Reagan: Communists Pose As Contras

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan charged Saturday that agents of Nicaragua's leftist government, posing as anti-communist rebels, "murder and mutilate ordinary Nicaraguans" to discredit the guerrilla forces.

Devoting his weekly radio address to Nicaragua for the second straight week, the president said Congress must resume military aid to the rebels because "negotiations with the Nicaraguan communists have failed again and again."

Rep. Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., delivering the Democratic response, said the Reagan administration has paid only "lip service" to efforts by Latin American nations to negotiate a settlement.

"Incredibly, we may be walking into the quicksand with our eyes wide open," said Foley, the House majority whip.

Reagan is delivering a televised address Sunday night to marshal support for his plan to provide $70 million in military aid and $30 million in medical and logistical supplies to the Contra rebels.

The House, controlled by Democrats, is scheduled to vote Thursday on the president's plan. Military aid was barred by Congress last year.

Reagan said new intelligence shows that Tomas Borge, the Nicaraguan interior minister, "is engaging in a brutal campaign to bring the freedom fighters into discredit."

"You see, Borge's communist operatives dress in freedom fighters' uniforms, go into the countryside, then murder and mutilate ordinary Njcaraguans," he said.

"This, then, is why I am asking the Congress to provide the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, not only with much needed humanitarian aid, but with military supplies. They must be given the means to fight back."

Miriam Hooker, press officer at the Nicaraguan Embassy, when asked to comment on the president's charge, responded, "The only thing we can say is that is is absolutely false."

Reagan said he has appointed three special envoys to Central America in the past three years who have made made almost 50 trips to the region, "eager to engage in a serious dialogue." There have been 10 "high-level meetings with representatives of the Nicaraguan communists," he said.

"Each time, we left empty-handed," said the president, adding that the current envoy, Philip Habib, returned from a 49th trip on Friday, and "we have yet to see any concrete results."

After the radio address, Reagan had a 10-minute telephone conversation from Camp David with Habib. Denny Brisley, assistant White House press secretary, said, "Mr. Habib indicated his trip would be extremely helpful as we move forward with our Central American policy."

"The communists might meet their opponents at the table, but only when they fear meeting them in the field," the president said.

Reagan said other nations have also "attempted to engage the Sandinistas in good faith negotiation," but without result. He said Nicaragua had taken part in talks sponsored by the Contadora nations — Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela — "only to balk any time agreement seems near."

On Wednesday, however, Nicaragua and Costa Rica signed an accord, after 12 hours of Contadora-sponsored talks, to establish a commission to police their 210-mile border, with the primary aim of halting border raids by the Contras. The agreement is subject to approval by the Costa Rican national assembly and the working out of financial arrangements.

Foley said the Reagan administration has failed to support the efforts of the four nations called the Contadora group to seek a regional settlement.

"The administration has been paying only lip service to the Contadora efforts and has actually either ignored or undermined them," he said.

"Rather than reject further efforts at negotiation, we believe the president

Shultz, Ryzhkov Agree Relations Have Soured

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov agreed Saturday that U.S.-Soviet relations have taken a disappointing turn since the Geneva summit four months ago.

"We agreed neither of us is satisfied with developments since that time," Shultz said after he and Ryzhkov met for an hour and 45 minutes at the Soviet Embassy. Ryzhkov said he agreed.

The meeting ran 45 minutes longer than planned and took place after both men attended funeral services for Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme. The socialist leader was assassinated Feb. 28 on a street in downtown Stockholm.

It was the first high-level talk between the superpowers since President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev met in Geneva last November.

Shultz described the session as a "very frank exchange," diplomatic parlance for a session at which participants disagree sharply. But he said both sides agreed that Geneva set a "good basis" for the superpowers' relationship.

Ryzhkov suggested the United States had not given serious attention to Gorbachev's latest proposal for a mutual freeze on underground nuclear tests.

"What is needed now, is for the United States to consider that proposal," Ryzhkov said.

Later, Shultz met with President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia and discussed independence for South-West Africa, also called Namibia, a territory governed by South Africa. Kaunda also reiterated his opposition to U.S. aid to rebels fighting to overthrow the Marxist government in neighboring Angola.

Little Hope For People Buried In Hotel Debris

By S.V. SUPPIAH
Associated Press Writer

SINGAPORE (AP) — A six-story hotel collapsed here and hope faded for about 100 people still thought to be missing under a huge mound of rubble Sunday 15 hours after rescue operations began. Four people were confirmed dead.

Nine people were pulled, injured, from the wreckage of the 67-room Hotel New World after it collapsed at 11:20 a.m. Saturday, said Lim Siam Kim, director of the Ministry of Home Affairs.

No Americans were known to be at the hotel.

The Hotel New World is in a low-income district in this Asian island nation, and was frequented by Indian and Malaysian tourists.

"We did not hear any sound when we used sensitive instruments to get sounds of those who have been trapped," Lim said. When asked what chance the trapped people had of surviving, he was silent.

The state-owned Singapore Broadcasting Corp. quoted officials as giving the number of bodies removed as four.

Growth Means Protection Needed, Locksmiths Say

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Reporter

As the city of Greenville continues to grow so does the need for local residents and businessmen to protect their property through better locks and security devices, according to area locksmiths.

"Everybody's looking for locks. There's a big demand for them," said Carl Kinion, manager of Carl's Mobile Lock Shop. "Insurance companies recommend better locks, and fire departments and police departments recommend them."

"There's definitely a trend toward deadbolts," said Barbara Forrest, manager of Forrest Lock & Key Service. "That's been especially noticeable in the last couple of years."

"There have been a lot of local break-ins recently because Greenville is growing," said Trevor Swindell, manager of Sam's Lock & Key Service. "People are definitely looking for better locks, and deadbolts are especially popular."

While the locksmiths agreed crimes always improve their sales, police records don't reflect an increase in break-ins in recent years.

In 1982, Greenville police were notified about 855 break-ins, while the number dropped to 709 in 1983 and 674 in 1984, according to the Uniform Crime Report for Greenville from the Police Information Network.

The records show the number increased slightly to 711 in 1985.

One manager said he's come across people who simply didn't report the crime to the police.

"I've put locks on broken doors for some people who have had their

Board Approves Signal Funding

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Traffic signaling of four intersections on 10th St. in downtown Greenville will be revised, the result of funding approved at a meeting of the North Carolina Transportation Board in Greenville.

