Jordan, Jones Call For Unified Party

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

More than 600 Democrats attending a county rally here Wednesday night heard Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan and U.S. Rep. Walter Jones call for party unity in 1986. Eight of the 10 candidates for the party's U.S. Senate nomination were on hand.

Jordan told those attending the rally "you are the Democratic Party. This is your party. We're all coming back together (and) after the primary, we're going to back the (party's) candidates" in the November election.

But Jordan said, "We face a tremendous challenge this year. The Republicans have targeted North Carolina. They're making a massive effort to win this election. The stakes are high: control of the United States Senate, a Democratic majority in the United States House of Representatives, the North Carolina General Assembly, even the Supreme Court of North Carolina.

"We have to work harder if we're going to stay successful as a party."

But Jordan said, "I'm feeling good about the Democratic Party. We've gone through a renewal process since 1984. We've opened our doors to new people, new ideas and new ways of doing things. We're gaining strength every day."

Saying "the state party is in better financial condition today than at any time in my memory," Jordan said

"your Democratic Party is coming back ... stronger than I have seen it in many years. It's up to you to make it work. Be enthusiastic about the Democratic Party."

North Carolina is "a state at the crossroads ... we need new directions," Jordan said.

"We have always depended heavily on manufacturing and agriculture. But those two sectors of our economy have declined because of foreign competition and the trade deficit,"

Jordan said. "That decline, in turn, has closed a lot of plants (in the state) and put a lot of farmers out of business."

At the same time, Jordan said, the state has seen growth because of high-tech and service industries. "But most of that growth has been in metropolitan areas" and many "are about to be overwhelmed by too much growth," Jordan suggested.

"This is where we need leadership from state government and partnerships between state and local government," Jordan said. "We have a new challenge. I would like to see our state and local governments sit down together and come up with a 10-year plan for financing and building the public services we need to support quality growth throughout our state — good roads, good airports, good water and sewer services, and most important of all, good schools.

Tremor Shakes South

By The Associated Press

A minor earthquake alarmed residents who heard "a thunder type of noise" and shook northeastern Georgia and northwestern South Carolina early today, but no damage or injuries were reported.

Between 6:30 a.m. and 6:35 a.m., many residents in South Carolina's Oconee County felt the tremor and a noise that sounded like thunder, said Walt Purcell, Oconee emergency preparedness director.

"We thought at first, it might be an explosion, but we're pretty sure now that it was an earthquake," Purcell said.

Purcell said many residents have called authorities about the earthquake, but he cautioned people not to worry. "There's no reason to panic. It was not a major earthquake by any means. It lasted only two to three seconds."

The tremor measured between 3 and 3.5 on the Richter scale according to reports from Marv Carlson, a geophysicist with the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo., and Tim Long, professor of seismology at Georgia Tech.

"That measurement is about the smallest you can feel," Long said.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Earthquake of 3.5 on the Richter scale can cause slight damage in the local area.

Today's tremor was centered 30 miles west of Greenville, S.C., near the Georgia-South Carolina line, Carlson said.

Official Count Of Votes Gives Marcos Early Lead

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand E. Marcos took an early lead over challenger Corason Aquino today in the official canvass by the National Assembly of last week's presidential election.

In a brief television appearance, Marcos deplored the violence that has marked the election, and pledged to "honor, without reservations, the people's verdict at the polls and to extend our hand in conciliation to those who have contested the election with us."

Mrs. Aquino, who has claimed victory, requested that Marcos step down until the election is resolved, to "diffuse some of the swelling political anger in our country."

"He is presently perceived at home and abroad as having unfairly deployed the full resources of the state to snatch victory at any cost," the 53-year-old challenger said.

There have been many charges of widespread fraud and voter intimidation, and the government says at least 86 people died in election violence. A spokesman for Mrs. Aquino said a campaign coordinator from her home province was killed early today.

Four hours into the count, Marcos led by 3,758,013 votes to 3,140,290, or 54.5 percent to 45.5 percent — a margin that has held steady since the counting began earlier in the day. Marcos' vice presidential running mate, Assemblyman Arturo Tolentino, was leading opposition candidate Salvador Laurel.

The majority of tally sheets were found to be defective in some way. Assembly Speaker Nicanor Yniguez said Wednesday that no proclamation of a winner would be made until questions about the ballots were resolved.

Mrs. Aquino's followers say Marcos probably will win the official tally because his New Society Movement party has a two-thirds majority in the 190-member assembly.

Marcos, 68, called the election 16 months early to demonstrate popular support for his government.

Stress Changing Farmers' Lives

BY DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

As many as 10,000 North Carolina farmers and their families will leave the industry before the next planting season while many others will continue to struggle to make ends meet, an agriculture extension official says.

"Eight to 13 percent of the state's growers will be leaving the industry this growing season," said Jan Lloyd, family resource management specialist of the North Carolina Extension Service.

Speaking at a workshop for ministers and counselors on agricultural stress Wednesday at the Pitt County Office Building, Ms. Lloyd discussed various problems farmers face.

"Most of the problems these farmers face concerns the availability and management of money," she said. "They've got to cover food costs and meet bills."

While local ministers are asked to counsel those farmers who have made the difficult decision to give up their farms, Ms. Lloyd reminded the clergymen to work with those who plan to stick with it.

"These problems are not going to go away," she said. "We have to look at those who have been forced to leave and those who are going to stay."

Most of the problems faced by the growers involves making decisions that have a far-reaching impact.

"They are making major, life-shaking decisions," Ms. Lloyd said. "Sometimes, when dealing with the decision-making process, there is no good solution. It involves consciously choosing the least bad decision."

Ms. Lloyd said it is important for the ministers and counselors to help farmers clarify their problems.

When it comes to economic decision-making, "some people have trouble sorting out their problems," she said. "It is important to help families make informed decisions."

The more than 25 ministers and counselors who attended were asked to just be there for the farmers who need a place to talk.

"Stress can be relieved just by simple discussions," Ms. Lloyd said. "Listening in a non-judgmental way and responding to their feelings can be a great help."

However, Ms. Lloyd said getting growers to recognize their stress and problems is not an easy task.

PACTOLUS — Farmers should keep family members abreast of their financial situations and find ways to alleviate stress that could create health problems, an agriculture extension official says.

"Instead of having the constant worry that creates stress, farmers should find someone to talk with," said Jan Lloyd, family resource management specialist of the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service. "It's also important to communicate with their kids because they worry more if they don't know the situation."

Ms. Lloyd met with area farmers Wednesday night at a workshop at Pactolus Elementary School to discuss their problems and possible solutions. The growers were warned of the symptoms of stress, which can lead to serious health problems.

Arabs Seek U.N. Special Meeting

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran claimed today that its soldiers were advancing north along the highway from the oil port of Faw to Basra, Iraq's second-largest city, and both sides accused the other of using chemical weapons.

Arab foreign ministers meeting in the Iraqi capital Baghdad called for an urgent meeting of the U.N. Security Council to discuss "Iran's new extensive military aggression against ... Iraq."

Iran claimed Wednesday that its soldiers pushing into southeastern Iraq were within eyesight of Kuwait.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said 17 Iranian soldiers died from chemical weapon poisoning "while unconfirmed reports say that 1,500 more" have been injured.

Iraqi Information Minister Latif Nsayef Jassem denied Iraq had used chemical weapons, countercharging that Iran did so late Wednesday and early today. "This criminal act will not go unpunished," Jassem was quoted as saying by the official Iraq News Agency.

Ali Akbar Velayati, the Iranian foreign minister, criticized the United Nations and Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar for their "inaction vis-a-vis the deployment of chemical weapons by Iraq" the Iranian news agency said.

It quoted a separate Foreign Ministry statement as saying the United Nations was asked to dispatch a team to the battlefield to establish whether chemical weapons were being used.

A spokesman for Iran's military headquarters was quoted as saying Iraq has been shelling the battle zones in the vicinity of Faw for two days "with chemical weapons consisting of mustard and nerve gases and also cyanide derivatives."

The news agency quoted the spokesman as saying the Iraqi chemical shelling was concentrated "mainly over palm groves in the liberated port city of Faw and along the Faw-Basra highway, as well as the western bank of the Arvand River."

Arvand is the Iranian name for the Shatt al-Arab waterway forming the border between the two countries, who have been at war for almost 5½ years.

Kids Get 'Correspondence Course' To Aid Creatively

By SANDY BROWN
 Brainerd Daily Dispatch
 BRAINERD, Minn. (AP) — "Kids need to use their imaginations more," said Tink Miller, who has two children and a business devoted to helping children think creatively. Last August Tink and a friend, Sari Mogel, started "Pencil Pals," a correspondence service for youngsters. For a yearly fee, a child receives a personalized, handwritten letter once a month for 12 months, along with a set of Pencil Pals stationery. The chatty letters are based on the child's application form, which details his or her background and experiences. They may even be addressed to children and their constant companions, such as Cabbage Patch dolls. And the letters, "ghost-written" by Tink or Sari, are usually signed by such non-human entities as dogs or dolls. Children are encouraged, but not forced, to write back. In a recent interview at the Pencil Pals headquarters in Brainerd, Tink and Sari talked enthusiastically about their new enterprise. They said they had "learned how to get started" from the Small Business programs staff at the Brainerd Area Vocational Technical Institute. Both emphasized the need for children to receive mail. "Before my kids could read, I gave one all the mail addressed to 'Box-holder' and the other all the mail addressed to 'Occupant,'" Tink said. "We flipped for 'Resident.'" Sari believes Pencil Pals is unique. "There are pen pal services around the world, but I've never heard of anyone like us," she said. She noted that the service is "not only entertainment, but educational — they (the children) have to read." A relationship between the writers and the children will build over the years, Sari said. "Letter writing will come easier. Each letter will be personal. We won't say, 'Dear Blank, how's your blank?'" "We'll try to write to them on their own level without being patronizing." If children write back, "then we did what we set out to do." Tink designed the Pencil Pals logo. An art school friend of hers, Linda Tingbald of St. Cloud, created the happy animal characters that appear on the stationery. Pencil Pals has its own advertisement brochure. Its models are Tink's two children, Bobbi Jo and Troy. Here's an excerpt from the sample letter printed in the brochure: "Dear Troy and Corky, Hello! I'm your new Pencil Pal. My name is Bongo. I am a Brittany spaniel. Are you a hunting dog? I'm not yet, but my master might send me to special duck hunting school. "What do you and Troy like to do together? Do you play outside? I play Frisbee very well." Sari credits Tink with having the "business mind" in the operation. A Duluth native, Tink moved to Brainerd in 1974. She received art training at the Staples Technical Institute. She also worked as a hospital emergency medical technician, a matron for the Staples Police Department, a jailer for Crow Wing County, and as a grocery and liquor store manager. "I've worn a lot of hats," she said. Sari, originally from St. Paul, attended Brown Institute in Minneapolis to study broadcasting. She was a radio announcer for six years at stations all around the country, most recently at WJJY and KLIZ in Brainerd. The two are hoping their combined talents in art, business and media will make the business fly. They even have visions of expanding the correspondence business to include older persons or shut-ins.

Dear Abby

Mom Worries Gun Won't Defend Kids Against Fear

DEAR ABBY: We live in a nice middle-class area of Los Angeles. Our neighborhood would not be considered dangerous by anyone's definition. Whenever our doorbell rings after nightfall, my husband gets his gun before going to answer it. The front door has a peephole so we can see who's at the door. We also have a dead-bolt securely locking the door so it can't be forced open. I contend that with the peephole and dead-bolt, there is no reason for taking a gun to the door. If my husband feels uncomfortable opening the door to strangers, which is understandable, he should simply not open it. What are your thoughts concerning this, Abby? I am especially concerned about the message this sends to our children who are 8, 6 and 3. I want them to be cautious, but not to feel that this world is such a dangerous, threatening place. DEAR READERS: Tomorrow is St. Valentine's Day, so be a sweetheart and call someone you love and say, "I love you." (Make two or three calls. Who says you can't love more than one person — in different ways, of course?) Go through your closets and give all those clothes you've been saving until you lose 10 pounds to your favorite charity. Call someone who's lonely and say, "I'm thinking of you." Or better yet, say, "I'll be over tomorrow to take you to lunch ... or run some errands ... or give you a ride." Visit a sick friend. Say a prayer. Donate some blood. Adopt a pet. Will your eyes, your kidneys and all your usable organs to someone who can use them after you're gone. Forgive an enemy. Hug your teen-ager. Write a fan letter. Listen to a bore. Pay your doctor. Tell your parents you think they're wonderful. Spay your dog. Neuter your cat. Quit smoking. Drive carefully. If you're walking, watch where you're going. And don't wait until next year to be a sweetheart again. Love, ABBY

Colder weather turns our thoughts to logs crackling in a fireplace. But along with that warmth comes soot and stains. The nice thing is that soot and stains are relatively easy to remove from fireplace facings. First, you'll need to scrub the fireplace facing with strong soap and water. And you'll probably need to use a stiff brush for brick or rough textured areas. After scrubbing, rinse the facing thoroughly with clear water. If stains and soot still persist, you may need to use a mild acid bleach, such as vinegar or acetic acid. Again, apply the bleach with a stiff brush. And again, be sure to rinse the facing with water after scrubbing. If stains are really stubborn, you may need to scrub them with a hydrochloric acid and water solution. To prepare it, mix one part hydrochloric acid to 10 parts of water. After scrubbing, rinse immediately with water. There are a couple of cautions. Whenever you use hydrochloric acid and water solution — wear rubber gloves to protect your hands. And never use the acid solution on stone work. To prevent discoloring of brick, you might also want to check the hydrochloric acid solution on a small, inconspicuous place before you scrub the entire facing.

Miss Martha, Extraordinary Clothier For Over 50 Years

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Martha Phillips — or Miss Martha, as she is known — would like to expand her $25 million-a-year business of dressing rich matrons.

She is trying to attract a younger clientele, she toys with the idea of going into couture, she thinks of opening her plush, chandeliered shops in more of the nation's major cities.

Many things seem possible to the 77-year-old woman, who started her company during the Depression, and managed to sell nothing under $100, even then.

"I was very determined, period," says the chairman of Martha Inc.

Although times were hard, she said, she was confident that "if it was beautiful, I could sell it."

And sell she did. Her clients include the likes of socialites Brooke Astor and Mrs. Walter Annenberg.

Miss Martha has been described as a wearer of "serious" jewelry.

During a recent interview, held in a peach-colored dressing room at her intimidating Park Avenue salon, she wore a humongous emerald ring, crystal and diamond earrings, with a matching large bangle.

Also serious was her designer outfit, her hairdo — champagne blond, her make-up, her manicure.

Her talent has been encouraging and befriending designers. She claims among her discoveries: Valentino, Mary McFadden, and David and Elizabeth Emanuel, designers of Princess Diana's wedding dress.

A Brooklyn native, Miss Martha went to work in the business at the age of 8, selling lace blouses at her father's store. She had to stand on a crate behind the counter in the shop, which sold tailored suits and riding clothes.

Miss Martha was 18 when she married Phillip R. Phillips, a ready-to-wear maker, and traveled with him on business trips to Europe. She bore a son and a daughter.

But the traditional route ended there.

"I grew up knowing I couldn't sit around and be entertained for lunch and go to parties in the afternoon. I thought, I have to do something," she said.

"All my friends said, 'Martha, you have to go into (the fashion) business. You always look so perfect, so beautiful,'" she said.

In 1934, she rented space on the 12th floor of a building on Madison Avenue.

"My husband was very furious with me," she said. "He said, 'If you want to, go into business with me.' I said, 'No, I want to do it myself.' I was really possessed with the idea."

She said she ran a red runner from the elevator to the door of her shop and opened for business.

"We grew and grew," she said. "My husband finally conceded that I was doing so well."

She sold expensive clothes and attracted prominent women from the start.

In 1945, she opened a store in Palm Beach, Fla. She takes credit for creating the Palm Beach look of white, pinks and greens.

Her daughter, Lynn Manulis, joined the business in 1957, after a divorce and a career in the theatre. She currently serves as president.

Miss Martha added a shop in Bal Harbor, Fla., in 1965, and moved to her Park Avenue salon in 1966.

Two years ago, she opened another New York shop in Trump Tower on Fifth Avenue to cater to younger women and tourists.

Martha Inc.'s annual sales total about $25 million, Miss Martha says. She refuses to discuss profits, but she does confirm that she marks up American goods 100 percent and imported ones 150 percent.

Ten percent of her merchandise carries the Martha label and she holds sales — she says she hates that word — twice a year.

Miss Martha's road has had its bumps.

She still hasn't forgotten being snubbed by the manager of a ritzy New York hotel, where she dreamed of having a shop, and eventually did for a while.

"He said, 'It (Martha Phillips) doesn't sound like Bergdorf Goodman, does it?' I said, 'No.' He said, 'We need somebody with a name and you don't have the name,'" she recalled. "I said, 'You will know and will hear of that name.'"

The Trump Tower shop wasn't an instant success, either.

"In the beginning, it was very difficult. We opened with the thought of getting a younger clientele. I really wanted to do something fantastic with the '80s," she said. "Of course, I felt Martha has a great name and I was probably expecting it too soon. It takes a couple of years."

Back at her Park Avenue salon, which includes such touches as matching tulips and a uniformed guard-dorman, customers spend an average $1,500 per visit, she says.

"The clients who come to us really expect to come in and spend that kind of money," Miss Martha says.

"We sell very interesting things starting at $200," she says.

Behind the mirrored scene, fitters, pressers and maids keep the goods in tip-top shape.

Some clients come from far away. The sales staff, which includes longtime employees, specializes in personal attention.

"We know what our clients want. I know where they go, what they do. I like to make them look good," Miss Martha said.

One customer is financier Saul Steinberg's wife. She isn't a super-big spender, Miss Martha says. "But he says, 'Buy everything.' He wants her to look beautiful."

Contemplating the future, Miss Martha said, "Maybe we should go into couture. We really have the clients for that kind of merchandise."

"We'd like to have many more stores with the name of Martha in major cities," she added.

Miss Martha reportedly has been approached several times about selling the business. But she would like it to remain in the family.

Her daughter's son, Andrew Burnstine, serves as vice president.

Miss Martha's son, Herbert Phillips, is an engineer. Her husband died in 1981.

Miss Martha spends about half her time in New York, half in Florida. She also travels to Europe to attend major fashion shows.

In her leisure time, she goes to spas to relax, and be pampered.

But Martha Inc. stays on her mind.

"The wheels keep turning in my head. At home, I have a pad on my night table. I can get up in the middle of the night to sketch something," Miss Martha says.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

When the lists of trends proclaiming what will be "in" and "out" in 1986 were published, I feverishly searched on the "out" list for shoulder pads.

Like death, taxes and Christmas fruitcakes, they are still with us.

Why? I have never talked with anyone personally who feels that shoulder pads on women serve any real purpose. There was one salesperson who said, "The larger your shoulder pads, the smaller your waist looks." (She's the same fool who said, "This knit dress will look better on you than it does on the hanger.")

The other day I had on a blouse with shoulder pads which I jammed in under a jacket with shoulder pads, which finally went under a coat with shoulder pads. When I climbed in the car, I looked like a headless driver.

Why don't I remove them? I'm glad you asked that question. One of several things happen when you take out a shoulder pad. First, the cuffs fall to below your knees and, second, your entire body takes on a consumptive look that makes people want to give a telethon for you. The blouse or jacket was specifically designed to make you look like a Spanish general/Joan Crawford/Dan Marino/space needle/someone who pumped iron and it backed up.

I find myself fiddling with shoulder pads all the time, trying to rearrange them and maintain their balance. At a gathering recently, someone pinned my name tag on one. Out of three possible targets, that's the one they picked. It was humiliating.

Designers have tried before to pad women when they are perfectly capable of growing their own. Some of their more dismal failures were hip pads in suit jackets and stomach pads for the six women in this country who want to gain weight. It was not a fashion that was before its time. It will never have a time.

A few years ago, shoulder pads for men became "in." They flourished around the time I was dating my husband. I thought I was marrying Joe Namath. All he needed was a green 12 on his back. At the wedding, he took off his coat and he was Woody Allen. About that time truth in packaging was gaining favor and large shoulder pads for men went out.

Sometimes when I look at a big drawer I have filled with 80 or 90 shoulder pads (whatever is divisible by two) — I fantasize about what will happen to them when they are found a hundred years from now. I can see them at a space station satellite garage sale with little robots picking over them and wondering what the previous civilization used them for. Were they small disks that brought in other planets? Hairpieces in West Los Angeles? Cellulite transplants?

They wouldn't believe the truth if we told them.

Legislative Ethics Being Considered

Farm Loans

Guidelines for issuance of loans by the Farmers Home Administration are like no other. They were intended in the beginning to be a last resort for farmers whose debts had become so overwhelming they had no place else to turn.

In the first half of 1985 the agency granted $763 million in new loans to borrowers who already were technically insolvent. Overall, its loan portfolio is said to include borrowers 20 percent of whom owe more than they have in assets. But even that did not prevent some of them receiving further loans from FHMA. A study revealed some 37,000 borrowers have made no repayments for over three years.

The picture is so bleak that Sen. Jesse Helms has suggested the plug be pulled on the more hopeless cases. Other members of the Senate Agriculture Committee are more cautious, saying foreclosures or voluntary liquidations could devastate already-reeling farm communities and further depress sagging land values...which would be another body-blow to those heavy borrowers hanging on to their farms with more hope than assets. The General Accounting Office says perhaps 27,000 (maybe more) of the borrowers will fail. One particularly grim aspect to that is the bulk of those long-delinquent loans are in the Southern states.

The dilemma facing FHMA is that of fulfilling its role of trying to rescue high-risk farmers and at the same time protect the government's (and taxpayers') financial interests. Somewhere in the course of time the agency is going to have to accept the fact there are farmers who cannot succeed just as there are business enterprises that cannot succeed.

It is not something that can be wholly determined by computer print-outs. A case-by-case survey by experienced agents actually visiting high risk operations and personally determining whether or not a particular borrower's plight can be salvaged. That would take time, but it is also the most logical step for determining action appropriate to each circumstance.

Not only are millions of dollars at risk, but the program as a whole.

Deliberate Speed

Environmentalists frequently play the gadfly role trying to assure preservation of the good things in our world for generations to come. A prime example might be seen in their complaints North Carolina is not moving fast enough to acquire thousands more acres of land to protect and complete the state parks system. The program was approved in '85 and some tracts have been acquired; negotiations are underway for others.

While state officials respond they are moving as rapidly as they can, our watchdogs insist it isn't good enough... that some foot-dragging is going on.

Most of us are aware acquiring large segments of land, often owned by diverse interests is a slow process. We see it in negotiation for road rights of way. Businesses and developers share the experience, too.

We appreciate the Sierra Club's concern and that of the North Carolina Conservation Council. They keep officialdom on their collective toes seeking resolutions to problems. Too, the public is reminded anew that large projects are in the works.

So our environmentalists are fulfilling their obligation and role in pushing for haste; but haste for the sake of haste carries with it costly risks. Rather, it seems, the ideal pace should be one of all deliberate speed.

