Spangler's Selection For UNC Post Praised

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

East Carolina University officials generally are expressing satisfaction with the selection of C.D. Spangler Jr. of Charlotte as the next president of the 16-campus University of North Carolina system, but at least one educator challenged Spangler's academic credentials.

Spangler, 54, runs the family-owned C.D. Spangler Construction Co. and since 1982 has been chairman of the State Board of Education. He will replace William Friday, 65, who will retire by June 30 after heading the UNC system for 30 years.

Ralph Kinsey of Charlotte, chairman of the ECU Board of Trustees, said Spangler "is an exceptional choice." According to Kinsey, Spangler "knows North Carolina and its people and their commitment to education, and is exceptionally qualified to lead the University of North Carolina system."

Saying "I am personally excited about his appointment," Kinsey said he had had "a fine working relationship" with Friday "and feel confident that the same strong, positive relationship will continue with Mr. Spangler."

ECU Chancellor John Howell, who announced last year that he would retire on or before June 30, 1987, said of Spangler: "I know him and his reputation." Other than that, Howell said "I don't generally comment about my boss in the press."

James Leroy Smith, chairman of the UNC System Faculty Senate and a philosophy professor at East Carolina University, expressed concern about Spangler's lack of academic experience.

"I'm surprised and concerned, and I think the faculty will feel that concern," Smith said after Spangler's selection.

"It's traditional that faculty members expect academic experience (in presidents), and consequently I expect and hope there will be a good amount of effort to win the confidence of the faculty. Facultywise, that's the first step."

But Smith added that a

South Evans' Area Gets New Facelift

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Nine years and $4.5 million later, Greenville's South Evans Neighborhood is no longer the city's most blighted area.

The substandard and dilapidated structures that used to line neighborhood streets are now gone. In their place are houses that have been rehabilitated and property that has been cleared and is ready for investors to purchase and develop.

Four new commercial complexes have also joined the area bounded by Charles Boulevard, Seaboard Coastline Railroad and 10th and 14th streets in recent months, creating what municipal officials call a new beginning for the South Evans community.

Since 1977, the city has been working to improve roads in the South Evans district and to purchase and upgrade property in the neighborhood with funds from state and federal sources. Sewage, water, gas and electric service improvements also have been part of the project.

Most of the improvements scheduled for the neighborhood are expected to be complete by June 30, Community Development Administrator Andy Harris said in a recent interview. "But there will be a few things left to do after June," he said, "including marketing of remaining vacant parcels (of land)."

Those lots, created when dilapidated dwellings purchased by the city were bulldozed, will be sold for residential and commercial uses. Revenue from the property will be recirculated by the city for additional redevelopment activities.

Harris said endeavors like revitalization of the South Evans neighborhood rarely make money, however. "Programs like this won't ever be self-sustaining, that's not what they're designed for," he said. "But as long as we have income, we can keep spending them on im-

Vocational Center Seeking Help In Keeping Swimming Pool Open

BY DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

In an effort to save some East Carolina Vocational Center facilities — including its indoor pool — from economic suicide, the ECVC board of directors has formed a committee to scour the area in search of organizations to utilize them.

"We met and set up an ad hoc committee of board members to meet with the County Commissioners, the hospital, the medical school and any other interested parties to see if we can work something out," said Joe Gantz, ECVC chairman.

Gantz met with the Pitt County Board of Commissioners two weeks ago, making a request for $15,000 in operating funds for the pool for the next 90 days.

"We're expecting a decision from them any time," Gantz said. "And right now, we're trying our best to keep the facility open through March."

The direct cost to operate the pool on an annual basis amounts to $53,500, Gantz said, while total income — from fees charged persons using the pool — is only $19,906, resulting in a direct loss of $33,594. With overhead expenses amounting to $113,235 — including about $60,000 to heat the pool — the total amounts to some $146,800 a year.

Gantz suggested that the $15,000 would enable ECVC to continue to operate the pool until spring, and allow the ECVC board time to search for ways to keep the facility open.

"Everybody says we have a great facility here, but nobody wants to pay for it," Gantz said. "This is the only facility of its kind in Pitt County and it's under-utilized."

Gantz stressed that along with the pool, the center is looking for organizations to take advantage of its weight room, gymnasium and stage.

Students Can Get Help For College

By HAROLD JOYNER
Reflector Staff Writer

Many area senior high school students who are college-bound may already be wondering where the money will come from to pay for their schooling. Financial aid officers have said, though, that there is enough federal money available, but only if the student is willing to go to some extra trouble to get it.

"It's amazing to see how many people do not plan ahead for financial assistance in higher education," said Ray Edwards, East Carolina University financial aid director. "The parent can plan on it taking the student anywhere between four to five years to complete an undergraduate degree in a public institution at an estimated cost of $20,000 to $30,000."

During January, ECU held various workshops at area high schools to inform parents and students of the different types of federal assistance available. "We hope the workshops will keep problems from happening," said Karen Barbee, associate director of the ECU Financial Aid Office. "In doing so, the application can be processed much faster if parents and students understand how to fill out the forms correctly," she said.

The types of need-basis federal aid any student can apply for include the Pell Grant, guaranteed student loans and college work study programs. The awarding of these funds is done on a "need basis," and the formula figures in the amount a parent or student plans to contribute to educational expenses minus the cost of the school's tuition and expenses. Non-need assistance programs include merit or civic scholarships, loan programs or self-help employment.

The student's advantage to ensuring prompt attention to their financial aid application is to file early, Edwards said. Also, using figures from a completed tax return when completing the application will speed up the process as well as providing accurate information to the processors. Sometimes, but not always, certain applications are chosen at random for verification, and the parent and student is held liable for the information given.

"Students should not apply for financial aid because they think there is no money," Ms. Barbee said. "About 51 percent of the student body at ECU is receiving some type of financial aid," Edwards said.

In year's past, criticism over the

Four File For County Offices

Four candidates filed notice of intent Friday afternoon to seek election to Pitt County offices.

Filing as candidates for sheriff were Aurora Police Chief Lee F. Pascasio of Greenville and Aaron Hines Jr. of Ayden, a former Winterville police officer.

Kenneth K. Dews Sr. filed as a candidate for the Winterville Township seat on the Pitt County Board of Commissioners and Dale Manning listed his name as a candidate for Winterville's seat on the Pitt County Board of Education.

The deadline for filing for all offices is noon Monday.

Pascasio, a Republican, said he would strive for better public relations within the department and "as a working sheriff, my policy would be one of a competent, positive and constructive (leader)."

Hines said that, if elected, he would "initiate a full team of officers dealing with homicide and theft," as well instigate programs dealing with alcohol and drug abuse in the schools. He said he would also work with a program involving missing children.

Pascasio, a Baltimore native, moved to Pitt County in 1966, and is married to the former Emily M. Stancill of Greenville. They have two children. The Pascasios are members of First Christian Church in Greenville.

From 1963 to 1973, Pascasio served in the Marine Corps, and was a platoon leader during the Vietnam War. He has completed law enforcement courses at the University of Maryland, Northwestern University, East Carolina University and other institutions.

He has been a police science instructor at Pitt Community College and an instructor for the N.C. Criminal Justice Educaton and Tranining Standards Commission.

He is a member of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, N.C. Chiefs of Police, N.C. Sheriff's Association, and volunteer leader for the Boy Scouts of America and American Red Cross.

Hines attended South Ayden High School and Pitt Community College.

He is a member of Haddocks Chapel Free Will Baptist Church, and is married to the former Joan Coward. They have two children, Regina and Derrick.

He is now president of the Community Embalming and Transportation Service. Hines is a former alderman for the town of Ayden, and has served as a board member of the Real Crisis Center in Greenville.

Dews, a member of the State Goals and Policy Board, said he believes "I can truly be a good representative of all the people in Pitt County" on the Board of Commissioners. "I have great pride in being a citizen.

"I believe I understand how county government responds and how it should meet the needs of the people," said Dews, who has lived in Pitt County for 36 years.

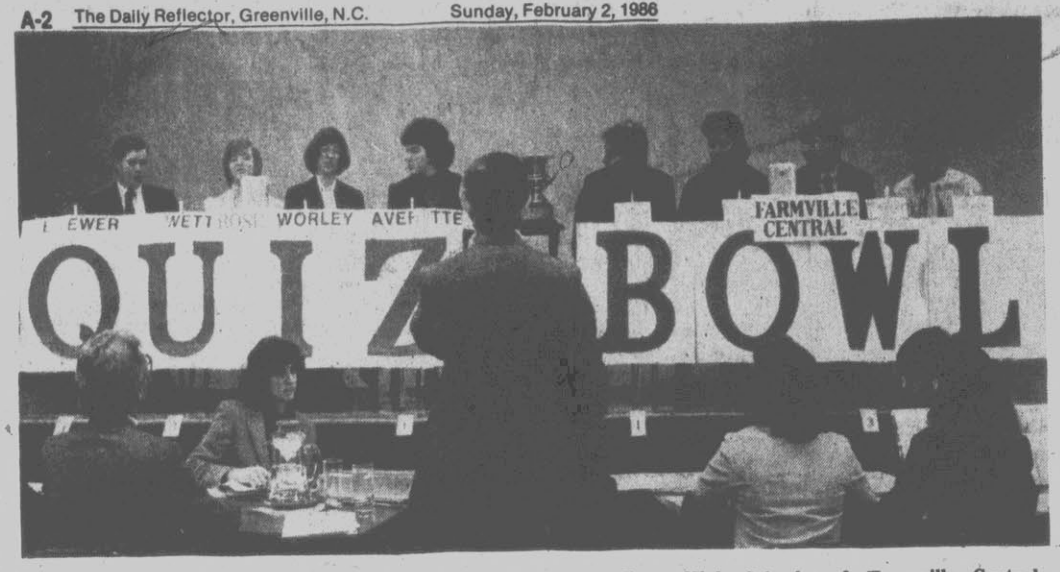

Dews has served on the policy board for five years. The governor serves as chairman of the board, which is within the Department of Administration office of Policy and Planning.

Dews is a member of the Greenville-Winteville board of advisers at First Citizen's Bank and is chairman of the board of directors of the Home Federal Savings and Loan in Greenville, Bethel, Williamston, Plymouth and Edenton.

Hindu Radicals Protest Arrival Of John Paul II

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Pope John Paul II began his longest visit to a non-Christian land on Saturday by invoking Mohandas K. Gandhi's vision of religious tolerance and peace, after Hindu radicals burned the pope in effigy.

Police briefly detained about 300 Hindu militants, including the brother of Gandhi's assassin, releasing them after John Paul arrived to begin his 10-day, 14-city visit. The demonstrators had chanted, "Sinner pope, go home!" and "Pope, go to hell!"

Hindu extremists claim the visit — the pope's 29th foreign trip overall — is aimed at converting poor Hindus to Christianity. About 83 percent of India's 750 million people are Hindus, while only 3 percent are Christians. Roman Catholics number about 13 million.

Police and church officials say death threats came from Bombay and Madras, but that adequate security measures have been taken.

The pope's first day included a speech at Raj Ghat where Gandhi, who led India to independence in 1947, was cremated after he was shot to death the following year.

John Paul said the man known as the Mahatma, or Great Soul, taught that truth leads people to recognize "the dignity, equality and fraternal solidarity of all human beings and ... to reject every form of discrimination."

"Today as a pilgrim of peace I have come here to pay homage to Mahatma Gandhi, hero of humanity," the 65-year-old pontiff said at the riverbank cremation site of Gandhi, an apostle of non-violence.

"The power of truth ... shows us once again the need for mutual collaboration between religious groups in the pluralist society of modern India and throughout the world," he said.

Hundreds of people are killed each year in India in riots, in sectarian clashes and in caste and linguistic disputes.

Gopal Godse, an organizer of Saturday's effigy-burning protest, said "Any foreign religion that encroaches on India is a threat to the security of India. A change in religion is a change in nationality."

Godse's brother, Nathuram Godse, was hanged in 1949 for assassinating Mahatma Gandhi. Gopal Godse spent 20 years in prison for conspiracy in the killing.

Most of the pope's events were closed to the general public or tightly restricted for security reasons, including his arrival at the military airfield where he kissed the tarmac and was greeted by President Zail Singh, a Sikh, and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, a Hindu Brahmin.

But thunderous applause greeted him from a capacity crowd of 25,000 at Indira Gandhi Stadium as he bowed in traditional Indian fashion and said in Hindi "God be with you."

After giving his homily from underneath a huge neon cross trimmed with marigolds, he personally gave communion to about 100 people including 30 cripples with canes, crutches and walkers.

"I am so overcharged with emotion," said Kitchi Sundaram, a 56-year-old housewife who took communion from the pontiff. "I feel I have touched God."

The pope also consecrated Sacred Heart Cathedral, addressed Indian bishops and held private talks with Singh, Gandhi and his Italian-born wife, Sonia.

On Sunday, he is to meet Tibet's exiled god-king, the Dalai Lama, and hold another Mass at the stadium. He leaves Monday for Calcutta, where he will meet with Nobel Peace Prize winner Mother Teresa.

Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican's secretary of state, said little could be done about protests.

"There are some elements who don't like the pope's visit," he said. "We have to bear with these protests? What can we do?"

Hindu militants have assailed the work of foreign Christian missionaries, saying they convert Hindu "untouchables" and tribespeople by exploiting their poverty. According to government figures, there are 1,990 foreign missionaries in India, including 1,200 Catholics.

Dews is a past president of the Winterville Kiwanis Club. He is a former member of the board of advisers at Chowan College and is a member of the Pitt County Farm Bureau.

Manning, 32, a resident of Route 1, Box 398-A, Winterville, is a sales representative for American Industries of Lumberton.

He is a native of Ayden, a 1972 graduate of Ayden-Grifton High School and holds a bachelor's degree in history from East Carolina University.

"Children are important to the future," Manning said when announcing his candidacy, "We need some type of direction to put them in. I can give a good first-hand account of the schools in Pitt County as a student, a parent and a husband, not just the man off the street.

"I can help the schools," he added.

Manning said he feels the county "needs the money" for proposed capital outlay projects associated with consolidation of the Pitt and Greenville school systems.

He also said he feels "a lot of the programs (in the county) need to be more fully explored."

Manning is a member of the Winterville Recreation Commission and serves as co-chairman of Winterville's Pee Wee League and as a volunteer baseball coach at Ayden-Grifton High School. He is a member of Ayden Christian Church and was voted an Outstanding Young Man of America in 1981.

Manning is married to the former Betty Jo James of Robersonville and they have two children, J. Dale, 7, and Brandon, 11 months.

NASA Photos Show Odd Spurt Of Flame

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle Challenger investigating board said Saturday that film of the last 15 seconds of the space shuttle's flight shows an unusual spurt of flame in the right rocket booster.

NASA spokesman Hugh Harris said neither the board nor the space agency will speculate about what that observation means. But other sources have said the tongue of flame, clearly visible in the pictures, burned into the adjacent fuel tank and caused the explosion.

"We don't want the quick answer, we want the right answer," Harris said.

He called the films of the 15-second period only "an area of interest — not the only area of interest."

The films were taken from Playalinda Beach, just north of the Challenger launch pad, and show a different angle from the widely seen video tape of the disaster.

Harris would not even agree that the pictures were the most unique thing seen by the investigating board. "I only know it is unusual," he said of the plume. "That is the engineering judgment of the board."

The brief NASA statement did not address reports in the news media that the right rocket booster experienced a small drop of pressure just before the explosion. That would be consistent with a leak, either from between the four segments that make up the rocket or with a burn through its side.

"The board is charged with the responsibility of investigating this accident and they are gathering together all of the data from this and other cameras," Harris said. "This is what they are prepared to release at this time. This is one area they are looking at."

Earlier in the day, officials disclosed that the rockets that pull spent solid rocket boosters away from the space shuttle were found unfired, an indication that Challenger's seven astronauts had no warning their ship was going to explode.

If commander Richard Scobee had been alerted to impending danger, he would have hit a "ditch button," which fires the booster separation motors.

"The booster separation motors were never activated," a statement said.

Investigators have been focusing on a mysterious spurt of flame, seen on film, that may have triggered the space shuttle's explosion. The films indicated that a leak near the top of one of the two boosters may have been the source of the flame, according to a source.

Booster Rockets Found Intact, Still Charged

Meanwhile, a Navy helicopter carrier, the USS Guam, plucked a 13-foot-diameter orange cone from the sea north of the main search area because it might be the top of Challenger's fuel tank.

And at the Kennedy Space Center, a memorial wreath of white chrysanthemums and seven red carnations — one for each of the dead astronauts — was dropped into a gray sea after a service attended by 4,000 space workers and their families.

NASA's Saturday statement confirmed for the first time that the nose of one of the boosters, complete with parachute and four separation motors, was recovered from the Atlantic. Because of the clean separation of the two boosters at the moment Challenger exploded, there had been speculation that Scobee might have hit the emergency button.

"This evidence indicates very strongly that the commander did not punch out, that he did not ditch," said NASA spokesman Charles Redmond.

If Scobee had managed to hit the "ditch button" a few seconds before the blast, the shuttle might have been able to make a water landing — a very risky procedure that might still have been fatal to the astronauts.

The Coast Guard used the rocket nose recovery as a warning about handling any debris from the shuttle. An expert disarmed the BSMs after they were brought ashore.

"It's possible one of the BSM's could have come loose," said Louis J. Ullian, a government explosive expert. He said the 175-pound devices, if ignited, can penetrate several inches of reinforced concrete.

The large orange cone was spotted in the ocean 100 miles east of Savannah, Ga., and the Guam was sent in after another vessel, the USS Dewey, reported it did not have the right equipment to pick it up. The Guam is a 600-foot troop ship with a deck like a small carrier for helicopters.

NASA said it did not know whether the cone had come from the 184-foot shuttle tank and was awaiting its return. Savannah is more than 200 miles north of Cape Canaveral.

The flash of fire investigators are looking at was noted in frame-by-frame examinations of pictures in the instant before the shuttle's tank exploded, killing all seven astronauts, 73 seconds after liftoff Tuesday.

The space agency is said to be looking at the possibility the fire struck a primer cord on an explosive "destruct" package. The package is on the fuel tank in case the shuttle goes off course and has to be destroyed by a radio signal from the ground.

NASA still was saying nothing about the direction of the investigation, despite increasing reports in news media quoting sources who refused to be identified.

The New York Times reported that the right booster rocket lost a small amount of power about 10 seconds before the fuel tank exploded. The boosters are attached to the tank, which holds more than 500,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen at liftoff.

The three main shuttle engines, which receive their fuel from the tank, shut down almost immediately after a booster power drop of about 100,000 pounds of its 2.5 million pounds of thrust, the Times reported.

It quoted its source as saying ground data shows the engine nozzles and those of the boosters swiveled to one side, seeking to correct the course change produced by the uneven rocket thrust.

Gil Moore, chief spokesman for Morton Thiokol, which manufactures the boosters, said a malfunction of the rockets can't be ruled out "until the evidence is in."

He said the boosters had not leaked in nine ground tests and in the 24 shuttle flights to date.

At sea, seven ships and 14 aircraft swept 4,500 square miles from Ponce de Leon north to St. Augustine. A robot submarine, Scorpio, was in 140 feet of water checking out a large object detected by sonar.

NASA said there is a possibility the object is the main cabin, where the astronauts rode, but also speculated it could be the wreckage of a ship such as a Spanish galleon.

Navy jets, equipped with "Air-Eye" detection devices, also flew to the area where the orange cone was recovered to decide if there is enough debris to warrant swinging the massive air-sea search 200 miles north of central Florida.

Employees of the Kennedy Space Center, gathered in the same stands where school children watched Challenger's tragic liftoff, said a solemn farewell to the fallen astronauts.

Buglers blew taps as they honored the memory of Christa McAuliffe, a 37-year-old New Hampshire teacher who was to be NASA's first "common citizen" in space; Scobee, 46, the commander; Michael J. Smith, 40, the pilot; Judith A. Resnik, 36; Ronald E. McNair, 35; Ellison S. Onizuka, 39, and Gregory B. Jarvis, 41.

"We come together not only as members of the launch team but also as members of the Kennedy Space Center family," said Richard Smith, the center's director. "We have lost seven of our own, brave men and women who dared to chart the pathways of the universe that future generations will follow."

As a climax to the service, a helicopter flew two miles out to sea and dropped a wreath into the water as the 4,000 people at the memorial service stood in a minute of silence.

It was exactly 11:39 a.m., the same time as the shuttle's explosion, when James Harrington let go of the wreath. Harrington, as shuttle flow director, was responsible for keeping Challenger's launch preparations on schedule.

Haitian Militiamen Patrolling Streets After Duvalier Orders State Of Siege

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Militiamen in unmarked cars patrolled the capital's downtown district Saturday, enforcing calm after two days of violent protests against President-for-Life Jean-Claude Duvalier.

New disturbances were reported in Cap Haitien, 125 miles north of Port-au-Prince, where funeral services were held for three people killed during a demonstration Monday.

The U.S. Embassy said it received reports that security forces used tear gas and gunfire to control an early morning demonstration in Cap Haitien, the country's second largest city, but it had no report of casualties.

Missionaries used a ham radio to report anti-government demonstrations in Gonaives, 60 miles northeast of the capital and the town where the protests began Nov. 28, and in St. Marc, 50 miles north of Port-au-Prince.

Jackson Snyder, 55, and his wife Betty, co-directors of Mission Possible, said their missionaries reported protesters controlled the highway between Gonaives and St. Marc, having erected at least 15 roadblocks with tree trunks, debris and burning tires.

The Snyders said more than 30 American and Canadian missionaries were stranded in Gonaives and St. Marc, but none has been hurt. "There's not much danger to North Americans unless you get in the way," Snyder said.

Missionaries in St. Marc reported a mob broke into a government warehouse Friday night, destroying eight vehicles and looting $500,000 worth of food, medicine and supplies belonging to Mission Possible, a Protestant organization based in Fort Pierce, Fla.

By daybreak Saturday, the streets of this city of 1 million were clear of protesters. Soldiers and members of the uniformed militia, called the Volunteers for National Service, patrolled with automatic rifles and shotguns.

Only debris remained in the heavily damaged business district from two days of protests that began late Thursday when angry crowds poured out of the city's huge slums to smash and plunder stores and overturn parked automobiles.

A Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said stores stayed closed Saturday in Port-au-Prince, meaning the situation was far from normal.

School Board's Work Must Be Kept In Progress

On advice of its attorney, the consolidated Pitt County Board of Education has ceased operations pending approval by the U.S. Justice Department of its 15-member board makeup.

The action was taken by the board to settle a lawsuit filed by a local minority rights group.

As it stands the Consolidated Board will not meet until the Justice Department gives "preclearance," or approval. Action on this is anticipated March 17.

The action rescinds the employment of Eddie West as superintendent of the consolidated schools, although he continues to be superintendent of the Pitt County schools and the Greenville schools. These two boards are expected to continue working toward the July 1 formal consolidation date. The city school offices have been moved from their former location on West Fifth Street to the county office building where the county school offices were already located.

This is an unnecessary delay in the consolidation process, but it is not insurmountable if the two boards separately will continue to carry on the work that the Consolidated Coard would be doing for the next month and a half.

Certainly it is better to work this matter out locally rather than go to the enormous expense of a court case and then possibly finding ourselves with a court-mandated plan which could prove unworkable.

When all is said and done, however, the consolidation plan must proceed. It has developed to the point where we cannot practically turn back, and we should not if we want to work for the best interest of all school children in Pitt County.

Cooperation Is Must For Mart

Locating a site for construction of a farmers market seems elusive indeed.

It was thought that the matter had been settled with a determination by the county to place the market, to be constructed with a $73,000 grant, on the old county home property, west of Bells Fork. That met opposition, however, as the site was said to be too far from the population centers.

Then the county approached the city about leasing land the city owns on 14th Street to be used as a site. The City Council balked at that, saying it preferred to sell the land at its market value to the county, although previously several city representatives had indicated agreement to the lease arrangement.

There the matter now stands as potential produce farmers and their patrons wonder where the market will be.

It is a matter that should be settled. The funds are available for construction of a building and there is obviously a desire for vegetable producers and buyers to get together.

Perhaps we should not be too quick to drop the old county site. Growth is going that way with a new school, residential and commercial developments under way.

In any event city and county governments should do all that's possible to cooperate in making this a successful venture.

Sunday Morning Notes

Sing no sad songs for Sam. He led as good a life as it is possible for a dog to lead, if you discount the fact that he had to die at the age of 4.

Sam was a beagle who belonged to Scott and Sue Hinson. Until recently he lived at the family home in Ayden.

"Sam was a travelin' man," said Sue. "We never felt like he belonged to us. He belonged to everybody, but he always came home to us.

"The postman knew him and more than once captured him and brought him back."

Sam had a regular route he traveled each day and four or five homes at which he stopped. The people would feed him and some even had beds for him where he would nap along the way.

The Hinsons' home was on the east side of Ayden and there was a family on the west side of town that Sam adopted and he would go there several times a week.

"They would call and ask if he could spend the night," Sue says. The two families developed a friendship through Sam.

Often the family would call and the Hinsons would get in the truck to drive across town and bring Sam home at the end of the day.

As a travelin' man Sam had his interest in females and is known to have sired some puppies by a bassett hound. A surgical procedure ended that kind of activity, but toward the end Sam is known to have had a platonic relationship with a dog named Honey whom he picked up to accompany him on his roaming. He returned her home at the end of the day.

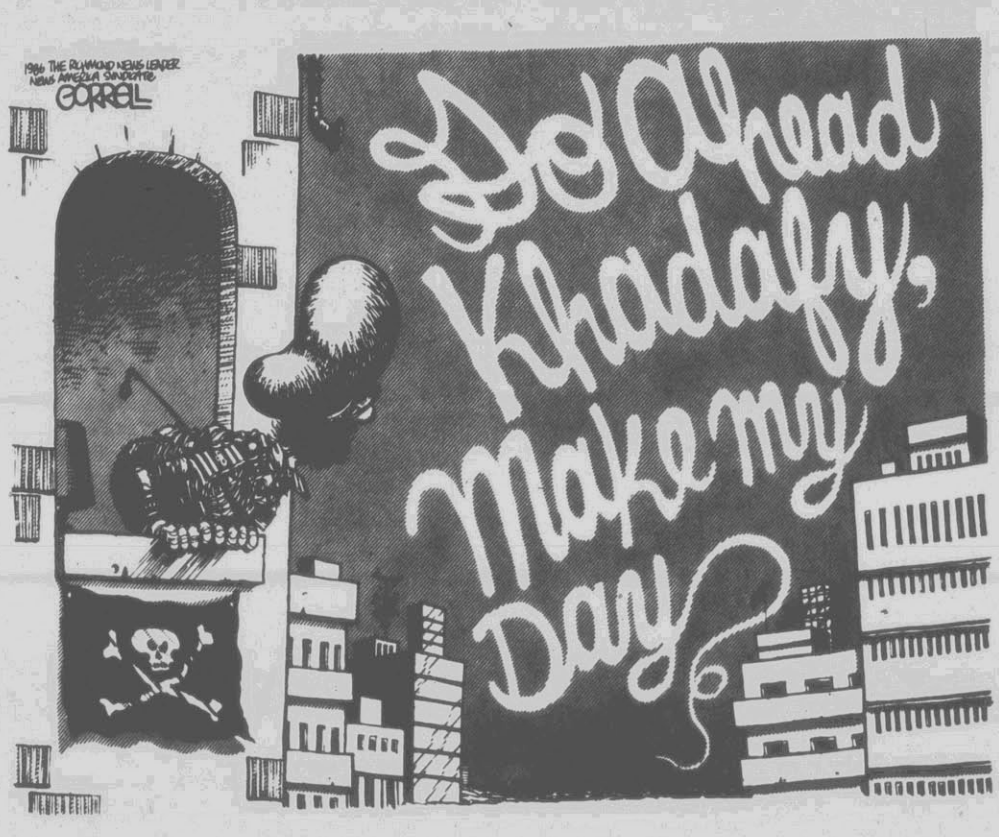

He was arrested once and the Hinsons went to the police station and bailed him out. After that the police never bothered him.

He had some eccentricities such as loving to sleep under blankets. He also came to the house to awaken the Hinsons one morning. When they didn't respond quickly enough he tore through the window screen. The only trouble was he didn't quite make it and was found hanging half in and half out of the window. Despite that incident Sam was an escape artist. The Hinsons constructed a break-proof pen, complete with underground wire and bricks. Sam escaped.

When it became time for a new baby to arrive and the Hinsons were also moving to another part of town, it was decided that Sam should spend some time with Sue's parents in Chapel Hill.

He roamed there, too, and soon disappeared. Sue's parents carried on an extensive search but eventually the word came from a hunter. He had found Sam's body in the woods, where he had been killed by wild dogs. The hunter buried the remains and was kind enough to let them know what had happened to the dog.

Sam won't be going to the new home which the Hinsons are now building and it may be just as well. There is speculation that he might have been jealous of the new baby. Too, since the home is in a rural area, Sam might not have been happy there. He needed lots of people to make his day.

Hope Springs Eternal

WASHINGTON — "Millennium" carries two definitions, one literal, the other poetic. A millennium is "a period of 1,000 years." It is also "a period of great happiness or human perfection." The proposal advanced last week by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev embraces both meanings. We ought to look at this proposition hopefully — and warily as well.

This is what he said: "The Soviet Union is proposing a step-by-step and consistent process of ridding the earth of nuclear weapons, to be implemented and completed within the next 15 years, before the end of this century."

In stage one, over the next five to eight years, both sides would reduce by one-half "the nuclear arms that can reach each other's territory." This would include long-range bombers as well as land- and sea-based missiles. At the end of phase one, each side would be limited to 6,000 warheads.

In a second stage, beginning no later than 1990, the two powers would "eliminate" their medium-range nuclear weapons and freeze their tactical nuclear systems.

"Stage three will begin no later than 1995. At this stage the elimination of all remaining nuclear weapons will be completed. By the end of 1999 there will be no nuclear weapons on earth. A universal accord will be drawn up that such weapons never again will come into being."

The Gorbachev proposal contains other elements. Manifestly it could not succeed unless other nuclear powers — England, France, China, presumably Israel, possibly India — joined in the accord. Gorbachev makes the whole plan contingent upon abandonment by the United States of development and deployment of defensive weapons in space. There would also be a ban on "non-nuclear weapons based on new physical principles whose destructive capacity is close to that of nuclear arms." Gorbachev further suggests the "complete elimination of such barbaric weapons of mass destruction as chemical weapons." Finally he proposes that conventional weapons and armed forces also become subject to agreed reductions.

What is one to make of all this? On the record of the past 50 years, the Soviet Union could not care less about world opinion, but Gorbachev is a genius at public relations. It is truly remarkable to see the head of the Soviet state, whose troops lately have been killing the children of Afghanistan by bombs concealed in toys, wrapping himself in a messiah's mantle of peace on earth, good will toward men.

Hope springs eternal. Ronald Reagan has said many times that he shares Gorbachev's millennial dream of world free of the threat of nuclear war. Could the dream turn into reality? Like all other accords of compacts of treaties, this one has its fine print. The term "warhead," for example, is meaningless without calibration in terms of a warhead's destructive power. The Soviet Union's warheads carry, on average, the equivalent of 400,000 tons of TNT. Ours average about 300,000 tons. The bomb that destroyed Hiroshima in 1945 had the equivalent of 17,000 tons.

During this first stage, when each side would cut down to 6,000 warheads, the Soviet Union clearly would maintain a significant advantage. Moreover, the Gorbachev proposal apparently would leave it to each side to decide which warheads would be dismantled to get down to the 6,000 level.

Gorbachev is noticeably more specific on the matter of "eliminating" tactical nuclear weapons than he is on subjecting conventional forces to "agreed reductions." If the United States were effectively to disband NATO and withdraw our forces from Europe, would this not leave our Western allies vulnerable to the massive land and air forces of the Warsaw Pact?

President Reagan's reponse was exactly what the occasion demanded. He welcomed the overture. He would look at it carefully. While it contained many old elements, it contained some new elements also. He would direct our negotiators at Geneva to examine it with care.

I am skeptical. Hanlet voiced a warning for all ages: "One may smile, and smile, and be a villian." Let us learn about throw-weight; let us learn about verification; let us approach this offer as cautiously as a cat in a cowbarn: We may smell a rat. But let us also move with a prayerful and hopeful heart.

Washington Faces Hard Choice

Rowland Evans Robert Novak

MAKILALA, Philippines — The government is losing the war to the communist-led New People's Army (NPA) here in the back country of Mindanao amid a general breakdown of law and order, posing an agonizing policy dilemma for Washington.

At this farm town 80 kilometers down MacArthur Highway from Davao City, the death rate for ordinary Filipinos is so high that farmers are evacuating homes and, in many cases, abandoning lands. Ominously, it is not clear whether they have more to fear from NPA insurgents or from government troops supposedly here to protect them.

Therein lies the dilemma confronting U.S. policy-makers. The Philippine armed services, underfinanced and desperately short of communications and transportation essentials, need lots more U.S. aid. But if the army is part of the problem rather than the solution, how can Washington pour money down this rathole in the absence of military reforms actually in effect and not merely promised?

No such crisis was outlined by formal briefings given us in Manila and Davao City, which suggested the NPA was under control and would be totally surpressed by a little more American money. But our own reporting suggests that the latest phase of Filipino communist insurgency that began two years ago is ascendant, with the government's presence increasingly replaced by anarchy.

Makilala, so obscure it is not listed on road maps, was tipped to us by a Davao City businessman as a place where a few farmers were reported leaving after their caribous were being killed.

Each week, two or three farmers are found murdered, with no apparent criminal motives. One 29-year-old farmer told us all the killings were at the hands of government forces. "The people love the NPA," he told us. But he sounded like an insurgent himself.

Actually, the NPA uses terror to punish informers and "enemies of the people," making sure of their "tax" collections. But soldiers, apart from brutalizing the citizenry in search of food and wine, also eliminate suspected NPA sympathizers. It is hard to tell who is doing the killing. "The soldiers wear bluejeans and the insurgents wear uniforms," a local merchant told us.

An empty day care center near Makilala town square, designated in large letters as "The First Lady's (Imelda Marcos) Favorite Project," is ironic testimony to spreading anarchy. President Ferdinand Marcos' government furnishes neither protection nor health care and other routine services here.

Makilala is no exception. Contradicting the official reports of a lull, some 200 NPA guerrillas killed three and wounded eight the other day when they ambushed a column of poorly-armed local militiamen in the barrio of San Miguel, 30 kilometers from here.

All of Mindanao, except Muslim areas which continue their own sectarian wars, is so infested. The NPA rules by night on much of the island, including inner-city Davao slums, indoctrinating citizens in Marxist-Leninist ideology. To some insurgency experts, the situation is worse on the main island of Luzon, were the NPA rules only 45 minutes from downtown Manila.

That this situation is not hopeless is shown by the record on Mindanao of the 3rd Marine Brigade. It has cleaned the NPA out of the non-urban sections of sprawling Davao City while treating private citizens gently. That is confirmed by Chito Ayala, a leading anti-government figure in Davao.

Assuming re-election of Marcos, the choice for Washington is hard: pour more money into a military establishment that in places like Makilala rivals the NPA as scourge of the people; or withhold extra aid in the absence of reforms even though that risks further military deterioration.

Secret Diplomacy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan Administration has fallen back on secret, step-by-step diplomacy to try to get Mideast peace talks started in 1986.

The outlook may be only marginally brighter than last year when American, Egyptian and Jordanian leaders all confidently predicted negotiations would be started, but turned out to be wrong.

This year's effort is different. It involves low-profile efforts by Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy and his deputy, Watt Cleverius, modest claims of "incremental progress" and virtually no public announcements about their meetings and the details of their agenda.

Murphy, a tireless envoy, met separately last week in Europe with King Hussein of Jordan and Shimon Peres of Israel, two of the three key players in the Middle East.

The third, Yasser Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, is being kept abreast of developments by Hussein, while Cleverius and other U.S. diplomats meet regularly with Palestinians in the region.

Apparently, the Reagan administration is remaining true to the U.S. pledge to Israel not to deal with the PLO until it accepts the legitimacy of Israel and U.N. Security Council resolutions calling for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East.

Arafat, however, retains a veto over the Palestinians who would sit across the negotiating table from Israel as part of a joint delegation with Jordanians.

The 1986 U.S. approach is reminiscent of the strategy former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger used to promote partial Israeli withdrawals from the Sinai and the Golan Heights a decade ago. But Kissinger was secretive only about the details of the negotiations.

He shuffled around the Middle East with flare and publicity. Reporters flew with him and helped to focus the world's attention on his exploits.

High-profile peformances by Anwar Sadat of Egypt, Menachem Begin of Israel and President Carter led to the biggest breakthrough in the 38-year Arab-Israeli dispute.

First, Sadat stunned the world by going to Jerusalem in 1977 to say he was ready for peace with the Jewish state. Begin, the Israeli prime minister, accepted the late Egyptian president's challenge and when their efforts foundered, Carter intervened to save the day with his Camp David talks and a trip to the region.

Last May, Secretary of State George Shultz tested the highwire with his own on-site diplomacy. After seeing Hussein in Aqaba and Peres in Jerusalem, Shultz reported he had found "a genuine sense of movement."

But as the year wore on, it became clear the issues of Palestinian representation and a proper forum for peace talks could not be resolved.

Israel simply refuses to sit down with Palestinians linked to the PLO or to permit the Soviet Union, with which it has no relations, to play a key role in the negotiations. Hussein and Arafat insisted on both conditions.

The question now is whether Murphy and the other American diplomats can bridge the differences or come close enough to get peace talks started.

In a statement Tuesday to a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee, Murphy said he had made "progress to clear the underbrush to reveal the critical obstacles blocking our path."

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — The early months of 1985 saw the Democratic Party's historic advantage over the Republican Party virtually disappear, with almost as many voting-age Americans describing themselves as Republicans (35 percent) as Democrats (27 percent). As the year wore on, however, the Democratic Party regained support, and in the final months 40 percent said they were Democrats, 33 percent Republicans and 27 percent Independents.

The 2 percentage-point gap in party affiliation observed during the first quarter of 1985 is the closest the two parties have come to numerical parity in almost 40 years: In 1946, Republican affiliation was 40 percent, Democrats 39 percent and Independents 21 percent.

The largest Democratic advantage during President Reagan's tenure occurred during the second quarter of 1983, when the nation was still recovering from the recession. At that time, there were twice as many nominal Democrats (46 percent) as Republicans (23 percent).

The GOP's competitive position improved steadily from then until the second quarter of 1985, when the gap once more began to widen, culminating in the 7-point disadvantage recorded during the last quarter of 1985.

The first quarter of 1985 also brought the Republican Party unaccustomed leadership in key demographic groups. In earlier periods the Republicans could claim small pluralities over the Democrats only among college graduates and persons from households in which the chief wage earner was employed in business or the professions.

By early 1985 the GOP also led among whites, 18- to 29-year-olds, persons who attended but did not graduate from college, those with family incomes of $20,000 or more per year and Midwesterners. In addition, the two parties were at a virtual standoff, not only nationally and among voters of both sexes, but also among high school graduates, skilled blue-collar workers, in non-union households and among Westerners.

In the latest surveys, the GOP has retained an edge only among the college-educated, business and professional people, and the affluent. And parity with the Democrats has been lost among women and high school graduates.

The latest figures are based on 3,980 in-person intervies with adults, 18 and older, conducted in more than 300 scientifically selected locations across the nation Oct. 11-Dec. 19.

For findings based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 2 percent in either direction. In addition to sampling error, the reader should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.

One Death For Two

As he was bundling up that wintery morning in 1916 to go out to Central Prison to cover the state's first double execution, a Raleigh Times reporter quipped to editor Bob Gray:

"There'll be three electrocuted this morning," he said.

"How's that?" Gray asked.

"Peter Sale will drop dead out there this morning," the reporter said. "He will kill the two Negroes and it will kill him."

The reporter turned out to be a better prophet than he had ever dreamed. Within seconds after he had signed the death certificates for the two men, carefully blotting the signatures of each of the 12 official witnesses, Warden Tom P. Sale keeled over on his desk and died of a massive heart attack.

One of the reporters who referred to that morning's events as a "triple execution" was W.T. "Tom" Bost, then a young reporter for the Greensboro Daily News.

"For the ordeal killed Sale," Bost explained. He added that Sale's death was no surprise to him and other reporters who covered executions at the big, grim prison on West Morgan Street which was torn down a few years ago and replaced by a more modern edifice.

"The health of the big warden had been slipping many months and at each of these morbid functions one could see that he was yielding to their inroads upon his nervous system. He often said as much and dreaded the first double duty that he was to perform."

Bost said that Sale was too proud to ask Gov. Locke Craig to relieve him even this once of the task of serving as the state's official executioner — a duty that was one of the warden's official duties but one which he could have delegated to a subordinate, as most of his successors did.

One newspaper account said Sale's friends had urged him to take a rest from the strains of his office. It added that the night before the double execution Mrs. Sale had pleaded with her husband to turn the duty of state executioner over to a deputy, at least for the day.

"But he insisted on doing his duty," the account said. Years later reporter Bost revealed that despite his job Tom Sale did not believe in capital punishment.

"He thought far ahead of his state," Bost wrote. "He would have abolished the lash and the electric chair 25 years ago. But Sale would not let anybody else kill for him. There was so much doubt that the other fellow felt about it as he did ... He would not let anybody else kill his prisoners. If anybody else threw that switch and broke off a life, to Tom Peter Sale it was pure murder. And least of all would he allow any man with vehemence in his soul stand near the switch."

Bost and the other reporters agreed that Sale was a good man and a good penologist even though he had never had a day's formal training in that controversial science — if that's what it is.

A native of Georgia, Sale had served as Raleigh's sanitary inspector for 15 years before his appointment as warden of Central Prison.

Reader Says Help Needed For The Weak

To the editor:

I grieve with the rest of the nation over the loss of seven brave lives on Tuesday morning, but I sense in the events of this week a deeper tragedy.

I learned yesterday that a local family lost five children to a fire this week, and the contrast between our reaction to these deaths and those of the astronauts began to suggest a tragic imbalance to me.

I do not wish to suggest that we mourn any less the deaths of the heroes of our space program. No, indeed, we must identify with such people if we are to be inspired to follow our owa leadings. What of the children, though, and their grieving family? How many lives were snuffed out on the highways of our country yesterday? How many of our brothers and sisters died of drug overdoses or hunger yesterday? How many because of political oppression?

The families of the astronauts remind us that the crew of the shuttle died living out the dreams they chose to follow. How many of these other victims had a choice?

Our Lord Christ, in His walk on earth always identified Himself with the helpless and the innocent victims. It seems that we are identifying more with the powerful than the powerless, and that is the tragedy.

Perhaps if we (and I include myself) had more the mind of Christ, we would spend the tremendous effort helping the weak that we will probably expend trying to prevent shuttle accident.

To the editor:

The purpose of this letter is to express appreciation and support to Mrs. Colville. Her genuine concern for the residents of Greenville is admirable. I and a lot of other people who, for one reason or another have not written to this column, find her letters enlightening.

The majority of Greenville voters know little about a lot of the issues because of lack of time to get involved. The Greenville City Council supposedly has our best interest at heart. However, when interested parties want an issue passed, we are not asked to vote until all the ground work has been carefully prepared. Then we are provided with biased information to make our decision. We are also told at times that the City Council approved the issue because "there were a lot of people for it." Funny how these people are seldom composed of the majority of the voters. The majority of the voters just pay for it. The toll-free issue is a perfect example.

I was pleased to see the result of the vote on the Grifton issue in Sunday's paper. We owe this in part to Mrs. Colville's efforts. Here again, the majority of subscribers involved were not even aware that this issue was coming up, but you can be sure that everybody who was for it knew in advance and voted.

I found Phil Dixon's letters lacking pertinent information and his arguments in support of this issue weak. Not once in his letters did he take into consideration the burden this would place on Greenville subscribers. Dixon talks abut harmony and getting along with one another. This is difficult to do when one side carries the heavier load.

To the editor:

During February, Afro-American (Black) History Month, let us highlight some of the unrecognized blacks who have made our American way of life more orderly, healthy and meaningful.

When we wear shoes, we need to thank Jan Ernest Matzeliger, who was granted a patent in 1883 for creating a machine that could automatically make shoes.

When we see or hear trains, we need to thank Granville T. Woods, who was granted more than 35 patents, many of which were sold to General Electric and Westinghouse. His most notable invention was the system for letting the engineer of a train know how close his train was to others.

When we use the light bulb, we need to thank Lewis H. Latimer, an electrical engineer whose idea of fine carbon wire which lights up went into Edison's light bulb. He was the only black member of the "Edison Pioneers," and worked with Alexander Graham Bell on his invention of the telephone.

When we stop for a traffic light, we need to thank Garrett A. Morgan, who developed the automatic stop light that controls the flow of vehicles through street intersections.

When we see refrigerated trucks on the highways, we need to thank Frederick M. Jones, the first black member of the American Society of Refrigeration Engineers who, in 1939, designed the first working truck refrigeration system, patented in 1942.

When we watch black women enhance their beauty with cosmetics, we need to thank Sarah Breedlove Walker, who developed the straightening comb and produced more than 2,000 agents in the Walker product line.

When someone has been spared life because human blood was stored, we need to thank Dr. Charles Drew, who created blood banks.

This list could naturally continue. Even today, the true spirit of the black contribution to the American way of life is not fully recognized, respected, appreciated and shared. Black history is every day and it is being made presently. Let us all be cognizant of every human's worth, regardless of race, creed, color or economic advantage or disadvantage.

The 1986 theme for this month is "The Afro-American Experience: International Connection."

"His Truth is Marching On."

To the editor:

It is often quite difficult, indeed sometimes impossible, for Small Minds to comprehend the workings of Large Minds. Not everyone who attempts to read Neitsche know what Nietsche is talking about. So, too, with many who try to understand Schopenhauer, Kant, Kierkegaard. They lay the book aside and step out into the garden to smell the flowers and watch the sun disappear through the trees.

It is a trial for Small Minds to try to understand the Large Mind of our Leader, the President. Along with others, he believes that the Soviet Union is fiercely intent upon destroying the United States. In order to protect the Unitd States from the demonic designs of the Russians, the President proposes to mount a Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "Star Wars," as an impenetrable shield against anything the bad Soviets might try to throw in the direction of the United States. This would cost a trillion dollars, according to estimates I have seen, and would be the first and only impenetrable shield ever erected in the memory of mankind; except, of course, the Maginot Line, which stood bold, firm, magnificent and mostly inert as the Germans bypassed it and flew over it to occupy Paris and the rest of France.

The Small Mind wonders: If the Soviets are obsessively determined to destroy the United States, and if they are forewarned that the United States is going to mount a heavenly defense that their weapons cannot possibly penetrate, why, then don't they strike tomorrow morning at dawn, before the United States has time to construct that perfect shield? The Small Mind idly supposes that they do not do so because the United States could and would react to that strike by destroying the Soviet Union. Why, then, wonders the Small Mind, must the United States spend a trillion dollars, which it does not have and the borrowing of which would throw its future generations into eternal debt, all to keep the Soviet Union from doing what the Soviet Union is already kept from doing?

The Small Mind, baffled, wanders off into the garden to smell the flowers, while they are still there, and to watch the sun disappear through the trees, while they are still there.

"Keep Carolina Clean!" Who's kidding whom? Route 33 from Hastings Ford to Chocowinity sees litter strewn along both sides of the highway daily by car and truck passengers, children and adults — particularly the latter.

Delivery and service people grabbing a snack at fast food windows and countless others who traverse this road daily keep me breaking my back picking up along my own property lines — beer bottles and cans, pop cans, lunch wrappers and cartons, paper cups, candy wrappers, empty cigarette packs, and any old rubbish that can be conveniently tossed from vehicle windows.

This is not carelessness. It's a deliberate dirty, nasty habit which countless number of boorish people engage in. They have never had a proper upbringing, but I'll bet they are mainly good church-goers on Sundays. I've even picked up Sunday School lessons.

State and county are dastardly neglectful in this kind of roadway clean-up to boot.

In the Thursday Daily Reflector you stated that Church Ministries United is "staffed almost totally by volunteers." Church Ministries is an entirely voluntary sharing by those who contribute their money, their time and their expertise.

A local church pays our rent. Every item of furnishings was contributed. Interview cubicles were made by church volunteers. Mr. T.J. Morris, retired from General Heating, keeps our heating system operational. The electrician students at Pitt Community College with instructor Joe Brittain, made our lighting adequate and safe. Attorney Hugh Cox helped us get our incorporation. West Measamer of John Proctor Co. keeps our books. Hilton Boyd, IRS retiree, does our IRS reporting. Many others have contibuted as auditors, board members, volunteer social workers and served in many other ways.

The effectiveness of this totally volunteer program is that no one involved has a vested interest in keeping the program alive past its usefulness.

Our first goal is to help those who come to us become independent of us. We would be joyous if full-time adequately-paid work could be found for all our applicants. We would like to know that every applicant could have the opportunity, the motivation to seize the opportunity and the know-how to use the opportunity for the independent support of themselves and their families. We would be happy if each applicant had a trained professional to work individually with each for as long as it takes to make that applicant competent to care for himself and his family.

Until such ideal time comes, there will be a need for Church Ministries United.

