevertheless, the vote shows that Grifton citizens want better phone communication with their county seat and, if for no other reason, the spirit of neighborliness should prompt Greenville phone patrons to extend a helping hand.

Cuomo Does High-Risk Act

WASHINGTON — Gov. Mario Cuomo's assault against alleged anti-Italian bias has dazed Democratic Party insiders, raising apprehension about the way he would conduct a campaign for president as the party's nominee in 1988.

No other presidential prospect in either party would have made page-one news by expressing concern about supposed "slurs" concerning his "ethnicity" and suggesting he might have to run for president after all to prove an Italian-American could make it. Private opinion by party leaders who will not be quoted ranges from doubts about his stability to expressions of uneasiness by old hands who nevertheless admit Cuomo may be a unique political commodity who will end up in the White House.

"Those people in Washington are uncomfortable," one New York Democratic operative who knows the governor well told us, "because they don't understand him." Specifically, Cuomo on the Italian-American question is doing a high-risk act on the high-wire, attempting to raise an issue that hardly anybody else thinks even exists. Potential presidential rivals Gary Hart, Joe Biden or Dick Gephardt never would contemplate such daring.

That act threatens the nationwide esteem of the New York spellbinder who mesmerized the 1984 Democratic National Convention and can do the same to any audience, any time. He now is in danger of coming over as a thin-skinned "whiner" (a term increasingly used by Democratic to describe him) who tries to strong-arm critics.

Understanding Mario begins with the knowledge that he is apt to blurt out what he has been brooding about without consulting staff or planning his exact course. To those familiar with the governor, the notion that he carefully constructed his unusual attack is laughable. Rather, he responded impromptu to a reporter's question and then extemporized toward a broader theme.

Even if accidental at first, however, Cuomo's outburst yielded concrete results in the opinion of advisers. It drove from the newspapers talk about his politically-unpopular grant of clemency to Gary McGovern, convicted of killing a deputy sheriff. It also, in the opinion of the governor's camp, ensured that nobody is going to bring up again what started the furor: his pre-Christmas assault on the use of the word Mafia in describing organized crime. "It's a godsend," one aide said.

Cuomo seems to agree. "I'm delighted by the reaction," he told us, referring to comments and editorials saying that, of course, an Italian-American should be able to run for president. "Nobody is saying now that he still thinks an Italian-American can't be president," he added.

But nobody said that in the first place. Nor had we reported, as Cuomo claimed, that "Italians from the Northeast can't win." Even further from reality is the governor's continued claim that the "right wing" is fomenting anti-Italian prejudice.

In fact, quotes in our earlier column that the governor might have trouble in the South because "there aren't many Marios" in the region came not from a racist reactionary but from Democratic National Committeeman Don Fowler, a pro-civil rights liberal from South Carolina. He identified himself to the New York Post as the source of the unattributable quote.

When we pointed this out to Cuomo, he insisted that "only the right wing ever mentions" the Italian-American ethnic question. He claimed that the White House had tried to provoke an assault on him by Republican State Chairman Anthony J. Colavito, who refused to make it. Colavito could not be reached for comment.

To some veteran Cuomo-watchers, no matter how far-fetched the notion of a right-wing pogrom against Italian-Americans may be, it provides the "rationale" for a presidential bid by Cuomo. He has said Mayor Ed Koch lost to him for governor in 1982 because he lacked a rationale and that he himself today lacks a rationale to run for president in 1988.

The emerging Cuomo rationale is symbolized by the Rev. Jesse Jackson's message of congratulations for Cuomo.

chapters of recent and contemporary history seemed to be protected by a thin gray film. It was as if the authors looked at events through smoke-tinted glasses, obscuring the glare of fact.

Bauer quoted a passage from one widely used text. "Equality for women in the USSR is a reality. ... They may marry or vote when they are 18." Bauer read on, looking for some explication of what is meant by a right to vote in the Soviet Union. He looked in vain.

"Soviet women have the right to vote in the same context as Soviet men — in the context of a society that gives them only hand-picked candidates of the Communist Party and no one else. This shouldn't be a hard concept for a textbook writer to understand or to explain. To fail to tell our children these facts is to seriously mislead them about the nature of the Soviet system."

Bauer compared the six textbooks on the war in Afghanistan. One volume, he said, got the story right: It said that "the Soviets invaded Afghanistan to bring that country under their complete control."

"In the other books, however, the Soviet goal was simply to shore up the government in Kabul, to fend off guerrilla attacks, or — remarkably — because 'the Soviets feared that an uprising among the Muslims of Afghanistan might spread to ... the Soviet Union.' In short, five out of six gave the impression that Moscow's move was essentially defensive or vaguely compassionate. None, it must be noted, had a word about exploding toys that maim Afghani children."

One of the textbook authors, said Bauer, seemed to have suffered from amnesia in his recollection of events that most of us well remember. The author forgot about the Ukrainian famine of 1932-33, forgot about the millions who died in the communist takeover of China, forgot about the genocide in Cambodia in 1975. Another textbook recalled that U.S. troops invaded Grenada, but the authors forgot to tell students that our forces were promptly withdrawn when the threat of a communist coup had been nullified.

Bauer examined not only the six textbooks but also a booklet published by the National Council for the Social Studies. In comparing freedoms in the United States to freedoms in Eastern Europe, the booklet says that freedom of speech, voting and due process are of prime concern here. "In Eastern European countries, economic rights such as the right to work, to form trade unions, to strike and to take vacations are considered essential." Will Lech Walesa tell us about the right to form unions and to strike in Poland?

The disturbing problem, in Bauer's view, is the air of bland neutrality. "Many textbooks reflect the views of the prominent historians and social scientists who refuse to see a difference between the United States and the Soviet Union, who refer to both nations commonly with the neutral term 'superpower,' but are unable or unwilling to make crucial distinctions about both systems of government."

Bauer emphasized that he was not asking the publishers to produce textbooks of patent indoctrination. Not at all.

"But textbooks also should not read as if they were written by neutrals in the struggle between freedom and slavery. We need to do nothing more than tell the truth — the truth about our triumphs and about our defeats, about our heroes and about our fools. And we should tell the truth about those who believe and act upon different principles — about those who see man as a creature of the state, and not as a child of God endowed with inalienable rights."

Let me say amen to all that. A textbook in American history that sugarcoated the evils of 19th-century slavery would be a poor textbook, but a text that sugarcoats the evils of contemporary communism is worse. In the war of ideas, waged at the high school level, intellectual neutrality is the unforgivable sin. It may be explained, but it cannot be condoned.

Depressing Experience

WASHINGTON — Gary Bauer, undersecretary of education, recently took some time off. He spent the better part of a week reading six textbooks in 20th century world history. All of the books, intended for high school seniors, were newly written or revised since 1983. He found it a depressing experience.

In a speech two weeks ago to the Association of American Publishers, Bauer reviewed his findings. His principal impression, though he did not define it in these words, as of a kind of intellectual anemia. Certain neutral term 'superpower,' but are unable or unwilling to make crucial distinctions about both systems of government."

Bauer emphasized that he was not asking the publishers to produce textbooks of patent indoctrination. Not at all.