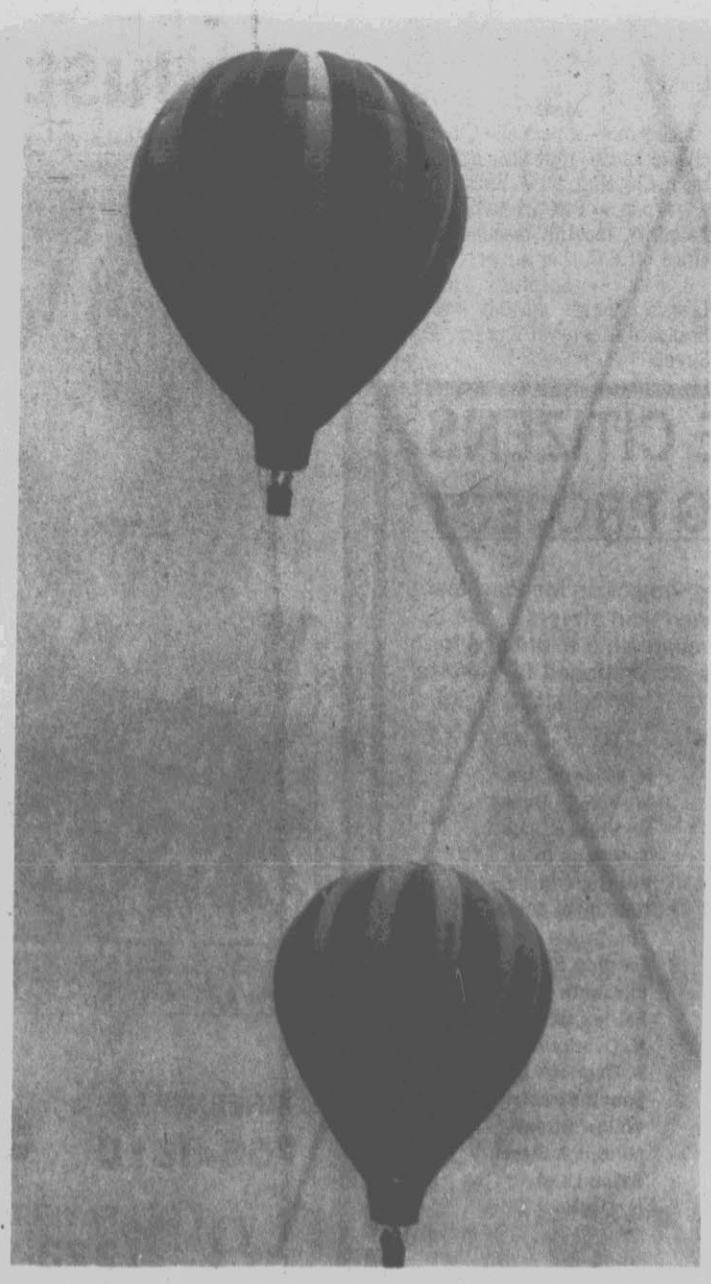

The revisions at 10th Street's intersections with Washington, Evans, Cotanche and Charles streets will allow the number of vehicles at the intersection to determiine when a signal changes, instead of pre-set timers, according to Randy D. Doub of Greenville, a member of the board. Cost of the revisions is expected to be about $58,000.

Some $22,000 was approved for installation of a new signal at Bell's Fork, the intersection of N.C. 43 and County Home Road (Secondary Road 1725). Increasing commercial and residential development in the Bell's Fork area and the opening of a new school south of the intersection later this year were factors in the board's approval of the signal, Doub said.

The board approved $1,200 for revisions to the signal at the Farmville Boulevard-Memorial Drive intersection, a measure Doub said will eliminate a bottleneck for vehicles headed to and from the Pitt County Memorial Hospital area.

A contract with awarded to Bigger and Agnew Inc. of Raleigh for engineering services on the replacement of the bridge over the Roanoke River and overflows on U.S. 13-17 which divides Bertie and Martin counties. Cost of the project is expected to be approximately $4,900,000, with the maximum engineering fee being $152,990. Eighty percent of the construction money will be federal; 20 percent state.

The meeting was for the consideration of highway work statewide. Contracts for resurfacing of more than 900 miles of state primary and secondary highways were among $43 million in highway improvements approved. The largest projects approved were construction of almost 10 miles of I-40 near Faison in Sampson County and the construction of eight miles of N.C. 16 in Gaston and Mecklenburg counties.

Ships Continue Recovery Efforts

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Navy and civilian ships bucked strong winds and thunderstorms Saturday in efforts to recover three large pieces of Challenger's booster rockets, more of the crew cabin and additional remains of its astronauts.

The USS Preserver returned to the search area 15 miles offshore where parts of the space shuttle's flight deck and some of the crew members' remains were recovered last week. The civilian salvage vessel Stena Workhorse moved into position to grapple and hoist to the surface heavy parts of the solid-fuel rocket boosters.

Two other ships that started out to the 351-square-mile recovery zone in the Atlantic turned back to port several hours later after encountering heavy seas, said Lt. Cmdr. Deborah Burnette, a Navy spokeswoman. Most of the flotilla of search ships had been forced into port by storms late Thursday and all day Friday.

A crucial missing piece in the investigation of the Jan. 28 shuttle explosion is the aft segment of the right booster rocket. Investigators believe its bottom seam leaked hot rocket exhaust, leading to the detonation of the large external fuel tank during liftoff.

One of the large pieces to be recovered by the Stena Workhorse, normally used as an offshore platform by the oil industry in the North Sea, was a 500-pound lower portion o a booster.

"The problem is we don't know whether it's from the right or left booster," said Burnette. "We don't know whether any of these large pieces are from the right or left SRBs, so we're going to bring them all up."

Video and still photos show that the 4-by-5-foot chunk, lying in 650 feet of water 32 miles northeast of Cape Canaveral, is torn along its bottom joint, officials said. But they have seen no evidence of fire damage.

The Stena Workhorse, which has a lifting capacity of 100 tons, also was to haul up a 6-by-18-foot piece of booster weighing 3,250 pounds and lying on its side in about 400 feet of water, plus a piece estimated to be 10 by 14 feet, the Navy spokeswoman said.

of the United States is the one person who can breath new life into the process," Foley said.

Foley said the president could count on "full, bipartisan support" to prevent the establishment in Nicaragua "of Soviet or other hostile military bases" that threaten Nicaragua's neighbors or the United States, "but such a direct threat does not exist."

The president said, "recent revelations make clear (that) the communists are only tightening their grip on Nicaragua."

"A democratic Central America is vital to the security of our continent and nation," the president said.

"Now that negotiations with the Nicaraguan communists have failed again and again, the time has come for Congress to give the freedom fighters what they need for their struggle for democracy to succeed," he said.

Opponents fear arms supplied to the guerrillas would be used to commit atrocities against the Nicaraguan population.

Foley said it was a "proxy war ... fought with American money, American weapons and Nicaraguan lives, in which at best only a bloody stalemate can be achieved."

homes broken into, and many break-ins go unreported," Swindell said.

Meanwhile, news of nearby crimes spreads quickly through communities and leads to visits to lock shops, according to the managers of the stores.

"Every time news of a break-in appears in the paper, we get a siege on locks," Ms. Forrest said. "We get contacted by businesses and residents."

Aside from deadbolts and other locks, the managers said people have resorted to other means to protect their personal possessions.

"We've been putting up lights in dark areas near homes and apartments as well as alarm systems," said Swindell. "Insurance companies offer discounts on homeowners insurance if certain things are added to protect the home, and a lot of people don't realize this. An alarm system would pay for itself."

While many people are securing their old homes with stronger locks, contractors have begun to build houses with better security devices.

"Contractors are now putting the good locks on the houses as they go along," Ms. Forrest said. "It means less things for us to do, but it also means less money."

However, one locksmith said sometimes the lock can only do so much to protect a house.

"A lot of contractors are looking to do that type of work, but the quality of the doors being put on has decreased," Swindell said. "If the doors become so easy to break down, a lock isn't going to help."

Clash At Mine Leaves 3 Dead

By JAMES F. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police shot and killed three black miners, two more were slain by a mob, and about 100 others were injured in strike-related clashes at a gold mine, police and mine officials said Saturday.

Police also reported violence in Soweto, Johannesburg's sprawling black township, and said a police patrol killed one black man with shotgun fire when about 300 blacks tried to burn down a house.

Meanwhile, thousands of black mourners gathered in black townships near Cape Town and Port Elizabeth to attend funerals for eight alleged black guerrillas killed in police shootouts.

In Port Elizabeth's New Brighton township, witnesses said police fired at least 20 tear gas canisters into a cinema, scattering thousands of people assembled for the traditional all-night vigil for an alleged African National Congress guerrilla.

Hotel ...

A 29-year-old salesman at a nearby store, who gave his name only as Mohammed, said he felt the walls shake and turned around to see the hotel collapsing, with little chance for anyone to escape.

"Like a horror film, the building tumbled down," he said in an interview published in the Sunday Times. "This was all over in seconds."

A police officer on the scene, asked about the prospect of finding survivors, replied, "Your guess is as good as mine."

"See for yourself what we are up against," he went on, pointing to the towering pile of concrete floor slabs.