This letter is not written to be self-serving, but to make public the support of the ministers of the participating 25 churches and their parishioners and the generosity of our community.

To the editor:

As a health professional, I am concerned with the issue of smoking in public and how it affects the non-smoker. There is clear evidence that "secondary smoke" contains dozens of poisons and cancer-causing agents.

Inhalation of this toxic compound by the non-smoker will eventually cause changes in his/her lungs consistent with those found in emphysema patients. Data indicates that cancer and emphysema (of the lungs) have occurred in a significant number of non-smokers who have lived with a heavily smoking spouse.

As I recall the Tobacco Institute's position is that statistics are used to scare smokers into quitting and that the numbers are somehow "trumped up" to make a point. How ludicrous! The Tobacco Institute would still have us believe that smoking and lung cancer just happen to be found in tandem (occasionally, well, pretty often ... well — a lot ... so that doesn't prove anything, does it?)

We must be empathetic and realize that the smoker has a real need. He feels his need and it becomes greater minute by minute. Generally, he does not think to ask anyone's indulgence of his habit and simply lights up. As a non-smoker, you have two basic options: 1. tolerate it and say nothing 2. remove the offending smoke by a. leaving the area or b. asking the smoker to put it out.

Remember that the smoker's rights end where your rights begin. Passivity by non-smokers provides ammunition for the smoker's rationalization that it's OK to smoke in a crowd. Wake up and change all of this. For more information on how to approach the problem or for clarification of the issues, write to Action on Smoking & Health, 2013 H St. NW, Washington, D.C. 20006.

Reagan Budget Will Propose Deficit Cutbacks

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fiscal 1987 budget President Reagan will submit to Congress this week will propose $38 billion in deficit-reduction steps, far less than the staggering $50 billion to $60 billion previously expected, administration sources said Saturday.

He will propose roughly $30 billion in spending cuts and $8 billion in new revenues, partly from a plan to sell off federally owned assets, according to officials who spoke only on the condition of anonymity.

At the same time, the budget will call for defense spending in 1987 of $282 billion, an increase of slightly more than 6 percent above current levels, the sources said.

A new economic analysis, projecting a lower federal deficit for 1987 than believed even as recently as two weeks ago, is largely res oRsible for the scaling back of proposed cuts, the officials said.

In his radio address Saturday, Reagan said the budget will "propose to reform or eliminate programs and activities that are either too big or that shouldn't exist at all."

He said the budget will not reduce Social Security benefits or "essential programs to anyone who needs such assistance" and will maintain "modest growth to sustain the defense program set in motion five years ago."

The budget, to be submitted to Congress at 7:30 a.m. EST on Wednesday, will still comply with the $144 billion deficit target in the new Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law for fiscal 1987, which begins on Oct. 1, the officials said.

Meanwhile, the president Saturday ordered the first round of Gramm-Rudman spending cuts, totaling $11.7 billion. The cuts of 4.3 percentpfSr domestic programs and 4.9 percent for the military will take effect on March 1.

Under the Gramm-Rudman law, the president has no choice but to follow the cuts outlined in late January by Comptroller General Charles Bowsher. The Justice Department has challenged the constitutionality of this delegation of authority in a case awaiting a decision by a three-judge federal court.

From fiscal 1987 on, automatic cuts will be made if Congress fails to reduce the deficit to targets specified by the Gramm-Rudman law, which would eliminate the deficit by 1991.

The president's Saturday order affects spending in fiscal 1986, while the budget he will send to Congress on Wednesday will deal with fiscal 1987 spending.

As recently as Jan. 22, Budget Director James C. Miller III testified before the Senate Budget Committee that the 1987 deficit would be $200 billion or more in 1987 if the government did no more than continue to provide the services it does now.

Since the Gramm-Rudman target for fiscal 1987 is a deficit of $144 billion, Miller and other budget officials testified that budget reductions totaling between $50 billion and $60 billion would be needed. And Miller has been saying publically since before Christmas that the president's 1987 budget would advocate spending cuts of around $50 billion.

But last week, in an economic reassessment by the Office of Management and Budget, the deficit projection for 1987 was lowered from the approximately $200 billion cited by Miller to $182 billion.

A similar lowering of the deficit projection was made within the past few days by the Congressional Budget Office, which said that the deficit in 1987 could fall to as low as $178 billion — even in the absence of any further spending cuts by Congress.

"It was really a startling revelation. It shows that the deficit is finally headed down on its own. It makes meeting the Gramm-Rudman goals far easier, assuming we don't have another recession," said an administration official who spoke only on the condition that he not be identified.

The deficit projection was lowered based on new data suggesting continued moderate growth in the economy, a calculation that cuts made to realize this year's $11.7 billion Gramm-Rudman reduction would save an additional $18 billion in 1987 and 1988, and a slowdown in military spending.

Even though the president is following through with his vow to propose a defense spending increase of about 3 percent on top of inflation, actual military spending increases have slowed dramatically in the past few years, officials said.

Congress last year voted to allow military spending to rise only with inflation. In going along with such a plan, the president basically abandoned the large military buildup that accompanied his first term in office.

This scaling back of programs last year will have a multiplying effect over the next three to four years, dramatically reducing the level of military "current services," and deficit projections along with it, the officials said.

As an example, the budget that the president submitted to Congress for 1985 projected military spending of $348.6 billion in 1987.

Reagan Orders First Mandatory Spending Cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Saturday ordered the first round of spending cuts under a law designed to balance the federal budget by 1991, but complained that the cuts "make no distinction between high priority programs and those of little merit."

"I'm confident we can achieve these reductions while maintaining government services," Reagan said in his weekly radio broadcast, delivered from Camp David, the presidential weekend retreat in the Catoctin Mountains of Maryland.

However, he said, the fiscal 1987 budget he will submit to Congress on Wednesday will take "a different and better approach" to the legislation's goal of reducing the deficit to $144 billion — from a projected $200 billion or more — by the end of the fiscal year that starts in October.

The cuts Reagan ordered Saturday, which apply to spending for the current fiscal year, amount to 4.3 per cent for domestic programs and 4.9 per cent for the military. Troop strength will be left untouched because the president took advantage of a special provision in the bill allowing him to exempt military manpower. Social Security benefits also will not be affected.

As required by the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law passed by Congress last year, the president followed the cuts outlined in January by Comptroller General Charles Bowsher.

A Justice Department challenge to this procedure is awaiting decision by a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. The department contends it is an unconstitutional delegation of executive authority, since Bowsher is an officer of the legislative branch of government.

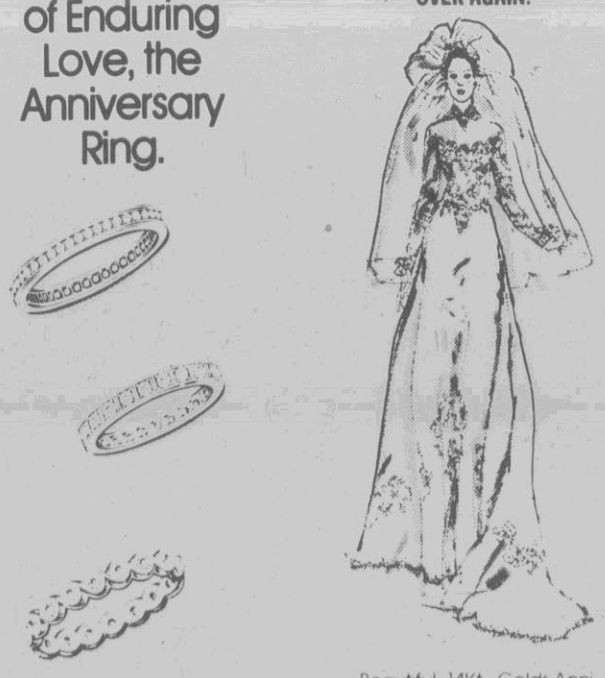

In fiscal 1987 and subsequent fiscal years, cuts will be automatic if Congress fails to reduce the deficit targets specified by the Gramm-Rudman law.

Reagan reiterated his pledge that his budget will avoid any tax increase, saying in his radio address, "We haven't built 37 months of economic expansion and created over nine million jobs by raising taxes on the people. We've done it by increasing opportunity."

Of his plans for growth in military spending, he said, "The Soviets want nothing more than to see America flinch and forsake the rebuilding program we've worked so hard to get started. We spent five years making our military more competitive and America secure again. We must not permit this vital work to be undone in the second term."

Groundhog Day

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Folks wondering how much longer winter will last are waiting for a group of men wearing tuxedos and top hats to pull a groundhog named Phil from a burrow in a 99-year-old ritual that always means good business for this western Pennsylvania factory town of 9,000.

Don't count on an early spring in Sunday's prognostication. The groundhog, or woodchuck, has seen his shadow and predicted six more weeks of winter in all but a handful of times.

A dozen Punxsutawney businessmen who make up the Inner Circle of the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club, don top hats and tuxedos to carry on the toungue-in-cheek tradition at Gobbler's Knob, a wooded knoll about three miles from town, since 1888.

James H. Means, a contractor who acts as the group's president, plucks the lowly animal from his man-made hole at sunrise and translates the results, claiming as club president to be the only human able to understand groundhogs.

Singer Diana Ross Marries Norwegian

ROMAINMOTIER, Switzerland (AP) — Pop singer Diana Ross married Norwegian shipping tycoon Arne Naess Saturday in a ceremony before about 200 guests in Switzerland's oldest church.

Singer Stevie Wonder and actor Gregory Peck were among those attending the 40-minute ceremony in the Abbey of Romainmotier in this mountainside village.

Local news accounts said singer Michael Jackson and actor Marlon Brando also would attend, but journalists were barred from the church and could not confirm the reports. Members of the Ross entourage declined to answer questions.

Ross and Naess were married by a Baptist minister from the United States as the Norwegian Broadcasting Boys Choir sang wedding songs. The choir, with about 50 members, is known as the Silver Voices.

The church bells pealed and most of the village's 330 residents applauded and cheered as the couple emerged from the stone Protestant church, which was built between 996 and 1028.

They embraced briefly in front of about two dozen reporters and photographers, then entered a black Mercedes limousine to travel to a reception at the Beau Rivage Hotel in nearby Lausanne, overlooking Lake Geneva.

Ross, 41, the former Supremes singer, wore a white wedding gown and trailing veil that press agents said included $12,000 worth of hand-made Belgium lace.

Friends said the couple's romance began last May when they met in the Bahamas.

Friends of the groom, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the couple planned to spend their honeymoon on Naess' 370-acre island "Tiano" in the Pacific.

Before the ceremony, some of the invited guests crowded into a nearby restaurant and played old tapes of the Supremes and Motown music.

Naess' personal fortune has been estimated at nearly $900 million, but in a Norwegian television interview he said the news media exaggerated his wealth.

He reportedly holds interests in companies in the United States, Britain, Liberia, on the Channel Islands and in Switzerland.

Born of a Norwegian mother and a German father, Naess is an expert skier and a keen mountaineer who has climbed Mt. Everest, the world's tallest mountain.

Printing Award

Dr. James Holland, designer with Greenville Printing Co., received an award for printing excellence in the 1985 awards competition of the Printing Industry of the Carolinas Inc.

Holland received a "best of category" award for small booklets at the awards banquet recently in Charlotte, attended by more than 350 printing industry members and their clients.

"I've observed the genuine complexity of the president's position, and I don't think it's astonishing the board would pick someone who could work with the various publics" that deal with the UNC system.

Spangler was not among the group of applicants generally regarded as finalists. In fact, board chairman Philip G. Carson said Spangler had not applied for the job but was "nominated."

Committee members declined to characterize Spangler as a compromise candidate, and denied published reports that the panel had been split between members favoring a president who agreed the board should have greater control over university policy and those wanting a UNC insider with academic credentials.

"It is absolutely, positively not so," Jacob H. Froelich Jr., board vice chairman, said in an interview.

Froelich and Carson said Spangler had all the credentials sought by the search committee, including good administrative skills and a thorough knowledge of the state. They said they were not disturbed by his lack of experience in university administration.

ECU Trustee Louis Singleton said "we have a great group as the Board of Governors and I respect their decision-making process. I'm impressed with the actions of the Board of Governors in the past and think I'll be pleased with what they've done this time. I'm looking foward to his (Spangler's) tenure."

Another ECU board member, Max Joyner, said "I think he (Spangler) has done a good job in his other appointments and think he will do a good job here."

"I don't know Mr. Spangler personally," ECU trustee Bill Dansey said. "But it's interesting to me that he comes from outside the field of education as far as a profession goes. And as far as I know (Spangler) doesn't have a terminal degree, which I don't think is absolutely necessary."

Gov. Jim Martin said he was "very pleased" with Spangler's election.

"He has an enormous reputation and a lot of good will," Martin said. "I think you're going to find that he's going to do an exceptionally good job for us."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said Spangler was "an excellent choice."

"I would not want to be in his shoes, trying to follow the person who is considered to be America's top education leader," Jordan said. He said that Spangler was well thought of by legislators, but might be unable to match Friday's influence with the General Assembly.

Spangler was co-chairman of Gov. Jim Hunt's Task Force on Education and Economic Growth, which laid the groundwork for recent education initiatives, such as the career ladder program for teachers and the basic education program to raise minimum education levels across the state.

He was recommended to the full Board of Governors Friday morning by the search committee after more than a year of hunting for a new president.

Spangler said he would seek closer ties between the UNC system and the public-school system he is leaving. As state school board chairman, he has been outspoken in favor of such controversial reforms as longer school days and incentive pay for teachers.

Despite his background, Spangler said he did not plan to run the UNC system like a business because its major task was educating students.

"Education is not really a cost-effective activity," he said. "You have to entrust a great deal of freedom to the faculty to teach as they choose to teach."

"My intention is to follow the same goals which President Friday and the Board of Governors ... have pursued to make our university system great," Spangler said.

Among those goals, he said, were the promotion and protection of free inquiry, speech and research.

Spangler said he had not decided when to take office. Spangler, whose annual salary will be $110,000, said he wanted to move into the UNC General Administration Building in March and work "at his (Friday's) elbow" until he felt ready to take over.

Spangler added that he would ask all UNC administrative staff members to remain, including Raymond H. Dawson, senior vice president of the UNC system, who was a leading candidate for the presidency.

A UNC news release said Spangler would resign immediately from his position on the State Board of Education.

Diet Pill Sweeping U.S.
LOSE 10 POUNDS IN 10 DAYS WHILE YOU SLEEP
An amazing new super "dream pill" has recently been developed and perfected that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose up to 10 pounds in 10 days. Best of all, it allows you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods and still lose a pound a day or more starting from the very first day until you achieve your ideal weight and figure."
"PILL DOES ALL THE WORK"
According to the manufacturer, "the pill itself does all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation 'diet menus' to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise and NO hunger pangs." The pill is not a drug! It is 100% safe consisting of natural amino acids just like those found in everyday foods.
This remarkable new diet pill combines three natural substances which cause adults to lose weight fast by "tricking" the body into acting like a teenager. These nutritional substances, called L-arginine, L-ornithine and L-lysine, stimulate the body's growth hormone. Dr. Robert Harris, a specialist in nutritional medicine in Stafford Springs, Connecticut, was recently quoted "Growth Hormone may be what's responsible for allowing teenagers to down thousands of calories in hamburgers and other foods and still be thin as a rail."
"Growth Hormone is present in people up through the teenage years, then slowly diminishes with age. The Dream Pill allows adults to eat as much as they want — and still be thin. NOW AVAILABLE

Threats, Violence Break Out As Philippines Nears Election

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos reported Saturday that a plot was uncovered to kill him during a campaign stop, and challenger Corazon Aquino warned of possible violence if she loses the Feb. 7 presidential election because of fraud.

"I hate to think of what will happen because a frustrated and angry people might resort to violence, although ... I will still preach the non-violent way," Mrs. Aquino told reporters at a news conference.

Marcos spoke at a separate, almost simultaneous news conference. Both Marcos, in power for 20 years, and Mrs. Aquino said they expect to win next Friday's election, which Marcos called early to prove his popularity.

Marcos gave few details about the purported plot to assassinate him during a campaign visit last week to the central Philippines city of Iloilo. He did not say how the plot was discovered or why it failed.

Witnesses meanwhile said Saturday that the death toll in pre-election violence rose to 39 when gunfire raked a village dance attended by supporters of Mrs. Aquino, killing a 19-year-old woman.

Eight people, mostly teen-agers, were injured in the shooting at midnight Friday in San Vicente village, 210 miles southeast of Manila.

The witnesses said they did not see those firing, but that as soon as the shooting stopped about 30 soldiers rushed in and ordered everyone to raise their hands.

Village headman Gonzalo Marfil said in a radio interview in the provincial capital of Legaspi that the soldiers told him they fired only after a group of communist New People's Army guerrillas, who allegedly were among the dancers, fired at an approaching military patrol.

"I did not see any armed men. I saw only soldiers," said Marfil.

A military unit said in a news release to a Legaspi radio station that after the soldiers returned the guerrillas' fire, the rebels fled, "firing their firearms indiscriminately towards the civilians and the soldiers."

Also Saturday, Philippine Constabulary commander Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos announced he had placed his men on red alert to forestall more violence and counter reported communist plans to disrupt the election.

Marcos was asked to comment on reports on assassination plot against him was uncovered in Davao city, where he campaigned Wednesday.

"That was not the first," Marcos replied, and talked about another alleged plot, two days earlier, in Iloilo, 290 miles southeast of Manila.

Still Alive

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Blacks hurled gasoline bombs Saturday at a department store and a car in white areas west of Johannesburg in a rare outbreak of violence beyond the borders of the nation's black townships.

Police headquarters in Pretoria also said police used shotguns to disperse a crowd of blacks attacking a police patrol, killing two men in the small eastern Transvaal town of Wesselton. That brought the death toll to four since Friday night, hours after President P.W. Botha told Parliament that rioting was abating.

A police official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said two black men each threw a firebomb Saturday morning at the busy OK Bazaar department store in Randfontein, about 30 miles west of Johannesburg.

One gasoline bomb exploded in the clothing section of the store, starting a fire that caused $4,000 damage, but no one was hurt, he said. A white man who tried to stop the two blacks was stabbed in the back and thigh and was in serious condition in a hospital, the official reported.

He said that five hours later, three black men threw a gasoline bomb into a car at a stop sign outside Randfontein. The white owner escaped unharmed but the car was destroyed.

Through 17 months of anti-apartheid violence, whites have largely escaped involvement in fighting that has left more than 1,100 dead, nearly all of them black.

While the violence has been confined almost entirely to black townships, guerrilla leaders have said from exile that the fight against white rule will be carried to white areas.

The black townships surrounding the three white mining towns of Randfontein, Krugersdorp and Westonaria, which form the West Rand district, have been in turmoil for a month during a black boycott of the local Greyhound Bus Co. Residents have accused police of trying to break the boycott by forcing commuters out of private taxis and onto buses.

Tensions rose further when two white policemen were hacked to death in January by a crowd of black miners meeting on a field after the miners were ordered to disperse. In clashes between police and residents of a nearby township during the next 24 hours, riot patrols shot dead nine black men and detained hundreds in the investigation into the two officers' deaths.

At least four more blacks have been killed in the black townships in the West Rand in the past week. One of the victims, Joseph Mono, a 17-year-old from Munsieville township next to Krugersdorp, was buried Saturday.

Military Rule Lifted, Brazil Basks In Freedom

By PETER MUELLO
Associated Press Writer

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — After 21 years of military rule, freedoms of all sorts are creeping back into the lives of Brazil's 136 million people. For young Brazilians, it is a new experience.

The changes can be seen in open political rallies, vocal union halls, once-banned TV shows and public debate of alleged human rights abuses committed by the military regime that stepped aside last March.

But some critics, including powerful labor unions and the Roman Catholic Church, complain that reforms of the new civilian government have been timid and that it has left intact many of the old laws and practices that people now call the "authoritarian debris."

"The political 'opening' is real," said Antonio Pedro Borges de Oliveira, the secretary of culture of Rio de Janeiro state. "But the government itself hasn't changed. It merely incorporated democratic conquests won by the Brazilian people."

"Change Brazil" was the presidential campaign slogan of Tancredo Neves, a civilian moderate who last year defeated the military government's candidate in an electoral-college election. Neves died before taking office, but Sarney, who was vice president, promised on taking over to carry out Neves' plans for a New Republic.

One of the first changes was to remove the last restraints of censorship. Under the military regime, government censors strictly controlled the news media and arbitrarily banned books, movies, plays, records and even TV shows, although controls were relaxed in the military's later years.

"Censorship is hereby extinct," Justice Minister Fernando Lyra proclaimed at an "End of Censorship" rally in July. He officially un-banned books and movies which, although not prohibited in practice, were still on censorship lists.

The new chief censor, Coriolano Fagundes, a liberal, says his office should not be allowed to prohibit anything. He does, however, favor age restrictions for certain public performances deemed improper for minors.

Juca Chaves, a political humorist and musician, announced he would re-record 11 of 74 songs that were banned by military censors. One song, "Joao's Week," an allusion to former President Gen. Joao Figueiredo, reportedly was vetoed by the chief executive himself.

A new satiric newspaper called O Planeta Diario (The Daily Planet) has won a big following with its lampoons of public figures from Sarney to former military leaders. Since its debut last year, the monthly newspaper's circulation has jumped from 10,000 to 120,000.

On television, the hottest new show is a prime-time soap opera called "Roque Santeiro (Roque the Saintmaker), a comic story of passions and political intrigue in a backwoods Brazilian town. The show was banned by the government a decade ago on grounds it harmed public morality and national security. But it now is drawing record audiences, including the ex-justice minister who originally vetoed it.

Another TV first was the showing, uncut, of the X-rated movie "The Last Tango in Paris," with Marlon Brando. The film was seen nationwide on network televison except in Sao Paulo, the nation's biggest city, where a judge barred its showing on grounds it was too racy for children.

For the first time sex is openly used in advertisements, a practice formerly prohibited as being offensive to "good customs." Bare-breasted women are seen in advertisements for jeans, perfume and shower equipment during family-hour TV programs and in daily newspapers.

"Without a doubt this is related to the end of censorship," said Petronio Correa, president of the National Council of Advertising Self-Regulation. "The tendency is for more liberty."

Direct elections for president, suspended after the 1964 military coup, were legally reinstated and are expected to be held in 1988.

Restrictions were lifted for the forming of political parties, and dozens of groups of every political leaning have sprung up. These include the Communist Party, which had been outlawed for 40 years.

Another authoritarian holdover headed for the wastebasket is the National Security Law, which grants the president dictatorial powers and was last used in 1984. A new law submitted for Sarney's approval would restrict the president's powers and make it a crime to torture or hold political prisioners.

In international relations, the civilian government is warming relations with Cuba, shunned by the military. Sarney has promised to re-establish diplomatic relations, broken after the coup, although he hasn't said when.

Meanwhile, travel agencies invite Brazilians to take a "Cha-Cha-Charter" to Havana, Cuba's capital.

A book about Fidel Castro's views on religion became a best seller in Brazil. And TV viewers recently were able to watch a 2½-hour interview with Castro in which he discussed, among other topics, why he has given up smoking cigars — bad for the health, he said.

Brazil also has taken a newly independent stand in managing its economy and its $103 billion foreign debt, the Third world's largest. The government raised wages, even though it means continuing 234 percent inflation, and rejected austerity programs urged by overseas creditors and the International Monetary Fund, the United Nations-affliated financial organization, based in Washington.

Labor unions enjoy new liberty, after years of often-violent strikebreaking by the police. Last year Brazil had 740 strikes, compared to 112 in 1981.

Jair Meneguelli, head of the formerly outlawed Central Workers Union, which claims 12 million members, conceded police pressure is less now but said the government hasn't kept a promise to rewrite authoritarian anti-strike laws still on the books.

The activist sector of the Catholic clergy, here in the world's most populous Roman Catholic country, also says the new civilian government has not meaningfully "changed Brazil," as Neves' campaign had promised.

Libyan Sanctions Enter Full Force

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — President Reagan's economic sanctions against Libya came into full force at midnight Saturday, but Western diplomatic and industrial analysts said the world oil glut was far more damaging to Libya's economy than any American measures.

Western diplomats in Tripoli agree that the U.S. sanctions, far from hurting Col. Moammar Khadafy, actually strengthened the Libyan leader's faltering domestic popularity.

As of Sunday morning, it is a U.S. criminal offense for American citizens not married to Libyans to live or travel in the North African country or engage in any commercial transaction with Libyans.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said at least half the estimated 1,000 to 1,500 Americans working in Libya left before the embargo came into force.

Despite the abrupt departures, Libya's shipments of oil — its only significant export — remain virtually unaffected, running at a daily rate of 1 million barrels, according to reliable and authoritative European oil specialists.

Libya's oil income has fallen about 20 percent from the previous annual rate of about $8 billion, but this, say the specialists, is because oil prices have fallen about 20 percent since mid-December.

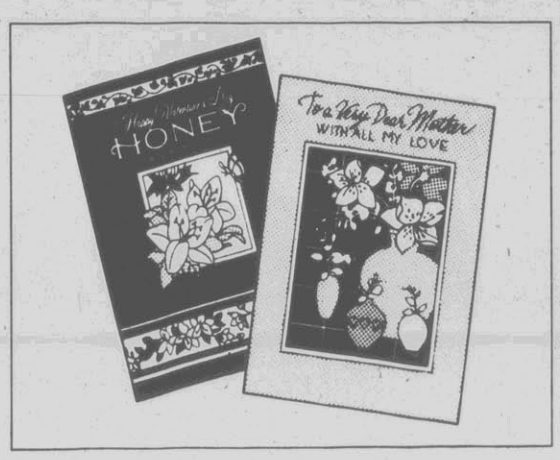

The sanctions, intended mainly to damage the Libyan oil industry, were ordered by Reagan in reprisal for Dec. 27 Palestinian terrorist attacks at Rome and Vienna airports. Reagan claimed Libya actively supported the raids. Khadafy denied the charge.

As the two countries engaged in a war of rhetoric, the U.S. 6th Fleet conducted a week of air exercises off Libya. The drill ended Friday without U.S. planes exchanging one shot with Khadafy's air force and minuscule navy.

Khadafy used both the sanctions and the 6th Fleet maneuvers to conduct a prolonged anti-American news media campaign and boost his own prestige as "the savior of the Libyan people."

Western diplomats, insisting on anonymity, said many of their Libyan contacts who have long expressed secret opposition to Khadafy now suggest the U.S. sanctions paradoxically have prolonged his 16-year-old rule.

Lawyers Contend Charges Against Kinston Woman Racially Motivated

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — Attorneys for a black Kinston woman indicted on charges of voting law violations say she is being prosecuted for political reasons and to discourage blacks from voting.

"We view this as an attack on civil rights to try and prosecute this lady where clearly no crime has been committed," said Paul Jones, a Kinston lawyer who is defending the Rev. Cozell Mills Wilson. "It's total nonesense."

Ms. Wilson, 60, was indicted in September 1985 on charges she violated procedures while serving as a special registrar during the 1984 elections. She is scheduled for trial April 7.

Mrs. Wilson has been accused by Lenoir County officials of allowing other people to fill out registration forms that she should have completed and registering people in the wrong precinct.

Mrs. Wilson said Thursday the charges are "a whole big to-do about nothing," and that the charges are racially and politically motivated.

Her lawyers contend the charges came nearly a year after the alleged violations when control of the Lenoir County Board of Elections shifted from Democrats to Republicans.

"What we've got is a lady who made some mistakes and got used as a political ping-pong ball in the Helms-Hunt race," said P. Lewis Pitts Jr. of the Christic Institute, a Winston-Salem law firm. He referred to the bitter U.S. Senate race between Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt.

Mrs. Wilson said several students from Elizabeth City State University volunteered to help her knock on doors in Kinston in October 1984 to encourage people to register to vote. She said she had a cast on her leg because because of surgery and used a walker.

Mrs. Wilson's lawyers said the county elections board, then controlled by Democrats, investigated the charges at the time, but found no evidence of wrongdoing and allowed people registered by Mrs. Wilson to vote.

"Our position is: If anything was improper, then why did the board of elections let all these people vote?" Jones said.

Former state GOP chairman David Flaherty said he learned of the registration allegations during the 1984 campaign.

"It came to me from some people down there who felt like there was an unusual effort to get certain categories of people registered," said Flaherty, now the chairman of the state Employment Security Commission. He said the categories were "Democratic, more than black."

"All I know is, when it happened we called the state board (of elections), called everywhere trying to get help, to stop it," he said.

A motion filed by Mrs. Wilson's attorneys last week to stop the prosecution said Flaherty turned over the allegations to U.S. Attorney Sam Currin, who sent an FBI agent to Lenoir County five days before the 1984 election.

Alex Brock, executive director of the State Board of Elections, said Currin referred the report to him and he sent it to District Attorney Donald Jacobs on Feb. 7, 1985. An SBI investigation of the charges was completed in March and Mrs. Wilson was indicted six months later.

IN THE STATE

Campaign Team

WENTWORTH, N.C. (AP) — A Madison husband and wife team have filed for election to the state House, saying their partnership will allow them to halve the cost of the campaign or be twice as effective.

Larry Wilson, 39, an administrator with the Western Rockingham City Schools, and Peggy Wilson, 40, a nurse in the school system, filed as Republicans in the May primary.

Four seats are up for election in November in the district that covers Alamance, Rockingham and part of Stokes counties.

Wilson said he and his wife generally agree on most issues, including the need to repeal the tax on food and medicine for the elderly, and the need for better paid teachers, smaller classes and more programs to fight child and drug abuse in the schools.

"We are both conservative candidates," Wilson said. "We won't agree 100 percent, but 98 percent of the time we are going to see eye-to-eye."

Beaufort Plans Shuttle Tribute

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — The town of Beaufort will pay tribute to one of its own Sunday with a memorial service honoring Mike Smith, the pilot of the space shuttle Challenger which exploded Tuesday 73 seconds after lift-off.

Gov. Jim Martin, Smith's widow and children and other family members are scheduled to attend the service at Beaufort Elementary School, the former high school from which Smith graduated.

Organizers say astroanut John Young and Vice Admiral Robert Dunn, U.S. Navy air Atlantic commander, are also expected to attend. The service will include a Navy "missing man" fly-by of jets, in which one plane is missing to signify the death of a pilot.

Smith, 40, had become a hometown hero in recent months, with banners and school bulletin boards set up for his first trip into space Tuesday.

Black ribbons were added to the displays after Smith and six others aboard the Challenger died in the fiery explosion.

Principal Curtis Lancaster, Smith's former football coach, told the 600 students that Smith had been an "outstanding student, athlete, Christian, father, all-American boy and a national and international hero."

Beaufort Mayor Joyce Fulford told them that Smith could have stood on the spot where they were standing.

"Perhaps someday there will be another astronaut among you or some other achievement and the town of Beaufort will be as proud of you as we are today of Mike," she said.

"That man was everything but a failure," said the Rev. Wilbur C. Teachey, pastor of the Ann Street United Methodist Church — the church Smith attended while growing up in Beaufort. "He was a great success. We are proud of him. The national is proud of him. And I believe God is proud of him."

Meanwhile Friday, special education teacher Maurine King, who grew up in the same neighborhood as Christa McAuliffe, the teacher who died in Tuesday's explosion, laid a wreath at the Wright Brothers Memorial in a ceremony honoring the seven astronauts.

Revenues Up

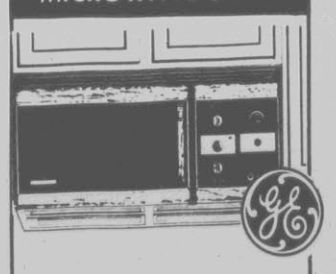

CHARLOTTE (AP) — North Carolina's Morehead City port facility has shown a dramatic increase in cargo and revenue six months into the present fiscal operating year, officials told the N.C. Ports Authority board of directors.

Morehead City revenues totaled $3.9 million with a profit of $706,731 for the six months ended Dec. 31, port officials said. That compared with $3.1 million in revenue and $42,908 in profit for the same period a year earlier.

Candidates Square Off At Forum

By ESTES THOMPSON
Associated Press Writer

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Republicans Rep. Jim Broyhill and David Funderburk are jockeying for position as the most conservative candidate in the U.S. Senate race.

"I'm a conservative and that's a conservative on anyone's scale," Broyhill said Friday at a forum for Republican and Democratic candidates at the North Carolina Press Association meeting.

"I'm running for the United States Senate as a conservative," Funderburk said.

Funderburk said Broyhill had voted to weaken defense spending, but Broyhill said defense was strong and the Pentagon needed fiscal controls.

Funderburk raised the abortion issue, saying he was for a ban on abortions except when the mother's life was threatened and that Broyhill had voted for abortion across-the-board. But Broyhill said he opposed abortion except in cases of rape or incest or when the mother's life was threatened.

Nine GOP and Democratic candidates for Senate attended the forum. Absent were former Gov. Terry Sanford of Durham, a Democrat who was at a National Municipal League meeting in Ohio, and Theodore Kinney, a Fayetteville Democrat and the only black candidate in the Senate race.

Other candidates at the forum were: Republican and White Patriot Party leader Glenn Miller of Angier, and Democrats Walt Atkins of Graham, Bill Belk of Charlotte, Milton Croom of Raleigh, Katherine Harper of Charlotte, Fountain Odom of Charlotte and Betty C. Wallace of Raleigh.

After the forum, Broyhill said he wasn't worried that the Congressional Club had endorsed Funderburk. The club is a political action committee founded in 1973 to retire Republican Sen. Jesse Helms' campaign debt.

"They've got a certain amount of following, but we've found many, many contributors to the Congressional Club are members of the Jim Broyhill campaign," said Broyhill, a 12-term GOP member of the U.S. House of Representatives from Lenoir.

Funderburk, a college professor at Buies Creek and former U.S. ambassador to Romania, said he would continue calling for debates with Broyhill. But Broyhill said his meeting with Funderburk at the press association — their first joint appearance before a major group — probably would be the last.

During a question-and-answer session, Funderburk complained that millionaire candidates, such as Broyhill and Belk, could spend any amount of their own money on a campaign. Others were limited to $1,000 individual contributions and $5,000 contributions from political action committees, such as the Congressional Club.

"As the son of a school teacher and a minister, I obviously don't have any personal wealth," Funderburk said.

Broyhill, whose family founded a furniture industry, said his wealth had no bearing on his campaign.

"I have had several campaigns and had no experience of having to spend my own money," except for personal expenses, Broyhill said. "I've had contributions from thousands of people. We're comfortable with the $1,000 limit."

Belk, whose family runs the Belk retail chain, said his family's wealth wasn't much help when they were limited to $1,000 individual contributions.

On other issues:

— Miller said armed troops could stop the large numbers of illegal immigrants crossing the United State's southern borders. Broyhill said legislation to eliminate jobs for the aliens was the answer.

— Odom said he would favor changing the electoral process to allow public funding of candidates so offices would "not be prostituted to the highest bidder."

— Mrs. Harper said government deregulation "means competition" and competition meant good products. She also said the Gramm-Rudman spending restraints should apply to federal salaries.

A lot of young adults aren't in company group health care plans. So they don't have any health care coverage at all. Because they figure they can't afford it. And they figure they probably won't need it anyway until they hit forty. But accidents and serious illnesses can happen before forty. Not frequently. But it only takes one incident to wipe out a savings account.

That's the bad news. The good news is that, because illnesses and accidents are infrequent in the 20 to 39 year-old age group, we can offer non-group coverage at really low rates. Lower than any of our competitors. That's because we don't lump all non-group customers together. So younger people aren't paying for the health care of people a lot older. Send us the coupon and we'll tell you more. But send it soon. You don't want to wait until you hit forty.

Refugee Reunions Can Be Difficult

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

The administrator of the refugee camp in Thailand near the Vietnamese border was apologetic, says Raleigh Bailey, who was at the camp seeking relatives of 200 Cambodian and Vietnamese refugees in North Carolina.

"It was a bizarre situation," Bailey, director of refugee programs for North Carolina Lutheran Family Services, recalled of his October journey. "The administrator said: 'The people seem uneasy today. It's a holiday, and the Vietnamese traditionally shell the camps on holidays. But you don't need to worry — they can see you. They don't want to shell when there are westerners here.'"

Bailey said family reunification is one of the most frustrating problems facing those who help refugees in North Carolina, which officials say has one of the most successful resettlement programs in the nation.

"The most critical need is bigger than North Carolina," Bailey said in a telephone interview from his Greensboro office. "There are many people here who have family members caught in the camps, but because of government bureaucracy, they can't get out.

"The policy is supposed to be family reunion, and it is in theory. But the political winds mean that doesn't always happen."

Two years ago, U.S. officials began rejecting immigration by people with alleged ties to Pol Pot's brutal Khmer Rouge dictatorship in Cambodia. Before, less than 30 percent of the applicants were rejected.

"You could make that claim about anyone," said Bailey. "Anyone alive had to have some degree of complicity — even the people here (in North Carolina) now. It was a matter of salute Pol Pot or be killed."

Bailey charged that the Thai government deliberately placed the refugee camp close to the border — and Vietnamese artillery — as part of a policy of "humane deterrence" to keep people away. The policy also allows the camps to run out of food periodically, he said.

Part of the problem is that allowing the refugees further into Thailand would give the Vietnamese an excuse to invade, said Bailey, who is also chairman of the Refugee Program Advisory Council. The council advises the refugee assistance office of the state Department of Human Resources.

North Carolina has settled some 6,000 refugees since the mid-1970s, most of them from Southeast Asia, said Bob Edmundson, the office's director.

From January through October 1985, some 514 refugees settled in the state. They included 225 Cambodians, 193 Vietnamese, 12 Laotians, 27 Romanians, 11 Poles, 10 Ethiopians, 10 Hungarians, seven Iranians, four Zambians and one unknown, he said.

The office works with voluntary agencies, primarily Lutheran Family Services and Catholic Social Services, to help the refugees find jobs and learn English, said Edmundson. The sponsoring organizations provide the service and the state reimburses them from about $500,000 in funds provided annually by the federal government.

"We've got a lot of family reunification cases now," he said. "That really is more the direction ... than it was five or seven years ago."

Formerly, refugees of one nationality tended to concentrate in certain areas, such as Cubans in Miami. The idea now is to disperse them around the country but still keep families intact, he said.

Democrats Gather At Posh Resort For Election Pep Talks

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va. (AP) — A top Democratic Party official said Saturday it's time to bury the notion that the Republicans are on their way to becoming the nation's majority party.

Realignment — the political code word for a shift of voters from the Democratic Party to the Republican Party — "is brain dead," said Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

"It's being kept alive by conventional wisdom," Coelho told House Democrats at a meeting to discuss election-year issues and politics.

President Reagan remains popular, Coelho said, but "his popularity will be irrelevant in 1986."

Early last year, though, the group was still reeling from Reagan's 49-state, landslide re-election.

"Everybody was in a state of near shock following the election," said House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas.

This year, there is no hand-wringing at the conference, attended by approximately 100 of the 253 Democratic House members.

"We're no longer looking for people to tell us what we've done wrong in the past," Coelho said.

"The house will tip (to Republican control) at some point as the Senate did. I think we will see a number of governors tip in the 1986 election," Teeter said.

He said all public opinion polls show more and more voters identifying with the Republican Party. But at the same time, Republicans will probably not gain contro of the house until the next decade, he said.

Pool ...

"Our feeling is there is a need for this facility, and while it is a little far way from the people, a service is provided," he said. "People take cars and buses to go places, and using such means to get here doesn't sound like such a great inconvenience."

About 300 individuals from 10 organizations now use the pool, but the fees collected have not been nearly enough to cover costs, according to ECVC officials, who add the pool is quite popular with senior citizens because it's easily accessible.

"We've tried our best to keep it operating, and we've been struggling for a long time," he said, adding that it hasn't become "a critical issue until now."

The pool had been running on the strength of a $90,000 federal grant which was not available in the 1984-1985 fiscal year, and ECVC officials say it is unlikely they will receive it again.

"The mission of the ECVC is to train the handicapped in vocational training and prepare them for the job market," said Daneel le Roux, ECVC's executive director. "The gymnasium, auditorium and pool were designed specifically for the handicapped and that's somewhat outside of our mission.

"The person who planned and built the pool provided that extra mile for the handicapped in the community, but there were no funds available to sustain and underwrite the operation," le Roux said.

ECVC officials said the state won't assist in covering operation costs of the pool.

"They won't give us a dime to operate the pool. They say it is not our job. It's not required nor expected," le Roux said.

Gantz and le Roux agree the center cannot continue to pay the bills for the pool.

"The money to keep the pool operating this year came from the ECVC's production fund, which is intended for the handicapped," le Roux said. "We can't continue to do that. We can't assume the loss and jeopardize our existence."

"We've been syphoning money and effort into that pool, and that's not productive to the 300 clients," Gantz said.

Le Roux says ECVC is examining a variety of solutions to keep the pool operational.

"We're investigating every angle and we'll talk to anyone with an interest," he said. "We'll even negotiate with someone to operate, lease or rent the premises."

Gantz agrees that renting the facilities is a viable solution.

"We're very willing to lease the pool, gym and the weightroom," he said, adding that only a small percentage of the clients at the center use the pool.

Gantz said he's not looking to make a profit through an agreement.

"We want the costs reasonably covered and are willing to absorb some of the costs, but people shouldn't be coming to us looking for a good deal," he said. "An awful lot of calls have come in, and we welcome inquiries from any organization, but they have to be willing to put in the resources."

Other means of raising funds for the pool include private and federal grants, but ECVC officials say they prefer not to rely on them because they are too uncertain.

Center officials have been busy contacting local businesses to see if they are interested in utilizing the facilities.

"We've contacted businesses and industries, but so far they can only use the pool a few prime hours during the day," le Roux said.

Le Roux says the county has offered limited help, but the City Council has been of no help.

"They just don't know what to do," he said.

Greenville City Manager Gail Meeks said the Recreation and Parks Commission has been contacted and the situation is under review and study.

"It's too early in the study to decide what is feasible to do, and we don't know what the ECVC will do," Ms. Meeks said, adding that there are no detailed discussions at this time on the subject.

County Manager Reginald Gray claims the availability of funds from the county hinges on the tax collection situation.

"The (Pitt) Board of Commissioners has asked me to investigate the financial situation of the county and its emergency fund," Gray said. "We'll have to look at all avenues and the tax situation, and then we'll see how we stand."

Center officials are hopeful that area high schools and colleges will utilize the facilities.

"This is the only indoor pool in the county aside from the two at East Carolina University, and they can't afford to let it go to waste," le Roux said.

Pitt Community College has offered swimming classes at the ECVC pool, but not enough students have expressed an interest in swimming.

"We discussed getting involved with the pool at one time, but the students have to provide their own transportation and not many are interested in swimming," said Charles Russell, Pitt Community College president.

Russell said the school hopes to continue utilizing the facilities if the pool remains open.

Meanwhile, officials at East Carolina University say the school's two pools meet their needs.

"The pools in Memorial Gym and Minges Coliseum give ECU the facilities it needs," said Angelo Volpe, ECU vice chancellor.

Meanwhile another ECU official says ECVC should hire an outsider to run the pool.

"I think they should hire an aquatic person to manage the pool and gym so it could be self-sufficient," said Ray Martinez, chairman of ECU's health and sciences department.

Martinez, who helped design ECVC's pool, believes a package can be put together which includes aerobics and water activities to entice industry and the general public.

"If they could find someone to set this up and teach people in fitness classes, it might work," Martinez said.

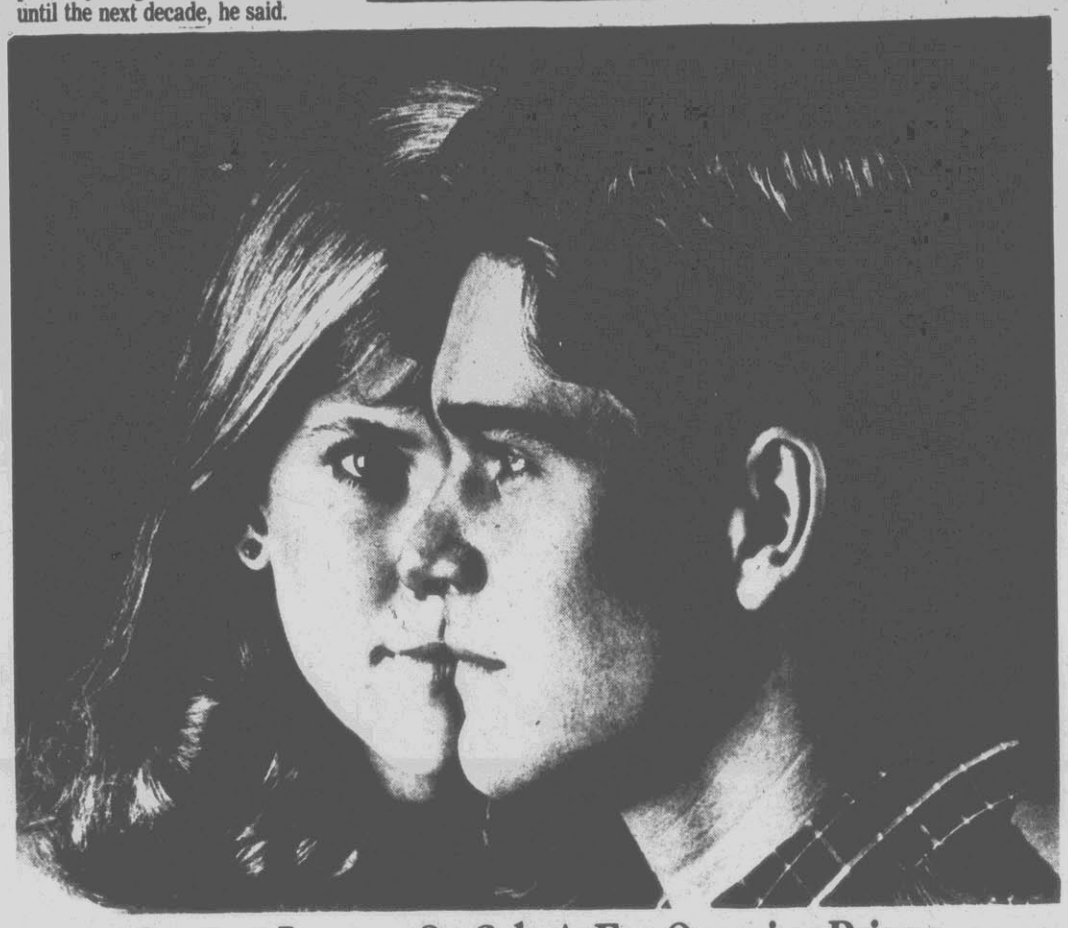

Meanwhile, ECVC officials continue to look for someway to meet the cost of running the pool.

"The costs here are well-established, but costs may be less and it may be run better by someone else," Gantz said. "We didn't create the costs. The facility is here and we're just trying to keep it a first class operation."

While ECVC officials try to win their battle against time and a dwindling supply of money, they hope someone will step forward to rescue the facilities.

"It could take up to $2 million to replace this facility," le Roux said. "The people in this area simply can't afford to let this resource go to waste."

Pitt Road Projects To Be Considered

Several major Pitt County road projects will be up for consideration at the Feb. 14 Board of Transportation meeting scheduled in Raleigh.

The largest of the contracts scheduled for consideration is the final link in the four-laning of U.S. 264 between Greenville and Washington. The contract to be considered calls for grading, drainage, structures and paving on 6.855 miles of the new U.S. 264 in Pitt County from southeast of State Road 1538-John Grey Road to SR 1565-River Road.

Randy D. Doub of Greenville, a board member who represents Division II, said the estimated cost of the project is $5 million. "Hopefully, the bids will be reasonable and the contract can be awarded so that we can continue with the prompt completion of this four-lane project," he said last week.

The board is also expected to consider a contract for grading, drainage, curb and gutter and paving on .17 miles of SR 1907 (Church Street) in Grifton. The estimated cost of this project is $105,000.

The board also will consider approving Small Urban Construction Projects in Ayden, Fountain and Farmville with a total price tag of over $62,000.

Doub said the Ayden project provides for removal of asphalt and resurfacing on N.C. 102 (Third Street). Cox Says Residence Is In Greenville Township

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Former Mayor Percy Cox, now a candidate for the Pitt County Board of Commissioners, says he is a legal resident of Greenville Township and is qualified to seek the area's seat on the county board.

"I'm a Greenville Township resident," Cox said when asked about his residency in the wake of queries about his eligibility.

Cox acknowledged that he has been questioned about his residency. He explained that the property around his house is partially in the Greenville Township and partially in the Winterville Township, but his entire house is in the Greenville Township.

Cox's assertion is coroborated by a letter to him written by County Manater Reginald Gray.

Gray's letter, dated Jan. 18, 1980, stated: "This is to advise that I have had the Pitt County Tax Department research the property and discovered that the property is actually in two townships, with the woodline of the old Arthur Tripp property being the dividing line between Greenville and Winterville Townships. This means that your home is actually built in the wooded area; therefore, located in Greenville Township, and the cleared land to the rear is in Winterville Township.

"When you move into your new residence off of SR 1726, you will be a resident of Greenville Township, according to research done by the Pitt County Tax Department."

Cox said Gray's letter was written in response to an inquiry he had made about where he should list his house for taxes.