"But textbooks also should not read as if they were written by neutrals in the struggle between freedom and slavery. We need to do nothing more than tell the truth — the truth about our triumphs and about our defeats, about our heroes and about our fools. And we should tell the truth about those who believe and act upon different principles — about those who see man as a creature of the state, and not as a child of God endowed with inalienable rights."

To the editor:

In light of the recent space tragedy, one can only wonder what price Americans are willing to pay in the name of exploration. After only 55 successful man-in-space missions, a civilian was "trained" to participate in space travel.

Is this a feasible plan? I think not, for such a young shuttle history. What are we endlessly searching for in space? What price are we willing to pay for scientific research? Would it not be more germane to society to invest those billions of dollars in cancer research, transplant study, AIDS treatment plans?

It seems Americans can only re-evaluate the priority of space travel. And for all those who watched Challenger disintegrate — only time can ease the devastation of human beings dying before our very eyes.

To the editor:

I cannot call myself an avid fan in any area of athletics. However, I do watch television at times to see some events. I would not want to go through the agony of defeat that I see on the faces of losing coaches. With every technique known to the mechanics of the games, it is only pure luck that puts the ball in the basket or over the line, call it what you want.

A coach must satisfy the school, the ruling body, get along with the players, the alumni, the crowds and that unknown element that seems to rule the roost. After that, he had better win the great majority of all events or he is up for removal and you can bank on that statement. Therefore, who is under greater pressure to do all that he or she can do to get the players, cater to their whims, look after them like children and even be called to help their personal situations. Everyone knows what goes in this market of corruption because coaches want the glory, their contracts fulfilled and even hopes of renewal with more money.

The news media has given Ed Emory a spread that the athletic barons are looking at very closely. I wonder how many are in this same boat? I wonder who can cast the first stone? In fact, the whole thing stinks, because the whole structure, if I have correctly observed, has functioned in this manner and most have just kept it under the cover. Exposure may tend to better the situation, but in the meantime, don't make a mountain out of a molehill with Mr. Ed Emory. I think he has tried too hard for this condemnation.

I was a pre-medical student at Duke University when the great Wallace Wade came into the football picture because New Duke could afford the best. I observed Mr. Emory for the New East Carolina University and I believe he tried just as hard

GAO Says Farm Loans Bad Risk

By JIM DRINKARD

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government agency whose loans are the last hope for 12 percent of the nation's farm borrowers is in serious jeopardy because of increased losses and the ever-shakier position of many of its borrowers, congressional investigators say.

The Farmers Home Administration, an increasingly important source of cash for farmers during agriculture's current slump, is likely to see 10 percent or more of its 270,000 borrowers fail, the General Accounting Office said Thursday.

Brian P. Crowley, a senior GAO investigator, told the Senate Agriculture Committee that the average FmHA borrower had a debt-to-asset ratio of 83 percent, a level defined as indicating "extreme financial problems."

"The financial condition of FmHA's loan portfolio and its borrowers is not a very pretty picture," Crowley said.

Twenty percent of the borrowers studied actually had ratios of more than 100 percent, meaning they owed more than they had in assets, Crowley said, but that did not stop some of them from receiving further loans from the agency.

In the first six months of 1985, the agency issued $763 million in new loans to borrowers who already were technically insolvent, the report showed. Another $1.2 billion went to farmers in extreme distress, it found.

He said 37,000 of the agency's borrowers had made no payments on their debt in at least three years, and that FmHA judged their survival chances as slim. A disproportionate share of the long-delinquent loans are in FmHA's economic disaster relief program, and the bulk of those loans are in southern states, he noted.

"In these difficult times, FmHA is faced with the dilemma of providing credit to high-risk farmers while at the same time protecting the government's, and ultimately the taxpayers', financial interests," Crowley told the panel. "The principal issue is ... where do you draw the line?"

FmHA, because it is the farm lender of last resort, always has a shakier loan portfolio than commercial lenders. Its charter stipulates that it take on primarily customers who have been turned down by other lenders, and it has 12 percent of the farm loan market. Since 1978, in a period of severe economic stress for farmers, the agency's lending has grown from $6 billion to nearly $28 billion.

But the new figures were particularly bleak, prompting committee Chairman Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to urge that the plug be pulled on hopeless cases.

"Some farmers are hopelessly burdened with debt and cannot be rescued even with our most generous programs," Helms said.

While it should do everything possible to help farmers with a chance to make it, the FmHA "also has an equally important responsibility to use the taxpayers' money in an efficient and effective manner," he said.

"The most cruel thing that can be done to a farmer is to dangle before them the false prospect that they can make it," Helms added.

Other members of the panel cautioned that sudden action to close out large numbers of loans, either through foreclosure or voluntary liquidation, could devastate already-reeling farm communities and further depress sagging land values.

Administration officials reiterated promises to exhaust all ways of restructuring loans and otherwise saving FmHA borrowers before foreclosing. Agriculture Undersecretary Frank Naylor said he expected no surge in foreclosures this year, despite tough letters that are about to go out to the most delinquent borrowers.

Vance L. Clark, the agency's administrator, said recent publicity about the agency's efforts to pare down bad loans had "mysteriously developed some cash out there" and increased the flow of loan repayments. He said only about 27,000 farmers would now get the tough letters from the agency, rather than the 37,000 the GAO cited.

CELEBRATION SOURS — A burning vehicle lighted up a street in Miami's Little Haiti section early today as a celebration by Haitian refugees turned sour. The refugees had been celebrating an unfounded report that Haitian President Jean Claude Duvalier had been unseated. During the disturbance, one person was killed and several others injured. (AP Laserphoto)

Haitians' Celebration Turns Into Riot In Miami

MIAMI (AP) — Joyous shouts turned to cries of anger and pain when a celebration of an unfounded report of the overthrow of the Haitian government turned into a riot after a car plowed into a crowd of 1,500 refugees, killing a woman and injuring two men.

In the ensuing melee, five people were bitten by police dogs, a police officer was wounded by his own gun during a scuffle, and another was hit on the head by a thrown object, said police Chief Clarence Dickson.

Police arrested four men believed to have been in the car, which tore into the crowd in reverse at high speed late Thursday, and were interrogating them today, said police spokesman Mike Stewart.

The celebration began about 8 p.m. when several hundred Haitians poured into the streets of Little Haiti after an unfounded report that the government of President-for-Life Jean-Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier had fallen.

People were "yelling very joyous shouts of happiness like 'Down with Duvalier,' honking horns and dancing in the street," said Stephen Krampf, an attorney at the Haitian Refugee Center. "There was some shooting in the air. I myself saw someone shooting in the air, about five shots."

Then the car plowed into the crowd, and the celebrating Haitians rioted. There was some looting over an eight-square-block area, but the crowd finally calmed and was dispersed, Stewart said.

"It's not a riot. They are venting their frustrations," he said at the time. "I'd call it a disturbance."

By early today only a few hundred people lingered outside the Haitian Refugee Center.

Mayor Xavier Suarez promised an investigation into both the car incident and charges of police brutality in the use of the dogs.

"Myself and my Commission will investigate," Suarez told the crowd. "That's why I'm here tonight."