No explanation was given for the tragedy, but Home Affairs Minister Shanmugam Jayakumar told reporters officials would investigate the possibility of structural defects or gas explosions.

He said there had been reports of strong odors of gas from the building after the accident, but gave no further details.

About 10,000 people gawked at the wreckage in the area known as Little India, held back by police.

About 1,500 police, military men, and employees of the Public Works Department and Civil Defense worked in rotating crews of 500 to clear rubble, Lim said.

Rescuers worked under the glare of powerful floodlights, lifting out chunks of concrete by hand as electric saws cut through pieces.

Five civilian cranes and one huge crane that can lift 100 tons were brought in to remove layers of concrete. When one large slab was lifted, other sections of the building caved in.

At one point, Lim said the cranes were halted temporarily so workers could use microphones and other instruments to detect sounds of survivors.

Sixteen of the missing are believed to be employees of a branch of the Industrial and Commercial Bank located on the hotel's ground floor, said Lim, adding that the hotel had a staff of 26.

The others inside may be bank customers or hotel guests, Lim said earlier, adding "We don't know."

Lt. Col. Lim Eng Kian, chief medical officer of the Singapore armed forces, said four of those hurt were hospitalized and five were discharged.

A 26-year-old Chinese woman, Tan Gek Neo, was rescued after being trapped for nearly 10 hours in the rubble. She was cut all over her body and was in shock, he said.

Another Chinese casualty, Tan Oi Ling, 20, had a broken arm and injured feet. "She has been operated on, but is suffering from shock. Her condition is stable," said Lim.

A 34-year-old man named Tan Cheow or Tan Choon and a woman named Jaya Koka were also in the the Singapore government hospital.

Singapore Broadcasting quoted police as saying five people with minor injuries, all thought to be from India or Malaysia, were discharged from the hospital Saturday night.

agency reported tersely that Shultz and Ryzhkov met and "some questions about relations between the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. were discussed, as well as a variety of international problems."

Reagan has invited Gorbachev to send technicians to monitor the next U.S. nuclear test, expected in the Nevada desert in April. But Ryzhkov brushed the invitation aside when a reporter asked him if Soviet monitors would be there.

"We had hoped General Secretary Gorbachev's proposal of March 14 would be carefully examined," he said.

On Friday, Gorbachev suggested that talks on a test ban begin in April and said a Soviet negotiator already had been appointed.

The Soviet Union said on Thursday it would continue its unilateral moratorium on tests, announced last August, until the United States conducts its next test. Gorbachev also said he would be willing to negotiate limited on-site verification of a test ban agreement.

In addition to nuclear testing, Shultz said he and Ryzhkov discussed proposals the two sides have made since the Geneva summit to reduce and eventually eliminate their medium-range nuclear missiles.

A third topic was the dispute between the superpowers over a date for this year's summit meeting in Washington, Shultz said. The United States prefers late June or July. The Soviets suggested September.

Gorbachev also has said an agreement on curbing nuclear weapons should be reached before he sees Reagan again. Officials in the Reagan administration have rejected this as an unacceptable condition.

Shultz gave no indication agreement was reached on a date, telling reporters, "We both expect those discussion will continue." Later, two senior U.S. officials confirmed that no date had been set.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the United States was disappointed over lack of progress since Geneva on regional conflicts, strategic nuclear weapons, space-based weapons defenses and other issues.

One official said the Stockholm meeting was "partly get-acquainted, partly stock-taking," and added, "We feel a number of issues would have liked to see more motion."

In Shultz' meeting with the Zambian president, Kaunda criticized U.S. aid for the UNITA rebels in Angola, where an estimated 35,000 Cuban troopers are helping the Marxist government in the war.

Talking to reporters en route to Washington, Shultz said he and Kaunda discussed South Africa's white-minority government and its policy of racial separation, a desire to see South-West Africa become independent and the removal of foreign forces from Angola.

Marcos Wants Out

NEW YORK (AP) — Deposed Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos has asked the United States to help him obtain permission to settle in Spain, Mexico or Panama, The New York Times reports.

The newspaper in its Sunday editions quoted U.S. government officials as saying Marcos and the State Department had made serious inquiries with those countries, but they declined to say what the nations' responses were.

Marcos fled the Philippines on Feb. 25 with an entourage of 90 family members, staff and friends after a rebellion that installed Corazon Aquino as president. Marcos is staying at Hickam U.S. Air Force Base in Honolulu, Hawaii.

"I think that if he finds a respectable place to go with reasonable housing and other arrangements, he will leave the United States," the Times quoted a senior Reagan administration official as saying.

The official added, however, that Marcos would be allowed to reenter the United States if he wanted.

The officials told the newspaper that Marcos was unhappy in Hawaii because of complaints about his wealth and past activities, and that he feared legal action in the United States against him.

The officials said Marcos' top choice is Spain, which controlled the Philippines until being defeated in the Spanish-American War in 1898.

THE CONDOLENCE CALL

The condolence call is distinct from attendance at the viewing or funeral. It is a personal home visit made to a bereaved individual or family by relatives, friends, neighbors, associates, acquaintances soon after they have learned of the death. However, the individual who fails to go early to the bereaved home need not assume that he may not go later. Condolence calls may be made at any time, before the funeral or after, during the first weeks of grief.

The condolence call has several purposes. It expresses sympathy and offers help in a difficult time. The bereaved should know that they are not alone in their grief, that there are people who care about and understand their sorrow. It also helps maintain ties between that person and the society. This not only demonstrates community support, it can help the mourner from slipping too deeply into grief.

Heavy Damages

One injury and more than $16,000 in damages resulted from weekend traffic accidents investigated by Greenville police.

Officers said a car driven by Jesse Calvin Dail of 1501 Ragsdale Road collided with a train at about 9:17 a.m. Saturday near Brownlea Drive. Damages were set at $6,000 to the Dail car and $25 to the train, which is owned by Seaboard Coast Line Railroad of Jacksonville, Fla.

Cars driven by James Louis Ward of Route 11, Greenville, and Leonard Randolf Brewer III of 202-A Roundtree Drive collided at about 11:28 a.m. Saturday on Evans Street. Police set damages at $250 to the Ward vechicle and $650 to the Brewer car.

Police said cars driven by Keith Andrew Ward of 208 Erith St. and Lula Whitehurst Wilson of Route 1, Winterville, collided Friday at about 6:46 p.m. Damages were set at $4,900 to the Ward car and $4,200 to the Wilson vechicle. Ward was also charged with failure to reduce speed, officers said.

Deliveries Delayed

Daily Reflector subscribers who live in Farmville may have received their Friday newspapers at a later time due to a traffic accident involving a Daily Reflector van.

According to N.C. Highway Patrolman Spencer Padgett, a company van driven by Reflector employee Gary Scott collided with a utility pole and overturned Friday at 2:30 p.m. on the Stantonsburg Road three miles west of Greenville. The trooper said Scott lost control of the van in a curve of the rain-slickened highway. He estimated damages to the van at $5,000, and Scott was transported to Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

"The wind blew the newspapers all over the ground," Padgett said. "People around there were chasing down the newspapers in the rain."

"Farmville customers may have experienced minor delays in the distribution of their Friday Daily Reflectors as a result of the accident," said General Manager D. Jordan Whichard III.

City And GUC Vote Ill-Advised On King Holiday

The Greenville Utilities Commission has belly-flopped onto the Martin Luther King holiday bandwagon.

After Greenville's City Council voted to add a $30,000 employee holiday in honor of the black leader, Greenville Utilities approved a $16,000 holiday also.

So now perhaps the city's major capital project for 1987 is providing city employees with an expensive 11th paid holiday. Spending $46,000 for a day off when the city expects to lose $350,000 in federal revenue sharing by 1987 is not sound fiscal policy. Council members and GUC board members allowed themselves to be swayed by sentiment about a holiday that will stand for peace, harmony and good will. When faced with the argument that other "progressive" cities like Charlotte and Greensboro provide a King holiday, board members couldn't resist a taunt to join the ranks.

