Aquino Government Recognized

Marcos Out; U.S. Extends Welcome

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, en route from power to a reluctant exile, is "welcome to come to the United States," Secretary of State George Shultz announced today. He said the United States had officially recognized the new government of Corazon Aquino.

Shultz said U.S. officials had "a great deal of interaction" with Marcos as the long-time Philippine leader mulled over his decision to flee the island nation.

The secretary, speaking to reporters at the White House shortly before 10 a.m. EST, said Marcos was at the United States' Clark Air Base outside Manila, adding, "I don't think any decision has been made" as to his destination.

Marcos' first stop was to be at a U.S. base on Guam, a congressional source said. From there, the source said, Marcos will decide where to go.

The source, who demanded anonymity, said the United States "had been negotiating like mad" with both Marcos and the opposition over the last several days.

"One of the main stumbling blocks was Imelda," Marcos' wife, said the source. "Apparently, she wanted to stay and hoped to succeed him eventually."

Shultz told reporters, "Obviously, President Marcos was reluctant to leave his post. At any rate, he did leave."

Asked what he thought convinced Marcos to leave, Shultz said: "You have to ask him about his line of reasoning, but I would suppose that if you conceive of yourself as governing a country and you see the military and you see the other ministries around you deciding that somebody else, President Aquino, is the proper head of the country, and you see the people switching over, you have to conclude that you are not able to govern."

As for the U.S. position, he said: "We have talked with President Marcos and his government ... and urged them to make various reforms. And he has done some of them but, in our judgment, not enough. So we have had a consistent policy."

"But, basically," he said, "this is not something the United States has done — this is something the people of the Philippines have done."

"Of course," he said, "Ambassador (Stephen Bosworth) had many discussions with the principles involved." He said President Reagan confidante Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., who undertook a special mission to Marcos last year, had spoken with the embattled leader Monday.

"I'm not going to get into details of the conversation," which Marcos initiated, Shultz said. At another point, he said he was not "going to get into the process" that led to Marcos' departure.

He praised the peaceful end of the Marcos era, which began with Marcos' claiming victory in the Feb. 7

Evergreen Refund Check Is Received

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer
Evergreen officials Monday received a refund check for $50,000 from Pennsylvania developer Owen Kugel, according to Evergreen President Dick McKee.

Kugel, fired Feb. 14 for not meeting the terms of his contract with the local non-profit development corporation, was given 10 days to pay back Evergreen's $50,000 investment.

Under the terms of the 1985 contract between Kugel and Evergreen, Evergreen was to pay Kugel $5,000 a month to conduct a market analysis of downtown properties, identify development opportunities and provide professional assistance needed to revitalize the heart of Greenville.

Kugel, in turn, was to refund all management fees paid by Evergreen if he failed to construct a $2 million project — the old Belk Building — in downtown Greenville within a year of the contract signing.

Although Evergreen has terminated its contract with Kugel, Kugel said in a letter sent to McKee that he would continue efforts to renovate the old Belk building in downtown Greenville for office and residential uses.

According to McKee, Kugel wrote "it is my intention to proceed with development of the Edwards (Belk) property as originally planned and it is my expectation that we will have secured a mortgage commitment within the next several weeks."

BLAZE DESTROYS BUILDING — Greenville firemen direct a stream of water on the remains of a burning 7,200-square-foot storage building located on the 300 block of Ridgeway Street. The wood frame structure with metal siding, which formerly housed a saw mill, was engulfed by flames Monday night when firemen arrived at the scene, fire-rescue department Chief Jennis Allen said. Pitt County tax records set the value of the structure, owned by Garris-Evans Lumber Co., at $9,090, although David Evans Jr., company president, said it would cost $75,000 to $80,000 to replace. Evans said items stored in the structure were "of minimal value." Allen said the fire was reported about 10:10 p.m. and that the cause has not been determined. A fire in June 1985 destroyed a complex of five buildings owned by the firm. (Reflector Staff Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Floating Holiday

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer
The Greenville City Council Monday unanimously decided to consider creating a floating holiday which could be used by city employees to honor Martin Luther King Jr.

The matter will be formally addressed March 11 at the council's monthly meeting.

To create the holiday, the council proposed doing away with the city's Nov. 11 Veteran's Day observance.

In comments preceding council action, Councilman Ed Carter said it was "almost a dream that the city council would even entertain the idea of a Martin Luther King Jr. holiday."

Carter is the only black now serving on the council.

Carter said later that he was "elated that the city council is considering providing an opportunity for employees to recognize the contributions of the late, great Dr. Martin Luther King" and that consideration of the holiday "enables Greenville to be considered one of the more progressive towns in this state."

North Carolina cities that recognize King's birthday include Asheville, Chapel Hill, Charlotte, Durham, Greensboro and Morganton.

In other business Monday, the council turned down a bid by East

Engineer Says He 'Felt Pressure' From NASA On Launch Decision

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A presidential commission heard testimony today that one key industry engineer "felt pressure" from space agency officials when his firm initially recommended against the launch of the shuttle Challenger for safety reasons.

Allan McDonald, booster rocket manager for Morton Thiokol, told the investigating panel that at one point in a long discussion on the eve of launch, he "made the direct statement that if anything happened to this launch I wouldn't want to be the person" standing before a board of inquiry explaining the decision to go ahead.

"There's no doubt in my mind...I felt pressure," McDonald said, adding he resisted the decision to launch the ill-fated shuttle even after his company superiors approved it. He said others might not consider the remarks he heard from NASA officials as pressure, and he said he wasn't "overruled" by his company.

But he said he refused to sign a company memo approving the decision to launch. The shuttle blew up eight miles above the launch pad, killing all seven crew members.

McDonald said he questioned the launch for three reasons — most importantly, for fear that sub-freezing pre-launch temperatures would compromise safety seals in the shuttle rocket boosters.

The silver-haired engineer told the panel that the lengthy discussions amounted to a reversal of the practice he had seen in his long association with the space program.

"The contractor always had to get up to prove it was safe to fly. In this case it was to prove it wasn't," McDonald said.

He said he thought veteran astronaut Robert Crippen had expressed it best when he said, "the philosophy seemed to change."

McDonald added that "conditions for justifying the launch were so much different than they had ever been before."

McDonald told the commissioners that he assumed his objections would be passed all the way to people such as Jesse Moore, NASA shuttle chief who had final authority over the decision to launch. Moore has said he never heard about the Thiokol objections.

Recounting his firm's initial opposition to launch, McDonald said one NASA official, George Hardy, said he was "appalled" at the recommendation, but quickly added the shuttle would not fly without the firm's approval.

McDonald also said that Lawrence Mulloy, NASA's manager for the booster rockets, "made some comments about when we'll ever fly again if we have to"

Pitt DSS Receives Grant For $25,000

By JANE WELBORN
Reflector Staff Writer
A $25,000 grant from the state of North Carolina has been awarded to the Pitt County Department of Social Services and will be used to implement a long-term screening program in the county, DSS Director Edward L. Garrison has announced.

Garrison told members of the DSS board at its monthly meeting Monday that the grant will allow DSS to implement a screening program for Medicaid recipients that would permit the disabled or elderly in Pitt County to remain in their own homes rather than be placed in nursing homes, hospitals or other health care institutions. The director said he hopes the program will begin in April.

Garrison said he has contacted several people suggested by board members to serve on an advisory committee which will assess the service organizations in the community that might contract their services for the program. He said the committee is not yet complete.

Garrison said a grant of $2,656 has been awarded to DSS for the emergency food and shelter program to assist with low income heating needs in the county. An additional allocation of $24,053 has been earmarked for Pitt County, and each county agency must apply for the funds. DSS will be able to apply for more funds this fiscal year.

Debbie Ryals, eligibility director for DSS, told board members that 3,896 checks totaling $493,841 were mailed to Pitt County residents Feb. 1 for Low Income Energy Assistance. She said 100 more checks were mailed this year than in 1985.

Mrs. Ryals said 3,547 households participated in the February commodity distribution of cheese, butter, corn meal, milk, honey, rice and flour. The commodities distributed in Pitt County totaled $79,016.

Budget amendments to be presented to the Pitt County Board of Commissioners were discussed, as was preliminary planning for the department's 1986-87 fiscal year budget.

Navajos Auction Handmade Rugs

By MATT MYGATT
Associated Press Writer
CROWNSPOINT, N.M. (AP) — Auctions of fine decorative art are the warp and woof of Sotheby's in New York, Christie's in London — and Navajos in Crownpoint.

While Sotheby's and Christie's deal in fine art from all over the world, the Crownpoint Rug Weavers Association limits its auction to rugs woven on the Navajo Reservation.

Buyers come every six to seven weeks to this remote reservation community of about 1,130 to acquire rugs from such places as Burnham in New Mexico and Chinle, Two Grey Hills and Wide Ruins in Arizona.

"We have buyers from all over the United States," said Ena Chavez, association manager. "We even get some foreigners — West Germany, Japan, Australia — just all over."

Harriet and Frank Ubbes of Deming, who have attended the auctions during the past seven years, said they have become Navajo rug addicts.

"The rugs are works of art to me. It takes hours of patience and time," Mrs. Ubbes said. "They (weavers) don't have a pattern. They weave them from their heads."

Ms. Chavez said that despite what some traders are saying, Navajo weaving is not a dying art.

"They say the younger generation is not interested in weaving," she said. "That's not true. The majority of our weavers who are bringing rugs are the younger generation."

Ms. Chavez said the auction is put on by Navajos for Navajos.

"You get a fair price here," she said. "The rugs cost from $15 to $1,200 and the big ones will run up to $1,500."

Base prices are set by the weavers, who spend weeks fashioning a rug that might be sold at the auction in a matter of seconds.

Laverne Silversmith of Wide Ruins said she brings the rugs she weaves to the auction because she can get better prices.

Mrs. Silversmith, who has been weaving for 35 of her 40 years, said it takes her about one month to weave a 5-by-6-foot rug that she would like to sell for $800 to $1,500. But she said a trader would give her $300.

The actual weaving is just part of the process of making a fine Navajo rug, most of which are used to decorate walls rather than cover floors.

The entire process is done by hand. Mrs. Silversmith explained the sheep must be shorn, the wool must be separated, washed, dried, carded and spun into yarn.

The yarn then must be dyed, often using vegetation found on the reservation for the natural colors — cedar for blue, sagebrush for olive green, wild carrots for gold.

Mrs. Silversmith said she then can start to weave intricate geometric patterns, which weavers keep in their mind's eye.

The Crownpoint auction began in 1964 when a local trader "wanted to get rid of a lot of her rugs, so she thought she wanted an auction," Ms. Chavez said.

The auction was held once a year until 1968, when it "started going real good," Ms. Chavez said. "Then it was held about three times a year."

By the early 1970s, the auction was held every three months or so.

"In 1981, I took over and we started every six to seven weeks because we were getting so many rugs," Ms. Chavez said.

Herman Coffey of Belen has been the rug auctioneer at Crownpoint since 1967, his baritone voice echoing off the bare walls of the Crownpoint Elementary School gymnasium.

"It's harder physically than other auctions," said Coffey. "The bidding is more rapid. We sell a rug every 36 to 40 seconds and you have no time to slow down. As long as the crowd is hitting, you're going with them."

Weavers bring from 300 to 450 rugs to sell at each auction, Ms. Chavez said.

"Most of the rugs are sold. If they don't bring the minimum bid, they are returned to the weaver," she said.

The association takes 10 percent of each rug sale to pay the auctioneer and to pay for "paper, supplies and stuff like that," she said.