In Haiti on Thursday, Duvalier ordered the international airport at Cap Haitien closed after anti-government demonstrations escalated. Six people have been killed and at least 30 injured since protests began Sunday.

The unrest in Haiti is the most sustained since the authoritarian Duvalier family regime was established in 1957. Jean-Claude Duvalier succeeded to the lifetime presidency after the death of his father, Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier in 1971.

U.S. Cutting Ties With Haiti Leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — Popular unrest against Haiti's President Jean-Claude Duvalier over the last two months could foreshadow an end to one of the world's longest ruling family dynasties, U.S. officials say.

As the protests have become more widespread, the United States has been quietly moving away from its policy of cautious friendship toward the Duvalier government.

The disturbances, which have claimed 10 lives since Nov. 28, continued Thursday. Duvalier closed the international airport in Cap Haitien, the second largest city in the Caribbean nation.

One example of the Reagan administration's distancing from Duvalier has been its decision to consider a partial cutback in U.S. assistance to Haiti under legislation linking the aid to "certification" of progress in protecting human rights.

State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said Thursday the United States informed Haitian authorities last month of its concern over the reaction of Haiti's security forces to the anti-government protests.

The Haitians were told that the administration "was unable at that time to proceed with the certification process," Kalb said.

"The situation since then has not improved and we have been giving the whole certification process close attention," he said.

By law, the administration must certify to Congress that the Haitian government is improving its human rights record before the assistance will be approved.

Two State Department officials, commenting on the intensity of the anti-Duvalier sentiment, expressed doubts as to whether the government would be able to ride out the storm.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, said the situation in Haiti is reminiscent of that in Nicaragua in the late 1970s when the authority of the Somoza government began to erode under the pressure of widespread public discontent.

The officials noted, however, that Haiti lacks a strong political tradition and there is no clear choice for a successor to Duvalier, who became president after his father, Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, died in 1971.

Arab League Reject's Libyan Bid

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — A special meeting of the Arab League rejected Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy's demand for retaliatory economic action against the United States, and instead issued a condemnation of U.S. economic and military measures against Libya.

Only eight foreign ministers from the 21 Arab League members attended what was billed as a one-day foreign ministers' meeting.

They and lower-level delegations from other Arab countries showed little enthusiasm for anything stronger than the moral support they already have given Khadafy.

President Reagan ordered economic sanctions against Libya following the Dec. 27 attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports that left 20 people dead, including five Americans and four Palestinian terrorists. The Reagan administration has charged Libya finances and trains terrorists.

The United States also has accused Libya of harboring Abu Nidal, the renegade Palestinian whom the Reagan administration and Italy blames for engineering the airport attacks.

Reagan ordered all Americans and American companies out of Libya as of Feb. 1, and froze $12 billion of Libyan assets in U.S. banks.

The U.S. Navy also is conducting maneuvers in the Mediterranean Sea off Libya. Earlier this month the league gave Libya its moral support with a proclamation condemning the U.S. sanctions.

Upon the conclusion of Thursday's meeting, the league issued a communique denouncing what it called "American threats" and expressed "total solidarity" with Libya.

Bush Warrior Fighting Curious War In Africa

By TOM BALDWIN
Associated Press Writer
JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Some call him a tool of South Africa. Others salute him as a pragmatist in Africa's blood-splattered politics.

In any event, black bush warrior Jonas Malheiro Savimbi is fighting one of the world's more curious wars. Savimbi's National Union for the Total Independence of Angola uses South African aid to attack Angola's communist government, which has close business ties with the U.S. private sector.

The Gulf Oil Corp., for instance, is half owner with the Angolan state oil company of a brimming offshore reserve in the South Atlantic.

The dizzying links took another twist Thursday when Savimbi held a fireside chat at the White House with President Reagan, who has ordered economic sanctions against Savimbi's benefactor, South Africa, to force changes in apartheid.

To be whisked around Washington as a VIP is not typical for Savimbi, who has spent 28 of his 51 years as a guerrilla and lives in a hut deep in the Angolan wilderness, where elephants abound. Often, his morning tea is warmed over an open fire.

The son of a railroad station master, Savimbi first fought against Angola's Portuguese colonizers. After Portugal abandoned its southern African colony in the mid-1970s, Swiss-educated Savimbi took on the Marxist government of President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, who is backed by an estimated 25,000 Cuban soldiers and personnel from the Soviet Union and other East-bloc nations.

Savimbi's opposition to dos Santos is not all ideological. The guerrilla leader is angry at being left out of the Angolan power structure. He also simmers at seeing Angola virtually managed by foreigners — mostly Cubans and Soviets. At rallies, under towering portraits of late African nationalists such as Egypt's Gamal Abdel Nasser and Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, Savimbi attacks the Soviet Union and Cuba for allegedly occupying his country. He has yet to attack their political systems.

Still, he encourages free enterprise in villages that he controls.

One evening, under a flaming African sunset, a visitor watched as a lathe operator in a guerrilla munitions plant — actually a grass-roofed hut with a mud floor — turned at quitting time from making artillery shells to fashioning ivory candlesticks.

"We're capitalists," said the machine operator. "You want to buy?"

Savimbi and his aides have acknowledged receiving backing from China, Saudi Arabia, Morocco, Senegal and Ivory Coast, with shadowy mention of good will coming from Western nations opposed to communism. The United States is always whispered as being among Savimbi's supporters.

But no aid is as visible as that given by South Africa.

Savimbi's trucks roll on South African-made tires, carting mortars that fire rounds turned out from South African molds.

The truck driver and gun crew smoke South African cigarettes. If they take casualties, the wounded might be evacuated by a South African helicopter. At mission's end, they sip Castles, the brand of beer enjoyed on hot Saturday afternoons by rugby fans in Johannesburg.

Discipline is tight at Savimbi's base camp in far southeastern Angola, located at the trail crossing of Jamba, which is unmarked on most maps.

From there, Savimbi often joins UNITA units in hit-and-run attacks on government-controlled towns. Savimbi says they operates in three-quarters of the Alaska-size nation, but control only the mostly unpopulated southeastern quarter.

"We strike and force damage. We don't always try to control," he told The Associated Press at Jamba in September.

Under fire, his men demonstrate precision.

"The Cuban jets will be here in 30 minutes," said a UNITA man hammering a government village with a heavy machine gun from an exposed hill. The gunner played his weapon across the target for another 25 minutes, then ran.

The jets then appeared, actually Angolan but said by the rebels to be piloted by Cubans. They pulverized the machine-gunner's former position — but three minutes too late.

Savimbi's tactics can shock. His intelligence officer, Wambu Kasigu, has told the AP that UNITA shot down an Angolan Airlines Boeing 737 on Nov. 8, 1983, because "the enemy uses the planes to transport soldiers."

Savimbi also holds people for ransom, in a process that has become a ritual.

UNITA fighters storm an isolated village. They take prisoners, who always seem to be foreigners, usually whites. They are eventually set free.

Two years ago, Savimbi refused to release Britons until Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher sent a diplomat to Jamba. UNITA said this awarded them recognition.

Savimbi did the same thing to Czechoslovakia a few months later when he captured five workers from the Soviet bloc country.

Asked last year by a reporter why a black African nationalist would receive guests with South African wine, Savimbi roared a reply.