Getting Involved Not Popular

WASHINGTON — Jogging at noon along a quiet street recently, a female newcomer to this city encountered one of those living nightmares that could make one give up exercise forever: she was accosted by a man who had every in-intention of raping her. Incidents like this happen every day in America's big cities. Luckily, this one had a happy ending. After she successfully fended off her attacker for 10 minutes, D.C.'s finest arrived and arrested him. Unfortunately, when she later notified the police of her intention to file charges, they had, in line with department policy, already released him.

While miffed by that action, his victim had even more reason to be furious. By her recollection, at least five cars had passed the scene while the assault was in progress. No driver had even paused to give the attacker reason to reconsider his efforts. Had not an observant couple in a nearby townhouse finally dialed 911, in fact, the incident might have had an even worse outcome.

What was striking was that it all took place in one of the city's more comfortable sections, where residents are already hypersensitive about crime and the cops are ubiquitous. No doubt the passersby felt more sympathy for the innocent victim than for the would-be rapist, whom the police even admitted was drug-crazed at the time of the incident. But even though they were on their own territory and enjoyed safety in numbers, they sidestepped the scene like so many Germans during the Holocaust.

Experience has tended to foster the "don't-get-involved syndrome." Many witnesses naturally figure that there's more to lose than gain from intervening in or reporting a crime.

There's the fear of retribution and devoting unforeseen hours to testimony. And valiant rescuers have been shot or knifed trying to break up a mugging. Who needs that?

Yet, as a Justice Department study concluded recently, only 60 percent of all aggravated assaults are ever reported to the police. For rapes, the frequency is less than half. The demographic analysis of those who do report such crimes contains some illuminating statistics, too. For example, victims with family incomes of $10,000 or less are much more likely to report an aggravated assault than those from the $30,000-plus bracket, and college graduates are no more disposed to do so than people with only elementary educations.

Of those aggravated assaults that go unreported, the victims in about 20 percent simply don't believe the crime is sufficiently important for police consideration; roughly one-third want to keep the incident a private or personal matter.

But nearly one in 10 unreported aggravated assaults, and one in seven rapes, goes unreported by the victim for resignation that the police won't do anything about it. In about 5 percent of the unreported rapes and aggravated assaults, potential reprisals are the underlying motivation.

RALEIGH — The Study Commission on Legislative Ethics faced its first opportunity to fold under the pressure of self interest at its last meeting and guess what? It didn't.

The commission could have bailed out and taken a weak stand on the question of lobbying by the professional partners of legislators. Although members of the committee wavered a bit during their discussion of the issue, in the end they voted to recommend a tough new statute to the full assembly. The proposal will state that no one in a business partnership with a legislator can work as a registered lobbyist at the General Assembly. Such a change in the law should, in combination with the statutes regulating lobbyists, effectively bar any legislator's business partner from accepting money for lobbying. It will not, of course, bar that partner from exercising his or her own constitutional right to petition the legislature on matters of personal concern. The commission had appeared ready to endorse just such a recommendation after its December meeting. Members asked commission counsel Terry Sullivan to bring some draft legislation before them at their January meeting.

But Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, co-chairman of the committee, opened that second meeting with discouraging words. Rauch, who had favored the idea of banning partners from lobbying, said he didn't know how it could be done fairly. He said it bothered him that he could enter into a small business venture with someone and that person would then be barred from lobbying on other, non-related, matters.

Rep. Larry Justus, R-Henderson, concurred and suggested that maybe a more limited statute should be considered. Rauch suggested that when a lobbyist and a legislator are partners, the legislator not vote on issues on which his partner is lobbying. Justus said maybe the lobbyist-partner should be barred only from lobbying on issues which affect the partnership.

The question can be debated outside of the realm of personalities because no legislator currently has a business partner who is a registered lobbyist. But the situation has existed in the past, most recently in 1983. Ex-Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, had a law partner, Hugh Stevens, who lobbied for a number of concerns including the N.C. Press Association.

Rep. Casper Holroyd, D-Wake, told the commission he didn't want to see it retreat from the tough stand it had indicated a willingness to take. "This is an area that is black and white," he said. People ought not to be lobbying if their business partners are legislators, he said. Other states banned such activity, he said, and North Carolina ought to join them. His motion was approved unanimously.

The commission had had to choose one of two courses to take. The first would have put the onus on the legislator to separate himself from a partnership in which a partner was a registered lobbyist. That would have been a major burden for legislators.

The second choice, the one chosen by the commission, bars partners of legislators from lobbying. It puts the onus on them.

As Holroyd said in making his motion, "If I run for the General Assembly, that partner has to realize that he or she cannot come here" to lobby.

The commission could have taken a stand that would have been easier on lobbyists or easier on legislators. In the end, it chose to take the stand that will best enhance public confidence in the legislative process. It might keep some folks out of the legislature. But, in a state of six million people, there are a lot of qualified people willing to serve.

Secret Diplomacy In The Middle East

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has fallen back on secret, step-by-step diplomacy to try to get Mideast peace talks started in 1986.

The outlook may be only marginally brighter than last year when American, Egyptian and Jordanian leaders all confidently predicted negotiations would be started, but turned out to be wrong.

This year's effort is different. It involves low-profile efforts by Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy and his deputy, Watt Cleverius, modest claims of "incremental progress" and virtually no public announcements about their meetings and the details of their agenda.

Murphy, a tireless envoy, met separately recently in Europe with King Hussein of Jordan and Shimon Peres of Israel, two of the three key players in the Middle East.

The third, Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, is being kept abreast of developments by Hussein, while Cleverius and other U.S. diplomats meet regularly with Palestinians in the region.

Apparently, the Reagan administration is remaining true to the U.S. pledge to Israel not to deal with the PLO until it accepts the legitimacy of Israel and U.N. Security Council resolutions calling for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. Arafat, however, retains a veto over the Palestinians who would sit across the negotiating table from Israel as part of a joint delegation of Jordanians.

The 1986 U.S. approach is reminiscent of the strategy former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger used to promote partial Israeli withdrawals from the Sinai and the Golan Heights a decade ago. But Kissinger was secretive only about the details of the negotiations.

He shuffled around the Middle East with flare and publicity. Reporters flew with him and helped focus the world's attention on his exploits.

High-profile performances by Anwar Sadat of Egypt, Menachem Begin of Israel and President Carter led to the biggest breakthrough in the 38-year Arab-Israeli dispute.

First, Sadat stunned the world by going to Jerusalem in 1977 to say he was ready for peace with the Jewish state. Begin, the Israeli prime minister, accepted the late Egyptian president's challenge and when their efforts foundered, Carter intervened to save the day with his Camp David talks and a trip to the region.

Last May, Secretary of State George Shultz tested the highwire with his own on-site diplomacy after seeing Hussein in Aqaba and Peres in Jerusalem. Shultz reported he had found "a genuine sense of movement."

But as the year wore on, it became clear the issues of Palestinian representation and a proper forum for peace talks could not be resolved.

Israel simply refuses to sit down with Palestinians linked to the PLO or to permit the Soviet Union, with which it has no relations, to play a key role in the negotiations. Hussein and Arafat insisted on both conditions.

The question now is whether Murphy and the other American diplomats can bridge the differences or come close enough to get peace talks started.

In a statement Tuesday to a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee, Murphy said he had made "progress to clear the underbrush to reveal the critical obstacles blocking our path."

Some frustrated, head-scratching subcommittee members suggested either they were not being told much about the details or possibly not much had transpired.

Pending is an administration arms package for Jordan that includes 40 advanced jet fighter planes and mobile missiles. Faced with a likely congressional veto, the administration withdrew the purchase last year when opponents said they wanted more proof that Hussein was willing to hold peace talks with Israel.

Murphy made another pitch for the sale before the subcommittee, and the administration is preparing to ask Congress for $135 million in military and economic assistance to Jordan — an increase of nearly 50 percent over this year.

Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., the subcommittee chairman, indicated Congress will have to know more about Jordan's intentions before going ahead.

Strength For Today

What can we be trained to do? Almost anything. But to say that we can do anything we want is inaccurate. We all have limitations arising from our inherited capacities and our environment. Nevertheless, opportunities for diversified training can greatly expand our capacities, and there has never been a time when greater opportunities for training were offered than right now. For example, organizations for training programmers in that marvel of marvels — the computer — are being set up all over the country, and people who thought their abilities were quite ordinary have been amazed at what they can accomplish through this new medium.

Young people who investigate these opportunities and act upon them are wise and will gain great self-fulfillment. Even at middle-age — and sometimes later — skills can be acquired and (without trying to make a rhyme), every acquired skill brings a thrill.

Army Asks Help In Curbing Costs Of Moving Gls

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — After vastly underestimating overpayments for shipments of military household goods, the Army now acknowledges a burgeoning problem and has asked other agencies for help.

An internal Army document, obtained by The Associated Press, said excessive payments to private firms have topped $4.5 million but cautioned the figure will go higher.

The Army told the AP last month that the problem was far smaller and was contained.

Both Army and civilian federal officials confirmed Wednesday the military service has called in its own criminal investigators, the Justice Department and federal auditors to deal with the escalating problem.

The General Services Administration was asked to try to recover the exorbitant payments from the six firms that received them, but the agency said it has made no decision.

The overpayments were triggered when the Army selected companies that were among the highest bidders for shipments of military goods from around the globe to the Washington, D.C., area.

The Army is supposed to pick the companies offering the lowest cost, according to Col. George Kaine, spokesman for the Military Traffic Management Command, which handles worldwide shipments of goods for all servicemen.

If the cheapest firms can't handle the job, the next lowest bidders should get the business, he said.

While refusing to specify the allegations against the firms, Kaine said the six companies under investigation are to blame — and they have temporarily been suspended from handling shipments into the Washington area. They can appeal to an Army review board.

Several company officials said in interviews that the Army was trying to make them scapegoats for mistakes made by military shipping clerks, who chose the firms that arranged the moves.

"They could have rejected my rate but they didn't. Now they're upset about something they did wrong," said Todd Bunker, manager of the international division of Pioneer Van Lines Inc. of Edmonds, Wash. His firm is among the six suspended.

The Army memo said the overpayments occurred in 731 shipments from "20 different origin rates areas" to the Washington, D.C., area from April 1, 1984, through Sept. 30, 1985. Seventy-seven percent of the shipments were from West Germany.

Col. Kaine told the AP last month, "It looks like a booking clerk (in Frankfurt) made a mistake. We don't see any worldwide problem. We have put a stop to it."

On Wednesday he said, "It is obvious that we appear to have similar problems from other points of origin as well as Germany. The investigation continues."

The memo said the $4.5 million overpayment figure "is considered understated at this time" because it does not include shipments that began last Oct. 1. They are not yet entered in the traffic command's computer.

Joseph Cosimano, a top official of GSA's Office of Transportation Audits, confirmed that he met Tuesday with Army officials and General Accounting Office representatives to discuss what action to take on the civil side of the investigation.

Cosimano said the Army "suggested it was not the Army's mistake, but was a deliberate practice on the part of the companies" to obtain highly profitable shipments. He added, "We are looking at what we can do, how we can do it and when we can do it."

Company officials said in interviews that Defense Department rules require them to take any military shipments offered, or face suspension from all Pentagon business.

But Kaine said the firms still could inform the Army of a problem.

Meanwhile, Donna Lauriello, a spokeswoman for the Army's Criminal Investigation Division, said CID investigators "are taking a look at it and will make a decision shortly on how to proceed with the case. We've gone to the Justice Department and asked them to look at it."

Army computer records yielded these examples of excessive payments in moves to Washington:

—A Panama-Washington shipment that cost $6,594 compared to the lowest possible price of $1,230.

—A shipment from Japan that cost $2,848 instead of a possible $823.

—A move from South Korea last July which cost $3,124 but could have cost $817.

—Goods shipped from Frankfurt at a cost of $35,327 that should have cost $2,978. Another shipment on the same route cost $32,170 but could have been arranged for $3,063.

The temporarily suspended firms are AA Sound Forwarders Inc. of Bothell, Wash.; Alpine Forwarders Inc. of Edmonds, Wash.; American Red Ball Transit Co. of Indianapolis; and three other Edmonds firms: Emerald City International Van Line Inc., Emerald City International Corp., and Pioneer.

RETURNS FOR TRIAL — Andrija Artukovic, 86, known in Yugoslavia as "the butcher of the Balkans" for his alleged role in the deaths of 700,000 people during World War II, is carried off a plane upon his arrival in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, on Wednesday. He has been extradited from the United States to face trial for his conduct during the war. (AP Laserphoto)

Yugoslavia Says Alleged Nazi Able To Stand Trial

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Andrija Artukovic, the 86-year-old man accused of complicity in the deaths of 700,000 people during World War II, is healthy enough to stand trial, a justice official said today.

Artukovic, who had to be carried on a stretcher from the plane that brought him from the United States, faces penalties ranging from five years in prison to death by firing squad if convicted, said Predrag Matovic, assistant federal secretary of justice.

Matovic declined to say when Artukovic's trial would begin or how long it could last.

Artukovic, in failing health, was flown here Wednesday from the United States, 36 years after Yugoslavia initiated an extradition request for the man known as "the Butcher of the Balkans." He is legally blind and is said to suffer from heart trouble and senility.

Matovic refused to say where Artukovic was being held, but told reporters at a news conference that "he is detained in conditions which guarantee his health will not deteriorate."

"His health condition permits conducting of the proceedings," Matovic said.

The government claims that Artukovic, who was Interior Minister in the Nazi puppet state of Croatia, presided over the killing of hundreds of thousands of Jews, gypsies, intellectuals and other people during Nazi rule in Croatia, which is part of Yugoslavia. Most of the victims died in the Jasenovac concentration camp, many slaughtered with sledgehammers and knives.

Artukovic has denied committing war crimes. Justice William Rehnquist of the U.S. Supreme Court denied a final application for a stay of extradition Tuesday.

Allan A. Ryan Jr., director of the Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations when it reopened the case in 1979, said Wednesday: "Artukovic is the highest-ranking Nazi war criminal ever to come to this country ... not a death camp guard killing people one by one. He was in charge of the secret police. He was in charge of the death camps."

Tanjug, the official news agency, said the Zagreb district court would conduct "regular criminal proceedings" at an unannounced date against Artukovic for "crimes committed during World War II against peoples of Yugoslavia."

Artukovic's arrival was not announced in advance, despite the decades-old campaign to have him sent back for trial.

The extended legal proceedings in the United States have irked officials here, and the case came up during a meeting between U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Yugoslav leaders in December.

Artukovic, arrested Nov. 14, 1984, at his home in Seal Beach, Calif., recently had been held in a prison medical facility at Springfield, Mo. U.S. federal authorities have argued the case in Los Angeles, Washington and elsewhere.

His attorneys contended that Yugoslavia's communist government wanted him for political reasons.

Artukovic fled Yugoslavia on May 5, 1945, and arrived in the United States with a false passport bearing the name of Alojz Anic. Yugoslavia declared him a war criminal in 1946.

Alleged Robbery Leader Captured

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Only one suspect remains at large in a $1.6 million armored car robbery that left a Brink's guard and two police officers dead, the FBI said after New York detectives capped a three-year, nationwide manhunt by arresting the alleged ringleader.

Mutulu Shakur, 35, who had been on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List since 1982, was arrested on a street corner Tuesday night when he tried to flee two New York City officers who "popped him with a flying tackle," said Richard Bretzing, head of the FBI's Los Angeles office.

The detectives had been tracking Shakur in Los Angeles for about a month, Bretzing said Wednesday. With Shakur's arrest, authorities have in custody six of the seven radicals accused in the $1.6 million robbery of a Brink's armored car in Nanuet, N.Y., in October 1981.

Still at large is Cheri Laverne Dalton, 35, who has used the aliases Nahamda Abiodum, Nahanda Obafemi, Cheri Cotton and the nickname Flame, Bretzing said. The others, including three white radicals and a former Black Panther, were captured after the holdup.

Shakur was being held at the West Los Angeles police station pending a detention and bail hearing in federal court Tuesday. He was charged in a 1982 federal warrant with bank robbery, conspiracy to commit bank robbery and racketeering. No state charges ever were filed against him.

Shakur has ties with several radical groups, including the Black Revolutionary Movement, the Red Guerrilla Resistance and the May 19th Movement, said Bretzing, who at the time of the robbery was with the FBI in New York. He founded a New York City health clinic called the Black Acupuncture Association of North America, which authorities said was a front for radical activities.

In 1982, Shakur was indicted with three other people on charges he helped Joanne Chesimard, a former leader of the Black Liberation Army, escape in 1979 from a New Jersey prison. He also was indicted in the 1976 attempted robbery of an armored car in Pittsburgh and a $521,000 armored car holdup in New York City in 1980.

About a dozen members of a group calling itself the New African People's Organization protested Wednesday outside the West Los Angeles police station. Kamal Hassan, a spokesman for the group, said Shakur had been set upon by FBI agents because he was a black activist providing medical care and support to black nationalists.

New York City Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward was attending a meeting in San Diego but flew to Los Angeles for Wednesday's news conference announcing the arrest. "I think we've got them on the run and we can keep them there," he said of a police crackdown on terrorists.

A Brink's guard was killed and two others wounded in the robbery.

Later, two Nyack police officers were killed and one wounded when people poured out of the back of their getaway van, firing automatic weapons, Bretzing said.

FmHA Setting Up New Interest Plan

Related story on page 22

AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new interest reduction plan ordered by Congress is being set up by the Farmers Home Administration to help farmers lower their loan payments to commercial banks.

The Agriculture Department agency also began sending out letters this week to 65,303 delinquent borrowers. Most of them will get "a friendly reminder" to contact local officials about their overdue loans, the head of the agency said Wednesday.

Vance L. Clark, FmHA administrator, said much tougher letters serving notice of "intent to take adverse action" are going to four in every 10 of those tardy payers. About 27,000 borrowers are three years or more behind in payments, including 3,000 who may have fraudulently dodged their debts.

"I don't expect a lot of great, terrible things to be happening across the nation because of those mailings," Clark said. "There will be foreclosures, sure, and I think we have to prepare for some of those, but it's not the end of the world."

The mailings began Monday and are to be completed by Feb. 21, Clark said. Clark said the FmHA, often called the government's farm lender of last resort, soon will issue regulations to carry out the interest buydown program included in last year's farm bill.

Under the plan, banks that handle farm loans guaranteed by the FmHA will be able to reduce interest rates charged farmers by as much as four percentage points, with the FmHA subsidizing the bank for half the reduction.

In other words, Clark said, a bank would absorb an interest cut of as much as two percentage points and have the FmHA match its reduction. The net effect to the borrower would be an interest reduction of four percentage points.

Clark said Congress earmarked $490 million for a three-year interest buydown program, which "will be more than adequate" to take care of expected business. The buydown will be limited to FmHA borrowers as an inducement for banks to participate in the agency's guaranteed loans, he said.

The FmHA has about $28.3 billion in loans outstanding, or more than 13 percent of the nation's total farm debt of $212 billion. There are approximately 270,000 farm borrowers, including the 65,303 delinquents.

Clark said all FmHA borrowers who receive the notices should contact local offices of the agency — county supervisors — within 30 days or lose their rights to appeal future action taken against them.

"I would hope, secretly, that the word is getting out to borrowers across the nation that Farmers Home does mean business," he said. "Those are legitimate debts that need to be serviced and need to be collected."

Clark said about 3,000 of the delinquent borrowers are those who have committed or are suspected of fraud, including the illegal sale of mortgaged property, and cases of people leaving the farm, taking equipment with them and selling it later. In some instances, farmers have not reported proceeds of crop and livestock sales.

"We've got to talk to every one of those 65,000 borrowers to determine which ones are not going to make it," he said.

Support Payments Will Be Reduced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers will see 4.3 percent deductions made from government price support loans and subsidies they get for participating in the Agriculture Department's 1986 crop programs.

The deductions had been expected and will be made to carry out cuts required March 1 by the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction law. The goal is to reduce federal spending by $11.7 billion, and the USDA's share will be almost $1.3 billion.

Some USDA programs will be exempt from Gramm-Rudman, including food stamps and children's food programs. All other programs will be cut by 4.3 percent, with $823 million of the $1.3 billion total coming out of the Commodity Credit Corp., which includes USDA's price support operations.

Agriculture Secretary John R. Block said Wednesday that no reductions will be made in the rates for price support loans, purchase agreements and regular deficiency payments for 1986 crops.

Farmers get loans by using their crops as collateral and are given the option of repaying the loans and redeeming their commodities later, which is usually done when market prices rise.

The deficiency payments are direct subsidies to farmers to make up the difference between a target price and an average of the actual market prices.

Although the loan rates and target prices will not change under Gramm-Rudman, Block said "reductions of 4.3 percent will apply" to the loans and payments for 1986 crops, and to payments for certificates that farmers redeem for cash.

Both advance and final payments will be subject to the reductions, he said. Advance payments can be applied for when farmers start signing up March 3 for 1986 crop programs, including wheat and feed grains.

Iacocca Fired From Non-Paid Job On Statue's Committee

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Lee Iacocca, one of America's best-known businessmen, has been fired for only the second time in his life, and the man who did it says it was because Iacocca had a conflict-of-interest problem while heading a commission to restore the Statue of Liberty.

Iacocca is still chairman of Chrysler Corp., the company he rescued after being bounced as president of Ford Motor Co. in 1978. It's his unpaid job as chairman of the government's chief advisory committee on the Statue of Liberty restoration that he lost.

Secretary of Interior Donald P. Hodel said Wednesday he fired Iacocca because the budding author and television celebrity would not resign from the commission to concentrate on his more important, better-known and conflicting job as chief of the restoration project's fund-raising foundation.

"The secretary's statement was off the wall and in clear contradiction of the facts," Iacocca said in a statement issued in Detroit.

"I resent any inference on his part of conflict of interest. The truth is that the secretary is in conflict with his own charter. This is a grab for four years worth of contributions by the American people," Iacocca said.

He deferred further comment until a news conference today in Detroit.

Informed of the "grab" accusation, Hodel said: "It is truly incredible and suggests that perhaps Mr. Iacocca does not understand that it is the foundation of which he is chairman and chief executive officer that controls the money. ... It is obviously an agitated remark, or a remark intended to mislead others."

As head of the private Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, Iacocca has raised $231 million for the restoration of the statue and immigrant landing grounds in New York harbor.

His dismissal from the advisory commission has no effect on Iacocca's position as head of the foundation, and Hodel told reporters at a news conference he hoped Iacocca would stay there.

Iacocca was replaced as commission chairman by Armen Avedisian, a 59-year-old retired construction executive from Hinsdale, Ill. Avedisian and former Interior Undersecretary Jake Simmons were the only two other people with dual membership and both have resigned from the foundation board.

Earlier, Hodel praised Iacocca several times, saying at one point: "I know it's going to get lost on the cutting-room floor, but the fact is Mr. Iacocca has done an extraordinary job bringing to fruition one of the largest, if not the largest, public volunteer efforts in the history of this country."

"I really hoped that Mr. Iacocca would see the concerns that I had ... and would gracefully say, 'I may not like what you're doing, but I understand and we'll go forward.'" The concerns, Hodel said, arose from the fact that Iacocca as chairman of the review commission would be in a position of great influence reviewing plans for the Ellis Island restoration that Iacocca as chairman of the private foundation would be proposing.