Quilt Project Receives Grant From Council

The North Carolina Quilt Project has received the largest grant ever awarded by the folklife section of the N.C. Arts Council. It will be used for additional Quilt Documentation Days which begin in November and will continue through December 1986.

The goal of the project is to illuminate the ways in which quilts and quilting have been a part of the life of this state. The information gathered will be processed and studied to produce a book reflecting the history of quilting in N.C.

A selected number of quilts from the project will form an exhibition at the N.C. Museum of History in the spring of 1988. A part of the exhibition will travel to a museum in each of seven regions of the state.

Volunteers have worked together on the 21 documentation days which have taken place across the state since early November. Over 3,000 quilts have been documented with a three-page written form, color slides and a black and white picture.

Kenly Jones, with the NBC News Service in Atlanta, spent two days with the project in December and produced a report which appeared on the NBC Evening News with Tom Brokaw Jan. 9.

The documentation day was held in November 1985 for the Pitt County area.

Matching funds are needed for the grant received from Folklife. For further information contact N.C. Quilt Project, P.O. Box 2739, Durham, 27705. The state project director is Ruth Haislip Roberson of Durham.

Society To Have Membership Gala

A membership gala, reception and dinner are planned for March 4 by the Pitt County Historical Society. The events will be held at the Greenville Country Club starting at 6:15 p.m.

The society will be honoring its 45 new members along with other interested persons in Greenville and Pitt County.

A dutch dinner will be served at 7 o'clock. Stuart Aronson will present a musical evening through show tunes as entertainment.

The objective of the society is to preserve the county's history. The group is concentrating on its architectural survey of all historical buildings in the county.

Reservations should be made with Annie Turner by Sunday. For further information call 756-1420.

Other scheduled activities planned by the society are a catered picnic at the Grimes Plantation April 5 and a bus tour of Historic Wilmington April 19.

Judy Baker Gives Chapter Program

Make Written Complaint To 'Stamped' Buffalo'

DEAR ABBY: We live in an apartment building, and it's one of the nicest in town. The people in the apartment directly above ours have no floor covering, and they are constantly dragging furniture around, which is very disturbing. When they walk it sounds like a herd of buffalo stampeding up there.

Don't suggest that we report them to the manager. He is the manager, and they have a waiting list of people who want to move in here.

Now what?
THE PEOPLE IN 502

contained an important message for people who did not want to get involved with the persecution of minorities because it didn't concern them. For example:

"They came and took the Indian, and I said nothing;

"They came and took the Jew, and I said nothing;

"They came and took the Negro, and I said nothing;

"And then they came for me."

I hope you know the piece I am referring to, Abby. I need it for a speech I am writing. Thank you.

DEAR ABBY: I've often wanted to write to you about my problems, but always felt I could (and should) handle them myself. Tonight, however, I'm incensed by the comments made by several readers concerning that 35-year-old unmarried, professional woman who decided to impregnate herself by artificial insemination because she wanted a child and had no man in her life.

"Skeptical" wrote, "If I were her parents, I wouldn't buy that story unless I saw the doctor's record or had some kind of proof that artificial insemination actually took place."

Really now! "Skeptical" probably wouldn't have bought the story about the pharaoh's daughter finding Moses in the bulrushes either.

DEAR MELISSA: This is it — my response to a letter I received:

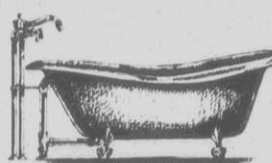

DEAR PERPLEXED: Speak up! You may not educate your in-laws with one speech, but you can let them know that you disapprove of racial "jokes" and do not care to hear them.

Apropos remaining silent when one should speak up is this gem of a piece I have kept for nearly 30 years. It was written by a German Lutheran pastor who was arrested by the Gestapo in 1938 and sent to Dachau concentration camp until he was freed by the Allied forces in 1945.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

I'm a pushover for any product that promises to take 15 minutes off my life.

My bathroom sink is lined with vials and bottles of mysterious formulas pledged to tighten up my face, remove chins, take away lines and eradicate wrinkles. They are made from some of the most unlikely poisons known to man: turtle oil, roots of a cactus ... and mud from the Dead Sea.

They all have something in common. They all cost a fortune, will last forever and will bring out every allergy in my body.

The hygroscopic salts that were to reduce stress and revitalize my skin cells as I soaked in the tub made me sneeze for three hours.

The abrasive scrub that was to remove all my dead skin and leave me with the texture of a newborn's behind made me itch like a hound dog with fleas.

The miracle cream that was to erase three children, an unpaid orthodontist bill and 10 extra pounds from Christmas from my face made by eyes swell shut.

At first, I thought it was just a coincidence. Then I began to question how come I wasn't allergic to Supp-Hose, glasses or ointment for chapped lips, but only things that improved by looks? The message was quiet clear. God does not want me to remain young. He wants me to grow old as He has something in mind. I wish I knew what!

Non-aging sex symbol is definitely not a possibility. I figured that out for myself. When I saw Elizabeth Taylor and Joan Collins with eye make-up I figured a little color on my eyelids and a thin pencil line under them wouldn't be threatening. Wrong. My eyes turned red, my lids swelled and I looked like I had spent the entire night drinking with the Australian army.

The only thing I can figure is I'm being singled out to become a symbol of the struggles of America ... like the Statue of Liberty. In my face will reflect the hopes and dreams of the tired and oppressed. The frontier mother who gave birth on her lunch hour ... the women who put equality above themselves ... who toiled in the textile mills with Norma Rae ... who fought against the evils of society with Carrie Nation.

Yeah, that's probably it. I will be the universal face the world will respond to. "Didn't I see you at Appomattox?" they will say. "Didn't you used to be Barbara Fritchie?"

Whatever, I have been given a "sign" that is my destiny, but I can't help thinking, what would it hurt to give nature a little boost? After all, even the Statue of Liberty gets a sanding job every hundred years or so.

Solid Plan

Any overhaul of North Carolina's technical education programs must begin with rethinking a state funding system that in the past has created turf battles between community colleges and public schools.

Robert Scott's recommendation of a "two plus two" program is a move in the right direction but stops short of the real problem. Any task force that explores his proposals must recommend a fair way for community colleges and public school systems to share state dollars as well as students and skills.

A funding system that forces the two departments to compete against each other for the same students and the same dollars in technical and vocational programs stymies cooperation between public schools and community colleges.

The two plus two program Scott proposed would eliminate duplication of instruction in high schools and community colleges and allow sharing expensive vocational training equipment — saving taxpayers' dollars. In other words, when skills aren't available in high schools but are at community colleges, the students would receive training at the community colleges. It is a solid scheme and can work if the state divides funds equitably — which it can.

If the state funds the local school system for the time a student spends in class, then credits the community college for the enrolling the student there, the needs of both departments will be met without useless rivalry. Funds should go everywhere the instruction is provided.

This is a feasible funding solution because it requires cooperation, not competition, to get money. A good example is the articulation program — a long word for joint project — Pitt County schools and Pitt Community College share. Needs are identified by the schools and available training is shared by the community college. Money is also shared.

The program works because squabbling is eliminated by a creative funding solution. It also works because the public schools and the community colleges have sought an individual answer that succeeds for Pitt County.

If it works here, the principles can be applied in other counties and two plus two will be a success. The state must use dollars — and sense — to make it work.

Welcome

We're so accustomed to reading of new military equipment falling far short of specifications that disclosure of one item passing muster is welcome news. It happened with the new helmet already issued to almost a half-million soldiers and marines.

The helmet is made of a special resin and synthetic fiber ... designed to replace the familiar steel pot that became standard gear in 1942 and has been on the scene ever since.

What started out as an investigation to back up claims the new model did not meet protection requirements evolved into a contract dispute over specifications. Tests determined there was only a slight reduction of ballistics resistance in a small area at the crown of the helmet. It is said to far exceed protection afforded by the old model.

(With roughly 500,000 of the new helmets issued and priced at $85.20 each, it had better be good!)

This is only a small item in the Pentagon's procurement program; but tests confirmed the helmet acceptable ... something rare in a program that has seen billions of dollars thrown into systems that were lemons or needed costly modifications.

We're entitled to some sunshine, where and when we find it.

Reagan Shifts Focus On Marcos

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's dramatic request Monday for Ferdinand Marcos to step down after 20 years in power marked a reversal for Reagan, who two weeks earlier said there was a strong two-party system in the Philippines that should be able to function.

A rapid-fire series of events, set in motion by the Feb. 7 presidential election, led the White House to issue a pre-dawn statement, which said: "Attempts to prolong the life of the present regime by violence are futile. A solution to this crisis can only be achieved through a peaceful transition to a new government."

From the outset of the Philippines crisis, the administration had been concerned that chaos and continuation of a corruption-tainted government would benefit a communist-backed insurgency of the New People's Army and eventually lead to the closing of the two American bases in the Philippines.

But some officials had hoped Marcos could initiate the economic and political reforms that could restore good government and an effective military to combat the communists.

Reagan clearly was among those holding such hopes. In a statement prior to the election he offered the winner, either Marcos or opposition candidate Corason Aquino, a major increase in American aid if the election was fair and if it was followed by major reforms.

And Reagan would not criticize Marcos even after his own observer team, headed by Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., reported evidence of widespread election fraud both at the local and national level, which it blamed largely on Marcos.

At a press conference on Feb. 11, Reagan said "hard evidence" of fraud was lacking and, "it could have been that all of that was occurring on both sides." He also said "one cannot minimize the importance" of the American bases at Clark Field and Subic Bay.

The president began back-peddling from that statement almost immediately, in part because of widespread criticism of it in Congress, as well as anger in the Aquino camp that Reagan seemed to be ignoring evidence of Marcos-inspired

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — With racial unrest already near the boiling point, South Africa's leaders face a series of deadlines set by foes of apartheid that threaten new turmoil in the weeks ahead.

The white-led government has made limited concessions to the black majority and promised to make more. Now it has to deliver or face new school boycotts, consumer strikes, civil disobedience and economic pressure.

A key factor in raising tensions in past months was a boycott of black schools, which kept thousands of children on the streets to confront the police and army. The boycott ended in December with a fragile truce.

But organizers say the boycott will resume at the end of March unless a broad range of demands are met, including withdrawal of troops from black townships and release of jailed activists.

Black consumer boycotts in the eastern Cape province that cut deeply into white business also were suspended on a promise of concessions, which must be made by late March.

A new black trade union coalition claiming 500,000 members has threatened to begin a pass-burning campaign as early as April if the government doesn't scrap the hated laws that require blacks to carry official passes in white-designated areas.

The government has promised to abolish the pass laws by July, but anti-apartheid campaigners say they fear other restrictions will be substituted.

Black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner, has threatened to call for Western economic sanctions against South Africa at the end of March unless the government starts dismantling apartheid, the legal system under which the country's 5 million whites control the government and economy and deny the vote to 24 million blacks.

Such a move could aggravate the country's $14 billion debt crisis, because foreign governments would be hard put to ignore a plea from so eminent a black leader.

The wave of nearly non-stop racial protest began in September 1984. It has resulted in more than 1,100 deaths, mostly blacks shot by security forces.

But hard-won agreements halting the various boycotts brought hope for negotiated solutions on broader problems caused by the system of racial segregation and white privilege.

The South African rand rebounded from a low of 34.80 cents last year to 49.45 Wednesday — partly due to government management of the currency, but also perhaps because of some overseas optimism that genuine change might be ahead.

The optimism sprang in part from President P.W. Botha's reformist address to Parliament on Jan. 31, in which he called apartheid an "outdated concept." He promised to restore South African citizenship to blacks previously designated citizens of four nominally independent homelands and to give blacks a role in decision-making.