"The Portuguese used to say I was a Marxist radical," he said. "Now people refer to me as a friend of South Africa. I am an Angolan. South Africa is the power in the region. I want the Cubans and the Russians out of my country. South Africa wants them out of the region. Our interests come together on this."

Military Might

The Gramm-Rudman law may force reductions in military spending. This could actually improve the economy. A study of major capitalist nations found that, over a 20-year period, the U.S. and Great Britain spent the largest share of GNP on the military and had the slowest rate of productivity growth. Japan and Denmark — countries that depend on U.S. and NATO forces for their defense — spent the smallest percentage on the military and had the highest rates of growth.

Heart Pump

HOUSTON (AP) — A 47-year-old man awaiting a heart transplant received a newly developed implant that will help his heart supply oxygen-rich blood to his body, doctors said.

Doctors at Texas Heart Institute implanted the left ventricular assist developed by Thermedics Inc. of Woburn, Mass., on Tuesday, the first use of the device in a human. Cardiologist Edward Massin said the patient has had several heart attacks. Doctors twice inserted a balloon pump in the aorta, but the patient continued to do poorly, Massin said.

Dr. Bud Frazier, chief of the institute's heart transplant division, said a Jarvik-7 artificial heart would not have fit into the patient, whose name was not released.

Panel Upsets Zallen

Harold Zallen, Republican candidate for the 9th District North Carolina House seat, said in a prepared statement today that he is "most disappointed" that House members from Pitt and Greene Counties were not named to a special fact-finding subcommittee on agriculture.

Zallen referred to a panel named by House Speaker Liston Ramsey.

"Surely, Pitt County, the world's largest producer of flue-cured tobacco, as well as many other farm commodities, and Greene County, an area highly dependent upon agriculture as its economic base, are worthy of representation when the production, distribution and marketing of North Carolina farm products are studied," Zallen said.

"It seems to me that members of the General Assembly from Pitt and Greene counties should have the clout to be selected when the subcommittee was first formed, and be fighting and scratching today to get on the subcommittee in order to serve the needs of the citizens of the 9th House District."

The 9th District, which includes all of Greene County and all of Pitt County but Bethel and Carolina Townships, is represented by Democrat incumbents Ed Warren of Greenville and Walter Jones Jr. of Farmville.

Fisherman Speaks Against Full-Scale Mining Of Peat

BY DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

North Carolina's commercial fishing industry will collapse if peat mining companies are supplied permits allowing them to initiate full-scale mining operations along the state's east coast, a commercial fisherman says.

"Peat mining is an abomination," said Willie Phillips of Bath. "It is a shot in the head to the commercial fishing industry."

Phillips was among several commercial and sport fishermen to speak Thursday night at a public meeting of the North Carolina Marine Fisheries Commission at the Greenville Sheraton Hotel.

"If peat mining is allowed, it will stop a whole industry," Phillips said.

B.J. Copeland, chairman of the Marine Fisheries Water Quality and Habitat Committee, said nothing has been decided on the peat mining issue.

"No actions have been taken, and right now, we're just learning what questions we should be asking," Copeland said.

Phillips also called for the MFC to make a stronger effort to increase the amount of nurseries and to clear up jurisdiction conflicts near the nurseries.

"About 4 percent of the east North Carolina coastal water is devoted to nurseries," he said. "There has been little or no effort to establish more for the future."

"We've come to the point where we will be in need of nurseries," Phillips said. "Basically, we're asking for the development of the commercial fishing industry through the capacity to produce."

Ed McCoy, acting director of the MFC, and Cashwell B. Caroon, vice chairman of the commission, said they are acquainted with the problem.

"We're very much aware of the nursing problem, and we're moving in a direction to deal with it," McCoy said.

"Our number one priority is the nursing area and water quality," Caroon said. "But it takes time because we're fighting against politics and money."

Clifton Moss, vice president of the Carteret County Sports Fishing Association, called for the commission to pay attention to the needs of the sport fisherman.

"It's just like Rodney Dangerfield. Sport fisherman don't get any respect," Moss said. "The Marine Fisheries Division should pay more attention to sport fishermen."

Caroon said the Marine Fisheries Commission plans to hold public meetings at all of its business meetings.

"The hearing gives area fishermen the opportunity to tell us their problems or just to come here and blow off some steam," he said.

Fisheries Panel Wants Member On Atlantic Marine Commission

BY DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

The North Carolina Marine Fisheries has agreed to recommend to Gov. Jim Martin that a member of the panel be included on the state's three-member board to the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission.

The decision was made at today's business session of the commission's two-day meeting at the Sheraton Hotel in Greenville.

"This is something we'd like to see taken care of," said Dr. John Costlow, chairman of the Marine Fisheries Commission. Other members of the commission supported the move unanimously.

"The ASMFC plans regulations this commission will be dealing with and it is very appropriate and desirable to have that connection for communication purposes," said Ed McCoy of the Marine Fisheries Commission.

MFC attorney Dan McLawhorn reviewed the proposed regulatory cycle under the New Administrative Procedures Act for the members of the commission. "The full understanding of the new rules will aid this panel in its deliberations," Costlow said.

Under the cycle, the MFC formulates and approves regulations for public hearings while the Division of Marine Fisheries prepare a rule summary and fiscal note.

They submit the rule summary and fiscal note to the Director of the State Budget.

Upon approval, the commission must publish a notice of the proposed regulation, the date of the public hearing and dates for public comment submission. It must be an open record for at least 30 days to receive written comments.

At least 30 days after notice, the commission must hold a public hearing.

The commission can close the record to public comment 10 days after the public hearing. At that time, the Division of Marine Fisheries summarizes the hearing and written comments are sent to the Marine Fisheries Commission.

At least 60 days after notice, the MFC is allowed to act on the proposed rule.

The MFC is required to file the rule with the office of the governor and subject the rule to a hearing by the Office of Administration. The chief of the OAH returns the rule in its official form, and the rule becomes effective on the first day of the second month after the filing with the OAH.

The process takes between 100 and 130 days.

The business meeting was the final gathering of the commission which started its meeting Thursday morning.

"Here today, we're only approving things to submit for public input," said Mike Orbach of the MFC's Commercial Fishing Management Commission. "Everything then will depend on public input."

"Basically, we're just deciding what we'll give to the public to get their comments," he said.

Rogers Seeking Seat In House

WILLIAMSTON — Former Martin County school superintendent and Bear Grass native R. Eugene Rogers filed Wednesday for the Democratic nomination for the District 6 seat, which includes Bethel and Carolina townships in Pitt County, in the North Carolina House of Representatives.

R. EUGENE ROGERS

The seat is now held by L.M. "Mutt" Brinkley of Ahoskie. District 6 also covers seven Martin County precincts, three in Hertford and more than half of Bertie County.

"I am running for the position and not running against anyone or anything," Rogers said. "I feel I have the time and some resources to direct toward that goal or job."

Rogers said he was interested in U.S. 64 and 17 highways, as "the road situation is extremely important for the northeastern part of the state."

The candidate attended Martin County schools and received his graduate degree in education from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Rogers is married to the former Jean Griffin and has three children, Jeanie Glasgow of Montgomery, Ala., Laurie Rogers of Greenville and Richard Rogers of Kill Devil Hills.