Margaret Hardee, Pitt County Board of Elections supervisor, said she is satisfied that Cox meets residency requirements. The Board of Elections office has Gray's letter on file, along with a map on record in the office of the Register of Deeds of Pitt County which shows the line running through his property with the house on the Greenville side of the township boundary.

Cox, who has served three terms as mayor of Greenville, has had his residency questioned before. That was while he was running for mayor and maintaining an apartment inside the Greenville city limits when he was in the process of attempting to sell the house in which he now resides, located outside the corporate limits.

"We had it up for sale at the time, but changed our minds," he said.

According to Harris, the city is hoping area contractors will take advantage of the opportunity to buy portions of acreage earmarked for residential purposes and build affordable housing — in the $30,000 to $40,000 range. The city also will be selling acreage along 14th and Railroad streets and north of 12th Street that has been designated for commercial and industrial uses. Of the total 17.4 acres for sale, .7 acres are zoned office and institutional, 6.7 industrial, .7 acres commercial, and 9.3 acres residential. Seven rehabilitated homes will be sold, too.

Two lots along 14th street have already been purchased for commercial uses, according to Harris. Phil Flowers, a local businessman, plans to use the property he bought from the city as a parking lot for his $2 million office complex located at the corner of Evans and 14th streets. Ollie Harrington, a local construction contractor, is building an office on a 14th Street lot recently purchased from the city.

Other recent commercial investments in the South Evans area have been made by DUCO, which built an $800,000 office and storage complex on Evans Street. Coastal Electronics has made improvements to an existing building and Mercer Glass and General Heating have expanded their facilities, bringing the total of recent commercial investments in the community to approximately $3 million.

According to Flowers, interest in commercial potential of the South Evans area is due partly to the city's revitalization efforts and the proposed widening of Evans Street in 1990. However, a low-interest loan program sponsored by the city, area lending institutions and Evergreen, a local, non-profit organization interested in the betterment of Greenville, has provided an impetus for investors as well, he said.

Through the program, qualifying applicants can receive loans at interest rates below prime to renovate and remodel commercial and residential rental properties.

Judge Approves FCX Sale

RALEIGH (AP) — The sale of FCX Inc.'s North Carolina assets to a Virginia-based cooperative is "good for the cooperative and the farmer in general," a federal bankruptcy judge says.

U.S. Bankruptcy Judge A. Thomas Small approved the sale Friday of the assets to Southern States Cooperative Inc. of Richmond Va., for about $26.4 million. That action came after a group of concerned FCX employees apparently received assurances that their benefits would be protected.

Under an agreement between the cooperatives, Southern States will pay 70 percent of book value for all of FCX's operating assets, which include feed mills, fertilizer plants, farm supply distribution centers, garages, grain facilities and about 60 service and merchandise outlets.

Students ...

fate of the financial aid program has been uncertain. But under President Ronald Reagan's budget cuts, and redesigning of programs, Edwards said the verification process is eliminating fraud in financial aid, though the new procedures require more work.

"We're like a lot of other financial aid offices in that we're understaffed. A lot of time is spent corresponding with the student about the progress of the program, as well as making sure information is correct and verifying the students grades. That's hard to do when you don't have the staff to do it. From a philosophical point of view the program is working great. But from management's view, the program has slowed down."

At Pitt Community College, financial aid director Nancy Taylor said the program there is "very good. There's plenty of money — especially in the Pell Grant. I know there may be some drastic cuts in the future, but I don't think it will be to the extent that a student who wants to learn can't because of money."

In preparing the yearly tedious application process, which involves answering questions about the parent's and student's income, Pam Spell, assistant financial aid director at ECU, said parents should get the student involved in the process. "The student is the one who the financial aid office will be dealing with, and if a question comes up, it will help us resolve the problem a lot quicker," she said.

Parent's should also be aware of certain "scams" promising the student a guaranteed student loan. "We've had reports that an insurance salesman tells a parent or student that he or she has to buy life insurance in order to get a guaranteed loan," said Ms. Barbee. "They are not required to buy insurance, nor does buying it guarantee that they will get the loan."

Ms. Barbee said if anyone had any questions about a program, and especially before signing anything, they should call the school's financial aid office.

In other misrepresentation cases, some companies will advertise scholarship information for a fee, the aid counselors said. "The types of financial aid programs the company will usually send," Ms. Spell said, "are the same ones we (financial aid offices) could have explained over the phone."

Students Suggest 'Rambo' Solution

ECU News Bureau

North Carolina student legislators passed four resolutions during an annual session at East Carolina University, among them a recommendation that terrorists be considered "international outlaws."

Citing the recent increase in terrorist attacks against Americans, the students approved the anti-terrorism resolution in hopes of demonstrating the need for new methods of dealing with the problem.

The intent of the so-called "'Rambo resolution' is to make a clear statement of our opposition to persons who commit acts of terrorism and to show the need for new ways to deal with terrorists," said ECU student Kirk Shelley, statewide membership chairman and author of the resolution.

The North Carolina Student Legislature is an organization of college and university students from across the state. Although it is not a law-making body, more than 40 percent of the NCSL's legislative ideas have been placed into law.

Among other proposals approved by the students was a resolution recommending the placement of warning labels on containers of smokeless tobacco sold in North Carolina.

The student legislators said the warning labels are needed because of the increased use of smokeless tobacco by teen-agers and the dangers involved with the use of the product.

The students also approved a resolution supporting the right of families to refuse to allow medical treatment of terminally ill relatives.

"We realize such a situation can be hard on the family, both emotionally and financially. Our organization feels the decision to end a relative's life should not be left up to a stranger," said NCSL delegate Bryan Lassiter.

The legislature also passed a resolution endorsing open hearings on congressional ethics in the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.

Pirates Hold Off American, 65-63

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — East Carolina University used the foul line to great advantage and held off American Univeristy, 65-63, last night. It marked the first time since the Pirates joined the ECAC-South, now the Colonial Athletic Association, that East Carolina has won three conference games in a row.

Led by Marchell Henry's nine of ten at the stripe, the Pirates cashed in on 29 of 39 shots to overcome the Eagles. Henry finished the game with 23 points for the Pirates.

It wasn't a game that the Pirates played perfectly, however, by any means. They blew an early lead and fell well behind the Eagles, who built up a 14-point lead with 9:25 showing in the first half, 22-8. The Pirates, however, rallied and cut the lead back to nine, 28-19, with 4:16 left on a pair of free throws by Leon Bass. Curt Vanderhorst hit a jumper to cut it to five and Bass then trimmed it to 28-26 with a jumper.

Jeff Kelly made two free throws to tie it up, and after American went back out, Bass made two more at the strip for a 30-30 deadlock with 11 seconds to go. Jack Turnbill then made a turnaround jumper from the lane with three seconds to go, giving the Pirates a 32-30 lead at intermission.

In the second half, the Pirates steadily pulled away, building up a 51-42 lead on Vanderhorst's free throws with 10:27 to go. But this time, it was the Eagles who rallied, cutting its back to 57-55 with 3:29 to go in the game on Pat Witting's jumper.

East Carolina pushed back out by seven, 62-55, on Henry's layup, but Witting scored again to make it 62-57. Then, after Vanderhorst missed at the line, Mike Sampson scored on a drive to make it 62-59 with 51 seconds left to play.

Keith Sledge made the first of two free throw attempts with 46 seconds showing and Witting followed at the 36 second mark to cut it to 63-61.

Kelly missed at the line but American turned it over and Vanderhorst connected on two free throws to make it 65-61 with ten seconds to play. Witting made the final basket for American with one second left and the Pirates ran out the clock.

Pirate Coach Charlie Harrison thought that the game was really decided in the first half when the Pirates patiently came back on American. "Our shots wouldn't fall and they were breaking out," he said, "but our kids kept to the boards and showed a lot of heart and that's the way you win games on the road.

Harrison praised the play of John Williams, Kelly and Turnbill off the bench. "I think Leon Bass showed maturity and mental toughness tonight playing sick. Keith Sledge was questionable when we started the trip with a hyperextended knee but he played well. Marchell Henry gave us a steady game and Curt did what he had to do."

Harrison explained that one of the Pirate goals this year was to make strides in the league. "We've semi-accomplished that, but there's a lot of league games left to play. I hope the momentum we've got will teach them not to look over their shoulders at how to lose, but at how to win. We made minor adjustments in the first half and were patient and didn't try to force things when we got down. We got to the foul line so we were resting and scoring at the same time and we did that by going inside.

"I really think that American was shellshocked when we cut their first half lead because last year we lost our composure when they got up on us. I think that shows our players believe in themselves."

In addition to Henry's 23 oints, the Pirates got 16 from Vanderhorst and 13 from Bass. Both Henry and Bass pulled in ten rebounds as the Pirates held a 39-31 advantage in that department.

Chuck West led American with 23 points, matching Henry, while Frank Ross had 14 and Witting had 10.

East Carolina goes to 10-9 overall and 5-3 in league play, tied with George Mason for third place. American falls to 7-12 overall and 1-7 in the CAA.

East Carolina continues its road trip on Monday, visiting Navy for a 7:30 p.m. game. They continue on to meet Wake Forest in Winston-Salem on Wednesday night and they return home against league-leading Richmond on Saturday.

Alarie Paces Duke Past Wake By 68-58 Score

By RICK SCOPPE
Associated Press Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — Fifth-ranked Duke turned it on just enough to turn Wake Forest off Saturday.

Led by Mark Alarie's game-high 20 points, the Blue Devils eased past Wake Forest 68-58 in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game.

"Our intensity wasn't concentrated for 40 minutes," Alarie said. "We concentrated at moments, but not the whole game.

"We pride ourselves on our mental preparation for a game," he said. "Today we started out a litle sluggishly. Maybe we were a little complacent."

Wake Forest coach Bob Staak said his team played well, but poor shooting and Duke's power on the boards was the difference. The Blue Devils outrebounded Wake Forest 47-26.

"If you take a look at the stat sheet, you wouldn't think it would have been a 10-point game," Staak said. "Our players just scrapped and hustled."

The Demon Deacons' scrapping forced Duke into 22 turnovers to only six for Wake Forest.

"Had we shot the ball a bit better, then things would have been different," Staak said. "We certainly made a run at them, and I think they thought they had all they could handle today."

Duke held a 38-23 halftime lead, but the Demon Deacons outscored the Blue Devils 12-2 over a 2½-minute span in the second half to cut the lead to 46-39 with 12:51 left.

Johnny Dawkins, who had 13 points for Duke, pushed the lead back to double-digits after he was fouled by Tyrone Bogues, who complained and was whistled with a technical foul. Dawkins hit all three free throws to give Duke a 51-39 lead with 11:46 left and Wake Forest never got closer than eight the rest of the way.

Duke upped its record to 20-2 overall and 7-2 in the ACC — the earliest the Blue Devils have won 20 games in a season. Wake Forest fell to 6-15 and 0-10 in losing its ninth straight.

Duke trailed early by two, but Alarie hit two baskets and a pair of free throws to key a 14-2 run over a 4½ minute span to give the Blue Devils an 18-8 lead with 11:22 left in the opening half.

Wake Forest, which lost to the Blue Devils 92-63 on Jan. 16, cut the lead to six, only to see Duke surge to a 30-16 cushion on a dunk by Dawkins with 4:25 left.

Wake Forest was led by Rod Watson's 14 points, while Mark Cline and Bogues added 13 each and Arthur Larkins 12.

Jay Bilas added 10 for Duke, eight in the second half.

Bethea, Foster Guide Lady Pirates To Victory

BY DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Alma Bethea pumped in 21 points and Loraine Foster came off the bench to score 20 points as East Carolina University downed American University 73-56 Saturday night in Colonial Athletic Association basketball action.

The victory raised the Lady Pirates record to 6-1 in the CAA and 16-6 overall.

Coach Emily Manwaring called the game crucial to ECU following Monday's 82-55 trumping at the hands of James madison Monday night.

"We took a step forward tonight instead of a step back," she said. "Madison could do no wrong. They did everything right."

Manwaring said she wasn't sure if the one-sided loss to James Madison shook up the Lady Pirates.

"There's still a question as to how good we are," Manwaring said. "We're starting to make progress, but we still have to rid ourselves of the mental mistakes."

Manwaring had nothing but praise for Foster, who logged 33 minutes of playing time after practicing only twice during the week.

Foster, coming back and shooting the way she did, was the missing ingredient against James Madison, she said. "She gives the players confidence and a lift."

"We made all the foul shots (12-12) and that won the game for us," Manwaring said.

Manwaring claimed the ECU players will feel less pressure if they continue to win.

"The better we play, the less pressure there'll be," she said. Then, we'll know what we're capable of doing."

ECU shot 49 percent from the floor for the game, but shot 90 percent from the free throw line.

The Lady Pirates scored first in the ballgame on a shot by Sylvia Bragg, but found themselves quickly down 5-2 following a three-point play by American's Kelly Lane and a bucket by Kia Cooper.

Bethea then scored six straight points to put ECU ahead 8-5.

Dana Diller sank a 15-foot jumper and Lane scored from inside to put American back in the lead 9-8.

The Lady Eagle tied the score 25-25 with 4:34 to go behind the strong outside shooting of Dana Diller, who scored 10 points, all in the first half.

Both sides traded buckets until Foster broke a 31-31 tie after putting in a rebound of her own shot. Bethea followed with a bucket underneath to make it 35-31.

The Lady Pirates returned from the locker room and opened up 43-35 lead on a 12-foot jumper by Foster with 17:27 remaining in the contest.

The Lady Eagles came storming back when Beth Shearer scored six consecutive points to tie the score at 51-51 with 8:22 remaining.

The Lady Eagles retaliated on an eight-foot jumper by Lane and a 15-footer by Jody Thornton to close the gap to 57-55 with 4:04 to go.

Bragg sank a ten-footer, but Lane sank one of two free throws to make the score 59-56 with 2:08 remaining.

Bragg, Delphine Mabry, Foster and Bethea sank 12 of 12 attempts from the line in the final two minutes to put ECU ahead 71-56 with 12 seconds remaining.

Lane led American University with 18 points, while Thornton, last week's CAA Player-of-the Week, was held to just eight points.

Bragg added 16 points for ECU.

AP Sports Writer

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Brad Daugherty said top-ranked North Carolina used lessons learned in its loss to Virginia to post an 85-67 victory over Clemson in Altantic Coast Conference basketball Saturday.

"Coming off a loss is always disappointing, but you can also learn," said Daugherty, who scored 21 points to pace the Tar Heels. "We have a very experienced team, all the guys took everything in stride and tried to make the best of it."

Tar Heel coach Dean Smith said it felt good to claim the victory after losing to the Cavaliers, but he criticized the Smith Center crowd for being a little too reserved in its support.

"I thought the crowd was dead," Smith said. "The people didn't make much noise. I guess they just came to be entertained by good basketball and perhaps there is nothing wrong with that."

Kenny Smith added 16 points for the Tar Heels, who improved to 22-1 and 6-1 in the ACC, leaving them tied with third-ranked Georgia Tech for the conference lead pending Tuesday's meeting between the two teams in Atlanta.

Clemson coach Cliff Ellis said his team was armed with the perfect game plan when it tried to slow the tempo and work for the good shot.

"I thought we executed our offense well until we got close to the basket," Ellis said. "If the opening was there, then take it. We did and the shots just did not go down for us."

Clemson held a 14-13 lead after Grayson Marshall's jumper off the fast break at the 11:59 mark. But North Carolina ran off six straight points, four by Daugherty, to take a 19-14 edge with 9:25 left in the half.

The Tigers closed to within 23-21 when Marshall hit a pair of free throws at the 5:43 mark. But Steve Hale scored six points and Warren Martin added four as North Carolina scored 14 points and limited Clemson to one field goal en route to a 37-23 halftime lead.

North Carolina, which shot 60.7 percent in the first half, kept up the pace at 59.3 percent in the second period, stretching its lead to 70-52 on Jeff Lebo's jumper at the 5:03 mark.

Hale finished with 14 points, hitting six of seven from the floor, while Joe Wolf hit all four of his field goal attempts for 11 points. Lebo added 10 for the Tar Heels.

Clemson dropped to 14-7 and 2-4. The Tigers have not beaten North Carolina in Chapel Hill in 31 games. Marshall and Horace Grant scored 15 points each as the Tigers shot 40 percent from the floor.

Zoeller Takes 3-Stroke Lead

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Fuzzy Zoeller casually contrived a 66, took a 3-stroke lead and then touched off a mild controversy Saturday after the second round of the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

"I am not happy with the PGA (Tour's) decision to lift, clean and place," Zoeller said after his 6-under-par effort at Pebble Beach produced a 36-hole total of 135.

"We played in the slop at Spyglass (in Thursday's first round), and now the guys playing there get to tee it up (at Spyglass). That's a 3- or 4-stroke advantage," Zoeller said.

But Tom Watson was having none of it.

"Then why am I three shots behind?" Watson asked after a 5-under-par 67 at Spyglass Hill, a course he described as "very, very squishy." He reached the tournament halfway point at 138.

"I don't buy Fuzzy's argument," said Watson, a two-time winner of this title when it was called the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

After heavy rains had washed out Friday's play, PGA Tour officials ruled that players could lift, clean and place balls in the fairways for the remainder of the tournament.

Conley Second In Coastal Meet

MOREHEAD CITY — Washington High School, which won the regular season Coastal Conference wrestling title, added the league's tournament title Saturday afternoon.

Washington finished the tournament, held at West Carteret High School, with 176½ points. D.H. Conley, the defending champ, which had finished fourth in the regular season race, took second place with 145½. West Carteret took third with 140½ followed by Havelock with 70½ and West Craven with 14.

"We accomplished both of our tournament goals," Coach Milt Sherman said. "We wanted to finish in the top two and we wanted to bring home a medal for each of the 11 wrestlers we had. We ony brought home ten, but we felt that a scorekeeper's error cost us the other medal — not something that happened on the mat."

Washington took first place in six weights, adding four seconds, two third and a fourth. Conley won four championships, four seconds, two thirds and a fourth.

Washington winners included Mike Landen (108), Brian Stokes (122), Marty Hodges (129), Marcus Miller (141), Larry Harris (158), and Mark Biddix (188).

Going into next week's sectionals, to be held at Conley, Farris is 23-2-1, Jackie King is 21-5, Adkins is 22-2-1, Anderson is 20-0, and Clemons is 22-4.

Kentucky Makes A Rare Visit

AP Sports Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Eighth-ranked Kentucky makes a rare visit to the heart of Atlantic Coast Conference country Sunday to face North Carolina State in a college basketball showdown.

The Wildcats, will be playing their second game in three days following an 81-71 triumph over Southeastern Conference rival Auburn on Friday. All-America Kenny Walker scored 24 points in the triumph and wants to put on just as good a show for the national television audience.

"Anytime you talk about national TV, you know the country's eyes will be on you and you want to do your best," Walker said. "I've never been down there, but I'm sure it will be a hard-fought ball game."

Walker, averaging 20.1 points and 7.1 rebounds per game, scored eight points in the final five minutes to guide the Wildcats to their 18th victory in 20 games, as well as their ninth victory in 10 outings in the SEC.

Kentucky was headed for a runaway against the Tigers before a 17-4 run tied the score at 63. Walker scored six points in an 8-2 run to put the Wildcats back in command, only to see Auburn rally to within 71-69 with 2:08 left.

The issue was decided on an eight-point Kentucky run that provided a victory — and a concern — for Coach Eddie Sutton.

"I hope we have enough energy left to play N.C. State," Sutton said. "It's been a tough week. It'll be the land of the giants. We'll have to play a bigger lineup."

N.C. State, 13-6 after losing to fifth-rated Georgia Tech Wednesday night in an ACC matchup, boasts of 6-foot-11 sophomore Chris Washburn in the middle and 6-10 freshman Charles Shackleford on one of the wings. Six-foot-five senior Nate McMillan runs the attack for the Wolfpack.

Washburn, averaging 15.3 points and 7.4 rebounds, is the only Wolfpack scorer averaging in double figures. McMillan is scoring at a 9.9-point clip. The Wolfpack offense has sparkled at times, sputtered at others. Coach Jim Valvano noted in the loss to the Yellow Jackets that his team lost its composure and Georgia Tech pulled away for the victory.

Avenging a 22-point loss to the Tigers in Memphis Monday night, Virginia Tech moved to a 10-point second half lead, then held off a late charge by the Tigers, who could have tied it with eight seconds left on a jumper by Dwight Boyd but the shot was no good. Curry, who had just 12 points Monday, scored 16 of his 28 in the second half.

Memphis State, now 20-1 and 5-1 in the Metro Conference, entered the game with a chance to move up to No. 1 after top-ranked North Carolina suffered its first loss Thursday night to Virginia.

Virginia Tech took the lead for good with 10:55 remaining on Johnny Fort's layup, which gave the Hokies a 51-50 advantage. Virginia Tech then went on a 14-5 run capped by Curry's two free throws with 6:36 remaining for a 65-55 lead.

But Memphis State kept pressing, closing to 73-69 on an 8-foot baseline jumper by Baskerville Holmes with 1:01 to play.

William Bedford's follow with 33 seconds rremaining cut the gap to two points again at 74-72. But Boyd missed the jumper and Tech held on for the win.

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Danny Manning scored 18 points and Greg Dreiling had 14, including 12 in the second half, as fourth-ranked Kansas posted a 64-50 Big Eight basketball victory over Kansas State Saturday.

The underdog Wildcats, riding an emotional wave after Thursday night's unexpected announcement of Coach Jack Hartman's pending retirement, managed to stay close until the early minutes of the second half.

The 7-foot-1 Dreiling, with a big height advantage over Kansas State's 6-9 Ron Meyer, helped the Jayhawks pull away from a 30-27 halftime lead and bring their record to 20-3 overall and 5-1 in the conference.

Joe Wright, who led the Wildcats with 19 points, hit a short jumper to bring K-State to within 32-31 early in the second half.

But then two straight baskets by Dreiling quickly boosted the Jayhawks into a five-point lead and they never were threatened. Ron Kellogg had 12 points for Kansas.

It was the fifth loss in six games for the Wildcats, now 13-8 for the season and 1-5 in the Big Eight.

Hartman, one of the nation's most respected basketball coaches and in his 16th year at Kansas State, announced Thursday night that he would retire at the end of the season. He saw his Wildcats lose to longtime rival Kansas for the sixth consecutive time.

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — David Johnson scored 16 of his 20 points in the second half as sixth-ranked Oklahoma overcame a nine-point deficit to beat Missouri, 88-84, in Big Eight Conference basketball Saturday.

Johnson scored 14 points — 10 in a row at one point — in a 22-7 run that saw the Sooners come from a 59-50 deficit to take 72-66 lead with 6:19 remaining. Oklahoma never trailed again.

The Sooners, winning for the 45th consecutive time at home, improved to 20-1 overall and 5-1 in the Big Eight. Missouri dropped to 17-8 and 4-3.

With Derrick Chievous leading the way, Missouri took a nine-point lead at one stage of the first half and wound up leading 43-37 at halftime. Chievous scored 13 points in the first half and wound up with a game-high 24.

Oklahoma helped the Missouri cause in the first half by missing 10 straight field goals and three consecutive free throws during one five-minute stretch. The Sooners shot just 32 percent from the field in the first half and 44 percent for the game.

Dan Bigenheimer, who finished with 23 points, scored six of Missouri's first 14 points to open the second half as the Tigers grabbed the 59-50 lead with 14:57 to play.

But then Johnson caught fire and the Sooners rallied. When a short Johnson jumper made it 66-65 with 9:22 remaining, Oklahoma had its first lead since a 19-16 lead eight minutes into the first half.

Darryl Kennedy and Tim McCalister scored 18 points each for Oklahoma, and Linwood Davis added 14. Jeff Strong scored 17 for Missouri.

Syracuse, holding St. John's Walter Berry to 15 points with a collapsing zone which often saw him surrounded by four players, boosted its league mark to 8-1 and improved to 17-2 overall.

St. John's dropped to 8-2 and 20-3.

Addison scored 23 points to pace all scorers, with teammates Wendell Alexis, Rony Seikaly and Greg Monroe contributing 12 apiece for Syracuse.

Baldi, a 6-foot-11 freshman, committed three fouls in 44 seconds and became the first St. John's player this season to foul out. He left with his fifth foul with 5:07 to go, and Addison's two free throws gave the Orangemen a 58-54 lead.

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Center Roy Tarpley scored a season-high 27 points and Michigan's entire starting lineup scored in double figures Saturday as the ninth-ranked Wolverines crushed Wisconsin 91-64 in Big Ten basketball.

Michigan, 19-2 overall and 7-2 in the conference, led from start to finish as an aggressive Wolverine defense throttled the Badgers. Michigan took a 15-4 lead with 13:46 remaining in the first half, stretched the margin to 25-12 with 8:08 left and then went on a 15-2 tear to break the game wide open, 40-14.

Wisconsin, 10-9 and 2-7, was unable to get any offense going in the first half — converting only 10 of 27 field goal attempts while committing 14 turnovers. The Wolverines led 46-22 at the intermission.

Michigan's other four starters — Gary Grant, Richard Rellford, Antoine Joubert and Butch Wade — scored 10 points each, as did freshman reserve forward Glen Rice.

Junior guard Mike Heineman paced the Wisconsin attack with 16 points. Senior guard Rick Olsen, the Badgers' leading scorer, finished with 12 points but scored only four in the first half. Olsen was guarded by Grant, who started Saturday's game despite suffering a sprained left ankle in Michigan's 82-45 victory over Northwestern on Thursday night.

The triumph was Bradley's 13th straight and the Braves boosted their record to 22-1 overall and 9-0 in MVC play. Tulsa fell to 16-5 overall and 6-3 in conference play.

Trailing 31-24 at the start of the second half, Tulsa came out playing aggressive man-to-man defense, forcing turnovers and pulling down rebounds.

The teams exchanged baskets until 3:50 was left when Tulsa took its first lead of the game 49-48 on a baseline jumper by sophomore forward Tracy Moore. Bradley was ahead 52-51 with 29 seconds to when guard Jim Les picked up a charging foul while driving for the basket, giving Tulsa a chance for the last shot of the game and victory.

However, a hurried shot by Moore with eight seconds left that missed, and a foul that allowed Bradley to take two free throws, ensured the Braves the victory.

Bradley was in control of the game throughout the first half. At one point the Braves led by nine points, 31-22.

Okamoto Hangs On For One Shot Lead In LPGA

NORTH MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Japan's Ayako Okamoto struggled through a 1-over-par 73 Saturday but managed to hang onto a one-stroke lead at the $200,000 Elizabeth Arden Classic.

Beth Daniel is one stroke back at 210 after taking a bogey on the last hole when she nearly whiffed on a chip shot. Her third-round score of 71 included three birdies and two bogeys.

Okamoto, who led by three shots going into the third round, birdied the first hole to take a brief four-stroke lead over the field. But she suffered successive bogeys at No. 4 and No. 5 and dropped another stroke to par at the 12th hole to fall one stroke behind Massey.

But Okamoto drilled a 30-foot birdie putt on the 13th hole to regain a share of the lead. While Massey bogeyed the 14th and 18th holes and Daniel dropped a shot on the final hole, Okamoto finished with six straight pars.

Okamoto, who has been undergoing acupuncture treatment for a back problem, said her back didn't bother her at all Saturday. Her problems were psychological.

"I felt the pressure today," said the soft-spoken Okamoto. "I haven't felt that kind of pressure for about a year and half. The pressure made my legs hurt."

Okamoto has won five LPGA events, including three in 1984, but she played sparingly and not very well last year because of the back problems.

Okamoto said she never felt in control of her long shots Saturday, even though she hit 13 greens in regulation compared to only seven in the first round and 12 the second.

"I hit every kind of shot," she said. "I topped it, I hit it right, I hit is left. I never felt comfortable."

Watson played Spyglass — "not my favorite," he said — under the lift, clean and place rule. "A big advantage," he admitted, but insisted the ruling was the proper one.

"We've had a lot o complaints, particularly from the players who played Spyglass on Thursday," said Mike Shea, Tournament Supervisor for the PGA Tour.

"They got a bad break," Shea said.

"But we're trying to finish the golf tournament and we made the decision we felt necessary to do that," the PGA Tour official said. The tournament now is scheduled for a day-late finish with the final round on Monday.

Mark Wiebe, who scored his first professional victory as a Tour sophomore last season, had a 69 in the mild, hazy weather at Pebble Beach and moved into third at 139, one stroke back of Watson.

The group at 140 included Jim Thorpe, Bob Eastwood, Mark Pfeil and Tony Sills. Pfeil closed with a 67 at Cypress Point. Eastwood had a 70 at Pebble Beach. Thorpe shot 70 at Cypress Point. Sills, a runner-up last week, had a 70 at Cypress Point.

Also at four under par were Peter Jacobsen, with a 71 at Spyglass, and Payne Stewart, who had a 69 at Cypress Point.

Despite his displeasure with the official ruling, Zoeller said he "played good. I went out and beat a very good golf course.

"The weather was perfect, the course was in good shape considering all the water it's had, the hole looked enormous, all my short putts were going in and that's what keeps a round together," he said.

He scored five of his seven birdies after throwing his approaches within 6 feet of the pins, and opened a string of three consecutive birdies with a 15-footer on the second.

Watson, who won the 1982 U.S. Open on the Pebble Beach course he will play the next two days, moved into contention with birdies on three of his last four holes.

"A kind of revenge," Watson said. "I usually shoot about 74 on that course."

Jack Nicklaus, a 3-time winner of the Crosby, would have been happy with that score. Instead, he struggled to a fat 80 at Spyglass and finished two rounds at 153, nine over par.

Wagner Leads Louisville To 91-72 Win Over UCLA

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Senior guard Milt Wagner scored 20 points to lead five Louisville players in double figures as the 18th-ranked Cardinals dominated offensive play in the second half enroute to a 91-72 victory over UCLA in a nationally televised college basketball game Saturday.

Louisville, without head coach Denny Crum who was home with the flu, upped its record to 13-6. UCLA dropped to 9-8.

Crum kept in contact with his three assistant coaches via a telephone hookup to the Louisville bench.

With Louisville holding a 51-47 lead with 15:59 left in the second half, the Cardinals ran off nine straight points to take a 60-49 lead at the 13:10 mark. UCLA could come no closer the rest of the way.

Louisville's three inside men, 6-foot-9 center Pervis Ellison and 6-7 forwards Herbert Crook and Billy Thompson, dominated play underneath the basket in the second half. Louisville got 14 of its first 16 points in the second half from inside the paint area.

When UCLA switched to a sagging zone defense to try and take away the inside pass, Wagner and runningmate Jeff Hall went to work, canning two quick long-range bombs to pull out the defense.

Ellison finished with 17 points, Thompson had 16, Hall 12 and Crook 11 for Louisville.

UCLA junior forward Reggie Miller led all scorers with 25 points. Forward Craig Jackson finished with 13, 11 of those in the first half, and center Jack Haley had 10 before fouling out with 6:32 left in the game.

Louisville held a 41-38 lead at the half, as Miller and Jackson keyed a fast-breaking offense that kept the Bruins close.

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Juden Smith scored 15 points to lead No. 19 Texas-El Paso to a 68-54 Western Athletic Conference basketball victory over New Mexico Saturday night.

The Lobos, which dropped to 13-8 and 5-4, relied on Kelvin Scarborough, who scored 18 points. Johnny Brown added 15 and Shawn Brooks scored 10 for the only other Lobos in double figures.

But in the second half, which opened with a 27-25 Texas-El Paso lead, the Miners broke a 31-31 tie on a Richmond turnaround left-hander from 12 feet and kept the lead the rest of the way.

The Monarchs, 13-5 and 7-2 in the conference, trailed by as many as six points in the first half. A jumper by Jeff West gave the 49ers their biggest lead of the game at 16-10 with 12:50 to play in the half.

Old Dominion took the lead for good at 19-18 on a free throw by Frank Smith with 10:32 remaining before intermission. They pushed the margin to 43-34 at halftime.

The 49ers, 5-13 and 0-8, never got closer than seven points in the second half, and trailed by as many as 25 late in the game.

Ronnie Wade added 15 points and Keith Thomas 14 for Old Dominion.

Mike Milling's game-high 24 points paced the 49ers. West contributed 14 and Keith Williams and Rodney Abrams added 10 each.

Lenoir-Rhyne, 8-12 and 4-8, led 39-37 and increased the margin to 71-65 with three minutes left. However, the Bulldogs' pressure defense forced the Bears into four crucial turnovers that turned the tide.

The Bulldogs, 16-5 and 9-1, also sank 16 of 25 free throws, while the Bears managed only one of three.

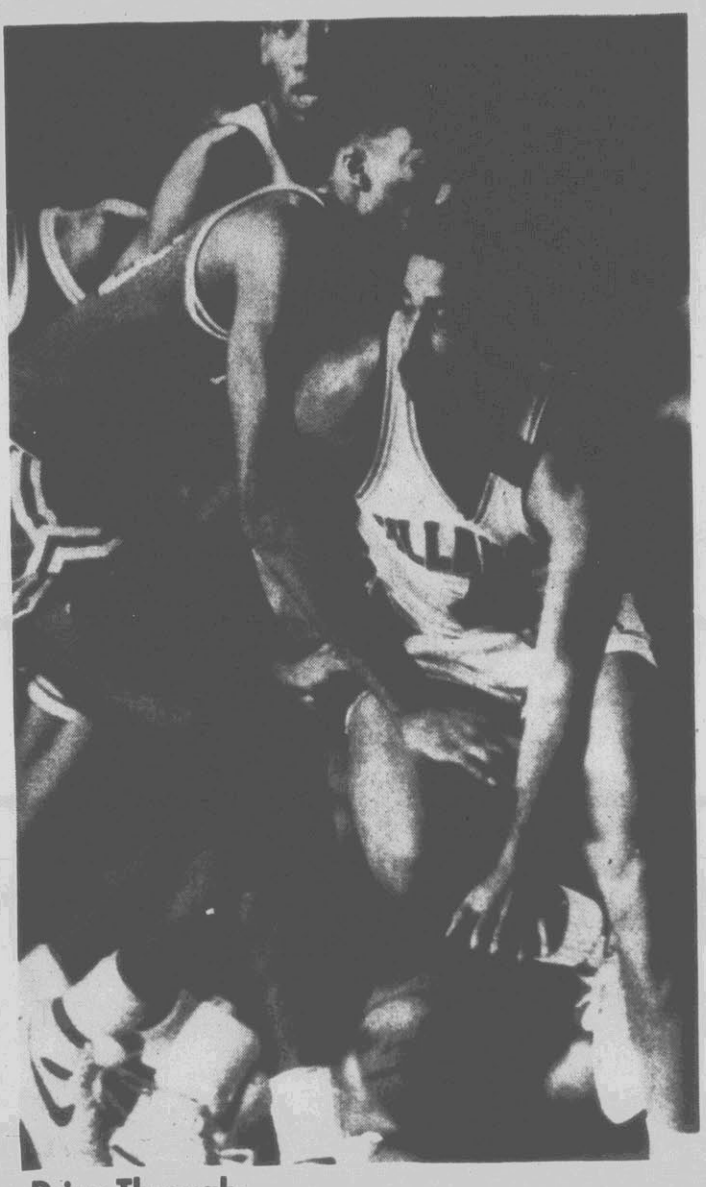

Doren Chapman and Steve Gilbert added 12 points each for the Bulldogs, while Arnold Vincent had 11 and Vince Dooms 10.

The teams battled evenly in the first half and were tied at 29-29, when Villanova, aided by a technical called on Maryland coach Lefty Driesell, scored eight straight points to take a 37-29 lead on a layup by Mark Plansky.

The Wildcats led 38-33 at halftime, but hit three of 14 from the field at the start of the second half and Maryland moved out to 48-44 advantage with 10:47 remaining.

Villanova then scored six straight points to take a 50-48 lead with just over eight minutes to play. From then on, neither team gained more than a two-point advantage.

Harold Jensen had 13 points for Villanova, while Wilbur and Plansky each had 12. Pressley had 11 points and 10 rebounds. Marylands's Len Bias was the game's high-scorer with 25 points.

Villanova is now 15-9. Maryland fell to 11-9.

Pro Bowl Has Rematch Flavor

HONOLULU (AP) — The 1986 Pro Bowl has the flavor of a Bears-Patriots rematch, with players from the Super Bowl teams heading the cast of All-Stars for Sunday's annual clash of the National Football League's conferences.

Chicago, which mauled the Patriots 46-10 in the Super Bowl a week ago, has nine players on the National Football Conference squad, most of any team.

New England tops the American Conference with eight representatives.

"It's a fun game," said Patriots running back Craig James, "but I'd like to win.

"It would make it a lot easier to end on a winning note. It certainly wouldn't make me forget the Super Bowl, but it would make it a lot easier to take."

The Bears' delegation includes Walter Payton, the NFL's all-time leading career rusher and Pro Bowl MVP in 1978; colorful and controversial quarterback Jim McMahon; center Jay Hilgenberg; and tackle Jim Covert.

Representing Chicago's famed defense are end Richard Dent, the Super Bowl MVP; linebackers Mike Singletary and Otis Wilson, safety Dave Duerson, and end Dan Hampton.

The Patriot players, in addition to James, are guard John Hannah, wide receiver-kick returner Irving Fryar, and tackle Brian Holloway from the offense; and linebackers Andre Tippett and Steve Nelson, cornerback Raymond Clayborn and safety Fred Marion from the defense.

Members of the winning squad will receive $10,000 each, with the losers getting $5,000.

The normally quiet week leading up to the Pro Bowl was shattered by a drug scandal involving the Patriots. The team had voted last Monday to undergo voluntary drug testing, then names of players who allegedly had used drugs surfaced — including Clayborn and Fryar.

Both declined comment, saying they were concentrating on helping the AFC win the Pro Bowl.

While the Super Bowl teams are heavily represented, the opposing Pro Bowl teams are coached by men whose own clubs fell victim to the Bears and Patriots during the NFL playoffs.

Don Shula, whose Miami Dolphins were knocked out of the playoffs by the Patriots, is the AFC coach. The NFC coach is John Robinson, whose Los Angeles Rams lost to the Bears.

Shula, who guided the AFC to a 16-13 victory in the 1982 Pro Bowl, said, "It's a game you look forward to. You have the best and you're competing against the best.

"The opportunity to get to work with the guys we compete against during the season is very enjoyable."

The AFC squad will have San Diego's Dan Fouts, the game's MVP three years ago, as the starter at quarterback, with Marcus Allen of the Los Angeles Raiders and Freeman McNeill of the New York Jets at the running back spots.

Two quarterbacks who had been voted into the game, Joe Montana of the 49ers and Dan Marino of the Dolphins, bowed out because of injuries.

The AFC's defense features, in addition to the Patriots, ends Mark Gastineau of the Jets and Howie Long of the Raiders.

Along with the Bears on the NFC defense will be tackle Randy White of Dallas and linebackers Lawrence Taylor and Harry Carson of the Giants.

The AFC won 22-14 last year, with Gastineau voted the game's outstanding player. But the NFC has won nine of the 15 contests since the All-Star game began its present format in 1971.

Washington Nips Vikes, 57-52

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Washington's unbeaten girls survived a scare to take a 26-24 win in their game with the Valkyries, moving another step closer to clinching the Coastal Conference title.

Conley, down by as many as 12 points in the second period, rallied to finally tie it up at 47-47 with 1:51 left in the game, but they were unable to take the lead — although they had the opportunity.

Warren made two free throws with 1:18 showing to break the tie and put the Pam Pack back ahead, 49-47. Ricky Farrow then missed one of two shots with 56 seconds to go, leaving Washington up, 49-48. Alton Ore made the lead three but Farrow cut it back to one again with a drive with 19 seconds to go.

Dixon then cashed in on his two free throws with 12 seconds to go for a 53-50 lead. Then, after Troy Ebron hit with eight seconds left, Warren drove in at the horn to score and was intentionally fouled, making both shots after the fact to wrap it up.

If there was a difference in the game, it was the foul line where Washington canned 17 of 28 shots. Conley made good on just four of ten.

"It's been like that all year long," Conley Coach Walter Claybrook said. "We've had a number of games that we could have won if we had hit our free throws."

Claybrook felt that his team perhaps was enjoying its Wednesday night upset of West Carteret in the opening period of the Washington game. "We didn't really start playing until the middle of the second period. We weren't ready to play and I guess that's my fault. But if we had made the same effort the first 12 minutes that we made from there out on, we would have had a better chance to win it. We made mistakes but we still had the chance."

Washington's Dave Smith felt his team got a little tentative on defense in the two middle periods, when Conley controlled the boards and shot better. "We let them handle the ball too freely, and I was concerned about our foul trouble too."

Smith said he told the team at the start of the final period that if they didn't start showing some intensity, they would lose. "I saw it pick up after that."

After the first few minutes, Washington took the lead at 6-5 and scored the next two baskets for a 10-5 lead. Then, after Conley hit again, Warren hit a three-point play and Washington added four more points for a 17-7 edge. Conley cut that back to 17-9 at the end of the period.

A Warren basket early in the second quarter raised the lead to 12, 21-9, but Conley began to rally there behind the scoring of Farrow. The Vikings came back to within three at 27-24 before another Pam Pack flurry sent it out to 31-23 at halftime.

Washington, which had hit 11 of 18 shots in the first half, made just two of nine in the third, allowing Conley to rally again, cutting it to two at 35-33 on baskets by Fred Bryant and Ebron with 2:05 left. Then, after Battle hit a free throw on a technical against Joel Cox, Cox turned the tables with a basket that trimmed it to 36-35 at the end of the period.

Washington, however, scored the first eight points of the period before Conley again got going, scoring six in a row. They lost out on a chance to take the lead, however, when Bryant stole the ball and drove in only to lose the ball taking it to the basket.

"He told me that he wanted to dunk it, but then changed his mind and lost it there," Claybrook related afterwards.

But the Viking rally ended there as Washington moved back out by three and held on to get the win.

Warren led Washington with 26 points while Alton Ore added 11. Farrow led Conley with 22 points.

"We did't get any help from our guards," Claybrook said. "They were moving the ball from sideline to sideline instead of trying to penetrate toward the basket."

The Pam Pack upped its Coastal record to 5-4 with the win, 10-7 overall. Conley falls to 3-5, 9-9.

The girls' game was tight almost all the way as the Lady Pack played most of the way without leading scorer Sarah Gray. Gray suffered a slight ankle sprain in practice this week and Coach Donald Gibbs said he had planned to rest her for the game.

But he was forced to bring her off the bench in the final period.

The lead bounced back and forth in the first period with Washington holding a 10-8 lead the end. Conley took the lead, 14-10 on two baskets by Kim Payton and one by Peggy Whitehurst.

Washington again rallied, however, and tied it up on a basket by Tonya Holley, 16-16.

Washington scored the first six points of the third period to take a 22-16 lead before Conley scored four straight to trim in to 22-20 in a slow quarter.

After a Holley free throw early in the final period, Washington held the ball, but turned in over several times.

Then, a malfunction of the clock forced time to be kept at the scorer's table, and Gibbs elected to send Gray at that point.

"I thought having to play at their place without seeing the clock was going to be a big psychological lift for them," he explained later. "And I thought that bringing in Gray would be a lift for us and I think it was."

After a Payton basket cut the lead to one, 23-22, Gray hit her only basket of the night to up the lead to three again. Holley added a free throw with 39 seconds left to make it 26-24 but Payton again trimmed it to two with 19 seconds to go.

After a missed free throw by Washington with nine seconds to go, Conley had two shots at the basket but missed both as the Pack held on for the win.

"A couple of breaks and we could have won it," Coach Joy Reddick said. "I thought they played about like they would without Gray. (Gloria Sherrod) didn't get her shot, but we looked for her (on defense)."

The Valkyries played their leading scorer, Trellaney Boyd, only sparingly. She did not start and scored but two points. "She's been sick, but I thought Payton did a good job in taking up the slack. We didn't play our best. If we had played like we did against East Carteret, we might have won it. In fact, anytime we hold someone under 30 we should have a chance to win."

While Reddick said she thought Washington took the Valkyries lightly, Gibbs didn't agree.

"We were coming off a big win the other night, and I think we were kind of flat from that," he said.

Washington's girls are now 9-0 in league play and 15-0 overall. Conley drops to 0-8 and 5-14.

Greene Central Tops Pitt; Pant-HERS Ice Title Share

BETHEL — Greene Central turned out to be a wolf in Rams' clothing Friday night as it romped to a 72-47 victory over North Pitt in an Eastern Plains Conference basketball game.

North Pitt's girls, taking a 53-35 win, combined that with a loss by C.B. Aycock, to clinch at least a tie for the EPC title.

The Rams pounced on the Panthers right from the start, jumping out to a 21-9 lead in the opening period. Greene Central continued to pull away in the second period with a 15-7 margin. That allowed the Rams a 36-16 halftime margin.

North Pitt put on a rally in the third frame, 19-11, cutting the lead back to 47-35. But in the final period, the Rams again turned wolf, gobbling up a 25-12 margin that finished off the Panthers.

Anthony Artis led the Rams with 18 points while O.J. Sheppard had 16 and James Hill had 13. Derrick Mullins led North Pitt with 11.

In the girls' contest, North Pitt exploded out to a 21-3 lead in the opening period and was never in trouble. The Pant-HERS stretched their lead out to 39-11 by the end of the half and carried a 47-19 lead into the closing period. The Lady Rams rallied, 16-6, in that.

Regina Cox led North Pitt with 29 points while Gwen Pilgreen added ten. Greene Central was led by Joy Albritton with ten.

North Pitt's girls are now 9-0 in league play and 16-3 on the year. The Panther boys drop to 1-8, 4-14. Greene Central's boys are 3-5, 809 while the girls fall to 2-6, 2-15.

Knights Stall Rose Rally, 65-62

RED OAK — Northern Nash held off Rose High School in the final period to take a 65-62 victory over the Rampants in Big East Conference action Friday night.

Northern jumped into the lead scoring the first four points, all by Dennis Williams. But Ricky Outlaw came off the bench to break the ice for Rose with 5:43 remaining. Rose didn't score again, however, until Terry Warren's basket at 2:38 while Northern had run off eight more points to a 12-4 lead. Nash then added two more on breakaways for a 16-4 lead before Errol Wooten hit to close the period at 16-6.

Rose rallied in the second period, however, and pulled back within striking distance. David Lee started it and Warren added two free throws, with Martin Norville and Keith Langley hitting baskets to cut the lead to 18-14 with 4:40 left. But Nash then got four unanswered points to take a 31-22 lead. Norville then scored on a three-point play and Keith Langley scored off a steal to cut it to 33-29 at intermission.

Nash upped its lead to 49-39 in the early going of the third period, but Warren made a three-point play to trim it to 49-42 with 4:08 to go. Nash hit two however, to go back out, 53-42. Rose closed it back to 55-49 as the period ended.

Norville pulled Rose back within two at 55-53, but Williams hit to up it to four again. Norville again cut it to two, 57-55 with 4:50 left and Keith Langley scored with 3:28 showing to tie it at 59-59.

Rose then suffered a turnover and missed on several free throw attempts that could have given them the lead. Langley hit twice at the stripe with a minute left to cut it to 63-62, but Earl McNeil made one of two free throws for a two-point edge.

The Rampants then forced two inside shots that missed and Nash came away with the rebound. Reggie Ricks hit one of two at the line to make the lead three, 65-62 with six seconds left, and Rose missed on its final shot at the basket.

Williams led Northern with 20 points while McNeil had 15 and Marvin Macklin had 10. Rose was paced by Norville with 18 while Langley had 17.

The loss dropped Rose to 3-5 in Big East play and 9-7 overall. Northern climbs to 4-4, 12-5.

The Rampettes had an early struggle before pulling away to down the Lady Knights. Northern took a 7-4 lead in the early minutes of the game but Rose rallied and scored nine straight points to a 13-7 lead at the end of the period.

Rose continued to pull away in the second quarter, finally gaining a 26-14 lead by halftime.

"The game was very physical out front, and it took a while for our guards to adjust to it," Coach Bill Kuykendall said. "After we went to a man-to-man defense, we were pretty much in control of the game, however."

Rose saw Northern make a comeback in the third period, cutting the lead back to as little as six before the Rampettes pulled back out and led 35-24 as the final period got underway. In that, Rose held a 14-6 margin as the Rampettes pulled away to wrap it up.

Rozelle Warns

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim McMahon, who quarterbacked the Chicago Bears to a lopsided Super Bowl victory, has been warned by National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle that advertising products on headbands will "not be tolerated."

Rozelle, in Honolulu for Sunday's Pro Bowl, said he is considering fining the Bears because McMahon wore an Addidas headband around his neck during Chicago's 46-10 Super Bowl victory last Sunday over the New England Patriots.

"That will not be tolerated," Rozelle said after a brief conversation with McMahon before Friday's Pro Bowl practice, according to a report in today's Chicago Sun-Times.

Reynolds Sparks Trinity To Overtime Win, 53-50

GOLDSBORO— Art Reynolds scored 13 points and grabbed 12 rebounds Friday night as Trinity Christian School defeated Faith Christian 53-50 in overtime in high school basketball action.

In the boys' game, Faith's Warren Riley, who finished with 8 points, sank a shot at the buzzer off a rebound to send the game into overtime with the score tied at 46-46.

Trailing 51-50 with seven seconds remaining in overtime, Faith missed a shot and Trinity's Rodney Brown was fouled after grabbing the rebound.

Brown sank both ends of a one-and-one to put the game out of reach at 53-50 with three seconds remaining.