Then came last week's violent clash between black youths and security forces in Johannesburg's Alexandra township, leaving at least 23 dead and underscoring the frailty of black faith in negotiated change.

The schools crisis typifies the grievances, the attempts at dialogue and the risks both sides face.

Scattered boycotts began two years ago over black complaints of inferior education in segregated black schools, where spending per pupil is one-fifth that for whites. Up to 200,000 youths flocked onto the streets, creating a climate for rioting that began several months later.

In December, an effort led by parents in Soweto, the nation's largest black township, produced a national agreement with the Department of Education and Training to hold new exams this month for students who boycotted.

In return, youths returned to classes and gave the government until the end of March to meet their demands. But no sign of movement emerged on the key demand that troops be removed from townships.

Strength For Today

"There is a little plant called reverence in the corner of my soul's garden," once wrote the poet Oliver Wendell Holmes, "which I like to have watered once a week."

There are some people today who apparently never feel this need. They never remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. The Sabbath is God's day, and one of the Ten Commandments enjoins us to revere it as such. The commandments about the Sabbath are not of secondary importance in the Bible, but are of primary importance. We are required to go to church for the purpose of paying our respects to God. That is the duty of it. The privilege side of it is that the religious service does something to our hearts. We spend an hour thinking about the higher and more elevating things of life.

Men and women make a serious mistake when they neglect a matter of such supreme importance.

Swimsuits And The Beach

As far as I am concerned, summer blows in when the Sports Illustrated bathing suit edition hits the stands. It must be the same for other people because the issue is always a sellout.

I was extremely pleased with this year's cover, which features Miss Elle MacPherson and as much as Miss MacPherson as the Sports Illustrated editors were permitted to show. She is also wearing a blue bathing suit.

My wife demanded to know why I had brought the issue home.

"I'm dying to read about bicycle racing in Switzerland."

"It makes no difference to me if you want to leer over the bathing suit photographs," she said.

"Leering is too strong a word. It is essential we both get a preview of what to expect this summer on the sands of Martha's Vineyard."

My wife said, "Just when I think you've grown up, I discover you still have only one thing on your mind."

"Why won't you admit most of women's swimsuits are not designed for swimming?"

"What are they designed for?"

"Flagrant flaunting. Are you aware that although the swimsuit market is worth billions of dollars, only 5 percent of the suits ever get wet?"

"You seem to know a lot about the business."

"The bathing suit is a marvel of American engineering. The less fabric they use the more they can charge for it."

"All they have to do is sew two thin strips of nylon and shoelace together and they can charge $100. Women don't want a suit to protect themselves, but to provoke men who come to the beach to play with their tails."

"We have a constitutional right to wear anything that feels good at the seashore. This does not mean we are stalking males."

"Then why do you always get a pedicure before going to the beach?"

"You're shouting."

"Look at these pictures. The lady on the cover can hardly keep the suit on. Don't tell me she's dressed that way to swim in the English Channel."

"Maybe she hopes to get a good suntan."

"Wrong again. It's because she can arouse some poor helpless jerk on the beach into having lascivious thoughts about her while he's trying to read Lee Iacocca's book."

My wife scanned the cover. "There is nothing provocative in that bathing suit," she said.

"Not in the bathing suit — outside it. Everything provocative is bulging out. What is a man on a beach to do when she walks by — other than pound the sand with his fists?"

There was steam coming out of my wife's ears. "Just because a woman likes to wear something comfortable does not mean she is trying to seduce a man."

"OK, let's say the bathing suit is worn not to tease a man, but just to get a good suntan. Why does a woman want a good suntan?"

"Everybody wants a good suntan."

"To attract the opposite sex!"

"Bah humbug and oink, oink, oink."

"Here is a replica of the suit Bo Derek wore in '10.' It's a see-through T-shirt. They designed it with one thing in mind — to make strong men cry."

"That's your opinion."

"Sports Illustrated proves that for all the strides she has made toward liberation, every female must buy one decent bathing suit to fulfill herself as a woman."

Residents Question NASA's Decision To Launch Shuttle

By TOM MOONEY
Associated Press Writer
CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Betsy Rogers and other residents of Christa McAuliffe's hometown found it easier dealing with the space shuttle explosion when it was no more than a billow of white smoke and uncertainty above Cape Canaveral.

There were few explanations then for what caused the Concord High School teacher and six astronauts to die.

Some said simply: It was bound to happen. Nearly a month later, pieces of Challenger continue to be plucked from the Atlantic and the possible causes of the disaster center on booster rocket seals, cold weather and the decisions made by launch officials.

Was it human error that killed Christa McAuliffe?

As the presidential commission investigating the tragedy begins public hearings today, the possibility sits uncomfortably with some Concord residents who came to admire the woman who was to be the first average American in space.

"It was almost easier to accept that NASA had been extremely careful and some fluke thing had gone wrong," said Rogers, who chaperoned McAuliffe's son Scott's third-grade class to the launch. "It's painful to know it could have been avoided."

"Right along, I felt surprised they ended up launching in such cold weather," Rogers said Monday. "We were told there was great concern about launching in extreme cold and that there was a cold front moving in."

Robert Fried also chaperoned Scott McAuliffe's class.

"If it emerges that ... the sound judgment of scientific people was overruled for political considerations, then I would indeed be very angry," he said. "I think there have been some hints of that, but that is still not clear."

According to Morton Thiokol Inc., the company that manufactured the shuttle's booster rockets, several engineers remained opposed to the decision to launch even after management officials overruled them. The engineers were concerned that overnight freezing temperatures would weaken the O-ring seals that join booster segments.

"My personal opinion is they should not have launched if they had any doubts," said Tony Piroso at a local coffee shop. "You never go through a red light."

"The more that keeps getting dug up, the more people around here are going to get angry," said Piroso's daughter, Mary. "If they had waited a day they would have saved those lives, maybe."

Jean Zona said she was worried something might happen after ice built up on the shuttle.

"I said, 'How do they know (it's safe to launch)? They've never gone up when it's been so cold.' I'm angry at whoever is responsible for that because it seems it is something they knew about ahead of time," Zona said.

Aquino: From Reluctant Candidate To President

By MIGUEL C. SUAREZ
Associated Press Writer
MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Corazon Aquino started her political career as a reluctant candidate but became a determined campaigner who rallied millions of her countrymen behind a drive to end Ferdinand E. Marcos' 20 years as president.

To the surprise of many Filipinos and many foreigners, the petite, 53-year-old woman managed to channel widespread dissatisfaction with Marcos into a powerful stream of opposition that swept him from power.

She became well known only after her husband was assassinated in 1983, a slaying that started the chain of events that brought down Marcos.

Today, Mrs. Aquino swore an oath of office as provisional president and said she was "taking power in the name of the Filipino people."

An hour later Marcos took the oath as president at a palace ceremony. As an indication of how his power had crumbled, the broadcast of the ceremony was knocked off the air by rebels who took control of the station. They substituted a John Wayne film.

Several hours later, the man who dominated the country for two decades resigned.

Mrs. Aquino is a daughter of the wealthy Cojuangco family of Tarlac province, which has sprawling sugar plantations. Her first cousin, Eduardo Cojuangco, is a close business associate of Marcos and believed to be one of the wealthiest men in the Philippines, controlling a coconut monopoly granted him under the Marcos administration.

Stepping forward after her husband was assassinated, Mrs. Aquino waged an emotion-laden campaign in the Feb. 7 presidential election and made a strong showing in alloting that was tainted by fraud, according to her supporters and to independent election observers.

She campaigned throughout the country, always smiling and always wearing yellow. The color symbolizes the yellow-ribbon homecoming planned for her husband when he returned from self-exile in the United States, only to be assassinated at Manila airport.

When the Marcos-controlled National Assembly on Feb. 15 completed the count and announced that Marcos had won, Mrs. Aquino refused to accept that verdict and pledged a campaign to bring down Marcos by boycotts and demonstrations.

Then, two military leaders of the Marcos establishment announced on Saturday that they had broken with the president. They demanded he resign and allow Mrs. Aquino to lead the nation. Their action provoked widespread sympathy from the public, and thousands of people poured into the streets to support the rebels.

By Monday, the rebels had taken over a government television station and proclaimed a provisional government headed by Mrs. Aquino. Crowds in the streets chanted her nickname, "Cory, Cory!"

Her only training in politics came from her family and as the wife of a man who was considered Marcos' main political rival. Mrs. Aquino's campaign biography listed no previous accomplishments or jobs other than that of a housewife.

When martial law was decreed in 1972, Aquino was jailed for eight years. Mrs. Aquino has described those years as among the most traumatic in her life.

She was her husband's "eyes, ears and voice in the stifling environment of martial law," according to a biography provided by her campaign staff.

"Some people tell me I did not have any formal education in politics," she told The Associated Press in an interview. "But I was living with one of the best teachers in politics."

In addition, her grandfather, father and brother were congressmen. Her other grandfather and an uncle were senators, and another uncle is a member of the National Assembly.

But she has said most of her political ideas come from her late husband.

Aquino was allowed to travel to the United States for heart surgery in 1980 and spent the next three years in voluntary exile.

Aquino decided to return to rally the opposition. He was slain as he got off the plane at Manila airport on Aug. 21, 1983. Mrs. Aquino and thousands of other Filipinos accused Marcos of being behind the slaying. An investigation pointed to a military conspiracy to assassinate Aquino.

Although those charged with conspiracy were acquitted after a long trial, the slaying of Aquino ignited the opposition to Marcos. Protest marches, often with Mrs. Aquino a prominent participant, occurred almost daily and swept across all segments of society, from farmers to stockbrokers.

She called Marcos the "No. 1 suspect" in the assassination and led many of the demonstrations against him.

Seeking to show his hold on the country, Marcos considered a special election. Mrs. Aquino laughed off suggestions in 1985 that she be a candidate, saying, "I don't know anything about the presidency."

But when Marcos set the election for Feb. 7 she declared she would run and waged a vigorous campaign that attracted hundreds of thousands of cheering supporters. By the time the campaign ended, she was confidently proclaiming, "What Mr. Marcos can do, I can do better."

And after the rebellion started by the two military leaders, Mrs. Aquino quickly became the focus as the successor to Marcos.

She was born Jan. 25, 1933, the sixth of eight children of a prominent and wealthy family from Tarlac province, 50 miles north of Manila.

She attended high school at Raven Hill Academy in Philadelphia and Notre Dame in New York. She earned a bachelor of arts degree from Mount St. Vincent College in New York, majoring in French and mathematics.

Mrs. Aquino enrolled in a law course in Manila in 1956 but gave up her studies to marry Aquino. He began a political career, first as mayor of his hometown of Concepcion, then as governor of the province and later as a senator in Manila.

election amid charges of widespread fraud.

Shultz said of the Philippine people, "They have resolved this issue non-violently and in a way that does them honor."

Marcos relinquished power just hours after taking the oath for a new six-year term as president. Earlier, Mrs. Aquino took a similar, though unofficial, oath of office.

Shultz said he did not believe Reagan had spoken with either Marcos or Mrs. Aquino before Marcos fled.

Meanwhile, Reagan's own envoy, Philip Habib, was on his way to the Philippines to confer with the new government.

On Monday, Reagan had called for Marcos to effect a peaceful transition of power to Mrs. Aquino. For 24 hours, there were growing indications that Marcos would do so if given assurances on his and his family's safety.

Members of Congress had said that Marcos would be welcome in the United States if the transfer of power were carried out peacefully.

"The president (Reagan) is pleased with the peaceful transition," said Shultz, adding, "The United States extends recognition to this new government."