He is also a member and deacon of Memorial Baptist Church of Williamston and is active in the Kiwanis Club. Rogers also served for three years in the Coast Guard during the Korean War.

military escort, rode through the streets of the capital city at about 9 a.m.

Mobs were seen running through the downtown area with police firing shots over their head. Rioters were putting up barricades of tires and other material on several streets.

Government offices and most businesses were reported shut down, and disorderly crowds packed the few open supermarkets.

A mob was gathering near an auto agency run by Ernest Bennett, who is the president's father in law.

A state of siege was declared at 7 a.m. in a communique, signed by Duvalier and read over national television and radio. It followed the most sustained anti-government protests in Haiti since the Duvalier dynasty was established in 1957.

Jean-Claude, also known as "Baby Doc," assumed the presidency upon the death of his father, Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier, in 1971.

Six people have been reported killed and at least 30 people injured since anti-Duvalier demonstrations began Sunday in Cap Haitien, Haiti's second-largest city of 60,000 people on the north coast.

Maggie Steber, a freelance photographer in Cap Haitien, said the army called a curfew there this morning and used clubs and tear gas to get people off the streets.

"I saw several incidents of the army hitting people with clubs to get them inside," she said in a telephone call to The Associated Press in New York.

In the neighboring Dominican Republic, President Salvador Jorge Blanco announced today that he had closed the border between the two countries and had reinforced military forces there.

"The events of recent days in Haiti has required us to take every measure to suspend all traffic between Haiti and the Dominican Republic along the border and to reinforce our military strength," he said in a news conference at his office at the national palace.

Duvalier's state-of-seige communique also ordered three radio stations to go off the air including Radio Soleil, a Roman Catholic Church station that broadcasts in Creole and is one of the few stations that can be heard in most parts of the Maryland-sized nation.

It has been closed several times before for reporting on anti-government demonstrations. The two other stations closed were identified as Radio Lumiere, a Protestant-run station that has also reported on the demonstrations, and Radio Cacique, an independent station.

On Thursday, witnesses reported looting in four towns as anti-government unrest increased, and diplomatic sources said three people were trampled to death by a mob sacking a CARE food warehouse in Cap Haitien. On Monday, a tailor and two children died when security forces fired on demonstrators.

Witnesses said demonstrators in Cap Haitien Thursday toppled a "Papa Doc" statue as the crowd cheered. Witnesses also reported looting in the towns of Gonaives, Les Cayes and Jeremie, with mobs breaking into facilities stocked with food or medical supplies.

The deaths in Cap Haitien brought to at least 10 the number of deaths reported nationwide since sporadic disturbances began on Nov. 28, when security forces opened fire on demonstrators in Gonaives, killing three students.

A communique from Duvalier ordered Cap Haitien's airport closed Thursday until further notice, but gave no reason for the action.

On Tuesday, the State Department advised U.S. citizens in Haiti not to travel to Cap Haitien and urged checking with the embassy before journeying outside the capital.

Jeffrey Lite, a U.S. Information Service officer in Port-au-Prince, said he didn't know the exact number of Americans in Cap Haitien, but he said it was "only a handful," mostly tourists.

Roskens, president of the University of Nebraska system.

Friday, 65, announced plans in late 1984 to retire by July after 30 years as president of the 16-campus system. The formal search for his successor began in January 1985 with the naming of the committee. He said he would step down earlier should a replacement be chosen.

The search process has been shrouded in secrecy, and members of the committee have refused to discuss the matter. Carson has been the sole spokesman for the committee.

Friday said he had asked that since the North Carolina Press Association was meeting in Chapel Hill, the board of governors would hold a news conference to announce any action it took.

Since Friday announced his impending retirement, the search committee has reviewed more than 100 applications for the president's post.

Friday became the first president of the university system in 1956. During the past 30 years, the university system has grown from three campuses to 16 campuses.

Spangler was appointed by Gov. Jim Hunt in 1982 to head the state board of education. Among his priorities have been a career ladder incentive program for teachers, a Basic Education Program to raise minimum education levels throughout the state and a longer school day and year.

Spangler was co-chairman of Hunt's Task Force on Education and Economic Growth, which laid the groundwork for the Basic Education Program, higher salaries for teachers and other recent education initiatives.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices edged upward today as interest rates declined in the credit markets.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 3.67 to 1,555.85 in the first hour of trading.

Gainers held a modest lead over losers in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

In credit-market activity, prices of long-term government bonds, which move in the opposite direction from interest rates, showed gains approaching $5 for every $1,000 in face value.

Cigna fell 1 to 64 3/4 on top of a 4 1/2-point drop Thursday, when the company said it would take a charge of $1.2 billion against its fourth-quarter earnings as a result of an addition to its property and casualty reserves.

He and his wife Myrtle have three children.

Leslie was introduced by Dean William Laupus of the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Attorney Phil Dixon was named outstanding volunteer of the chamber for 1985.

Frank Lawrence, vice president of First Federal, was presented a lifetime membership to the chamber in appreciation for his selling over $2,000 in chamber investments in 1985.

The 1985 annual report was given by Ray Boleman, 1985 chairman of the board, who cited such chamber achievements as Expo '85, the county's first trade show, and Tar Riverfest, Greenville's first community festival.

Boleman said the chamber has over 1,000 members, and over 700 business and professional people in Pitt County volunteered for chamber committees and programs during 1985.

Boleman was presented a plaque and scrapbook by incoming chairman John McConney.

In his chairman's message, McConney said the chamber must prepare for a "rate of change that is going to accelerate ... and be impossible to forecast."

"We need to anticipate the future and plan for it as best we can ... What we have to do as a chamber is stick to basic principles," McConney told the 350 people attending the meeting.

Certificates of appreciation were presented to retiring board members, vice chairmen and committee and task force chairmen.

Charles R. Blake, annual meeting chairman, presided over the meeting, and entertainment was provided by Julie Palmer, visiting artist at Pitt Community College.

Pirates Face American Teams

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina University's men's basketball team takes to the road this weekend with the opportunity to do something no Pirate team has done since joining the Colonial Athletic Association — win three league games in a row.

The Pirates, having won their last two outings in the conference, are currently tied with George Mason for third place in the CAA with 4-3 records.

Saturday night, they visit American University in Washington, and then travel on to Annapolis, Md., on Monday to meet Navy.

They close out the road trip with a visit to Wake Forest for a non-conference game next Wednesday.

Meanwhile, East Carolina's Lady Pirates will be trying to get back on the winning side of the board as they host American on Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Minges Coliseum.

Only twice before back-to-back wins over George Mason and James Madison this past weekend, have the Pirates won two straight in conference play. Against American they have a chance to win a third straight — something the Pirates haven't done since joining what was the then ECAC-South, now the Colonial.

But that's not what Coach Charlie Harrison is thinking about. Naturally, he wants to win, but he's thinking more of the dogfight going on between several teams for an upper bracket finish — and a first round tournament home berth.