Faith outscored Trinity 9-7 in the second period to take a 27-22 lead into the locker room.

The Tigers shut down Faith's offense in the third period, outscoring the host team 12-5 to take a 34-32 lead into the final period. But Faith outdueled Trinity 14-12 in the final period to force the game into overtime.

The error-plagued Tigers, who had 19 turnovers, were still feeling the effects of the flu which struck several team members, according to coach Don Southerland.

"We haven't had a full practice in about two weeks," he said. "I could tell they were still feeling the effects of it."

Jimmy Powers added 14 points and Joey Braxton 10 for The Tigers.

The Tigers improved to 18-2 overall and 10-2 in league play.

Plymouth Tops Roanoke, 74-53

ROBERSONVILLE — Plymouth High School swept a pair of Northeastern Conference basketball games from hosting Roanoke High School Friday night.

Plymouth eased out into a 10-7 lead in the first period of the boys' game, and continued to pull away in the second quarter, 16-10. That gave the Vikes a 26-17 lead at the half.

Plymouth didn't let up in the third period, extending the lead to 47-36. They finished off the Redskins, 27-17, in the final period.

Sidney Franklin led Plymouth with 18 points while Johnny Carter had 15 and James Carter had 10. Derick Boyd led Roanoke with 12 points while Mike Duggins added 11.

Plymouth jumped out to a 17-6 lead in the opening period of the girls' game and never looked back. The Valkyries pushed the lead to 26-8 by halftime and to 39-16 in the third period. They finished off Roanoke, allowing an 8-6 rally in the final period.

Plymouth's boys continued to lead the league with an 8-1 record, 16-3 overall. Roanoke's boys are now 2-6, 4-11. Plymouth's girls also pace the Northeastern at 8-1, 18-1 overall. Roanoke is now 4-4, 10-8.

Columbia Nips Indians, 54-52

COLUMBIA — Tony Midgett hit an 18-foot jumper with three seconds remaining to allow Columbia to pull out a 54-52 Tobacco Belt Conference victory over Chocowinity Friday night.

Chocowinity held a slim 9-8 lead after one period, but as the action speeded up in the second period, Columbia took charge. The Wildcats outhit the Tribe, 23-18 to take a 31-27 lead into intermission.

Chocowinity pulled back in the third period, 14-10, to knot it at 41-41. It stayed tight right to the end when Midgett hit for the win.

Tory Holloway led Columbia with 15 points while Midgett had 13 and Bryan Basnight had 11. Henry Harris led Chocowinity with 27 points.

In the girls' game, Chocowinity slipped into a 12-10 lead in the first period, and inched that out to 25-23 by halftime. The third period then told the tale as the Lady Tribe scored 17 and held Columbia scoreless. That gave Chocowinity a comfortable 42-21 lead. Columbia rallied, 12-4, in the final period, to no avail.

Drusilla Crawford led Chocowinity with 14 points while Laurie Taylor had 11 and Keisha Smith had 10. Lavora Spencer had 14 to lead Columbia.

Chocowinity's boys are now 7-7 in league play and 7-9 overall. Columbia climbs to 9-5, 11-8. The Chocowinity girls are 9-5, 11-5, while Columbia is 8-6, 13-7.

Fike Wins 700th For Harvey Reid

ELIZABETH CITY (AP) — Senior Willie Hopkins sank a jumper at the buzzer in overtime to lead Wilson Fike to a 42-40 high school basketball victory over Elizabeth City Northeastern Friday night, giving Coach Harvey Reid his 700th career victory.

Reid, 59, was given the game ball by his players and carried off the court. In his 37th year of coaching, Reid has never had a losing season.

"I've done it (all the victories) by having great athletes, great support from the administration ... and a little bit of luck," he said.

Fike tied the contest at 40-40 with two seconds left on a shot by John McNeil. Northeastern's inbounds pass hit the ceiling and the ball was then awarded to Fike under its own basket. The ball was inbounded to Hopkins in the lane for the winning shot.

Reid coached state championships teams in 1962, 1964 and 1966. Reid also captured titles at Elm City High School in 1974, 1975 and 1977.

Mounting Tips

If you're thinking about getting any of your game mounted, be sure to follow these tips offered by local taxidermists:

☐ Be sure to dry a bird well before freezing.

☐ Don't put a bird in a plastic bag before freezing it. Condensation will occur on the inside of the bag and it will "rain" on the bird. It takes six to eight hours for a bird to totally freeze and the feathers will become matted if they get wet.

☐ Wrap the bird in newspaper or paper towels, then put it in a plastic bag.

☐ If the bird is wounded on the back or stomach, wash the wound with cold water before freezing. Lay the bird wound up in the freezer.

☐ Taxidermists aren't magicians. A bird will only look as good mounted as it did when it was brought to the taxidermist.

☐ Don't wrap fish in newspapers because they absorb the moisture out of them. Plastic bags or aluminum foil should be used.

☐ After an animal has been mounted, keep it out of direct sunlight or heat.

Power and Sailboat Show

The 7th annual Carolina Power and Sailboat Show will be held Feb. 19-23 at the state fairgrounds in Raleigh, where scores of marine dealers from North Carolina and Virginia will exhibit a large display of power boats and sailboats.

In addition, booth exhibits will include items ranging from marine electronics to skiing equipment and marine accessories. Show hours are Wednesday through Friday from noon until 9:30 p.m. and Saturday from 10 a.m. until 9:30 p.m. Sunday hours are from noon until 6 p.m.

Adult admission is $3 and children under 12 will be admitted for $1.

Bird Identification Guide

For those hunters and naturalists who need to brush up on the Ps and Qs of bird identification, "Ducks Unlimited VideoGuide to the Waterfowl and Game Birds of North America" offers help.

The flight of various species in low light conditions is simulated using bird sounds, motion picture footage, still photographs and computer-animated graphics depicting calibrated wingbeat speed.

Available in both VHS and beta, each videotape is $74.95, plus $5 for shipping and handling. Make checks payable to: Ducks Unlimited, Dept. V, One Waterfowl Way, Long Grove, Illinois, 60047.

Wildlife Seed Program Changes

There will be some changes in the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission's wildlife planting materials program this spring. Landowners and sportsmen who wish to receive planting materials from the commission should mark March 1 on thier calendars. Applications for seed must be submitted to district wildlife biologists before this date,

"Changes are being made in application deadlines and delivery dates to improve the success rate of the perennial seed mix," said Terry Sharpe, small game project leader for the commission.

"The primary species in the perennial mix — shrub lespedeza and partridge pea — both perform best when planted early. Consequently, we've moved the application deadline back, and seed should be delivered to cooperators by April 1. The sooner this seed mix is planted, the better," he said.

Application forms for wildlife seed mixes are available from district wildlife biologists or county offices of the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. For more information, contact the commission's toll-free, 24-hour Wildlife Watch Hotline at 1-800-662-7137.

State Panel Asks 2.0 For Athletes

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — A panel of the University of North Carolina board of governors has recommended that freshman athletes entering UNC campuses in the NCAA Division I have no lower than a 2.0, or 'C,' high school grade point average in specified college preparatory courses to be eligible their first year.

While the recommendation Friday affects football coaches immediately, it applies to all sports.

"We were particularly concerned about doing this today because the national letter of intent date for football comes before our next scheduled board of governors meeting," said Samuel H. Poole of Southern Pines, chairman of the Special Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics.

The committee, meeting in conjunction with the election of C.D. Spangler to be the successor to William Friday as the system's president, voted to forward its report to the board of governors for action at its next meeting on Feb. 14.

"Until the board adopts our recommendation, it has no legal impact, so to speak," Poole said. "I do think because of what has gone on in the past year, most people accept the fact that the board would adopt it, and the (system) chancellors have volunteered to me that they're going to instruct (coaches) to recruit under these requirements. The chancellors are very supportive and have told their athletic directors that's the way they need to recruit."

The stance differs from the position taken by the NCAA, which at its recent convention in New Orleans approved a two-year indexing plan in which athletes entering Division I schools could make as low as a 1.8 GPA — or D-plus work — in the core curriculum and maintain freshman eligibility.

Mechanic Says Neglect Knocks Out Engines Early

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — A half dozen grime-encrusted auto engines, weary from years of exertion under the hoods of cars, trucks, tractors and school buses, rest on a cement floor outside a cinderblock workshop.

Mechanics eventually will take the engines apart and scrub them clean with wire brushes and caustic solvents.

Then the workers will install new components that make the engines fit once again for family outings, high-speed pizza deliveries, plowing peanut fields and hauling high school football teams to distant counties.

Blaming neglect and abuse for the early demise of most auto engines, Donald Hart, president of Albany Engine Rebuilders Inc., estimates 80 percent of the engines delivered to his shop were poorly maintained or operated in a manner that caused them to self-destruct.

"They're dirty as hell and they've been run hot," said Hart, one of three partners in the firm which overhauls about 700 engines a year for local governments and garages within a 50-mile radius of Albany in southwest Georgia.

Hart supervises five mechanics who specialize in various phases of the company's overhaul operation. During his 22 years with Albany Rebuilders, he has seen thousands of burned valves, overheated bearings and galled pistons.

He believes motorist would have far fewer problems with their cars with regular checkups performed by a professional mechanic.

"I feel like the best thing that ever happened to a rebuilder is these self-service stations," he said. "They gas 'em and go. People just don't maintain their vehicles."

A few years ago, he said, engines ran for seven or eight years before needing an overhaul, but now they are lasting only three to four years.

Hart blames early engine failures on the demise of full-service stations, where attendants are supposed to check the oil and radiator coolant levels, while visually inspecting other under-hood components, such as water hoses and fan belts.

Upon request, the attendants also can check tire pressure, brake and transmission fluids and battery acid.

Full-service stations have declined in recent years because of self-service competition offering discount gasoline prices.

"Back when you had the full-service stations, they preached maintenance," said Hart, who believes a well-maintained engine should last at least 100,000 miles.

By PAUL A. DRISCOLL
Associated Press Writer

Oil futures prices tumbled again Friday, sending tremors into the precious metals and financial futures markets.

Gold futures declined $6.40 an ounce on the Commodity Exchange in New York, with the contract for delivery in February settling below the $350 psychological support level for the first time in two weeks.

Treasury bond futures at the Chicago Board of Trade were up 25-32 of a point before profit taking trimmed that advance in the March contract to 11-32 at the close.

"With lower oil prices, inflation comes under control and investors will favor financial assets over precious metals," said Gary Dorsch, an analyst in Chicago with G.H. Miller & Co.

Financial futures also were supported by the Federal Reserve Board injecting more reserves into the banking system, he said. "This created downward pressure on short-term interest rates and led to a rally in the bond market."

Gold settled $6.40 to $7.50 lower with the contract for delivery in February at $348.80 a troy ounce; silver was 6.1 cents to 7.8 cents lower with February at 603.7 cents a troy ounce.

Heating oil futures declined the 2 cent-a-gallon limit for two contracts on the Mercantile Exchange in New York, and other deliveries also were sharply lower.

"Everybody's a little nervous ahead of the OPEC meeting because they don't expect anything to come out of it to help the market," said Ed Dellamonte, an analyst in New York with Prudential-Bache Securities.

Five ministers from members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will meet Monday in Vienna to discuss how OPEC can secure its market share in the midst of falling prices.

In addition, Dellamonte said, "there's an abundance of heating oil in New York Harbor and that sent the spot heating oil future down and everything else followed."

Crude oil settled 58 cents to 83 cents lower with the contract for delivery in March at $18.83 a barrel; heating oil was 1 cent to 2 cents lower with February at 57.83 cents a gallon; and leaded gasoline was unchanged to 2 cents lower with February at 57.50 cents a gallon.

Monday is the first delivery day for the February contract and analysts said there were indications there may be large numbers of deliveries.

Traders holding long (buy) positions were busy liquidating, said Chuck Levitt, an analyst in Chicago with Shearson Lehman Brothers. The decline tripped technical sell stops, he said, worsening the retreat.

Cattle prices were lower because of a sluggish wholesale beef trade, Levitt said.

Live cattle settled unchanged to .18 cent lower with the contract for delivery in February at 58.10 cents a pound; feeder cattle were .10 cent lower to .32 cent higher with March at 65.75 cents a pound; live hogs were .15 cent to 1.40 cents lower with February at 45.15 cents a pound; and frozen pork bellies were 1.90 cents to 2 cents lower with February at 62.12 cents a pound.

Soybean futures prices declined on the Chicago Board of Trade, weakening under the pressure of better weather in the soybean growing areas of Brazil.

Analysts said there was good rain in southern Brazil and more in the forecast for the next couple of days. They said ½ inch to nearly 2 inches was expected over almost the entire soybean belt that had suffered most from an extended drought.

Soybeans also came under pressure from lower prices for precious metals and foreign currencies, they said.

Wheat settled 1½ cents lower to 1½ cents higher with the contract for delivery in March at $3.27¼ a bushel; corn was 1 cent lower to ½ cent higher with March at $2.44 a bushel; oats were unchanged to ¾ cent lower with March at $1.23¾ a bushel; and soybeans were 3¾ cents to 7½ cents lower with March at $5.33 a bushel.

Mexico Cuts Rates

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico slashed crude oil prices by an average of $4 a barrel to nearly half the level of five years ago, but warned that falling oil prices could ultimately damage the international system of banking and trade.

In Los Angeles, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg said Mexico's action will definitely mean lower prices at U.S. gas pumps, but no specific estimate of the price cut's impact was immediately available. Mexico is the second-leading oil supplier to the United States, after Canada.

The new Mexican prices, retroactive to Jan. 1, were announced Friday after President Miguel de la Madrid and Venezuela's President Jaime Lusinchi agreed to begin coordinating their two nations' petroleum pricing strategies in hopes of maintaining their shares of the world market.

Both Venezuela and Mexico depend on oil income to pay their large foreign debts, and the slide in world oil prices that began in November has raised fears that their interest and principal payments due this year will be harder than ever to meet.

The average price of Mexican oil, whose cost varies according to the type of oil and customer location, fell below $20 for the first time with the Friday announcement of the new prices. Mexico sells only by contract and does not trade on the spot market.

Mexico's average price in December was $23.75 per 42-gallon barrel. For January, the average is $19.75, the government oil monopoly Pemex said. Five years ago, the average was $36.50.

Wall Street Survives Month Of Confusion

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — If the first month sets the tone for the full year in the stock market, then 1986 promises to be a time of much commotion and confusion on Wall Street.

From New Year's through the final session of January on Friday, the market hit new highs, took a record one-day drop, gyrated widely on news of falling oil prices, and then rallied again to new peaks.

The net result was favorable for adherents of the so-called January barometer, which holds that "as January goes, so goes the year," in the words of investment adviser Yale Hirsch. Most measures of stock price trends finished the month with gains.

But looking into February, March and beyond, analysts see more bumps in the road. On the immediate market agenda are an Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meeting on Monday and President Reagan's State of the Union message Tuesday, postponed a week because of the disaster that befell the space shuttle Challenger.

The court system is in the process of deciding whether the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill, which sets a timetable for reducing the federal budget deficit to zero by 1991, is constitutional.

At the same time, there is plenty of concern on Wall Street about the "aging" of both the bull market and the economic expansion. Stock prices have doubled over the past 3½ years, and the gross national product has been growing, however unevenly, for most of that time.

Nevertheless, with all the surprises and uncertainties that have confronted it, many observers say the market has performed impressively. The decline of inflation, they maintain, has proved to be a powerful and lasting force working in stocks' favor.

"The single most bullish fundamental we can isolate for stock market valuation is continued low inflation," said Fred Fraenkel at Prudential-Bache Securities. "In our opinion, it will keep us on a path to lower interest rates."

On the strength of a 41.06-point rise to a new closing high of 1,570.99 in the past week, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials finished January with a gain of 24.32 points.

Other readings for the week showed the New York Stock Exchange composite index up 2.81 at 122.13, and the American Stock Exchange market value index up .12 at 243.87.

Though investors' mood has been anything but consistent, they appear to have shown a preference lately for neither a strong nor a weak economy, but rather one that is "muddling through" at a modest pace of expansion.

At the moment, that is what they seem to be getting. The Commerce Department reported this past week that the index of leading economic indicators rose 0.9 percent in December.

That showing by the index, which is designed to detect future economic trends, was certainly respectable. At the same time, it fell short of most advance estimates on Wall Street, and thus was seen as no cause for concern about a tightening of the Federal Reserve's credit policy or market-induced upward pressure on interest rates.

Said Robert Barbera, E.F. Hutton & Co. economist: "As we see it, inflation will remain low, U.S. economic advances will not prove to be excessive, and grudging progress will be made in paring deficits."

Given the seemingly positive outlook for inflation, interest rates and corporate profits, contends John Connolly at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., "we believe the stock market has decidedly more assets than liabilities."

Union Workers Halt Production Of Paper

LONDON (AP) — Union workers supporting 5,000 colleagues fired in a dispute with publisher Rupert Murdoch halted production Saturday of a Murdoch newspaper at a plant in Manchester in northern England.

Production of northern editions of The News of the World, Britain's biggest-selling Sunday newspaper with a circulation of 4.8 million, was immediately switched to Murdoch's new high-technology plant in Glasgow, Scotland. Other editions were being published at a new plant in London.

Arthur Brittenden, director of corporate relations for Murdoch's News International Ltd., said the company would publish "as near the full print run as possible."

It was the second Saturday that union workers at the newspaper plant in Manchester had refused to cooperate in production of The News of the World.

About 1.9 million copies of the newspaper were being produced at the plant under contract with another newspaper company before the strike against Murdoch's four London-based papers began Jan. 24.

In addition to The News of The World, Murdoch owns The Times of London.

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The daytime finds you feeling thwarted in being able to formulate a course of action whereby your intimate and public aims can be obtained, so take these days and obstacles in stride.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You can convince your mate to cooperate in some fine plan you have in mind but tonight do not go to any new places.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Avoid that friend who is as stubborn as you about some important matter, and be sure to keep any promises you have made.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You find it hard to plan your work for tomorrow in the morning, but can do so wisely in the evening.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Avoid the usual Sunday amusements and save money today and cut down on extravagances, especially in the evening.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Don't be forceful at home in order to gain your own way, but use tact and all will be fine. If you invite in any guests, treat them well.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Not a good day to go after data you need now since others could consider you a busy body, so await a better time and day.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Any financial transaction could prove a big risk today or you could lose a bundle. A usually reliable adviser could be off the beam.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You feel you need some freedom to do what you like, but don't use force to get your way. A good friend may act peculiarly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Take care you do not take your ire out on the one you love because you may have some secret worry.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Plan some time to show your friends that you understand their wants and desires, and try to help them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Get appearance and personal life improved and keep out of the limelight today. A private wish is difficult.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Forget that trip you have in mind which you feel is profitable, but it would be just the opposite.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will need to be taught patience since your progeny is very dynamic and wants to get results right away because life is not quite that dynamic and others will find your progeny to be diffcult if this lesson is not learned. Teach to eat a nutritious diet.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY, FEB. 3, 1986

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Go after your ambitions in a more direct manner and get fine results even if there is a temporary delay.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Cooperate with a partner whose ideas can prove profitable to you, and don't let some personal worry deter your progress.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Be enthused about the work ahead of you and you can get excellent results.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Your intuition is fine as you can get your talents working properly in the right direction, then full speed ahead on them.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) If you use good judgment you can add to your well-being and that of family considerably, but get rid of a possible limitation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Come right to the point with those who can be of assistance to you and get good results. Avoid one who is a pessimist.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) You arise with fine ideas for gaining a greater income so put them in motion right away and gain benefits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Go after your wishes with courage and conviction and you gain them easily. Be happy tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Some private affair can be handled very nicely if you keep hammering at it and this will bring you happiness.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) You desire to see as many pals as you can so get an early start on this. Join in some group meeting and renew old acquaintances.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) A fine day to be out in the business world and gain the success that you desire. Try to see bigwigs who are available now.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will be able to speak very well and put ideas across from earliest youth, so be sure to give as much education as you can, and teach the importance of acquiring an education early, though the desire is to earn money right away.

A FOGGY DAY . . . did not deter rural women of past years from making an excursion during winter months to harvest material from field and forest for use in their folk craft. They were knowledgeable in locating sites that provided ample supplies of material they needed.

IN WINTER . . . the bark of maple trees, particularly large ones, is a marvel of many colors, including streaks and patches of pink, vermilion, green, orange, gray and black, often with scattering of rosette patches of lichen.

Recollections Of Long Ago Nature Excursions With Rural Craftswomen

They are all long dead now, the aged farm widows, who unsung and unknown except to people in their community, were adept in traditional country crafts and the secrets of folk-medicine handed down to them from mothers and grandmothers.

Forty years and more have passed since these unassuming women, then in advanced age, used to ask me and cousins of my age to accompany them on periodic forays into field and forest to gather materials.

They manifested pleasure in having young people along to help them — and our parents urged us to go along to give a hand to these women too frail to alone gather what they needed.

To us they were known as "Old Miss" so and so, but to their faces we called them by the respected title of "Miss." There was a certain similarity in the manner in which they dressed — long, simple cotton dresses of dark blue, gray or black with small white sprigs of white designs repeated in the cloth. Old-fashioned bonnets with cardboard stays was their habitual headgear. Their shoes were sensible high-top ladies brogans, and depending on the weather, they were bundled in one or more durable button-up sweaters.

Big aprons with commodious pockets afforded a handy storage place for "pretties" such as an Indian arrow head or a decorated bit of broken china found on the trips; and for peppermint candy balls that were happily received rewards for our assistance.

In thinking back to those excursions, I am amazed at the knowledge of nature these women possessed, where to find useful items, and how to fashion them into rugged or delicate craft works or prepare home medicine remedies without "how-to" instructions.

There were, of course, no such thing then as craft or hobby supply stores in rural comunities. I have a hunch they would be amazed (and possibly dismayed) if they knew of the considerable sums their grand- and great-granddaughters today spend on pre-processed materials to create items they would possibly look askance at.

Primarily, these excursions for native materials took place during the colder months of the year — when biting insects and "varmint" snakes would not be a "botheration." And there was something about cooler days that they agreed was more "vigorating."

Youngsters accompanying them each took along a couple of "tow bags," large burlap bags of the type used for storing peanuts. Older boys took charge of the digging and cutting implements required for gathering certain items. On rare, festive occasions, instead of a walking trip, the journey would be by wagon, always with the precaution of using "plug" mules — ones old and feeble, to pull the wagons enclosed with protective sides.

November and December were months in which they gathered golden broomstraw to make new house brooms; to cut chips from dead cedar trunks to place in drawers and closets as protection against moths as well as to "scenten up" clothes; and to gather lightwood knots, heartwood from decayed pine logs, good for starting fires in stoves and heaters.

Those months were ones in which they assembled supplies of grape and rattan vines and choice dry pine needles, to be used in weaving baskets, vases and containers for practical and decorative items. This was a pleasurable task that would keep wrinkled hands occupied during long winter nights around fireplace or wood heater.

Later, when Christmas was past, excursions were made to find mosses, lichens and scrapings from tree bark to be used in preparing home-made dyes, or collected simply for their beauty. In winter, the bark of holly and maple trees are particulary rich in colors. Small squares that could be cut and removed were especially prized to make toys for grandchildren or young girls in the neighborhood.

These ladies were knowledgeable in the whereabout of roots, such as fragrant sassafrass, good for tea and medicinal purposes, other roots and dried berries that constituted ingredient for home medicines.

The final expedition, before the rising of sap in the early spring, was to locate and cut long, slender dogwood branches. Shaped and bound into a bundle of four or five, they made ideal twig brooms to use all during the year to sweep grassless stetches of yard then common in the rural South.

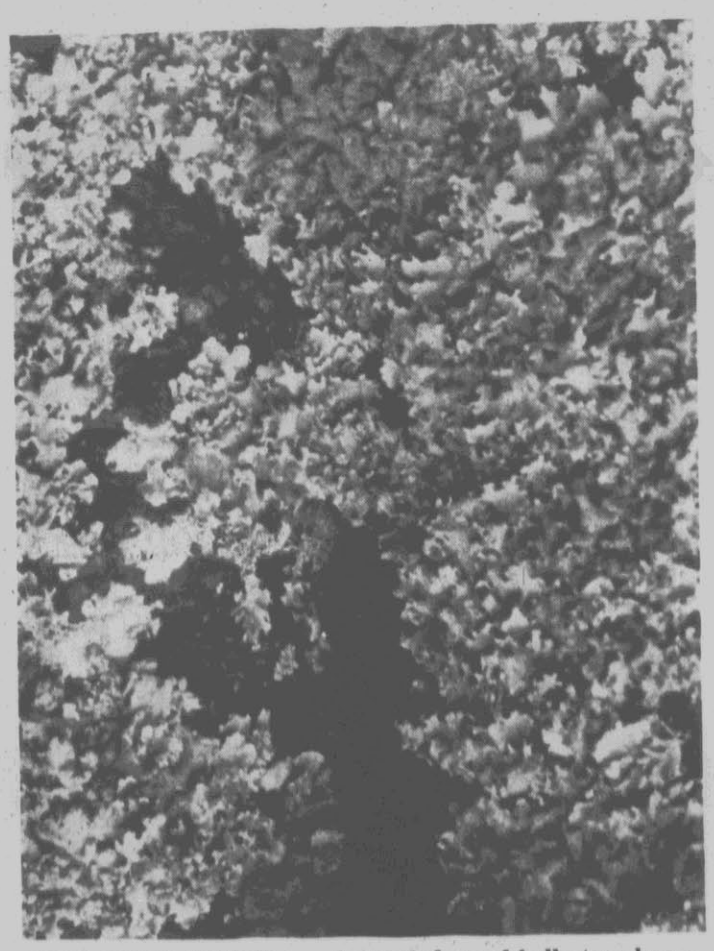

These widows have been dead for so long that today their tombstones are now spotted with rosettes of gray lichen.

For those who as young people were part of their later years of life, we can look back and recall with fondness the pleasures of these excursions.

THE PRESERVED WOOD . . . of dead cedar trees provide a source for chips of the scented wood formerly used by rural housewives to protect clothes from moths and to add its fragrance to bureau drawers and closets.

DECORATED TRUNK . . . A gnarled, aged holly tree has a trunk literally covered with a thick growth of lichen shaped like miniature lettuce leaves. The dominant colors are gray and greenish-gray.

A FALLEN TREE . . . across a small woodland stream is a likely place to find an abundance of moist deep green mosses. The tree, which blocks the flow of the stream to create small music-producing waterfalls, is a scene of forest beauty worthy of the effort to discover it.

Raleigh Benefit Set For Early May

The N.C. Child Advocacy Institute will benefit from the opening night premiere of the 1986 Southern Women's Show to be held at the State Fairgrounds in Raleigh May 8-11.

The Institute, a private non-profit organization which does research, demonstration projects and public awareness projects on the needs of children in North Carolina, will also staff a booth at the show.

Without the plants that reproduce through pollination, supermarket produce shelves would be limited largely to potatoes, onions, bananas and other plants that produce asexually, says National Geographic.

Family Carves Out Successful Business Making Animals

By MATT MYGATT
Associated Press Writer

TESUQUE, N.M. (AP) — Stacks of gnarled cottonwood logs lay waiting for the chain saws and chisels of three generations of a Tesuque family who carve a menagerie of colorful animals, from antelopes to zebras.

The thriving family business began in the early 1960s when Felipe Archuleta went into carving after unsuccessfully hunting for a job.

"I prayed to God and he told me what to do," said Archuleta.

Now 75, he has cut down on the number of figures he carves because of his age. But his son Leroy Archuleta, 37, and his grandson Ron Rodriguez, 17, carry on the tradition.

The elder Archuleta, who had worked as a cook, finish carpenter and stone mason, first carved an ox. The folk art figures he and his family make now are shipped nationwide, he said.

"It's word-of-mouth — we never do any advertising," said Leroy Archuleta, who began fashioning the figures in 1970.

"We can't keep up with the demand." said Rodriguez, who joined his grandfather and uncle in the trade eight years ago.

Leroy Archuleta said they fell dead cottonwood trees, which they cut into logs of various sizes.

"We use the whole tree," he said. "They're (cottonwood trees) nice to work with. They've got to be dry, though. If they're not dry, they will crack."

The carvers look at the shape of a tree or log, envisioning an animal within.

The animals are born in a studio, its dirt floor littered with wood shavings, its tables crowded with paint cans and glue.

The elder Archuleta starts with an ax to rough out his figures, but his son and grandson take a modern short cut — chain saws.

The animals are finished with grinders, hand rasps and sandpaper. Features are painted on. Eyes are marbles, sometimes pried out of spray paint cans. Claws are cut from rubber cable sheathing. Whiskers are frazzled rope.

"Everything goes," Leroy Archuleta said.

He said he bases his work on photographs or drawings.

"Here's the picture I usually go by when carving a wild turkey," he said, hefting an empty bottle of liquor with a picture of a turkey on the label.

The three family members have carved many different kinds of animals — pigs and porcupines, coyotes and cats, rams and rhinos, bears and badgers, fish and fowl, gorillas and gazelles.

So many, in fact, they said they never really kept count. Leroy says he has no favorite.

"Every time I do a new piece, it's my favorite one," he said. "I'd like to keep them all, but I also need the money."

Figures usually sell for $100 to $800, he said.

"Once they (customers) see one, they want another. When people come by, they see them and want more," he said. "We have standing orders."

Rodriguez said coyotes and pigs are the most popular animals.

The younger Archuleta said the largest carving he had created was a 16-foot giraffe.

Rodriguez spent a week in August carving an 8-foot dragon, coated with green paint, resplendent with red and yellow stripes.

He said he liked wood carving because "there's nobody on your back."

"I worked in a pet shop once, and they told me to cut my hair. I couldn't handle it," Rodriguez said. "It was an OK job, but this is better."

Craftsmen Urged To Make Small Shop Serve 'Big' Work Need

From WOOD MAGAZINE

If you're ready to set up a shop in a corner of the basement or garage, or your small shop seems to be getting smaller, here are some tips from WOOD magazine.

1. Choose your tools thoughtfully.

Which tools do you have to have? Admittedly, in tight quarters your options are limited. Thousands of craftsmen in such situations turn to a multi-purpose tool that saws, drills, bores, turns, and sands.

The other approach is task-oriented tools. Here's where you must focus and select the stationary power tools you really need to do the work you want to do. Perhaps a table saw, or radial arm, and some portable power and hand tools will fill the bill. But most of us either have — or would like to have — a greater selection.

How do you choose? Look at what the tool can do for you. A band saw, for instance, cuts thicker stock faster and makes smoother curves than a scroll saw. A scroll saw cuts a tighter curve, can remove the center from a pattern, and the blades cost less.

No matter which tools you elect to have in your shop, keep their quality in mind. You can't do first-rate work with second-rate tools.

2. Make your equipment do double duty.

A workbench acts as the hub of any workshop. For small spaces, select a workbench 4-to-5-feet long and 24-inches wide. If you make it the same height as your table saw top, it can also support sheet goods when ripping. Add storage for portable power tools and bins for supplies below a table-type bench.

The drill press, considered essential in many shops, easily fits into a corner. If you have a floor model, fit it with a plywood table and use an accessory drum sander for maximum versatility.

Lathes can do double duty, too. Attach a table to the bed, mount a sanding disk to the head stock, and you'll have a two-in-one tool. You can even call on the lathe stand for needed support when cutting long stock on the miterbox by slipping in a "stool" under the stock to gain height.

3. Plan your work in stages.

In small shops you can't afford clutter. Organize your work into stages, or steps, and cleanup after each session so there's enough room to get each step completed.

4. Keep material neatly at hand.

Boards and other long stock such as molding should nestle against the ceiling or along a wall. As for plywood panels, you take up the least amount of floor space by standing them on end — if you have enough head room.

5. Go for efficient shop layout.

Just as in your kitchen, getting things done efficiently depends largely on shop layout. Where you position your equipment determines how workable your shop will be, and how comfortable it will be.

Situate your stationary power tools according to your working patterns, and the shape of the space. Do allow for certain minimum passageways and areas.

At Wit's End — By Erma Bombeck

A woman in Wichita, Kan., saw a sale on maternity clothes, 75 percent off. The fact that neither she nor her married daughters were pregnant did not deter her. She called her daughters, marched them in to try on the clothes, using pillows to get the right effect. In her maternal wisdom she said, "I'll put this in God's hands. Maybe someday you will need them."

Here's the kicker. Today, that woman has four grandchildren.

With my luck, if I had bought a maternity dress on sale, I would have gained 40 pounds for no reason.

I too have put my future in the hands of fate. Before the holidays, I saw the dress of my dreams. It was a size 8. Week after week, I watched it being reduced. Then one day I marched in and bought it. It also was in God's hands.

It has been a month now and either one of two things has happened: (a) I've used up all my miracles or (b) God will direct me to a woman who does major alternations.

I want to believe that someone is watching over me and will reward me for my weaknessess, but that is sometimes not the case. I used to park my car in one of those spiraling garages adjacent to a large department store. You cannot imagine my horror when a bakery opened on the ground floor by the elevators. This called for serious bargaining with you-know-who. I said, "If the Good Lord wants me to buy a dozen doughnuts all the elevators will be in flight and that is a signal for me to stop by the bakery and indulge myself. HOWEVER, if the elevator door is open at the precise moment I walk in the building and I do not have to run for it or have someone hold the door for me, it is divined that I pig out."

I outgrew two seat belts in three years. Most of us are weak. It's easy to pretend that there are things over which we have no control, so we give in and leave our lives to chance.

I had a friend who was childless, and she and her husband were debating whether or not to buy a house. With two paychecks, they could pull it off. If she couldn't work, it was impossible. She said if they weren't to have a house, she'd get a sign. That same month she turned up pregnant. Her comment was, "Did the sign have to be so dramatic? A simple message on the answering machine would have sufficed."

I sorta like the idea of something mysterious intervening. I want to believe the woman in Wichita would never had become a grandmother if she hadn't noticed a sale. I want to believe all those doughnuts eventually made me a better person. If not, providence is just a place in Rhode Island.

Humor Used To Ease Exam Tension

FOREST GROVE, Ore. (AP) — Humor helps students to remember more, says Dr. Byron D. Steiger, who uses cartoons on class examination papers. An associate professor of sociology at Pacific University, he points out that sociology is a study of the human condition, and that humor certainly applies.

"Who is it that tells the king the truth? It's the fool or the court jester. Humor can get across ideas that would be unacceptable otherwise," he explains.

Steiger often uses a cartoon on the cover of a test to help students relax and insure that they all start the exam at the same time. Cartoons are also included in the body of the test. Steiger has found that if the student understands the preceding cartoon, he can answer the question.

He cites as an example studying the theory of deferred awards that serve a purpose.

"In the case of preparing to enter the work force, people learn that some jobs require more skill and training," he notes."The gratification has to be deferred while the skills are acquired. However, people are often motivated to work toward this goal — the award, or the payoff or the carrot, comes at the end."

An example of a punch line from a cartoon Steiger has used on a a test when the class was studying the efficiency of the jury system: "We find the defendant guilty, the lawyers incompetent and the judge pompous."

Steiger has used cartoons in classes and on tests for 10 years and has a collection of at least a thousand cartoons, sorted by classes in which he can apply them.

"Cartoonists make us look at the world in a different perspective, so we can't take everything for granted," Steiger says.

In the area of teaching, he adds, "You have to remain interested in what you're teaching. Collecting and using cartoons to fit courses keeps me more intellectually alive."

Some years Steiger has even taught a Sociology of Humor course, which is not standard fare in all sociology departments. He has trouble finding good cartoons for this course because there are not many cartoons about humor itself.

"I get a kick out of the cartoons on test papers. The students like it. It helps learning," Steiger says.

Some students have said, "Keep doing it. It's the only interesting thing on the exams," he reports. Others have said more seriously that cartoons break up the sections of the exam and help break down examination tensions.

Debra Watros, a Pacific senior from Beaverton, Ore., says that the cartoons on tests "are really different. I've never seen anything like it before. It takes the tension off, loosens everyone up and humanizes the professor."

Another student, Ceclia Romero, a junior from Kahului, Hawaii, says that a cartoon at the beginning of the exam and one in the middle help her to relax. "They pertain to the test and can help me form an additional viewpoint about the topic which I can use in an essay. They help me remember illustrations to support what I am writing."

What do Steiger's teaching colleages think? Some of them frown on the practice, Steiger admits. Others simply accept it as Steiger's style, and they also accept cartoons he finds and sends them related to their teaching fields.

"A professor should be an ally to the student, not an adversary," says Steiger. "If using humor helps, I'm all for it."

RICHES FROM THE SKY

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — A catastrophic meteorite impact about 1.8 billion years ago created one of the world's largest and richest deposits of metal ores, according to new evidence reported by scientists at the University of Rochester.

The findings of Asish Basu and Billy Faggart of the university confirm the theory that the metal-rich region around Sudbury, Ont., was formed when a giant meteorite hit the region. They say this caused the earth's crust in that area to melt and separate into distinctive layers of metals.

In addition to nickel and copper, of which Sudbury is one of the world's largest suppliers, the complex produces significant amounts of platinum, palladium, iridium, and other rare metals.

Minerals In Water Can Cause Real Problems Over The Years

From BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Magnesium and calcium are the main culprits, but iron, sulfur, and other minerals and chemicals also cause problems. Here's how to tell if there's a problem, and what to do about it from the editors of Better Homes and Gardens Remodeling Ideas.

Many impurities can be traced to reservoirs and wells, but water also acquires impurities from the supply system. Corroded particles of lead, zinc, copper, and iron from pipes are common contaminants.

Municipal purifying plants remove most of these impurities before the water reaches your home. Even so, the water — though safe — may taste bad and be too hard.

To test your water for hardness, draw off a pint into a bottle you can cap, add 10 drops of detergent, and shake well. If the solution foams readily, your water is relatively soft. If you get a curdlike film instead of foam, consider investing in a water softener.

You need less soap for bathing and doing laundry with soft water because it lathers readily, rinses off quickly, and doesn't create a sticky curd.

Hard water tends to leave a greasy film on glassware, making dishwashing frustrating. Any object cleaned with soft water, however, is clean and not clouded with residue.

Water softeners or conditioners come in two basic styles. One is a compact, self-contained cabinet. The second, which has a larger capacity, consists of two tanks, including an extra-large container for storing salt.

Both types of softeners work in the same way. Each unit has a column of resin that captures water-hardening impurities. After a salt solution removes these impurities from the resin, they're flushed through the drain and the resin is rinsed off the salt. The resin then is ready to begin another cycle.

No matter how much water you use, the process is automatic. The resin lasts for years, although you must replace the salt as it is depleted by the process. The salt tank must be cleaned out at least every two years.

Because softeners remove only the minerals that make water hard, you might want to install a filtration system to remove actual particles of impurities. Water from private wells is often filtered before use. Even if you're not drinking well water, you may want to use a filtration system to get the purest water you can. (If you use both a softener and a filter, filter first and then soften.)

Analysis of a water sample will determine the kind of system you need. One type uses charcoal to remove unpleasant tastes and odors. Another removes iron and hydrogen sulfide. Still another kind works to lower the acidity of water, thereby decreasing its corrosive properties.

Like water conditioners, filters vary in size. Full-line filtration systems treat all the water in the house. Smaller units handle specific jobs, usually filtering water in the kitchen for cooking and drinking.

OSTEOARTHRITIS PREVALENCE

ATLANTA (AP) — Osteoarthritis is one of the most prevalent diseases in America and the chances that a person will get it increase with age, says the Arthritis Foundation.

At age 75, 80 percent of the population has osteoarthritis of the hands, 15 percent have it in their knees, and 5 percent have it in their hips.

The condition is believed to be a result of the interaction of several factors, including heredity, occupational history, weight, trauma to a joint, and possible biochemical abnormalities in the cartilage.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Family Heirloom Lost When Son Loses His Girlfriend

DEAR ABBY: Three years ago, when my son became engaged, I gave him my mother's engagement ring to give to his fiancee. At that time, I asked him to please ask his fiancee to sign a paper stating that if the marriage was ever dissolved, she would return the ring to his family. He became indignant, said he was hurt that I had so little faith in their future together, and refused to even ask her. Like a softy, I let it go.

Two and a half years later, she walked out on him. She has the ring. My son says he wants no discordancy whatever—that he will pay me what the ring is worth.

Abby, I didn't sell it to him. I want the ring, not the money. They are working out a "friendly divorce," although I know my son is broken-hearted because she left him. They are living apart, and she is living it up. Meanwhile, knowing she has my mother's diamond really upsets me.

Maybe in time my son will want to marry again. Then what? Is there a solution?

DISTRESSED

DEAR DISTRESSED: Even though the ring is a family heirloom, when you gave it to your son you relinquished all claim on it. He would not be out of line, however, to suggest to her that because it belonged to his grandmother, he would like to buy it from her and keep it in the family. It's worth a try.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: When "Ryan" and I were first married, he showed me some photographs he had taken of his ex-wife posing in the nude while they were still married. (Photography is his hobby.) She was very well-built and the pictures left nothing to the imagination.

I asked Ryan to either send them to her or to destroy them because I didn't want them in the house. He said he never destroys any of his pictures as they are "art." (I call them trash.)

Now it's nine years later, and I found these pictures stashed in the back of a drawer! Abby, we have two small children who could have easily found them. How could I explain who the naked lady was?

Should I put them back and say nothing to Ryan? Should I tell him I found them? (He'd probably hide them somewhere else, and I want them out of our house.) Should I return them to his ex-wife, or destroy them and hope Ryan doesn't miss them? Or is it none of my business?

ANGRY IN ARIZONA

DEAR ANGRY: Give them to your husband and ask him to please lock up his "art." If your children had found them, you could have told them the truth: "The naked lady was once married to Daddy."

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My father is very fat, and he is getting fatter because he doesn't do any kind of exercise and he eats everything he knows he shouldn't. He is supposed to be on a special diet, but every night I catch him sneaking a handful of cookies or a gigantic bowl of ice cream. When I tell him he shouldn't eat that stuff, he gets very angry. I am his 11-year-old daughter, but please don't use my name because he knows who he is, and I would never hear the end of it.

Don't tell me to tell my mother. She knows all about it, but Dad won't listen to her either. How can I help him?

WORRIED DAUGHTER

DEAR WORRIED: You are a very loving and caring daughter, but the only person who can help your father is himself. Finding his 11-year-old daughter standing guard over the bacon he has brought home only adds to his guilt and frustration. Offer lots of love, but hold the advice.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: One last word on how to eat a banana, the most consumed fruit in the United States. Where I come from, there is only one way to eat a banana. Alone! That way you can enjoy it to the fullest, and better someone shouldn't warble, "Poinciana, is that your nose or a banana?"

Many Young People Are Having Problems With Drugs

From BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Drugs are uppermost in the minds of parents, these days, and for good reason. Many of our nation's youth are in trouble. We're in the midst of an epidemic and no one's kids are safe.

America's parents live in fear of the symptoms: falling grades, withdrawal from family, loss of interest in hobbies and sports, obsession with heavy metal music, and frightfully blank expressions. But even in the pre-school years you can help prevent your youngsters from becoming involved with drugs, according to Better Homes and Gardens.

Many children, from early ages, are pressured to achieve academically, athletically, and socially, observes psychologist and educator David Elkind in his book, "The Hurried Child" (Addison Wesley). Under stress, says Elkind, children live in almost constant fear of failure. Hurried children become more self-centered and more likely to take impulsive risks, thus opening the door for involvement with drugs.

Other experts relate the problem to children who have no tolerance for frustration, who think that something can be had for nothing, and who have been given too much too soon by well-meaning parents. Drugs satisfy the overindulged youngster's need for intense, immediate reward.

Parents need not feel helpless in the face of the drug epidemic. You can take preventive steps. Here are some suggestions.

— Protect your children from stress. Keep them out of organized sports, pageants, and other adult-supervised competitive activities until early adolescence. Accept their limitations, academic and otherwise. Be understanding of their personalities, too. If they aren't outgoing, don't try to force them into social situations.

— Prevent your children from becoming self-centered. Put the marriage, not the children, first in the family. The marriage is the foundation on which everyone's stability rests.

— Help your children develop security and self-esteem. Establish your authority early. Parental authority is the cornerstone of a child's sense of security, and security is the foundation of self-esteem.

— Prevent the "I've got nothing to do" syndrome. Keep television watching to a minimum, and don't ever let it become your child's primary source of entertainment. There may be more than just a chance parallel between the blissful state of passivity that television watching induces in children and a drug "high." Youngsters who become dependent on television at an early age are more likely to transfer that dependency to drugs during their teen years, argues Marie Winn in her book "Plug-In Drug" (Viking-Penguin). Help your children develop resourcefulness, the antidote to boredom, by keeping toy purchases to a minimum.

— Help your children develop tolerance for frustration. Learn to say "No" when necessary, and mean it. A child who can't take "No" for an answer invariably has parents who have trouble saying it. Children develop tolerance for frustration only if their parents expose them to it. The more immunity your youngster develops to frustration, the more he or she will persist in the face of adversity.

— Help your children to resist peer pressure and think for themselves. Listen to them. Let them know that their ideas and opinions count, even though you may not always agree.

ESTATE PLANNING MEETING SCHEDULED

The Pitt County Agricultural Extension Office has scheduled a series of meetings on estate planning. The series will be held starting Tuesday and then again on Feb. 11 and 25 from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Agricultural Extension Service Office.

The same information will also be presented from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Feb. 19. To pre-register, call 752-2934, ext. 370.

These meetings will be of interest to anyone 18 years of age or older. Creating an awareness on the part of property owners of the problems associated with transferring property between generations is one of the primary purposes of the meetings. Basic information about the concepts of estate planning and the reasons for developing estate plans will also be presented.

There are many ways of providing for the transfer of property to heirs that will assure the property owner of the desired division of property, provide security for survivors and minimize death taxes.

Some of the topics to be discussed include:

- What happens to my property if I do no estate planning?
- The purpose of making a will.
- What will happen to jointly-owned property if one owner dies.
- How to minimize estate and inheritance taxes.
- What happens if property is given away.
- How can a child be disinherited?
- What are financial problems of a surviving spouse?
- Is there a need for estate insurance?
- How much tax will come out of an estate after owner dies.
- How to keep heirs from wasting property.

Estate planning is an involved process, and possibly the worst thing that a property owner can do to assume it doesn't matter — and do nothing. Interested persons who attend may want to see their lawyer, banker or other counselor for further information.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

Another common color mistake is throwing in an off color after the scheme has been set. It is best to choose three hues or colors and work with those in varying proportions.

Different textures add interest, also different mediums such as brass and glass or stained wood all add their part in putting together a room and making it more interesting. Never throw in a color without repeating it in two other places.

If one uses a sectional in the same fabric or a sofa/loveseat in the same fabric it has a much more enlarging effect to a small room, although scale is very important. If a room has higher ceilings, naturally one can use larger chairs with taller backs. Vertical lines can also enlarge a room, for example striped wallpaper can raise the ceiling, although vertical lines are more formal.

Fabric, paneling and window treatments all have lines that need to be considered because the way they are used create emphasis, rhythm and balance.

At Betsy Drake Interiors we have a half million dollar inventory of fine quality furniture, lamps, accessories, oriental rugs, wall coverings and window treatments as well as the professional decorating skills to bring your ideas to life. We invite you to come in to our store and browse or call to schedule an appointment in your home or business. Informal Women's Network Begins Work On Agent Orange Causes

By SUZANNE WETLAUFER
Associated Press Writer

Lily Adams was a patriotic, 21-year-old Army nurse when she arrived in Vietnam. The year was 1969, and casualties were heavy. She didn't ask many questions about the war.

But she wondered, more than once, why the water at her base in Cu Chi tasted so bad, and why the lush jungle abruptly gave way to gray, barren acres that looked like the face of the moon.

"I was so naive, I just thought it was a very strange geography," Ms. Adams said in a telephone interview from her home in Roswell, Ga. "I didn't know anything about Agent Orange at the time."

It wasn't until 1980 that Ms. Adams learned that the water's foul taste and the moonscapes of Vietnam were caused by the toxic defoliant that the military dumped in Vietnam to rob the enemy of jungle hiding places and to clear the way for construction of bases and hospitals.

Then she began to wonder if Agent Orange might have caused her 10 years of inexplicable health problems — two miscarriages, a breast tumor, severe acne and aching knees. She now thinks it might be the reason why her son was born without nerves in one section of his large intestine.

"A woman doing research on post-traumatic stress syndrome called me and we got talking, and she asked me, 'How's your health?' And when I told her, she said, 'Have you ever heard of Agent Orange?' That's how I found out that other female vets had similar problems to mine.

"And that's when it all began to make sense," Ms. Adams said. "It's real scary, I'll tell you."

From 1962 to 1971, the military dumped 12 million gallons of Agent Orange on Vietnam. Although government tests on Agent Orange's connection to physical problems are inconclusive, some doctors and more than 200,000 male Vietnam veterans blame the defoliant, which contained the poisonous chemical dioxin, for postwar ailments including deafness, liver damage and cancer.

For several years, Agent Orange has been a major rallying point for politicans and veterans groups representing the 2.9 million men who served in Vietnam.

Now women who served as Army nurses and Red Cross volunteers in Vietnam are beginning to form an informal network, through phone calls and letters among themselves and to public officials. Their goal is to get help for those among the 15,000 women who served and now link their health problems to Agent Orange.