"I really need an independent look," Hodel said.

But Iacocca has been sitting in both chairs for four years while Hodel and his predecessors did nothing.

Hodel, asked why he had not acted before, said he realized the potential conflict when he reappointed Iacocca to the chairmanship of the advisory panel in November, but did not bring it up because matters were going well.

It was only when Iacocca tried to get the other dual members — Avedisian and Simmons — to chose between one job or the other about two weeks ago that he realized he should make Iacocca himself choose one, Hodel said.

In a letter to Iacocca on Jan. 30, Hodel said "because of the key role you have played in the foundation's success to date, it seems that your continued personal attention to the affairs of the foundation must take precedence."

Iacocca, however, rejected requests that he resign from the commission when he met Hodel on Feb. 4 and again on Monday, Hodel said.

Hodel said Iacocca argued that he owed a responsibility to people who had given money to the foundation. Hodel said he pointed out to Iacocca that the auto executive was not being asked to leave the foundation, but that Iacocca did not respond directly to his point.

When Iacocca representatives "became increasingly insistent that this matter be turned around" — that is, that the secretary withdraw his request that Iacocca resign — "I felt it was important to demonstrate the department would not be bullied," Hodel said.

At Ford and Chrysler, Iacocca was known by the nickname, "The Flamethrower." Reporters aware of that reputation asked Hodel if Iacocca had lost his temper at any point. He said the Chrysler chairman was "cool throughout."

Iacocca's slight paunch and raspy voice make him among the most recognizable of all people in public life because of the many television commercials he made for Chrysler.

His use of federally guaranteed loans to make a dramatic turnaround at the dying automaker, the nation's third largest, made him a folk hero. His memoirs has been No. 1 for 67 weeks on The New York Times' non-fiction best-seller book list.

He has brushed off suggestions that he might seek the Democratic presidential nomination, but his name is sometimes mentioned.

Hodel said he told the White House two weeks ago of his intended action and got a "negative reaction" from Bob Tuttle of the personnel office. He has heard nothing since.

Iacocca's fund-raising has not been without criticism. The foundation has used the corporate-gift, product-licensing arrangements that financed the 1984 Olympics. Some companies have quarrelled over the rights to the logo.

Reagan Vacation Hit By Weather

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan escaped the snow and cold in Washington for an unusually brief California vacation — where rain and fog forced him into a rare drive to his mountaintop hideaway.

The president and his wife, Nancy, flew to California on Wednesday after stopping in St. Louis to open a campaign to keep the Senate in Republican hands in 1986. Reagan spoke at a $500-a-plate luncheon to help Christopher Bond, a popular two-term governor, in his bid for a Senate seat being vacated by Democrat Thomas Eagleton.

In California, the president and his wife were forced to endure a bumpy, 41-minute ride in a four-wheel drive van after rain and poor visibility made a helicopter landing impossible at their ranch, high in the Santa Ynez Mountains 30 miles outside Santa Barbara.

Reagan and his wife arrived aboard Air Force One at Point Mugu Naval Air Station as a light drizzle fell.

Usually, the couple hops aboard a Marine helicopter for a brief flight to the ranch. However, they were flown only to the local Santa Barbara airport, where they boarded the van for the ride to Reagan's 688-acre Rancho del Cielo.

The couple's nine-car motorcade — escorted by five police vehicles — twisted up the steep, switchback road that cuts into the edge of the brush-covered mountainside.

Progress was slow up the road, as fog cut visibility to less than 100 yards.

The president and his wife are to remain secluded at their ranch until Saturday, when Reagan is to return to Washington and his wife travels to Los Angeles to attend a private wedding on Sunday.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said he doubted that Reagan would be able to pursue one of his favorite pastimes — horseback riding — since the rainy weather was expected to continue throughout the president's holiday.

The visit to California is one of the briefest of Reagan's presidency. Originally, it was to run through Monday. The only explanation offered by the White House was that the president did not want to remain at the ranch by himself while his wife was in Los Angeles.

Reagan, however, will be alone in the White House for several days since Mrs. Reagan plans to visit a drug rehabilitation program in Texas next week.

Three Die As Copter Crashes At Volcano

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Three men reported missing on a picture-taking flight to Mount St. Helens for National Geographic have been found dead in the wreckage of their helicopter, officials say.

The wreckage was found Wednesday just north of the southwestern Washington volcano. Mac McIver, spokesman for the state Aeronautics Division, said the helicopter was broken up in the snow.

An emergency locator transmitter apparently was destroyed upon impact, said Newell Lee, another division spokesman.

The cause of the crash was not known, he said, adding the National Transportation Safety Board would investigate.

The Hughes 500 helicopter, missing since Monday, had been on a photo mission for a National Geographic book.

Killed in the crash were Ralph

Perry of Camas, a photographer; pilot Doug Hadder of Hillsboro, Ore.; and Ron Montee of Vancouver, Wash., a maintenance worker.

Fog and snow had hampered the search, but the light Wednesday afternoon was just right to allow searchers to distinguish the wreckage from boulders, Lee said.

Bill Scarboro at the search base said nine planes and 11 helicopters were involved in the hunt Wednesday.

Paul Sampson, chief of National Geographic's news service, said Perry was on assignment for a book called "Nature on the Rampage."

Dave Tinney, chief photo editor for the Vancouver Columbian, where Perry worked for four years before the May 18, 1980, eruption of Mount St. Helens, said the purpose of the flight was to take infrared pictures of laser beams that are used to measure the lava dome in the crater of the volcano.

U.S. Firms Cutting Prices As Petroleum Rates Slide

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil companies are rushing to cut the amount they'll pay for crude oil as petroleum prices slide on the world market, and the decline even caused Atlantic Richfield Co. to cut back its 1986 capital spending.

Following the lead of competitors, Union Oil Co. of California, Conoco Inc., Shell Oil Co. and Standard Oil Co. of Ohio announced Wednesday they had lowered their postings, the contract prices paid to suppliers of crude oil.

Unocal cut postings by $1-$1.50 a barrel effective Tuesday for various grades of U.S. crude; Conoco lowered postings $1-$1.50 effective Monday; Shell lowered postings $1.25-$1.50 effective Wednesday; and Sohio lowered postings $1.50-$2.50 effective last Saturday.

The posting prices of most U.S. blends are now in the range of $19 to $23 a barrel, compared with $27-$29 at the beginning of this year. Retail gasoline prices have dropped by more than 3 cents a gallon this year.

The declining market compelled Atlantic Richfield to announce it would slash planned 1986 capital spending by a third to $2 billion, cutting deeply into its allocations for oil and gas exploration and production. Arco said it might increase the budget if the market improved.

Lower oil prices will keep inflationary pressures from building up even if economic growth accelerates, analysts say. Interest rates are partly determined by judgements of how prices will behave in the future.

Amid renewed confidence about inflation and interest rates, stock prices resumed their upward march. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials reached a record close Wednesday for the fourth time in five sessions. Wall Street's best known trading barometer rose 7.11 to 1,629.93, exceeding the record close of 1,626.38 of Monday and wiping out Tuesday's slight decline.

The declines were the latest signs of the struggle between the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and non-OPEC producers, which some analysts say could push prices on the open market down to $10 per 42-gallon barrel.

That level has not been seen since the Iranian revolution disrupted oil supplies in early 1979.

"The mood of the market is such that the overwhelming sentiment is there's plenty of room to go," said Steven Smith, who follows the oil markets for Data Resources Inc., a business research firm in Lexington, Mass. "The prices are off the cliff. They haven't run into any hard fundamental barriers."

In spot and futures trading, crude and refined petroleum prices fell for the third straight day Wednesday because of new figures that showed oil stocks had risen sharply with no sign that producers were cutting back output.

Contract prices for the March delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. grade, fell 82 cents a barrel to $15.73 on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Unleaded gasoline prices fell 2.17 cents a gallon to 46.13 cents, and home heating oil fell .61 cents a gallon to 50.81 cents.

In the spot market the price of Brent North Sea crude, Britain's best-known blend, dropped 10 cents a barrel to $16.40.

Oil prices in the open market have fallen by about half since November. OPEC nations led by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait have flooded the market with oil to stem the 13-nation cartel's loss of customers to non-OPEC producers, notably Britain, Norway and Mexico.

Tylenol Poisoning Isn't Linked To '82 Case, Officials Say

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Investigators have ruled out any link between the death of a woman who swallowed cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Tylenol to those of seven people in 1982 in Illinois, but are not near solving the latest case.

Tampering at the factory has not been ruled out, officials said, despite the Westchester County medical examiner's contention that the cyanide found in the painkiller would have eaten through the capsules in eight to 10 days. The suspected batch was manufactured last summer.

"It might have happened at the factory, it might have happened during shipping, it might have happened at the store," county District Attorney Carl Vergari said Wednesday.

Diane Elsrath, 23, daughter of a state police investigator, died Saturday after taking two Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules, at least one of which contained potassium cyanide, said Dr. Millard Hyland, the county medical examiner.

Officials theorized that the bottle may have been bought, tampered with and then put on the shelf in the A&P store in Bronxville, where it was purchased before Ms. Elsrath took the capsules.

The product is manufactured by Johnson & Johnson, whose chairman James Burke said the company had withdrawn its Tylenol television advertising indefinitely because of the death, which prompted thousands of stores around the nation to pull Extra-Strength Tylenol off shelves.

In Illinois, seven people died after swallowing Tylenol capsules containing cyanide from bottles evidently tampered with as they stood on store shelves.

The case, which is still unsolved, brought increased concern about the safety of products, and Johnson & Johnson has been sealing the necks and caps of Tylenol bottles and packing each bottle in sealed boxes ever since.

Johnson & Johnson's stock fell 62½ cents a share, to $50, in active trading Wednesday after losing $1.12½ per share Tuesday.

Two other capsules in the bottle used by Ms. Elsrath also were found to contain cyanide and William Grigg, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration in Washington, said tests determined the poison was of a different type than that in the Chicago-area cases.

He said the tests also determined the cyanide differed from the kind used for product testing at the Tylenol plant.

The FDA inspected the factory where the pills were made and determined that "there were no indications that it (the contamination) could be the result of the manufacturing," he said.

Johnson & Johnson said the lot number involved, ADF916, was manufactured in Fort Washington, Pa., in May and shipped to stores in August, arriving on the shelves in September and October.

Spokesman James Murray said that based on Hyland's finding that the cyanide would have eaten through the capsules, the company feels the tampering "did not take place at the factory."

No other bottles have shown signs of contamination, and testing of storage and stock samples retained by Tylenol also failed to show any contamination, he said.

But he said company officials were reviewing employee files for any possible suspects.

Vergari said he felt Miss Elsrath's death was a random homicide and Deputy Police Chief Owen McClain of Yonkers said authorities had no reason to believe she was singled out as a target. But the possibility was not being ruled out, he said.

Vergari said members of the family of Michael Notarnicola, Miss Elsrath's boyfriend, at whose home she died, "have been questioned and were being questioned and have been cooperating."

"I'm not saying anyone did it and I'm not saying anyone is suspected," he said.

The bottle, the box and a protective seal on the outside of the bottle were recovered by investigators and shipped Tuesday to an FBI laboratory in Washington for testing, said FBI spokesman Joseph Valiquette.

Police Say Father Tried To Sell Baby

DENVER (AP) — A man has been arrested for trying to sell his 3-month-old son for $600 and a computer, authorities said.

Dale Shimandle, 25, and his common-law wife apparently were broke, $1,000 behind in rent payments and about to be evicted, police told The Denver Post.

But authorities believe Shimandle, who is thought to be a fast-food restaurant employee, planned to use the money to move rather than pay the rent, the newspaper reported today.

Shimandle's common-law wife was questioned but not arrested.

Assistant District Attorney Chuck Lopley said the investigation began Wednesday after authorities were contacted by a source who said

Shimandle had offered to sell the child.

"We obtained additional facts and our complex prosecutions unit, coordinating with the Denver Police Department, arranged for the informant to follow through with the purchase of the child," said Lopley.

The original asking price was $900, but Shimandle ultimately agreed to the $600 and an Apple computer, Lopley said.

Officials said Shimandle brought the baby, clad in a jump suit, to the informant's apartment. As two investigators watched from closets, Shimandle handed over the child, then received the payment from the informant.

Shimandle was then arrested, and cried, but offered no resistance, police said.

The child is in "very good health" and was turned over to the Denver Social Services, Lopley said.

Shimandle was being held Wednesday in the City Jail for investigation of trafficking in children — a felony that carries a prison term of four to 16 years upon conviction.

Official Indicted

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — West Virginia Attorney General Charlie Brown was indicted today on eight misdemeanor counts of violating state election laws, accused of soliciting campaign contributions from his employees.

Brown, in his first term in the office, said he could not comment because he had not seen the indictment. However, his office said it was preparing a statement.

Kanawha County Prosecutor Charles King began a grand jury investigation after former deputy attorney general David Grubb accused Brown last month of pressuring employees for campaign contributions to pay off his 1984 campaign debt.

Shcharansky Ailments Blamed On Malnutrition

JERUSALEM (AP) — The doctor who examined Anatoly Shcharansky today said the Jewish human rights activist has minor heart and neurological problems caused by severe malnutrition during nearly nine years in Soviet jail and labor camps.

Cardiologist Mervyn Gottesman, head of the team of doctors that examined Shcharansky for three hours, said the noted dissident was suffering from a small heart lesion and a tremor in his hand but did not require any immediate treatment except rest and gentle exercise.

When he was arrested and jailed in March 1977, Shcharansky weighed 165 pounds. Gottesman quoted Shcharansky as saying he weighed 75 pounds after a 1985 hunger strike to protest prison officials' refusal to allow him visits and mail.

But Shcharansky said the Soviets fed him so well in the last two months in preparation for his release that he gained 22 pounds.

Asked about Shcharansky's mental health, Gottesman said, "We are dealing with a man of great psychological strength."

Shcharansky, convicted on a charge of spying for the United States, was freed Tuesday in Berlin in an East-West exchange and flew to Israel. He has joined his wife Avital, whom he had not seen since she left the Soviet Union the day after their 1974 wedding.

Shcharansky "went into prison in 1977 in prime physical condition. I think his prime condition gave him the basis to survive 403 days he spent under very, very strict conditions," Gottesman told reporters at the Hadassah Medical Center in Jerusalem.

He was referring to the days Shcharansky spent in solitary confinement, in a cell that the dissident described as "three strides by two" with a dull light, rudimentary toilet facilities, no heat and little food.

Gottesman said Shcharansky told him he conducted hunger strikes of about 110 and 92 days to protest his treatment. He said the activist reported being periodically force-fed during the strikes with a rich fluid of eggs and milk pumped into his body through a tube.

The force-feeding caused Shcharansky's heart to race and gave him severe headaches, Gottesman said.

Shcharansky, 38, joked with reporters after the tests. Asked how he was feeling, he said, "Not bad."

Later today he is scheduled to meet with President Chaim Herzog and then conduct a news conference.

Shcharansky said Wednesday he understood his 77-year-old mother,

Ida Milgrom, would receive an exit visa and join him within a month as part of the deal in which he was released.

In Washington, the U.S. State Department said the Soviet Union had indicated Mrs. Milgrom and other relatives of Shcharansky would be allowed to emigrate to Israel, but did not elaborate.

Mrs. Milgrom told The Associated Press in Moscow that officials of the Soviet visa agency had denied any knowledge of an order to grant a visa to her or her elder son, Leonid.

Shcharansky, convicted in July 1978 of spying for the CIA, told Israel radio Wednesday that he dreamed about coming to Israel throughout his imprisonment.

"Every time the dream finished the same way. I woke up. Now this dream has continued for three days ... and I am afraid that I will wake up," Shcharansky said.

He said he knew "almost nothing" about international efforts to obtain his release, but "I had great help because I always knew and felt that my Avital is with me, that all Israel is with me."

Since the couple was separated, Mrs. Shcharansky had worked for her husband's release.

"Avital would write me twice a week, and I would receive two letters a year from her. And that was in a good year. There also were years when I didn't receive a single letter," Shcharansky said.

Schcharansky and the United States both denied he was a spy, insisting he was imprisoned because he spoke out for human rights.

He promised to resume his camaign for Soviet Jewish emigration. "It is my duty to use my experience to help those people who stayed behind," he said.

In Moscow today, a spokesman for the Soviet Foreign Ministry denounced Shcharansky as a man belonging to "the dregs of society, criminals and traitors." The spokesman, Valery Sukhin, also criticized those who rejoiced in Shcharansky's release.

Shcharansky said a pocket-sized Book of Psalms sent to him in prison by his wife was the only possession he was allowed to take with him from the Soviet Union.

He said he hoped to return to his profession of applied mathematics and cybernetics.

Fire Kills 7 Children

EL CAMPO, Texas (AP) — Fire swept through a one-bedroom house early today, killing seven children from two families who apparently had been left alone, authorities said.

The wood-frame house was engulfed in flames when firefighters responded to the 12:27 a.m. blaze, said Elmer Cavender, a photographer for the El Campo Fire Department.

The dead were identified as Monica

Williams, 8; Jeremy Williams, 7; Veronica Williams, 6; Jason Williams, 3; Demetris Denise Johnson, 3; Claressa Williams, 9 months; and Nathan Johnson, 2 months.

The children's mothers arrived at the home about 2½ hours after the blaze was reported, said Police Chief J.C. Elliott. He said police have not been able to question the mothers on their whereabouts.

Police dispatcher Shirley Charbula said Jacqueline Williams of El Campo was the mother of five of the children. Marsha Taylor Owens of Glen Flora, a small town 20 miles from El Campo, was the mother of the other two, she said.

Five children were found in the front room of the house, where Ms. Williams lived, and two were found in the back room, Charbula said. There were no survivors.

City Fire Marshal Garland Myers asked the state fire marshal to join in the investigation. Elliot said the results of the inquiry would be turned over to the district attorney's office.

El Campo is an oil and farming town of about 12,000, located 70 miles southwest of Houston.

and a dropping sexual interest are all signs that there might be a problem.

Ms. Lloyd told the farmers to make the necessary decisions after proper consultation.

"When someone makes a decision — regardless of whether it turns out right or wrong — the stress will decrease," she said. "Leaving a farm is a highly emotional thing, but farmers should think positive and be satisfied they did the best they could."

Farmers who attended the meeting said it was educational and necessary.

"I wish more folks could be here," said Lindsey Briley, a Pitt County farmer. "They brought us some good information. It is good for the farm families as well as others."

"This is something for all farmers in Pitt County," said Dan Wynn, a Pactolus farmer. "It's important to all people living in the rural areas."

Ex-farmer John Radford, who left the industry last year, said he could relate to the situations described by agricultural extension agents at the meeting.

"This helps to make the folks aware of what happens before they have to get out," he said.

Agriculture officials said they liked the idea behind the first-hand meeting with Pitt County farmers.

"This session took the subject to the farmer, and we wanted anyone to come," said Phil Rowan, agricultural extension agent. "Farmers think if they attend the meeting, they are admitting they're having problems. Regardless of whether they admit the problems, problems do exist in the farming industry."

counseling is a great challenge," she said.

Pitt County Agricultural Extension officials said they hoped the meeting will lend information to the people of surrounding areas and not just individual farmers.

"We're trying to help the community to recognize the problems these people are facing," said Evelyn Spangler, home economist with the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service. "We're attempting to show that this affects more than just the individuals. It affects the whole community."

Local clergymen who attended the workshop expressed appreciation for the efforts of the extension service.

"This was an excellent presentation," said the Rev. Bill Bussey, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Wilson. "It had some very important content."

Bussey said he doesn't have too many farmers in his congregation, but he is concerned with the community.

"We have some farmers who fall into this category, but mostly we have individuals in related businesses such as bankers and small businessmen," he said.

"This meeting was really helpful," said the Rev. Scott Eans, pastor of the Riverview Baptist Church in eastern Pitt County. "I've kind of felt inadequate in dealing with these situations. It's just a matter of trying to be there for them."

Ms. Spangler said the purpose of the workshop, which was the second of its kind, is to take a burden off the shoulders of the farmers.

"The extension service is very much interested in helping farmers to deal with their stress and minimize it," she said. "And we want to counsel them on how to recognize stress and how to deal with it."

Ford And Chrysler Report Huge Drops In Net Profits

DETROIT (AP) — Ford Motor Co. said today it made a net profit of $2.5 billion in 1985, a decline of nearly 14 percent from a year earlier.

Chrysler Corp., meanwhile, reported a profit for last year of $1.6 billion, down about 33 percent from $2.4 billion a year earlier.

The reports brought 1985 net profits of the Big Three automakers to $8.1 billion compared with more than $9.8 billion in 1984, the industry's record year.

General Motors Corp. last week reported a $4 billion profit, down 21 percent from $4.5 billion the previous year.

The Big Three expected the profit declines because, in all cases, the 1984 results were records set during a period of tighter Japanese import controls, less spending on capital improvements and acquisitions and higher average profit margins per car.

Competition increased greatly in 1985 because of the relaxation of Japanese import quotas and growing market shares by most European importers. Costly incentive sales campaigns and heavy spending on new tools and plants depressed Big Three profits.

Ford, the nation's No. 2 automaker, listed its worldwide sales at $52.7 billion compared with $52.3 billion a year ago.

Net income per share at Ford came to $13.63 a share for the year compared with $15.79 a year earlier.

Ford's net profit in the fourth quarter was $720 million compared with $721 million a year earlier.

Ford said its U.S. operations earned $400 million less in 1985 than in 1984, an amount equal to the decline in total net profit. Earnings in Canada were cut in half, Ford said. The company, however, doubled its earnings in the competitive European market and cut its losses in Latin America and the Far East.

Much of Chrysler's decline was the result of its renewed status as a full-fledged taxpayer, having used up credits earned during its brush with bankruptcy five years ago. It was the first year since 1976 that Chrysler paid taxes in every quarter.

Chrysler said the combined costs in the fourth quarter of a 12-day nationwide U.S. strike, a one-week Canadian strike and a 22-day strike at its St. Louis big-car plant came to $150 million.

Saying "Ronald Reagan has a personality," Jones said "Democrats need to cut through that and look at the facts."

"I contend the Republicans are going down. The Democrats, who have so much to offer, are going up."

"I'm for defense," Jones said. "I'm probably considered a hawk in the House. But not at the expense of the elderly, the disabled."

"I'm for a balanced budget," Jones emphasized. "I've signed several bills" supporting a balanced federal budget. But he said, "I voted against the Gramm-Rudman bill. It's not in the best interest of the people."

"The facts of life — we need to dedicate ourselves here tonight as Democrats. I urge you, come the fall elections, canvass your neighbors. Look 'em in the eye. Ask, 'Did you vote last time? Why didn't you?' Then convince them to vote Democratic."

"I have every confidence that in November of this year, the Democratic Party will prevail," Jones said.

State officials attending the rally included Attorney General Lacy Thornburg, Auditor Edward Renfrow and five members of the N.C. Court of Appeals.