Harrison is not looking for anything different from American, which the Pirates beat 70-62 in their first league game of the year in early January in Minges. "They've been on the road a great deal, and I'm sure that they're glad to be at home. It's hard to say if they've improved (since the first meeting). They've played up and down and from watching their game with Notre Dame, they've put in a few new wrinkles. They're very quick and are similar to us in that they don't have a dominant big man."

The Eagles are led by sharp-shooting guard Frank Ross, averaging 23.0 points a game. The only other starter in double figures is forward Chuck West, hitting 12.5 per game.

Other starters include guard Mike Sampson, 7.3; forward Eric White, 9.4, and center Henry Hopkins, 5.1. White is the leading rebounder with a 7.0 average.

"We've improved in a lot of ways," Harrison said of his Pirates. "But playing on the road and in that place (the Fort Meyers gym) is difficult. We can't let that place bother us. We just have to go out and play and not let the little things bother us. Just do what has to be done."

American is 7-11 overall and 1-6 in CAA play.

After Saturday night comes the Monday meeting with Navy, the pre-season favorite in the CAA and the defending champion. Navy earlier beat the Pirates, 67-62, at Greenville, but only after pulling away late after a Pirate rally had closed to within two points.

Navy, of course, is led by All-America candidate David Robinson at center. Robinson is averaging 21.8 points and 12.8 rebounds. He also leads the nation in blocked shots with 114.

Joining him in the starting lineup are forwards Vernon Butler, scoring 16.7 and rebounding at 8.5 and Nate Bailey, scoring at 5.3 per game. The guards are Kaylor Whitaker, 12.2, and Doug Wojick, 5.6.

Navy brings in a 6-1 league record and is 15-4 overall. All four losses have come against ranked teams — Georgia Tech, Syracuse, St. John's, and Richmond.

"Halsey Pavilion is a tough place to play even when they don't have a big man like Robinson," Harrison said. "They're good. They've got everyone back from last year's team and they're getting more out of their bench now, too."

Harrison said that the road is never easy. "You just have to play 'em one at a time and not let the fact that you're on the road bother you."

East Carolina, 8-9 overall, is expected to start Marchell Henry (14.4) and Keith Sledge (6.6) at the forwards, Leon Bass (8.8) at center, and Curt Vanderhorst (11.4) and Scott Hardy (4.9 ppg and 3.5 assists) at the guards.

The Lady Pirates, who lost their last outing at James Madison, will be out to get back on the winning side against American, which they beat earlier this year, 77-73.

The Lady Eagles are led by forward Kelly Lane, hitting 17.3 points a game. She is the leading scorer in the CAA, and was back-to-back Player of the Week in the CAA in December. She also leads the league in field goal percentage at 58.5.

"We have to stop her," Coach Emily Manwaring said. "She scored 21 points and grabbed 13 rebounds in the first game. We are going to have to go to the boards, too. Lately we've been totally dominated by the other teams on the boards. We've just been spectating. No one is even trying to go inside."

Other starters for the Eagles include forward Beth Shearer, averaging 12.1 points a game, guard Jody Thornton, 11.1, guard Dana Diller, 7.2 and center Kia Cooper, 8.4.

Thornton is the conference assist leader at 7.3 and is tied with ECU's Delphine Mabry for the leadership in steals with 2.6 per game. American averages 73.7 points a game, best in the league, and they also head the list in free throw shooting at 71.7 percent.

ECU's Lisa Squirewell is sixth in the league in scoring at 13.9 and fifth in the conference in rebounding with an 8.1 average. Sylvia Bragg is third in assists with 4.1.

Squirewell could become the third ECU basketball player this year to reach the 1,000 point level for her career. She currently has 986 points leaving her 14 away. The other two were teammate Sylvia Bragg and men's player Curt Vanderhorst. Both of those reached the plateau while on the road.

"We have to make something good happen now," Manwaring said. "We have to start now so that when the tournament comes around, we'll know what to expect from everyone."

Manwaring said the Lady Pirates should be healthier than last weekend. Starter Loraine Foster, who did not make the trip to Mason and Madison, is expected to be ready to go, as will reserve Monique Pompili, who saw only limited action due to a fractured tailbone.

American comes into the game with a 13-5 overall record and a 3-3 CAA mark.

Cavaliers Upset Heels, 86-73

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — North Carolina's undefeated and top-ranked Tar Heels made Virginia face the music, but in the end, it was the Cavaliers who came away singing.

"Certainly our team had a chance to fold. We didn't. We took control of the game down the stretch," Virginia Coach Terry Holland said Thursday night after the Cavaliers ended North Carolina's chances for an unbeaten season with an 86-73 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over the Tar Heels.

"I'm extremely pleased with the play of everyone," Holland said, "and I can't imagine us playing much better for 40 minutes."

After building a 13-point halftime lead, Virginia went scoreless for the first six minutes after intermission. Meanwhile, North Carolina cut the gap to 49-44, but Virginia took control once again and cruised to victory.

Holland said he anticipated a let-down after halftime.

"If you're ahead like that, it's easy to lose your aggressiveness," Holland said. "But we went hard to the ball, turned and looked for the open man and attacked their pressure."

The Cavaliers, moving to 14-5 overall and 4-3 in the ACC, broke a seven-game losing streak against the Tar Heels dating to 1982. Ralph Sampson's junior season. Virginia placed six players in double figures and held a 44-31 edge in rebounding, including 21 offensive boards.

"I know they had 14 points on offensive rebounds in the first half, and they went hard to the boards the whole game," said North Carolina Coach Dean Smith, whose team dropped to 21-1 and 5-1 in the conference. "Terry had them well-prepared and they were waiting for us. Maybe we weren't ready for them. Or maybe we were prepared and they just beat us."

Smith said Virginia's aggressive style of play also made it difficult for the Tar Heels to run against the Cavaliers.

"The fast break doesn't work as well when you take it out under the basket," Smith said. "We tried to play up to our standards and our standards are not to give up the second shot. Even if we had come back and won, it wouldn't have been up to our standards."

Except for a 2-2 tie in the first minute, Virginia led the entire game. The Cavaliers used an 11-4 run midway through the first half to open up a 27-17 advantage.

North Carolina closed the gap to 27-20 on a Brad Daugherty free throw before an 8-2 Virginia spurt, capped by a Tom Calloway tip-in, provided the Cavaliers a 35-22 spread with 5:47 remaining in the half. Virginia led 45-32 at intermission.

Joe Wolf's baseline jumper with 15:06 to play narrowed Virginia's lead to 49-44.

After Virginia pushed its advantage to 58-48 on a Richard Morgan jumper with 11:18 remaining, North Carolina used a Kenny Smith jumper and a pair of Steve Hale free throws to close to 58-52 at the 10:02 mark. But that was as close as the Tar Heels would get.

Virginia outscored North Carolina 12-4 over the next 6½ minutes to open up a 70-56 bulge with 3:34 remaining.

Dickens Helps Deacon Program

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

WINSTON-SALEM — When Alan Dickens finished his high school career at Rose High School in Greenville two years ago, he probably thought that his basketball days were over except for some pickup games and intramurals.

The recipient of a George Foster Hanks scholarship to Wake Forest University, Dickens was not approached by any major schools to play college basketball.

But two years later, having kept in shape with intramurals and pickups, Dickens has found himself a member of the struggling Demon Deacons and finding playing time at that.