Above all, they want federal research examining whether Agent Orange can be held responsible for physical ailments in women. Later this year, Congress is to take up a bill that would authorize the Centers for Disease Control to conduct such a study.

Silbergeld said women exposed to Agent Orange might have more to worry about than male veterans.

She pointed to laboratory animal tests presenting "strong evidence that proves dioxin has a severe effect on the female reproductive system. It affects ovaries. It damages egg cells within the ovaries, causing some of them to die, and a fetus exposed to dioxin is at very serious risk to birth defects."

The CDC is conducting an extensive study of Agent Orange and male veterans, but the CDC and Veterans Administration officials argue that too few women served in Vietnam to study the herbicide's impact on them.

"It's not that we don't believe some women were exposed, some certainly were," said Dr. Shepherd Barclay, director of the VA's Agent Orange Projects Office. "It's just that we don't have documentation enough to base a selection of women for a valid scientific study."

Ms. Adams, who married a veteran after the war, said she felt "very betrayed and very frustrated. I risked my life for my country. I volunteered for (medical evacuation helicopters) to save lives. I'd go in the middle of the night. I've been on choppers that were hit.

"I feel betrayed because my government tells me not enough women were exposed to do research," she said.

"We want research. Should I tell my son to go ahead and have children when he grows up? I don't want my children to go through the grief I did."

Like other military nurses, Ms. Adams has received a free Agent Orange checkup at a VA hospital and has applied for part of the $180 million out-of-court settlement reached in 1984 between veterans and seven companies that manufactured the herbicide.

But Red Cross volunteers in Vietnam, who were not included in the class action suit, say they have nowhere to turn for help — medical, emotional or financial.

"They have turned their backs on us. Who is going to come forward next time they ask for volunteers?" said Joan Maiman, a Chicago writer who was a Red Cross worker in Long Binh from 1970 to 1971.

Ms. Maiman said her pleas to Red Cross officials for help had been ignored, and she blames the organization for not lobbying effectively for aid to volunteers claiming Agent Orange disabilities.

Ms. Maiman said she has suffered from chronic strep throat, allergies and severe acne that required antibiotics for seven years.

Penni Evans of Santa Rosa, Calif., a Red Cross volunteer from 1970 to 1971, has suffered from arthritis, skin problems and digestive ailments. In 1979, when she was 32, she underwent a hysterectomy.

"Doctors told me there was nothing wrong with me. It was stress. I was neurotic," she said in a telephone interview. "Then in 1984, at a Red Cross reunion, I heard about Agent Orange, and I said, 'Wait a minute.' ...

"My anger is still very, very deep," said Ms. Evans. "I still believe in what the Red Cross does. But what they did to us, or at least to me, is inexcusable."

Red Cross spokesman Gene Jeffers said he was baffled by such complaints. "We had 2,000 people go over to Vietnam and we have not received a single medical claim resulting from Agent Orange," he said. "If one does not hear a cry for help, how can one help?"

Jeffers acknowledged, however, that the Red Cross could offer little help because government studies have not linked Agent Orange to health problems.

Many women involved in the Agent Orange dispute say that they realize their efforts are a long shot, but they will not surrender.

"I'm still a patriot," said Ms. Adams. "I still believe in the ideals of this country. I don't want to give that part of me up."

Ever wonder who coordinates college day, career education week, orientation, the visitation of guest speakers or any other educational consultation service?

Guidance counselors help provide these services and several others. Since 1983 D. H. Conley has expanded from two counselors to five. The guidance department consists of two vocational guidance counselors, Mrs. Judy Whitford and Mrs. Doris Jean Haggard. The three guidance counselors are Mrs. Annie Brown, Mr. Duffy Lincoln, and Mrs. Sylvia Winchester.

In addition, this is the first year any school in Pitt County has had an assessment counselor to work with interest aptitudes.

The guidance department shares various duties. All of the counselors work with orientation for feeder schools, competency testing, college day, registration, scheduling, maintenance of student records, and coordination of special programs for remediation, failure and acceleration.

Aside form vocational guidance, Mrs. Judy Whitford works as a job placement counselor (JPTA) which involves working with twenty students towards career placement. Individual and/or group sessions focus on competency goals and learning job skills.

Mrs. Doris Jean Harggard is involved with the Carl Perkins Act, federal guidelines to assess vocatial interests and apptitudes. Mrs. Haggard works with appriximately 300 students who are enrolled in vocational courses.

Assessment counselors inform students in the eigth grade of vocational opportunities in high school and work with them on a four year educational plan geared towards meeting the students' vocational needs.

Mrs. Whitford's and Mrs. Haggard's goals are to fit young people's qualifications into todays jobs and to help students plan their career expectations ahead of time.

Holding job workshops on applications, interviewing, and resumes, administering interest inventory in classes and coordinating National Career Guidance Week at Conley are some of the activities provided by the vocational guidance department.

Working as a guidance counselor at Conley since 1971 is Mrs. Annie Brown. She is in charge of all testing and is responsible for contacting military recruiters and college representatives.

Furthermore, Mrs. Brown coordinates School Guidance and Counsel Week at Conley which is a national celebration of guidance counselors. Also, she helps with the master guidance plan on the school and the county level for and over all picture of guidance services.

As a goal, Mrs. Brown would like to see the failure and drop out rate decrease by providing educational and training activities.

Dedication, Determination Mark Lives Of Aspiring Actors

EDITOR'S NOTE — It's a world of too much talent and too little work. But thousands of aspiring actors and actresses keep trying, attending endless auditions — "cattle calls" — while perfecting their skills and waiting tables to put food on their own tables. Occasionally one gets a firm grip on the brass ring.

By KAY BARTLETT
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Katherine Barry once went to an audition where all she had to do was giggle. Her four years of college weren't much help. The gods of advertising liked somebody else's giggle better.

Tony Addabbo got bit by a junkyard dog while waiting for the cameras to get set. Then the building where he was doing the filing was raided by the Internal Revenue Service.

Margaret Nagle stood under a fire hose in 45 degree weather for hours making a television commercial and when it was over she was just dropped at the Chicago airport, still soaking wet, and told to have a nice flight back.

All three — plus tens of thousands of others — are aspiring actors in New York City. These three are all in their twenties, they all have dreams, and they love what they're doing.

It's a tough life, far more competitive than that of young trainees climbing up a Chase Manhattan ladder, and the rewards are usually far less spectacular. For most, it's endless auditions and acting, singing or dancing classes, because people who are not triple-threats might as well go back to Des Moines. It's a world of part-time jobs — hash-slinging is still a favorite although it's now called presenting nouvelle cuisine.

It produces an idiosyncratic emotional world for the practitioners. You need skin as tough as a turtle's when you're being rejected three or four times a day, and then, once you get the part, you need the ability to shed that, bury the shell and become emotionally lithe, plumbing the psyche for the subtleness, the anger, the power, the angst to make bad writing believable, good writing poetic, and great writing magic. They call it acting.

"Everything that is interesting you go out of town to do until your name is Richard Kiley," says Casper Roos, a 60-year-old actor who has been in the chorus of 13 Broadway musicals and managed to stay in the field all these years, doing films, off-Broadway, television commercials, anything to pay the rent.

Roos is a rarity of sorts, a man who has managed to stay working in this world of too much talent and too little work.

"There's the old joke about the guy sitting in the lounge at Actor's Equity and saying, 'I really ought to get out of this business. I haven't worked in 10 years,'" remarks Gerald Simon, a veteran actor with over 1,000 commercials to his credit.

Over 600 actors auditioned for the 13 parts in the Hellman play, a job that entails six weeks of hard work divided between rehearsals and the three-week run. And not a dime of income. But it's probably the best showcase in Manhattan, sure to draw agents, casting directors, producers to see aspirants in good roles.

Simon and his actress wife Liz Dammarell came to New York to do Shakespeare almost 20 years ago and quickly found that Proctor & Gamble was a better friend than the Bard. But even that is no snap. Television commercials are as fiercely competitive as the chance to play Lear. Maybe more so. The average television commercial earns the principal actor $5,000 to $8,000 for a day's work. A really good one, shown nationally for a long time, can earn an actor up to $25,000.

Miss Barry, Kathy to her friends, is 29 and after four years on the circuit just landed her first national commercial.

"I come from the art, truth and beauty school of acting, but Chekhov doesn't pay the bills," she says. "So you do the commercials, the soaps, the films, so you can own a home, send the kids to school, be middle class."

She knows all the tricks of the trade and takes a bemused view of it all.

"In the summers you run around with Kleenex to blot your face. You always run for the bathroom as soon as you get there so you can see what you look like. Especially when it rains. But you have to remember everybody else's hair is going to look as bad as yours."

"It's eating a sandwich on the bus between stops, rushing to wait, and never knowing what the day will bring."

She's philosophical about the timing in the business.

"I might be out 15 times in one two-week period and then there will be nothing for two weeks. Then the only calls then are for grandmothers, lumberjacks or twins."

Miss Barry whizzes through the soaps and the commercial auditions, but when it's for a larger slice, she puts real effort into it. She recently auditioned for a part in the upcoming road show of Neil Simon's Broadway hit, "Biloxi Blues."

For that, she worked. Three friends had said she was right for the part, so she dropped off a picture and resume with the stage manager, who then called her.

She read the play carefully. "A Neil Simon prostitute is different than a Beckett prostitute," she says, "and I immediately got a sense of who she was. I decided I would audition in a slip. I've never auditioned in my underwear before and none of my underwear was right. So I went to Macy's and bought a mauve slip. Then I had some friends over, male and female, and auditioned in front of them in the slip. I got comfortable in front of acquaintances just wearing the slip.

"I decided not to wear heels. My legs go to jelly when I'm nervous and I didn't want to shake. So I did it barefoot."

She did not get the part, but she's not down. She was told she would be kept in mind for the future. In this business, that's good.

Addabbo, a 6-foot-2, 25-year-old whose body has been deemed delightful enough for the sexy Jordache TV ads, sits on a sofa one Tuesday morning at the Hughes Moss casting office, one of the biggest theatrical casting agencies in Manhattan.

He's auditioning for a part that could bring him the fame and fortune he wants so badly. This former tree surgeon, model, star athlete, wants the star and limo treatment more than the chance to play Chekhov and says quite candidly that Shakespeare is a little out of his league.

Addabbo tells the casting director that he's got a good shot at signing a three-year contract on one of the soaps. He is being considered for the part of a boy raised in the jungle and then brought into what passes for civilization on the soaps, sort of a Tarzan.

"Don't sign it, this is prime time," says Barney Moss, partner of Julie Hughes. It's a light remark. Moss can't guarantee this one and everybody knows that. He's just letting Addabbo know they like him a lot.

For this job, casting will go on and on. Thousands of would-bes will be seen in California, New York, maybe even Chicago. Addabbo, and anyone else they look at in these early stages, is indeed a long shot.

The producers are essentially looking for a young man who can carry the series, a person with the charm that will render the televiewer to push that channel for the big Nielsen ratings. It's the brass ring all right.

"My goal is to get into TV. That's definitely where my success will be," says Addabbo. "I want to make movies, too. It's not easy. It's easier to get into the Pentagon than it is to get into some casting directors."

"I just can't wait until I do something big enough to invite my mom to a premiere and buy her a fur coat and have her arrive in a limo," says Addabbo. Juanita Walsh, who played the female lead, Regina, in the same Hellman play as Roos, has an altogether different motivation. She's married to an actor and teaches voice and speech at professional schools and fame and fortune are not important to her.

To her, the play is the thing.

"At four, I wanted to be a dancer. By the sixth grade, a singer and by eighth grade, I knew I wanted to be an actress. I knew I wanted the center of attention."

Actors come up with a variety of ways to make money so they can follow their dream.

Ward Asquith, a former network censor, is 55 now and is as fascinated by the stock market as he is acting. He manages other people's portfolios to stay afloat. Jack Wilkes, 36, sells quilts, keeps a hand in the publishing business and charges $125 an hour to be the clown at your child's party.

"If I get five or six jobs a week being a clown, that's a decent business," says the newly married Wilkes.

James Watkins, 52, dropped out of the acting business when he was a young man and the pressures of a wife and three children became too much. The grandson of vaudevillians, he became a professional guitarist. The kids are grown now and he's divorced, "so I decided it was time to go back into the rejection business."

He went in with a plan. A 6-footer, he deliberately went from 175 to 240 pounds, so he would have a better shot at becoming a character actor. He's also the right age.

The now portly Watkins has been back on the circuit for a year and he's got the part of a villian in a pilot soap called "Pacific Heights." He's been signed up for the new Woody Allen film and he's on the verge of some commercials.

Not bad for a premeditated fat man who knows the business well enough to make himself saleable.

When do you consider yourself a success and when should you get out?

It's a question all actors look at from time to time. Vincent Vogt, 34, originally from Trimont, Minn., says he feels he will know if and when it's time.

"I haven't had to wait on tables for the last five years, but I haven't achieved my career goals, either. I want to have my work well enough known so people would say Vincent Vogt could do that part. I'd rather do this than anything else. It does something to you from inside. Once you've experienced that feeling, you can't get enough of it."

Britain Issues Comet Stamps

By MARGARET MAC DONAGH
British Post Office

LONDON — Earth's most regular and reliable cosmic visitor — Halley's Comet — is one of the few comets that can be seen with the naked eye . . . though during this visit is it reserving its most spectacular appearance for the southern hemisphere.

Appearing about every 76 yers, the comet is being featured in a highly stylized set of four stamps being issued by the British Post Office on Feb. 18 with designs by cartonist Ralph Steadman.

The comet's namesake Edmond Halley is seen on the 17 pence stamp drawn as the comet; the Giotto spacecraft launched by the European Space Agency passing through the tail of the comet is on the 22 pence stamp; the legend "Maybe Twice in a Lifetime" signifying the comet's return every 76 years is on the 31 pence stamp, and the comet orbiting the sun with the planets in the background is on the 34 pence stamp.

Comets get their name from the Latin "cometes" meaning "long-haired." This refers to the comet's tail made up of dust particles and varporized gases coming from its icy head.

Halley's comet was first seen for certain by Chinese astronomers in 240 B.C. and has been back 29 times since then with memorable returns being about 12 B.C., only a few years before the birth of Christ; in A.D. 1066, preceding the Battle of Hastings where King William conquered the English; in 1301 when Giotto de Bondone used it as a model for the Star of Bethlehem in his painting, Adoration of the Magi; and in 1758, when its first prdicted appearance was confirmed on Christmas Day. A few months later in 1759 it reached perihelion, i.e., its closest approach to the sun.

The life of the comet is said to be finite — scientists calculate that it lost 280 million tons of gas and dust in 1910. This was equivalent to the "dirty snowball" nucleus, the fount of the comet's activity, losing a layer of material two yards deep. At present the nucleus of the comet is only a few miles wide and has a mass of 220,000 tons so it should last another 170,000 year. At the end of this period there would be nothing left as the comet would have dissipated as gas.

Donald Biehn, associate professor of the East Carolina University Theatre Arts, is offering free professional acting classes to interested high school juniors and seniors. The classes will be taught for a period of three weeks.

DONALD BIEHN

Biehn is offering the workshop to give high school theatre students a taste of the professional acting studio work as it is taught in New York City. "Certainly the high school theatre student will not learn the craft of acting in three weeks, but this specific instruction will help the student decide about future training choices."

Biehn has studied with two prominant acting teachers in New York. Uta Hagen is the author of "Respect For Acting" and Sanford Meisner has trained such actors as Gregory Peck, Lee Grant, Peter Falk, Diane Keaton, Jon Voight and Robert DuVall.

There will be interviews for all interested students from 7-9 p.m. Wednesday in room 201 on the second floor of the main wing of the Messick Theatre Arts Center. Classes will be held Monday and Wednesday nights from 7-9. Only 14 high school students will be accepted into this special course.

Bob Marshall, first recreation chief of the U.S. Forest Service, hiked 30 or more miles a day some 250 times, says National Geographic. A founder of the Wilderness Society, Marshall helped preserve millions of acres of wild lands.

Book News

From Sheppard Memorial Library

By TAMMY LEE JOLLY

"Women and Appletrees," by Moa Martinson, is a story of two women, distant cousins and their lives.

The women are decendants of Mother Sofi, the wife of the largest landowner in the parish. When Mother Sofi can no longer deal with the gossip from others about her bathing once a week, she drowns herself. And for many years, the parish continues to gossip about Mother Sofi's sins. Finally, when they dedicate their devotions in the meeting house on a Saturday night, they pray for the "sinful Mother Sofi." Two days later, she is pulled from the the river.

In another story in the book, Ellen's mother dies when she is young, and Ellen is raised by a kind old woman. Later, the woman hangs herself when she learns her son has dropped out of medical school and becomes a postman. Ellen leaves and becomes a waitress. She meets her husband and goes to live with his father at Appledale, which is named for the fruit trees that Ellen's father-in-law planted beside the cottage years ago for his young bride.

On the other hand, Sally, another character in the book, has grown up in the alleys of the city. When Sally meets Ellen, she is unmarried, has had four children and is expecting another child. Through Ellen and Sally, the struggle for simple survival in Sweden can be seen. The women must fight to feed their children and to keep their men. It is a simple life they live. Ellen's husband eventually returns home to stay, and Sally weds the richest farmer in the parish, changing her status in the villagers eyes.

"Things That Divide Us: Stories By Women" deals about women's issues that often cause separation and misunderstandings. What is offered between the covers of this short story collection is fiction that offers something different. New thoughts and feelings are provoked after reading the stories.

Many different relationships that women often encounter are explored in the book. For example, there is a relationship of a white woman and her black maid — neither of whom see their differences through color. In another story, one woman, a waitress, alienates herself from a high school friend because she is a doctor. The stiffness of their conversation brings close the pain of how two friends can grow apart, the gap too far to bridge.

Mary Ann, an Indian, is suddenly thrusted into the outside world after her father's death. Her mother, a Catholic who has remarried, to an Italian man, wants to wipe away all of Mary Ann's upbringing, often calling it voodoo and witchcraft. Mary Ann cannot see that all her mother wants is for her to be accepted into society, not ostracised for her background.

This collection of stories is very realistic. It is as if a moment of time in someone's life is suspended between the covers of this book.

$100,000 Grant For 'Roanoak' TV Series

RALEIGH — Gov. James Martin recently accepted a $100,000 check from officials of Union Camp Corporation for completion of a three-part televison mini-series on North Carolina's Roanoke voyages. The series will be aired nationally on public television in May and June.

In ceremonies in the Conference Room of the Archives and History/State Library Building, Gov. Martin received the last of five payments totaling $500,000 for production of "Roanoak" by South Carolina's Educational Television network.

"Roanoak" is an epic drama depicting the first contacts of Native American and Elizabethan explorers during the times of the Roanoke voyages, 1584-1590. The series is produced by the South Carolina ETV network to be shown on the well-known "American Playhouse," scheduled for May 26, June 2 and June 9. "Roanoak" was filmed on location at sites in Georgetown County, S.C.

After the initial showing, school districts will be able to buy or borrow cassettes from the Museum of History Associates, and the N.C. Humanities Committee, two of the underwriters. Producers have prepared a 24-page viewers guide with a special insert for history teachers and librarians. Various museum organizations and historical groups around the state have planned exhibits and special activities to coincide with the showing.

The series, five years in the making, is part of the national awareness of the continuing 40th Anniversary observance. "It is especially fitting that we will see it during 1986, which has been proclaimed the 'Year of the Native American,'" said Mrs. Patric Dorsey, Secretary of the N. C. Department of Cultural Resources.

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Jean Auel is a storyteller who imagines the lives and loves of prehistoric people we know little about, using the artifacts they left behind.

Her starting place is archeology and her destination in three straight books has been the best-seller list.

Her third book, "The Mammoth Hunters," knocked James Michener's "Texas" off the top of the New York Times best-seller list when it was published in November. It had a first printing of 1 million copies.

It follows "Clan of the Cave Bear" and "Valley of the Horses" which have sold a combined total of 7.5 million copies in 15 languages. And the book continues Mrs. Auel's celebration of the past.

"Almost every hard object mentioned, whether it's stone tools, bone needles, hand-carved ivory beads, is based on actual artifacts, things that I've seen or seen pictures of," the author said in an interview.

"The hard things are all there. The rest of it is my interpretation," she said. "The characters and the stories are all mine. Sometimes the research suggests characters."

For example, a character in "The Mammoth Hunters" big enough to intimidate an NFL lineman was suggested by a huge stone axe found by archeologists.

"I thought, 'Somebody had to be around who was powerful enough to handle this kind of stone tool.' That was really the beginning suggestion for the character, Talut. To me he's a wonderful, fun character," she said.

Mrs. Auel's painstaking research has won praise from the academics who study the era when mastodons and cave lions roamed the earth.

She's been invited to speak at universities and was to appear at the Smithsonian Institution earlier this month. Mrs. Auel has a research library of about 800 books and manuscripts at her home on the Oregon coast, and is in frequent contact with scientists studying Paleolithic times. They willingly help her.

"They say, 'It's about time somebody's writing about these people as the kind of human and sensitive beings they really are,'" she said.

"I'm doing a whole lot more than just archeology. I find myself getting into paleoclimatology, paleobotany, the lifestyles of hunting-gathering societies. I'm learning about all of these things and then piecing them together like a wonderful mystery."

Her three books have won raves from some critics but have taken a beating from others who call them Stone Age romance novels.

But negative reviews have not prevented the 49-year-old writer from having a rich career. Success, she said, "allows me to keep on writing, which is what I want to do. I don't really need much more than that. ...

"The fact that I am also able to now go to places like Kiev (in the Soviet Union) and do research directly is a great, wonderful bonus."

Her books detail the fictional adventures of Ayla, a golden-haired Cro-Magnon woman living about 30,000 years ago in what is now the Soviet Union. She plans a total of six books in her "Earth's Children" series. They will follow Ayla through a long and eventful life.

The author grew up in Chicago and married Ray Auel, 51, when she was 18 years old. They lived briefly in New Mexico before settling in Portland. She calls herself a firmly rooted Oregon transplant.

The Auels have five children, ranging in age from 24 to 31, and nine grandchildren. She was a technical writer for Tektronix Inc. before earning a master's degree and becoming a credit manager there.

Before "Clan of the Cave Bear," her writing consisted of some poetry and two letters to the editor. Then, dissatisfied with her job at Tektronix, she quit in 1976 and looked for something else to do.

In her voracious reading she ran across descriptions of Neanderthals and Cro-Magnons and became fascinated, then obsessed. "Clan" was published four years later.

"Actually, if I were going to sit down and plan to write a best-selling novel, would I have chosen Paleolithic, Ice Age cavemen?" she said. "I would have chosen a spy thriller or glitz or something, but I wrote the story that I always wanted to read."

In "Clan," the child Ayla is orphaned by an earthquake, then adopted by a clan of Neanderthals. She grows up, learning herbal medicine from her adopted mother, but is cast out of the clan for breaking its stifling taboos.

In "Valley," she finds her way to an isolated valley where she lives alone for three years, domesticating horses, taming a cave lion and rescuing Jondalar, the first Cro-Magnon man she's ever known.

In "The Mammoth Hunters" Ayla and Jondalar meet and spend an eventful winter with a band of Cro-Magnons called the Lion Camp.

German Expressionist Show Scheduled

By SHARON BROOM
N.C. Museum of Art

RALEIGH — An exhibition of 45 paintings by important artists of the German Expressionist movement will be shown Feb. 22 through April 20 at the North Carolina Museum of Art.

"Modern German Masterpieces" has been selected by the St. Louis Art Museum from its distinguished collection of German paintings.

While the exhibition includes work by Lyonel Feininger, Ernst Ludwig Kirchner, Paul Klee, Emil Nolde, Karl Schmidt-Rottluff and others, half of the paintings are by Max Beckman (1884-1950), whom Robert Hughes recently desribed in TIME magazine as "the greatest German painter of the 20th century."

Most of the paintings in the show were collected by Morton D. May of St. Louis, founder of the May Department Stores Co., whose numerous gifts to the St. Louis Art Museum included the bequest of nearly 100 German paintings in 1983. The selection on view, primarily of figurative paintings, reflects May's taste and his special interest in the work of Max Beckman.

Classified as a "degenerate artist" by the Nazis, Beckman left Germany in 1937 and spent the war years in Amsterdam. In 1947, he accepted a visiting professorship at Washington University in St. Louis and remained there for two years. Already a collector of German paintings, May became firmly convinced of Beckman's importance and acquired 39 of his works from 1948 to 1951. As a result, the St. Louis Museum of Art collection of Beckman paintings is one of the two finest in the world.

The exhibition demonstrates the variety of German Expressionist painting, which is characterized by strong, simplified images, bold colors and intense emotional expression. While many Expressionist works may seem intense and anxious, they are often concerned with a utopian ideal — the expression of a new way of seeing and feeling for modern man.

Such works as "The Little Mountain Goats" (1914) by Franz Marc and "Three Girls in a Wood" (1920) by Otto Mueller demonstrate an interest in nature. More often, however, the subject is life in the city, as in paintings by Kirchner. "Circus Rider" (1914), one of his most important works, stresses the visual excitement of the urban environment.

The works by Beckmann span his entire career, from 1909 to 1950. They range from portraits, landscapes and still lifes to powerful allegorial paintings such as his famous triptych "The Acrobats" (1939), populated by circus figures with mysterious religious and mythological meanings. According to Dr. Mitchell Kahan, who is coordinating the exhibition at the N.C. Museum of Art, "The Acrobats" is, "one of the great achievements of 20th century painting."

The exhibition is accompanied by a fully-illustrated catalogue written by guest curator Charles Haxthausen, professor of art history at the University of Minnesota. Also available will be a free gallery guide written by Kahan.

"Modern German Masterpieces" has been organized by the St. Louis Art Museum with the support of the National Endowment for the Arts. It is supported in Raleigh by the Business Friends of Art.

The N.C. Museum of Art is located at 2110 Blue Ridge Blvd., Raleigh. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday; 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday; noon to 5 p.m. Sunday; closed Monday and Tuesday. The exhibit is open and free to the public. For additional information, call 833-1935.

Photographic Concert

LAURINBURG — "A Photographic Concert," an audio-visual slide show presentation by John Young will be presented at 8 p.m. Monday in the Vardell Arts Building on the St. Andrews Presbyterian College campus, Laurinburg.

Young, a former National Geographic photographer, is an Evans visiting professor currently teaching a winter-term course in photography and communications at St. Andrews.

Young's students will also have a presentation in the Vardell Building at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

Both events are free and open to the public.

Stoneware Exhibit At NCSU

RALEIGH — Jan Richardson's stoneware — miniature buildings with ornate detail — is on display at the N.C. State University Craft Center Gallery through Feb. 18.

Richardson is the architect of a hundred types of commercial and private buildings. She has designed schools, apothecaries, bakeries, churches; the Plainfield Library and the Chestnut Grove General Stores are her work. Miss Odie's Cabin comes from her hand, as do Marley Farms and the houses at Smoke Hollow and Seven Springs. Her tallest buildings are 10 inches high, and many will hold a candle.

Her Windy Meadows Poettery in Knoxville, Md. is a true cottage industry. She designs the buildings and apportions the work to be assembled and decorated.

Gallery hours at the NCSU Craft Center are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 2 to 10 p.m.; Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m.; and Saturdays and Sundays from 12:30 to 5:30 p.m. Admission is free.

SHOPPING ON A BUDGET FOR VALENTINE'S WEEK

You can't put a price on love during Valentine's Week but Cupid doesn't want you to go broke, either. Even those who are on tight budgets can enjoy the holiday because, as the saying goes, it really is the thought that counts.

If you want to say "Be My Valentine" with flowers, here are some budget tips from Cox Floral Service of 4th Street Arlington Blvd. in Greenville.

• Buy just a few flowers, arranged in a vase or in a bunch. You don't have to give a dozen flowers or an elaborate flower arrangement. Even a single flower in a bud vase or a pretty box is a gift that will be remembered.

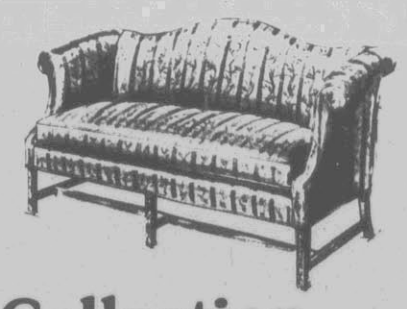

• Buy less expensive flowers and colors (red flowers usually are at a premium) but have them decorated with something that people associate with the ocassion, like red hearts or cupids.

• Order your flowers as early as you can. Selections may be limited at the last minute.

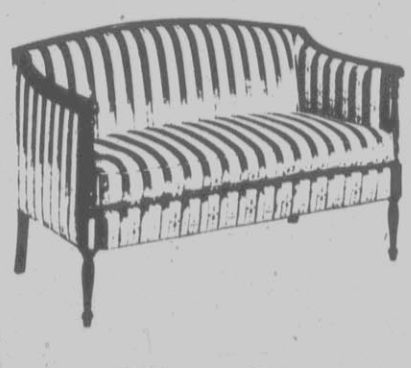

• Buy a green or flowering plant, which will last a long time, and dress it up with Valentine accessories.

The Things A Goat And A Winemaker Have In Common

By PATRICIA MOORE

What do a goat, a winemaker and art have in common?

If the winemaker happens to be Walter S. Taylor, they have everything in common, as Taylor explained in an interview during a visit with his sister, Ellen Taylor Flanagan of Greenville.

The combination of a goat, a winemaker and art are logical once Taylor relates his story, but the reasons leading to the unlikely trio are complex. They involve a famous American wine, a soft drink company and a federal court ruling.

All are connected with a label that Taylor, who is a fourth-generation wine producer as well as an artist, designed for his Bully Hill wines.

Taylor's saga began in 1977 when Coca-Cola Co. purchased Taylor Wine Co., which was founded by Walter Taylor's grandfather of the same name. By this time, Walter Taylor had begun his own vineyard and winery at Bully Hill, near Hammondsport, N.Y., which is also near the Taylor Wine Co. site.

The soft drink company objected to Walter Taylor's labels and subsequently filed suit. A New York federal court judge ruled in favor of Taylor Wine Co. and ordered Walter Taylor not to use his family name to market or promote Bully Hill wines.

Although Walter Taylor complied with the ruling, he found creative ways to do it. As he explained, "Where other people use violence or other means to get ends, I use my artwork and writing skills."

One of his first responses to the court ruling was to blank out his surname on existing labels. Even tourists visiting Bully Hill helped mark out the labels. Taylor also drew masks on likenesses of family members on his labels.

An article in the New York Times noted that while the public found these activities amusing, the federal court judge did not. The judge found Taylor (Walter, that is), in contempt of court in 1979.

Taylor then began to use animals on his labels. One was a owl with the inscription "Walter S. Who" followed by "We know who, do you?"

Then came the goat.

Taylor designed a new label with the slogan "They have my name and heritage, but they didn't get my goat." The label featured a sketch of a goat named Guilt Free as well as the inscription "Bully Hill Billy Goat."

But Guilt Free was more than a product of the imagination. Taylor says there is a real white goat named Guilt Free that is a sort of company mascot. In fact, he has several goats at Bully Hill.

Furthermore, the label and selection of a goat as company mascot aren't all there is to the goat business. Each fall Bully Hill is the location of a gathering of folks who are invited to bring their goats for judging. With a twinkle in his eye, Taylor notes that, "So far, we haven't been able to get any politicians to be photographed with a goat."

He is making plans now to host a national goat pageant and show with judges in 1988.

As for the art part of this trilogy, Taylor describes himself as a self-taught artist. He designs and sketches all the labels for his wine bottles, making them unique collectors items. He drew the illustrations for a book titled "Treasury of Wine and Wine Cookery" written by his late father Greyton H. Taylor.

Although he has been described in the New York Times as "an accomplished artist" and his pen and ink drawings have been featured in "American Artist" magazine, he is proudest that his watercolor of the first American space shuttle hangs in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. D.C..

As a writer, he co-authored the book "Over Land and Sea: A Biography of Glenn Hammond Curtiss" with Robert Scharff.

He continues to observe the federal court ruling that resulted in his blanking out his surname on his labels but that went even further in ordering him to destroy labels in question, related promotional artwork and alter names on signs of the Greyton H. Taylor Wine Museum (named for his father) and on Greyton H. Taylor Memorial Drive.

He took the offensive materials to the site of Taylor Wine Company, where they were destroyed. He reportedly took them there in a manure spreader, accompanied by 1,000 townspeople who witnessed the burning of his art. All these events were described in New York Times articles.

Today many of his copyrighted wine labels read, "Our products produced by the employees of Bully Hill Vineyards, Inc. Names upon request. His surname is omitted. Family portraits are identified only by first names.

Taylor laments that "I can't tell people who I am or where I came from" on his labels. He feels that the court order has altered a family history that goes back to 1880 when the first Walter Stephen Taylor moved from Halsey Valley to Hammondsport, N.Y., and took over a seven-acre vineyard at Bully Hill with one cabin on it. Since that time family members have been engaged in grape growing or wine making, leading the present Walter Taylor to say his is the oldest family name in American to be continuously associated with wine.

An advocate of total ingredient labeling in alcoholic beverages, he claims to be the only wine producer in the world who has distributed total ingredient labeling to the consumer since 1970.

"We must be responsible to the public that permits us to exist," he said. "Unless a wine says 100 percent New York State grapes and has a description of its contents, the buyer doesn't know what he has."

He also claims the distinction of being the only wine producer who has no-drinking and no-driving labels as of 1985.

He also is probably the only wine producer and artist who has a white goat named Guilt Free.

Art By Refugees Of Nazi Germany In Berlin Exhibit

By KENNETH JAUTZ
Associated Press Writer

BERLIN (AP) — An exhibition of artists forced to flee from Nazi Germany has opened in Berlin, offering what organizers call a portrait of the "pain of exile."

The first of its kind in Germany, the display presents more than 500 paintings, photographs and architectural drafts. Most of the those represented were German and Austrian Jews.

Called "Art in Exile in Great Britain 1933-1945," the exhibition boasts such leading artists as painters Oskar Kokoschka and Hile Goldschmidt and architects Walter Gropius and Erich Mendelsohn.

"There hasn't been an exhibition like this before," organizer Margarete Kampmeyer said in an interview. "No one has made an effort to look at these people as a group."

The exhibition, which will also be shown later in London, marks the culmination of two years of research by volunteers who tracked down the works of many of the largely unknown artists shown throughout Europe, Kampmeyer said.

All of the artists represented had sought refuge in Britain.

Art critic Michael Nungesser, writing in the exhibition's catalog, said the show represented an infrequently documented aspect of modern German history.

"Hardly any other nation in history suffered ... such an all-encompassing cultural exodus as did Germany under the Nazi dictatorship," he wrote.

"It was our intention to focus on the artistic achievements made by this group of people, and not on the suffering they went through," Kampmeyer said in an interview. "But the pain of their exile can be seen in many of their works."

Kampmeyer, a member of West Berlin's New Society for Graphic Art, said the roughly 50 artists shown do not sport a similar style and cannot be lumped together in a common "school" of art.

Still, many concentrated on similar themes in exile, including alienation, flight and imprisonment.

"It was a difficult period for all of these artists," Kampmeyer said. "For most it was a time of disorientation."

By 1943, some 35,000 Germans and Austrians — 90 percent of them Jews — were living in Great Britain.

Many were briefly interned at the beginning of the war under the short-lived British policy of rounding up all enemy aliens, which had been hastily implemented at the beginning of the conflict.

"It is hard to continue your work when you have been uprooted," said Ada Maier Heckroth, whose late husband, Hein, is one of the artists shown in the exhibition.

Artist-In-Residence Michele Amateau Pleased With Her Work

CAPTIVE LEAF — When early winter triggers the release of leaves from trees, most fall to earth to snuggle into layers with their fellow fallen ones. A few, on the journey to earth, however, become ensnared, isolated. Such is the fate of this single sweet gum leaf, wedged beyond wind-release between layers of broken glass fragments in the window of an abandoned house near Pactolus. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

By KAREN EDMISTON
ECU News Bureau

Oil painter Michele Amateau turned down a similar offer at a school located only an hour-and-a-half from her home in Texas to come to East Carolina University this semester as artist-in-residence in the School of Art. Although she would have to be separated from her husband and wouldn't save as much money, Mrs. Amateau chose ECU.

"The other job didn't sound as interesting as this one," Mrs. Amateau said. "And I decided this would be a good opportunity to be on the east coast again because I'm from New York."

Mrs. Amateau said she also was anxious to work with Dr. Edward Levine, art school dean, whom she had met earlier. "In large part it was because of Ed that I came here," Mrs. Amateau said. "I respect him tremendously. He's a very bright and skilled administrator and artist."

Mrs. Amateau, who is teaching two painting classes at ECU, said the visiting artist program is "fantastic," both for the students and herself. "Artists come here, and they have all sorts of energy and all sorts of new attitudes and ideas, and they don't have preconceptions about who they're dealing with," she said.

The program allows her to teach only when she wants. "It gives me the opportunity to work for longer stretches of time just on my own pieces," Mrs. Amateau said. "And I love to travel — you're able to go and be in a new situation and pick up new stimulation. I come to my teaching with a certain amount of energy because I don't do it all the time."

Mrs. Amateau admitted that she teaches only when she and her husband, a sculptor and part-time instructor, need the money. "He brings in our steady income, and I bring in the income to get major things done," she said. "We need to build a larger studio."

This is the first year Amateau has accepted two positions away from home; last semester she taught at the University of Colorado at Boulder. "Usually I go only for a semester somewhere, and sometimes it's only a two-hour drive from where I live," she said. "It's a nice kind of a thing to do, but as I get older it gets harder."

Mrs. Amateau, who is Spanish, Turkish and Greek, said the primary source of her work for the past 15 years has been the wall paintings found in Egypt, Crete and Rome. "Through the influences of the Oriental rugs that we had all over the floors, the painted pottery, and the food — feta cheese, olive oil and lemon, grape leaves — somehow all of that has formed a very strong identification that I have with the Mediterranean world," she said.

A selection of Mrs. Amateau's paintings and drawings will open with a 7:30 p.m. reception at Gray Gallery, located on the ECU campus in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center, on Feb. 8.

In addition, Mrs. Amateau will present a lecture in Jenkins Auditorium on Monday, Feb. 10, at 7:30 p.m. "I'll be talking about my work and the sources of my work," she said.

Also opening on Feb. 8 will be shows by two sculptors: Nade Haley, a teacher at the Rhode Island School of Design in Providence, and Dennis Cobb, a 1962 graduate of ECU. Cobb will present a lecture in Jenkins Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. on Feb. 24. All events are free and open to the public.

Gray Gallery is open from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday, and 8 p.m. on Wednesdays. The works will remain on view through March 7.

California Artist Specializes In Sand Sculpture

By TAMARA JONES
Associated Press Writer

ENCINITAS, Calif. (AP) — Just water and sand, Norman Richard Kraus will tell you, just water and sand. He is a purist.

It started one day in 1967 when Kraus surveyed the beach a few blocks from his home in northern San Diego County and mused, "Gee, I always wanted to build a sand castle."

He had grown up with the beach as his backyard but, oddly, has no boyhood memories of ever plunking down in the damp sand just beyond the tide's reach to mold castles with pails and tin shovels.

So Kraus, an architect who designs millionaires' estates for a living, made his debut as a master sand sculptor at age 30, calling in a tractor and an army of volunteers to help build a four-ton palace.

At first, he "used to take someone young along with me and pretend to do it for them. Now I don't need to anymore."

Now, at 48, "I do it for myself."

His sand monuments today are commissioned for up to $25,000 by cities and shopping malls. He descends on his sites with bulldozers and irrigation pumps, plans and drawings from foreign ministries, photographs and aides de camp "to do the grunt work."

His replica of Windsor Castle circa 1790 — "before they filled in the moats" — took 1,600 tons of sand and covered an area 60 feet by 140 feet on a ridge overlooking the ocean.

A subtropical storm ravaged the castle on the fifth day. "The sky was fantastic," Kraus recalled. He photographed Windsor beneath the roiling clouds and keeps the haunting print on his dining room wall.

Another time, he turned the French landmark of Mont-St-Michel into a sand tower 26 feet high. It took 50 people four days to build. More than 700 sand chimneys rose from the miniature village at the foot of the Benedictine abbey.

By the end of the day, the sun had crumbled several hundred chimneys, "just hitting them ping ping ping like BB guns," Kraus said.

"That's the wonder of it, really," he said. "Whatever we do as man, nature starts to reclaim instantly. There is no known longevity to sand. You get wind erosion, the sun baking it, the water."

The ephemeral nature of his medium guarantees that what Norman Richard Kraus creates will soon be destroyed. He calls it recycled art.

"You chart the tide table, aim it at the sunset, and if you time it right, you can see the waves cause the demise of your work rather than some unwitting 6-year-old," he said.

"All you can do is just take one good look at it and then you simply walk away."

It isn't painful, Kraus insists, knowing that his sand castles can never fulfill the ultimate goal of an artist — to endure. Indeed, it's the very idea that "nothing man makes is permanent" that inspires him to recapture a forgotten era by showing, for example, what a famous castle looked like centuries ago.

His medieval city of Carcassonne hinted at jousting knights and swooning damsels, of fire-breathing dragons and sly court jesters. "I have a certain romance for things that no longer exist," Kraus said.

Kraus rendered Bethlehem as the shepherds likely saw it that first Christmas Eve, using a canopy to protect the walled village for four weeks.

He has also erected sand replicas of Chartres Cathedral and the Mayan temple of Tikal in Guatemala, the latter complete with a sand monk walking a jaguar along a ledge. Tiny sand figures mounted the steep steps leading to the temple; a laser illuminated the center doorway.

"One thing about sand castling is that you become a giant," Kraus said. "I can create in a half hour what took the masters years. You feel you have great strength — with the sweep of a trowel, you can make a plaza to hold 300 people."

When a San Diego shopping mall commissioned a Kraus work last Christmas, Kraus trucked in tons of sand from a quarry and spent nights and nine weekends carving a graceful Madonna and child.

When he went to dismantle the sculpture Jan. 2, a security guard told him several nuns and priests had knelt in prayer before the sand on Christmas Eve.

Kraus feels the same reverence for his work. When it is gone, he thinks of it not as being destroyed, but retrieved, nature as his partner, not enemy.

"You know you're just borrowing this from her for a few hours or days," he said.

Kraus climbed into a bulldozer and took the Madonna down himself because "I thought I'd be more humane."

He limits major castle construction to a couple of times a year, usually a commissioned work at Christmas and the annual Labor Day invitational he stages on a San Diego beach as a gift to his hometown.

Preparations for the Labor Day extravaganza usually begins months earlier, with negotiations for beach permits, arrangements for liability insurance and extensive historical research. Kraus is thinking about doing the Vatican this year.

Construction is no simple matter of styrofoam-cup turrets and moats etched with an index finger.

His sun-burnished hands excitedly carving the air, Kraus spent 20 minutes explaining how he starts with a volcano of sand and fills it with 100,000 gallons of seawater from irrigation pumps, then compresses the mixture into a mound.

Detail work is done with masonry tools, trowels, small shovels and kitchen knives Kraus has fashioned into chisels. A plastic ice-cream scoop is a favorite tool, ideal for onion domes.

Delegating tasks for the Labor Day project, Kraus becomes something of a despot, king of his sand hill. He plans where each turret and staircase and wall will go, insisting on historical accuracy.

Problems, Pleasures In Taking Bach's Music To The Public

(Editor's Note: Mrs. Shires is a short story writer, a member of the Greenville Writers Club, and is on the staff of Joyner Library, East Carolina University).

By NANCY SHIRES

Cellist Tim Eddy and three other members of the Bach Aria Group arrived in Greenville late Monday afternoon, January 27, their third stop of ten on a 15-day tour. A few more members arrived later in a van that brought some of their luggage. At that time, two other members were last seen in Charlotte, where their flight had been overbooked. Oboist Ron Roseman had broken his glasses on the journey and had to find an optical store in Greenville to have the frames replaced before the 8 p.m. performance in Hendrix Theater.

Most of the time on tours is "taken up by logistics, which are very draining. You have to collect yourself," Tim Eddy said.

Because of the pressure of time confounded by confusion, Tim Eddy was the only one of the group available on this visit for an interview. He put his cello down but didn't take off his coat. Tired or not, he radiated enthusism for music and his work. "Preparation for this tour began back in September when the group met for the ground-breaking for the new repertoire," Eddy said. More recently they met for an intensive three-day rehearsal in New York City, their home base.

"The rest of the year is just as busy, even the summers," he added.

The Bach Aria Group conducts a festival and institute at the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

Eddy serves as a college faculty member in New York and in the summers, in Florida. He also performs with the Galimir Quartet and the New York Philomusica, and every July and August is part of the Santa Fe Music Festival.

Eddy joined the group two years before Scheide retired. "I had wanted to join the group for 30 years. I was steeped in their performances long before I ever became a member," he said.

His teacher, Bernard Greenhouse, had been cellist with the group and once, when Eddy was performing in a road-tour concert in Albany, he was asked to substitute for the regular cellist in the Bach Aria Group.

"So when they needed to fill the cellist position a few years later, they contacted me," he explained. Reflecting on experiences during his career, he noted "I was in North Carolina, at Duke, about 1975, where I placed second in a competition with the North Carolina Symphony."

Asked if he could name the most fulfilling aspect of his multi-faceted career, Eddy said that would be a hard choice, but "it would have to be performing. Even when you are teaching, you are really teaching performance.

"Teachers have to learn to listen. They need an overview, so they can guide the student. You don't deluge the student with criticism, just concentrate on the basic points you want to work on."

Eddy added: "Musicians have to keep renewing their commitment to their music, opening new doors, using the innate curiosity of a musician to hear what makes sense. I thrive on the diversity of experiences, of pieces and composers. I guess that's why I really can't say I have a favorite piece or one that taught me most as a musician."

Eddy spoke about the program that was scheduled for that night at Hendrix Theater as typical of new programs the group is offering, one he said balances vocal music with instrumental, sacred music with secular.

"A good mixture," he noted. "'Kommt, ihr angfocht'ne Sunder' from Cantata 30, was a real enlightenment to me when we first heard it and decided to add it to our reportoire. A friend came to us and asked us to try it with his alto voice. We're always learning, adding. And we try to balance this with a piece like the Trio Sonata in G, for flute, cello, and harpsichord."

Eddy said in the future the Bach Aria groups wants to do more full cantatas, instead of selections from them, and to seek out more residencies.

"For example," he said, "we could work with semiprofessional vocal and instrumental groups in a community for three days, one for masterclasses, one for rehearsals, and one for a joint performance. Or with a university chorus and orchstra. We need to look into recording. It's part of our original purpose."

Eddy says he is not glad that last year's 300th anniversary celebration of Bach's birth is over, even though it meant extra work for the ensemble — more performances, substitutions, travel.

"I just hope that the audience for Bach will widen, that people, who normally wouldn't, will go out of their way to hear him. After all, you can't love something until you hear it and know it," he said with the same warmth as he did when speaking of discovering the "Kommt, ihr angefocht'ne Sunder."

On the question of how Eddy, in the whirl of concerts and logistics, finds time to relax and be with his family, he replied: "You just have to carve the time out (for a moment he played sculptor with his hands). This year, for instance, I told the people in Santa Fe that I can come for only three weeks instead of seven."

Eddy and his wife have two children, Catherine who is seven, and Jonathan, two. "The kids sing a lot but haven't started lessons. We don't even have a piano yet."

But it is certain the children will be exposed to the best in music. And maybe someday in the future they may be enthusiastic performers who will take to the road on concert tours. If that happens, they may learn that Greenville is a place between Schenectady and Bowling Green.

In addition to cellist Tim Eddy, members of the Bach Aria Group in Greenville for the Monday performance were flutist and diretor Samuel Baron, keyboard artist Yehudi Wyner, tenor David Britton, soprano Barbara Pearson, mezzo-soprano Jennifer Jones, bass-baritone Jan Opalach, violiist Daniel Phillips, and oboist Ron Roseman.

The group is experienced at traveling and quite familiar with all the little things that can go wrong on tours.

One of the most prestigious of American ensembles, it has been bringing the music of Johann Sebastian Bach to audiences in the U.S. and abroad since 1946. It was founded in that year by William H. Scheide, musician, Princeton scholar and patron of chamber music, to promote the knowledge and appreciation of Bach's lesser-known cantatas. His ensemble of nine, vocalists and instrumentalists, the only one devoted to the music of Bach, had great success in helping people discover that Bach's music is universal and as beautiful today as it was in 18th-century Europe.

In 1980 Scheide retired, along with six members of the ensemble. Financial backing stopped with Scheide's retirement, and reviews became negative.

But the ensemble survived and is flourishing again.

Flutist Samuel Baron, who has been with the group since 1965, took charge and instituted some major changes: more of a chamber music emphasis rather than a star system; more instrumental works on the program; more concentration on interpretation as Bach's music became better known; plus other performances and mini-festivals with symphony orchestras.

Director Baron has succinctly summed up the continuing appeal of Bach's Music when he commented: "The music is so well-made that you can play it or listen to it over a hundred times and admire it more as you go. Bach's rhythm is powerful, the harmony is rich, and the meoldies are some of the most beautiful ever imagined."