Among candidates present for the rally were U.S. Senate hopefuls Terry Sanford of Durham, former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram of Cary, T.L. "Fountain" Odom of Charlotte, William L. Belk of Charlotte, Betty C. Wallace of Raleigh, Milton M. Croom of Raleigh, Katherine H. Harper of Charlotte and Walt Atkins of Graham.

"These we need to have to keep North Carolina moving. These are investments that will pay off in more jobs for North Carolina and will bring growth not just to one or two areas, but to all our state."

"Why can't we commit ourselves in North Carolina to quality growth and good jobs in every single community — in Pitt County as well as Mecklenburg County, in my hometown of Mount Gilead as well as in Raleigh?"

Saying North Carolina ranks 10th in the nation in population, but 48th in the nation in the number of adults with a high school education, Jordan stressed "we can't be 48th in education and first in economic growth."

"If we can be number one in college basketball, why can't we be first in public education?" Jordan asked. "Why can't we commit ourselves in North Carolina to the goal of seeing that every young person who graduates from High School has a quality education?"

Democrats in the General Assembly last year passed a plan to achieve that goal, Jordan said. "It's called the basic education plan. It will make teaching a more attractive and rewarding career. It will strengthen the curriculum. It will give each school system enough resources to provide a quality education to every student."

"A young person growing up in Bethel should have just as good an education as a young person growing up in Charlotte. That's the goal of the basic education plan."

"Let's make a commitment in 1986 to our state's future," Jordan said. "Let's make a commitment to our young people ... to a quality education for each one of them, to an economy that offers them a job, a career, a future after they graduate. Let's set our goals high."

"As Democrats, let's open the doors of our party to young people. The future belongs to the party that makes room for them. Let's make them part of our party this year. Let's make them part of our vision for North Carolina in the year 2000 ... a place where every community in our state shares in our economic prosperity, a place where every child grows up bright and happy and healthy, a place where every young person gets a quality education."

"It's a cause worth working for," Jordan said. "Our party is worth working for. Our state and our children are worth working for."

"Our party, your party needs your help this year. We need to reach out and share your vision."

Jones, a Farmville Democrat seeking his 12th term in the U.S. House of Representatives, joined in the praise of the party, saying: "If the Democratic Party is dead, we're having a hell of a wake tonight. On the contrary, we're on the move."

Calling President Ronald Reagan "an A-grade TV commentator," Jones said "the Democrats are back ... there are nearly 700 people here tonight. The Republicans (if holding a rally) could do it at the downtown bus station."

And Jones said, "I want to thank each of you for not filing against me in the May primary."

On a more serious note, Jones said, "I'm concerned about the farmers."

"When did family farmers begin suffering? In 1981 when Ronald Reagan became president," Jones said. "Under the Reagan administration ... in 1981 the federal deficit was $89.9 billion. Five years later, it's $200 billion. He's (Reagan) wrecking the economy of this nation," Jones suggested.

"What does this administration propose?" Jones asked, "$40 billion for defense spending increases — $100 billion for Central American aid."

Soviet Jobless Usually Are Critics Of System

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — Maria Radyukevich takes exception to official proclamations that there is no unemployment in the Soviet Union. The Byelorussian barber says she hasn't had a job for 2½ years.

Nadezhda Zavalnyuk of the Ukraine claims her husband Vladimir was fired in October because he refused to forge records covering his bosses' theft of meat and eggs intended for sale.

Serafim Yevsukov, a 23-year-old Muscovite whose family has tried to emigrate for eight years, was fired just before the new year from his chauffeur's job and threatened with imprisonment if he doesn't enter the army.

Officials and the state-run media often say unemployment exists only in capitalist countries. But Soviet workers who find themselves at odds with their bosses maintain that dismissal is sometimes used as a threat and that thousands are fired each year for views or behavior that offend higher-ups.

Refuseniks, the term for Soviets who are refused permission to emigrate, often are fired after applying for exit permission and can only find menial jobs like janitorial work.

Joblessness also may become a problem under Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's drive for efficiency and technological advances in industry.

A recent article in Sovietskaya Kultura, an organ of the Communist Party's Central Committee, acknowledged that as automation reduces need for industrial workers, the situation no longer exists where "work looks for the worker."

Since the official position holds that unemployment doesn't exist, no figures are available here on how many people are out of work or in jobs below their professional ability or outside their expertise.

But Soviet joblessness more than likely is a fraction of that in the West.

The constitution says citizens

"have the right to work, including the right to choose their trade or profession, type of job, and work in accordance with their inclinations, abilities, training and education, with due account of the needs of society."

Soviets who lose their jobs in the provinces often travel to Moscow believing their problems lie with hometown authorities, and that national officials may be more sympathetic. Some contact Western correspondents in hopes that publicity will draw official attention.

Mrs. Radyukevich, a 41-year-old mother of two from the Byelorussian town of Molodechno, traveled to Moscow in late December.

She said she was dismissed in the summer of 1983 after complaining that her boss did not keep adequate stocks at the barber shop where she worked for 17 years.

With only three years left until retirement, Mrs. Radyukevich said she would lose pension benefits if she took another job.

After her labor union refused to help and letters to local party and government officials went unanswered, she said, she decided to appeal to Kremlin officials.

She added that before returning home in early January, she tried to get into Central Committee headquarters, but was denied access by uniformed guards who threatened to have her sent to a mental hospital if she returned.

Mrs. Zavalnyuk, 34, said she experienced the same rebuff when she visited the Central Committee offices to seek review of her husband's firing as a clerk in a regional procurement office and his expulsion from the Communist Party.

Yevsukov was fired in late December after 18 months as a driver in a government car pool. He previously worked as a taxi driver, after his 1983 release from 2½ years in labor camps for refusing to enter the army.

He said he refused the obligatory two-year service because he opposes Soviet military policy and because army service is often a reason cited for denying permission to emigrate.

His family applied to leave in 1978, and Yevsukov attributes his problems to the family's status as refuseniks. He said he fears the firing is a first step toward "parasitism" charges and another camp sentence.

Fear of such charges often forces jobless Soviets into undesirable work after four months, when they risk arrest for being a "parasite."

Fired workers say it is virtually impossible to get another job in their field, if they are dismissed for any reason other than a reduction in labor force. Every adult has a work book on which previous employers have written evaluations and stated reasons for the employee's departure.

Such jobs as trash hauling and hospital work are usually available. But they are considered by many to be little better than unemployment because they seldom pay as much as 100 rubles ($132) a month and pension benefits are not transferable for dismissed workers.

Those declared redundant because of technological advances or efficiency measures usually receive full pay and benefits for three months while they seek new work. They also are eligible for retraining.

The government appears to be devoting increasing attention to displaced workers under Gorbachev's drive for modernization.

Articles calling for better control over worker training and pay equity have been appearing in the press, but they have not touched on unemployment as a problem.

Sovietskaya Kultura advised planners and educators to work toward attracting more people to the labor-short spheres of teaching, medicine and other social services.

"It is new and unfamiliar to us when we find it necessary to look for work, which surely confronts many these days in production and services," the newspaper said. "We had become accustomed to the opposite — work looks for the worker."

Peru's New President Takes On Cocaine Barons

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer
LIMA, Peru (AP) — After years of operating with little fear of corrupt police forces and indifferent governments, Peru's cocaine barons are under siege from a new president. But some government officials say he needs more U.S. help.

Alan Garcia, a 36-year-old social reformer, declared war on narcotics traffickers when he took office last July, saying Peruvians can no longer be known as "exporters of poison."

Two weeks later he approved Operation Condor, commando-style raids by police on multimillion-dollar installations hidden in the Amazon jungle near the Colombian border. Using borrowed Colombian military helicopters, Peruvian police swooped in on four huge cocaine laboratories and adjacent airfields, including one with a paved runway three-quarters of a mile long.

Peruvian officials say Operation Condor marked a turning point in Peru as important as Colombia's drive against drug traffickers following the assassination of that country's minister of justice by hired gunmen in April 1984.

In Bolivia, 245 narcotics officers recently found themselves surrounded by angry coca growers after being deployed when the farmers refused to cut coca leaf production voluntarily. The siege tapered off after five days.

Garcia's predecessor, Fernando Belaunde Terry, showed little interest in battling drug runners, foreign diplomats say.

"He was quoted as saying it was not Peru's problem," one diplomat said. "That's not the way this guy Garcia has started out. He's seizing narcotics and putting people out of business."

Coca is Peru's single biggest export, pumping between $500 million and $800 million into the country's floundering economy. In the form of coca leaves and paste, Peru produces the raw material for about half of the cocaine that enters the United States.

Since August, Garcia has kept the heat up on Peru's drug lords. In an operation from mid-November through December, a special police force aboard military helicopters swept into the heart of Peru's booming coca leaf growing area in the Huallaga Valley to destroy more airstrips and disrupt traffickers' established routes.

The Huallaga Valley is a rugged sub-tropical zone about 250 miles northeast of Lima on the eastern slopes of the Andes. Coca paste, the second phase in the refining process, is flown from the valley in small planes to Colombia or to jungle laboratories on the border for transformation into pure cocaine and subsequent smuggling into the United States.

In their three Condor operations police have dynamited 69 clandestine air fields and three heliports, destroyed 22 cocaine laboratories, seized 11 airplanes and 13 boats, and captured 13 tons of coca paste and cocaine base, the third stage in the refining process. The coca products were worth $14 million if refined into pure cocaine.

As part of his campaign, Garcia has forcibly retired 363 police commanders suspected of corruption, more than half the nation's officer corps, including 55 who held the rank of general in the military structure of the police forces.

For the third Condor operation, Garcia ordered the Air Force to provide helicopters to the police for the raids, and a foreign narcotics expert described the military's cooperation as "a monumental step in the right direction."

In the past the powerful armed forces have refused to help police, saying their job is to fight leftist guerrillas, not chase drug runners.

"We are impressed with Alan Garcia's commitment to the fight against narcotics," a U.S. diplomat, insisting on anonymity, said in an interview.

But Peruvian officials complain that the United States, the main beneficiary of the crackdown, is not providing enough help to Peru's outmatched police forces. Some have speculated aid is being held up because of Garcia's decision to limit Peru's foreign debt payments to 10 percent of export earnings.

U.S. officials deny that, noting that the United States spent $166,000 for fuel and dynamite used in the three Condor operations. "We financed the whole package and we don't mind saying so," a U.S. Embassy spokesman said.

He said Peru's request for more aid has been delayed by a legal requirement that the Garcia government first prepare a detailed plan on how the assistance will be used.

Peru is to receive $4.5 million in narcotics assistance this year — twice what Belaunde received in his last year of government. Last year, government workers destroyed 10,000 of an estimated 375,000 acres of coca plants under cultivation, but Garcia thinks disrupting trade routes is more effective than the U.S.-funded coca eradication and crop substitution program.

Deputy Interior Minister Agustin Mantilla, who is in charge of Garcia's drug campaign, calls the U.S. aid sum "laughable" when compared to the resources available to the cocaine kings.

Adds Interior Minister Abel Salinas, "is not realistic to fight the drug trade with $3 million or $4 million a year."

In an interview, Mantilla said Peru is not asking for more money but for two transport planes, two helicopters and two hydroplanes for use on the rivers that thread through the Amazon jungle.

"The United States has given Colombia 22 aircraft, including helicopters and planes, and we haven't received even a kite," Mantilla said.

Baker's Plan To Help Poor Nations Revived

WASHINGTON (AP) — A four-month-old proposal by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III for help to about 85 of the world's poorest countries is getting a boost from a new study by a major world lender, officials say.

The study is being conducted by the International Monetary Fund, which would provide much of the money and which would have to approve the proposed loan program, the officials said Wednesday.

In Seoul, South Korea, last Oct. 8, Baker suggested putting up to $5.6 billion into a special fund to be lent out to poor debtor nations at low interest rates. The aid was to go only to governments promising to undertake austerity programs to improve their financial standing and eventually increase production.

At the same time Baker proposed that commercial banks and the World Bank lend another $29 billion to 15 countries that are less poor but still heavily in debt.

Baker's proposal for the poorest countries was coolly received. One World Bank official, who asked not to be named, said it was because member countries did not like the idea of joint administration of the money by the bank and fund. The Reagan administration has said they should work more closely together.

The second proposal has been broadly endorsed, though no loans have yet been made under it.

The United States would not put up any additional money under the plan, Treasury Department spokesman Robert Levine said.

"We're trying to get it rolling," he added.

He and other officials, who spoke on condition they not be named, said the total to be sought has not yet been decided.

The first source of money would be about $2.8 billion now being repaid to the International Monetary Fund from loans it granted to 55 poor countries, the officials said.

More money would be expected from the fund's sister organization, the World Bank. Both are owned by the same 149 governments, with the United States holding about 20 percent of each.

Many of the prospective borrowers are in Africa, Asia and Latin America. Loans would go to countries where the residents' average annual income was below $790.

U.S.-Trained Soldier Says He Led Salvadoran Death Squad

By ROBERT PARRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An ex-Salvadoran army officer says he personally commanded a "death squad" team in the early 1980s and witnessed El Salvador's U.S.-backed military execute civilians during a counterinsurgency sweep.

Former Lt. Ricardo Ernesto Castro said Salvadoran soldiers and police routinely participated in death squad killings of suspected "subversives." He said he led four assassination missions, claiming about a dozen lives.

Castro, a 1973 West Point graduate, said he also saw the army slaughter unarmed women and children during a counterinsurgency sweep near the Rio Lempa in the fall of 1981. The bodies were dumped into shallow streams as a warning to leftist guerrillas.

"My company was thirsty, but the soldiers would not take water from one of these streams because of these kids' corpses," Castro said in a recent tape-recorded interview at his suburban Washington home.

Castro, who left El Salvador in mid-1982, is the first Salvadoran army officer to publicly state that he participated in death squad killings. He initially told his story to free-lance reporter Allan Nairn for an article in the current issue of Progressive magazine.

Castro, 35, said he was recruited to work with the CIA and served as a translator for an American who trained the Salvadoran military on interrogation techniques. He said the American trainer did not advocate torture, but suggested that suspects be kept "completely disoriented" by isolating them and employing psychological tactics.

During the early 1980s, the Reagan administration disputed many human rights charges lodged against the Salvadoran government. But in 1984, the Senate Intelligence Committee said the U.S. government had concluded that "numerous Salvadoran officials in the military and security forces ... have been involved in encouraging and conducting death squad activities or other violent human rights abuses."

The administration now contends abuses have been brought under control, although private human rights groups say government forces still commit selective murders in the cities and use indiscriminate firepower in the countryside.

An estimated 50,000 civilians have died in the 6-year-old civil war.

Castro said he came to the United States in mid-1982 to tell U.S. officials about the corruption and atrocities that many young officers felt were undermining prospects for restoring peace in El Salvador. After his appeals received little attention, he said he decided to stay here with his wife and three children. Castro, who is a Salvadoran citizen, said he plans to request political asylum in the United States.

Working odd jobs to support his family, Castro said he did not tell his story earlier to avoid trouble with U.S. authorities, but finally decided the information should be made public.

Castro said political assassinations represented a policy established by the military high command. Death squads initially used army personnel, he said, but later government security forces, particularly the Treasury Police, took over.

"All the killings I know of were done by the armed forces," Castro said.

The former lieutenant said he would receive orders from his commanding officer to take a team of soldiers in civilian clothes and follow a guide, known as a "chani-que," to the homes of suspected leftists.

Castro said the informer would identify the target and "we'd kill him right on the spot."

Castro also said he witnessed the slaughter of unarmed civilians during the U.S.-trained Atlacatl battalion's march to the Rio Lempa on the Honduran border in November 1981.

"Twenty-two or 24 were killed ... in front of my troops. I didn't like it one bit, little girls yelling, 'Mama, mama, someone being killed in cold blood,'" he said.

"Some corpses were carried as much as two miles to different tributaries and each one deposited in a shallow place so the river wouldn't take it. It was telling the guerrillas, 'Look what could happen to you,'" Castro said.

In December 1981, he said, he was told he might be needed to help interrogate about 600 civilians in two towns in Morazan province where the guerrillas had been active. Even though the army knew the guerrillas had fled, Castro said, a major told him that all the people would be shot.

Castro said he did not participate in the operation, but was informed later that the mass killings had occurred. The events, described by Castro, match allegations from human rights groups that the army slaughtered hundreds of civilians in Morazan province around Christmas 1981 — charges the Reagan administration disputed.

Japan Extending Quotas On U.S. Auto Shipments

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's top trade official announced today that his country would extend for a sixth year quotas on auto shipments to the United States to prevent "torrential exports" that would increase demands for protectionist laws in the United States.

Japanese automakers opposed the decision but acknowledged that it probably was inevitable. U.S. automakers and the United Auto Workers applauded the decision.

Michio Watanabe, the international trade and industry minister, told a news conference that the ceiling on exports to the United States in the fiscal year beginning April 1 would be 2.3 million cars, the same as in the current fiscal year.

Watanabe said the recovery of the U.S. auto industry and the recent increase in the value of the Japanese yen against the dollar were factors against continuing the restraints. The appreciation of the yen makes Japanese exports more expensive in the United States.

"On the other hand, there is the question of Japan's huge trade surplus with the United States, which reached nearly $50 billion last year, and the wave of protectionism centering in the U.S. Congress," he said.

"We studied the effects of what would happen if we lifted the restraints and came to the conclusion that torrential exports would not be to our benefit," he said.

Japan's $49.7 billion trade surplus with the United States in 1985 was up from $36.8 billion the previous year, and about one-third of the increase was attributed to an increase in the auto export ceiling from 1.85 million to 2.3 million.

The government has been deeply concerned by moves in Congress to enact protectionist legislation against Japan in the wake of the Commerce Department's announcement of the 1985 trade figures.

Republican Sen. John Danforth of Missouri, chairman of the subcommittee on international trade, said in a statement that Japan's decision "appears to signal a recognition on the part of the Japanese that trade is a give-and-take proposition."

Danforth has sponsored several bills pending in the Senate, including legislation that would require retaliation against Japan if it fails to eliminate unfair trade barriers and open its markets to foreign goods.

Toyota Motor Corp. President Shoichiro Toyoda said Japan's top automaker contended "for some time it is clear in terms of problems in the automotive industry that there is no need to continue the voluntary export restraints."

TUNNEL TREATY — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and French President Francois Mitterrand exchange copies of a newly signed treaty for building and operating a tunnel below the British Channel. The two leaders met at Canterbury Wednesday to sign the agreement. (AP Laserphoto)

British Business Group Wants Suit To Block Tunnel

CANTERBURY, England (AP) — A business group in the port of Dover says a British-French agreement to build a rail tunnel under the English Channel will ruin ferry terminal business, and that it will take the treaty before the European Court of Justice.

Dover Chamber of Commerce officials said Wednesday, following the signing of the Channel tunnel treaty between Britain and France, that they had launched a national appeal for $141,000 to finance a lawsuit against the tunnel.

Alan Stibbe, president of the group, said the aim of the legal action is to force Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government to hold a public inquiry into the project.

The treaty binds the two countries to complete the 31-mile twin rail tunnel between Dover and northwestern France before the year 2000.

Following the expected passage of enabling laws by parliaments of both countries, work on the tunnel is expected to start by mid-1987 with a scheduled opening in 1993 at a cost of $3.3 billion.

Public inquiries are normally held in Britain when major projects are proposed. A government inspector hears evidence from landowners, environmentalists, engineers, lawyers and other experts before advising the government if the project should go ahead.

Thatcher's government, however, turned down pleas for a public inquiry into the project. If the court orders one, it could drag on for years, escalating the cost of the project and threatening its collapse.

The court is the legal arm of the 12-nation European Common Market, whose members include Britain and France. Its findings are enforceable in member countries.

People in Dover and the surrounding County of Kent fear the tunnel and ancillary works will kill the thriving cross-Channel ferry industry, swallow farm land and damage the environment.

About 500 protesters, representing environmental and union groups, jeered Wednesday as Mrs. Thatcher and President Francois Mitterrand of France arrived for the treaty signing at the medieval cathedral at Canterbury near Dover.

Three demonstrators were led away after scuffles with police and an egg was hurled at Mitterrand's car.

In a bid to reassure opponents of the project, Mrs. Thatcher declared: "Let me assure you: the government is alive to your concerns."

Referring to problems that have plagued the project since it was first proposed during Napoleon's reign in 1802, she said the treaty "has brought to the brink of fruition a project that has challenged engineers, entrepreneurs and governments on both sides of the channel for generations."

Mitterrand said both governments were determined to see the tunnel completed. "It is an act of will and determination on the part of the two governments for the present and the future," he said.

Mrs. Thatcher, whose government has been shaken by the resignation of two Cabinet ministers over rival rescue bids for a helicopter company, and Mitterrand, whose Socialist government faces elections in March, stand to gain politically from the project.

The tunnel, the biggest civil engineering project in modern European history, will create thousands of jobs in the economically depressed construction industries of both countries.

New Haitian Rulers Moving To Close Out Duvalier Ties

By KERNAN TURNER
Associated Press Writer
PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Haiti's new rulers shut down the government newspaper, announced the arrest of the capital city's mayor and said they may consider confiscating the property of deposed President Jean-Claude Duvalier.

The six-man National Government Council on Wednesday ordered the paper Le Nouveau Monde closed "for reorganization," but did not say when it might be reopened.

Other newspapers, some of which had been pro-Duvalier but privately owned, continue to publish.

The military-civilian council took power Feb. 7 when Duvalier, "president for life" since inheriting the title from his father Francois Duvalier in 1971, fled to temporary exile in France.

Police said they arrested the capital's mayor, former army Col. Frank Romain, Tuesday night and that he was in protective custody. Neighbors said a convoy of police vehicles whisked him off as a mob was threatening his home.

Romain is suspected of having close ties to the Tonton Macoute, Duvalier's hated and feared secret police.

"He will be treated like any other Macoute," a police source said.

The new government has disbanded the Tonton Macoute. Many of them were killed by vengeful mobs following Duvalier's departure, and others are in custody, including the woman who headed the organization for more than 15 years, Rosalie "Madame Max" Adolphe.

The new government's justice minister, Gerard Gourgue, said Wednesday the new leaders have not yet decided whether to put her on trial.

It also was undecided about whether to seize whatever property Duvalier left in Haiti, he said. "This may be done, but not yet... it may be the subject of an administrative inquiry," Gourgue told The Associated Press.

The family fortune has been estimated at $400 million but there is no sign how much of that Duvalier had with him, had put in foreign bank accounts, or may be left following his departure.

Where Duvalier will finally settle appeared to be in question again today. France has said he cannot remain there.

The British Broadcasting Corp. quoted Liberia's information minister, Carlton Karphe, as saying his country had not offered Duvalier asylum.

The Liberian foreign minister was quoted by the official Liberian News Agency on Tuesday as saying his West African nation would grant Duvalier asylum if asked.

French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas said Wednesday that Liberia informed France it was willing to accept Duvalier and that the deposed ruler's future would be resolved within the next few days.

A French Foreign Ministry spokesman said the government was doing everything it can to get Duvalier out of France "as quickly as possible."

Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, a career army officer who heads Haiti's new ruling council, has promised a "real and working democracy," a new constitution and national elections for a president and legislature.

Justice Minister Gourgue said the new government still is trying to organize, and that it is too early to discuss dates for elections and a new constitution.

He also said it has not been decided when political exiles might be allowed to return, saying "the internal stability of the country has to be assured before addressing that question."

Thousands of high school students shouting "liberty" marched through Port-au-Prince Wednesday afternoon to the gates of the National Palace.

Some chanted "Enough, enough of Cineas," a reference to Alix Cineas, a member of the government council sometimes criticized for his closeness to Duvalier.

The departure of Duvalier has not stemmed the flow of boat people from Haiti to the United States.

On Wednesday the U.S. Coast Guard returned 209 Haitians to Port-au-Prince who had been picked up in four boats since Duvalier fled, and a 40-foot boat containing about 50 more was spotted off the Florida coast.

The Coast Guard has turned back more than 7,000 Haitians since 1981.

Liberia Says Open To Duvalier Request

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — The government of this West African nation said in a statement today it had not offered asylum to deposed Haitian dictator Jean-Claude Duvalier but would consider any formal request made by him.

President Samuel Doe's press secretary, Patrick Kugmeh, issued the statement to clarify a report by the official Liberian News Agency Tuesday that quoted Foreign Minister Joseph Bernard Blamo as saying Liberia would have no reservation in granting Duvalier asylum if a request were made.

Today's brief statement said, "Liberia has not offered political asylum to former President Duvalier, but the foreign minister of Liberia said, 'Liberia will consider the matter if Mr. Duvalier was to make a formal request.'"

No other country publicly has indicated willingness to accept Duvalier, who is staying at a resort hotel in eastern France after fleeing Haiti last Friday.

The French government has said it will give Duvalier temporary asylum while consultations continue with other countries about giving him a permanent place to live.

Earlier today, the British Broadcasting Corp. quoted Liberian Information Minister Carlton Karphe as saying in an interview that his government had not offered Duvalier asylum and had received no request from him to do so.

In Paris, French government spokeswoman Georgina Dufoix on Wednesday quoted French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas as saying Liberia had told France it was willing to take the 34-year-old Duvalier.

Briefing reporters on the results of the regular weekly Cabinet meeting, she quoted Dumas as saying the problem of a place for Duvalier would be resolved in the next few days. She gave no further details.

Dumas told reporters earlier Wednesday that Duvalier would leave France in "a very short time."

The United States, which flew Duvalier, his family and aides out of Haiti and has been trying to arrange asylum for him, has close relations with Liberia.

Duvalier and his entourage are staying in the Hotel de L'Abbaye, a converted 11th-century monastery in Talloires on Lake Annecy.

Police in Talloires continued to guard all three entrances to the hotel on Wednesday, refusing to answer questions or allow a group of about 30 reporters and photographers to enter.

Witnesses Report Police In Scuffle

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Witnesses said police scuffled with supporters of opposition leader Kim Young-sam in front of his political office today, broke up his protest and forced him into a car to drive him home.

On Wednesday, the opposition began a campaign to collect as many as 10 million signatures in support of revisions in the South Korean constitution's articles on presidential elections. President Chun Doo-hwan strongly opposes any changes.

Kim, a special adviser to the New Korea Democratic Party, which opposes Chun, was stopped by police today as he attempted to enter the headquarters of the dissident Council for the Promotion of Democracy, the witnesses said.

Police also had stopped him earlier from going to the home of Kim Dae-jung, another leading dissident who was put under house arrest late Wednesday. The two Kims are co-chairmen of the council.

Kim Young-sam stood on the sidewalk in a wet snow in front of the council building and vowed not to leave until police let him enter. After five hours, a new group of plainclothes police moved in and separated him from a handful of aides surrounding him, said the witnesses who spoke on condition they not be identified.

After several minutes of pushing and shoving, he was forced into a sedan and driven to his home, they said.

Former POW Thinks SDI Necessary Move For U.S.

BY DON REUTER
 Reflector Staff Writer

The Strategic Defense Initiative is a necessary non-threatening defensive move which is supported by a great many of the nation's young people, according to the president of the American Defense Institute.

"The SDI is alive and well and working," said Eugene "Red" McDaniel, a former Vietnam POW who was scheduled to speak on national defense to East Carolina University students today at Mendenhall Student Center.

"There is support for the Strategic Defense Initiative," McDaniel said on his arrival at the Pitt-Greenville Airport. "We need to get it into place to eliminate the Soviets' nuclear warhead advantage."

The American Defense Institute, based in Washington, is a privately funded bipartisan organization backed by 22 members of Congress.

McDaniel, who grew up in Kinston, ran unsuccessfully for the 3rd District Congressional seat against Rep. Charles Whitley, D-N.C.

He said he hoped his bipartisan organization can reach the "pulse" of this nation's young people.

RED MCDANIEL

"Defense is not a partisan issue," he said. "Our mission is to encourage young people to get involved. We go the way our youth goes."

Lately, votes in Washington have reflected the bipartisan nature of defense, according to McDaniel.

"Fortunately, almost all members of Congress have now come around to the view that research toward the Strategic Defense Initiative ought to be funded," he said. "It is important that these things remain bipartisan because party tags tend to turn off even friends."

McDaniel, who has toured about 70 campuses in the past year, believes his organization is helping to make people proud of their country.

"We're trying to nurture patriotism and faith in this country," said McDaniel, who was a prisoner of war in Hanoi for six years.

McDaniel attended the Geneva Summit Conference last summer to show his support of President Reagan's Star Wars plan.

He also attended the conference at the request of 100 members of Congress to raise the issue of other POW-MIAs still unaccounted for since the Vietnam War.

"On the request of 100 members of Congress, I personally brought a letter to Geneva, asking Reagan to discuss the POW situation with (Soviet Premier Mikhail) Gorbachev," McDaniel said. "We believe the Soviets are the key to getting prisoners in Southeast Asia released."

McDaniel hopes recent speculation about POW-MIAs will result in more examination of the subject.

"President Reagan has said that this problem is the most important one facing Americans today," McDaniel said. "We need to check this out further. We're holding congressional hearings for the first time since 1974, and, hopefully, they will lead to a presidential commission."

Volunteers Sought

Persons interested in standing up for abused and neglected children can volunteer their services to the new Gardian ad Litem program in Pitt County.

Carol Mattocks, coordinator for the program in the 3rd Judicial District, which includes Pitt, Craven, Carteret and Jones counties, said a guardian ad litem - "ad litem" means "this litigation or for the case" - represents the best interests of any child involved in a court proceeding as a result of having been abused or neglected.

The guardian ad litem does not serve as the child's legal guardian, has no control over the child's property, and is not expected to provide a home for the child, Ms. Mattocks said. Rather, she said, the guardian ad litem investigates the situation that brings the case to court, monitors the case to see that it moves through the court and social system without unnecessary delays, and represents the child from the child's point of view.

Children come before the court as a result of stressful, traumatic family situations, Ms. Mattocks said. Causes of child abuse and neglect range from marital discord, alcoholism and inadequate housing, to poverty and lack of knowledge about child development or discipline. Some children are victims of sexual abuse or suffer life-threatening injuries from their parents inability to cope with the child's special needs.

"Each needs a friend (and) that friend is a court-appointed special advocate called a guardian ad litem," Ms. Mattocks said.

"The most important quality for a guardian ad litem is to care about children," she suggested. She said volunteers will be offered 15 to 18 hours of training for the program.

Ms. Mattocks said persons interested in volunteering may contact her every Tuesday between noon and 2 p.m. at the Trial Court Administrator's office at the Pitt County Courthouse, by calling 752-2979, or at other times by calling 633-0023 in New Bern. Persons may also volunteer by calling the juvenile clerk at the courthouse.

Chinese New Year

PEKING (AP) - One third of China's 1.03 billion people traveled to be with friends or family members over the lunar new year holiday, a news report said.

More than 340 million people traveled by train, airplane, boat or car during the 20 days before the new year, the Shanghai newspaper Wenhui Daily (Wenhui Bao) reported.

The holiday, known as Spring Festival in China, fell on Feb. 9 this year. Under the traditional calendar, the Year of the Tiger succeeded the Year of the Ox.

Carraway Seeks 9th District Seat

Lonnie W. Carraway of Greene County, who filed last week for one of two District 9 N.C. House of Representative seats available in Pitt and Greene counties, said Wednesday he believed his farming and legal backgrounds provide him with "the knowledge and ability to vote in the best interest of the citizens."

According to Carraway, the experience of watching his father "struggle from one summer to the next has given (him) a real understanding of the problems facing the farming community today."

Carraway also said he sees the main functions of the Legislature as that of enacting laws and of financial planning for the state. A lawyer and certified public accountant, Carraway is on the faculty of East Carolina University where he teaches business law to senior accounting majors.

Prior to attending law school, Carraway worked as an assistant auditor in the state auditor's office and in 1984 he was campaign chairman for Attorney General Lacy Thornburg.

Carraway is a member of Calvary Memorial Methodist Church, Ra-

Terry Sanford Raps Reagan Farm Plans On Tour Of Eastern Carolina

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C. (AP) — Vowing to "champion" the cause of the small farmer, U.S. Senate hopeful Terry Sanford attacked the Reagan administration's farm policies as he toured communities where tobacco and peanut growing pay the bills.

"I don't know why the administration has turned its back on farmers — but it has," Sanford, a Democrat, told supporters Wednesday during a stop in Ahoskie. "I will be the champion of the small farmer in North Carolina."

The ex-governor and former Duke University president said he would appoint a committee of about 30 "working farmers" to advise him on agricultural matters.

Sanford didn't propose specific measures for solving farm problems, but he said the first step was putting the issue at center stage, which he said President Reagan has not done.

Introducing himself to a new generation of voters, Sanford took his campaign to eight northeastern counties Wednesday as part of a monthlong effort to solidify his grassroots organization.

Generally viewed as the front-runner in the 10-candidate Democratic field, Sanford preached party unity to groups of activists, many of whom were local office holders.

"I'm tired of hearing people abuse and malign the Democratic Party," he told supporters at a restaurant in Roanoke Rapids. "We've got a record that the Democratic Party ought to be bragging about."

During the daylong swing, Sanford shook hands and signed up campaign workers, while giving pep talks to groups generally numbering around 50, stopping at towns from Roanoke Rapids to Swan Quarter in Hyde County. He also attended a Pitt County Democratic rally in Greenville.

In an interview, Sanford said he chose to make his first organizational trip in the rural northeast because he did so during his 1960 gubernatorial campaign.

He said he would make similar forays into other parts of the state during the next several weeks.

Accompanying Sanford on Wednesday was Greenville attorney Marvin K. Blount, an early contender for the senate nomination who withdrew and endorsed Sanford after he entered the race.

Saying the the Democratic Party "took a beating" in the 1984 election, Sanford said younger voters needed to be reminded about what he called the party's history of progressive leadership, especially in improving education, highways and the economy.

"We need a new voice in Washington," he said, "to tell young people they need to get involved. Tell them it's a lot of fun, it's worthwhile."

Democratic activists who attended the Sanford meetings said he enjoyed considerable support in the northeast, despite being out of office 20 years. He served as governor from 1961-65.

"Terry is doing real well up here," state Sen. J.J. "Monk" Harrington, D-Bertie, said during a stop in Northampton County. None of the other hopefuls is likely to seriously challenge Sanford in the area, Harrington said.

Also seeking the Democratic nomination are former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram; Mecklenburg County Commissioner Fountain Odom; Charlotte businessman Bill Belk; state school official Betty Wallace of Raleigh; Kathryn Harper, a Charlotte businesswoman; Raleigh businessman Milton Croom; Graham City Councilman Walt Atkins; black activist Ted Kinney of Fayetteville and Clinton Moore of Newton.

Belk Says Economic Needs Chief Issue Facing N.C. Campaigners

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer
Charlotte businessman William (Bill) Belk, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate, says solving economic needs is the priority issue in North Carolina.

In a brief appearance in Greenville Wednesday afternoon, Belk focused on the reality of "our bad economic situation, not only in North Carolina, but nationally because we are increasingly under an economic invasion."

A member of the Belk mercantile family, the 36-year-old Belk cited what he terms "the unfair terms of our international trade agreements, import and export quotas that are destroying American industry and jobs." Belk said he wants the United States "to deal from strength, not weakness. We must get tough with both our allies and countries not so closely allied to us."

According to Belk, "other countries are looking first at their own homelands for their principal markets. We are not. For years we have not protected our own businesses, our farm products. We're the freest market in the world, and other countries have taken and continue to take unfair advantage of our openness. It's time for us to be realistic, to get tough in our dealings, to take new directions in our trade and import agreements."

Citing developments of recent years in Third World countries, Belk warned that mainland China, "with its almost one billion people, has targeted a higher standard of living through increased industrialization and exports, inspired by what has happened in Taiwan. They will expect, like other countries since World War II, to be able to corner American markets with more cheaply produced products. We must be cautious."

Belk said he feels strongly that countries like Japan and West Germany, who made a comeback from economic chaos after the end of World War II, should feel obligated to come to our aid.

Belk said the global economic problem has worked against U.S. interests through "our own action. We have taken our equipment, our technology to them; they have copied us and become self-sufficient, at a tremendous cost to American taxpayers as well as the loss of markets."

Another issue Belk said he feels strongly about is the search for the location of hazardous waste sites. "Whatever decision is made, the ramifications and best solutions to this problem must be carefully studied. North Carolina is by no means a suitable choice," he said.

"Our population is fairly well distributed throughout our entire land area. Another factor is our heavy rainfall. Moisture is said to be detrimental to safe storage. There are any number of sites in the western states where you have immense areas of desert or unoccupied land. This is where wastes should be stored."

Grants Approved

The N.C. Department of Transportation has approved a total of $9,071 in state airport aid grant funds for projects at Pitt-Greenville Airport, according to Randy Doub, a member of the board of transportation.

Doub said $6,500 was approved for acquiring and installing perimeter security fencing and $2,571 to help fund an update of the airport master plan.

The projects are scheduled to be underway no later than June 30.

The office of the City Purchasing Agent is located at the Public Works Facility on Beatty Street. Interested vendors should call 752-4137 for information.

WILLIAM (BILL) BELK

"Already the government has vast storage of reserve oil supplies in these areas. Another consideration is that the U.S. government owns huge areas of land in several states which could feasibly and more economically be used for hazardous waste storage."

On the topic of possible tax increases to help reduce the national deficit, Belk said "tax increases should always be the last measure we should take. Why penalize the people for government inefficiency. It's up to the people to see that their representatives demand and work for government efficiency. In my time in Washington, I have been amazed at widespread waste. You certainly couldn't run a business the way government is run."

Responding to a question about why he chose to run against someone with the experience of former Gov. Terry Sanford, one of several Democrats seeking the nomination, Belk said "I've known Terry Sanford and have been a friend, a fan even, of his for a long time. He is a man who has achieved, and achieved well."

"I feel, however, that the Democratic Party has to have a new image in North Carolina in order to survive. I think my youth, I'm 36, is a definite asset. There are lots of young people who feel left out of the picture because so much is in the hands of the older generation. I'm aware I've not had the experience Sanford has had, but on the other hand I think it's time North Carolina elects younger people, to give us the years necessary to build up seniority in Congress, to get in line for the positions that come with seniority."

Although Belk has no previous political experience, he pointed to his long-time involvement in political activity. He is immediate past president of the Young Democrats of America; served five years on the N.C. Democratic Executive Committee; served on the 1984 National Voter Registration Committee, and was member of the board of directors of the International Youth Year Commission.

Shuttle Probe Shifts Back To Canaveral

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A presidential commission arrived at the scene of the Challenger disaster today, shifting its investigation away from Washington for a first-hand look at shuttle rocket boosters and ground facilities used in launching the reusable spaceplanes.

The special plane carrying members of the panel, headed by former Secretary of State William P. Rogers, touched down on the 3-mile-long runway used by shuttles returning from their space missions.

Commission members have focused their investigation so far on the performance of safety seals on the shuttle's booster rockets.

At Kennedy Space Center, the group scheduled two days of closed-door meetings and inspections, including a visit to the building where Challenger wreckage is being pieced together in a search for clues to the Jan. 28 explosion which destroyed the spacecraft and killed its astronauts.

The first stop was space center headquarters, where commissioners were to meet with launch control officials, NASA spokesman Hugh Harris said. After a full day of discussions, they will tour the vehicle assembly building on Friday, inspecting booster segments and the Church by the Rev. W.C. Elliott. Burial will be in the Winterville Cemetery.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Catherine Lincoln and Mrs. Icerlene Hill, both of Winterville; two foster daughters, Mrs. Ollie V. Recruiting Class Said Outstanding

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

THURSDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 13, 1986

East Carolina University had one of its most successful years in the recruiting wars yesterday, the first day for football players from across the country to sign.

"It all looks good on paper," Coach Art Baker said, "but of course, you never know how they're going to respond until they get on the field."

On paper, however, it could be one of the best — if not the best — recruiting classes ever. Baker and his staff signed 26 players, 17 of them from the high school ranks, eight from junior colleges and one, a transfer from a senior college.

A 27th player, Ernest Tynes, a defensive back from Miami, Fla., is expected to sign today, and that will probably wrap up the immediate signings.

"We have two other grants remaining," Baker said. "We're still checking on a few other players as to whether they will meet NCAA academic standards."

One player on this past year's team, wide receiver and kick returner Tony Smith, a 5-10, 170-pound sophomore from Fayetteville Cape Fear High School, who walked on last year, was awarded a full grant.

Eight of the 26 signees played in the Shrine Bowl of the Carolinas. They are Broderick Graves of Charlotte, Ernie Logan of Fayetteville, Joey Maddox of Shelby, Brian McPhatter of Fayetteville, Junior Robinson of High Point, and Anthony Thompson of Wilson; all on the North Carolina team, and Bill Maxwell of Ware Shoals and Al Witing of Dalzell on the South Carolina team.

Three of the signees come from this area, two of them from the high school ranks and the other a junior college transfer.

The JC transfer is Billy Michel, a 6-4, 245 pounder from Taft Junior College in California. The son of former ECU running back Tom Michel, Billy played his prep ball at Rose High School where he also played baseball. He also plays tight end.

The prepsters include Thompson, a 6-2, 190-pounder from Wilson Fike, and Mike Leggett, a 6-3, 210-pounder from Williamston.

Thompson, one of the state's top prospects will play either as a running back or a linebacker, the two positions he played in high school. Thompson was a two-year AP All-State pick, and was named this year to the Greensboro News & Record All-State team and the News & Observer's All-East team. Thompson was being sought by a number of schools throughout the South.

Leggett, a linebacker, is generally regarded as one of the top players at his position in the east. Leggett, an honors student at Williamston, chose East Carolina over Duke.

Charlie Libretto, one of the quarterbacks, was recruited by both Florida and Florida State. According to defensive coordinator Don Powers, who recruited him, he was rated one of the top two quarterback prospects in the state of Florida.

Baker said he would rank this year's recruiting class as between 8½ and 9 on a scale of ten.

"The way you evaluate your program is if your recruiting meets your needs or not," the second-year Pirate coach said.

"One of the things we took into consideration heavily was our own needs. Our areas of concentration were quarterback, wide receivers and running backs and all need to come in and help us in their first year.

"We also needed a kicker, but I feel with the exception of a kicker we've gotten help everywhere. Based on these needs I would have to say we've had an excellent year recruiting," Baker said.

"The junior college and freshman players coming in give us quality.

"As a coaching staff, you always have to look at the ones that got away and we lost our share, but at the same time we got some quality football players competing against some of the top universities in the country.

"It has been an excellent year recruiting and that has been a direct result of our coaches' efforts. They have worked harder than any staff I've ever been with. I think this group (recruits) project a very positive image for the future of East Carolina football."

Baker said he anticipated all of the players meeting the new NCAA academic requirements. "There are a handful who haven't met one or the other of the requirements (SAT score and grade point average), but we feel confident that they will meet them by the time the year is over."

The junior college transfers are, for the most part, already at East Carolina, as is the senior college transfer. The latter, Carl Barkers, a wide receiver, came to ECU from Wake Forest, but will have to sit out the 1986 season to regain his eligibility.

Following is a list of the ECU recruits, their position, height, weight, home town, and school:

Best Not Enough For Clemson

By The Associated Press
North Carolina took the "Best" Clemson had to offer, but nothing could stop the top-ranked Tar Heels.

Though freshman guard Michael Best gave the Tigers an unexpected boost, North Carolina turned to a couple of old reliables — Brad Daugherty and Kenny Smith to claim a 79-64 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory Wednesday night.

In other ACC action, Virginia downed Wake Forest 69-53. Tonight, 17th-ranked North Carolina State hosts Maryland in a league contest, while Clemson hosts Florida A&M.

Daugherty scored 13 points in the second half for a total of 23, while Smith scored all 16 of his points in the second period and had four steals.

"We came back in the second half and played well offensively, getting the ball into Daugherty. Kenny Smith woke up at halftime and played very well," Coach Dean Smith said.

The coach caught an errant Clemson pass on a short hop and injured the little finger of his left hand. He had the hand bandaged with a splint, but didn't know if his finger was broken.

North Carolina led Clemson 29-26 at the half, and had trailed by as many seven points in the first period.

In the second half the North Carolina offense got the ball inside to the 7-foot Daugherty and shot 60 percent from the floor to put the game away.

North Carolina is 25-1 overall and 9-1 in the ACC. Clemson, which has lost nine of its last 10 games, is 14-10 and 2-8.

"It is not frustrating at all when

Qualifying Races May Answer Big Question

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The biggest question at Daytona International Speedway this week is whether anybody can beat Bill Elliott.

The answer to that question, or at least an indication, may come today in the 7-Eleven Twin 125-mile qualifying races to determine starting positions three through 30 for Sunday's $1.4 million Daytona 500.

It's obvious the red-haired driver from Dawsonville, Ga., still is the man to beat in his swift red Ford Thunderbird.

Elliott, the defending champion here and the man who dominated superspeedway racing in 1985, already has locked up the pole position for Sunday with a fast lap of 205.039 mph.

It is apparent, however, that the new, more aerodynamic General Motors models — the Pontiac Grand Prix 2+2, Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, Buick LeSabre and Oldsmobile Delta 88 — are a lot closer to the established Thunderbirds.

Dale Earnhardt, driving a Monte Carlo with the new sloped back window, managed to hold off Elliott on Sunday to win the 20-lap Busch Clash. But that was inconclusive, since it was such a short race and Elliott was having obvious handling problems in the turns.

"The 125-milers will be more help to us than usual," said Junior Johnson, who owns the Chevrolets driven by defending Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip and Neil Bonnett. "The more we run the better."

"We've got some new equipment that performed super in wind tunnels, but the race track provides the only true test.

"Because of rain and various setbacks like wrecks and blown engines, we haven't gotten in nearly enough practice this week. We need the 125-milers for the practice, and to find out what really works and what doesn't."