The 6-8, 209-pound junior is a chemistry major carrying a 3.8 grade point average. He plans to seek a medical career.

"At the beginning of the year, I wrestled with the idea of walking on," he said in a telephone interview Thursday. "But (the team) seemed to have all bases covered, so I decided against it."

But the Deacons lost two players through injuries and another chose to leave school over the Christmas break, leaving them quite short handed.

"My roommate, Greg Watson, is a student trainer with the team, and he was approached by the head trainer, who had been approached by Coach (Bob) Staak and Mark Cline, a good friend of mine, about me helping out. I felt that if I could come in and at least help them in practice, it would help the team." The team at the time, didn't have ten players so it couldn't even scrimmage.

Dickens was invited to meet with Coach Staak and was then told to report ready to practice 20 minutes later. "After I worked out, Coach Staak came over and shook my hand and told me I was on the team," Dickens said.

Two days later, the Deacons played Virginia and Dickens was the first sub off the bench. Last Monday, against Maryland, Dickens played 19 minutes — fifth among the Deacons that night. He's played a total of 43 minutes in three games and scored four points, both baskets coming off rebounds. He's pulled five of them, three against Maryland as his contributions rise.

"I've been really fortunate," Dickens said. "I played intramurals the first two years here and was able to keep in shape doing that. Ironically, I had a toe problem over Christmas and was not in my best shape when I came out for the team. But I'm getting there now."

This year, Dickens earned a Carswell Scholarship from the university, one of the more prestigious academic grants. That replaced the Hanks grant, both partial scholarships.

As to his future with the Deacons, it seems certain he'll be with them the rest of this year. "I really haven't thought about the future," Dickens said. "I'm just trying to keep up with my studies and learn the plays right now."

Nevertheless, Dickens will probably see a good deal of action as the season winds down — including a meeting with home town East Carolina University's Pirates this coming Wednesday in Winston-

Salem. "I'm looking forward to that," he said.

Aurora Nips Bears, 53-52

AURORA — Miles Smith scored with two seconds left to prove Aurora with the winning basket in a 53-52 Tobacco Belt basketball win over Bear Grass last night.

Aurora's girls made it a sweep with a 37-28 victory over the Lady Bears. Aurora's boys took an 11-7 lead in the opening quarter and outscored the Bears, 15-12 in the second. That gave Aurora a 26-19 halftime lead.

But the Bears put on a 17-9 rally in the third period, pushing into a slim 36-35 lead. It stayed close right to the end when Smith hit the game-winner.

Smith finished with 14 points while Ricky Smith was high for Aurora with 16. Darryl Brown led Bear Grass with 19 while Terry Brown had 15 and Brian Coltrain had 11.

Aurora's girls led 6-3 after one period and held that margin at the half, 13-10. In the third period, Aurora added two more to its lead, taking a 24-19 lead into the final quarter. In that, Aurora outthit the Lady Bears, 13-9, to take the win. Michelle Grimes led Aurora with ten points while no one scored in double figures for the Bears.

Bear Grass travels to Jamesville tonight.

Name May Be New But Weather's Same

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The golf tournament has a new name — the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am — but the same old weather, Crosby weather.

"We had it all: wind, rain, cold," Peter Jacobsen said.

Those conditions, familiar for the Monterey Peninsula, were dubbed Crosby Weather during the 40-plus years that Bing Crosby's name was associated with this old event.

The change of the tournament title

— Bing's widow, Kathryn, refused to have the Crosby name associated with a commercial sponsor — did nothing to temper the conditions that have become associated with this tournament.

If anything, it was a little worse than usual.

To start with, there was a one-hour delay because of flooded courses. Then there was the rest of it, particularly the wind.

North-South reached a reasonable three no trump contract after an uncomplicated auction. Since all North's points were prime, his hand was actually worth more than the 13 it counted. Unfortunately, South did not use his assets to best advantage.

West led the king of diamonds, then continued with the queen and nine when declarer held up the ace for two rounds. Since this defense marked West with the J-10 of diamonds, his nine had to be a suit preference signal, showing a possible entry in the lower-ranking suit.

Avian Flu

RALEIGH (AP) — The N.C. Board of Agriculture has adopted emergency rules limiting importation of live poultry or eggs from areas in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts where outbreaks of the deadly avian influenza have been reported.

The strain of avian influenza reported in the two states was responsible for deaths of almost 16 million birds at a cost of $63 million in 1983 in Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland and New Jersey, officials said in a news release.

The new rules restrict the importation of live poultry or eggs from the two states into North Carolina unless stringent testing and sanitation measures are met, officials said.

Greenville was named in honor of General Nathaniel Greene, hero of the Battle of Guilford Courthouse.

Eastwood Enters Race

CARMEL, Calif. (AP) — Actor Clint Eastwood, who has made a career of playing hard-bitten heroes not afraid to take the law into their own hands, is hoping to take a stab at the role of small-town mayor.

Eastwood, 55, filed papers on Thursday to run for mayor of Carmel, a picturesque city on the Monterey Peninsula that he has called home for 14 years.

"Our village faces some fundamental problems which are not being solved by our current mayor and city council," he wrote in a candidate's statement that was part of his filing. He also submitted a nomination paper signed by 20 Carmel residents.

"I'd like to get away from the negative attitude of this council regime," the tough-guy actor told the Monterey Herald at City Hall.

Eastwood said he prefers diplomacy as a means of solving problems and labeled the current council and mayor Charlotte Townsend "litigious."

If he is victorious in the April 8 election, Eastwood said he would cut back on activities with his motion picture company, Malpas Productions.

Actor Lee Says 'Kung Fu' Will Be His Last Movie

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Brandon Lee says he is more interested in "Hamlet" than following his late father, Bruce Lee, into martial arts movies.

Lee stars with David Carradine in "Kung Fu: The Movie," but he said he hopes the first time he will play a martial arts expert is also his last.

"I want to do many other parts," said the 20-year-old Lee. "I don't want to be stuck doing martial arts parts or just Chinese parts. I want to do all kinds of things. I don't want to be seen as Bruce Lee's son and nothing more."

Carradine reprises his role as Caine, a Shaolin priest who roves the Old West. The time is 20 years after the end of the series, which ran on ABC from 1972-75. In the movie, which CBS will broadcast Saturday, a Manchurian with a death warrant for Caine comes from China, accompanied by a young martial arts expert named Chung Wang (Lee). Although his life is in danger, Caine exposes an opium-smuggling plot.

Lee was working as a "gofer" for a production company when he had a chance meeting with casting director Lynn Stallmaster, who was trying to cast the part of the Chung Wang. Lee auditioned four times before he was accepted.

"I was well-prepared for the part," said Lee. "I've been doing martial arts all my life."

He is an expert in Yee Chuan Tao, which he said is "a study of my body as well as my mind. I think of picking up this glass. I'm cognizant of the way you're sitting and of any moves you may make. It's not a series of moves. A movement is meaningless if it doesn't have a spiritual meaning behind it."

"It's the same with acting. You can fake anger by grimaces, but it has no emotion behind it. Martial arts is a creative medium just as acting is a creative medium. It helps me with my movements which helps me as a person which helps me as an actor."