Elderly Buddhist Monks Keep Ancient Chinese Music Alive

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP) — For 28 generations, Buddhist monks of the Zhihua Temple in Peking have passed down the secret of how to play music that once graced the court of China's Ming Dynasty, which reigned from 1368 to 1644.

But only eight of them survive today and they are 60 to 84 years old. Banned with the abolition of religious activities during Mao Tse-tung's radical "Cultural Revolution" of 1966-76, the Buddhist musicians dispersed, died off or went into retirement.

Nevertheless the eight survivors, wearing their traditional gold robes, are back together again. They practice twice a week at another temple and are preparing to pass on their secrets to a new group of novices, Chinese Buddhist Association officials said in a recent interview.

The occasion of the interview allowed a rare chance for an outsider to hear the Buddhist musicmakers, who despite their age, produce a robust, harmonious, organ-like sound with five traditional Chinese instruments.

Using a five-note pentatonic scale reminiscent of medieval European music, the monks play from memory. The melody moves relentlessly, in waves, without repeats.

The five instruments are the "sheng," a drone-like mouth organ with 17 pipes; a "cloud gong," which has 10 bronze gongs in a decorative wooden frame; a transverse bamboo flute; the oboe-like kuan, and a kettle drum.

Flute player Zhao Xiang, 62, said he began learning his instrument at the age of 13 but during the Cultural Revolution he was forced to work in a Peking iron and steel mill.

It took him 15 years to master the music, he said, and it's all he can play.

"I've heard of Beethoven but I don't enjoy his music," he said in response to a question about more modern musical classics.

Chen Jiewei, secretary-general of the Peking Buddhist Association, said Red Guards burned musical instruments and smashed Buddhist statues as feudalist relics during the Cultural Revolution.

"The monks ceased to play music but they didn't forget how," he said.

Ling Haicheng, in charge of the association's arts section, helped retrieve the ancient music and get the monks together again in 1980. The Chinese government now permits religious activity, although many temples and churches remain in desecration.

Ling said 20 or 30 monks could play in the early years of the Chinese Communists, who took over in 1949. "Since then, many have died and the others are aging and ailing."

Some of the Zhihua Temple music exists in old notation, but nuances have to be passed from teacher to pupil, and only about 20 of the original 150 strains remain extant, Ling said.

He explained that the music stems from folk tunes of the Sung Dynasty (960-1279) and survived into the Ming Dynasty only in the repertoire of imperial musicians.

The eunuch Wang Chen, adviser to 15th-century Ming Emperor Cheng T'ung, ordered monks to play the music for his enjoyment when the emperor built Zhihua Temple for himself in 1446. Zhihua means growth of the intellect.

Three years later, the emperor was slain in a coup.

"The monks had no means to live on, so they began to play for wealthy families," Ling said. "After that, the music was passed down from generation to generation."

The Zhihua Temple was closed in 1966 and the monks now live at the Guanghua Temple in northwest Peking, a complex that dates from the 14th century.

Not a note of the music was changed over the centuries, and to preserve their musical secret, the monks refused to teach anyone outside their temple or to let novices learn more than one instrument.

Combining folk, court and temple styles, some of the music depicts fishing and hunting, Ling said. He added that other melodies were used for the arrival of the emperor in a sedan chair, while chant-like passages have more spiritual content.

"Before 1949, the music was played at funerals. One part was called the 'Short-Lived Ghost' but bereaved families didn't know that," Ling said.

The Buddhist Association is arranging for young musicians to carry on the tradition. Officials estimate that Peking, a city of 9.5 million, has only 800 practicing Buddhists.

An 84-year-old monk, no longer able to play the flute, pointed to a burly musician in his 60s and said, "He is the only survivor among my eight disciples."

They are the only musicians left who can play an ancient form of court and temple music handed down to successive generations of novice monks since the Ming dynasty. Aged 60 to 84, they perform the harmonious medolides on flutes, reeds, gongs and drums. (AP Laserphoto by Jeff Bradley)

In the UNC-G competition, she performed works by Mozart, Accolay and Monti. She was accompanied on piano by her father, Dr. Richard Lucht.

ECU News Bureau

The "re-premiere" of a locally-made all-black-cast jazz film revue, "Pitch a Boogie Woogie," has been scheduled for Saturday, Feb. 8, at East Carolina University's Hendrix Theatre.

Noted jazz saxophonist Lou Donaldson, a member of the Rhythm Vets when the band of Navy veterans recorded the film's soundtrack in 1947, will return to Greenville for the screening, along with a dozen other performers who appeared in the film.

Tickets for the screening and jazz program are $7 each and are available at the ECU Central Ticket Office in Mendenhall Student Center.

ECU faculty member Alex Albright, who arranged for the vintage film's restoration by the American Film Institute, said some of the returning cast members have never seen the finished film.

Made in Greenville four decades ago and originally intended to circulate nationally as a musical featurette for black audiences, "Pitch a Boogie Woogie" was halted from distribution when its producer quarreled with the booking agent.

After a few screenings in the Carolinas, the film gradually deteriorated in storage and was forgotten until it was discovered in the projection booth of a local theatre a few years ago. Its makers, John Warner of Greenville and his brother, William Lord of New York, are dead.

The Saturday evening "re-premiere" will include not only screening of the newly-restored film, but also performances by Lou Donaldson and the reunited members of the Rhythm Vets: Charles Woods of Rocky Mount, bass; Thomas Gavin, alto sax and Richard Jones, trombone, both from Fayetteville; and from Greensboro, Walter Carlson, trumpet; Jehovah Guy, drums and Carl Foster, piano. Tenor saxophonist Raymond Pettiford also lives in Greensboro and may attend the screening but is unable to play now, Albright said. Trumpeter Otto Harris of Asheville died earlier this month.

Also appearing on the film program will be the ECU Gospel Choir, an award-winning touring group of ECU student singers. Pianist Thomas Cofield of Rocky Mount will open the program at 7 p.m. with an informal "lights on" set of jazz pieces.

The film screening is held in conjunction with an exhibition of still photos from the movie at the Greenville Museum of Art. The show, entitled "Boogie Woogie in Black and White: Images from a Dream" will be on view through Friday.

Governor James G. Martin, noting that "Pitch a Boogie Woogie" is the only commercial production by North Carolina's first movie company, proclaimed the week of Feb. 2-8 as "Pitch a Boogie Woogie Week" in the state.

Tickets may be reserved by telephoning 919-757-6611, ext 266.

A Matter Of Titles

By BOB THOMAS Associated Press Writer

(1) A remake of a 1940s zombie movie.

(2) A Mel Brooks spoof.

(3) A drama of two prisoners in a Brazilian jail.

Unless you're really informed about the movie scene, you might not know that "Kiss of the Spider Woman" is the highly acclaimed film in which William Hurt, a homosexual prisoner, relates old movie plots to Raul Julia, a political prisoner, in a Brazilian jail.

Despite the confusing title, the film has managed to sell $10 million worth of tickets in a limited U.S. release.

Titles.

The subject has bedeviled the film industry from its earliest days.

Would "The Birth of a Nation" have been less successful with the title of the novel from which it sprang, "The Klansman"? Is it easy to sell a movie called "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"?

Titles mean everything, David O. Selznick once said. "Combine a provocative, exciting title with star names and an intriguing subject and you're halfway home."

He proved his theory with such films as "A Star Is Born," "Gone With the Wind," "Spellbound" and "Duel in the Sun."

In earlier years, titles were often decided on a producer's whim. Milton Pickman, a former agent and studio executive, talked about an incident at the home of Louis B. Mayer, head of MGM.

"Some of the executives were arguing about 'Mrs. Miniver.' They said, 'What kind of a title is that? It won't mean anything to the ticket buyer.' But Mayer said, 'Greer Garson is a marvelous actress. It doesn't matter what the picture is called. They'll come,'" recalled Pickman.

Marketing is king in today's Hollywood, and all titles are now scrutinized and often tested for their audience appeal.

RECITAL TODAY — Soprano Antonia Dalapas and bass-baritone Edward Glenn will be in recital at 8:15 p.m. today in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the East Carolina University campus. The event is free and open to the public. They will be accompanied by pianist John O'Brien, who joined the ECU keyboard faculty in the fall of 1985 as an assistant professor of accompanying. O'Brien holds the M.M. and B.M. degrees from the University of Southern California and is studying for the D.M.A. degree in accompanying. He has been staff accompanist at Aspen Music School and has been active in masterclasses for well-known singers; and has been theory instructor for piano workshops and camps in Indiana, Georgia, Texas and California. TOKYO (AP) — A young Japanese couple stroll down chic Omote Sando Boulevard, their matching jackets bearing the words: "Fancy Pimple." On the platform at Shinjuku station, a young man in a punk hairdo sports a coat with bold, stylized lettering: "ANTHRAX."

Like most other Japanese who wear English slogans on shirts, jackets, hats, even underwear, they said they didn't know what the words meant.

"Japanese Ingurisshu" (English), as the form is widely called, adorns not just clothing but pencil cases, shopping bags, stationery and many other items — and much of it is incorrect, absurd or unintentionally obscene.

"Absolutely weird," is how Kim Schuefftan, an editor with Kodansha International, a publisher of English-language books on Japan, describes it. Schuefftan is compiling examples of "Japanese Ingurisshu" in advertising and fashion.

"Japanese copywriters very conscientiously and adroitly use English as Japanese," he said in an interview. "The words have no meaning, but connote something, like 'Oh My Dining.' " That, he said, was a slogan used by Seibu department stores to promote personalized tableware.

The English word "my," in fact, is widely used to convey a sense of intimacy between owner and object, such as "my home" and "my car." Tokyo Gas Co. went a step further with the slogan, "My Life, My Gas."

"Let's" and "Do" are also favorites, especially in connection with action. "Do Sports" is a popular athletic club, and many foreigners recall the enigmatic T-shirt: "Let's Sports Violent All Day Long." Instructions for Mercotin tablets once read: "Adults: 1 tablet 3 times a day until passing away."

Among the scores of tiny clothing shops in Tokyo's trendy Harajuku area is Zen Mall, where customers can choose designs such as "Just Fit to You. King Kong," or "Do not disturb please. SCRAP!"

"It doesn't matter what's written on them. It's not English, it's art, and if the colors and shapes are nice, it will sell," said Takashi Murakami, Zen Mall's manager. "Nobody ever asks us what they mean. We don't even know ourselves!"

Some food names may sound attractive to Japanese but revolting to a native speaker of English, such as "Creap" coffee creamer and "Calpis" fermented milk drink. Supermarkets sell candy named "Bourbon Pickle," "Chocolate Sand Cookies," "Glico Pocky" and "Choco Pretch."

Resident foreigners regularly note down and swap slogans, especially four-letter words and other obscenities that constantly turn up on T-shirts and shopping bags. Embarrassing double entendres sometimes go undetected, said Schuefftan, who has lived here for 22 years.

Visitors encounter the bizarre English from the moment they arrive in Japan. A sign at the Skyliner express train station at Tokyo's international airport advises: "If you want to take non-smoking car, please offer to sell ticketer."

In Kyoto, a hotel warns non-Japanese guests that "Depositing the room key into other person is prohibited." Another, in Kobe, says "Guests are requested to hand over their car-key to cartaker."

The absence in the Japanese language of "L" and "V" sounds adds to confusion. Tourists can visit what one map calls the "Nara Prefectural Fork (folk) Museum," and an Osaka hotel proudly touts its "Gland (grand) Salon." Restaurants hand out "runch" or "ranch" (lunch) menus and one translated "Chivas Regal" as "Sea Birth Regal."

"How To Cooking Expert. A Sunny Side Up!" says a commercially sold stationery letterhead. A greeting card shows a pig riding a motor scooter and the words: "WINKEN'S TIDBITS. Brave Acts Can Be Ruined By Accidents." A notebook is titled, "The Shortened History of Mankind."

"The visual layout is important, not the message," says Yoji Izawa, chief designer of GC. Inc., a paper products maker. One of his creations shows a female pig bathing, with the caption: "Heathery and precious. Scent of a monologue. A formal imitation. Slightly mellowing tonite. A ball."

Izawa also was responsible for a letterhead design of a policeman arresting a masked hippopotamus, with a single, four-letter word in quotes. When one retailer returned a shipment because an American customer complained that it was obscene, the word was altered to read: "Shoot!"

"You can interpret it two ways: in fun or by being insulted," Izawa said. "Unfortunately I didn't realize it then."

A Review

New Volume In Trilogy Called 'Gem'

The concluding volume of Len Deighton's Bernard Samson spy trilogy, "London Match," is out and, not surprisingly, it is a gem.

To be sure, it does not offer the fast action or turns and twists of some spy novels. Its virtue lies elsewhere, in Deighton's wry and realistic treatment of a spy's life, his amusingly merciless description of bureaucratic infighting among British intelligence officials, and his masterful evocation of the charming, and at the same time, menacing resonance of Berlin — the divided city which has become Mecca for Cold War spies.

In the first volume of this trilogy, "The Berlin Game," protagonist Samson discovered that Fiona, his wife and colleague, was actually a KGB colonel, and that she had been leaking British secrets to the Soviets all along. Upon being discovered, Fiona defected to the Soviets, leaving her family behind.

Now, Stinnes is in London, being debriefed. Since Stinnes has been deputy to Fiona, who now works openly on the other side of the Berlin Wall, it appears Samson scored one over Fiona in the deadly game of international intrigue. But questions and doubts persist. Is Stinnes a plant? Is there still a deep-cover enemy agent high up in the London intelligence community? If so, who?

Deighton's probe is crisp as usual, his tone sardonic, appropriately reflecting the sophistication and ambiguity of Samson's life and times.

PIED PIPER FANTASY

You may want to try the "Pied Piper Fantasy," a concerto for flute and orchestra recently recorded for RCA by flutist James Galway with the Eastman Philharmonia at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music.

The piece, written by John Corigliano, is based on the legend of the Pied Piper of Hamelin, who after ridding the town of rats changes his tune and marches off with all of the townspeople's children following.

CAN OUTSMART THE WOLF

NEW YORK (AP) — For half a century the musical fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" has delighted both young and old.

Composed in the spring of 1936, "Peter and the Wolf" tells the story of a boy who goes against his grandfather's wishes, follows his own path and succeeds in outsmarting the wolf.

Canada's Scenic Banff Marks Its 100th Year

By JOY ASCHENBACH
National Geographic News Service

BANFF, Alberta — Frank McCabe and the McCardell brothers climbed down a tree-truck ladder through a hole in the roof of a cave in the Canadian Rockies in 1883 and discovered something as good as gold.

"Like some fantastic dream from a tale of the Arabian Nights," William McCardell described it: a mist-filled wonderland of dripping stalactites and bubbling warm waters, similar to the strange basin of hot springs the trio had found nearby.

Railroad workers turned prospectors, they smelled a fortune in the "healing" sulfur springs. Rough bathhouses were soon constructed. The Canadian Pacific Railway was pushing west through the snowcapped mountains to the coast.

Early Claim Disputed

But the men had not staked a clear claim to their springs near CPR Siding 29. The railroad and the Canadian government stepped in. In 1885 the hot springs and 10 square miles of land around them became the birthplace of Canada's first national park. The park would help pay for completing a Canadian dream, a transcontinental railroad.

Siding 29 would become Banff town, named for the Scottish birthplace of the railroad's first president. The park legislation noted that the springs "promise to be of great sanitary advantage to the public."

But Banff in the beginning was an international spa for the well-to-do, advertised as "an enclave of refined civilization, deep within the Canadian wilderness." Grand hotels were built overlooking the Bow River Valley and at Lake Louise, jewel among the mountains' emerald lakes. Swiss mountaineering guides were brought in to escort socialites and outdoorsmen to the glaciers and back-country.

At age 100, Banff is Canada's most visited national park, attracting more than 3 million people each year, more than the Grand Canyon, Yosemite, or 113-year-old Yellowstone, the oldest U.S. national park. More than half of Banff's visitors are from the United States.

The 2,564 square miles or 1.6 million acres that now make the park one of Canada's largest are renowned for perhaps the most magnificent mountain vistas in North America.

"Banff is as much a symbol of Canada as the RCMP (Mounties) in scarlet," says park official Rob Harding. "It is spearhead of the balancing act between development of recreation facilities and preservation of the natural environment in our parks."

Human Demands Expand

The demands on Banff have swelled beyond the sulfur springs, once bottled as a cure-all for everything from gout to gunshot wounds. Keeping up with recreation trends has led to 2,500 campsites, 800 miles of back-country trails, ski slopes on three mountains, the buildup of Banff town, upgrading service facilities at Lake Louise, and "twinning" the Trans-Canada Highway through the park to a four-lane, dual roadway.

Five to seven million people, sometimes at a bumper-to-bumper crawl, pass through Banff each year.

"It used to be, years ago, that Banff would close down in the winter. Now, not only skiing, but winter camping is popular," Harding says. The 1988 Winter Olympics are to be held at the park's doorstep, sprawling over the open country between Calgary and Banff's east side.

Having a town in a national park may not conform to current concepts of ideal planning, but Banff's western town of 4,000 "has grown hand in hand with the park," Harding points out. "It was the base camp of the Rockies. It has a historical role." Park headquarters looks straight down the one main street — gold and white centennial banners flying — into the craggy face of Cascade Mountain. Future construction is to be confined to "filling-in," on vacant sites within the existing town limits.

The park itself is protected on the north and west by three other national parks, Jasper, Yoho and Kootenay. In all, there are 31 national parks and park reserves in the Parks Canada system, the newest one in the northern Yukon and Arctic islands.

The goal, according to Parks Canada spokesman Michel Girard, is to establish one national park in each of 48 ecologically distinct regions across the country. Forty percent of the regions now have parks. Those that don't are in the north.

Animals Roam Free

Grizzly bears, bighorn sheep, elk and mountain goats still roam free, but when bears bother tourists, they are helicoptered back to the wild by park wardens. Park officials, fearing a serious poaching problem, plan an official census of the wildlife.

Splashing though a stony mountain stream on horseback, one can still hear the past sounding through the valley in the moaning horn of the Canadian Pacific as it speeds along the main line through the Rockies.

Although the original hot springs are no longer the lure of today's Banff, they are the focus of this year's centennial celebration. Parks Canada spent $9 million creating a centennial center around them — restoring the elaborate stone bathhouse, swimming pool and terraced teahouse to their 1914 splendor. The structures had been closed since 1976 because of dangerous deterioration. This summer it is possible to put on a 1914-style bathing suit (available for rent) for a dip in the new hot-spring-fed pool.

SPECTACULAR SCENERY . . . Mountains, moonlight, and a mirror lake, so spectacular a scene that it doesn't seem real, are found again and again in Banff National Park in the Canadian Rockies. Canada's oldest park, celebrating its centennial this year, Banff is the most popular, with 3 million visitors annually. Sprawled over 1.6 million acres along the Continental Divide, it is renowned for perhaps the most magnificant mountain vistas in North America. (National Geographic Society photograph by Pat Leeson)

Tales Of Ornery Farm Animals

By Rogers Whitener
ASU Folklore Writer

When I was a youngster, I used to hear my elders talk about certain farm animals, especially the troublesome ones: the young horse that couldn't be broken to the plow, the mule that delivered a swift kick when provoked, the cow that hooked the inexperienced milker, the bull that threatened trespassers in his domain.

Probably the animal holding the most facination for me, however, was the elderly, often irascible ram who would attack anything that came into his sight line, including other animals.

It was not unusual to hear of such a creature holding other creatures — including human beings — at bay for hours unless driven off by superior forces.

I was reminded of this recently in browsing through an article on oral history in a publication called "Cumberlands." It featured an interview with an elderly Kentucky man, 86-year-old Lum Blackburn, who gave a colorful account of a ram who was, perhaps, justifiably mean.

"This old ram, he'd tuck to buttin," Blackburn said. "Me and my cousin was back of him, afeedin some. Uncle Smith says, 'Now, boys, watch and we'll have some fun.' He'd pick up some little rocks and he'd flip 'em and hit that old ram and that old ram would hit them old oxen (brought in from hauling logs) in the side with his horns and knock 'em flat to the ground.

"My uncle, he was awful bad to swear. Anyway, he says, 'Matt, you're going to have to do something with that damned old ram er he's goin' to kill everyone of the children some of these days.'

"Well, all right Uncle Smith, he kept on doing that till we got 'em all fed. Went on, it wasn't but a few days then till that old ram tuck a notion to house 'em all and he housed all the children and my Aunt Mary and mother. He housed 'em in there and he kept 'em in there all day.

"They didn't have no telephone then or nothin'. They just had to send word. They were afraid to send one of the children. He had us hemmed up in there.

"My daddy, he come back last of that week, it was an awful bad week. And mother, she says, 'Now I've quit stayin here and old sheep out there. That old thing made us stay in here all day and Mary couldn't go back home till after dark.'

"My daddy says, 'I'll be danged if I don't do away with that old thing.' He went out and got his double-bitted ax, he always kept a big sharp ax, two or three laying around.

"He went off above the house to a beech tree. He struck that ax up in that tree and pulled off his old black hat and hung it on that ax. Now that's the truth. That old ram, he got back over to the other side of the ax and Daddy flipped a rock at that old ram.

"He took out jumping every foot off the ground, a run-and-go and hit that ax and it split his brains out. From that time on, if you understand, we'uns never bothered with the ram anymore."

Lum Blackburn never revealed the ultimate fate of the ram, but it probably appeared on the dinner table.

This apparently was the usual destination of edible farm animals who either because of age or disposition no longer served as useful purpose on the farm.

Some of them, however, obviously achieved a kind of immortality through the memories os such folks as Lum Blackburn.

Sudan Torn By Internal Strife

National Geographic News Service

WASHINGTON — Vast and troubled Sudan, Africa's biggest nation, is almost two countries in one — an Arab-African giant tensely held together.

The Arab north, where most of Sudan's 22 million people live, has always been in control and has achieved some unity through Islam and the Arabic language.

The African south, regarded as a hunting ground for slaves and ivory until the turn of the century, is split up among numerous tribes, each with its own language and customs. Their religious beliefs are predominantly animist and Christian.

Geographically, the two regions, together one-third the size of the contiguous United States, are tied together by the mighty Nile, which flows through the entire length of Sudan north to Egypt. But politically, the two parts have not been successfully joined, even under the 16-year regime of Gaafar Muhammed Nimeiri, who was ousted in a military coup April 6.

Blue Nile Meets White

Khartoum, the capital, where the Blue Nile meets the longer White Nile, stands somewhat as the dividing point. In the desert and semi-arid areas to the north, the people dress in long, flowing robes and turbans and speak Arabic.

Beginning about 100 miles to the south, "everything is completely different," says writer-photographer Robert Caputo, who has traveled extensively in Sudan for National Geographic. "The people become black, and suddenly there are vast open grasslands and woodlands of acacia trees, and herds of wildlife."

From the time of its independence from joint British-Egyptian rule nearly 30 years ago, Sudan has been a country divided. A bloody civil war raged between north and south for the first 17 years and claimed a half-million lives. Nimeiri, who had come to power in his own military coup in 1969, ended the war in 1972, but not the animosity.

Relations between north and south started to unravel again in 1983, when Nimeiri dissolved the semi-autonomous southern region created by the 1972 accords and split it into three parts. Angered southerners felt their loss of unity again made them an easy target for northern exploitation. They hated the harsh imposition of Islamic law.

Guerrilla warfare broke out, fought mainly by the rebel Sudanese People's Liberation Army, made up of many southern deserters and headed by a former army colonel. Guerrilla attacks have forced the shutdown of two of the country's most important development projects — both in the south's enormous swampland, the Sudd.

One project is the production of oil and the planned 1,000-mile-long pipeline to carry crude oil north to Port Sudan on the Red Sea. Southerners see the pipeline as another attempt to steal their resources.

Tribesmen Become Roustabouts

Of Chevron, which was exploring for oil, Caputo writes: "They hired tribesmen who walked in stark naked, carrying shields and spears. Two weeks later they were wearing hard-hats and steel-toed boots and working on a rig."

Then rebels attacked the company's base camp, killed three men and wounded five. Chevron suspended all oil exploration in southern Sudan in February 1984.

The second project is the controversial 225-mile-long Jonglei Canal on the eastern edge of the swamp. It is designed to divert part of the Nile around the Sudd to reduce the enormous loss of water from evaporation and cut travel time on the river. The canal is critical to irrigation plans for nothern Sudan and Egypt.

Guerrillas raided the job site and took hostages. Early last year, after two-thirds of the canal had been completed, all work was halted.

Whether in the southern swamp or at the conference table, the southerners have sworn this time not to give up until they have a real voice in running Sudan.

Camels May Be Important Factor In Reducing Mass Starvation

By MERCER CROSS
National Geographic News Service

TUCSON, Ariz. — Camels may not win beauty contests, but they take high honors for their adaptability to some of the earth's harshest climates.

One-humped camels, or dromedaries, for example, have been serving the desert-dwellers of Africa and the Middle East for thousands of years, building a legendary reputation for toughness and endurance as "ships of the desert."

Now, if an Israeli physiologist has his way, one-humped camels will become an important factor in reducing mass starvation in these drought-plagued regions.

Self-Sufficient in Drought

"Camel farming is one of the ways that will make farmers self-sufficient in time of drought," Yagil and co-author Z. Etzion wrote in a paper presented to an international conference on arid lands last month in Tucson.

While emphasizing that camels should co-exist with, not replace, traditional animals such as cattle, sheep and goats, "during periods of drought they will be the mainstay of food production," he wrote. "Look at all camels have going for them."

•Even when drinknig water is scarce and brackish, camels continue to produce nutritious, vitamin-filled milk. In the driest weather, camel's milk production remains high enough to "keep numerous people alive."

•When "fodder is minimal and spread over a vast area," camels get enough to eat. They are browsers that wander as far as 30 miles a day and eat almost anything, including thorny bushes. "I call it natural pruning," Yagil said in an interview. And unlike cows, sheep and goats, camels relish salty desert plants.

•Camel milk stays sweet for a long time. "Whereas milk of most mammals sours within days, even when kept in a refrigerator, camel milk remains virtually unchanged after three months of storage."

Despite all these advantages, however, camels have an image problem: They've traditionally been a milk source only for nomadic tribes, and they're viewed as a throwback to more primitive, unmechanized times.

Contrary to their reputation as wanderers, Yagil said, camels prosper in stalls. He's been experimenting with penned-up camels for 15 years. "The idea is that this could be a farming method for the thousands of people who have left farming and moved to the city looking for some kind of sustenance," he said.

Reproduce Slowly

Another negative factor has been camel's slow reproductive performance. Female nomadic camels sometimes don't give birth until they are seven years old. But through the use of hormonal injections, the birth process has been speeded up by four years in stall-fed camels.

Yagil, a consultant to the Food and Agriculture Organization and author of a new book on camels, said the FAO has set up demonstration camel farms in several countries, including the Sudan and Kenya, with more planned.

By next spring, using a "crisis team," he hopes to present the FAO with the numbers and locations of milk camels in Ethiopia and other countries. Then he expects to send out demonstration teams to show reluctant farmers how effective camels can be.

And sometime in the future, Yagil said, he foresees solar-energy-powered camel milking machines to increase the quantity of mikk that will be distributed where it will do the most good.

ARABIAN DROMEDARY CAMELS . . . make the most of their sparse and timeless habitat, while progress in the form of a telephone line etches the horizon. With their ability to browse off almost any vegetation, including thorny bushes and salty plants that other ungulates scorn, camels continue to produce milk in the driest weather. Dr. Reuven Yigal, an Israeli scientist, suggests that they could help ward off mass starvation in times of drought. (National Geographic Society photograph by Steve Raymer)

Color A Consideration In Buying Appliances

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

If you are planning to buy a new home appliance or radio this spring, be prepared. Color has invaded the realm where once white, brown, and beige reigned supreme.

You can expect to see pink and lime green microwave ovens and vacuum cleaners in baby blue, pink and white on display. Several manufacturers have colorful audio products, and at least one will start shipping a microwave oven and vacuum cleaner in colors this spring.

A spokesman for Sharp Electronics Corp. noted that colorful home electronics products first surfaced in Japan where they were very popular with customers. In 1982, the company introduced color to the American market with red, white and blue radios, promoted as Christmas gifts. The company was surprised to find that when Christmas was over sales continued high, so more colors were added. Now Sharp is introducing colorful microwaves and vacuums.

Actually, things have been getting more colorful lately in virtually all areas of home furnishings. Ever since manufacturers and retailers learned via sales and focus-group comments that color is a powerful persuader, they have been into paint in a big way.

Eyeing the juicy sales that apparel makers enjoy every year or so as color trends change, those who make products for the home are attempting to tie their products in with the same emotive forces that influence clothing sales.

As an example, one tableware designer recently noted that "dressing your table should be like dressing yourself. You add a scarf in contrasting colors for a fresh look. Why not do the same with dinnerware?" asks Emilio Bergamin. Bergamin suggested a place setting of his colorful tableware made by the Italian firm, Taitu, in the following scheme: turquoise dinner plate on top of a black service plate with yellow salad plate and white cup and saucer.

While home furnishings color preferences are certainly influenced by fashion, nowadays technology has to be taken into account as well. Patrice N. White, stylist for interior textiles for The Wool Bureau, noted recently that office computers have brought with them a need for colors that offer better contrast, low glare and minimal reflection.

"These needs have helped establish mauves and dusty grayed-over colors as the most effective choices for today's electronic offices," she said. She also pointed out that coordinating color choice with lighting has become more important today. It is better understood than it used to be that the character of the light influences the way we perceive colors.

"Until recently, lighting was the most neglected aspect of interior design," she said. No longer is this the case, at least in the office. "The many types of lighting now in use and the enormous amounts of glass in public spaces require that color be carefully chosen," she said.

Lee Eisman, director of the recently established Pantone Color Institute, and a color authority who counsels companies and individuals on color schemes, also finds more interest in color selection than in the past.

Instead of asking what color is in style, however, she prefers to ask what mood does one want to create?

Eisman says recent research has found that people can change their mood by visualizing different colors. In experiments, for example, subjects were able to slow down their biorhythms by visualizing blue. Thus, one could say that blue had a calming effect.

By and large, the traditional ideas are correct about which colors enhance which moods, she said. Cool colors such as green and blue correlate with subdued mood. Blue and blue-green communicate the feeling of the ocean; forest green or grass green recalls the outdoors and both are good choices in cities where smog predominates, says Eisman.

On the other hand, bright red, orange and yellow are activity enhancements. Research has shown that being subjected to bright red, for instance, does lead to physiological changes and speeds up activity. Red makes you hungrier, causes you to eat faster and leave sooner, so it's used frequently in fast food restaurants. Yellow and orange recall sunshine happiness and good cheer. Yellow is also the color of novelty, so it is often used in packaging.

On The House

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

One tool your home needs even if you do not have a workshop is a hammer. But if you do more than just hit a nail once in a while, you should have more than one type of hammer.

The choice of the right hammers, a basic knowledge of the different kinds, and the proper way to use them are things with which homeowners should be familiar. There are six basic hammer types. Each is designed for a specific purpose and they are not interchangeable. The six are nail hammers, ball peens, mallets, hand drilling hammers, sledges and specialty hammers.

Nail hammers are designed for driving and pulling common and finishing nails and for minimal prying. Their claws can be curved or straight. A curved claw gives more leverage for removing nails while the straight claws are better for ripping or tearing out pieces of wood.

Ball peen hammers have a rounded half-ball, or peen, instead of a claw opposite its striking surface. They are intended for use with cold chisels for cutting and chipping work, rounding-over rivets, forming soft metal and similar chores not involving nails.

Mallets have rubber, plastic, wood or rawhide heads to drive chisels and to hammer joints together. They are good for jewelry and brass work and automobile jobs where a metal hammer blow could stretch or otherwise damage the surface.

Hand drilling hammers, weighing 2 to 4 pounds, are used with star drills or cold chisels on heavy-duty work. They are small sledge hammers with short handles and are recommended for pounding hardened nails into concrete or with tools that drive nails and pins into concrete, brick and other masonry.

Sledge hammers, with handles of from 14 to 36 inches, are used for heavy jobs where great force is needed. They can weigh from 2 to 20 pounds.

Specialty hammers include those designed specifically for riveting, metalworking, scaling and chipping masonry, finishing welding beads, etc.

Obviously, purchasing the best quality hammer for the job makes the most sense. But how do you judge the quality of a hammer? True Temper, which makes more than 70 kinds of hammers, suggests three basic criteria — those which are heat treated, have forged steel heads and solid hardwood, fiberglass or tubular steel handles with cushioned grips.

A hammer should be examined for the design of its striking surface. Better quality hammers are chamfered approximately 10 percent from the area of its striking surface to reduce the risk of chipping. The nail slot should be double-bevelled to resist chipping when a nail is being pulled.

The claw slot should be narrowed close to the head so it can grip smaller nails. Preference should be given to companies that mark their hammer for specific purposes and for its relative quality.

Hammers are available in a variety of weights, and homeowners should select what feels comfortable.

Misuse of hammers causes serious accidents. Even the best hammer may chip if struck against an equally hard or harder object. For this reason, there is a warning label on every hammer which should be read carefully and the tool used only as advised.

Safety goggles should always be worn when using striking tools.

AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I once heard or read somewhere about a way to tell whether air is leaking into your refrigerator through a door that isn't quite airtight. Can you tell what it is?

A. — If you place a dollar bill in the door frame so that half of it is inside and half is out, the bill should be so secure that it cannot be pulled out. If it comes out with a little tugging, then the door probably isn't airtight at that point. To make a complete test, you have to repeat it at different points along the door. If there is a leak only at one point, you can fix it by placing some tape there, but if there are several leaks, you are better off to buy a new seal.

Q. — We have some moss on part of our roof that is shielded from the sun by a large overhanging tree. Could this be the cause of the moss?

A. — Definitely, yes. When the sun's rays cannot get through, that area of the roof remains damp longer than the other parts of it. The dampness generates growth of the moss. See if the removal of a single branch of the tree will permit the sun to shine through.

Q. — Settle an argument. I say clay roofing tiles come only in a natural reddish color. My friend says they come in many colors. Who is right?

A. — Your friend is. Red is the natural color of clay tiles, but they can — and are — colored merely by adding certain pigments before the clay is fired.

Q. — There is a slight leak in our garage, which has a flat roof. Is there some way to find where there is an opening,

A. — On a flat roof, the area where the leak shows usually is the area where the water is entering, which isn't always true with different kinds of roofs. Also, on a flat roof, a leak occurs where water collects. Just after a rain, examine the roof to see the place or places where the water remains. A single leak can be patched with roofing cement. A lot of leaks calls for a new roof coverng.

Q. — I have located where a leak is on our asphalt shingled roof. It is from a loose shingle. What do I use to cement it?

A. — Regular roofing cement. Lift the loose part gently and push the cement under it. Press it down with a piece of board.

(A booklet titled "Guide to Quality Roofing," including an asphalt shingle color guide, can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Q. Is it true that bumblebees should not be able to fly?

A. No. Some time ago there was a paper done which stated that the bumblebee should be unable to fly due to its large body and small wings. The paper contained some faulty mathematics, however, and was disproven. The bumblebee is aerodynamically sound. However, the false belief that the bumblebee is defying nature and physics still arises occasionally.

Q. Please give me some information about the cultivar of Scotch Rose called "Petite Pink."

A. "Petite Pink" is a cultivar of the Scotch rose Rosa spinosissima discovered growing on a plantation on the Cape Fear River near Wilmington. It is a low (about two feet tall), dense shrub, covered with pink flowers in early summer. The foliage is finely cut and handsome even when the plant is out of flower. It is reported to be evergreen to 10 degrees F. "Petite Pink" has excellent commercial potential as a flowering groundcover for sunny areas. It is easily propagated from leafy cuttings any time of the year.

Q. What is a Master Gardener and what is the Master Gardening program?

A. The Master Gardening program is a program the N.C. Extension Service uses to handle the heavy demand for gardening information in urban counties. Extension recruits volunteers, usually people who have some gardening experience, and gives them 30 hours of training in fruits, shade trees, ornamentals, lawns, vegetables and other subjects. The volunteers take an examination at the end of the training period. If they pass, they are certified as Master Gardeners. In return for their training, each Master Gardener donates 30 hours to the local Extension office. They may answer the telephone during the gardening season or conduct meetings, tours and demonstrations. About 200 Master Gardeners from Durham, Wake, Buncombe, Iredell, New Hanover, Gaston, Rowan, Alamance, Stokes, Pamlico, Catawba, Pasquotank, Union and Forsyth counties assisted Extension agents with educational programs in 1985.

Why finance one car for 60 months when you'd like to trade for a different car every 36 months? BECAUSE...at Hastings Ford, with Red Carpet Lease you only pay for what you use! Why have to come up with a large down payment to purchase a new car, when all you have to pay is the first month's payment and a REFUNDABLE Security Deposit to lease the same new car? Also, with Hastings Ford's Red Carpet Lease, property tax is already included in the monthly payment! If you are interested in this program, come by to see one of our salespeople today and remember... Red Carpet Lease is no longer designed just for the businessman, Red Carpet Lease is designed for today's personal use - business or pleasure!

Lower Initial Cash Outlay
With a Red Carpet Lease, your initial cash outlay is usually lower than the cash investment needed in the financing of a retail purchase. You don't need a major down payment.

You Can Lease with an Option to Buy
If you feel you may want to purchase the vehicle when the lease expires, you can stipulate that option during lease negotiations. Your purchase price will be set at the time you lease. However, if you later decide you don't want to purchase the vehicle, there are no penalties.

You Don't Tie Up Your Money in Vehicle Ownership
Under the Red Carpet Lease plan, you pay a monthly payment for the use of the vehicle—your payments don't include the cost to accumulate equity. It's simply the idea of paying for the value of the product you use up instead of the full price of the car. And there are no depreciation worries—you have no further obligation at lease end except for excess wear and tear and excess mileage.

"Have you driven to Hastings Ford...lately?"

"On the other side of town, but well worth the trip"

Solariums Are Becoming Popular

By STEVE BAKER
Associated Press Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Last winter, when local thermometers shivered to a record 24 below zero, Arnold and Elizabeth Elliott had their heat turned down and their sleeves rolled up in the 75-degree comfort of an old idea brought back by the solar industry — the solarium.

"It'll get up to about 80 degrees in there on a clear day," Elliott said of the two-story addition to the south side of his suburban home. "It's nice. But when the sun goes down, I curse."

"I'm very happy with it," said Elliott, a psychotherapist. "Although there's almost no benefit on cloudy days, it's still changed our house completely and positively."

With the end of tax credits for solar-water heaters, solar contractors expect more and more people to turn to sun-heated rooms to improve their homes and cut energy costs at the same time.

"The last two years our focus has shifted dramatically to sun-rooms," said John McGinnis of Solar Crafters in Strawberry Plains, Tenn. "We built our business on solar-water heaters, but that's over."

McGinnis said he figures he will continue installing some water heaters and doing some repairs, but he sees the solar industry's immediate future in adding glass-encased rooms to existing houses.

The rule governing solar rooms is simple — glass and mass, he said. The selected or planned room need only face the south, have its outer wall comprised mostly of glass and have a mass that will absorb the sun's rays for heating after dark, McGinnis said.

"Ideally, you have a tile or brick floor and a back wall that's covered with water and painted black — something that will store heat," said McGinnis.

Another important consideration is to have vents installed that will carry the heat to the rest of the house in winter and, in summer, prevent the solar room from becoming "a hot-box," McGinnis said.

Sun-rooms may avoid one of the problems that has plagued the solar industry in selling itself to consumers, said Joe Hultquist of Advanced Designs And Applications, Inc., of Knoxville.

"We pretty much steered away from solar-water heaters because marketing them was so specialized. They made sense to me, but it was hard to convince people that it was worth a couple thousand dollars to heat their water this way," Hultquist said.

Solar rooms have been different, says Hultquist, who built the Elliotts' sun-room and has found potential customers "as interested in the aesthetics as they are in their heating bills."

The cost runs about $40-$60 per square foot for one-story solariums. For two-story sun-rooms, like the Elliotts, the price usually begins at $60 per square foot, said Hultquist.

Both builders said the public perception that the energy crisis is over has hindered the growth of the solar industry.

I held:

We went down two tricks. Partner criticized me for bidding two no trump, saying he had made a "drop dead" bid.—R. C., Indianapolis, Ind.

A.—We have remarked on numerous occasions that we are not fond of the term "drop dead" bid. However, if there is a situation where it does apply, it is a two-level response to an opening one no trump bid.

Opener's hand is strictly limited, and responder does have a number of invitational sequences that he can employ if he thinks there would be play for game opposite a maximum no trump opener. When he does not use one of these, it means his hand is in the 0-7 point range.

There is one case where there might be a game if responder has a maximum sign-off, i.e., 7 points. That is where opener is at the top of his range for his opening bid and has excellent support for responder's suit—usually at least three cards headed by two high honors, or four cards headed by a top honor. In that case, opener can invite game by raising responder's major suit to the three-level.

The hand you held fails to meet either of these criteria. You had both a minimum no trump opening bid and inadequate support for partner's suit. Without a doubt, you should have passed his two heart response.

A.—Don't sell Omar Sharif short as a bridge player. He has played bridge at the highest levels and his tournament record is one of which anyone would be proud.

His movie commitments do not always allow him as much time as he would like for bridge. For instance, last year he entered only three team events: two at Deauville, France, and one in Venice, Italy. However, his team won all three! And the opposition was not to be sneezed at. In Deauville it included Italy's national team and in Venice, besides the Italians, the world champion Polish team was among the competitors.

'Sins' And 'Peter' Highlight The Week

By Robert DiMatteo

Two of the season's most ballyhooed miniseries face off this week, as CBS's Sins (Feb. 2, 3 and 4) goes up against NBC's Peter the Great (Feb. 2, 3, 4 and 5). The choice for viewers is between splashy trash ("Sins") and all-star Sturm und Drang ("Peter the Great").

"Sins" has as its executive producers those glamorous newlyweds, Joan Collins and Peter Holm. Miss Collins also stars in this seven-hour dose of fluff, playing the head of a fashion magazine publishing empire. Though Helene Junot (as Miss Collins is called) swirls through Paris and New York in an ever-changing array of costumes (designed by Valentino), she is hardly carefree. In fact, Helene is in a pickle: A cabal of bitter enemies intends to bring down her empire, starting with the manipulation of her company's stock. Through flashbacks, we learn how Helene (played as a girl by the horsy Catherine Mary Stewart) acquired her enemies – starting with the Nazi (Steven Berkoff, a specialist at evil Germans and Russians) who tortured and killed her mother during the Occupation.

A melodramatic saga with more twists, turns and coincidences than a Dickens novel, but with none of the latter's substance, "Sins" expends an unconscionable amount of footage on scenes of women being beaten up and tortured, their mouths bloodied. In between, Miss Collins changes gowns, and delivers the stilted dialogue as if it were written by Eugene O'Neill. If only "Sins" were enjoyable as camp.

One wonders, meanwhile, what the Soviets would make of "Peter the Great" – an historical epic shot largely in the Soviet Union, based on a Pulitzer Prize-winning book (by Robert K. Massie), and featuring a cast of "distinguished" actors, some of whom are even Russian. Surely, there's a Western bias to this biographical account of the great Russian czar, as played with brooding intensity by Maximilian Schell (a brooder if ever there was one). Directed by Marvin J. Chomsky and Lawrence Schiller, this "Peter the Great" is not the "ideologically correct" epic the Soviets might have authorized, nor is it a great piece of insanity like Eisenstein's "Ivan the Terrible." It's a serious stab at romantic historical filmmaking – not too vulgar, a little plodding, from moment to moment intelligent and informative. Yet it remains to be seen if viewers will weather eight hours of this slightly forbidding and convoluted epic. Or will "Peter the Great" suffer the same fate as last season's "Christopher Columbus"?

Sex! Murder! Passion! Fashion! "Sins" has it all. Joan Collins stars as Helene Junot, the head of an international fashion magazine in the multi-million dollar miniseries airing Monday, Feb. 2; Monday, Feb. 3; and Tuesday, Feb. 4 on CBS.

Chemical Capers

Alan Arkin stars in "A Deadly Business," a two-hour CBS drama based on the real-life story of Harold Kaufman, an ex-convict whose FBI work uncovered corporate corruption and underworld crime in toxic waste dumping. Armand Assante plays Arkin's boss, who is sent to prison on his testimony, and Michael Learned is Arkin's female confidante. The film is scheduled for broadcast this season.

Brinkley Bonus

As of last month, "This Week With David Brinkley" is closed-captioned for the hearing impaired. Experienced court stenographers transmit words via computer to specially equipped television sets, with only a four-minute time delay. Now 100,000 hearing-impaired ABC viewers will be able to enjoy the program, thanks to financing by the network and the Pew Memorial Trust of Philadelphia.

Album Honors Of '85 Were Quite Impressive

By E.A. Vare

More platinum albums (awarded for sales of 1,000,000 copies) were given out in 1985 than had been earned since 1980 — 65 of them. And the grand total of 138 gold albums (for sales of 500,000 units) was the highest since 1981. But according to statistics from the RIAA, the total of gold singles (1,000,000 copies sold) was the lowest since 1964. Only nine gold singles were earned last year, one of them coming in under the wire in December's honors lists: "Party All the Time" by Eddie Murphy.

It was also a bad year for country records to crack the pop charts. In fact, this was the first year since 1946 that not one single country song entered the top 30.

Artists on the Epic label are recording a series of public service announcements that will look like rock videos. The 30-second spots will discourage viewers of "Night Track" and other video programs from driving while drunk. Rockers making the p.s.a.'s include: Adam Ant, Ozzie Osborne, John Cafferty, 'Til Tuesday, Survivor, Weird Al Yankovic and Cheap Trick.

Daryl Hall is in the studio recording an album without the assistance of sidekick John Oates. Also in the studio are The Outlaws, recording their first LP in three years. Spencer Profser, best known for his work with Quiet Riot, is producing the Floridian Banditos.

****

BABY BLOOMERS — BABY BOOM: Mary Travers, of Peter, Paul and Mary (all of whom were arrested last month during an anti-apartheid rally in Washington, D.C.), became a grandmother on Dec. 3, when her daughter Erika gave birth to Wylly Travers Marshall.

Also celebrating the joys of parenthood are Billy Joel and Christie Brinkley, who welcomed Alexa Ray into the world on Dec. 29.

Band Aid/Live Aid organizer Bob Geldof may have been honored by the American Music Awards, but he was shubbed at home when his name was left off the Queen's New Year Honors List (QNYHL). Most American observers felt sure Geldof was a shoo-in for an OBE (Order of the British Empire), but Britannians were left surprised by the omission. Geldof is a citizen of the Irish Republic whose residents stand less of a chance of getting such recognition. Also, Geldof has criticized the current Conservative regime in Great Britain often and publically, and is less than a favorite of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. And perhaps most important, the guy's a rock-and-roller who wears an earring fer goodness sake.

"Disney Movie" Hopes To Lure Audiences

By Andrew J. Edelstein

Can the spirit of Walt Disney be revived in the cynical 1980s? ABC and Walt Disney Productions believe the family-oriented fare that Uncle Walt hosted during the 1950s and '60s will find a new audience today. On Sunday, Feb. 2, viewers can make up their own minds when "The Disney Sunday Movie" debuts on ABC. The show consists of one-and-two hour original films in the tradition of "The Wonderful World of Disney."

"This is the No. 1 priority in the entire corporation," says Disney chairman Michael Eisner. "We have put all of our resources, all our manpower, all our creative impetus into this show." (At press time, Eisner was rumored to also become the series' host.)

— "Young Again," starring Jack Gilford, Robert Urich and Lindsay Wagner in the story of a 40-year-old man who wishes he was 17.

— "The Last Electric Knight," about an Asian boy with unusual powers who is adopted by a tough cop after his grandfather dies. Gil Gerard and Keye Luke star.

Eisner says the middling acceptance of this season's anthology shows is "good and bad news" for the "Disney Sunday Movie." The good news is that NBC's "Amazing Stories" (which airs during the second hour of the Disney movie) is not as strong as had been expected, so the new series will not have to go up against two formidable competitors. The bad news, says Eisner: The mediocre ratings of "Amazing Stories" "has given rise to skepticism whether anthology series can work."

Western Union

CBS began production last month of the made-for-TV "Stagecoach," a new adaptation of the classic 1939 Western that put John Wayne on the map. The drama, which includes a performance as well as a musical score by Willie Nelson, also features Johnny Cash, Kris Kristofferson, Anthony Newley and John Schneider. Also starring in "Stagecoach" is Mary Crosby, whose father Bing starred in a 1966 remake of the same film.

Barbra puts it all together for HBO

By Debra Morgenstern Katz

Looking very proud and almost beautiful, Barbra Streisand comes to HBO for a brief 40-minute special, "Putting It Together: The Making of 'The Broadway Album,'" airing Wednesday, Feb. 5. The enormous success of the singer's latest album would generate interest for such a special, but Miss Streisand probably doesn't need any such impetus. The moment she begins to sing, the chills start creeping up your spine, and you know this is a true superstar.

Barbra Streisand

Speaking of art, there's a lot of talk about it here — too much. More singing and less talking might have made this a more satisfying special. As it is, the songs, or in some cases, snatches of songs, tease. The talk takes the form of an "interview" between director William Friedkin ("The Exorcist") and Miss Streisand, though it doesn't have any spontaneity. Miss Streisand and Friedkin are not strangers — he directed her video "Somewhere" (from "West Side Story") — but their conversation seems formal and stiff.