Last week, the Senate approved a non-binding resolution, on a vote of 85-9, declaring that the Philippine election was fraudulent and that Marcos had lost the mandate to govern.

Shultz, speaking in the White House briefing room, said, "We praise the decision of President Marcos. Reason and compassion have prevailed in ways that best served the nation and the Filipino people," who, Shultz said, "have high expectations for their country and for democracy."

The secretary said the Filipino people "are true heroes today."

Asked about the status of the Clark Air Base and the Subic Bay naval base, Shultz said, "We are prepared to confer with the new government ... to cooperate fully."

Shultz added that Mrs. Aquino, widow of slain Philippine opposition Benigno Aquino, "has supported the presence of the bases, and insofar as I know ... has no question in her mind that they are there properly."

He said the agreement for the bases "runs to 1991, and I'm sure when that time comes, there will be negotiations."

As for Marcos' future, Shultz said, "We wish him to have a life of dignity and honor."

The secretary said the United States is prepared "to offer a safe haven to President Marcos, his family and associates, including Gen. (Fabian) Ver," until recently the head of the Philippine armed forces and one of Marcos' closest confidantes.

3 Charged With Fraud

Elated Filipinos living in the United States said they were pleased the Marcos regime fell "without too much bloodshed," but warned that his successor, Corazon Aquino, faced a difficult job in uniting the Philippines.

"I'm very happy for my country and my countrymen. We did it in a peaceful, non-violent way. I think it is a reflection of our Filipino character," said Jun Mateo, a member of the Alliance for Philippine Democracy, a Los Angeles-based coalition of several anti-Marcos groups.

He said there would be a celebration at the Philippine consulate in the afternoon.

In New York City, Mila Manalac of the Coalition Against the Marcos Dictatorship said the group was drafting a statement about the situation and planned a celebration tonight.

"We're very, very excited and very happy," was all she would say immediately.

"(I feel) relief that this whole thing has been settled without too much bloodshed and that it was settled relatively peacefully," Rodolfo Severino, Philippine consul to Houston, said in an interview with Houston radio station KIKK.

The diplomat said he feels "compassion" for Mrs. Aquino.

SWAPPED BACK TO ORIGINAL PARENTS — Chloe Amzallag yawns back at home in the arms of her parents, Ilse and Andre (top) in Sausalito, Calif., Sunday as Steve and Linder Boggeri hold their daughter, Meagan, in Rohnert Park, Calif. After a day at home, Linda Boggeri noticed that the wrist band on her daughter, Meagan, read, "Amzallag," and phoned the hospital, which embarrassingly admitted that the babies had accidentally been switched. On Saturday, both babies were reunited with their correct parents. (AP Laserphoto)

Dissidents Dislike Government Plan

By EDWIN Q. WHITE
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Two leading dissidents said today that the government's proposal to postpone debate on the constitution until 1989 was incomprehensible, and that they planned to forge ahead with a signature drive supporting the changes.

Kim Dae-jung and Kim Young-sam, who co-chair the Council for the Promotion of Democracy, said the opposition position was that the constitution must be amended before 1988 so elections that year could be held under a new system.

They said that since President Chun Doo-hwan's term expires in 1988, he is "not qualified to talk about 1989." They said the question could be taken up in the National Assembly "if no conditions are attached," but that the opposition objective is to amend the constitution, not merely study it.

Chun on Monday met with opposition leaders and members of his ruling party in an attempt to defuse the confrontation over the constitution.

During the meeting at the Blue House presidential mansion, Chun said public debates could be held on the constitutional questions in 1989 after special committees had studied them.

He also eased a crackdown on the opposition begun Feb. 12 when it launched a massive signature drive to support its call for changes that would provide for the direct, popular election of the president.

The opposition contends the present electoral college system of election gives the incumbent an unfair advantage. The government declared the petition drive illegal and said any change of the constitution would not be tolerated.

The Kims today said the signature campaign would continue, and be expanded across the country.

They said it the government's proposal was "incomprehensible" and not worthy of "serious discussion."

Kim Dae-jung was placed under strict house arrest for 12 days and Kim Young-sam's activities were restricted on several occasions during that period. In addition to closing off the council offices, police also blocked off the headquarters of the opposition New Korea Democratic Party from time to time.

The government's strong reaction to the opposition moves elevated political tensions in South Korea at a time the government repeatedly has urged stability and cooperation for the Asian Games this year and the Olympics in 1988. Those two events have been described by authorities as historic tasks.

The Kims also commented on the current situation in the Philippines where military rebels installed opposition leader Corazon Aquino as president of a provisional government, and President Ferdinand E. Marcos refused to resign.

"We are all watching the Philippines," the two Kims said, "because there are striking similarities to South Korea."

They said the Philippines offered a "lesson to the people of South Korea and to the government." They said the Philippines demonstrated a "domino trend of democracy" that could affect Asia and other parts of the world.

If the situation in South Korea were allowed to worsen, they said, it "could develop into another Philippines situation."

MIAMI (AP) — As the news sank in that cost-slashing airline entrepreneur Frank Lorenzo was trying to buy Eastern Airlines, employees of the nation's third-largest carrier reacted with emotions ranging from anger to optimism.

"I don't think he's a great favorite of airline employees," said John Jones, a 19-year Eastern pilot and a union official. "We were looking for a change in management, and we certainly got that."

"He does know how to run a profitable airline. The only thing we can do is give him a chance," Jones added in a telephone interview from Atlanta.

Janet McNeill, a flight attendant with Eastern for 21 years, said she expected a labor settlement, and was disappointed to learn that Eastern agreed Monday to sell the Miami-based carrier to Lorenzo's Houston-based Texas Air Corp.

"It takes people longer to sell a used car than they took to sell the country's third largest airline," Ms. McNeill said. "It's incredible to me that (Eastern Chairman Frank Borman) was able to sell the company in 24 hours."

Eastern had been negotiating with the flight attendants and pilots unions over the weekend, hoping to reach a contract before a strike deadline set for Wednesday by the Air Line Pilots Association and a Saturday deadline set by the Transport Workers Union, which represents 7,000 flight attendants.

Eastern employs 41,000 people, including about 14,000 in the Miami area.

Lorenzo bought Continental Airlines in 1983, and filed for Chapter 11 federal bankruptcy reorganization. That gained a judge's decision allowing the carrier to throw out its union contracts and cut wages, and earned Lorenzo a reputation as a union-buster.

"I'll retire before I'll work for Frank Lorenzo. He's a union-buster. We didn't think Borman would be so vindictive as to sell to him," said mechanic Tony Verz, who has worked 29 years for Eastern. "I feel this company has let me down. I expected a little bit more out of this."

Lorenzo also owns New York Air.

Charley Kirsch, an Eastern mechanic in Miami the past 20 years, expressed some optimism about the sale, which caught almost all employees off-guard.

"It may work out," Kirsch said. "It's a lesser of two evils thing. Right now, we don't know which is which."

"I feel a little let down," said Jones. "But I'd hate to see this company vanish. We're trying to work the best we can to avoid that. We're going to make the best of it."

Eastern flight attendants have seen their wages cut 20 to 30 percent, more than 1,000 of their number laid off and work hours and duties increased for the 6,000 left.

For some, the Lorenzo takeover could be the last straw, said Judy Wade, a flight attendant for 10 years.

"There are just too many unknowns," she said. "After everything else, there are too many unknowns."

Gorbachev Blasts Bureaucracy

By ROXINNE ERVASTI
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev today opened the 27th Soviet Communist Party congress with an attack on the "stiffness and escalation" of Soviet bureaucracy — a clear reference to the legacy of former party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Speaking to 5,000 party members and foreign guests, Gorbachev, the party's general secretary, also predicted the "moral and political isolation of U.S. imperialism," and called on Communists to abandon "habitual but already outdated notions" in their approach to world and domestic problems.

Delegates to the congress, the nominally supreme party body that meets every five years, will elect a new Central Committee, approve a policy program and changes in party rules, and formally endorse a new five-year plan and economic targets in line with Gorbachev's reform efforts.

At today's session, Gorbachev said the Soviet leadership commends the country's achievements but also "considers it to be its duty to tell the party and the people honestly and frankly about the deficiencies in our political and practical activities, the unfavorable tendencies in the economy and the social and moral sphere, and about the reasons for them."

He told party delegates assembled at the Kremlin Palace of Congresses that party and government bodies had "tailed behind the needs of the times and of life."

"The inertness and stiffness of the forms and methods of administration, the decline of dynamism in our work, and an escalation of bureaucracy — all this was doing no small damage," Gorbachev said.

Gorbachev did not refer to Brezhnev by name, but his remarks clearly referred to the Kremlin leader who headed the Soviet Communist Party from 1964 until his death in 1982. The final years of Brezhnev's 18-year reign were characterized by bureaucratic stagnation and the occupation of numerous posts by aging bureaucrats.

Gorbachev criticized the United States for what he said was manipulation of the dollar's value and interest rates to "fatten its economy" at the expense U.S. allies, and for allegedly exploiting developing countries.

He said capitalism will have to choose between "shameless force and plunder" and criticized "bourgeois corruption and vandalism" worldwide.

"The U.S. ruling circles are clearly losing their realistic bearings," Gorbachev said, predicting "the inevitable moral and political isolation of U.S. imperialism."

In contrast to the opening of the last party congress held in 1981 under Brezhnev, Gorbachev dispensed with a reading of the 100-plus names of foreign delegates, a time-consuming process. Applause from the party delegates was brief as Gorbachev and the 10 other members of the ruling Politburo took their places at the podium, with President Andrei A. Gromyko and Kremlin ideologist Yegor Ligachev flanking the Soviet leader.

The session was nationally televised and made available worldwide by satellite. The official Soviet news agency Tass began running a text of Gorbachev's speech, said to be nearly 200 pages long, and Radio Moscow provided a simultaneous English-language translation.

contrary to the essence and spirit of Marxism-Leninism."

About half of the Central Committee seated at the 1981 congress have died, retired or been removed from the local office that gave them the seat on the committee. Additional changes at this congress will give Gorbachev a new slate of deputies to carry out his policies at regional levels.

Gorbachev's year of leadership has already brought widespread personnel changes in party and government. Only three of the 11 members of the Politburo were appointed under Brezhnev and are reminders of nearly two decades of gerontocracy.

In his speech, Gorbachev quoted extensively from Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels, who developed the theory of communism, and from Vladimir I. Lenin, the leader of the 1917 Bolshevik revolution that brought the Communists to power in Russia.

His references appeared to be a call for a return to the basics of communism, but he also said, "any attempt at turning the theory by which we are guided into an assortment of ossified schemes and prescriptions valid everywhere and in all contingencies is most definitely

Offensive Launched

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran launched a new offensive in the mountains of northeast Iraq today to protest a U.N. Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire in the two nations' 5½-year-old war.

"After being disappointed by the Security Council resolution, the Iranian forces in the northern sector of the warfront dealt another crushing blow to the Iraqi regime," said Hashemi Rafsanjani, the speaker of Iran's parliament who is also the spokesman of the Supreme Defense Council.

The council's resolution Monday night was "ineffective and shallow," Rafsanjani was quoted as saying by the Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia.

Earlier in the day, IRNA reported that the offensive was launched east of Suleymaniyah, in the northern sector of the battlefield which stretches for more than 700 miles along the border.

Rains Pelt Oregon; Calif. Woes Continue

By MARTIN STEINBERG
Associated Press Writer

More rain moved into already saturated Oregon today as residents braced for more flooding and mudslides, and nearly 10,000 northern Californians remained out of their homes because of rampaging waters from last week's storms.