Kyle Petty, one of a stock car-record 26 drivers to qualify here this week at more than 200 mph, said, "The qualifiers are great races for the spectators because it's flat-to-the-floor racing. There's no cruising. "For a lot of teams who didn't qualify very fast (in time trials), it's the only chance they have to make the 500. They have to race their way to the top 15 positions or maybe not make the race on Sunday."

"The 125-mile races are the most dangerous races we run," Waltrip said. "That's because guys are out there trying to improve their positions to make the race, trying to figure out their cars and taking chances. A lot of guys will be running way over their heads."

Elliott, who is pretty well recovered from a bout with the flu this week, is one of only two drivers who have locked in starting spots in Sunday's 40-car lineup. The other is Geoff Bodine, who qualified on the outside of the front row at 204.545 mph.

10 points, while Tyrone Bogues had 10 assists and a blocked shot.

The Demon Deacons dropped to 7-17 overall and have not won in 12 ACC outings this season. No league team has gone through the season winless since Georgia Tech went 0-14 in 1981.

Wake Forest Coach Bob Staak said his team couldn't get things going at either end of the floor when his team needed it most.

"In the second half, we couldn't get anything generated offensively," Staak said. "We executed well against their zone. But their defense did affect us. We just weren't able to get enough going defensively to generate anything offensively."

Syracuse Tops Villanova

By The Associated Press
 If North Carolina Coach Dean Smith could have pointed the finger at one thing, it would have been defense and the reawakening of Brad Daugherty and Kenny Smith. But he couldn't point the finger at anything. It was in a splint. Smith, who injured his finger on an errant pass in the first half, saw his top-ranked Tar Heels come alive in the second half Wednesday night for a 79-64 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over Clemson. The Tar Heels led by only three at halftime after trailing by as many as seven points. Smith said he wasn't sure whether the finger was broken. "I looked down at it and it was pointed a different way," he said. In the only other game involving a ranked team, No. 12 Syracuse defeated Villanova 77-72. Daugherty scored 13 of his 23 points in the first 10 minutes of the second half as the Tar Heels built a 59-45 lead with 10:21 left in boosting their record to 25-1 and 9-1 in the ACC. Smith scored all 16 of his points in the second half. Clemson, which shot only 37 percent from the floor, fell to 14-10 and 2-8. "Defense is the only thing that kept us in the game in the first half," Smith said. "We came back in the second half and played well offensively, getting the ball into Daugherty. Kenny Smith woke up at halftime and played very well." Freshman forward Michael Best led Clemson with 20 points in his first start. No. 12 Syracuse 77, Villanova 72. Point guard Dwayne Washington scored a career-high 33 points and had seven assists to pace Syracuse past Villanova in the Big East Conference. Wendell Alexis added 19 points as the Orangemen improved to 19-3 and 10-1 in the conference. Syracuse led 36-31 at the half but fell behind 44-43 on a free throw by Mark Plansky with 15:46 to play. Villanova held onto a slim lead until the Orangemen went ahead for good, 57-55, on two free throws by Washington. Both Rafael Addison and Rony Seikaly of Syracuse were slowed by injuries in the game. Addison had six points, Seikaly five. Plansky led Villanova with 21 points. Unranked Teams In the only other ACC game, Olden Polynice and Andrew Kennedy had 16 points each, and Virginia took the lead for good four minutes into the second half en route to a 69-53 victory over struggling Wake Forest. In another Big East game, Bill Donovan scored a season-high 29 points, including an 18-foot jumper with five seconds left, as Providence edged Seton Hall 67-66. In the Southeastern Conference, Joe Ward had 17 points as eight players scored in double figures in Georgia's 101-70 victory over Vanderbilt. Guards Andrew Moten and Vernon Maxwell scored 30 of Florida's 38 points in the second half as the Gators defeated Mississippi 66-57. Chuck Person hit four free throws in the waning minutes and scored 23 points to lead Auburn over Mississippi State 69-64. John Williams and Derrick Taylor paced Louisiana State over Tennessee 75-50 with 21 points each. In the Southwest Conference, Texas Christian remained in a tie for the league lead with Texas as Carl Lott's 19 points propelled the Horned Frogs to a 70-53 victory over Texas A&M. John Brownlee's 21 points led Texas over Baylor, 55-50. Ricky Jackson's jump shot at the buzzer gave Houston a 71-69 victory over Rice. William Mills scored 16 points to lead a balanced Arkansas attack as the Razorbacks tripped Texas Tech 79-72 in overtime. In the Big Eight, Brian Carr and Harvey Marshall scored 16 points each and Nebraska went on a 13-4 run to start the second half as the Cornhuskers defeated Oklahoma State 68-52. David Robinson scored 19 points and set a Navy record with 25 rebounds to lead the Midshipmen to a 78-53 victory over Fairfield.

Golf Fun For Rogers

HONOLULU (AP) — Bill Rogers isn't even close to the level of proficiency that once made him the best player in golf. But the game is fun again. "And that's important," Rogers said. "That's the first step and it's a big step."

"It's fun again. The better I play the more fun it is. And the more fun it is, the better I play," said Rogers, who tees off today for the first round of the $500,000 Hawaiian Open golf tournament.

"I'm enthusiastic about playing again. I want to play again," said the lean, quick-stepping Rogers, who rose to the top of the game with his Player of the Year performance in 1981.

"It was a dream season. I had a very positive attitude about things then," Rogers said.

He won three tournaments on the American tour and was second in the U.S. Open that year. He won in Japan. He won twice in Australia, including the Australian Open, and he won the British Open.

But the phenomenal success took its toll. Trips to and from Japan, to and from Australia, to and from Europe — two or three or four of each — began to wear.

"On that last trip back I knew I was in trouble. I just kept looking at my watch. I was counting the minutes, really, actually counting the minutes until I could get home," he said. He suffered burnout.

Instead of a joy, golf became a chore and his game began to slip.

Rogers, inevitably called "Buck" by his fellow pros, really wasn't concerned.

"I just had no enthusiasm, no desire," Rogers said. He won a tournament in 1983, "but that was a fluke, just something that happened," he said.

He reduced his schedule, playing less yet enjoying it less. In the last two seasons he finished 134th and 128th on the money-winning list.

"I took some time off. I took a long look at things. I knew would never play good again unless I could get that old desire going again.

"I think I have. I know I'm more interested in playing, more excited about playing, than I have been in a long time.

"I don't expect any dramatic change all at once. It'll take some time to get it all back, but this change of attitude is a big plus."

Rogers faces one of the strongest fields in the history of this tournament.

The 144-man lineup includes Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson, Masters champion Bernhard Langer of West Germany, defending champion Mark O'Meara, U.S. Open champ Andy North and Hubert Green, a two-time Hawaiian Open winner and current PGA title-holder.

Other major contenders include Lanny Wadkins, Calvin Peete, Hale Irwin, former Hawaiian winners Jack Renner, Isao Aoki, Wayne Levi and Bruce Lietzke, and last week's San Diego winner, Bob Tway.

Stingless Hornets Not Giving Up

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Even after 43 games, all losses, over the last two seasons, the Hornets of Harris-Stowe State College haven't given up.

"Surprisingly, their confidence is up," said Ted Savage, one of the coaches for the Hornets, who hope to snap the losing streak Friday night against Columbia College of Missouri.

"They know they can win if they just put it all together," added Savage, and Columbia might just be part of the elusive winning equation. Columbia defeated the Hornets 90-83 two weeks ago, a decidedly closer outcome than most during Harris-Stowe's 0-28 campaign, in which the Hornets have been outscored by an average of 31 points a game.

A loss to Columbia would leave Harris-Stowe, an inner-city St. Louis school, only two shy the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics record of 46 straight defeats set in 1973 by Southwest (Minn.) State.

If they are unable to come through against Columbia, the record would be on the line in year-ending games against Westminister and Eureka, Ill.

"We've got a shot at it. I think we're going to do it," Savage said of his hopes to end the drought. "We're not giving up on the season. We're going to win one or two games, and next year we're going to come back and surprise a lot of people."

Don Cooksey, who took over as co-coach with Savage after this year's loss string reached 25, believes the key to Friday's games is "to play good, inside ball against them. They've got a big man in the middle."

"They've got a good shooting guard. The reason we lost to them in the last game was we got beat on our own offensive boards," he said.

"This is a good, good bunch of young men. They've got a lot of desire, and I think they're improving every game."

Savage, a former major league baseball player who performed in the mid-1960s for the St. Louis Cardinals, and Cooksey, a former minor league, took over following a 113-57 loss Jan. 27 to Southeast Missouri State.

"I think (for) one thing, their enthusiasm was a little bit misdirected," Cooksey said of the inherited squad. "Tactically, they had some of the right plays, but they did not execute them."

Southeast Missouri handed Harris-Stowe two of its worst defeats — the other a 127-49 thumping — and Missouri-Kansas City administered a 98-36 setback.

"They have a tendency to run quite a bit when there's no need to run," Savage said of his team. "We're just trying to get them settled down and run when they're supposed to and set up and take their time when they're supposed to."

As if the turmoil involved in the defeats and having four coaches within two years weren't enough, Harris-Stowe was forced to contend with another major obstacle this season. Three freshmen who had combined to average 40 points a game were ruled academically ineligible.

Their departures left Cooksey and Savage with a squad of two juniors, one sophomore and a dozen freshmen. Terry Dale, a 6-foot-5 freshman who joined the squad at the semester break, has averaged 15 points a game and 15 rebounds as its leader.

"When I came in, we were 0-20, but I thought I could come in and be the spark," Dale said. "But it hasn't come together. We find ways to lose."

Jordan May Sit Out Year

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls has decided to sit out the next four weeks and possibly the entire NBA season, based on advice from three physicians treating him for a broken foot.

Jordan's decision was endorsed by Bulls Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf, who said Wednesday night, "His future career is much more important to us than winning games now."

Faced with the possibility that Jordan wouldn't play again soon, the Bulls announced earlier Wednesday the signing of 6-4 guard Michal Holton to a 10-day contract.

Holton, 24, of the Continental Basketball Association, saw his first action with the Bulls in Philadelphia Wednesday night, as the 76ers took a 106-98 victory in the National Basketball Association.

Holton, formerly with the Phoenix Suns of the NBA, was signed Tuesday by Jerry Krause, the Bulls' vice president of operations. The signing came moments after Holton led the CBA All-Stars to a last-second 110-108 victory over the league's defending champion, Tampa Bay.

Holton could finish the season for the Bulls, who have only 10 players on the roster, if Jordan does not return.

Jordan, idle the past 3½ months with a broken foot, had been consulting with bone specialists in Eugene, Ore., and Cleveland this week before reporting back to team doctors.

Jordan once said he wanted to resume playing this weekend, but his agent, David Falk, encouraged him to sit out the last 31 games of the Bulls' season.

Greene Central Defeats Tigers

WILLIAMSTON — Greene Central ended the regular season on a sour note for hosting Williamston last night, taking a 56-48 basketball victory in the non-conference encounter.

Williamston did gain a 57-40 victory in the girls game.

The contests closed out the regular season for the Tigers, both teams finishing 6-16 overall. Greene Central, with one game left to play, is now 11-10, while the girls are 4-17.

Williamston took a 14-11 lead in the first period of the boys' game and continued to pull away in the second period. The Tigers outscored the Rams, 11-5, and ran their lead out to 25-16.

But in the third period, Greene Central took command of the game, pouring in 23 points while holding Williamston to 14. That cut the lead away and left it tied at 39-39 as the final period opened. In that, the Rams outscored Williamston, 17-9, to claim the win.

O.J. Sheppard led Greene Central with 14 points while James Hill had 13 and Woodrow Wallace hit 12. Vince Speller led Williamston with 10 points.

Williamston's girls also opened with a lead, taking a 12-10 advantage after one period. They also expanded their lead, with an 18-11 margin in the second quarter, giving the Lady Tigers a 30-21 lead to take into intermission.

Then, in the third period, Greene Central — as they would later in the boys' game — rallied, 16-3. That pushed the Lady Rams into a 37-33 lead.

But, unlike their male counterparts, the Lady Tigers came back, holding Greene Central to just three points while scoring 24 of their own to put the game away. Monique Pou led Williamston with a season-high 33 points. Joy Albritton led Greene Central with 17.

JV Game: Greene Central 45, Williamston 44.

McGee Paces Laker Victory

By The Associated Press
Coming off their most embarrassing moment of the season, a rout at the hands of the lowly Golden State Warriors, the Los Angeles Lakers weren't about to slip again versus another tailender.

So they turned to Mike McGee, who responded with 34 points in a 126-100 romp past the Phoenix Suns Wednesday night.

"The guys got me the ball a lot for the easy layups," McGee said. "I also had my jumper going early and got hot and they just kept giving me the ball. That's the way we always play—as a team."

McGee rarely is the hero for the star-studded Lakers, the defending NBA champions. And he had a lot of help from the usual cast: Kareem Abdul-Jabbar finished with 24 points while James Worthy had 20, rookie A.C. Green 12 and Michael Cooper 10. Earvin "Magic" Johnson handed out 11 assists.

"We came off a humiliating loss.

We were highly motivated," Coach Pat Riley said. "We caught Phoenix down a bit and a little out of synch and we were just clicking."

The defeat dropped Phoenix to 20-30, 18 games back of the first-place Lakers in the Pacific Division.

Elsewhere, it was Detroit 113, Knicks 99; Philadelphia 106, Chicago 98; Dallas 117, Denver 110, and Milwaukee 103, Indiana 97.

Pistons 113, Knicks 99

The Pistons won their 11th in the last 15 games as center Bill Laimbeer scored 21 points and Kelly Tripucka added 19 against New York, which was without rookie center Patrick Ewing, out with a sore knee.

The Pistons went on a 24-8 run that gave them a 49-35 lead with 4:25 remaining in the second quarter and the visitors never got closer than nine points the rest of the game.

The Knicks were led by Gerald Wilkins' 20 points.

76ers 106, Bulls 98

Maurice Cheeks had 22 points, including nine in the final period to offset a Chicago rally. The visiting Bulls had trailed by as many as 15 points in the third quarter and were down 14 with 9:20 left in the game. But a 10-0 run brought them within 90-86 with 6:16 remaining.

Cheeks, who also handed out nine assists and made four steals, managed a field goal and four free throws to give the Sixers breathing room.

Moses Malone scored 22 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, with Charles Barkley adding 17 points and 13 rebounds for the Sixers. George Gervin collected 30 points for the Bulls, who lost their fourth straight and 12th in the last 14 games. The Bulls got more bad news Wednesday when they learned Michael Jordan would probably sit out the rest of the season, recovering from a broken ankle.

"We had the game pretty much under control," Cheeks said. "Then they made some shots, especially on second shots, and got back in the game."

"They match up well against us with the big guard (Gervin) and that gives us problems."

Mavericks 117, Nuggets 110
Sam Perkins sparked a 12-2 Dallas streak late in the fourth period with six of his 17 points and Rolando Blackman scored 25 points.

Dallas, trailing 100-96 with 6:33 remaining, got a three-point play from James Donaldson, a layup by Perkins, two free throws by Derek Harper and two more by Perkins to open a 105-100 lead. They never trailed again.

Dallas, winners of three straight and eight of nine, got 20 points from Jay Vincent and 18 from Mark Aguirre.

Denver lost center Wayne Cooper with a torn calf muscle early in the first period. Alex English, the league's scoring leader, was held to 19.

Bucks 103, Pacers 97

Milwaukee, playing without star guard Sidney Moncrief, got 20 points by Terry Cummings and rallied from an 18-point third-period deficit in Indianapolis. Moncrief was out with a sore left knee and the Bucks struggled early, falling behind 68-50 early in the third period.

But they chipped away with a 19-10 spurt and then a 14-0 run to jump ahead.

Indiana scored eight straight points to grab a 97-96 lead on a Clint Richardson layup with 1:25 to play. But the Pacers never scored again.

Indiana was led by Herb Williams with 25 points and 14 rebounds.

"We just laid an egg," Bucks Coach Don Nelson said of the first half. "I'm not going to blame it on Sidney not playing. I never blame a bad performance or a loss on an injury. We just have to adjust."

Indiana's Wayman Tisdale was out with the flu.

Richardson Tests Okay; Says He Had The Flu

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP)

The drug-related problems of Micheal Ray Richardson have been a burden on the New Jersey Nets, but teammates were confident the troubled guard was not using drugs when he missed a team practice earlier this week.

Richardson rejoined the New Jersey Nets Wednesday after a urinalysis test on which his career hinged showed no trace of drugs in his system, the National Basketball Association said Wednesday.

"Just because of the amount of time drugs stay in the system I don't think he would have come back this soon if his problems were drug related," said center Mike Gminski. "There are a lot of maybes involved. Maybe his stay in the rehab center was too short, maybe he was rushed back too soon."

Richardson missed Tuesday's night game against Detroit after he was fined an undisclosed amount of money and suspended for skipping practice and failing to keep an appointment with Dr. Dennis Quinlan, the team physician.

Richardson said he missed the practice because of the flu.

The 30-year-old veteran, who career has been plagued by a cocaine dependency, was required to take a drug-screening test Tuesday at University Hospital in Newark to determine whether he had been using drugs.

If the test had come back positive, it would have been Richardson's third violation of the league's drug enforcement policy and would have carried a lifetime ban, with a possible re-instatement no sooner than two years from now, and then only with approval of the league and the union.

After passing the test, Richardson took an airplane flight to Cleveland to join the team for tonight's game against the Cavaliers.

Gminski said Richardson's woes have been a burden on the team, but he added that the players have a lot of compassion for him.

"You want to see him beat this thing, but that doesn't mean he is going to come right back and be a great player," said Gminski. "He is in a tough situation. If I miss practice and a doctor's appointment, I'd be fined. But I wouldn't be in the headlines. He is under a lot more scrutiny than the rest of us."

Lewis Schaffel, the Nets executive vice president, said the scrutiny is necessary considering Richardson's history with drugs.

"I am happy for him," said Schaffel. "I like him very much. He is an endearing person. The problem is professional."

Richardson apologized for the confusion he caused.

"I was sick, that's all there was," Richardson said in statement released by the club. "I know now I made a mistake by not going to the doctor. I guess every move I make will be scrutinized. I made my bed and I am going to have to lie in it."

The league's drug enforcement policy went into effect in 1983 and Richardson violated it later that year. His second offense was in late December after a team Christmas party. He had two previous drug problems before the league policy went into effect.

ornia drug center at the start of the year and rejoined the team on Jan. 22 in Denver.

"The sooner I feel 100 percent and can concentrate on playing basketball the better," Richardson said. "The only thing to worry about now is to help the Nets win."

Nets forward Buck Williams said Richardson is having some domestic problems. He reportedly is no longer living with his wife and children.

"I guarantee this thing is not drug related," said Williams on Tuesday. "I'll put my name on the line that it's some other type of problem, a domestic problem or whatever you want to call it. I feel for Sugar like I felt for my father who had a drinking problem for a while. But Sugar is a fighter and I want to think positively about this."

Despite his absences, Richardson still leads the Nets in scoring with a 16.3 average and in assists, with 7.5 per game.

Coming Back

Baseball Hall of Fame slugger Willie Mays pulls out his retired jersey at a press conference in San Francisco Wednesday, as he announced his return to the Giants as a special assistant to the club's president. Mays will wear his old jersey number once again as a coach during spring training. (AP Laser-photo)

Say Hey! Look Who's Back In Giant Uniform

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Willie Mays will bring San Francisco Giant uniform No. 24 out of retirement in two weeks, putting it on for his return to baseball as a spring training instructor with his old team.

"I can teach a lot of things — baserunning, throwing, hitting. I think I can teach everything, if they want to learn," Mays said Wednesday. "My job will be to go there and have fun, make sure the kids have fun and, if they can play, try to help bring the most out of them."

The Giants open spring training next week in Scottsdale, Ariz. Mays is scheduled to join them on Feb. 26 and stay through March. He will do some public relations work for the club the rest of the year.

The Hall of Famer who totaled 3,283 hits, 338 stolen bases and 660 home runs, most of them for the Giants, over a 22-year playing career was out of baseball the last six years. He was banished in 1979 by then-Commissioner Bowie Kuhn because he signed a contract to do public relations work for an Atlantic City hotel-casino.

Peter Ueberroth, the current commissioner, declared last year that Mays and Mickey Mantle, who also worked for a casino, could return to the game. Mantle came back last season as a TV announcer for his former team, the New York Yankees, and Mays was hired Wednesday as a special assistant to Giants President and General Manager Al Rosen.

Rosen, who also hired Mays for the gambling industry job in 1979, introduced Mays at a news conference Wednesday and said, "This is where he belongs."

"There is so much glamor attached to him. I think he'll have a tremendous influence on some of the younger players. I'm very confident he can be an excellent teacher."

Mays said, "This is not just another day for me. It's one I've been looking forward to for a long time."

Prep Grid Year May Lose Week

By RICK SCOPPE

Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina, which hasn't defeated South Carolina in the Shrine Bowl in five years, could get just the boost it needs to halt that skid from a proposal to cut a week off the high school football season.

North Carolina high schools now have 11 weeks to schedule 10 contests, but under a proposal by the N.C. High School Athletic Association that would be cut to 10 weeks and avoid a conflict with the Shrine Bowl.

In the past, the state championships have been played on the Friday before the Shrine Bowl, meaning players whose teams made the state finals were unable to play in the annual all-star game in Charlotte.

"We are doing everything we can to avoid conflict with the Shrine Bowl," said Charlie Adams, executive director of the NCHSAA.

South Carolina's high school playoffs usually end one full week before the Shrine Bowl.

The association will mail ballots to its member schools on April 15 asking athletic directors if they can schedule 10 games in 10 weeks. The ballots are due back in May 1 and will be given to the NCHSAA board of directors May 6 for a final decision.

"We've thought about it every year... But, we asked the Shrine Bowl last year to move to a week later and then we expanded the playoffs," Adams said. "We were the ones that caused the problem."

The NCHSAA expanded its playoffs to 32 teams in each classification, which extended the season one week. In the past, 16 teams made the playoffs in the 4-A, 3-A and 2-A classes and eight teams competed in the 1-A bracket.

"We're going to ask them to sit down and see if they can do 10 in 10, and if they can, we'll recommend moving the season back a week," Adams said. "It would, in effect, pull one week out of the season."

Adams said he didn't know whether the schools in the state would approve the change.

"I don't have any feel for that," he said. "I think there will be some (athletic directors) who say yes, but I think others won't be able to do it... because of scheduling problems."

Adams said the proposal has nothing to do with the fact North Carolina has not beaten the Sandlappers in five years and trail in the 49-year-old series 26-19-4. Funds from the Shrine Bowl benefit the Shriners Hospital for Crippled Children in Greenville, S.C.

"I'd love to win the Shrine Bowl, but it's not a life-and-death matter," he said. "The purpose of the all-star game is to raise money for the crippled children."

"My concern is that I'd like to see all the kids in North Carolina have a chance to play in the game," he added. "It's an all-star game but we haven't always had our best players there because of the conflict (between the Shrine Bowl and the state playoffs)."

No Brass Rails, Stained Glass Set For Cameron

DURHAM (AP) — Duke athletic officials watching the Duke-Georgia Tech basketball game on TV say they nearly fell out of their chairs when NBC's Dick Enberg said Cameron Indoor Stadium would be renovated with brass railings and stained-glass windows.