We don't have to be reminded Miss Streisand has come a long way since then. On "Putting It Together," though, she goes back to her roots — the Broadway stage — and sings some great songs from some great shows. You'll hear "Somewhere." You'll even see the video. You'll also hear "If I Loved You" (from "Carousel"), "Can't Help Lovin' That Man" (from "Showboat") and "Send In the Clowns" (from "A Little Night Music").

Joan Collins may be starring in "Sins," the multimillion-dollar miniseries airing this week on CBS, but every week the actress commits another sin: She doesn't watch television. "I don't make it a point to stay home Wednesday nights," Miss Collins, 52, reveals, "so I have 'Dynasty' professionally taped. Then I watch it on the weekends with (14-year-old daughter) Katy. I watched half of 'Miami Vice' once, but it didn't appeal to me because I'm not into cops and robbers. I don't watch 'Knots Landing' or 'Falcon Crest' either. The only show I really watch is 'The Cosby Show,' and that's because it's wonderful." Speaking of "Sins," pay careful attention to the man playing the TV reporter in the concluding episode. The actor is Joan's husband, Peter Holm.

Just because Mark Harmon checks out of "St. Elsewhere" this week (his character, plastic surgeon Dr. Bobby Caldwell, dies from an AIDS-related ailment), don't put him in the "Whatever happened to ..." file. Yet. A theatrical version of "The Prince of Bel-Air," the made-for-TV movie that recently aired on ABC, will soon be released in Europe — complete with three scenes that were censored in the States because of salty language and scenes of Harmon and co-star Kirstie Alley in some compromising, soft-core positions. Then there's "Let's Get Harry," the upcoming Robert Duvall film in which Harmon, 34, plays a Chicago plumber who gets kidnapped and hauled off to Mexico. "Caldwell always took risks," says Harmon. "I'm following his lead."

You say potato. And I say potahto. But whatever you do, don't say David Bowie's name incorrectly. For years, people pronounced the singer's last name in one of three ways: Bow-ie, Boo-ie or Boe-ie. Now, Muppet master Jim Henson has finally learned the right way. "When we began shooting (the upcoming summer film) 'Labyrinth,' I sent an assistant to ask him how he'd like us to say his name," Henson recalls. "He came over and firmly told me the correct way to say his name was 'Bowie' (pronounced Boe-ie). I was scared to call him anything else."

It happened to Mr. T, Archie Andrews and Laurel and Hardy. So it's only natural that John J. Rambo, that blood-thirsty vigilante made famous by Sylvester Stallone in "First Blood," hits Saturday-morning TV. Kiddies can catch the animated antics of "Rambo," a syndicated cartoon series, premiering in the fall. If you can't wait, there'll be a special "Rambo" sneak-peek when a two-and-a-half-hour cartoon miniseries airs in the spring. ... Rue McClanahan, one of those fiesty "Golden Girls," finally knows the NBC series is a 14-karat hit. "Lots of people have told me the show is good," the actress says, "but I sometimes had trouble believing it. When some senior citizens recently told me it was the greatest thing since sliced bread, however, I knew it was time to smile."

SHOW AND TELL

Susie motored her way to Hollywood

By Gregory Garver

HOLLYWOOD — Show biz may have its drawbacks, but it sure beats life on the assembly line. You have Susie Garrett's word on that. And Miss Garrett should know.

Susie Garrett

She spent 11 years on the assembly line at the General Motors plant in Detroit, where, for most of the time, she was employed as a machine operator. Now Miss Garrett plays Mrs. Johnson, the grandmother on NBC's "Punky Brewster."

"There's a big difference between those two jobs," she explains. One of the nicest is the money.

"They sure are giving me a lot of money," the actress quips, "and I don't want to spend it too quickly. You know how it is with money: if you make $1,000, you spend $1,000 a week. Before I got into 'Punky Brewster,' I was making around $100 a week. Now I'm near $1,000 a week, so I try to spend $1,000 — but a little slower. And I can't begin to tell you how wonderful that is!"

Miss Garrett quit her job at GM when she realized she wanted to go to college. She majored in psychology at Detroit's Shaw College, and still has ambitions to receive her graduate degrees. If that happens, she says, she'll be torn between acting and counselling troubled people.

Yet the actress figures when — and if — the time comes, God will help her make a decision. After all, she says, it was God's idea that she leave Detroit and move to California.

"I'm sure He sent me out here," she says, "because it sure wasn't my idea. That's why I never questioned it, and that's why I'm not questioning it now. I'm just following instructions."

Actually, Miss Garrett went West to visit her sister, Marla Gibbs, who was then starring on "The Jeffersons." And it was Miss Gibbs who urged her sister to audition for a play, even though she had never acted before. Miss Garrett did what Miss Gibbs suggested, and began carving out a show-biz niche.

Children Will Love CBC's 'Vid Kids'

By Jay Carman

The 13-episode series stars a repertory group of "Vid Kids." Each lively half-hour will feature original and well-known songs ranging from the '60s to the '80s, each presented in music-video form in a wide range of styles and settings.

The Vid Kids themselves, aged from 7 to 14, appear throughout each show to sing, dance and act out the lyrics of the songs, bringing youthful high energy to the series.

Well-known and loved children's musician Bob Schneider performs two original music videos per episode. One of Schneider's greatest talents is his ability to draw kids into his circle of magic and music. He uses this talent to the fullest in the 26 original music videos he presents in the series.

Another regular feature of each show will be appearances by dancer-mime Peter Jarvis, who, as "Computerman," answers the Vid Kids' questions as he performs his robotic dances. Trained by Bob Berkey, Jarvis will also appear in a variety of other guises to lead audiences through sing-alongs.

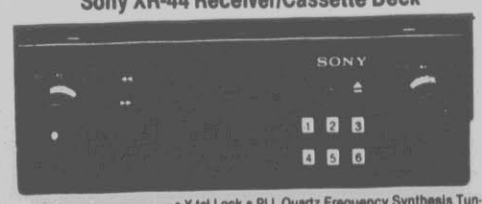

Each week, a guest star or group will join the regulars to perform two of their own numbers in a music video. These guests will represent a broad spectrum of the entertainment field, from the Nylons, Menudo and the Canadian Aces to the Famous People Players, the Good Brothers and Cano.

A weekly dance segment features the Vid Kids performing to well-known rock 'n' roll classics in a rock-club setting. Schneider, Computerman, a variety of guest performers and the Vid Kids will move through time and space. Among the numbers will be a showdown between Frankenstein and the Wolfman; break-dancing in a carnival market; and partying with the Lone Ranger in a funky uptown disco.

Continues To Go Back To The Future

By Andrew J. Edelstein

The Disney Channel is going back to the future for three of its new projects for 1986.

The pay-cable channel is planning a sequel to "The Parent Trap," the popular 1961 film starring Hayley Mills; a 10-part miniseries, "Disney's Return to Treasure Island," updating the 1950 Disney film "Treasure Island"; and a colorized version of the 1961 kids' classic "The Absent-Minded Professor," starring Fred MacMurray.

Hayley Mills will also star in "The Parent Trap II," scheduled to air in March. In the original film, she played dual roles as twins attempting to reconcile their divorced parents. In the new production, Miss Mills plays adult twins involved in a new matchmaking scheme.

"Disney's Return to Treasure Island" also updates the lives of characters from the original film. The hero, Jim Hawkins (Christopher Guard) was a young man in the original. In the sequel, airing in April, he's now a full-grown Oxford University graduate.

The colorized version of "The Absent-Minded Professor" will be done by the process developed by Color Systems Technology of Hollywood, the same company that colored the Christmas film "Miracle on 34th Street" for Twentieth Century Fox. We can't wait to see what Flubber — the gravity-defying substance invented by MacMurray in this film — looks like in living color.

WHAT YEAR IS THIS? — Speaking of cable's preoccupation with things retro, take a look at the most recent (October) Nielsen basic-cable ratings. They were dominated by superstation WTBS which took eight spots of regularly scheduled programs. Among them: "The Andy Griffith Show," (Sunday morning); "The Beverly Hillbillies"; "The Andy Griffith Show," (weeknights); and "Leave It to Beaver." Two vintage westerns airing on CBN, "Wagon Train" and "Wild Bill Hickok," also placed in the top 10.

Best Friends

Look for Robert Mitchum and Wilford Brimley in the upcoming "Thompson's Last Run," a CBS made-for-TV flick to air February 16. Mitchum portrays the mobile title character who escapes prison and is pursued by a conscientious Brimley, formerly his best friend and currently a prison officer. Kathleen York plays Thompson's niece Louise, who concocts the daring escape plan.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: How is Fess Parker doing these days? Is is possible he might do another show based on Daniel Boone? — JEFF COOPER, PRINCETON, W.VA.

Fifty-nine-year-old Fess Parker may be throwing his coonskin cap into the political arena. Parker gained instant fame as Walt Disney's Davy Crockett in the mid-'50s in the Disney anthology series. He later starred in ABC's "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" (1962-63) and NBC's "Daniel Boone" (1964-70). Last May he was special envoy of his good friend Ronald Reagan to the Australian commemoration of the 43rd anniversary of the Battle of the Coral Sea. Parker, who served in the Pacific Theater during World War II, took part in events in Australia celebrating Australian-American Friendship Week. He is seriously contemplating entering the June 1986 California Republican Senatorial primary, in hopes of taking on incumbent Senator Alan Cranston next November. Could it be that Hollywood has spawned another candidate for the Oval Office?

Dear Michele: My husband and I have a disagreement over a film we recently viewed on television called "The Fighting Sullivans." Was Audie Murphy one of the five brothers featured in this picture? — LORE STANTON, GAUTIER, MISS.

Although not featured as one of the five siblings in this World War II picture, Murphy did star in real-life WW II action, rising to fame as the war's most-decorated GI and receiving 24 decorations — including the Congressional Medal of Honor. He began his film career in "Beyond Glory" (1948) and "Bad Boy" (1949). Anne Baxter starred in "The Fighting Sullivans" (1944), along with Edward Ryan, John Campbell, James Cardwell, John Alvin and George Offerman Jr. as the five Sullivan brothers.

Dear Michele: What was the name of the show hosted by Sarah Purcell and Skip Stephenson? — L. POMEROY, ISLAND FALLS, MAINE

A real hit, "Real People" was an innovative human-interest show. It was produced by George Schlatter, who also the man behind the classic "Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In." "Real People" ran for five seasons on NBC, and was hosted by regulars Byron Allen, Sarah Purcell, John Barbour and Skip Stephenson, along with a rotating crew of others.

'Capital' Is Thinking Person's Soap

By Connie Passalacqua

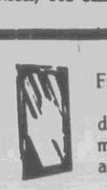

With the decline in quality — and ratings — of such half-hour soaps as ABC's "Ryan's Hope" and NBC's "Search for Tomorrow," daytime wags constantly proclaim that the half-hour soap is dead. (Currently only four out of 13 daytime soaps run 30 minutes, as opposed to one hour.) But no soap counteracts that theory more than CBS's "Capitol," which consistently places in the soap Nielsen top 10. In terms of quality, it's a daytime gem that often sparkles more brightly than almost all of its hour-long counterparts.

Some say "Capitol" does so well in the ratings because it rests in the half-hour "hammock" between CBS's strong hour-long "As the World Turns" and "Guiding Light." That certainly doesn't hurt.

But the show, which marks its fourth anniversary in March, has reached a point where it can stand on its own. Thanks to extraordinary writing and superlative production values, plus savvy decisions and choices made by the production team headed by executive producer John Conboy, "Capitol" has established itself as a soap that's here to stay, in any time slot.

Because of the show's locale, Washington, D.C. and its milieu of high-powered politics, "Capitol" was considered a more sophisticated show than other soaps when it debuted. But it wasn't until the arrival of daytime's best head writer, Henry Slesar, that the show's plot lines became as highly polished and fascinating as its locale. As he did during his 15 years at "Edge of Night," Slesar is again demonstrating that tightly woven, fast-paced and above all, intelligently crafted plot lines make for superior soap action.

As with "Edge," most of the character action on "Capitol" is cerebral. There are no fantasy plots and minimal glitzy location shooting. Slesar's intricate and always unpredictable plot twists have made "Capitol" daytime's most suspenseful show.

How To Make Your Home Like A Theater

By Martin Levine

There are advantages to watching movies and other entertainment at home on videotape, but there are quite a few drawbacks for the typical home viewer. Chief among them: the lack of presence, sound quality and picture impact that you find in the first-run movie houses. You can get around that, however, with a reasonable facsimile of theater-quality viewing at home. All it takes is the right equipment and a decent credit line.

For starters, there's the screen. You're not going to be able to fit a theater-sized screen in the typical American living room, but adequate 6- and even 10-foot projection systems offer that almost-large-as-life impact. Pioneer and Kloss have new and impressive systems just out that for a pretty hefty price ($3,500 suggested list) offer a picture and brightness that dwarf the abilities of early models.

Still, it's tough to squeeze even a projection system into many homes, particularly if home is an apartment, so the options then turn to direct-view sets. Luckily, manufacturers have recently been able to cram larger screen sizes into compact cabinets, to the point where many 25- and 26-inch sets take up no more room than older 109-inch models. Particularly noteworthy are the Zenith System 3 monitor/receivers in 25- and 27-inch sizes. The cube-sized model 2597, (about $1,200, list) offers the advantage of a five-watt built-in amplifier and dual side-firing loudspeakers. It's a far cry from older sets with small tinny-sounding speakers.

But for true theaterlike sound, it takes more than a good TV, no matter how good the speakers. Particularly with movies such as "The Right Stuff" and "Return of the Jedi," it takes the ability to decode and reproduce the Surround Sound signal that in the theater has jets whizzing by, starships exploding all around and off-screen sounds coming from the right direction no matter where the action is.

A number of manufacturers offer Surround Sound coders, among them Surround Sound Inc., NEC and Denon. Denon's No. 399 model AVC-500 includes a 25-watt amplifier for powering a second pair of speakers for the rear channels and a graphic equalizer, as well as dubbing and picture-enhancement circuitry.

When it comes to speakers, the right choice can prove critical. A big complaint of many people who watch on a small screen while listening through separate speakers is that dialogue seems unnatural: The mouths move on screen, but the voices are, well, out there somewhere. There are two solutions. First, choosing a TV set with good speakers allows them to be used as a center channel, eliminating that "out there" effect. And second, a number of loudspeakers on the market offer a more widely dispersed "open" sound perfect for home theaters.

Among the more notable: the BES line of flat plane, rather than traditional cone drivers, and from DBX, the Soundfield 10's ($1,200 a pair). Both the BES and DBX speakers provide good stereo separation from a wider viewing area than most traditional speakers, and both provide a more open sound better suited to the combination of audio and video.

The Pro Bowl — Why?; Friday Fights Return

By Adam Beckerman

By 7 p.m. Eastern Standard Time, the 1985-86 NFL season will be over. Honest. With the whistle ending play of this year's Pro Bowl game in Honolulu, Hawaii, football really closes up shop until late August. There will be spring football, but it will be on university campuses and not in USFL stadiums.

The USFL, that fine breeding ground for NFL talent (the Chargers' Gary Anderson, the Giants' Maurice Carthon, for example), goes head-to-head against The Establishment, starting in the fall of '86.

The announcers on ABC will say that today's Pro Bowl is for the players and their women. Hawaii is a place where bodies and souls begin to mend. But football all-star games are innately weird. Football is a game that is, at its essence, fueled by some semblance of hatred toward the opponent. A cornerback does not want the receiver he is covering to catch a pass against him. If the receiver does, the cornerback will try and make the receiver pay — so that next time the receiver will not be so presumptuous.

Doesn't all this blocking and tackling one week after the Super Bowl translate into a lot of risk-taking for nothing? Baseball, basketball and hockey have their all-star contests in mid-season. Baseball's works so well because it's still pitcher vs. hitter, a strong arm in right field against fast legs going from first to third; to a lesser degree, basketball's is also fun because it's like a two-hour fashion show. Obviously, football can't go the mid-season route. And it would probably be economically unfeasible to call the whole thing off. Besides, it would be unfair to deny a player like halfback Gerald Riggs, of the horrid Atlanta Falcons, a chance to get some national air time. Still, we hear all year that playing football at half-speed is dangerous. Certainly the same can be said for watching it.

"By moving Top Rank Boxing to Friday nights, we hope to recapture some of the flavor of the old 'Friday Night Fights,'" says ESPN senior vice president Steven Bornstein.

Notwithstanding the unfortunate fact that the Friday Night Fights nearly single-handedly killed boxing in the 1950s, the Top Rank tournament is one of televised sports' more tidy enterprises. Each of eight weight divisions has its own eight-man elimination tournament. The competition's most illustrious graduate is welterweight champion Donald Curry.

How 'Cosby Show' Became A Reality

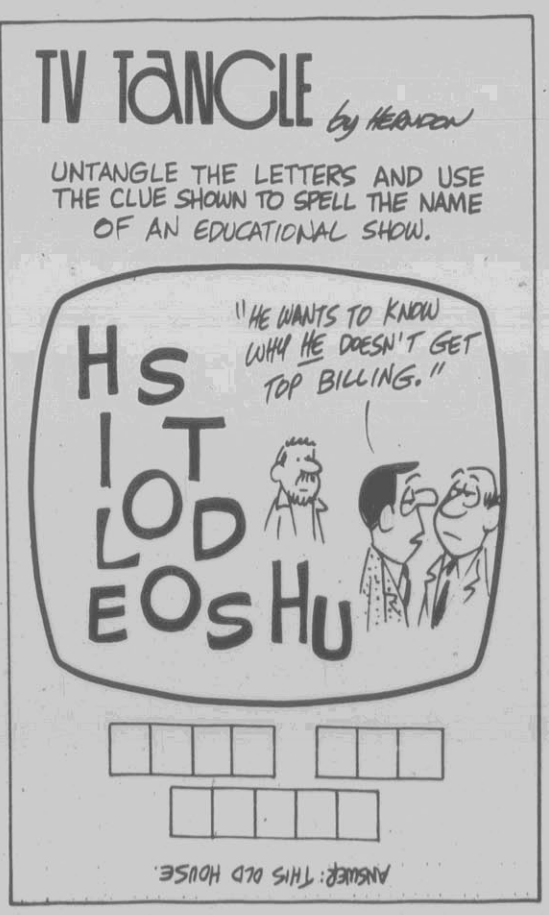

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — For those of us whose dreams are still in the prenatal stage, it's a comfort to learn that for a while, Marcy Carsey and Tom Werner, co-authors of the most spectacular success story in today's television, came close to giving up on Bill Cosby.

Miss Carsey and Werner had quit well-paying but unsatisfying jobs as programming executives at ABC and were doing moderately nicely as independent producers. The one thing they lacked was a solid series hit, and for four years they kept Cosby at the top of their wish list as a comedian capable of delivering TV's most elusive combo: quality and high ratings.

"We'd make an annual pilgrimage to Bill's Hollywood agents, each year they'd listen sympathetically and promise to call us back as soon as Bill was ready to talk to us, and every year, we'd hear nothing," says Miss Carsey. "At one point, we wondered if it was a waste of time. But we were so convinced that Bill was perfect for a TV comedy that we decided to keep on trying, no matter what."

As every TV viewer in the country knows, their persistence finally paid off, and Miss Carsey and Werner are executive producers of the show which hauled NBC out of the ratings cellar and sent the also-ran network into orbit.

Do you fit your suit, or does it fit you?

All suits look great in the store. Freshly pressed and hanging straight. But since your body has curves and contours, all suits don't fit alike.

Most suits are machine-made. And machine stitching is rigid. That's why some makers' suits bunch in the back and sit up straight around the collar. You don't fit the suit.

A hand stitch is a looser stitch. It gives enough to fit your body. Hangs loose around the collar. Falls freely down your back. The suit fits you. In a day when quality is hard to find, all our suits have at least some hand stitching.

We think fit is important.

That's why we look into how our suits are manufactured. And carry suits that are partially hand-stitched. So you can choose your price and still be assured of Coffman's quality and fit. Visit us on the mall in Greenville and try on the Coffman's difference.

Q Isn't it true that when famous film and TV actresses want abortions, they go to clinics across the Mexican border in Tijuana? Wasn't that where Jane Russell was so horribly mutilated that she could never have a child of her own and therefore had to adopt her three kids?—Lona M., Greenville, S.C.

A Jane Russell writes in her autobiography: "There was no such thing as keeping a child out of wedlock in 1942. The only solution was to find a quack and get an abortion." Jane found hers in Glendale, Calif. Subsequently she discovered she could have no children and adopted three. Since abortion is no longer illegal in the U.S., the Tijuana abortion mills do not serve the once-sizable number of Hollywood actresses they formerly did.

Q Was Walter Annenberg—publisher of "TV Guide" and the "Daily Racing Form" and the former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain—ever married to Ethel Merman, the late Broadway musical-comedy star?—N.K., Palm Springs, Calif.

A Though never married to each other, Annenberg and "Cupcake" (his favorite name for Merman) were involved in a heavy love affair in the late '30s.

Q I've been told, but have no way of verifying, that the world's wealthiest widow is Yoko Ono, who was married to Beatle John Lennon. Is she?—Carol Dunn, Berkeley, Calif.

Q I believe I was in school with Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D., Ill.), powerful chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, some 40 years ago. How old is Rostenkowski? Did he ever attend St. John's Military Academy in Delafield, Wis., and under what name?—J.S., Mesa, Ariz.

A James Brady—although wounded by John Hinckley Jr. on March 30, 1981, and disabled—still retains the title Assistant to the President and Press Secretary. Brady makes it to his White House office about once a week. Officially, he is the President's press secretary. Larry Speakes' title is Assistant to the President and Principal Deputy Press Secretary. Pat Buchanan, another Assistant to the President, is also Director of Communications.

Q Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York has been touted as a possible U.S. President. My wife says no person whose name ends in a, i, o or u was ever elected President. Is that correct or merely evidence of her prejudice against ethnics? —D.L., Ithaca, N.Y.

UPI/Bettmann

Gov. Mario Cuomo

A Surely you know your wife better than we do. She is, however, correct in her assertion.

Q My husband says taking vitamin C tablets prevents the common cold. He says Linus Pauling, the Nobel Prize-winning chemist, proved that in his published research. My physician maintains that there is no conclusive scientific proof that vitamin C will prevent colds. What is the truth?—Mrs. A.H., Mesa, Ariz.

A In 1970, Linus Pauling authored a book, "Vitamin C and the Common Cold," in which he suggested that a gram of the vitamin daily would sharply reduce the number of colds for many people. He also suggested that others would need as many as 10 grams a day. There are no controlled scientific studies that prove conclusively the efficacy of such dosages, though some people believe vitamin C may reduce the severity or duration of their colds.

Let's Go To Mars

The martian landscape in the Plains of Gold, photographed in August 1976 by Viking 1, a spacecraft from Earth. Viking's white meteorology boom bisects the picture. The landing site, chosen for safety, is among the scientifically least-interesting places on the planet. From such sites, future mobile vehicles —with robot and eventually with human crews —could rove to explore the wonders of Mars.

IN THE DARKENED auditorium of the National Academy of Sciences in Washington, D.C., the five of them—veterans of many space missions—reminisced about the silent movie being projected on the big front screen. With an easy, self-mocking humor, they described the design of the compatible docking module, the separate launches from Cape Canaveral, Fla., and Tyuratam in the USSR, the dangerous rendezvous, the triumphant crawling through the air locks to visit one another, the exchange of gifts, the camaraderie and their separate returns to Earth. Occasionally, a little shyly, they would put an arm around each other. Many in the audience were struck by the mutual affection and respect of Lt. Gen. Thomas Stafford, U.S. Air Force, former commander at Edwards Air Force Base, where high-performance aircraft are tested, and Maj. Gen. Alexei Leonov, Soviet Air Force, the first human to walk in space. As the film ended and the lights came on, there arose from the sedate audience of engineers and scientists a sound I have rarely heard—an ovation of such a timbre and intensity that you knew something deeply felt had been touched in that hard-bitten and tough-minded audience.

Maybe it was possible after all, you got to thinking. Maybe these two nations could work together in their common interest. Perhaps they could set aside a little of the mutual paranoia and propaganda, to say nothing of their 55,000 nuclear weapons. We've been conditioned to think that in the "real" world it could never happen, that it's too good to be true. But it had happened in World War II, against a common enemy, and in a small way it had happened in July 1975, with the Apollo/Soyuz linkup that we were celebrating.

That linkup, I knew, had its genesis, in large part, in an idea proposed by PARADE back in January 1966. Affirming in an open letter to President Lyndon Johnson that space should be a territory for peaceful exploration, not a battleground, PARADE proposed that an American astronaut and a Russian cosmonaut orbit the Earth together in a two-man capsule—a demonstration of superpower cooperation that would transcend political differences. The response at the time—from readers and newspaper editors alike—was overwhelmingly positive. Six years later, in May 1972, President Nixon and Premier Kosygin signed an agreement providing for U.S.-Soviet cooperation in exploring space for peaceful purposes, leading to the 1975 Apollo/Soyuz linkup.

Now, here they were, the veterans of that contact between alien civilizations, describing a mission whose accomplishments, apart from some worthwhile science, were chiefly in the cause of human understanding. There was a hunger in that audience—as there is throughout the world—a longing for the two nations to do something together for a change, something on behalf of the human species. Our powers are so great and our accomplishments so feeble. Think of what we could do together. As the five astronauts and cosmonauts were given relief maps of the Kasei Vallis region of Mars, you heard another stirring ovation, and again the thought arose unbidden: Maybe it was possible after all.

Mars is the world next door, the nearest planet on which an astronaut or cosmonaut could safely land. Although it is sometimes as warm as a New England October, Mars is a chilly place, so cold that some of its thin carbon dioxide atmosphere freezes out at the winter pole. There are pink skies, fields of boulders, sand dunes, vast extinct volcanos that dwarf anything on Earth, a great canyon that would cross most of the United States, sandstorms that sometimes reach half the speed of sound, strange bright and dark markings on the surface, mountains shaped like pyramids and other enigmas.

Among these many wonders and delights are the channels. The surface of Mars is covered with hundreds of ancient river valleys, carved out in a more clement time when liquid water flowed across the martian landscape. Not only were there rivers then, but also lakes and (possibly) oceans. When, in 1976, the two Viking landers set down on Mars, no sign of life was uncovered—no footprints, no artifacts, no trees or bushes or desert coneys or microbes, not even so much as a complex organic molecule. Mars seems to be lifeless today. But what seems certain is that a billion years ago, when the waters flowed, the chances of life were much greater on that wetter and warmer Mars. If we could wander down one of the sinuous valleys and examine the geological stratifications in the banks, we might discover much—about climate change and the origin and evolution of life, and about the comparative developments of sister worlds.

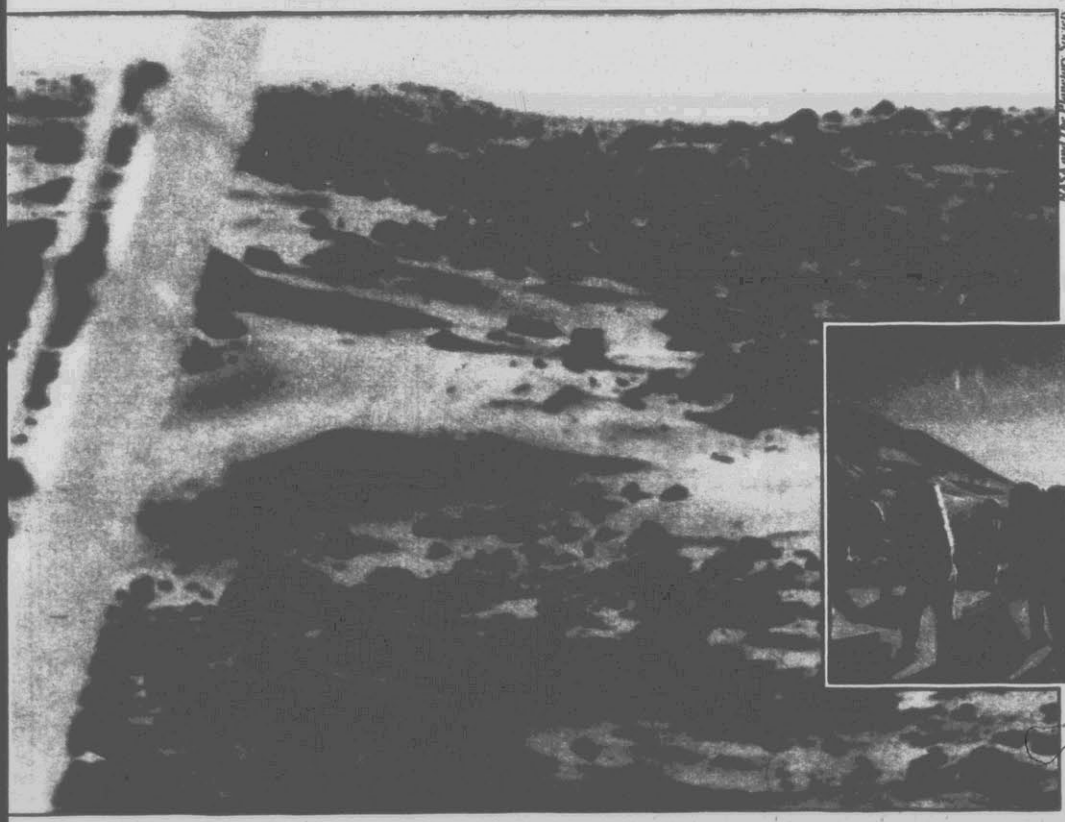

Mars beckons, a storehouse of scientific information—important in its own right but also for the light it may cast on the environment of our own planet. If Mars once had abundant liquid water, what went wrong? How did an Earthlike world become so parched, frigid and comparatively airless? Is there something here we should know about our own planet?

We humans have been this way before. Christopher Columbus would have understood the call of Mars. But mere scientific exploration does not require a human presence. We can always send smart robots. They are much cheaper, and you can take more risks with them.

"Anything that creates emotional ties between human beings must inevitably counteract war . . . Everything that leads to important shared action creates such common feelings. On them the structure of human society in good measure rests."

—SIGMUND FREUD,
IN CORRESPONDENCE WITH ALBERT EINSTEIN (1939)

Painting by Pam Lee

At a time near the turn of the millennium, American, Soviet and other explorers—representing the human species at a historic turning point—set foot on the planet Mars.

Sending humans to Mars must have more than scientific justification, as with the Apollo program. President John F. Kennedy did not ask to find out the origin of the dark lunar lowlands by the end of the 1960s; he asked for an American to land on the Moon and return safely. It was an American political response to the Bay of Pigs fiasco in Cuba and to the fact that the first person to orbit the Earth was a citizen of the Soviet Union. Kennedy explicitly cast the Apollo program in the context of peaceful competition with the Soviet Union. And, as all the world knows, that race the Americans won.

But imagine a different sort of Apollo program, in which cooperation, not competition, was the objective, because the leaders of the U.S. and the USSR had come to their senses. Imagine these leaders deciding to do something not just for their nations but also for their species, something that would capture the imaginations of people everywhere and would lay the groundwork for a major advance in human history—the eventual settlement of another planet.

It can be done. It is technologically feasible. It requires no major "breakthroughs." A project to send people to Mars sounds absurdly expensive. But the advances in technology have been so great that such a mission would cost far less than Star Wars, less than the Apollo program, and not much more than a major strategic weapons system. In a joint mission, the cost to any one nation would be still smaller.

But why a joint mission to Mars? Why not jointly feed the hungry in sub-Saharan Africa, or do water reclamation projects in Bangladesh? The United States and the Soviet Union could, if they chose, together help house, educate, provide medical care for and make increasingly self-reliant every citizen of the planet. But the U.S. and the USSR have no such precedent; they have been obsessed by the pursuit of short-term competitive advantages. The political realities, sadly, are that a joint mission to Mars, like Apollo/Soyuz, is well within the realm of practical possibility, while many worthy and more mundane activities are not. Not yet. But a major cooperative success in space can serve as an inspiration and spearhead for joint enterprises on Earth.

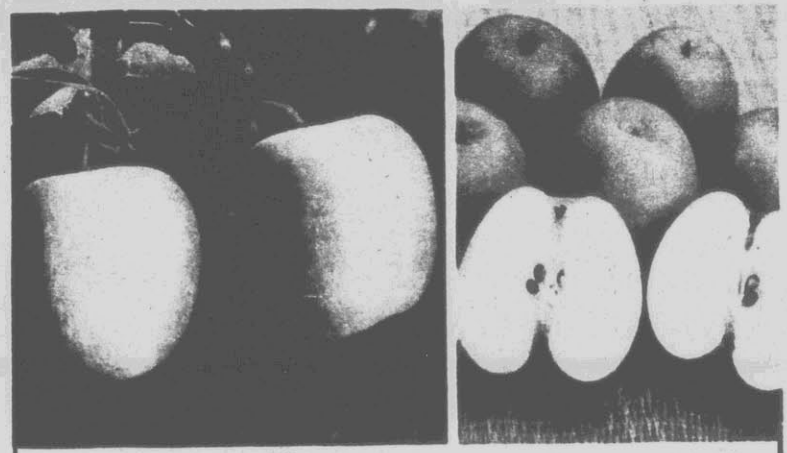

Moreover, space missions have an important subsidiary advantage: They use precisely the same aerospace, electronics, rocket and even nuclear technologies as does the nuclear arms race. There is a perception, enunciated most clearly by President Dwight Eisenhower in his farewell address, that the marriage of high technology and the military establishment creates an arms-race juggernaut that is almost impossible to turn off and that may destroy us all. An alternative program using the same industries and some military skills for peaceful purposes might be a very good thing; it is foolish to have powerful vested interests—jobs, careers, profits, dividends—mainly

Astronauts: Envoys Of Mankind

IN THE 1967 OUTER SPACE treaty, the United States and the Soviet Union pledge not to introduce nuclear or other weapons of mass destruction in Earth orbit or on any other celestial body. The treaty prohibits military bases or weapons testing of any sort on the Moon and planets. The nations are to "facilitate and encourage international cooperation" in the scientific exploration of the Moon and planets and "shall regard astronauts as envoys of mankind." Joint activities on other planets are explicitly encouraged by Article I of the treaty, which reads in its entirety: "The exploration and use of outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development, and shall be the province of all mankind."

Apples! Apples! Apples!

Grow the Incomparable

Granny Smith Apple

The Crisp, Juicy, Flavorful Apple That's so Easy to Grow!

Move over Red Delicious, Golden Delicious and McIntosh, here's an apple that may beat them all — for eating fresh, for cooking, for storing, for sheer good looks — the incomparable Granny Smith.

Yes, the flavor is absolutely mouth-watering. Its crisp, white juicy flesh has just the right amount of tartness to give it that superior 'apple' flavor. What's more it stores well, keeps its fresh-from-the-tree flavor for MONTHS. Almost makes every other kind of apple seem bland in comparison.

The Granny Smith was an incredible accident of nature — a one in a billion chance. In 1869, Mrs. Thomas "Granny" Smith, living in New South Wales, Australia, discarded a bunch of rotten apples she brought home from a trip to the remote island of Tasmania. A tree grew from the seeds of the discarded fruit and bore apples like no other apple in existence. They were shiny green — crisp, juicy and simply scrumptious. They became known among neighbors and friends as 'Granny Smith's apples.'

Eventually, an enterprising apple grower heard about these unique fruit, took cuttings from the productive tree, and started an orchard. Soon, Australian apple growers were exporting the fruit to New Zealand and then to England — a journey of some 10,000 miles. Importing apples to England is like selling refrigerators to Eskimos. England is the home of some of the world's finest-flavored apples — the famous Pippin and the Russett, for example — yet Granny Smith's completely won the English over, so that today in England the Granny Smith may be #1 in popularity. It is rapidly becoming that way in America.

Self-Pollinating, No-Ladder Trees

The Granny Smith apple trees supplied by Silver Creek Nurseries are top quality 'semi-dwarf' trees, meaning that the fruits grow full size, but the trees are compact. You won't need a step-ladder to reach the fruit. What's more Granny Smith's are self-pollinating, meaning that they don't need another apple tree to set fruit like most other apples do.

Also, Granny Smith's will grow in many areas of the south where other apples don't do well, even in Texas and California (check with your local county agent if you're unsure). In northern states Granny Smith's ripen late, when most other apples have finished bearing.

With every order of Granny Smith's, Silver Creek Nurseries includes a complete set of planting instructions and other useful tips (they need no more care than regular apple trees). But HURRY. Once the limited supply is sold out there will be no more trees until next year. Order today!

dependent upon a continuing arms race. Expeditions to the planets use the same high technology, and the traditional military virtues of organization and valor, in a humane and benign cause.

Voyages by humans to Mars simultaneously engage many different constituencies: technological, scientific, exploratory, military and industrial, as well as the many who wish to see significant, balanced cooperation between the United States and the Soviet Union. Some people feel the lure of Mars simply as the future calling. A joint Mars project excites both visionaries and practical engineers, crosses national and ideological boundaries, and even—as I discovered at a meeting of scientists and world religious leaders in Italy—has a powerful and ecumenical religious appeal. There is, it seems, a tide rising.

House-Senate Joint Resolution 236, spearheaded by Sen. Spark Matsunaga of Hawaii, was passed by both houses of Congress and signed into law by President Reagan on Oct. 30, 1984 (Public Law 98-562). It explicitly describes joint U.S./Soviet activities in space as an alternative to "an arms race in space, which is in the interest of no one." Subsequent resolutions proposed in the Senate by Matsunaga discuss "joint East-West Mars-related activities, including an unmanned Mars sample return and all activities that might contribute to an international manned mission to Mars."

With or without the United States, the Soviet Union is going to Mars. Since before Sputnik, the Soviets have declared their long-term intention to go to Mars. Yet, to date, even with the first unmanned landings on the Moon and on Venus to their credit, they have never been able to land a working spacecraft on Mars. However, an extremely ambitious dual spacecraft launch to Mars is intended, according to Soviet scientists, for 1988. The two unmanned vehicles will insert themselves into orbit around Mars and approach, very closely, not Mars itself but its two small moons, Phobos and Deimos.

The Soviets have kept men in space for eight months and sent one cosmonaut on two consecutive missions, each of six months' duration. Why? In the vicinity of the Earth, there is no mission that requires such long stays in zero gravity; certainly any future space station will have shorter duty cycles. But it takes roughly nine months for a spacecraft to journey from Earth to Mars.

On the launch pad at Tyuratam, a massive rocket booster is being completed, a heavy lift vehicle comparable to the Saturn 5 that took the Apollo astronauts to the Moon. The Soviets have a more or less continuously occupied space station called Salyut and are developing the equivalent of a shuttle to low Earth-orbit and a space tug.

A Soviet manned landing on Mars in the early '90s, say, seems unlikely. It is too soon. But a Soviet mission to carry cosmonauts on a close approach to Mars is much easier and just possibly might be launched by 1992. The date is significant—it is the 75th anniversary of the Russian Revolution.

But 1992 is also the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus' discovery of what came, propitiously, to be called the New World. Whatever the original motivations were for the age of exploration that Columbus ushered in, the net result has been, in a painful historical process now nearing completion, the linking of the continents, the unification of the world. What could be more fitting for 1992 than the initiation of an international program for the exploration and eventual settlement of another New World? Perhaps by 1992 the nations would merely begin assembling in low Earth-orbit the components of the

A SOVIET VIEW

"I WOULD LIKE TO WRITE A reportage about how the American shuttle docks with the Soviet Salyut; how a new international crew works on a new peaceful program; how a giant space dock is created in orbit to assemble an international, interplanetary manned craft; how it sets off toward Mars; and how Soviet and American lads leave the first footprints on the red sands of the Martian deserts."

AN AMERICAN VIEW

"MARS IS NOT GOING TO BE settled as a national enterprise; indeed, that would be grossly unfair to humankind as a whole. Everyone will want to participate, and it is up to us to provide the leadership. We must make participation in this great adventure available to all people everywhere.

"The banding together of all humankind cannot but help to bring our own home planet many benefits, not only in technology but also, as has been so eloquently stated here today, a more peaceful, more cooperative, more forward-looking and more humane planet Earth."

—THOMAS PAINE, CHAIRMAN, U.S. NATIONAL COMMISSION ON SPACE AND FORMER NASA ADMINISTRATOR, AT THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF AERONAUTICS AND ASTRONAUTICS/ PLANETARY SOCIETY CONFERENCE, "STEPS TO MARS," WASHINGTON, D.C., JULY 16, 1985

spacecraft that will take the first humans to Mars. By 1992, the U.S. Space Station is supposed to be ready.

If we take this path, there will come a time—perhaps at the dawn of the new century and the new millennium—when the interplanetary spacecraft will be assembled in Earth orbit, the progress in full view on the evening news. Astronauts and cosmonauts, hovering like gnats, will guide and mate the prefabricated parts. The day will come when the ship is tested and ready, boarded by its international crew and boosted to escape the Earth's gravity. For the whole of the voyage to Mars and back, the lives of the American crew members will depend on their Soviet counterparts and vice versa, a microcosm of the actual situation down here on Earth. Perhaps the first joint manned (and womanned) mission will be only a fly-by of Mars. Perhaps robot vehicles will then (or earlier), with parachutes and retrorockets, gently set down on the Martian surface to collect samples and return them to Earth. But eventually—around 2001 if we wish it—humans will set foot on the planet Mars.

According to solemn treaty, signed in Washington and Moscow on Jan. 27, 1967, and ratified by the Senate and the President, no nation may lay claim to part or all of another planet. Nevertheless—for good historical reasons that Columbus would have understood well—people are concerned about who first sets foot on Mars. If this really worries us, we can arrange for the ankles of the American and Soviet commanders to be tied together as they alight in the gentle Martian gravity.

But there would be much to do besides making symbolic gestures. The crews would acquire new and previously sequestered samples, in part to search for life, in part to understand the past and future of Mars and Earth. They would experiment, for later expeditions, on extracting water, oxygen and hydrogen from the hydrated rocks and sand and from the underground permafrost—to drink, to breathe, to power their machines and, as rocket fuel, for the return to Earth. They would test out Martian materials for eventual bases and settlements on Mars.

And they can go exploring. For me, the early stage of human exploration of Mars is encapsulated by the image of a roving vehicle wandering down an ancient river valley, the crew with geological hammers, cameras and analytic instruments at the ready. Every day the explorers could rove to their own horizon, their discoveries televised back to Earth at the speed of light.

In the long run, the binding up of the wounds on Earth and the exploration of Mars might go hand in hand, each activity aiding the other. The wonders of Mars will occupy us for a long time—its surface area is equal to the land area of the Earth. The first voyage of men and women from our planet to Mars is the key step in transforming us into a multiplanet species—a step as momentous as the colonization of the land by our amphibian ancestors some 500 million years ago and the descent from the trees by our primate ancestors perhaps 10 million years ago.

Decades ago, Mars called to the Soviet spaceflight pioneer Konstantin Tsiolkovsky and to his American counterpart, Robert H. Goddard. The rockets they designed were intended not for the destruction of life on Earth but to take us to the planets and the stars. Is there not some special obligation of the two principal spacefaring nations—the two nations that have burdened our planet with 55,000 nuclear weapons—to put things right, to use this technology for good and not for evil, to blaze, on behalf of every human being, the trail to Mars and beyond?

Carl Sagan is president of The Planetary Society, a nonprofit organization devoted to planetary exploration and the search for extraterrestrial life.

THE DAY IKE AND DE GAULLE DEBATED

The Battle Of Gettysburg

AP/Wide World

GENERAL LEE COULD HAVE WON, DE GAULLE ASSERTED, BUT HE MADE TWO ERRORS

BY DAVID SCHOENBRUN

IT WAS HOT, MORE THAN 100 degrees in the spring sun. I sweated along behind two of the most famous generals in history, both presidents of their nations: Dwight D. Eisenhower and Charles de Gaulle. As an American soldier assigned to intelligence missions with the French army during World War II, I had walked alongside these men many times—from the sands of the Algerian Sahara, through the hedgerows of Normandy to the gates of liberated Paris. But on this hot April 24, 1960, I was on American hallowed ground: the battlefield of Gettysburg.

The two general-presidents had come to Eisenhower's farm at Gettysburg, Pa., to coordinate their policies for a summit meeting the following month with Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev in Paris. I was traveling with de Gaulle as the CBS News Paris correspondent.

General de Gaulle had told me before the trip that he would ask Eisenhower to make time to visit the Gettysburg battleground. A scholar of military history, de Gaulle said he greatly admired Gen. Robert E. Lee, "by far the most brilliant general in your Civil War." Yet, brilliant though he was, Lee had made fatal errors at Gettysburg, de Gaulle maintained. He wanted to discuss this with Eisenhower. I did not get a chance then to find out what the errors were, for an aide interrupted us with an urgent dispatch, and I was dismissed. I would find out later at Gettysburg.

On the farm at Gettysburg, President Eisenhower proudly gave de Gaulle the grand tour of the stables and the barn. De Gaulle's eyes gleamed when he saw some beautiful Arabian horses but began to glaze over as Eisenhower presented his Angus cows and bull. Growing impatient, de Gaulle finally managed to suggest tactfully that they get to the nearby battleground before the hot day had tired them out.

Eisenhower agreed at once and asked de Gaulle what particular site he would like to visit, since there would be no time for an extensive tour. Ike was impressed when de Gaulle talked learnedly of Cemetery Ridge, Culp's Hill, Round Top and the tide of battle. "I had to concentrate to keep pace with my French friend," Ike told me later. "He knows his Battle of Gettysburg like a West Pointer." They finally agreed to visit the site of the key clash that decided the battle: the once blood-soaked ground of Pickett's Charge.

On July 3, 1863, Confederate Maj. Gen. George Edward Pickett led his division in a direct assault on the center of the Union lines. Two other divisions went forward on his left flank. With incredible bravery, the Southerners charged into a hail of cannon and musket fire. It was a bloody massacre. As men dropped, others surged to take their place. Their fighting spirit carried them right up to the Union defense line. Then, exhausted, they fell back, leaving 6000 casualties on the field—nearly half the attacking divisions. It was valiant madness.

Two of the guns in the battle are still in place at Gettysburg, a monument to the bravery of both sides. There is a 3-foot-high stone wall in front of the cannons to discourage trespassers. I watched in amazement as the two 70-year-old generals clambered over the wall, frisky as youngsters, curious as tourists.

Charles de Gaulle was fascinated by the guns. He ran his hands over them, bent down to squint along their line of sight, to find their field of fire. He shook his head and said to Eisenhower, "Those gallant, crazy Southerners. How could they have charged into that wall of fire?"

Ike's cheeks were scarlet from the heat, but, like de Gaulle, he was enjoying himself. His aides kept whispering urgently that they were falling behind schedule. They were due to continue their conference at Camp David, and a helicopter was waiting to whisk them away. Finally, reluctantly, the two old soldiers allowed their aides to lead them

Later, when I was writing a biography of de Gaulle, I went back to interview President Eisenhower. It was then that he provided details of the tour of the battlefield.

"De Gaulle amazed me," Eisenhower said. "He'd read everything about Gettysburg and pored over all the maps. And he held strong views on the tactics and strategy of the battle. De Gaulle thought that General Lee could have won at Gettysburg, perhaps changed the history of the United States. But Lee made two costly errors."

Fascinated, I asked what they were.

"Well, first," he said, "Lee allowed Gen. J.E.B. ["Jeb"] Stuart to continue his cavalry raids against the capital at Washington. De Gaulle acknowledged that these raids did keep Washington dithering in fright and that this was hurting President Abraham Lincoln's chances to be nominated for re-election. So the raids were useful. But they could not be decisive in winning the war.

"To win the war, Lee had to win a major victory on Federal soil and hold Union ground. Stuart would have been far more useful in battle at Gettysburg. Lee finally did call him in, but too late to turn the tide. Without Stuart's mobile cavalry, Lee was fighting blind. He did not have enough intelligence on Union strength and positions and was thus unable to turn the Union flank. De Gaulle felt that this cost Lee the victory."

"De Gaulle felt that General Pickett should never have been given permission to charge the strong center of the Union line. That was the second error. The South—with less manpower, less weapons, less money than the North—could not afford a bloody, if gallant, assault that drained its strength. Superior Federal power would always triumph in a man-to-man assault. The South had to be a wily fox, not a charging bull. That was de Gaulle's view."

Eisenhower's familiar grin, so broad it seemed to spread the width of his face, flashed out as he added:

"Oh, I had a few observations of my own to make. When de Gaulle told me how surprised he was at some of Lee's blunders, I told him about the blunders of the Union commander, George Meade. Meade could have ended that war then and there if he had pursued the rebel army as it retreated southward from Gettysburg. Lee could not get his men across the storm-swollen Potomac. If Meade had pursued him, he could have destroyed the Army of North Virginia, ending the Civil War.

"De Gaulle agreed, then paused. 'Victory,' he said sardonically, 'often goes to the army that makes the least mistakes, not the most brilliant plans.'"

THE UNION ARMY COMMANDER ALSO HAD BLUNDERED, EISENHOWER COUNTERED

Dr. Auschlander's wisdom comes from experience

For NORMAN LLOYD Life Begins at 70

Blake Little

Norman Lloyd at his home in California. "He has this presence," says the producer of St. Elsewhere. "He's somebody older and more philosophical that the others can go to."