The West's problems were compounded by record high temperatures in 21 locations Monday, including Idaho, where mudslides isolated communities in the central part of the state.

Elsewhere, 5 inches of snow fell Monday on Washington, D.C., and travelers' advisories for up to 4 inches were in effect this morning from northern Virginia and West Virginia to southern New Jersey.

At least 20 people died as a result of the barrage of Pacific storms which struck Feb. 11.

Storm damage in northern California, where about 50,000 people were forced to evacuate at various times, was estimated at $319 million, said Nancy Hardaker, a spokeswoman for the state Office of Emergency Services. At least 11,614 homes or businesses were damaged and 1,648 destroyed, she said.

In Yuba County, where 26,000 people were forced to flee Thursday after a levee crumbled, police were investigating as many as 30 reports of looting in the flooded area, said county Undersheriff Dennis Moore.

Of the 26,000 evacuees, "all but 7,000 to 8,000 are back at their properties, but not all can live in their homes," Moore said.

In Thornton, in the San Joaquin Valley, 1,300 residents forced to evacuate before a Mokelumne River levee gave way last week remained out of their homes today, authorities said.

In Oregon, numerous roads remained blocked, but rivers and streams receded in most areas Monday after weekend flooding triggered by rapid snow melt and heavy rains.

"Flooding is still a threat to much of the state," the National Weather Service said Monday.

Ground and air crews searched rugged territory near Dee south of the town of Hood River in northern Oregon to find a break in a 14-inch water main. The break, believed caused by a slide, forced water rationing in Hood River and officials said more than 8,000 people could be without water through the end of the week if the break is not repaired.

A flood-broken natural gas pipeline serving some 50,000 Nevadans was repaired, but reconnecting customers was expected to take one more day.

Washington state and Montana also had scattered road closings caused by flooding, mudslides and washouts from rain and melting snow.

In Idaho, mudslides have closed mountain roads to the communities of Garden Valley and Crouch, said Boise County Sheriff's Deputy Chuck Richards. County officials have declared a state of emergency and will ask Gov. John Evans to assess the situation today, he said.

Drivers on U.S. 95 between Payette and Weiser travel at their own risk because of flooding from the Snake River, a Washington County Sheriff's spokesman said.

Part of Boise was cut off Monday as flood control workers blocked streets with a sandbag canal to drain swollen ponds. Temperatures reached 68 degrees there Monday, five degrees warmer than the record set in 1983, but the thawing level in the mountains rose to 9,000 feet, unleashing more water from melting snow, said Chris Hill, of the weather service in Boise.

Record high temperatures for the date were set in 17 other western cities and tied in three others.

Of those records, new marks for the month of February were set by one degree in Ely, Nev., where the 67-degree reading exceeded the record set Feb. 16, 1977; and in Hanford, Wash., and Lewiston, Idaho, where Monday's 72-degree temperatures eclipsed records set Feb. 12, 1924, and Feb. 27, 1926, respectively.

"I am motivated," Kugel wrote, "by a sincere desire to restore your confidence in our work and of course by the desire to recoup the considerable investment we have already made in the property."
 Kugel could not be reached by phone today for comment.
 Kugel reportedly did not meet time limitations of his contract with Evergreen in part because he was unable to secure local funding for his project.

He was unable to do so, a source said, because his plans to convert the Belk building were incompatible with the nature of the existing market.
 "He wanted to charge 50-100 percent more than current lease rates in the downtown area, and because of that the banks felt that revenue projections on the project probably were not accurate," the source said.

Once Kugel's check clears, Evergreen officials plan to renew efforts to hire an executive director to orchestrate revitalization of downtown Greenville.
 "We have arranged for an office and secretarial assistance to be ready whenever we hire a new executive director," McKee said. Evergreen deviated from its original plan to hire an executive director a year ago, when the corporation decided to hire Kugel. Kugel was introduced to local officials in 1985 by Oppie Jordan, director of business development for the N.C. Department of Commerce.

live with" the firm's recommendation that the shuttle not be flown at temperatures below the previous low reading of 53 degrees.

He said Mulloy expressed concern that the shuttle program would have difficulty meeting its ambitious launch schedule, because morning temperatures often fall below 53 degrees at an as-yet-unused launch facility at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California.

McDonald said the question of sub-freezing pre-launch temperatures at Cape Canaveral were discussed via a telephone conference involving space agency officials and engineers from Morton Thiokol, which manufactures the booster rockets.

McDonald was the leadoff witness at the first commission hearings since the disclosure that some company engineers at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida initially opposed the launch for safety reasons. The panel is searching for the cause of the Jan. 28 explosion that destroyed Challenger.

"Low temperatures were in the direction of badness" for the ability of rubber-like seals called O-rings to seal joints in the solid rocket boosters, McDonald said he told the conference held the night before the launch.

He said officials from Morton Thiokol initially recommended against launching the Challenger. The firm later reversed itself and sent a memo approving the launch.

Investigators believe the shuttle's problems began when a puff of smoke emerged from a seam in the right booster rocket less than a half second following liftoff. The commission is focusing on whether NASA officials pressured the company into approving a launch despite safety concerns caused by cold weather.

And commission chairman William Rogers opened the hearing with a statement that the nation's worst space accident "may involve human error, as distinguished from equipment failure."

Rogers also said the commission would "try to give the right of reply" swiftly to any officials who feel they are unfairly accused during the proceedings.

The commission opened two days of public hearings as another source close to the investigation disclosed that special "ice team" crews that examined the Challenger on the pad shortly before the Jan. 28 launch reported extremely cold temperature readings over a radio circuit monitored in NASA's launch control center.

"These low temperatures never got the attention they should have," said this source, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

"The ice team reports went to launch director Gene Thomas," said a Kennedy Space Center employee. Thomas was one of four men in the firing room who advised shuttle boss Jesse Moore directly on launch decisions. It was not clear whether Thomas actually heard the temperature reports. But Moore, who makes the final decision, has testified he did not.

The temperatures are important because a leading theory of the accident is that cold weakened the seals on the shuttle's right-hand solid-fuel rocket booster, allowing a plume of flame to escape shortly after launch.

Commission members met privately Monday to set the agenda for the hearings. They announced only that officials from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and Morton Thiokol Inc., which makes the boosters, would testify today.

The company officials include McDonald, who has said publicly he persisted in his opposition to the launch even after company supervisors overruled him; and Joe C. Kilminster, the Morton Thiokol official who transmitted the firm's formal approval for launch.

NASA witnesses include Hardy and Mulloy, both involved in the rocket booster program; as well as Stan Reinhartz, shuttle projects manager at the Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala.

Meanwhile on Monday night, Mary Elizabeth Beggs, wife of NASA administrator James M. Beggs, told The Associated Press he is "about to resign." President Reagan will get his resignation letter in "a little while," she added.

Beggs, 60, went on unpaid leave last year after a grand jury indicted him on charges stemming from his former job as a General Dynamics executive.

"He doesn't know anything about his successor," Mrs. Beggs said, "but he's hopeful that someone wonderful will lead that marvelous agency. He's hoping for good, strong, solid leadership."

Beggs initially vowed to return to NASA but, since the shuttle accident, there have been increasing demands that he leave for good so a permanent head can be named to guide the agency through its most difficult period.

A top-level NASA source said the White House would not immediately name Beggs' successor but that acting administrator William Graham, whose appointment Beggs is known to oppose, was unlikely to get the job.

On the night before Challenger was launched, McDonald was at a Kennedy Space Center office about five miles from the launch control center where Mulloy was working not far from Moore. Mulloy, McDonald and others were using a teleconference hook-up to debate the Morton Thiokol engineers' worries about the launch conditions.

Carolina University student David Brown to re-activate the City-ECU Parking Committee.

In lieu of re-activating the committee, the council decided to refer student-city parking problems to the Downtown Parking Authority for review.

Brown, president of the ECU Student Government Association, in early February asked the council to re-activate the committee to study city policy on towing of student vehicles. According to Brown, students whose cars have been parked 20 minutes over the allotted time on streets in the Tar River Neighborhood have been forced to pay $5 parking citations as well as $40 towing fines.

Other matters receiving council attention Monday included city involvement in construction of a $250,000 science and nature center at River Park North, preliminary budget philosophy, construction of a $6,003 entrance for Elm Street gym to protect the facility's new flooring, and purchase of defibrillators for the city's EMT-Advanced Intermediate program.

Women Top JMU, Tie For Title

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
James Madison University's women's basketball team, ranked 18th in the nation, came into Minges Coliseum all set to carry off the Colonial Athletic Association's regular season title Monday night.

But the Lady Pirates of ECU, the defending champions, had a better idea, pulling off a 63-59 upset victory that threw the league's regular season title into a deadlock.

Both teams finished with 11-1 conference records, and a conference telephone call this morning was held to decide which team would take the #1 position for this weekend's CAA tournament at UNC-Wilmington. The top seeding carries a bye into the three-day, seven-team event.

Madison won the draw, and ECU will face William & Mary in a first round game Friday at 4 p.m. (See accompanying story for full pairings.)

The Lady Pirates, who dropped an 82-55 decision to the Lady Dukes in Harrisonburg, Va., earlier this year, were stung by that memory and did a lot to erase the pain of it with the win.

It didn't come easy, however, as Madison shot a blazing 80 percent from the floor in the second half. The Lady Pirates, however, countered that with excellent free throw shooting, hitting 19 of 23 at the line — and therein lay the difference.

Madison Wins Top Seeding

James Madison University will be the top-seeded team in the women's Colonial Athletic Association basketball tournament which opens Friday at UNC-Wilmington.

Madison drew the top spot this morning in a conference call after it had lost to East Carolina, 63-59, knotting the two teams for the regular season title with 11-1 records each.

The draw followed a controversy last night between JMU's coaches and ECU Athletic Director Ken Karr.

Dukes Stun East Carolina; Pirates Go To Wilmington

HARRISONBURG, Va. — James Madison University rallied in the second half to upset East Carolina University's Pirates, 86-73, Monday night in the final regular season game of the Colonial Athletic Association for both teams.

The result moved Madison into a three-way tie for sixth place in the CAA, along with American and William & Mary, all 3-11 for the year.

It also dropped the Pirates to 6-8, allowing UNC-Wilmington to pull into a tie with them for fourth place in the standings.

Eric Brent led a balanced scoring attack by the Dukes with 21 points while John Newman added 20. Rob Griffin added 16 with David Monroe hitting 15 and Ken Halleck scoring 11.

For the Pirates, the loss was a frustrating end to the regular season. Saturday night, two missed shots in the final 10 seconds of play cost them a win over George Mason, which recorded a 71-70 decision. The Pirates had trailed by 13 points with under five minutes left in the game and held Mason scoreless the rest of the way, only to fall just short.

Following Saturday's first round games in the CAA tourney, the four surviving teams will move on to Fairfax, Va., to the Patriot Center at George Mason for the semifinal and finals next Monday and Tuesday.

Dudley with 10:22 to go. Madison stretched the lead to 16-12 on a Donna Budd layup.

East Carolina, however, scored the next ten points in the game, four of them by Sylvia Bragg, to push out to a 22-16 lead before Madison could hit again. East Carolina upped the lead to as much as seven, 26-19, before settling for a 26-21 lead at the half.

After scoring early to regain the seven-point margin, the Lady Pirates watched it disappear as Madison turned on a flurry, scoring ten in a row for a 33-30 lead. The string ended when Bragg hit two free throws to cut it back to one.

But Madison scored the next two baskets, both jumpers by Dudley, to up the lead to 37-32.