"I watching with some of the football coaches and when he said that they all turned to me and I said, 'Hey, I don't know what he's talking about,'" said Tom Mickle, Duke's director of sports services. "It was a shock to us all."

"They're going to make a real sports antique out of it and I salute them for it," he said.

"Duke's plans for Cameron, which had a capacity of 8,564, haven't been set. Mickle said the school is considering three options — raising the roof, renovation and building a new facility.

"We were talking about how much charisma it had, and he asked what were our plans down the road," D'Armi said. "Well, I'd already showed him our new football office facility, and I said when we moved those people over, then we were going to do some renovating in here (meaning the offices)."

"He jokingly said 'You ought to put up stained glass windows,'" D'Armi said. "And I said, 'Yeah, that would be good idea.' He and I are good friends and I guess he felt he just had to say something about the charisma on the air and that just came out."

"Or you could just renovate Cameron and really make it nice," he said. "The concourse upstairs really needs some work. All that will accomplish is to make seats in Cameron cost more and more."

Legislators Informally Endorse Insurance Bill

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill designed to make hard-to-buy property and liability insurance more available should have no trouble winning lawmakers' approval next week during a special session of the General Assembly, legislative leaders say.

"I don't foresee a whole lot of problems," Sen. Joseph E. Johnson, D-Wake, told House and Senate inurance committees Wednesday. "Ten other states have similar plans that have worked well."

The committees endorsed the legislation, but the vote was unofficial because the Legislature — and thus the committees — are not in session. The Legislature will convene Tuesday in an emergency session to consider the bill.

J. Ward Purlington, the legislative liaison for Gov. Jim Martin, said the governor generally embraced the proposed bill. Martin called the special session at Insurance Commissioner Jim Long's request because liability insurance has become increasingly difficult to buy in North Carolina.

Johnson and Rep. Martin Nesbitt,

D-Buncombe, chair the insurance committees, which will make recommendations about possible legislation for liability insurance next week.

The proposed legislation would: — Authorize the insurance commissioner to order the formation of pools to provide certain types of coverage, including liability insurance for day-care centers, that insurance companies won't sell. Under the plan, the commissioner would be able to require that coverage if the companies don't voluntarily do so.

— Authorize formation of a pool requiring the availability of fire and homeowners' coverage in less populous areas. Now, such coverage guaranteed across the state only in towns of at least 10,000 people.

— Allow three panels that are studying insurance industry problems to report to the General Assembly at its short session in June. The panels are considering issues involving the lack of coverage and skyrocketing premiums, such as the cost of medical malpractice policies.

Long told members of the committees that he would use such power only as a last resort. But he said he needs it because insurance companies have refused so far to voluntarily provide the coverage.

He said the state's economy is being jeopardized because adequate liability insurance isn't available for a wide range of businesses.

"It is my deepest concern that the current availability crisis in the property and casualty insurance industry might continue to grow to the point that it adversely affects our state's economy," Long said.

GOING HOME — Sandra Collier, 31, gives a thumbs up signal as she leaves Charlotte Memorial Hospital en route to her home in Forest City on Wednesday. Mrs. Collier received back-to-back heart transplants at the hospital more than a month ago. (AP Laserphoto)

Double-Transplant Heart Patient Leaves Hospital

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Sandra Collier showed courage to undergo two back-to-back heart transplant operations and become Charlotte's first heart transplant recipient, her cardiologist says.

"It took an immense amount of courage for her to do something like this," Dr. Alan Thomley said Wednesday as doctors discharged Mrs. Collier from Charlotte Memorial Hospital. "She was willing to go through a transplant in a center that hadn't done one before."

The 31-year-old mother of four gave a thumbs-up sign as she left the hospital to return to her Forest City home Wednesday, five weeks after receiving two transplants within 24 hours.

"Her release was based on the fact that we weren't doing anything for her that couldn't be done at home," Thomley said. "She has no evidence of the two things that worry us most: infection and rejection."

Mrs. Collier appeared at a news conference for the first time. She suffers from laryngitis, a lingering effect of a dangerous bout with pneumonia three weeks ago, and could not talk with reporters.

During a brief going-away celebration, Mrs. Collier smiled when hospital officials presented a birthday cake to her oldest daughter, Dawn, who turned 12 Wednesday.

For the rest of her life, Mrs. Collier will have to take a daily dose of cyclosporine, a drug that depresses the immune system to keep the body from rejecting a transplanted organ.

Mrs. Collier suffered from cardiomyopathy, a degenerative heart disease, and would have died without a new heart.

She underwent a first transplant Jan. 6 and, when that heart didn't work properly, she received a second donated heart in less than 24 hours.

"Maybe it was not a coincidence we got a second heart in six hours," Dr. Francis Robicsek, the lead transplant surgeon, said Wednesday. "If you ask anybody in the transplant business, they said it was impossible. In Sandra's case, it was possible. Maybe we should thank somebody up above."

Coordinator Will Lead Waste Fight

RALEIGH (AP) — A National Park Service official has been hired to coordinate North Carolina's efforts to persuade federal officials to exclude two state sites as candidates for a high-level radioactive waste underground repository.

E. Evan Brunson, a special assistant to the deputy director of the National Park Service, will be paid $34,524 to "be the leading edge" of the state's opposition to the inclusion of those sites in the federal search for a burial site, a spokesman for the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development said Wednesday.

"He will be the point man for everything," said Don Folmer, NRCD's director of public affairs. "We are looking at a minimum of three and possibly as many as eight to 10 years that this thing is going to be going on."

U.S. Department of Energy officials have selected a site east of Raleigh and a site west of Asheville as two of 12 sites to receive further evaluations for a high-level waste burial ground that might be tunneled out of crystalline rock from 1,000 feet to 3,000 feet deep.

NRCD officials have held meetings to begin galvanizing opposition to North Carolina's inclusion in the selection process for a second national high-level waste repository, which the Department of Energy envisions being in operation early in the 21st century.

Rep. Bill Hendon, R-N.C., has introduced a bill opposing repositories in North Carolina.

Brunson's job, which begins Feb. 24, will include coordinating studies showing why a high-level repository is inappropriate for North Carolina because of population trends, underground geology or surface features.

Duke Chair Is Endowed

DURHAM (AP) — The Jefferson-Pilot Corp. of Greensboro will endow a $1 million professorship in neurobiology at Duke University Medical Center, a company official said.

Louis C. Stephens Jr., president of Pilot Life Insurance Co., announced the endowment at a luncheon Wednesday for Greensboro philanthropist Joseph M. Bryan.

The luncheon followed groundbreaking for the Joseph and Kathleen Bryan Research Building at Duke Medical Center. Bryan donated $10 million for the construction of the building.

Bryan is director and member of the executive committee of Jefferson-Pilot Corp., a holding company whose principal subsidiaries are the Jefferson Standard and Pilot Life Insurance companies.

"We are honored — and challenged — by the creation of this professorship at the medical center," said Dr. William G. Anlyan, Duke chancellor for health affairs.

Farmers Will See Less Federal Assistance During Coming Year

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Regardless of the fate of the balanced-budget law, farmers in North Carolina likely will have to cope with less federal assistance as Congress struggles to rein in the runaway deficit, officials say.

A federal court has ruled a key provision of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law unconstitutional, and the case is before the U.S. Supreme Court. But even if the lower-court ruling is upheld, congressional leaders say they are committed to deep spending cuts.

If the cuts are made in the across-the-board manner prescribed by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings or in quantities sought by President Reagan in his proposed 1987 budget, agricultural programs ranging from soil conservation to poultry inspection could be scaled back or phased out. But farm leaders and federal officials said in interviews this week it was far too early to tell specifically how the changes would affect the typical North Carolina farmer.

"We're getting a rumor per minute, but the facts are kind of slim," said Wayne Brooks, who heads the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service for North Carolina and South Carolina.

Perhaps the biggest unanswered question for North Carolina is how USDA will classify government loans that are the foundation of the federal tobacco program.

If, for example, the 4.3 percent across-the-board cut mandated by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings for fiscal 1986 takes effect, it is unclear whether federal price supports would plunge by that amount. Tobacco advocates hope their program will be treated differently from those that support such commodities as corn and wheat, because the leaf program in theory is self-supporting.

Farmers pay an assessment for each pound of tobacco sold. The assessment funds the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp., which buys leaf that fails to sell for at least the support price plus one cent per pound at auction.

However, the co-op also depends heavily on loans from the federal government, which could lose up to $1 billion under a tobacco program bailout sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., that calls for cigarette companies to buy surplus leaf at discount prices.

If USDA elects not to exempt the tobacco loans from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cuts, it would be yet another blow to farmers, said T. Carlton Blalock, executive director of the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina.

According to Blalock, the 4.3 percent funding reduction would lower the 1986 tobacco price support by about 6.2 cents per pound. "That could be enough to break a farmer who had made leasing and rental arrangements assuming they were going to have an average support price" of $1.438 per pound as the Helms bill would provide, Blalock said.

Eventually, he added, farmers might decide to vote the leaf program out of existence, deciding it no longer guaranteed high enough prices to justify its existence.

Another area where federal cuts could affect farmers is the Agricultural Extension Service, which is administered by land-grant colleges such as N.C. State University. Chester Black, director of the service in North Carolina, said it was printing fewer publications and local agents were visiting fewer farms.

The extension service keeps farmers informed about technological developments in agriculture such as planting and harvesting procedures, disease prevention and pest control. Any significant reduction in extension operations would be especially harmful to tobacco growers, Blalock said.

"Probably no commodity in the world has as much new technology developed for production than tobacco," he said. "It's very complex now, and farmers need the advice of unbiased professionals."

IN THE STATE

Farmers who this year can expect to receive a 25 percent federal subsidy for crop insurance would see the assistance phased out by 1991 under Reagan's proposed budget.

There also would be less loan money available for farming enterprises, rural housing, business and industrial projects in rural areas and rural community projects such as water and sewer system improvements and fire and rescue service, said Larry Godwin, state director of the Farmers Home Administration, the lending arm of USDA.

But Godwin, a Reagan appointee, defended the proposed cutbacks. "Everybody's squawking like a bunch of damn hens every time their program is cut," Godwin said. "People are taking a totally self-serving approach to this budget."

If the cuts go through, he added, the FmHA might try to encourage more private loans to farmers by guaranteeing repayment.

Another potential result of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings — which Reagan already has proposed — is charging meat processors for federal quality inspections. The cost eventually would be passed to the consumer, said Red Swift, an aide to Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C.

Federal funding of soil conservation programs and flood-control projects would be slashed under the Reagan budget. In North Carolina the USDA Soil Conservation Service has canceled all training programs and equipment purchases, reduced travel to a "bare minimum" and will eliminate 13 jobs through attrition this year to meet the 4.3 percent cut mandated by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings for 1986, said Coy Garrett, state conservationist.

Should the far deeper cuts called for under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings take effect in 1987, layoffs might be necessary, Garrett said. He warned that cutbacks in soil conservation programs could backfire.

Without help in erosion control, soil productivity will suffer, he said. And when farm runoff contains fertilizer, pesticides and herbicides, it can pollute the state's water supply, Garrett said.

"That's our water to drink, swim in, boat in," he said. "That affects everybody."

Florida Senator Still At Duke

DURHAM (AP) — The chance is "none whatsoever" that Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., will pull out of her re-election race against Florida Gov. Bob Graham because of a flareup of neck and back problems, an aide says.

"Paula is a real fighter in everything she does," Sen. Majority Leader Bob Dole said Wednesday from Washington after a doctor and an aide to Mrs. Hawkins held a press conference at Duke University Medical Center to dispel rumors that she might pull out of the hotly contested race.

"She has never allowed adversity to get the best of her and I know she will tackle her re-election bid with all the energy and spirit she exhibits in fulfilling her senate duties," Dole said.

Aide Tom Kleppe said Mrs. Hawkins had flown to Durham a week earlier to seek treatment at Duke. She was admitted to the hospital under an assumed name "for her privacy," Kleppe said under heated questioning from Florida reporters who said they had been told Mrs. Hawkins was on vacation.

Mrs. Hawkins did not appear at the news conference because she was undergoing testing, Kleppe said. "I feel fine," she said in a prepared statement. "My treatments are proceeding nicely and I already notice a real improvement in the pain I have been experiencing."

"I am looking forward to getting back to the Senate and back on the campaign trail," Mrs. Hawkins said.

Dr. Blaine S. Nashold Jr., a neurosurgeon, said surgery was possible for Mrs. Hawkins, who was being tested and treated for pain stemming from recurring back and neck problems from an injury she sustained when a television studio backdrop fell on her four years ago during an interview.

"We have formed no definitive conclusions," Nashold said. "We are considering the possibility that surgery may be required."

Mrs. Hawkins will be discharged from the medical center Sunday night so she can attend a Senate hearing in Florida the next day, Nashold said. She is expected to return to Duke University Medical Center Monday night, and Nashold said doctors would determine by the end of next week whether surgery is necessary.

Sex Education Policies Debated

RALEIGH (AP) — Opponents of teaching contraception in schools say only abstinence should be taught, but supporters say it's needed to lower the teen-age pregnancy rate in North Carolina, which ranks 11th in the nation.

Neither side opposed teaching public school students about biological development. And both sides agreed that some form of sex education should be taught to combat the images of casual sex seen on television and in movies.

"Lucy and Desi slept in single beds and wore pajamas up to their chins," Barbara Huberman, chairman of the N.C. Coalition on Adolescent Sexuality, said in comparing television shows from the 1950s to today's shows.

But the speakers before the Legislature's Study Committee on Teaching About Adolescent Sexuality Wednesday debated whether information about contraceptives should be provided and whether teen-agers should be taught that sex before marriage is morally wrong.

"You can't go in there and preach your moral values," said Dr. Mary Vernon, director of Teen Link, a Durham County health program for disadvantaged and minority youth. "Everybody is not going to believe the same thing."

Psychologist Convicted

DURHAM (AP) — A District Court judge has convicted a Chapel Hill psychologist of failing to report a suspected case of child abuse involving two children confined by their adoptive parents in a basement.

But a lawyer for psychologist Arne L. Gray said Wednesday that based on what he had been told by a Durham couple he was counseling, Gray had not believed the couple was abusing the children. Gray's lawyer warned the ruling could affect the way all psychologists, ministers and family counselors do their jobs.

Gray was convicted in Durham County District Court Tuesday on two counts of failure to report child abuse, a misdemeanor. Judge David Q. LaBarre fined Gray $200 and handed down a 30-day suspended sentence. Gray has appealed the conviction to Durham County Superior Court. The parents have not been charged.

LaBarre said in a telephone interview Wednesday that he found substantial evidence that Gray knew the two children had been abused when their adoptive parents forced them to stay in a "dingy, cold, damp basement" for several days at a time as punishment.

During a hearing last week, Gray's attorney argued that Gray did not believe the children were being abused and that Gray felt the family could be helped through therapy.

Virginia Schools Barring Tobacco Use

By DOROTHY GAST
Associated Press Writer
ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — Virginia harvests about $200 million worth of tobacco annually, but that's not stopping officials at the state's high schools from banning student use of cigarettes, snuff and other tobacco products on campus.

At least half a dozen Virginia school divisions have new policies prohibiting students from using tobacco, and some are even barring teachers from smoking.

"We thought it was very inconsistent to teach health and then turn around and give students an opportunity to establish poor health habits," said Dennis W. Hammack, principal at Martinsville High School, which banned student tobacco use a year ago.

Henry County, which surrounds Martinsville, produced a million pounds of flue-cured tobacco in 1985.

Although there are still some inflections, Hammack said, "I think we've had total acceptance by the community and acceptance by a majority of the students."

Virginia is fourth among the states in tobacco production, following North Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee, said Clarence Dunkerley, statistician with the Virginia Crop Reporting Service. In 1984, he said, Virginia harvested 116 million pounds of tobacco worth $207 million.

But a reliance by states on the tobacco industry isn't stopping some of their school districts from limiting student smoking, said Michele Kling, director of print media for the American Lung Association in New York. High Schools throughout the country are banning smoking, she said.

Joining that group recently was Radford High School, where Principal Edlow Barker estimated that half of the student tobacco users were "dipping," or using smokeless tobacco.

"The students very plainly will say they recognize that smoking is bad, but they don't recognize that dipping is harmful," he said.

Alleghany High School prohibited possession and use of tobacco starting Feb. 5 for students and teachers.

Other Virginia schools that have banned tobacco use during the past few years include Spotsylvania and Chesterfield counties, Bristol and Christiansburg, officials said.

The National School Boards Association is planning an October conference for school board and health officials to focus on the risks of tobacco use, said Jeremiah Floyd, the group's executive director. After the conference, he said, the group plans to put together a manual for schools showing various smoking policies that districts have tried.

The project and manual are part of a push by the association, the American Cancer Society, the American Lung Association and the American Heart Association to meet the U.S. surgeon general's goal of a smoke-free youthful society by the year 2000, Floyd said.

New UNC President Holds Belief That 'Conflict Can Be Creative'

CHARLOTTE (AP) — C.D. Spangler says he knows his forcefulness as state Board of Education chairman troubled the state superintendent and the board, but clashes were inevitable among strong-minded people dedicated to education.

"To me, conflict can be creative," said Spangler, who was named president of the University of North Carolina System last month. "As chairman of the state Board of Education, I felt it was my responsibility to bring issues to the board for discussion...."

Spangler, a Charlotte businessman, questioned the need for regional education centers, which Phillips has wholeheartedly supported. Neither man lost his temper, board members said, but their discussion was tense.

Tempers did flare, board members said, when Spangler asked the board to reaffirm its stand favoring an appointed state superintendent. Phillips, who is elected, had testified against an appointed post at a legislative hearing.

Friction extended beyond the Spangler-Phillips confrontations. Four of the six board members interviewed recently said Spangler sometimes acted too quickly to suit them. They also said they frequently bristled at his management style.

"He was really dogmatic," said one board member who asked not to be identified. "There was not a lot of conversation from board members. It was his board.... You need to give everybody the opportunity to participate."

C.D. SPANGLER

"A good board and a good chief executive do not handle controversy by ignoring the controversy or by hiding the controversy," he said. "It is natural that there would be differences."

Spangler, 53, had a "knack for frustrating people sometimes because of that aggressiveness.... All of us chafed a little bit," said Craig Phillips, state superintendent of public instruction.

"He clearly brought a strong leadership style... a deep conviction about the importance of education," Phillips said. "He brought a sense of urgency in moving to excellence. He brought high expectations."

Phillips, whose approach to school board business is methodical, differed with Spangler in philosophy as well as style. Their conflict was apparent twice during the board's Jan. 15 meeting.

Former Gov. Jim Hunt, who appointed Spangler, said he believed Spangler's take-charge attitude transformed a passive board into an active policy-making body.

"The public schools... have needed a leader of great strength and energy who would assert the positions of the state board of education and not just wait for other people to act," Hunt said. "So what we've had is the state board becoming the place where initiatives are taken."

Despite their criticisms, school board members agree Spangler smoothed the turbulent relationship between the board — which sets curriculum and statewide policy — and the Legislature.

Board member Betty Speir of Bethel said the relationship between the board and the General Assembly is "probably the strongest now (it's) been in several years."

Board members also said because of Spangler, state business leaders began to view the public schools as a training ground for future employees.

"He brought credibility for education to the business community," Ms. Speir said.

Teen-Ager Fails To Find Alternative, Will Go To Prison

RALEIGH (AP) — A 16-year-old Wake County woman has been sentenced to three years in prison after her attorney said he could not find a better alternative for his client.

Evelyn Reade of Raleigh was sentenced on Tuesday after pleading guilty to common-law robbery.

Prosecutor Evelyn W. Hill said defense lawyer William B. "Bud"

Crumpler told Superior Court Judge Anthony M. Brannon that Miss Reade had no family or friends who would agree to keep her.

Court records show the teen-ager, whose case normally would have been handled in juvenile court, was bound over to Superior Court at the order of Chief District Court Judge George F. Bason.

Ms. Hill said the case had bothered her a great deal.

"The majority of criminals that I see," she said, "are people who chose to be criminals. I honestly believe that this person chose this way of life as a means of survival."

Miss Reade, who will serve her sentence at the N.C. Correctional Center for Women in Raleigh, was originally charged with kidnapping and armed robbery of a man who picked her up on a downtown street July 29, 1985. She was 15 at the time.

In exchange for her guilty plea, the kidnapping charge was dismissed and the armed robbery charge was reduced to common law robbery, Ms. Hill said.

Kimble Named District Judge

RALEIGH (AP) — A 30-year-old Onslow County attorney was appointed to the 4th Judicial District judgeship on Wednesday by Gov. Jim Martin, a spokesman for the governor said.

Wayne Kimble of Jacksonville will serve the remainder of Judge Walter Henderson's term, which expires Dec. 2, 1988. Henderson is retiring as judge of the 4th district, which encompasses Duplin, Sampson, Jones and Onslow counties.

Kimble, a native of Norfolk, Va., has been in private practice since 1983. He is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and of the Wake Forest University law school.

Anteaters

PEKING (AP) — The official Communist Party newspaper has denounced the promotion of scaly anteater meat as a delicacy to foreigners because the animal was in danger of extinction.

A front-page article in the People's Daily, part of a column contributed by readers, said some people still turn a deaf ear to appeals to protect the animal. Because a large number of scaly anteaters have been caught, killed and eaten, the remaining number is small, the article said.

At Last, Respectability For Cannon Movie Firm

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Cannon Group is moving its corporate headquarters from cramped offices in a Hollywood high-rise to a gleaming new building on the edge of Beverly Hills.

Once scorned as invading schlockmeisters of B-movies, Cannon, which received two Oscar nominations for "Runaway Train," is at last gaining a little respectability.

Manahem Golan and Yoram Globus, the two Israeli cousins who run the movie company, have long sought equal standing with the industry's established film companies and have embarked on a number of projects they hope will accomplish this goal.

With a string of box office hits behind them, including "Death Wish III" and "Breakin'," Cannon is trying to eradicate its reputation for flesh and violence by doing quality projects with quality stars. However, Cannon will not entirely give up semi-exploitation movies.

The company has signed Dustin Hoffman to star in "LaBrava," based on an Elmore Leonard novel. Hoffman reportedly will receive $6.3 million and 22.5 percent of the gross revenues. Julie Andrews is starring in Cannon's "Duet for One," now filming in England.

Cannon has paid Sylvester Stallone

$12 million for starring in and rewriting "Cobra Top." The company has also signed him for "Over the Top" at an undisclosed but no doubt similar fee.

John Travolta has signed for an untitled project and the company plans to do "Superman IV" with Christopher Reeve.

Nominations for the 58th Academy Awards include Jon Voight for best actor and Eric Roberts for supporting actor in "Runaway Train." Voight won a Golden Globe award for best actor.

On Feb. 14, Cannon has its biggest release: 1,700 U.S.-Canadian theaters for "The Delta Force," an action-adventure about the rescue of a hijacked plane by a special fighting force. The cast includes Lee Marvin, Chuck Norris, George Kennedy, Shelley Winters, Robert Vaughn and Susan Strasberg. It was directed by Golan.