TO GET AN IDEA OF NORMAN LLOYD'S skill as an actor, consider this: When Lloyd went for a checkup this year, his physician looked him over, told him what he saw, and then, with professional courtesy, turned to Lloyd and asked: "What do you think, Doctor?"

Last year, while he was traveling in China, Lloyd was accosted by a stranger in a hotel elevator. "I know our paths have crossed," the man said. "I'm Doctor Segal." Lloyd offered his hand and answered: "I'm Doctor Auschlander."

Norman Lloyd is not a doctor, but millions of people think of him as one. In four years, he has made the character of Dr. Daniel Auschlander on the NBC series St. Elsewhere into a symbol of all that is good in medicine—a more believable Marcus Welby—with a grandfatherly wisdom and medical experience that provide stability and guidance to the hospital he directs. On camera, the younger doctors and nurses look to him for guidance. Viewers write to him to share their experiences and express their admiration. Last year, he even did a speaking tour for the American Cancer Society. At the age of 71, he is an "overnight success."

Fifty years ago, if you predicted that Norman Lloyd was going to be a star, few people would have disagreed. He was already a well-known name on Broadway, a co-founder, with Orson Welles and John Houseman, of the Mercury Theater. Alfred Hitchcock, who called him "a very fine actor," brought Lloyd to Hollywood to play the title role in Saboteur—in one of the most famous scenes in movie history, he died at the film's end in a spectacular fall from the torch of the Statue of Liberty. But his acting career sputtered, all but died, and Lloyd started taking jobs behind the camera. He worked for directors like Hitchcock, Jean Renoir and Lewis Milestone, but the public rarely saw him. He had some memorable achievements—producing PBS's Hollywood Television Theater, directing James Agee's Lincoln for the Omnibus series, now regarded as a television classic—but Lloyd's name, and his acting talent, largely disappeared from public view.

Ask him why he stopped acting, and Lloyd has a terse, self-deprecating answer: "I was afraid." Sunk deep in the cushions of an oversized wicker chair in an office at MTM studios, he is still an actor whose presence fills the room. He is not a large man—the studio biography errs generously when it gives him a height of 5 feet 10—but he can become one when his eyes lock on yours and he turns on you an actor's voice that was trained to penetrate to the last row of the second balcony. He is not a timid-seeming man, but now, with unforced candor, he talks about how his insecurities shaped his life.

"I grew up in Jersey City and in New York," he says. "My father owned a small furniture store, first on the Lower East Side, then on Lower Park Avenue, in the furniture district. He was doing well, satisfied, he thought everything was fine. And then the Depression came along. He lost his store. He never knew what hit him. He never understood." Lloyd was an adolescent by then, well on his way to an acting career; but the memory of the Depression and his father's failure haunted him.

By his 20s, he was starring in The Living Newspaper, a sort of theatrical precursor of today's docudrama that captivated New York theatergoers for the better part of a decade. He was married, with two children, living in a cold-water flat on the fringes of Harlem—because legitimate-theater actors, no matter how popular, worked unsteadily for low pay in those days. "I never believed I could make a living in the theater," Lloyd recalls. "We were desperately poor. When I worked at the Mercury Theater, I made $40 a week; I got nine raises, to $75. Then we began to lose money, and I was cut back to $40. I still—jokingly—accuse John Houseman of being an Indian giver; he's the one who cut my pay."

After Saboteur gave him his break, Lloyd waited for another big offer; few came. "You had to be fairly good-looking to have one of those flaming careers."

BY MICHAEL RYAN

he says now. "It was very difficult for an off-center guy like myself to have any career in pictures." Finally, he stopped waiting and took a producing job. "It was an opportunity to keep working all the time," he points out. "The longings were still there. I still wanted to get out and do a turn as an actor, but I tried to transfer my aspirations into other creative areas."

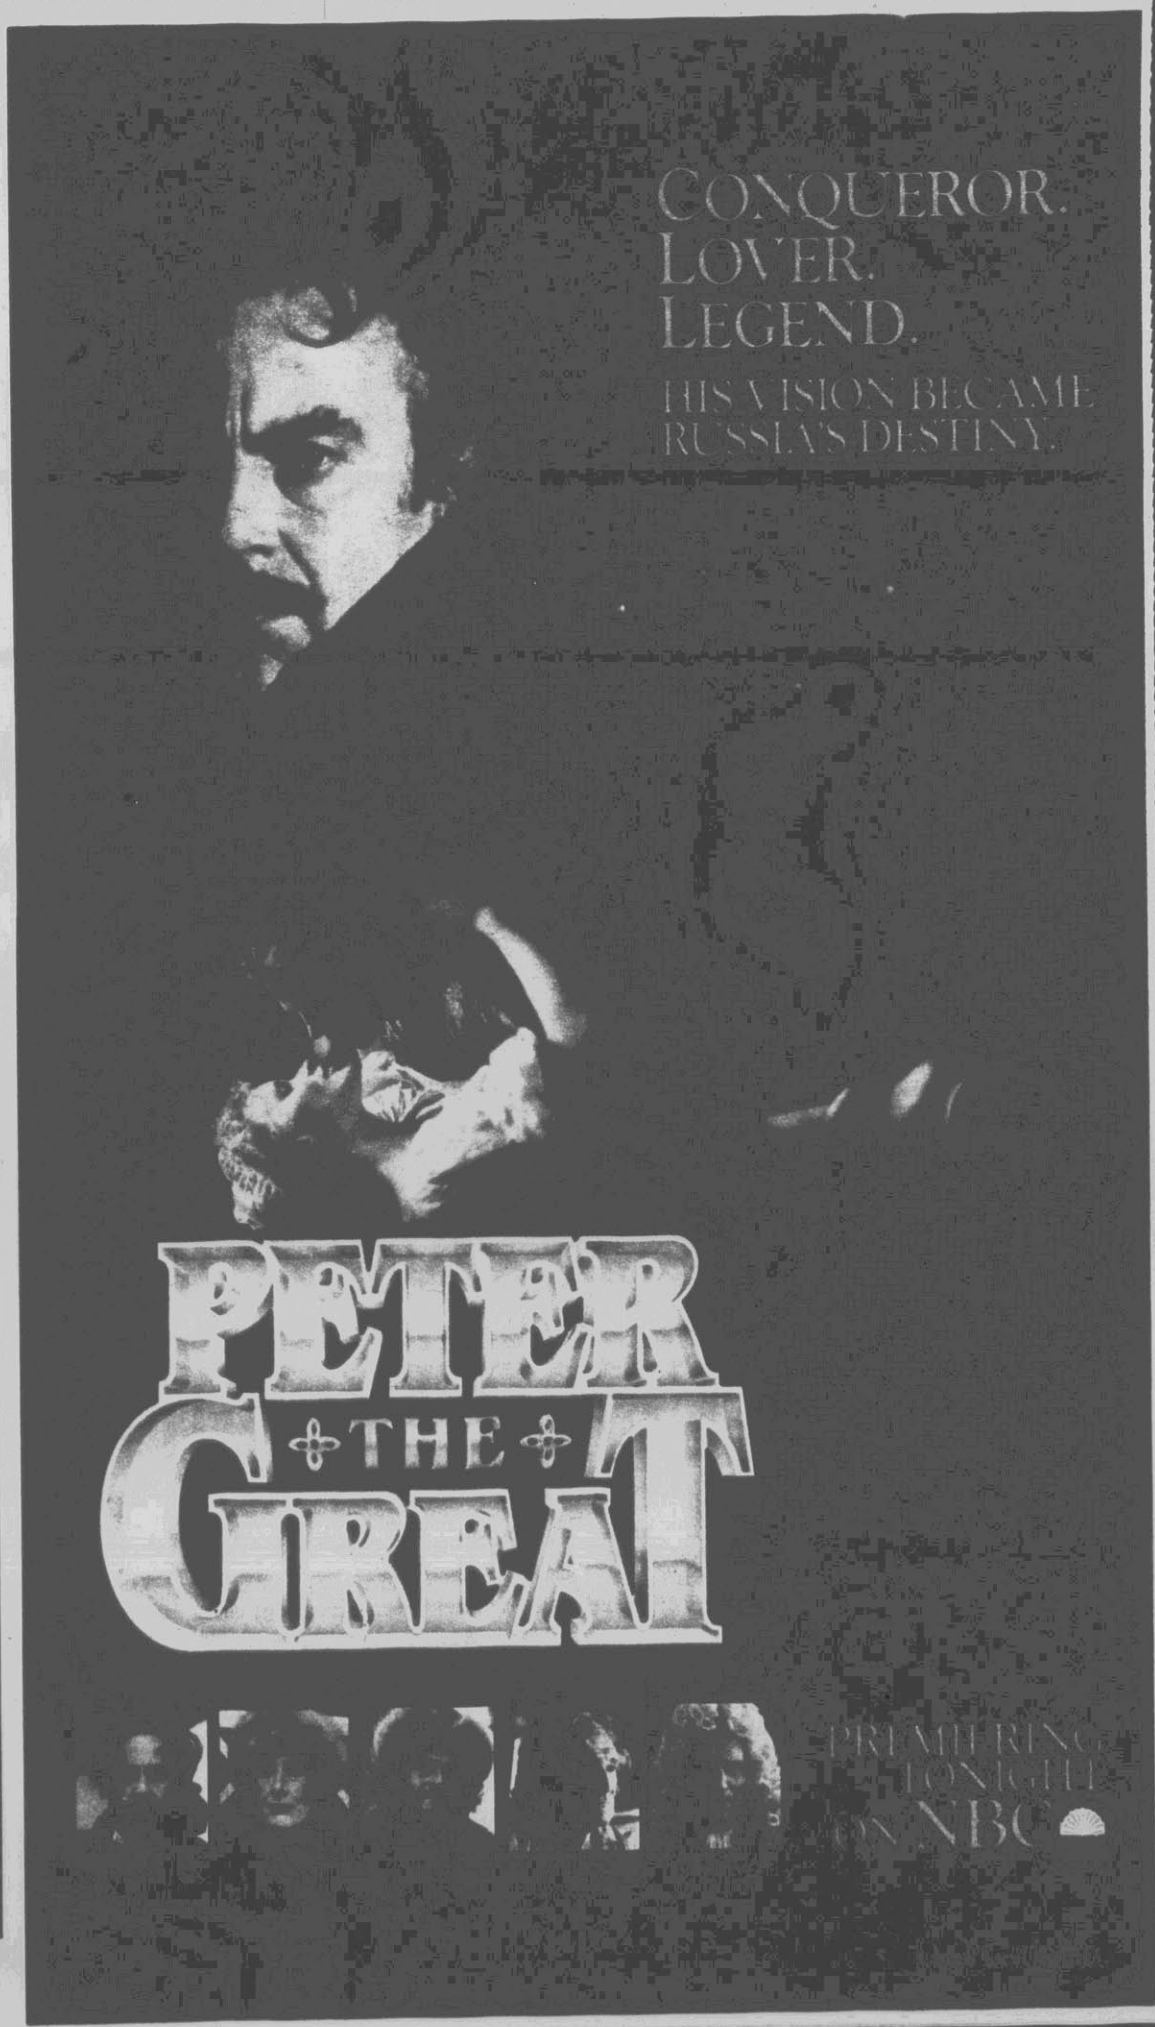

Our culture has never looked kindly on people who sublimate their dreams to reality: Walter Mitty and Willy Loman earn at best our pity or derision. But Lloyd, in his largely anonymous career, produced Alfred Hitchcock's television series, directed projects that ranged from The Taming of the Shrew to Colombo and won the respect of his professional colleagues.

And he provided for his family: His son, an aspiring novelist who supports himself as a truck driver, lives in Northern California; his daughter, recently divorced from the puppeteer Bil Baird, has returned to Los Angeles to live. Next June, Lloyd and his wife, Peg, will observe their 50th wedding anniversary.

All the bittersweet experience of his life has made Lloyd a rich resource for his colleagues. "Norman knows everything there is to know about the theater," says his friend, the actress Dorothy McGuire. "He's a wonderful man," says Ed Begley Jr., who plays the doltish Dr. Ehrlich on the series but socializes with Lloyd off camera, soaking up the older man's endless store of anecdotes about actors and acting.

Most of all, though, Lloyd is a resource for Daniel Auschlander, M.D. "He has this presence," says Bruce Paltrow, the series producer. "He's somebody older and more philosophical that the others can go to." Diehard viewers of the series may remember that, when St. Elsewhere began, Dr. Auschlander was supposed to be dying of cancer. After seeing how Lloyd handled the role, Paltrow and his associates granted him a remission. For one thing, he brought to the part the quiet courage of a survivor. "Auschlander acts as if he is not ill," says Lloyd. "I and the writers agreed that we would not play him as a sick man. People get ideas of how to live or not to live from what you do on television." For another, he resisted the temptation to make the doctor an unblemished hero: "Sometimes he's quite contrary," says Lloyd. "He makes mistakes. He sulks. He is not above it all."

Perhaps only a man of Norman Lloyd's experience could have created the character of Daniel Auschlander—and certainly only Norman Lloyd could get so much out of playing Dr. Auschlander. "It's a very good show," he says. "It has a courage and uniqueness that makes one proud to be in it. It's all things I went into the business for. I'm having a ball."

A Doctor Fights For The Little People

BY MICHAEL SATCHELL

AS WEDDING PICTURES go, the photographs that Dr. Steven Kopits proudly spreads out on a table in his Baltimore clinic are traditional and—at first glance—unremarkable. The bride, clad in a full-length white gown, is radiant and beautiful as she walks down the aisle on the arm of her handsome bridegroom, cuts the wedding cake and celebrates the joyous occasion.

Then Kopits hands me another set of pictures—photographs of a deformed dwarf child. This was the bride, Ellen Highland, before 85 hours of surgery. In 22 separate operations, Dr. Kopits rebuilt her from the ground up and assured a future for a woman who will never grow more than 40 inches tall.

"This," says Kopits, gesturing to the two sets of photographs, "is what my life and work is all about. If Ellen had not sought help, she probably would be dead by now or at best paralyzed with severe deformities. Now she can live a totally normal life."

The Hungarian-born Kopits, 49, is thought to be the only physician in the world who devotes himself entirely to the orthopedic problems of dwarfs, employing his surgical skills to prevent and correct the often severe bone deformities that cause progressive crippling in many forms of genetic dwarfism. Without skilled surgery, many dwarfs are condemned to lives of pain. Some die, often in their teens or 20s, from respiratory and other complications.

"Little people have to overcome an adversity that we can hardly fathom," Kopits says in his softly accented English. "When I first began studying dwarfism, I found a group of patients who were totally neglected, where the level of medical knowledge was abysmally low. Now I'm frantically trying to bring their treatment up to par with the rest of medicine."

In a society that often equates tallness with brains, authority and physical attractiveness, being extremely short can be a serious handicap. The characters portrayed by America's most successful dwarf actors—Herve Villechaize, formerly of Fantasy Island, and Billy Barty, a TV personality—are video extensions of traditional dwarf roles as comic or cute foils for lead characters.

Ernie and Dolores Ott, a dwarf couple with two young children, live in Wheaton, Md. Their experiences are typical. "Since childhood and for the next 20 years, people would ask me seriously when I was going to join the circus," recalls Ernie Ott, who holds an M.B.A. degree in finance from Duke University and works as a financial analyst for IBM. "You are constantly reminded you are different, and it's an incredible obstacle for some."

Steven Kopits and his longtime associate, Diane Davis, hear such things almost daily from patients and their families, who come from all over the U.S. and 33 foreign countries. In 15 years, Kopits has performed 2500 operations on dwarfs, often using techniques that he pioneered. His surgical schedule is booked for the next three years. Despite his 80-hour work weeks, there is never enough time to accomplish everything. Dr. Kopits and Davis, a nurse, strive to provide the finest care possible for their patients, regardless of their ability to pay.

He makes a special effort to hold clinics at national and regional meetings of Little People of America and even schedules clinical consultations at airports when he has layovers between planes. His salary as an associate professor at The Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine is less than what he could earn in private practice. He gives patients his home telephone number and invites them to call anytime.

"There is a saying that a physician should not become emotionally involved with patients," he observes. "I don't think you can be a good physician unless you become emotionally involved. I have had a medical colleague describe me as an oddball who treats weirdos. That's how some people regard dwarfs, but I am totally, utterly captivated by these little people and their courage."

Kopits' involvement with little people began in 1968 when he was chief pediatric orthopedist at Johns Hopkins. Called to the emergency room to examine a 3-year-old boy who had been paralyzed after a slap in the face from his father, Kopits discovered that the child was a dwarf—a fact unknown to the parents. Soon after, Kopits dropped by a Baltimore convention of Little People of America and was touched by the sight of some two-dozen dwarfs—many disabled—hobbling and shuffling around on crutches and in wheelchairs.

"It had a big emotional impact," he remembers. "I thought, in this day of modern medicine, how can this be?" Delving into medical textbooks left him even more disturbed because there were few answers and little information of real value. Kopits began seeking out dwarf patients as he explored and perfected new surgical techniques, accumulating a body of research that he hopes to publish.

A group of supporters also launched the Little People's Research Fund, headquartered at Baltimore's St. Joseph Hospital. Says Peggy Albert, the research fund's executive director: "Every week I get calls from desperate parents with horror stories about what's happening to their children. A mother from Georgia called recently—she has an 8-year-old dwarf daughter—and told me that their doctor was trying to cure the child's bowed legs by having them broken and reset each year. It's tragic how much ignorance remains on this subject."

Two basic conditions cause dwarfism. So-called pituitary dwarfs lack growth hormones, and they remain tiny. In the past, these well-proportioned but short-statured persons were known as "midgets," but this term is now regarded as insulting. Growth hormones have helped eliminate much pituitary dwarfism.

The most common cause of dwarfism is genetic mutations that cause bones to form and grow improperly, resulting in disproportionate bodies. There are more than 80 different syndromes responsible for these bone dysplasias. The condition is often accompanied by severe bowing of the legs, hip problems, clubfeet and problems with the heart, spine and respiratory system. These so-called genetic dwarfs are the focus of Dr. Kopits' work. Their parents tend to be of normal size, incidentally.

At 8 a.m. on a recent Monday, I watch Kopits operate on Stephen Hatch, 15, who lives in American Fork, near Provo, Utah. Stephen has pseudo-achondroplasia. His head and torso are normally proportioned but his legs are stunted and bowed and his arms are short.

"When Stephen was 11, we took him to a Little People's convention in Reno and met Dr. Kopits," says his mother, Beth Hatch. "We watched a girl who was as straight as a stick and was actually dancing. Dr. Kopits said the girl had been like Stephen before he had operated on her."

Kopits had realigned Stephen's hips two weeks earlier. The next task was to straighten his legs. This Monday, the goal is to straighten Stephen's right leg, which takes eight hours. Before setting the hips and legs in a new plaster cast, Kopits invites me to examine the two legs. The right one is now discernibly straighter—and also about three inches longer.

The next day's schedule has Dr. Kopits booked to see patients from Maryland, Texas, Alabama, West Germany and Israel. Pat Hutson, who has traveled from Bonn, West Germany, with her daughter, says of Kopits: "He's our child's link to a more hopeful world. He will give her a future."

Gordon and Virginia Hendrickson of Rochester, N.Y., have brought their 16-year-old daughter Sheri to Baltimore to see Kopits.

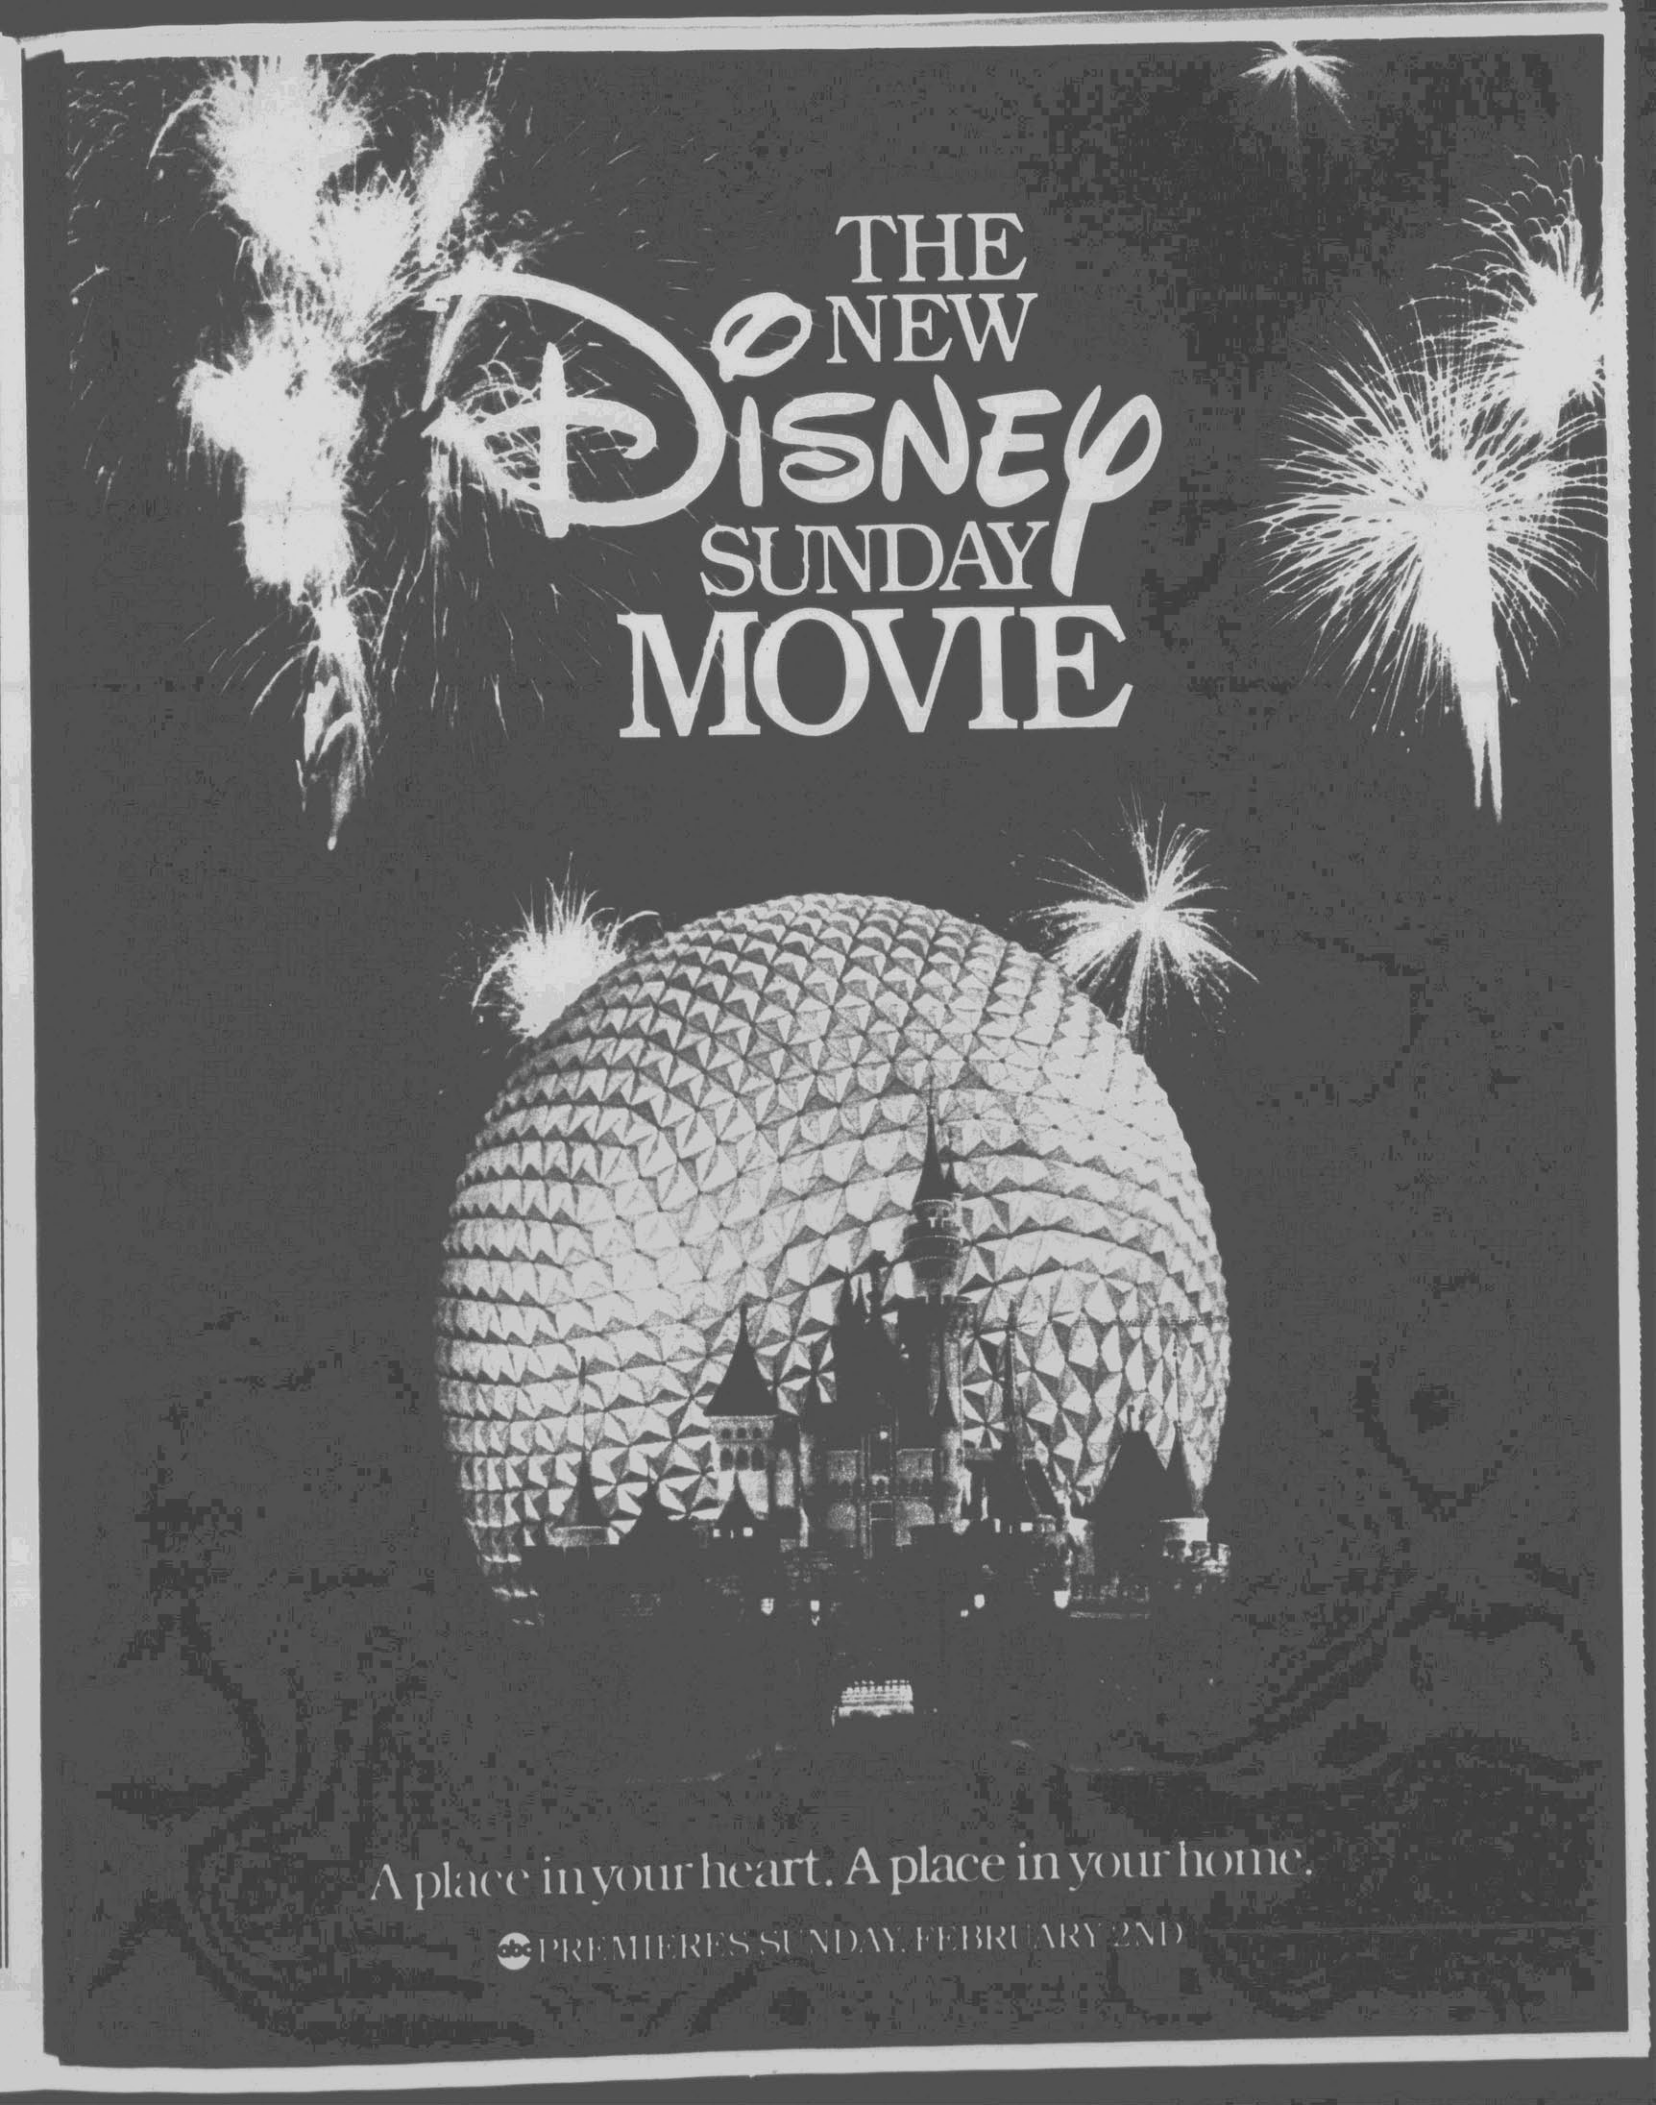

"She's been examined by six specialists," explains Mrs. Hendrickson. "They're baffled. They don't know what to do, and they can't help Sheri. She's been taking 10 codeines a day for the pain, and the pills aren't helping. We heard about Dr. Kopits, and we felt this was our only chance."

After a lengthy examination of the girl, Kopits is clearly touched. Her pains, he explains, are probably not orthopedic in origin but may be related to her dwarfism.

"I'm just a poor orthopedist from East Baltimore," Kopits says with a wry smile, "but I want you to know that I care about you, and I'm going to do everything in my power to help you get well." He then gives the Hendricksons his home telephone number, tells them to call if there are any problems overnight and arranges to have their daughter admitted to the hospital for tests. As the family leaves his office, Kopits bends his lanky frame down, hugs his new patient and kisses her on the cheek. She is clearly smitten.

Kopits watches the family leave and shakes his head. "Six doctors, and none could help her," he observes. "It's tragic really. All the time, I see the desperation of good physicians who can't do anything for these patients. That is what keeps me going."

When Marcos Was Lovey With Dovie

Lloyd Shearer

Burnett Cinkus / Press Images

"Freddie Marcos is a cinch to win the Philippine presidential election scheduled for February 7." That's the considered judgment of Dovie Beams, a former Hollywood actress who was involved with President Marcos in a tempestuous two-year (1968-70) love affair during some of which she concealed a tape recorder beneath their bed.

"Freddie is a shrewd, wily, intelligent, experienced in-fighter," Beams explains, "who exercises considerable influence over the Philippine judiciary, the Philippine army and the Philippine electoral process. I think I know him well, and I can tell you that, in my opinion, there is no way Freddie will ever voluntarily relinquish the presidency.

"Let's face it," she continues. "Ferdinand Marcos is 68. He's been president of the Philippines since 1965. That's 20, 21 years—long years of power and privilege in which he and Imelda [his wife] have positioned into the government and the economy an army of grateful friends and relatives. Whom do you think all those people and associates will vote for?"

A loquacious, attractive, size 6-ish brunette with wavy, waist-reaching hair, Dovie Beams—originally from Nashville—met Marcos in 1968 when Universal Studios sent her to Manila to discuss starring in a film for some Philippine exhibitors. At a cocktail party in her honor, Marcos was introduced to the actress as "Freddie," and for several hours she had no idea of his true identity. She remembers his calling her "Big Eyes" and professing to her that he had fallen in love with her at first sight. She says she had no notion then whether he was "acting like a sophomore or a romantic Filipino." He did, however, admit modestly that he was president of the Philippines and subsequently paid Beams $10,000 to star in a film, Maharlika, based on his heroic exploits as a guerrilla fighter in World War II. Also in the motion picture were the actors Farley Granger, Broderick Crawford and Paul Burke.

Dovie Beams says she lived in Manila with President Marcos for two years. There, she was protected by his cousin, Col. Fabian Ver (now a general), who, she recalls, corroborated much of the fiction that Marcos spun about his First Lady. "Freddie told me back then," Beams maintains, "that he and Imelda had engaged in no intimate relations for the past two years; that she was rapidly becoming richer than he was, although nothing was ever put in their names; and that, given time, he would find some way of getting rid of her and marrying me."

Beams learned shortly that Marcos also was committed to other women, particularly to one named Carmen, by whom he reportedly had at least three offspring. Doubting his truthfulness, she thereupon began secretly to tape-record him "when he came to visit me in the house on Princeton Street" in Manila. Beams collected tapes, she says, revealing vital political and financial information concerning the United States and the Philippines at the highest level as well as Marcos' personal opinions on a variety of individuals and subjects. She has had these tapes transcribed, she maintains, and they form a large portion of a 1500-page unpublished manuscript titled "Dovie Beams by Me."

For years after her return to Beverly Hills in 1970, Dovie Beams lived in fear of assassination by Philippine "hit men" determined to silence her. She no longer does. Through Marcos' emissaries from Manila, she says, she receives messages from time to time that the Philippine president still loves her. She has been visited, she adds, by many Philippine politicians, among them Salvador Laurel, running mate of Corazon Aquino, who heads the opposition slate against Marcos.

Having dropped acting in favor of real estate, Beams now lives in a 30-room mansion on a five-acre estate in Pasadena, Calif., which she rents out to film and TV producers. She asserts that she and her current husband, whose identity she prefers not to disclose, are the owners of some 215 properties in addition to 16 automobiles.

Asked how she regards Ferdinard Marcos 16 years after their breakup, Dovie Beams says with gusto, "I don't like his politics." Then, with tenderness, she adds, "But I will love him to the day I die."

The Outspoken Prince

After his intensively covered trip to the United States a few months ago, Prince Charles, 37, returned to Great Britain. Increasingly sensitive to his country's economic and social problems, the heir to the throne delivered a scathing attack on British businessmen, warning them that Britain might well deteriorate to a fourth-rate nation unless its people change and adopt the American entrepreneurial spirit. He declared that Britain, once recognized as a great trading nation, no longer provided its customers with the services they desired. "We don't deliver the goods on time," said the Prince, "and we don't deliver the goods they want. We can't go in the same old way. We've got to find a way of changing."

The Prince and his Princess Diana are scheduled to tour Japan in May. It will be interesting to note what sort of pep talk he subsequently gives to his countrymen on the virtues of Japanese labor, initiative and productivity.

The sad truth about Great Britain is that it suffers from traditional class distinction, increasing racial violence, demoralizing unemployment and a wave of drug-taking by many of its young, who have given up all hope of ever landing a job.

CHRONIC HALITOSIS

Do you offend more than most people?

Everyone has bad breath once in a while. It doesn't matter how old you are. And it doesn't mean bad brushing habits. It just happens. But unfortunately, many people suffer this embarrassing problem much more often. And when it's not due to illness, our name for recurring bad breath is Chronic Halitosis.

If you're one of the millions who suffer from this condition, you know the anguish, the frustration and the embarrassment of bad breath that keeps coming back. You brush and rinse more often and STILL the bad breath keeps coming back. You chew gum and mints by the handful and STILL the bad breath keeps coming back. You've gone to your dentist or physician and learned there's nothing wrong... no logical explanation ...but STILL the bad breath keeps coming back.

Lavoris is formulated like no other leading mouthwash. Its special combination of ingredients give you the breath protection you need and the confidence you desperately want. Yes, Lavoris is specially formulated to fight even Chronic Halitosis.

Imagine being able to face others with the assurance that your breath is fresh and clean. Imagine being able to get and stay close to others without fear of offending. Imagine not having to turn your head away or put your hand in front of your face everytime you get close to people. Assurance, confidence and clean, fresh breath for hours. That's what Lavoris offers you... even if you have Chronic Halitosis.

1. LAVORIS NEUTRALIZES. Of all leading mouthwashes only Lavoris has a high-concentration of Zinc Chloride to neutralize foul smelling gases.

2. LAVORIS FRESHENS. Special fresheners leave your breath, your entire mouth, tasting remarkably clean, remarkably fresh.

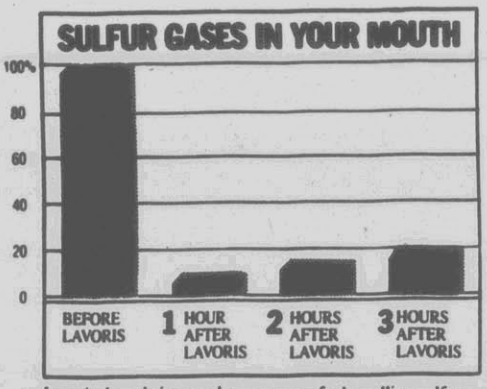

3. LAVORIS PROTECTS. The unique Lavoris formula cleans the very lining of your mouth. This action helps keep your breath fresh and clean for up to 3 hours. EVEN IF YOU HAVE CHRONIC HALITOSIS.

WHY BAD BREATH KEEPS COMING BACK

The major cause of bad breath is volatile sulfur gases in your mouth. They're foul smelling and persistent. And left untreated, these sulfur gases build up and up. So you continue to offend, continue to be embarrassed, continue to be self conscious. Simply masking or covering up the bad smell with a more pleasant smell isn't the answer–because it only helps for about 15 to 20 minutes.

The key Lavoris difference

Lavoris goes beyond ordinary breath protection. Lavoris contains a high concentration of Zinc Chloride, a special ingredient that traps the sulfur gases, neutralizes them and turns them odorless.

Lavoris doesn't just mask or cover up foul smelling sulfur gases...Lavoris neutralizes the gases, reduces the amount of gases in your mouth, cleans the lining of your mouth, helps keep breath fresh for hours.

4 reasons why you can trust Lavoris

1. Lavoris is used by thousands of dentists every year.
2. Lavoris doesn't just mask bad breath. Lavoris contains Zinc Chloride to neutralize bad breath gases.
3. Lavoris fights even Chronic Halitosis... keeps breath fresh for up to 3 hours.
4. No other mouthwash has the unique Lavoris formula. So if you've been disappointed in other brands, you owe it to yourself to try Lavoris.

WORLD WAR II WITH WALTER CRONKITE

Narrated by Walter Cronkite

World War II. You've seen the Hollywood version a hundred times over. Now prepare for all the action and drama of the real thing. In "Air War Over Europe," your introduction to the landmark series, WORLD WAR II WITH WALTER CRONKITE, you'll join Allied flyers on some of the roughest bombing missions ever flown.

Through graphic combat footage taken by both sides, you'll follow them every step of the way, from the briefing room to the target and back. You'll see and hear just what the pilots, gunners and bombardiers did, as German fighters attack from all sides ...bursts of flak shatter the sky...the ground below erupts in flames.

And each mission is all the more involving when you realize the special planning that went into it.

IN EPISODE I, "TARGET: PLOESTI", the plan called for a surprise attack by 177 B-24 bombers. They would avoid German radar by flying all 1,200 miles to the oil refineries at Ploesti, Rumania at tree-top level. But a navigational error takes them directly over Bucharest, headquarters of the German Air Defense Command. And what could have been a brilliant lightning strike turns into one of the most costly air battles of the war.

IN EPISODE II, "RAID ON SCHWEINFURT", you'll witness the first major American air strike deep inside Germany. Since the target was far beyond the range of Allied fighter protection, these B-17 "Flying Fortresses" had to rely on tight formation flying and combined firepower for survival. 28 are shot down before they even reach the target. And before it's over, this air battle tests the limits of human endurance.

IN EPISODE III, "COUNTERBLAST: HAMBURG", you'll board a U-boat on the attack and understand first-hand why the destruction of the U-boat manufacturing plants at Hamburg was so vital. In a single night raid, the RAF put up 800 bombers. How this huge force managed to jam German radar, get the Luftwaffe to defend the wrong city and hit the target with such deadly accuracy is one of the war's great success stories.

AND IN EPISODE IV, "GUIDED MISSILE", the Luftwaffe's painful defeat in The Battle of Britain sets the stage for Hitler's "vengeance weapons," the V-1 and V-2 rockets. You'll watch them being launched at his secret base in Peenemunde...go on the massive air raid that forces their redeployment at hidden launching sites...view the onslaught as RAF Spitfires shoot down V-1s while supersonic V-2s rain down, one by one, on London. And rare footage reveals the long-range V-9 being test-launched in the final days of the war. Its proposed target: The United States!

In all, "Air War Over Europe" adds up to 90 minutes of excitement no movie can imitate. And it's yours for just $4.95 plus shipping and handling, a full $45 off its regular price with your subscription to the series.

As a subscriber, you'll receive future videocassettes, one every other month, always for 10-day free examination. Each shows you a new and exciting side of the war—in episodes like "Suicide Run To Murmansk," "The Doolittle Raid," "Sabotage," "Typhoon At Okinawa," and "The Plots Against Hitler." Each video cassette is $49.95 plus shipping and handling. There is no minimum number you must buy, and you can cancel your subscription at any time.

Mary Tyler Moore

HOME: New York City.
PERSONAL: Married to Richard Meeker 1955-62; one son, Richie, died in 1980. Married to Grant Tinker 1963-80. Married Dr. Robert Levine in 1983.
FIRST JOB: Playing the 3-inch-tall pixie Nappy Hotpoint on TV commercials.
SIDELINE: Chairman of MTM Corporation.

CBS

Her new series exploded on our TV sets just before Christmas. But for those of us who know our Mary, the wonder isn't that she makes us laugh. The wonder is that, with all that's happened, she can laugh at herself.

THIS WAS ABOUT A YEAR AGO AT a very elegant black-tie dinner in someone's apartment in Manhattan, and Mary Tyler Moore was sitting between me and Peter Jennings, the ABC anchorman. Jennings and Adm. Stansfield Turner, who used to run the CIA, were arguing about Iran and how we messed up trying to get the hostages out. Mary Tyler Moore was listening and asking intelligent questions, making informed comments. A fascinating moment.

But when the coffee was served in tiny demitasse cups, Mary tasted hers and sort of made a face. "Will you taste this?" she said. I did. It was delicious but laced with brandy. Mary laughed and said, "Here I am barely out of the clinic, and they're trying to get me back on the stuff."

She is with us again on television every Wednesday night, and we are fortunate to have her. TV gobbles up its stars (where is Dick Van Dyke today, where Ed Asner?), and yet here is our Mary back again, not only surviving but prevailing.

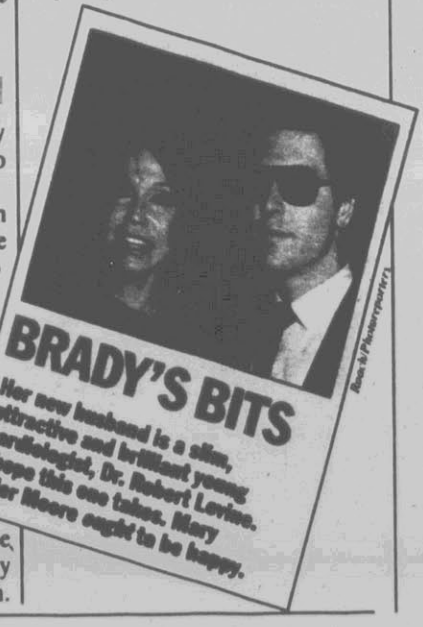

Offscreen, her life is a soap opera. She is a diabetic and an alcoholic. Those two martinis you and I may sip of an evening can be lethal to a diabetic. She faces up to her problems, and she speaks candidly about them. Her only child, a son, shot himself to death. Her marriage to NBC boss Grant Tinker went smash, and she is now married to a man 16 years her junior.

When you meet her, you are surprised by a couple of things: how tall she is (perhaps 5'8" or 5'9"), by that splendid dancer's body. ("Why not?" she says. "I've always been a dancer.") What does not surprise you is that youthful face. At 48, she is still cute rather than beautiful. I don't care how old our Mary gets: she will always be the girl you wished lived next door.

She has made important movies like Ordinary People and has a new film coming up next month, Just Between Friends, co-starring Ted Danson of TV's Cheers. Yet we think of her not as Hollywood but as television. I think it's because we feel she belongs not up there on a distant screen but home with us, right there in the living room.

Her new series on CBS gives her a different name and a different job. Instead of coping with Ted Baxter and getting the TV news on the air in Minneapolis, she is a columnist on a lovably sleazy Chicago tabloid which she struggles to keep from falling apart.

Can she? Are you kidding? Mary Tyler Moore has rebuilt a shattered life, is handling her illness, illuminating our Wednesdays. MTM can do anything.

Ron Wolf/Photoreporters

BRADY'S BITS

Our Story:
THE STORM HAS ABATED AND THE VOYAGE TO THULE PROCEEDS WITHOUT FURTHER INCIDENT. PRINCE VALIANT PONDERS THE ISLE OF COVETOUSNESS. WHY HAD THE FATES CHOSEN TO TEST HIM IN THIS WAY? OF ONE THING HE FEELS CERTAIN: SHOULD HE EVER TRY TO RETURN, THE ISLAND WOULD NOT BE THERE.

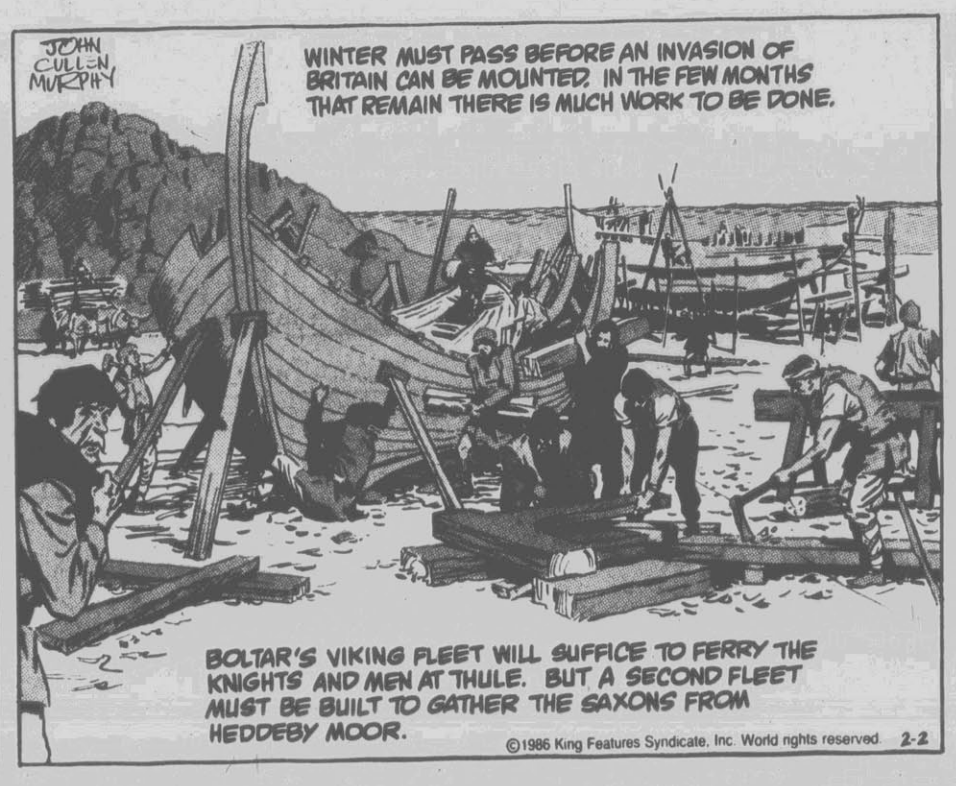

FOR COVETOUSNESS KNOCKS WHEN IT IS NOT EXPECTED. THERE IS A LESSON HERE, HE IS SURE, FOR THE GRIM BATTLE THAT LIES AHEAD.

SOON THE BATTLE WILL BE JOINED. KING ARTHUR'S EMISSARIES RECEIVE A GREAT WELCOME IN THULE, BUT THEN IT IS DOWN TO BUSINESS. ARTHUR HEARS THE TERMS OF THE SAXON ALLIANCE: MEN AND ARMS IN RETURN FOR LAND AND FARMS.

"IT IS A BARGAIN WITH THE DEVIL," THE KING SAYS QUIETLY. BUT HE IS OLD ENOUGH TO KNOW THAT THE WORLD IS NOT PERFECT. IF IT WERE, HE WOULD NOT NEED SAXONS AS ALLIES. THE DEAL VAL HAS STRUCK IS THE DEAL ARTHUR EXPECTED.