East Carolina fought back and with 9:48 left, Bragg's 17-footer put them back up, 40-39. Alisa Harris hit the first of two free throws to it up, then after getting a rebound on the miss of the second, she was again fouled, making the second of two for a 41-40 lead. Witman hit a jumper for a three-point lead, 43-40, but the Pirates again fought back.

Loraine Foster cut it to one and then pushed ECU up with two free throws, 46-45 with 5:40 left.

East Carolina never trailed again. Bragg made four straight at the line after that to run the lead to five, 50-45 and the two teams traded points until Alma Bethea upped the lead to seven, 56-49, with 2:52 left.

The margin finally reached nine of a Bragg jumper at 1:22, 60-51, and it was just a question of running out the clock after that.

Lisa Squirewell and Bragg each had 16 points to lead ECU, while Bethea added 14. Witman and Harris had 14 each for JMU with Floretta Jackson hitting 12.

East Carolina, now 21-6 overall, outrebounded the Lady Dukes, 31-24, led by 11 from Squirewell.

"This was a moral victory for us," Manwaring said. "We know we can play with them when we play in all aspects of the game. When everything comes together, I don't think they can match up with us."

The win marked another milestone for Manwaring, giving her her first win over a nationally ranked team since coming to ECU two years ago.

Tournament play opens Friday at UNC-Wilmington with three games. The semifinals will be Saturday night, and the championship game on Sunday.

the NBA at 5-foot-7, but he is showing a knack for being at his best when the crowds are largest.

Webb, the winner of the NBA's slam-dunk contest before a sellout crowd in Dallas on Feb. 8, played the best game of the season Monday night against the defending champion Los Angeles Lakers in front of a capacity audience in Atlanta. The 102-93 Hawk victory was their first over the Lakers in more than six years.

Webb had 23 points and 13 assists, both career highs, and he delighted the crowd of 16,522 with two dunks and 14 points in the third quarter.

"That's something I've been doing all my life," Webb said of his two dunks. "If they block me, I'll go back again."

"He's not a novelty; he's a player," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "What Spud does especially well is come so hard at you on the break. We just can't get in front of him. He is an incredible threat driving and passing off."

In other games, it was Detroit 110, Chicago 100; Houston 110, Dallas 105; Cleveland 124, San Antonio 114; Washington 99, New Jersey 89; and Denver 119, Portland 113.

The Hawks had lost 12 straight to the Lakers since Dec. 19, 1979. Atlanta Coach Mike Fratello said his team was helped by a groin bruise that sidelined Los Angeles forward James Worthy, and the Lakers' lack of rest after a tough overtime victory at Philadelphia Sunday.

"We caught them at the right time," Fratello said.

Dominique Wilkins scored 33 points to lead Atlanta, while Kevin Willis had 16 points and 18 rebounds. Earvin "Magic" Johnson and Maurice Lucas each scored 23 points, and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar 22 for the Lakers.

Atlanta led 53-52 at halftime, then scored the first eight points of the third quarter to lead 61-52. The Lakers cut the lead to 72-71, but Webb then led a 10-4 Atlanta run with six points, including a dunk, to make the score 82-75 at the end of the third quarter.

Pistons 110, Bulls 100

Detroit won for the eighth straight time and captured its 12th consecutive home game as Kelly Tripucka scored a season-high 41 points against Chicago.

The scored was tied 59-59 at halftime before Tripucka hit two three-point goals to key a 16-8 spurt that gave the Pistons the lead to stay. Tripucka had one other three-pointer in the game after collecting just five previously this season.

Isiah Thomas added 33 and Bill Laimbeer 20 points and 15 rebounds for Detroit, while George Gervin had 26 points and Sidney Green 22 for the Bulls.

Nuggets 119, Blazers 113
Alex English scored 32 points as Denver won its fifth straight game and handed Portland its NBA season-high 10th consecutive loss.

The 10-game losing streak surpassed a nine-game loss skein by Phoenix, which started the season 0-9.

Calvin Natt added 23 points for the Nuggets, while Mychal Thompson led Portland with 23 and Kiki Vandeweghe added 22.

Rockets 110, Mavericks 105
Ralph Sampson had 28 points and 19 rebounds as Houston maintained its Midwest Division lead at 2½ games with a victory over Dallas.

Jay Vincent, who led all scorers with 31 points, gave the Mavericks a 105-103 lead with 42 seconds left, but Robert Reid's fallaway jumper 17 seconds later tied the score. Sampson put the Rockets ahead to stay with a free throw with 22 seconds remaining, and John Lucas' four free throws in the final nine seconds iced the victory. Dallas led by as many as seven points in the third quarter before Houston jumped ahead with a 12-0 streak.

Bullets 99, Nets 89

Jeff Malone scored seven of his 25 points as Washington outscored New Jersey 11-2 in the final 4:17, handing the Nets their eighth loss in the last 10 games.

Malone started the surge with a field goal and one of two free throws. Following a basket by New Jersey's Buck Williams, Dan Roundfield scored a rebound field goal for Washington and Malone hit two more shots.

Jeff Ruland scored 23 points for the Bullets, while Mike Gminski led the Nets with 19. Only 1,711 fans attended the game at the Capital Centre on a snowy night and all were given free tickets for another game on Thursday night.

Cavaliers 124, Spurs 111

World B. Free, who missed two games with a pulled calf muscle, came back to score 31 points and John Bagley had 24 points and 11 assists for Cleveland against San Antonio.

The Cavaliers trailed by 11 points in the first quarter before leading 66-64 at halftime and taking a nine-point advantage in the fourth quarter. The Spurs got as close as four points on two occasions, but Free and Roy Hinson stifled the rallies.

Mike Mitchell led San Antonio with 28 points and Wes Matthews had 20. Hinson scored 21 for Cleveland.

Kansas Halts Sooners' Long Home Court Streak

By The Associated Press
Kansas Coach Larry Brown kind of understated the case.

"This was a good road win as I've ever been involved in," Brown said Monday night after his second-ranked Jayhawks beat No. 14 Oklahoma 87-80 in a Big Eight Conference game at Norman, Okla.

The loss ended a 48-game homecourt winning streak for Oklahoma, the last loss in Norman coming to Kansas in 1983. It was the third straight for the Sooners.

Forward Danny Manning, who saw limited playing time in the first half because of foul trouble, scored 20 of his 25 points in the second half for Kansas, 27-3 and 12-1 in the Big Eight.

"We could never seem to get over the hump tonight," Sooners Coach Billy Tubbs said. "We couldn't take command of the game — I can't remember the last time we had control of a game." In two other Top Twenty games, it was No. 7 Memphis State 86, South Carolina 73, and No. 13 Louisville 66, South Alabama 55.

Trailing by seven at halftime, Oklahoma tied the score 53-53 with 12:46 to play. Manning then scored 10 of Kansas' next 12 points, and the Jayhawks led 65-61 with 7:47 left. Kansas took its biggest lead, 69-61, on a slam dunk by center Greg Dreiling with 6:31 to play.

"I wanted to make something happen," Manning said. "Being on the bench in the first half, the coaches talked to me and it worked to my benefit."

Darryl Kennedy had 22 points for Oklahoma, which fell to 23-6 and 8-5 in the conference.

No. 7 Memphis St. 86, S. Carolina 73
William Bedford scored 17 points, and Baskerville Holmes scored half of Memphis State's points in a 20-9 run that helped the Tigers build a 43-28 halftime lead in their Metro Conference victory at South Carolina. The Tigers led by as much as 54-32 with 14:19 left on a tip-in by Marvin Alexander. Five players scored in double figures for Memphis State, 24-3 and 9-2 in the conference.

Memphis State scored the first three baskets of the second half, and after taking a 22-point lead never let the Gamecocks get any closer than 84-73 with 15 seconds to play.

Michael Foster scored 21 for South Carolina.

No. 13 Louisville 66, S. Alabama 55
Louisville won its seventh straight game, shooting 72.7 percent from the floor in the second half against non-conference opponent South Alabama. Herbert Crook scored 13 points for the Cardinals, 22-7 after winning 11 of their last 12 games.

The Cardinals led by eight when they outscored South Alabama 16-9 to take a 51-36 lead with 8:28 to play. Crook had four points during the run. Ricky Brown led South Alabama with 15 points.

Unranked Teams
In other Metro Conference games, Dell Curry scored 36 points, hitting 16 of 22 field goal attempts, to lead Virginia Tech over Florida State 92-84. Sophomore Casey Fisher scored 26 points as Southern Mississippi beat Cincinnati 76-62.

In the Big East, Charles Smith scored 18 points and Demetrius Gore had 17 as Pittsburgh ended a four-game losing streak with a 79-51 victory over Connecticut. Ernie Lewis hit all eight of his shots from the floor to pace Providence to its third straight victory, 97-82 over Seton Hall.

In the Southwest Conference, forward Winston Crite had 24 points and 10 rebounds, leading Texas A&M to an 82-75 victory over Houston.

GCA Set For Tourney

Greenville Christian Academy's boys and girls basketball teams have both been picked to the field of the North Carolina Christian Activities Association's post-season basketball tournament.

The girls, who won the Eastern Carolina Christian Conference's regular season and tournament championship, have been seeded second in the state. They will open tournament play at Woodland Christian on March 6 at 7:30 p.m., meeting the winner of this weekend's game between #7 Southview Christian of Statesville and #10 Northside Christian of Charlotte.

The GCA boys, who won the ECCC's tournament title, were seeded fifth in the state. They will face #12 Wilmington Christian on Saturday at 1 p.m. in the GCA gym. The winner will move on to face #4 Vandalia Christian at 3 p.m. on March 6 in Walkertown.

The boys' and girls' semifinals and finals will all be played at Walkertown.

Court Upholds No Pass, No Play

HOUSTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court's decision that Texas' "no pass, no play" law raises no federal questions clears the way for further attacks on the rule in state court, says a lawyer for students challenging the law.

The high court on Monday let stand the rule that bars failing students from extracurricular activities for six weeks. The rule was a major part of a 1984 education reform package approved by Texas legislators.

It became the most controversial part of the package after failing grades made about 15 percent of the state's varsity football players ineligible.

Houston attorney Anthony Sheppard said his clients will raise new issues when the case returns to state court.

"This clarifies that we have not had any federal issues in the case yet," Sheppard said of the U.S. Supreme Court decision. "The appeal was entirely based on Texas law and did not involve the U.S. Constitution. This is something we had to do to foreclose an argument in the state."

Sheppard said when the case goes back to the state district court in Houston, the issue of the rule's effect on minorities and the handicapped will be included in his arguments. Those issues fall under federal jurisdiction, he said.

Gov. Mark White, who pushed the reform bill in 1984 and has rejected efforts to make changes, said he was pleased by the decision.

"That's a state issue and we won," he said. State Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby said the decision could end judicial scrutiny of no pass, no play.

"I hope we will now be able to get this issue out of the courthouse and get emphasis on academic achievement back into the classroom, where it rightly belongs," he said.

Kirby said he believes the rule is working well.

"However, at the request of the State Board of Education we will be studying the overall impact of the no pass, no play rule very carefully after the first full year of implementation has been completed," he said.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said he had been confident the U.S. Supreme Court would uphold the law. The decision means Texans should "now know this is the law unless the Texas Legislature changes it."

Students who challenged the law for the most part were prevented from participating on interscholastic athletic teams.

But in their appeal to the Supreme Court, they said the penalty affects the right of free expression because students, for example, could be denied a spot on the school newspaper or in school government.

"The case patently does not involve the media favorite, 'academics vs. athletics," lawyers for the students said. "The undisputed evidence has revealed that the law works to deprive all public school children in Texas, falling within its purview, from participation in all extracurricular activities."