All this is heady stuff for the two producers who made "Death Wish III," "Bolerio," "Invasion of the Blood Farmers" and "Space Vampires." Their biggest moneymaker so far has been "Breakin'," the break-dancing movie that cost $1.2 million and grossed $60 million worldwide.

"We have never worked for a reputation. If they call us schlockmeisters, that's their problem, not mine," said Golan in an interview.

Golan, 56, was born in Tiberias. He devoured American movies as a boy and became Israel's foremost play director. He studied film at City College of New York and worked in Hollywood under the quickie maestro, Roger Corman.

Returning home in 1963, he formed Noah Films with Globus. Their enterprise prospered with four of their films receiving nominations for foreign-language-film Oscars.

In 1979, the cousins invaded Hollywood. They bought the faltering Cannon Group and set up shop on Sunset Boulevard.

As the new boys in town, they discovered how hard it was to talk to the major actors and directors. "We were foreigners, and we had a reputation for making low-budget, semi-exploitation films. But we did not stop at that. We learned the business, particularly how not to lose money," Golan said.

Cannon operates with a staff of 200, miniscule by Hollywood standards. Golan and Globus pay themselves $350,000 a year each, compared to $2 million for Disney's Michael Eisner and $3 million for 20th Century Fox's Barry Diller.

One of their early mistakes was releasing movies through established companies. "We were weak, and we figured it would be a big thing if MGM released our pictures," said Golan. "We fell in a trap. ... We had to wait until we were brave enough to form our own distribution company. We should have done it from the start."

Cannon does everything in-house, except develop the film. "We have to send out for that," Golan said. "Everything else is done here. We don't hire outside producers; we do it all ourselves."

Globus, 42, appears the more thoughtful partner, lean-faced with smiling eyes and a well-trimmed beard. He attended business school and served two years with the Israel Defense Force before joining his cousin in forming Noah Films. He has earned a reputation for daring and innovative film contracts, such as the recent $12 million deal with Stallone.

Cannon's competitors claim the company is adding to the industry's cost problems by overpaying superstars. Globus disagrees.

"Cannon is unique in the industry today," he said. "It is the only company left that is running as a movie business. Except perhaps for Warner Bros., all of the companies are money vehicles for big institutions. Listen to them and you hear money talk, not movie talk."

The company's movie budgets average $5 million as opposed to an industry average of $15 million.

New Series, New Tricks

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Barney Rosenzweig, long used to working one way as executive producer of CBS' "Cagney & Lacey," has had to learn new tricks for his new series, ABC's "Fortune Dane."

"For 'Cagney & Lacey' we have an old warehouse in the Lincoln Heights area (of Los Angeles), and everyone connected with the show works there," he said. "We have all our offices and sets there."

"We work just the opposite on 'Fortune Dane.' We do it all on location in Oakland. When we started we hoped to find a warehouse. But we didn't know what areas we'd be returning to. This is not a cop show. I made the decision to do it like a miniseries, all on location."

Carl Weathers, who stars in the title role and is Rosenzweig's partner in the production, wanted to do it in Oakland because he had lived there and had played professional football there with the Raiders before the team moved to Los Angeles.

"Fortune Dane" stars Weathers (Apollo Creed in the "Rocky" movies) as a former pro football player and police detective who becomes a trouble-shooter for a female mayor, played by Penny Fuller. Adolph Caesar ("A Soldier's Story") plays Weather's father in the first episode, which makes its debut Saturday.

"The hardest thing in the world is launching a series," Rosenzweig said. "The first six episodes are tougher than doing a movie."

Rosenzweig is a veteran TV producer. He produced the miniseries "East of Eden" and several TV movies, including "Angel on My Shoulder" and "One of My Wives Is Missing." His series have included "Daniel Boone," "Charlie's Angels" and "American Dream," which he created.

He had the idea for "Cagney & Lacey," which was then written as a TV movie by his wife, Barbara Corday, now president of Columbia Pictures Television, and Barbara Avedon. Ronald M. Cohen wrote the first episode of "Fortune Dane" and is co-executive producer with Rosenzweig and Weathers.

"This hasn't been easy," said Rosenzweig. "This is the first time I've ever shaped a show for a star. This is Carl's show. I cast the people who work for me in the other show. They work for me. I've been an autocrat so long it's hard to be a democrat. Carl had the commitment for the series and he came to me to help him. I already had a show on the

Miss Wyman Back

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Oscar-winning actress Jane Wyman, who underwent abdominal surgery in early January, resumed her role Wednesday as the scheming matriarch of CBS' "Falcon Crest."

Miss Wyman, 72, the former wife of President Reagan, was welcomed back to the show by a banner across the sound stage and bouquets of flowers, said Greg Taylor, a spokesman for Lorimar Productions.

A red carpet extended from the door to the "Falcon Crest" house on the stage at CBS-MTM Studios in Studio City.

air. It was a greater risk for him." Rosenzweig said the new working methods are difficult for him. "I'm not used to consulting with people. Doing two shows simultaneously is also a new experience, especially when one is out of town. That means I have to delegate authority, which is hard for me. I'm a very hands-on producer."

He said in formulating the show he decided to play on Weathers' larger-than-life image.

Lawmakers Upset Over Base-Closing Plan

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says Congress can save money by closing military bases, but several lawmakers have lambasted Weinberger for naming bases in the districts of three powerful House Democrats who are critical of the administration's defense budget.

Weinberger, in a letter to the Senate Armed Services Committee made public Wednesday, said action on the three bases could be used to "determine the will of Congress."

The three are a large section of Lowry Air Force Base in Denver, the Philadelphia Naval Hospital and the Army Materials Technology Laboratory in Watertown, Mass.

Sen. Gary Hart, a Colorado Democrat and critic of the administration's request for an 11.9 percent increase in authorized defense spending next year, quickly charged that Weinberger was playing politics.

Hart noted that the three facilities are in the districts of House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts; Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee; and Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

"Secretary Weinberger is trying to put his most effective critics on the defensive," said Hart. "It won't work. Anyone who has passed an eighth grade civics class knows the secretary is making a statement not about the budget, but about politics."

"Clearly, Secretary Weinberger is not interested in cutting the defense budget," Hart added. "He seems to be playing a game of political security and not national security."

Said Gray spokesman William Epstein, "Chairman Gray thinks they're playing politics with the budget. He finds it far more than coincidence that out of the more than 1,100 military bases we have, Secretary Weinberger can find only three to close and they just happen to be in Philadelphia, Massachusetts and Colorado. We're not going to stand for it."

Andrea Camp, Ms. Schroeder's press secretary, said the congresswoman was "suspicious" of Weinberger's motives.

She quoted Ms. Schroeder as saying, "It wasn't motivated by politics; it looks like it was motivated by stupidity. They are not really closing the base but just transferring its functions to other facilities and paying $200 million to do so. Only Cap Weinberger could come up with a plan to spend money instead of save it."

An aide said O'Neill could not be reached for comment.

Pentagon spokesman Robert Sims denied that the selections were politically motivated.

"There is nothing political in this at all," said Sims. "I don't think the secretary's decision in any way was governed by partisan politics."

Weinberger, in his letter to Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., chairman of the Senate panel, noted that he was providing the list of potential closings at Goldwater's request.

Weinberger's letter, released publicly by Hart, did not describe why the three bases were picked.

Closing military bases, and their attendant payrolls, has always been politically unpopular, and Congress has enacted laws blocking the Pentagon's ability to shut down military facilities.

Last year, Goldwater tried, with Weinberger's support, to roll back some of those provisions. Goldwater argued that it would save money to close unnecessary bases.

The Senate Armed Services Committee approved new provisions giving the Pentagon more authority to close bases, but the measure died.

Congress, in its deficit-reduction law that requires cuts in Pentagon spending, has specified that the Defense Department may not close any bases to trim spending.

The Pentagon says it takes at least two years to close a facility, even if Congress does not erect any new barriers.

Weinberger's letter also asked the lawmakers to remove congressional restrictions on disposing of property, to agree that the Pentagon can override restrictions in the budget bills, and to agree that closings can't be blocked by suits filed by federal employees.

Sims said Weinberger "views this, as Sen. Goldwater does, as an important issue and one we should move forward on."

Fred Hoffman, another Defense

Department spokesman, said the last time the Pentagon proposed a major closing was in 1979, when it suggested that 157 facilities could be shut down and $474 million a year saved. But few bases actually were closed, he said.

Sims said the three bases were picked either because their facilities are outdated or too large or because the affected service believes the work can be performed elsewhere.

The Army Materials Technology Laboratory sits on 48 acres of land but employs only 755 military and civilian workers, Sims said. According to the Army, the lab requires an annual operating budget of about $47 million and its functions can be moved to existing labs.

The Philadelphia Naval Hospital was built in 1935 and employs about 820 people, Sims said. During the Vietnam war, it had a daily patient load of about 1,000, but that has dwindled to about 135 and the Navy would prefer to close the hospital and build a smaller clinic at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, he said.

Lowry AFB, because of its location near burgeoning Denver, no longer functions as an active flight base and sits "on some of the most valuable land the Air Force controls," Sims said.

The base is used as a technical center to provide training in avionics, munitions and intelligence and also by the Air Force Accounting and Finance Center and the Reserve Personnel Center.

The Air Force said Wednesday it wanted to close the training center but leave the accounting and personnel centers in place. That would result in the transfer of about 4,500 employees and 5,000 students to other training facilities.

Meatpacker Has Full Work Force

USTIN, Minn. (AP) — Geo. A. Hormel & Co. expects to have its flagship plant here at full production within weeks now that it has reached its quota of 1,025 workers despite the six-month strike by meatpackers.

Former strikers make up about half of the current workforce, while the others are permanent replacements, Richard L. Knowlton, president and chief executive officer, said Wednesday.

Hormel will be at full production "in a matter of weeks, and some areas will come on very fast, and will be right back up to production in a matter of days. Others where it takes more skill, and those in the more labor-intensive sides of the business, the pork kill and cut, it will take a little bit longer but we'll be there," Knowlton said.

Local P-9 of the United Food and Commercial Workers union had three pickets at each plant gate Wednesday morning as workers entered.

The number of National Guard troops in Austin has been reduced to about 325, said state Adjutant Gen. James Sieben. About 800 Guardsmen were in Austin last week, although only about 100 had been stationed at the plant gates.

The plant reached its employment goal of 1,025 workers Wednesday, plant manager Deryl Arnold said. Officials were working to reach full production in the plant's slaughtering, cutting and boning operations.

Also Wednesday, a Hormel attorney said the company will seek dismissal of civil contempt motions filed against the striking union local, several members and supporters, and will instead seek criminal charges in connection with demonstrations outside the plant.

The company has accused the union members and supporters of violating a judge's order limiting demonstrations.

Company officials believe Hormel has supplied prosecutors with enough evidence to support charges of criminal contempt or obstructing the legal process, said Hormel attorney Jim Cavanaugh.

Smoking Down

TOKYO (AP) — The percentage of Japanese adults who smoke fell to an all-time low of 38.3 percent last year, according to a survey conducted by Japan Tobacco Inc., a private tobacco company.
 Company spokesman Toshiyuki Doi said concerns about health may be one reason fewer people were smoking in Japan. He said the survey of 16,000 adults last May showed a percentage of smokers six-tenths of a percentage point below the previous low of 38.9 percent, set in a 1984 survey.

"A strange phenomenon, Watson," remarked Holmes. "If the fitness was going to succeed, there was no need to take it!"

The Great Detective and his colleague, Dr. John Watson, had spent the evening with Holmes's brother, Mycroft, at the club playing a few rubbers of bridge. The hand that caused this comment occurred when the two brothers were pitted against Watson and Inspector Lestrade of Scotland Yard, who had completed the foursome.

After Watson opened the bidding with one diamond, Sherlock entered the fray with a takeout double. Lestrade tried a mild bit of pre-emption, but Mycroft had too good a hand. His jump to four clubs was invitational, and Sherlock felt his void in diamonds and fine club fit entitled him to proceed to game.

Watson made the textbook lead of the king of diamonds, and Mycroft summed up the hand in an instant. The threat to the contract was that East held the king of spades and West the ace-queen of hearts, in which case the defense could come to a spade trick and two hearts.

Not giving the defenders any time to signal what they held, Mycroft ruffed the opening lead in dummy and immediately cashed the ace of spades and continued with a low spade. Imagine Inspector Lestrade's predicament. It was hard to believe Mycroft would play that way if he had a doubleton spade, so he played low. Declarer's jack won and he quickly claimed his contract.

Note that Mycroft's play could not cost. If West did indeed hold the king of spades, he would make a spade trick but the king of hearts would be safe from attack. Later, declarer would discard one of his hearts on the queen of spades to secure his game.

'Almanac' Postponed

NEW YORK (AP) — Forever has been delayed — again.

NBC Chairman Grant Tinker has said his commitment to NBC's news magazine, "American Almanac," would be "forever" once it went on the air. But the prime-time program, anchored by Roger Mudd, still can't get off the ground on a weekly basis.

"We're honor-bound not to go on until we're ready," NBC News President Lawrence K. Grossman said Wednesday after it was announced that the news show would not join NBC's regular lineup March 4; as scheduled. Its Tuesday night spot will be filled by the action-adventure series "Stingray."

Grossman said he met with the show's executive producer, Ed Fohy, on Tuesday and determined that the program did not have enough hard-edged and issue-oriented stories in reserve to start its weekly run. "We didn't want to go on and have to play catch-up," he said.

No new start date was targeted. "But it won't be too far off," Grossman said. In the meantime, there will be no monthly installments. "Almanac" has been broadcast once a month since August, but has not won much support from viewers. In its last outing in January, it ranked 58th among 67 shows.

Some officials within NBC News have been predicting privately that "Almanac" would never be broadcast during the regular prime-time season that ends April 20. Grossman said the delay was solely the news division's decision, and that there was no pressure from Tinker or NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff.

At a recent industry luncheon in New York, Tartikoff was asked about the expected low weekly ratings for "Almanac." He joked that he might first introduce Mudd as a neighbor on NBC's top-rated hit, "The Cosby Show."

But NBC, bidding for its first outright prime-time victory ever, was expected to absorb low ratings for "Almanac" and still gain the season's top spot, according to industry analysts.

Basement Of House Where Lincoln Died Yields Trash Relics To Diggers

LINCOLN DIG — Stephen Potter, chief archeologist for the national capital region of the National Park Service, and his assistant, Robert Sonderman, work together in the basement of the house where Abraham Lincoln died in Washington. They are digging for long-buried layers of trash that may yield clues about how city dwellers lived in Lincoln's day. (AP Laserphoto)

By ROBERT M. ANDREWS
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — As tourists and schoolchildren troop through the house where Abraham Lincoln died, archaeologists are excitedly digging up the basement for long-buried trash that may yield valuable clues about how ordinary city dwellers lived in Lincoln's day.

The rare urban excavation is taking place at the Petersen House, a national historical site that stands in the shadows of steel-and-glass office buildings in downtown Washington.

The archaeologists are working directly beneath the first-floor bedroom where then-President Lincoln died on April 15, 1865, the morning after he was fatally shot by actor John Wilkes Booth while attending a play across the street at Ford's Theater.

The search, which began in late January, has uncovered more than 5,000 well-preserved articles of trash buried in layers for as long as 135 years under the rotting floorboards of the basement.

"Except for the tragic events that plunged this home into the pages of history, these artifacts might have been lost forever, destroyed along with the rest of the neighborhood to make room for new construction," said Dr. Stephen R. Potter, chief National Park Service archaeologist for the national capital region.

"As it is, we've found ... neat little time capsules buried in the basement which could tell us a lot about the lives of ordinary Americans of the mid-19th century," Potter said.

The refuse includes fragments of ceramic dishes, jugs and vases, tiny wine goblets, perfume bottles and medicine jars, machine-cut nails, shoes, painted horsehair-covered plaster, mica sheets possibly used for window panes, children's ceramic marbles and broken pencil stubs, a bone domino, tobacco pipe bowls and stems, straight pins, needles and buttons, and a lady's haircomb.

There also are the remains of meals served in the Petersen boarding house — bones of cows, pigs, chickens and turkeys, some still bearing the marks of a butcher's knife.

Three or four damaged glass microscope slides have been traced through other documents to Julius and Henry Ulke, two amateur entomologists who worked at the Smithsonian Institution and were boarders at the Petersen House when Lincoln died there.

The refuse was tossed casually into the backyard by the family of William Petersen, an immigrant German tailor and father of seven children, who built the house in 1850 and took in boarders to supplement his modest income.

A few years later, Petersen built a rear addition to the house, probably a kitchen wing with rooms above. After it was gutted by fire, trash and ashes from coal-burning heat stoves were used for the new foundation of a rebuilt addition completed shortly before Lincoln's death.

The Petersens' refuse was preserved by successive wood flooring supported by five layers of trash, burnt debris and a sealant of asphalt poured in the late 1950s as a buffer against high ground water, Potter said.

The articles of trash were discovered last November by a Park Service maintenance man who tore up rotting floorboards and dug beneath the top asphalt layer to find out what lay below.

Certain objects tell Potter and his assistant, Robert C. Sonderman, that the Petersens, who, according to the 1860 census, lived there with a servant girl and seven boarders, were "a modest, working-class family of limited means."

The lady's haircomb, for example, was made of bakelite, the forerunner of plastic, rather than more expensive tortoise shell; the children's marbles were ceramic; and the women's beads were lowly glass.

The animal bones and discarded shell of oysters and clams suggested that the Petersens' diet was "good but not extravagant," heavy on pork, fowl and shellfish with only occasional cuts of more costly beef.

Potter and Sonderman will analyze the artifacts more thoroughly when the excavation is completed. Their aim is to detail the architectural history of the Petersen home more precisely and to sketch a social history of its inhabitants and their inner-city neighbors.

"The homes of ordinary, working-class Americans aren't ordinarily preserved, like those of the 'great men' of our society," Potter said. "Average people might not make it into the history books, but they make history nevertheless."

Educator Expects 'Minority Majority'

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A minority baby boom in the 1990s will heighten barriers of color, language, culture and attitudes, and make classroom life more difficult for teachers, an education expert says.

"The reality is that we will be facing the most difficult-to-educate children we've ever hatched in this country," Harold L. Hodgkinson, a senior fellow at the Institute for Educational Leadership in Washington, said Wednesday.

He addressed about 300 educators at the annual middle states regional conference of the College Board.

"Even since 1982, we've had a 'minority majority' in all our big-city schools and there's no way I can see, through gentrification or anyway else, that that will change," he said.

Non-whites already comprise 51 percent of the students in elementary schools in Texas and California, Hodgkinson said. Arizona and Maryland follow at 33 percent and New York is next at 32 percent.

The average white person is 31 years old, the average Hispanic is 22 and the average black is 25, Hodgkinson said. Correlating the statistics with the average child-bearing years of 17 to 24, Hodgkinson said the United States is experiencing a minority baby boom that "will make the original baby boom look ill."

"I can't see the typical family reverting back to the Norman Rockwell model any time soon, so we need to make a major commitment, as educators, to see that all students have the opportunity to perform academically at a high level," Hodgkinson said.

"These children will become tomorrow's adult population," he said. "If a third of the United States is non-white, it's important to all of us that that group do well."

Hodgkinson, a former dean of Bard College and the author of 12 books on education, is doing research on demographics and education for several foundations.

About 500 admissions officers, financial aid specialists, principals, guidance counselors and faculty members from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia were expected to attend the three-day conference, said Joan Gunin, College Board spokeswoman.

Satellite

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A $387 million satellite to study ocean currents would be launched by a French space agency Ariane rocket instead of a U.S. space shuttle under a Reagan administration proposal, an official says.

Project manager Charles Yamarone said he believes Congress will approve funding for the TOPEX-Poseidon satellite, which would be developed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Jet Propulsion Laboratory here and the French National Space Research Center.

TOPEX stands for Ocean Topography Experiment. Using radar, the satellite would take measurements for a global map of currents, which are believed to be the prime drivers of weather.

British To Check Jumbo Jets

LONDON (AP) — Officials for British Airways say its inspectors will carry out detailed examinations on its entire fleet of 28 Boeing 747 jumbo jets after cracks were found in the front internal frames of three of the older aircraft.

The inspections of the front structural frames will take about six weeks and will involve stripping the interior of the first-class cabins, a company spokesman said Wednesday.

"It will take several days to check each aircraft. British Airways does not expect any disruption of its services," the spokesman said.

One of the three 747s was found to have cracks during routine maintenance recently, and with three reports of similar problems from other world airlines, the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration issued an order Feb. 3 directing close inspections of the jumbo jets.

"We can confirm cracks have been found in two more of our 747s. The matter has been reported to the relevant authorities," British Airways said in a statement.

Airline spokesman Kenneth Cook said two of the three were back in service after being repaired. The third was still having cracked rib frames replaced, he said.

The state-owned airline's schedules were not affected by the repairs, Cook said, noting "this is not the peak holiday traffic season, as in summer."

The workhorse jumbo jets fly an annual average of about 4,500 hours each, or close to 200 days. The 747s went into service in 1970.

The U.S. directive required close external visual examinations if the aircraft had made more than 10,000 landings, and further inspection if the close look revealed evidence of internal trouble.

The first cracks were reported in the first-class section at the front of the planes, below the cockpit and about 25 feet back of the nose.

Shuttle Power

The tragic demise of the shuttle Challenger brought home to many the enormous power and technical complexity of these incredible machines. During launch, the main engines of the shuttle's orbiter fire for eight minutes. In this time, they release as much energy as 23 Hoover Dams, or enough to light the entire state of New York. During critical phases in the shuttle's flight, computers perform more than 300,000 operations per second.

Drug Indictments Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pending indictments against up to 50 Eastern Airlines baggage handlers for allegedly smuggling Colombian cocaine into Miami underscore the need for better internal security by the nation's major airlines, federal law enforcement sources say.

The sources, who spoke Wednesday only on condition that they not be identified, said the baggage handlers, working at the Miami airport, are part of a drug pipeline whose leaders are in Bogota, Colombia.

The Drug Enforcement Administration launched an investigation late last summer using undercover agents. The probe is expected to continue for several more months, and no arrests have yet been made.

Eastern's management has cooperated with DEA in the investigation, the sources said, and federal officials believe no Eastern officials are involved in the smuggling.

"We will ... cooperate every way with the authorities to make certain that none of our airplanes or our employees are involved in that trade," Eastern Chairman Frank Borman said in an interview with NBC News.

Contacted Wednesday night by The Associated Press, Eastern spokesman Mark Wegel said he had seen reports about the drug allegations but that the airline had no comment.

One federal source said, "We think there is a small cadre of handlers who are holding out baggage" at Miami to evade U.S. Customs officials.

Several law enforcement sources say the case calls into question the internal security procedures used by the airlines. The sources questioned hiring practices and the procedures by which luggage is conveyed from incoming airliners from South America through Miami customs.

The major airlines now "certainly will take a closer look" again at internal security procedures because of the latest probe involving Eastern, said William Jackman, spokesman for the Air Transport Association, an airline trade group.