Lee also studied acting with the late trainer Lee Strasberg and at Boston's Emerson College. He considers New York acting coach Eric Morris his mentor. He studied martial arts with his father but stopped when his father died. Later, he resumed studying with Danny Inasonto, a senior student of Bruce Lee's.

"I do all of the martial arts you see me doing in the movie," Lee said.

"And in my mind they're all realistic. I didn't use any springboards or trampolines. But I am an actor first and a martial arts artist second, and it all has to fit the period. There'd be moves more prevalent than now. I would use those moves because I'm an actor, not someone trying to show off his martial arts skill."

"And if I were asked to play a 13th-century Taoist monk I'd research how a monk was trained so I could play it properly and not as a 20th-century 20-year-old kid."

The 6-foot Lee is considerably taller than his father, who died in 1973 at the peak of his popularity. Bruce Lee had little success in Hollywood but in Hong Kong he became a legend in the "chop socky" movies.

"I get a lot of calls to make movies in Hong Kong," he said. "I'm going there in February to talk to some people. I'm adverse to making Kung Fu movies. But there are other films to be made. My aim is to work in America, but I wouldn't mind having a foot in Hong Kong."

Botha Proposes Negotiated Release Of Nelson Mandela

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha offered today to negotiate the release of black guerrilla leader Nelson Mandela in return for the freedom of Soviet dissidents Andrei Sakharov and Anatoly Shcharansky, and a South African commando captured in Angola.

Botha also said in a speech opening a session of Parliament that his white-led government will enact laws this year to extend black citizenship and property rights, and to involve black communities in decision-making.

In a last-minute addition to his speech, Botha said he was prepared to consider the release of Mandela, former leader of African National Congress guerrillas, on humanitarian grounds. Mandela, 67, was sentenced to life in prison in 1964 for plotting sabotage but remains a symbol of the black campaign against apartheid.

The South African commando is Capt. Wynand du Toit, captured last May in a failed commando raid in the oil-producing province of Cabinda.

Botha did not indicate conditions for Mandela's release except to repeat that previous offers to free him have included the condition that he reject violence. Botha also did not specify whether Mandela would have to leave South Africa as part of any deal.

"If I were to release Mr. Nelson Mandela on humanitarian grounds, could Capt. Wynand du Toit, Andrei Sakharov and Anatoly Shcharansky, not also be released on humanitarian grounds?" Botha said. "A positive response to this question could certainly form the basis of negotiations and property rights, and to involve black communities in decision-making.

Botha restated the government's broad commitment to reform apartheid, its system of racial segregation, which he described as "outdated."

He appeared to go farther than previously toward meeting opposition demands for specific legislative timetable for change. But the president, in an 18-page speech, broke little new ground in proposing specific measures.

Botha said the government soon will prepare legislation to modify "influx control" laws that tie millions of blacks to impoverished homelands and prevent them from seeking jobs and housing near white cities.

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY, FEB. 1, 1986

YOUR DAILY Horoscope from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The daytime is fine for investigating and looking into new plans of action whereby you can formulate a campaign to gain your most ambitious undertakings.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) A good day for keeping any promises or commitments you have undertaken, but keep out of a possible quarrel with your mate.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Convince a valuable partner to go along with some fine plan you have in mind. You can accomplish a great deal in public life.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Persevere in whatever project you have started during the daytime and get fine results. Get into worthwhile and long-time aims.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Plan the amusements you like with friends, but don't be extravagant in the evening. Then off to pleasures.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Study problems at home and know how to best solve them wisely. Not a good day to have guests in.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) A good day to research data you have needed for some time, and it will fit nicely into your scheme of things.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) You have expensive tastes, so find an added source of income so that you can better afford them.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You have ingenuity and can gain your wishes to yourself very wisely. Use positive methods and gain your aims tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) You are better aware of what you can do to realize your hopes and dreams, so plan the future wisely.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Look to a good friend for assistance in gaining a desired wish, which has long been difficult to attain.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Work on your greatest aims during the daytime and become more successful. The evening is not good for gadding about.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) You get fine ideas for your betterment, so write them down so that you won't forget them later.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be capable of planning a course that will be successful for a long period of time. One who will be very thorough and analytical of all details and will never act hastily about anything. One who will not be easily deterred in gaining own goals.

Sailor Convicted In Death

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — A black sailor who fatally stabbed a white officer while at sea has been convicted of premeditated murder, and a jury will now try to decide if he should be the first person executed by the Navy in 137 years.

A prosecutor said after Thursday's verdict that he would begin presenting evidence today to show there were aggravating circumstances in Petty Officer Mitchell T. Garraway Jr.'s attack on Lt. James K. Sterner.

The Navy must prove such circumstances existed before capital punishment could be imposed.

The eight-member military jury deliberated nearly four hours before finding Garraway guilty of plotting the attack on Sterner aboard the frigate USS Miller on June 16, 1985, while it was off the Bermuda coast.

Garraway, 21, of Suitland, Md., showed no reaction when the verdict was announced in the Newport Naval Base courtroom.

The Navy last carried out the death penalty in 1849, when two men were hanged for attacking an officer and throwing him overboard so they could join the California gold rush.

The officer survived, and the men were charged with mutiny and desertion with intent to kill, among other charges.

Navy courts-martial have sentenced others to die since that case, most recently in 1960, but those sentences were ultimately reduced, military authorities say.

The defense and prosecution have said the key motive was Garraway's belief that Sterner had unfairly blocked his promotion. The defense contended it stemmed from Garraway thinking Sterner was a racist, and his oversensitivity to real or perceived racial tension aboard ship.

Garraway had pleaded guilty to unpremeditated murder, which carries a maximum sentence of life imprisonment, but the Navy decided to try for a premeditated-murder conviction, punishable by either a life sentence or execution by a method chosen by Navy Secretary John Lehman.

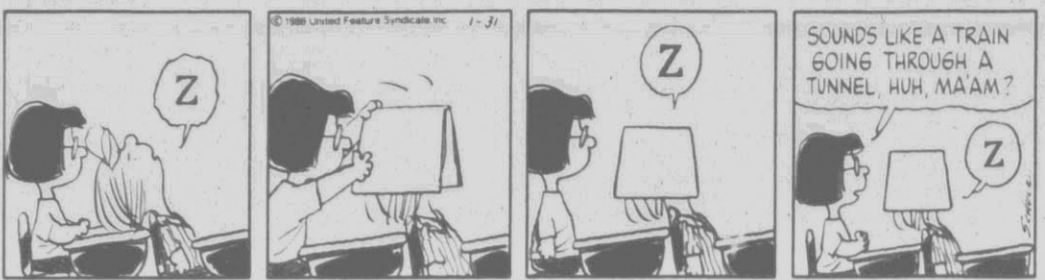

Defense attorney Trevor L. Brooks said he would present up to 10 witnesses, including Garraway, to show that mitigating circumstances make the death penalty unwarranted.

A unanimous vote would be needed to impose the death penalty. Only six of the eight jurors were needed for the guilty verdict, but whether there was dissent will not be known until Navy Judge John A. Studer rules on a defense request to poll the jury. The panel was evenly split between officers and enlisted men and included three blacks.