The law also is arbitrary and capricious, the appeal said, because it may single out students who flunk one course and get straight "As" in all other courses. On the other hand, a student with all "Ds" — a poor but passing grade — is not prevented from taking part in extracurricular activities.

At an earlier stage in the suit challenging the law, lawyers argued that it discriminates against black and Hispanic students. That argument was not raised in the appeal acted on Monday.

The Texas Supreme Court, overruling a lower state court, reinstated the law last July.

The state Supreme Court said the right to take part in extracurricular activities is not guaranteed by either the Texas or federal Constitution.

Wellcome ends the year with an 11-2 record.

Joan Benoit Captures Sullivan

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Joan Benoit-Samuels, who overcame knee surgery to win an Olympic gold medal in the marathon, is battling physical problems again.

"I'm not sure I'll be able to compete in Boston (the Boston Marathon)," the 28-year-old from Freeport, Maine said Monday after becoming only the seventh female winner of the Sullivan Award.

The award has been presented annually since 1930 by the U.S. Amateur Athletic Union for an athlete's accomplishments the previous year.

"I had surgery on both heels in my right foot in November," Benoit-Samuels said in discussing her current physical problem. "My right side bounced right back. My left one is still giving me some problem. I am training, about two-thirds of what I normally do to prepare for my competitive races. I'm just taking it day-by-day."

Benoit-Samuels set a world record for a loop course with a time of 2 hours, 21 minutes, 21 seconds in Chicago last fall in the America's Marathon and is aiming to break the 2:20 barrier.

"I'm up against the time clock, so to speak, as far as Boston is concerned. But, if there is any place I would like to break 2:20, it would be Boston in the Spring. But, if it doesn't happen in the Spring, Chicago was very good to me last fall and perhaps it will be even better."

She said Ingrid Kristiansen of Norway, who set a women's record of 2:21.06 last year, might be the first to break the 2:20 barrier. Benoit-Samuels' record was set in an event where the runners start and finish at the same location after following a specific route. Kristiansen's record was set in a traditional marathon, where the runners start at one point and finish at another.

"I'm really shocked," she said about winning the Sullivan in her second consecutive trip to the annual presentation dinner as a finalist. "I was here last year with what I considered the best athletes anywhere and this field assembled here this year equaled that field."

The award was presented by last year's winner, diver Greg Louganis, who told the finalists, "You all are winners. You may not realize it, but young kids are looking up to you."

"I run because I love to run, not for the awards," said Benoit-Samuels, who also won a 12-kilometer race in San Francisco last May and a seven-miler in Davenport, Iowa, in July. In August she returned to her native New England to win the 7.1-mile Falmouth Road Race.

"I thought after the Olympics I would at least slow down with my training and not take it as seriously," she said. "It's a tough thing to let go of when you're still enjoying what you're doing and having success."

That's why one week after her surgery in November, Benoit-Samuels began working out on a bike and one week later was swimming as part of her conditioning.

"It was the overuse syndrome," she said of the reason for the surgery. "The heels take the brunt of my activity and they were really bothering me before and I would have some times when I couldn't train sufficiently, as far as I was concerned."

And why does she continue to push herself?

"I really love it," she said, adding that she's now running once a day "trying to push a little bit beyond the level I should be, around 12 miles a day, and that's usually one run. I would like to be running twice a day. I've had a couple of days when I've run twice a day, but usually I get so tight after my first run that by the time of day I haven't loosened up enough to get out for the second run."

Sprinter Valerie Brisco-Hooks, who set four world indoor marks last year, also was a finalist for the second consecutive year. An injury received last weekend prevented her from attending the dinner, officials said.

Another finalist who missed the dinner was Willie Banks, who set a world record of 58-feet-11½ inches in the triple jump during the national outdoor championships here last summer. The UCLA graduate is scheduled to take the California bar exam today.

The group of finalists also included:

— Swimmer Matt Biondi, who set a world record in the 100-meter freestyle twice at last year's long course natinal championships and became the first man to break the 49-second barrier with a 48.95 performance.

— Wrestler Mike Houck, the first United States wrestler to win a gold medal in the Greco-Roman World Championships.

— Synchronized swimmer Sarah Josephson, who swept national solo and duet championships and earned silver medals in solo, duet and team World Cup competition.

— Diver Michele Mitchell, the winner of every major national and international platform diving competition in 1985.

— Scott Verplank, who became the first amateur golfer to win a Professional Golfers Association tournament since 1954 when he topped the field in the Western Open last August.

Williams Quits San Diego; Leaves Winning, Bitterness

YUMA, Ariz. (AP) — Dick Williams left behind a legacy of winning as well as bitterness when he resigned as manager of the San Diego Padres.

Player resentment, fueled by unhappiness over Williams' gruff managing style, developed last season in what was a familiar pattern during his 18-year career as a big-league manager.

"There's no question that a lot of guys are going to be happy about the change," right-fielder Tony Gwynn said in Yuma, where the Padres opened spring training Monday.

Williams, who guided the Padres to their first National League title and only World Series appearance in 1984, survived an ouster attempt last December when owner Joan Kroc blocked a management proposal to buy out the final year of his contract.

In the end, however, Williams decided to quit voluntarily, announcing his resignation at a San Diego news conference Monday.

"For the past few weeks, I have been asking myself, 'Do I really want to manage the Padres another year?' My honest answer, finally, was, 'No.'"

"When I shared that feeling with (club president) Ballard Smith and Joan Kroc, we agreed that it would be in the best interest of the club, myself and my family that I not return to the Padres."

Smith, increasingly disenchanted by Williams' often abrasive style and concerned about team harmony, had led the off-season attempt to remove the manager.

General Manager Jack McKeon, who was aligned with Smith, said in Yuma that he didn't think the loss of Williams would cause a major disruption in the team's preparations.

"A lot of teams go through this at one time or another," he said. "They (The Padres) are going to play well no matter who the manager is. I think we're all looking forward to a positive year. I think everybody is dedicated to making '86 as happy a year as '84."

When Williams had approached Smith about a contract extension last year, he was rebuffed by the club president, who told Williams he could serve out the pact's final year this season.

In early December, published reports hinted at a proposed buyout of Williams' contract.

That followed the unannounced firing of third base coach Ozzie Virgil, a

— Charles "Karch" Kiraly, selected the most valuable player in the World Cup volleyball competition after leading an undefeated United States team to its first championship in the event.

— Cheryl Miller, the winner of the 1985 Wade Trophy symbol of being selected the most outstanding player in women's collegiate basketball.

Miller, the holder of 10 school records at Southern California when the season began, is also a two-time winner of the Naismith Player of the Year award.

Benoit-Samuels is the 33rd track and field participant to receive the award. The award is presented in honor of AAU founder and former president James E. Sullivan.

Athletes are ineligible to be nominated for the award after winning it.

McMahon: Bears Must Pay Price

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chicago Bears quarterback Jim McMahon says his team's chances of establishing a dynasty could be ruined if the Bears' front office is not willing to literally pay the price.

McMahon, who was honored here Saturday night by the National Quarterback Club, said the Bears must sign defensive end Richard Dent to have a chance to win a second consecutive National Football League title.

"I guarantee you we need Richard Dent," McMahon told reporters before he was named professional quarterback of the year at the black-tie affair. "If we don't sign him, we'll self-destruct."
 Dent, the Super Bowl MVP, is threatening to follow the course of action taken by Chicago starters Todd Bell and Al Harris, who sat out the entire 1985 season over a salary dispute.

The Bears have already lost defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan, who recently left to coach the Philadelphia Eagles.

"We're not as good a team as we were," McMahon said. "It's going to take the defense some time to adjust, and I don't think they will be as dominating."

McMahon was one of two generations of Bear quarterbacks to be honored at the benefit for Cystic Fibrosis research. Sid Luckman, who starred during the 1940s, was inducted into the newly-formed National Quarterback Hall of Fame.

Stones Will Finally Get A Grammy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Rolling Stones, which for 24 years has failed to win a Grammy, will finally receive one — a lifetime achievement award to be presented at tonight's 28th annual ceremony.

Critics of the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences often point to the Stones as the best example of the academy's habit of awarding Grammys to the most accessible of music and ignoring the adventurous.

The Stones were not considered Grammy material when they were spinning out their sexy, threatening and downright raunchy music of the late 1960s and early 1970s.

That was the time of "Honky Tonk Woman," "Sympathy for the Devil," "Gimme Shelter," "Midnight Rambler," and the "Let It Bleed" and "Sticky Fingers" albums. Mick Jagger was rock energy incarnate.

By contrast, the record of the year for 1969 — the year of "Let It Bleed," was "Aquarius — Let the Sunshine In." Album of the year was "Blood, Sweat & Tears," and song of the year was "Games People Play."

There are other more recent examples, such as Lionel Richie's easy listening "Can't Slow Down" album beating Bruce Springsteen's "Born in the USA" and Prince's "Purple Rain" LPs last year.

The Rolling Stones will accept the award in a live satellite broadcast from London during the awards show.

Tonight's show, with Kenny Rogers as host, will be televised live and in stereo starting at 8 p.m. EST on CBS, with a tape delay broadcast for the West. Presentation of 14 of 71 awards will be shown, with the others given earlier. The nominees are songs released from Oct. 1, 1984, through October 1985.

Scheduled performers include

Sting, Whitney Houston, Stevie Wonder, a-ha, Ronnie Milsap and The Five Satins, and an all-star jazz segment.

Dire Straits leader Mark Knopfler has eight nominations; the song, album and video of "We Are the World" has six; and artists Phil Collins, Tina Turner and Sting have five each. Dire Straits has three nominations.

The Manhattan Transfer's

"Vocales" album got 12 nominations, but the awards are divided among individual artists from the group, guest artists, and vocal arrangements.

Among producers, Robert E. Woods has seven nominations for classical albums, and David Foster has six for pop and rock recordings. Dennis Lambert, who also composes and arranges, has received five nominations for work with such

Grammy Winners Prefer To Sleep Late After Show

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The morning news-and-information shows are notorious for their "Limousine Wars" waged over celebrities and newsmakers. But the morning after tonight's Grammy Awards should signal a momentary cease-fire.

That's not because of any sudden good will among the combative programs. It's because rock 'n' roll stars stay up late and march to their own drummers. Network limos to fetch the stars still will be available, as will the lure of national TV, but don't expect any live artists showing off their sparkling Grammy trophies Wednesday morning.

"It's not as fiercely competitive as the Oscars or the Emmys simply because many of the major stars don't go and other major stars don't wish to get up in the morning," said Peter McCabe, senior producer of the "CBS Morning News." "It would be nice to have the artist the morning after they win the Grammy, but my sense is there'll be slim pickings."

Whitney Houston, for example, has been nominated in several categories. If she wins, the morning shows would love to toast her with coffee and Danish. But her agent has all but nixed a live appearance.

"It means getting up too early," said Melani Rogers, publicity director for Arista Records, Miss Houston's recording company. "I won't have Whitney working into the night. I couldn't ask her not to go celebrate in order to do one of the morning shows."

Even under the best circumstances, West Coast celebrities really must want attention to rise and shine for ABC's "Good Morning America," the "CBS Morning News" or NBC's "Today" — programs which start live in New York at 4 a.m., Pacific Time.

Make-up and large cups of coffee are standard studio props, said Jacoba Atlas, an associate producer for "Today." But one alternative — putting a camera in the star's home — really is no better.

"We'd have to get there at midnight to set up (communications) lines, and nobody wants that intrusion," Atlas said.

CBS and NBC have scheduled live Grammy spots Wednesday morning — just in case — but they fully expect those segments to be filled by taped pieces from the night before. ABC, however, isn't even going through those motions.