But spending money ill-advisedly is not progressive. There's no doubt that a King holiday symbolizes unity and accord. That's not the question. The issues involved are budgeting, minority needs and creative compromise. With the impending lose of money for Greenville's transit system — a city service heavily used by the minority population — the $46,000 could be better used to ensure that bus service continues at affordable rates.

The holiday could have been provided without spending a cent by allowing city workers to substitute one of the two extra paid holidays provided at Thanksgiving and Christmas — not Thanksgiving or Christmas days — as the Martin Luther King holiday. That practical suggestion was made, but rejected by the council. GUC only followed the lead of the council and didn't even propose a compromise.

City officials claimed the dilemma was human, not financial. But both the City Council and GUC should have faced the real question — responsibly spending tax dollars — instead of hiding behind a plea of community issue versus employee benefits.

Record Needed Of Storage Units

Underground storage tanks are a matter of continuing concern in North Carolina and for the nation at large. Leakage of gasoline and other hazardous chemicals into the water supply does exist and with the passage of time it is bound to worsen.

How bad can it be?

Well, there are somewhere between 30,000 and 40,000 underground tanks in the state. A typical one holds about 10,000 gallons of gasoline; and just one gallon of gas can contaminate 1,000 gallons of water.

The Environmental Protection Agency says there are about 1.4 million such tanks nationwide.

Regional supervisor Larry Coble says there are 54 pending cases of water contamination in a 14-county area of northwestern North Carolina. A list of tanks, their sizes, ages and contents would be helpful in tracing leaks, says Coble but, of course, there is no such list. We're afraid most of them are going to be found as the process of corrosion advances and people in an affected neighborhood begin to complain.

Registration of underground storage tanks should be required; not only in this state but in all 50.

Sunday Morning Notes

Alvin Taylor

Someone approached recently to say they enjoyed reading about old Greenville and some of the landmarks which have been lost to progress.

In the local case that could mean going back only 20 years or so. So much has disappeared ... Five Points is no longer there, nor is the old State Bank building which fitted into a triangle at Five Points, or the old telephone building which was triangle-shaped and stood at the intersection of Dickinson and Washington streets.

Even more recent landmarks are not known to a new generation. Mention Austin Building on campus and any student can take you to a building in the center of the campus. Many freshmen don't know that Austin meant to older graduates the original classroom building which stood where the Leo Jenkins Fine Arts Center is today.

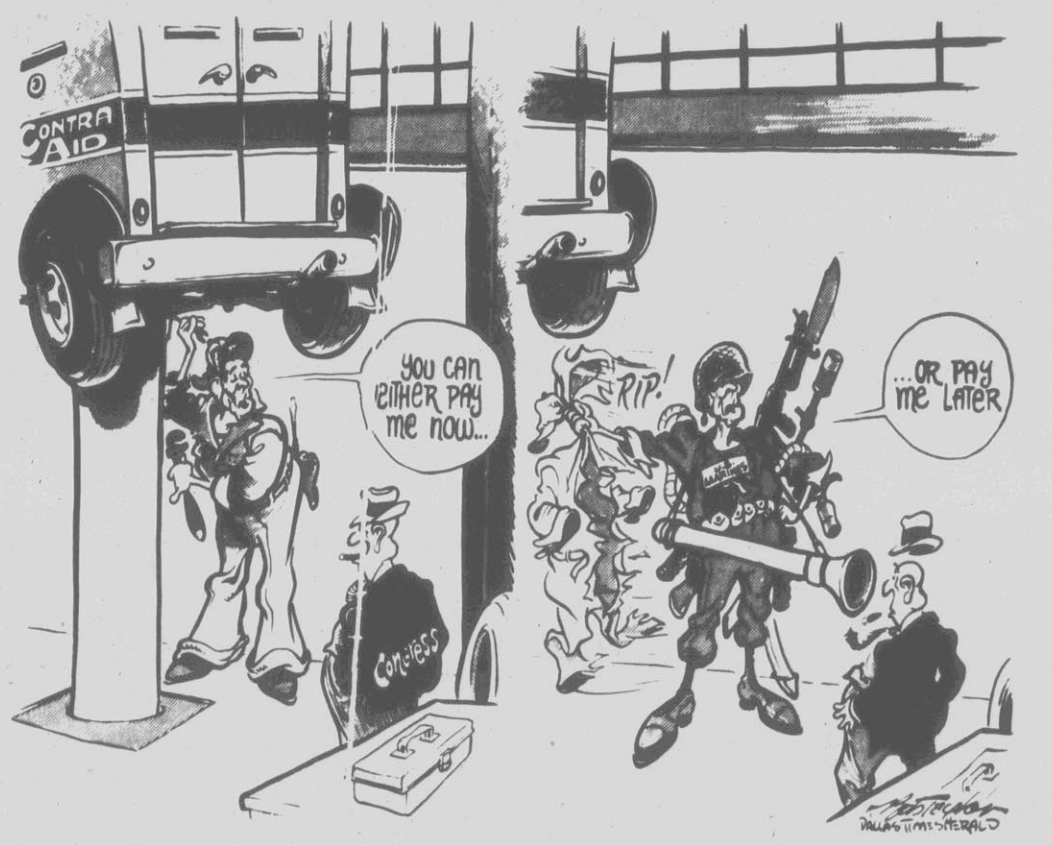

Movie theaters mean clusters of movie auditoriums at various locations off Greenville Boulevard. There are many today who don't know that the finest movies once played at the Pitt Theater. It burned and is only a vacant lot on Evans just south of Fifth.

Anyway, the conversation turned to the culvert near Sheppard Library where kids once played. Culvert near the library? Even your columnist didn't recall that one.

There are those, however, who say a stream once cut across Evans Street and emptied in the Tar River. It was there before the library was built. Reportedly it was enclosed with a culvert and gradually extended to the river. No doubt our friend recalled one of the earlier stages of the culvert construction. Likely the underground stream is still there, acting as a part of the city's storm sewer system.

Early Greenville maps apparently show that stream as the eastern town limits. It was then known as Yellowly Run. A creek in the area of the Seaboard Railroad was apparently the western limits of the city. And what was the northern city limits? That's easy. The Tar River was the city limits on the north for over 150 years. Eventually that was a natural barrier which was broken.

Anyway the town moves inexorably away from what was once its center. Even as the old central area fades it is constantly changing and old landmarks fall to make way for new office buildings, apartments or structures more suited to modern living.

A Gift Of Danger

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — Top-secret intelligence that the Soviet Union has "calibrated" its air-defense radars with ABM radars, a flagrant treaty violation, is further souring the Reagan administration on the desirability of new nuclear treaties with Moscow.

Quite apart from private top-level skepticism about the efficacy of SALT agreements, alarm is growing that a Soviet territorial defense against strategic missile attack may be nearer realization than seemed possible only a year ago. Such a defense would violate the anti-ballistic missile (ABM) treaty of 1972. It could make the Soviet Union the paramount power, transforming super-power relations.

Ominous Soviet passage toward protection against possible American retaliation to a first-strike attack on killing what little zest the administration has had for new nuclear agreements. That presages a Geneva follow-on summit, tentatively set for this summer, that will produce nothing in the way of new arms treaties, leaving the U.S. free to pursue its own nuclear defenses — the futuristic SDI for the 21st century.

Arms control skeptics are angling for just such a non-result. This is not rejection of nuclear treaties to prevent a return of detente. Far from it. The mood is fear: No matter how skillfully U.S. negotiators attempt to close non-compliance escape hatches, ways to cheat will be found and exercised by Moscow. Thus, a nuclear treaty becomes a gift of danger — a Trojan horse for Soviet exploitation, while the U.S. complies.