"We have no plans for live interviews," said Tricia Daniels, associate producer for "Good Morning America." "We want to give the audience the feeling they were behind the scenes, and we can do that with videotaped highlights."

While CBS' Grammy broadcast is going on live tonight, another live show is going on backstage: network producers and other media representatives vying for the biggest winners. "Nobody will be doing the deserving, but esoteric jazz star," said Atlas. "We all want the most visible stars."

That quest started last month when Grammy nominations were announced. Talent scouts for the morning shows immediately began wooing guests who would come on live and exclusive to their programs. Just as quickly the shows found they probably would have to settle for taped interviews on a grab-'em-on-the-run basis.

"It's unrealistic to expect to get them exclusively," said Atlas. "The winners are wanted by everybody. It's a news story."

It's important for the TV folks backstage to have a familiarity with the stars and their entourage, so they can get interviews before the winners rush out to their all-night victory parties.

"Historically, we try to target two or three people who have the best chances of winning and who have been friends of the show," said Marty Ryan, senior producer of "Today."

McCabe said last week that CBS had only one commitment — from rhythm and blues artist Freddie Jackson — but the program will keep pushing, even with the publicity-shy Bruce Springsteen and Michael Jackson. "We always encourage our people to let the stars say 'no,'" McCabe said.

But McCabe admitted that being a poor third in the ratings puts the "Morning News" at a "generic disadvantage" with some stars.

Victoria Rose, vice president of the Howard Bloom Organization, which represents Lionel Richie, said she wants to "reach the most people with as few interviews as possible, and ratings have something to do with that."

In the past six months, Rose said Richie has done only four interviews — including one each with top-rated "Today" and No. 2 "Good Morning America."

Other publicists are more democratic. "It's on a first-come, first-served basis," said Rogers on behalf of her client, Miss Houston, "and that even means the lowest-rated shows."

But just don't call her too early the morning after.

TV News Wars

NEW YORK (AP) — While the top story on the three networks' evening newscasts was the Philippines insurrection, Dan Rather was in the Farm Belt, Peter Jennings was outside the Kremlin and Tom Brokaw was in New York preparing to fly to Washington.

Rather was in San Antonio, Texas, for the start of a weeklong series of "CBS Evening News" reports on America's farm crisis. Earlier Monday, he went on the "CBS Morning News" to trumpet the farm coverage, but then reminded viewers that his broadcast would still cover the crisis in the Philippines.

In a recent interview, Rather said his fear about being an anchor-on-the-go in this age of globe-trotting journalism was that a major breaking story might develop while he was committed elsewhere. "If there were an assassination, I would have to come back," he said.

On Sunday night, ABC's Ted Koppel was headed to Manila for "Nightline." He was to also co-anchor "World News Tonight" from there, while "World News Tonight," with its regular anchor, Peter Jennings, was being broadcast this week from Moscow for the Communist Party Congress.

But the Manila airport was closed down, and Koppel was forced to anchor both "World News Tonight" and "Nightline" from Hong Kong.

Brokaw and the "NBC Nightly News" were in New York on Monday, with plans to anchor the broadcast from the State Department today and Wednesday to report on the shuttle Challenger investigation.

In contrast, the networks' three Sunday morning interview shows over the weekend were not torn between committed stories and breaking news. All three scuttled planned programs to devote full attention to the Philippines.

On Friday, CBS' "Face the Nation" had scheduled an interview with Sen. Edward Kennedy, NBC's "Meet the Press" had a Nicaragua-policy broadcast with President Daniel Ortega and Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley" planned to focus on the shuttle investigation.

IN THE STATE

Governor Feels States Ought To Receive Fuel Tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Carolina would emerge a winner if a proposal is passed to funnel the federal motor fuel tax to the states, which would then pay for most of the nation's highways, Gov. Jim Martin says.

"North Carolina has always come up short-changed under the federal highway formulas," Martin said Monday in a news conference at a meeting of the National Governors' Association.

Under the proposal, the states would pick up all highway costs except for the interstate system and other areas such as bridges crossing state borders. To pay for the highways, the states would receive the 9-cent-per-gallon federal excise tax on motor fuels.

Proposed by a National Governors' Association committee led by Indiana Gov. Robert Orr, the plan is part of a larger proposal to have the federal and state governments swap several areas of responsibility and revenue.

Currently, Martin said, only 6 cents a gallon of the federal motor fuel tax collected in North Carolina finds its way back to the state in federal highway aid. He said giving the state the full 9-cent federal tax could provide the additional $150 million to $200 million the state needs for highways and roads.

Also Monday, Martin said while a budget-balancing plan is expected to mean fewer federal funds for North Carolina and other states, it also will bring "relief from the damage that's been done by chronic federal deficits."

Report On Kids' Health Made Public

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The overall health of American children has improved slightly, but there's "a great deal of grief" among the poor and minorities, a study by a University of North Carolina researcher shows.

"Even as our economy seems to recover, the proportion of children living in poverty has increased," said C. Arden Miller, chairman of maternal and child health at UNC. Federal budget cuts in social programs have removed the support low-income people needed to climb out of the recession, he said.

"There's very little evidence they will recover in the absence of policies designed to lift people out of poverty," Miller said.

Miller conducted a three-year nationwide study that shows previous trends toward improvement in children's health are slowing, while trends for low-income and minority children are worsening. He was expected to release the results of the study today at a Washington news conference held by the American Public Health Association, which is publishing the report.

In an interview Monday, Miller attributed the widening gap to the effects of the 1981-82 recession, from which the nation as a whole has rebounded while certain "vulnerable subpopulations" have not.

He found that death rates for infants who survive the first month of life are increasing for the first time since post-World War II.

From 1982 to 1983, the death rate for children 1 month to 1 year old rose from 3.8 deaths per 1,000 live births to 3.9 deaths. While the rate for white infants remained constant at 3.3, the rate for blacks increased from 6.5 to 6.8.

Improvement in infant death rates for the first year of life has leveled off, the study concluded. The 1984 national rate was 10.6 per 1,000 live births, compared with 10.5 for the first 10 months of 1985, Miller said.

The leveling off does not indicate that infant death rates have reached a national plateau, he said. If that were the case, the slowing trend would be most obvious among groups that have the lowest death rates. Instead, the slowing trend is most obvious among low-income groups with the worst rates.

The study also found that: — The proportion of women who received late or no prenatal care has risen 10 percent since 1980.

— The incidence of low birth weights for babies is increasing among blacks and whites, but black infants are almost twice as likely as white babies to be born weighing less than 5.5 pounds.

Fired Workers' Legal Aid Urged

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The typical government worker who appeals his firing "doesn't have a chance," but a state employee advocacy office could provide the workers with legal aid, a Raleigh attorney says.

"You must have a system where (an employee) can have a champion or an advocate," attorney Howard Twigg told the Joint Legislative Study Committee on State Personnel on Monday. "I tell you the system doesn't work today and it's not going to work until you set up an advocacy system."

Twigg, a former four-term state House member, recommended that a state employee advocacy office be created within the state Department of Justice, which is headed by the attorney general, and staffed by two or three lawyers.

While a legislator, Twigg said, he sponsored a bill to start such an office. A House committee killed the measure by one vote after then-Attorney General Robert Morgan lobbied against it.

Morgan opposed putting the office in the Justice Department because he thought it would be a conflict of interest, since the department represents the state in legal matters, Twigg said.

Twigg said he disagreed, but that an independent office could be established as an alternative.

The current attorney general, Lacy Thornburg, has taken no position on the issue and wants to study it, said his spokesman, John Simmons.

"But on the surface, there appears to be a conflict" in the notion that the attorney general's office could represent "employees of state agencies and those state agencies," Simmons said.

Durwood "Butch" Gunnells, executive director of the State Employees Association of North Carolina, said Twigg's proposal merited consideration.

Gunnells, an attorney, said that since taking his post 1½ years ago, he had been contacted frequently by workers pleading with him to represent them in a personnel case. But he said the association had no funds to provide the legal assistance.

"A lot of (state employees) feel they've been set up and aren't quite sure where to turn," Gunnells said. "It's really an indictment of the system that there's no better mechanism for helping them."

State employees not covered by the State Personnel Act may be fired for any reason. Among them are Cabinet secretaries, their top aides, and other policymakers who are political appointees and serve at the pleasure of the governor or a Council of State member such as the lieutenant governor, attorney general or insurance commissioner.

Career state employees may be fired only for just cause, such as poor performance or other shortcomings.

When a career worker is fired, there is a seven-step appeal process, starting with his immediate supervisor. Next, the employee can request a departmental hearing, at which several officials hear the case and recommend to the department head whether to reverse the dismissal.

If not, the worker can appeal directly to the department head. Then a hearing officer convenes an inquiry at which evidence is submitted and a record compiled. The next step is the State Personnel Commission and another hearing.

If the personnel commission upholds the firing, the worker can file suit in Superior Court and if he loses can take his case to the North Carolina Court of Appeals.

Food Will Be Tested

CHARLOTTE (AP) — No glass was found in 60 samples of Gerber Products Co. baby food tested by a state agency, but North Carolina food and drug officials say they'll examine jars "from the mountains to the coast."

The testing Monday was prompted by five complaints from Charlotte and other southern Piedmont cities about glass in Gerber baby food.

"We're having our lab work (done) tonight, and we're having our inspectors out sampling," said Robert L. Gordon, head of the state Department of Agriculture's Food and Drug Protection Section.

"What I'm saying is that we will continue sampling until we get a good idea of what is out in the state," Gordon said. "We will sample from the mountains to the coast, just like we did for Tylenol."

Harris-Teeter officials said they pulled some Gerber baby food from 110 stores in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia after two people found glass in one type of baby-food dinner.

Harris-Teeter President Bob Goodale said Sunday that officials of the chain contacted Gerber after Deanna Warwick of Gaston County told them about finding glass in a 4½-ounce jar of regular strained macaroni-tomato-beef dinner.

Ron Atkins, grocery manager at a

Harris Teeter store in Charlotte, also found glass in a Gerber baby-food dinner, Goodale said.

Atkins found the glass in the jar "as he was pulling it from the shelf as he was randomly opening the product and noticed a piece of glass on top," said Goodale.

Goodale said the dinner had not been tampered with, adding that the glass was "larger than a dime."

He said the glass was found in the same dinners by both Ms. Warwick and Atkins. But, he said, the expiration dates were different, with one being Nov. 11, 1988, and the other being January 1989.

Another customer complained about glass being found in the same dinner, Goodale said, but company officials have not been able to "confirm it."

Consumers in at least 14 states have reported glass contamination in Gerber foods, but the U.S. Food and Drug Administration said it has found no basis for a recall and that all the incidents were isolated.

"We are pleased to have confirmation of the safety of Gerber baby food by the Food and Drug Administration," said Ronald Lovasz, Gerber director of quality control. "The FDA findings verify the exhaustive testing conducted by Gerber scientists and independent laboratories."

Because this is a syndicated publication prepared in advance by Cotter & Company for distribution by over 6,000 independently owned and operated retail store members, some merchandise illustrated may not be immediately available on demand. However, any item that's unavailable can be ordered in full carton by the member store from a regional warehouse. Many items in this circular come unassembled. Individual stores are not responsible for assembling merchandise unless stated. This circular must be prepared months in advance of the actual distribution period. At times, an advertised item may not be available because of sales above anticipated demand or because of circumstances beyond our control; while we try to avoid such situations, we have no control over our manufacturers' delivery problems. We reserve the right to limit quantities, correct pricing errors & require central credit office approval of time payment sales. Prevailing taxes will be added to prices.