The new evidence, acquired by the electronic miracles of U.S. satellites, appears to be definitive. A relatively old "Square Pair" radar for the SAM-5 anti-aircraft missile has been "calibrated" with a giant ABM-3 battle-management radar, the two having been moved next to each other in the vicinity of Moscow. The larger ABM radar appears designed to zero in on the incoming missile, then turn it over to SAM-5 which fires its own missile into the target.

This marriage between the two dissimilar radars, called "inter-netting," may well be the clinching evidence that the Soviets are preparing the SAM-5 radar-inceptor for an active ABM role — forbidden by treaty. The significance goes far because the U.S. estimates there are no fewer than 2,500 SAM-5s in the Soviet Union. They are concentrated in four areas: the Moscow-Leningrad salient, the Caucuses, the Far East and the populated area of Siberia (near the Krasnoyarsk ABM radar that the U.S. claims is a treaty violation). The 1972 treaty gave each side the right to defend its capital with a missile-defensive system — but only the capital. The U.S. has renounced that right, but Moscow is legally ringed with 100 ABM-3 anti-missile systems. Calibrating the SA-5 system with the legal ABM system would triple Soviet ability to protect Moscow. Likewise, SA-5 radar-interceptors elsewhere in the Soviet Union could be programmed for the ABM task that is violating the treaty.

SALT violations were routinely minimized by pre-Reagan administrations. Indeed, the arms control "process" which produced the SALT and ABM treaties made a comeback in the year leading up to the Geneva summit. But since the summit, the Soviet proposal to rid the world of all nuclear weapons struck the Reagan White House like a propaganda trumpet, not a serious arms-control proposal. Likewise, early hopes for reducing or eliminating the intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe are evaporating.

But the true measure of the administration's growing concern about any new treaty is not current negotiating problems in the Geneva arms talks (recessed early this month at a standstill). The real source of concern is that no new agreement would be worth any more than the depreciating value of existing treaties.

The language in Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's unclassified but largely ignored letter to the president last November struck the note that has become a thundering chorus since. Weinberger decried the "variety" of violations "of the complex constraints in the ABM treaty aimed at preventing the deployment of a territorial defense involving a nationwide anti-ballistic missile systsm."

In his white paper of Soviet violations, made public recently after being held up by the State Department for five weeks, arms control director Kenneth Adelman said that continuing Soviet violations "cannot help but have an impact upon our long-term security" and "jeopardize the process" of arms control. Privately, Adelman has warned in the highest administration councils about the dangers of new agreements.

In Brussels recently, Weinberger raised the alarm further. He was to inform NATO defense ministers that "taken together, all the ABM and ABM-related activities" suggeset perparations by the Soviets "to deploy rapidly" a territorial ABM defense.

Those words, written before Weinberger and his men were aware of the new intelligence on those 2,500 SAM-5s, hint that without revolutionary upgrading in verification procedures, no new treaty is worth having.

Poverty Vs. Welfare

James J. Kilpatrick

Is the nation's welfare system creating poverty rather than reducing it? Two Ohio University economists, Lowell Gallaway and Richard Vedder, advance that argument in a paper published last month by the National Center for Policy Analysis in Dallas. Their contention merits a look.

"At least 5.7 million people," the authors say, "are living in poverty by choice as a result of the generosity of public welfare. Each additional $1 billion in welfare spending increases the poverty population by 250,000. Put simply, we are experiencing more poverty because we have been increasing the amount we pay people to be poor."

To arrive at these conclusions, the authors developed a correlation between welfare spending and poverty levels throughout the nation in the years 1966-1984. They came up with some eye-opening data. The poverty rate in 1966, when Lyndon Johnson's "war on poverty" got under way, was 14.7 percent. It dropped to a low of 11.1 percent in 1973, and then climbed back to 14.4 percent in 1984. Statistically speaking, we are virtually back where we started 20 years ago.

Yet there is a difference. Two decades ago, a theory was widely advanced that people were trapped in poverty for want of economic opportunities. "Today's structural poverty is something else. To a much greater extent it is poverty by choice. By that we mean that people choose poverty levels of income over non-poverty levels because they feel the combination of income and leisure which accompanies poverty to be preferable to non-poverty."

The two economists looked at poverty and welfare, state by state, between 1969 and 1979. In this period, only four of the 10 states that spent the most on Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) experienced a reduction in their poverty rates. These were Minnesota, Oregon, Washington and Winsconsin. Vermont showed no change. But five of the 10 biggest welfare spenders — California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan and New York — experienced increases in their poverty rates. New York's increase was a phenomenal 20.7 percent.

Meanwhile, the 10 states that were spending the least on AFDC were having a very different experience. Their poverty rates were going down by an average of almost 25 percent. These 10 are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Tennessee and Texas.

"These statistics," the authors say, "dramatically confirm that high levels of welfare benefits are not the magic road to eliminating poverty. All 10 of the low-benefit states show considerably more progress in eliminating poverty than the nation as a whole."

Gallaway and Vedder made a special study of poor children. In 1969 the poverty rate for persons under 18 was 13.8 percent. By 1984 it had climbed to 21.1 percent. If the level of AFDC in 1984 (in real terms) had been no higher than in 1969, the poverty rate among children would be 3.9 percentage points lower. Forget the numbers. The authors' point is that the difference amounts to 2.5 million children.

Look again, thinking of poor children, at the 10 highest and the 10 lowest AFDC states. Between 1969 and 1979, the number of children "in poverty" in the 10 highest AFDC states increased by an average of 27.9 percent. In this same period, in the 10 lowest states, the rate fell by 17.4 percent. In 1969 Texas had a far higher rate of child poverty than New York. By 1979 the positions were reversed. What price public welfare?

The statistics are formidably hard to absorb at a quick glance. Because I am by nature suspicious of all statistics that I do not stack myself, I suspect there is more to the story than meets the eye. Certainly not many households on welfare would think their government is treating them generously.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Our government continues to ignore the Constitution, international agreements and human rights.

On the one hand, we contribute to the economic and political chaos and violence in Central America. This violence results in the flight of thousands who fear for their lives, and many of them end up in the U.S. Mistakenly, they expect political asylum in the land of the free, the Statue of Liberty and faith in God.

While Lee Iacocco, President Reagan and the nation celebrate our compassion for the oppressed, federal authorities arrest refugees from El Salvador, Guatamala, etc., and send them back to near-certain death.

There seems to be a gap between our self-serving mouthings and our actual motives and policies. Even worse, our written policies are not honored. One source states, "The Refugee Act of 1980 provides asylum for those persecuted or having a well-founded fear of persecution in their own countries. Under International law ... refugees are protected against forcible deportation as long as armed conflict and repression continue in their country. The Geneva Convention says governments must allow private humanitarian agencies or individuals to protect refugees from untimely repatriation."

Our politicians and media become hyperactive when a Soviet dissident is allowed to leave the U.S.S.R. and we squeeze all the propaganda benefits possible. Has the government or the media hailed the escape of refugees from the violence of neighboring Central America? No! Rather, the refugees, Christian ministers and others, are arrested and jailed.

Would we say that Germans who fled Hitler in the '30s should have been arrested when they arrived in the U.S. and shipped back? Certainly not.

Can we not exercise compassion in 1986 and shout to our government that the U.S. must return to its tradition of being a law-abiding beacon of liberty and justice in the world community.

To the editor:

I would like to correct a misnomer which has appeared in The Daily Reflector several times. Agnes Fullilove is not an extended day program but is, rather, an alternative school operating during regular school hours. This distinction is of utmost importance; whereas the extended day program characteristically offers a limited curriculum to, typically, 30 to 40 students for a few hours each evening, Agnes Fullilove Community School, offers courses in science, mathematics, English and history. We have a competency lab, a reading lab, prenatal and family planning courses, vocational skills courses and job counseling. We have an active sports program, a school newspaper, cultural assemblies and numerous field trips. Our program also includes a Level II day care center.

Human services professionals from the Pitt County Mental Health Center, the Health Department, juvenile services, adult probation and parole, to mention a few, work cooperatively with our school staff to accomplish mutual goals. The presence of visitors from these agencies, from school communities throughout the state seeking emulate components of our program, and from various programs at East Carolina University are a welcome element in our daily routine.

If I seem enthusiastic about this alternative school program (which, not coincidentally, has been recognized by the state Department of Public Instruction as a model alternative school program in North Carolina) it is because, after having taught in a British missionary school in Africa, in numerous "regular" schools, as well as special programs in eastern North Carolina before joining Agnes Fullilove's staff as an English teacher, I am convinced of its value. If our public school system is to provide quality education for all students, alternative schools like Agnes Fullilove, will continue to be an essential element in the educational community.

To the editor:

While all the public attention was diverted to the endorsement by the City Council of King's holiday, another very costly issue was slipped by and approved unanimously by the Council. I am referring to the $250,000 allocated for construction of the Science and Nature Center at River Park North.

According to park-recreation Director Boyd Lee, $75,000 will be used to refurbish the planetarium donated by ECU valued at $50,000. Construction of three buildings will cost $175,000.

City Manager Gail Meeks informed the council that the operating cost for the park from July 1984 to June 1985 was $29,838 with revenues of $7,174. However, $3,198 for fringe benefits and $864 for fire-liability insurance were not included. The operating cost would be $33,900 if we count those two items. Revenues for the two previous years were not available.

Mr. Lee projected the same operating cost for the last three years — $33,900 annually, times three, equals $101,702, of taxpayers money spent at the park.

Ms. Meeks also failed to mention the $4,300 worth of improvements and the $17,874 spent in the three years on equipment such as 10 pedal boats, two boats, motor, concession stand equipment, picnic facilities, etc. Three years operating cost $101,702, plus improvements of $4,399, plus equipment of $17,874, plus $250,000 for construction of science center equals $373,876, more or less.

Mr. Lee estimates an additional $9,000 per year should be added to the present operating cost of $33,900 for utilities and maintenance for the center.

This is not grant money. This is city of Greenville taxpayers' money. Federal grants were used between 1979-82 for initial improvements totaling $61,292. Greenville's park-recreation budget is one of the largest in North Carolina.

Yes, Greenville has it all! Can we afford it all?

Army's Standards Go Up

WASHINGTON — Only six years ago, the Army had the lowest personnel standards in the U.S. military. Roughly half of its recruits that year (1980) hadn't completed high school. A similar number had received below-average scores on the Armed Forces Qualification Test.

But the Army, which accounts for more than 40 percent of the military's new entrants, was hungry for young bodies back then.

In 1986, by contrast, more than 90 percent of the service's enlistees have high school diplomas and achieved better-than-average scores on the qualifying exam. The Army, in fact, has reached or surpassed its recruitment targets five years running. This trend has even occurred in the midst of an economic recovery and recent pay raises that barely kept pace with inflation.

What has made a major difference, some Pentagon and civilian experts argue, are educational benefits that, for certain assignments, amount to $16,000 in college tuition. Yet, in its 1987 budget, the Reagan administration has proposed to trim some of these recruitment enticements, even to the extent of eliminating the eight-month-old New GI Bill. Such notions could prove the pedestal on which a peacetime military draft is built.

By 1996, the number of 18- to 24-year-old American males will have dropped by nearly 3 million, or 20 percent, from the high of the late 1970s. While there could be some mitigating factors to it (high unemployment, for example), the baby bust is already making life difficult for Defense Department planners.

To a large extent, the Pentagon and its supporters brought the manpower squeeze upon themselves in successfully pushing for the addition of 600 ships and 40 tactical air wings to the military's inventory. The services intend to increase personnel by 82,000 over the next four years alone.

Meanwhile, the high-tech nature of the modern military has not necessarily alleviated manpower needs. On one hand, today's computer-driven aircraft carriers need a relatively small fraction of the officers and enlisted men required on ships of the Kennedy-Johnson era. On the other, each F-15 fighter-bomber, for example, needs about 24 "support" technicians to keep it operating.

Women could make up for future deficiencies. Although barred from assignments that would place them in the line of enemy fire, they will, under congressional mandate, account for 22 percent of the Air Force's recruits in fiscal 1988. Indeed, the Air Force recently argued that the baby bust would "have little effect" on the military's ability to attract "high-quality enlistees."

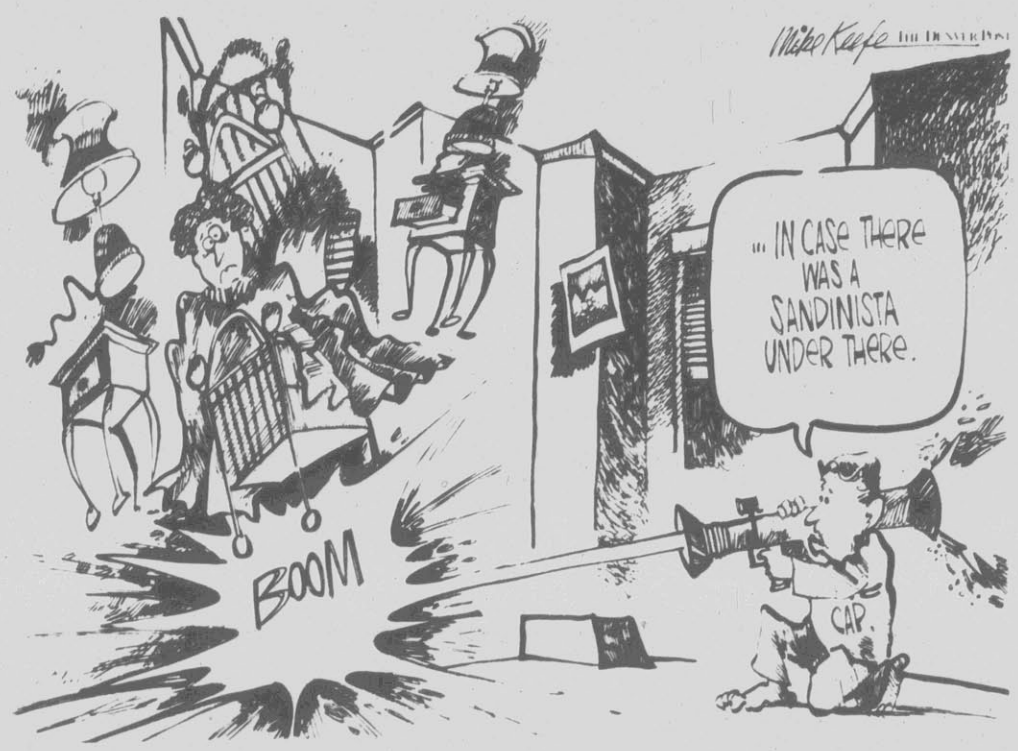

Re-enlistment might also relieve the pressure on recruiters. The percentage of personnel signing up for another tour has, in fact, doubled since the 1970s. Some manpower experts even suggest that there are too many enlistees of increasingly senior rank doing the work of first-termers.

But the Navy and Air Force are still losing pilots to the commercial airlines, among other employers, at an alarming rate — and after each flier has received about $1 million worth of training.

Increased bonuses are providing the Pentagon with a way to retain its most capable personnel, and financial incentives could prove the key to a long-term solution. A recent study by the Santa Monica (Calif.)-based Rand Corp. contends that 17- to 21-year-olds will enjoy faster-than-average wage increases in the coming decades. This age group may also find college admissions offices virtually clamoring at their doors, leaving the Defense Department to either ante up or accept lower-quality recruits.

It is a source of irony that the 4 percent pay increase being sought this year has become a potential victim of the Gramm-Rudman fallout. Although the hike would only keep military wages in line with inflation, it would require an extra $2.6 billion, or about the sum appropriated for "Star Wars" research last year.

But the value of salary increases and fringe benefits could be lost on Congress and the Pentagon until the baby bust hits them unprepared. At that time, the U.S. may have the most sophisticated (if not excessive) array of military hardware on land or sea or in the air — with nobody to run it. While a new draft may then seem imperative, will that be what the Pentagon wants?

What's A Half-Penny?

RALEIGH — In an age when a hot dog costs you $1.25 at the state fair, it's hard to believe that anyone would argue over a half-cent.

But when the General Assembly convenes in June, one of the most hotly debated issues may center on a half-penny, or more accurately, who gets the $178.5 million in revenue a new half-penny sales tax would generate.

After the assembly gave local governments the option to add a half-cent to the three-cent state and one-cent local option sales taxes in 1983, 99 counties did so. The increases were accomplished with little public criticism.

Many of the complaints that followed the increase centered on the assembly's refusal to raise the tax by a full percentage point. Merchants complained that computing a 5 percent sales tax would be a lot easier than computing 4 1/2 percent, and some legislators reported that their constituents found a half-cent increase silly.

There is considerable feeling in the assembly that a half-cent increase is now inevitable and that it would generate little public criticism. The real controversy arises over the question of how the money will be spent.

The legislature's Study Commission on Local Government Finance recently voted to support a bill that would give the county commissioners the option of raising the tax by a half-cent. Under this plan, commissioners would control the new revenue.

But there are at least two other plans for how the half-cent should be spent.

In 1985, Sens. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, and Ken Royall, D-Durham, co-sponsored legislation raising the sales tax by a half-cent. The money would go to local governments according to a prescribed formula for construction of new schools.

When told about the plan to give the commissioners discretion over the half-cent revenues, Winner said he would oppose it. "A county's general needs, ought to be met by the county itself," he said. "If we're going to revenue share, we ought to do it for specific needs."

Winner charged that commissioners in many counties, including his own, have been unwilling to spend the money to build adequate schools. If the state doesn't make that decision, he said, "in a lot of places the schools will never be built."

Winner also argues that by directing the revenue to school needs, the assembly would be assuming a major portion of the capital needs counties face.

Royall has backed away from the original bill he filed with Winner. Now he's saying that it won't pass with only one need addressed. He's chairman of the Study Commission on Infrastructure and says that any thoughts of giving the money to the commissioners will be quickly dashed when legislators see how large the state needs are.

Royall prefers to take the revenue by the half-cent and apply it to a number of infrastructure needs, maybe even the roads. Most talk about a new tax for highways has centered on a motor fuels tax hike.

House Speaker Liston Ramsey and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan aren't committing themselves to any plan yet. Ramsey did say, however, that the political body which raises the tax ought to control how it is spent. Therefore, a local option tax would be spent by the commissioners and a statewide tax by the assembly.

Claiming A First

In whatever Valhalla in which they now sojourn, the spirits of Wilbur and Orville Wright must be restive as another effort is mounted to take from them the credit for teaching man to fly.

"Here we go again," they must be telling each other as Connecticut legislators ponder the claim that one Gustave Whitehead built an airplane and flew it on Aug. 14, 1901 — more than two years before the Wrights made their epochal first powered flight from the beach at Kitty Hawk.

The Connecticut Legislature is pondering a resolution that urges the Smithsonian Institution to hold hearings on evidence that Whitehead, a German immigrant, took off and flew his Model 21 craft a half-mile along Long Island Sound that day.

William O'Dwyer, a retired Air Force pilot who has studied and researched Whitehead's exploits for 22 years, cites a 5,000-word article about the flight written by reporter Richard Howell and published in the Bridgeport Herald Aug. 18, 1901.

To back up their claims in behalf of Whitehead, his backers are having built a replica of Whitehead's Model 21. The bat-winged craft, made of Japanese silk, piano wire, bamboo and spruce planks, is nearing completion and is due for gliding tests soon. Powered flights are scheduled for this summer.

"With the replica, we can't prove that Whitehead flew, but we can show he could have flown," said O'Dwyer. He and other Whitehead buffs claim to have tracked down specifications for the Model 21 in scientific journals of the time and have pondered over magnifications of old photographs. Whitehead died in 1927 and was buried in a pauper's grave. All his notebooks, records and models have been lost.

It seems ironic that the Smithsonian is being asked to hold public hearings and — presumably — to adjudicate the matter since it was the agency which for years fought — unfairly at times — to rob the Wright brothers of their claim to fame.

It was the Smithsonian which proclaimed in 1914 that its former secretary, Samuel P. Langley, had built and demonstrated an airplane — which Langley called an aerodrome — in 1903 several months before the first flight at Kitty Hawk. The Smithsonian asserted the Langley craft was "capable of flying with a pilot and several hundred pounds of useful load." The Smithsonian's efforts in behalf of Langley, a noted scientist, came after his death and involved chicanery he would not have approved.

Actually, Langley demonstrated his aircraft twice during 1903 — before the Wright flights on Dec. 17 of that year. Both times the aerodrome flew like the proverbial lead balloon straight to the bottom of the Potomac River over which the tests were held. The New York Times said the last demonstration, like the first, was a "complete failure" and asserted "at no time was there any semblance of flight." The aerodrome was fished from the river and placed in storage until 1914 when the Smithsonian asked aviation pioneer Glenn Curtiss to repair the craft and to attempt to fly it to boost its claim that the Langley machine was capable of flight.

Curtiss did rebuild the aerodrome at his Long Island plant and did manage to get it off the ground twice — for about five seconds each time. However, the New York Times reported Curtiss made 35 structural changes in rebuilding the Langley craft, and Orville Wright said some of these changes incorporated aeronautical principles he and his brother had discovered.

As a result of the Smithsonian's stand, Orville Wright sent the Kitty Hawk, the original Wright airplane, to London in 1928 where it was displayed in the British Science Museum. It remained there until after the Smithsonian, under a new secretary, had thrown in the towel. Dr. Charles D. Abbott, the new head of the Smithsonian, wrote Orville Wright in 1942 that, "It is everywhere acknowledged that the Wright brothers were the first to make sustained flights in a heavier-than-air machine at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina, December 17, 1903."

Abbott added that the flights made by Curtiss "did not warrant the statement published by the Smithsonian Institution that these tests proved the Langley machine of 1903 was capable of sustained flight, carrying a man." This apology satisfied Wright, the Kitty Hawk was subsequently returned to this country and now hangs in the honored spot in the Smithsonian's magnificent National Air and Space Museum in Washington.

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Supermarkets and banks are rated highest by the U.S. public on the quality of their services, while auto repair, local government, real estate firms and public transportation are rated lowest.

Between these two extremes are these six service-related organizations: airlines, restaurants, hospitals, hotels, department stores and insurance companies.

Here is the question:

"We would like to learn a little more about people's impressions concerning the quality of services they receive. Using the 10-point scale on this card, on which '1' means the quality of service is very poor and '10,' meaning the quality of service is very high, how would you rate each of the following services?"

Combining the top three positions (10, 9 and 8) into an index of service quality excellence, supermarkets (58 percent), banks (52 percent), airlines (47 percent), restaurants (46 percent), hospitals (44 percent) and hotels (41 percent) are in the upper half of the organizations tested. Department stores (38 percent), insurance companies (34 percent), auto repair (26 percent), local government (22 percent), real estate firms (19 percent) and public transportation (17 percent) are rated less highly.

Four services or organizations receive double-digit mentions as offering poor service quality when the three lowest positions (1, 2 and 3) are combined: local government (20 percent), public transportation (19 percent), auto repair (16 percent) and insurance companies (12 percent).

It should be noted that many people were unable to rate real estate firms, public transportation and airlines. This has the effect of reducing the ratings, good or bad, of these services.

Overall, the most common complaint is poor performance or failure to get work done properly (39 percent). Slow service is also a frequent complaint (30 percent). In addition, many object to the cost of service (20 percent) and the indifference of service personnel (20 percent). It should further be noted that there are other types of problems associated with personnel (e.g., inadequate qualifications, bad manners) which if combined would increase the proportion having personnel-related complaints.

Looking at the individual services with which consumers have had negative experiences, the problems differ by the services performed. The most frequent objection to the quality of auto repair service is the failure to get vehicles to work right (63 percent). Those who complain about banks or insurance companies most frequently cite the lack of speed with which they work (29 percent and 31 percent respectively). Slowness is also the major cause for complaint about local government, cited by 40 percent. Among those who feel hospital care could be improved, 33 percent blame the indifference of hospital personnel. Finally, 42 percent of those objecting to airline service feel the scheduling is handled poorly.

Fewer Buckling Up

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina's mandatory seat-belt law appears to have caused a lot more drivers to buckle up, but the law's effect is wearing off a bit, surveys show.

A survey of 72 sites in January and February showed 44 percent of those questioned were buckling up, said Donald Reinfurt, associate director for analysis studies at the Highway Safety Research Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

March 16, 1986

Dear Fellow Citizens of Pitt County,

I have been a resident of Pitt County since I was six years old. I care very deeply for our community and have tried to contribute as much of my time and resources as possible to make it a better and more economical place in which to live and bring up a family.

During these many years, I have witnessed and been involved in major changes occurring in our county as we have progressed and grown. I firmly believe that these changes are just a small beginning of that which we will see in the next few years.

Since my retirement, I have for the most part stopped giving my personal viewpoint in political elections. However, due to the critical decisions that I feel must be made in the next few years, I cannot help but speak out.

As we face increased growth and change, it is extremely important that decisions be based on careful long range planning. Thus, it becomes even more important that we have informed, capable, and visionary leadership at all levels of government. Our public officials will be called upon to make critical decisions which will affect all of us as well as future generations.

WE MUST FIND TALENTED AND COMMITTED PEOPLE TO SERVE IN THESE POSITIONS.

For these reasons, I encourage you to carefully consider JIM YOUNG for our next County Commissioner from the Greenville Township.

I have known Jim for 15 years, and have had the opportunity to work with him in many church and community programs. He is extremely capable and dependable. I have been impressed with his careful planning and hard work when involved in any endeavor. He does his "homework" and comes to meetings PREPARED and KNOWLEDGEABLE about the issues at hand.

JIM YOUNG is not only an excellent planner, he is also one who follows through and gets the job done.

I BELIEVE THAT JIM YOUNG CAN PROVIDE THE FORWARD THINKING LEADERSHIP PITT COUNTY NEEDS AT THIS TIME. JOIN ME AND VOTE FOR HIM FOR PITT COUNTY COMMISSIONER IN THE MAY 6 DEMOCRATIC PRIMARY.

Sincerely,

Ray D. Minges

Official Predicts More Price Dips

By ROBERT BURNS
Associated Press Writer

GENEVA (AP) — World oil prices may fall "far below" $10 a barrel if an emergency OPEC meeting fails to agree on production limits, an Arab oil minister said Saturday.

Mana Saeed Oteiba of the United Arab Emirates also said chances were no better than 50-50 that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries could reach agreement at the conference starting Sunday.

"If we don't get together now, the price of oil will continue to drop to a level far below $10," he said in an interview with NBC News. "Then we will regret that we didn't take the chance of defending the market at $15 a barrel."

Oteiba said the conflict between the cartel and non-OPEC oil producing countries such as Britain is the "biggest problem OPEC has faced" in its 25 year history. "It is a war, and an ugly war," he added.

OPEC is badly divided on whether to continue pursuing a strategy announced last December aimed at boosting its share of the world market by forcing non- OPEC producers to cut back their production.

Oteiba, in earlier comments to reporters, confirmed that OPEC had failed to increase its share. He said the group had actually lost business since December. Other ministers arriving at a Geneva hotel for preliminary talks had little to say to reporters and offered no new suggestions for a price-support plan.

Libyan Oil Minister Fawzi A. Shakshuki said he would recommend coordinated cuts in OPEC production, but would not elaborate.

Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, Saudi Arabia's oil minister and OPEC's most powerful official, slipped in through a rear entrance and declined to answer questions.

Without a firm OPEC agreement in Geneva, oil prices on the open market could remain at their current level of about $15 a barrel or fall further, analysts say.

OPEC is badly divided over whether to pursue its vow of last December to win back oil customers lost to Britain and other independent oil producing countries by raising production.

The tactic led to an unprecedented collapse of oil prices, prompting calls by OPEC hardliners such as Iran and Algeria to abandon the costly strategy, which was advocated by OPEC kingpin Saudi Arabia.

Algeria's oil minister, Belkacem Nabi, said Saturday he would urge the conference to cut production sharply to stabilize prices.

Many industry analysts say OPEC, weakened by years of falling revenue, no longer can afford production cutbacks big enough to reverse the price decline.

"We are in a strange market," Oteiba told reporters, noting that prices have dropped by nearly one-half, to about $15 a barrel, since the start of 1986.

OPEC's official oil price is $28 a barrel, but all 13 member countries are selling their oil for whatever price they can get.

Oteiba said that despite the drop to the lowest prices since the late 1970s, OPEC failed to increase its share of the world market. In fact, he said, its sales dropped to about 17 million barrels a day from 18 million when the year began.

He said OPEC marketing experts forecast that world demand for OPEC oil would slip to as low as 15 million barrels daily in the next three months.

Last December, OPEC officially abandoned its failed strategy of trying to prop up prices by restricting and frequently cutting its production.

The ministers pledged instead to fight back against non-OPEC producers, such as Britain, who raised production every time OPEC cut its output.

Saudi Arabia and some other Persian Gulf producers apparently want to continue the battle against independent producers and are not expected to agree to an cutback plan in Geneva.

Since 1983, non-OPEC countries collectively have been producing more oil than the 13 OPEC nations, weakening the cartel's global influence.

"This is a new period which OPEC and the oil industry is facing," Oteiba said, adding that the answer to OPEC's woes may lie in "different solutions than the ones which we may be used to." He did not elaborate.

Oteiba said a six-nation OPEC committee for assessing short-term trends in the oil market met Saturday but would not submit any specific recommendations to the full ministerial meeting Sunday.

The ministers planned to consult Wednesday with representatives of non-OPEC producers including Malaysia, Egypt, Brunei and Mexico.

Freedom Proposal

PARIS (AP) — Unofficial French mediator Razah Raad returned to Paris on Saturday from Lebanon and Syria with what he said was a plan that could lead to freedom for three of the French hostages in Lebanon.

"A door which was closed is now open," said Raad, a Lebanese-born French citizen. Raad refused to tell reporters at the airport details of the plan, which he said would be submitted immediately to the Fench government.

Raads a Moslem Shiite heart specialist with no official diplomatic experience, but with close contacts with Shiite activists in Lebanon. He refused to speculate on when the hostages might be released.

The official Syrian Arab News Agency disclosed Saturday that President Francois Mitterrand of France conferred by telephone on Friday with Syria's President Hafez Assad on the hostage crisis. It gave no other details.

Raad also confirmed that Eric Rouleau, French, ambassador to Tunisia, was in Tehran, the Iranian capital, talking to officials there about the hostages.

At least seven French hostages are believed to be held in Lebanon by pro-Iranian Islamic extremists.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, claims to have three of the hostages.

Five Dead As 93 Cars Involved In Collision

COURTENAY, France (AP) — Ninety-three vehicles piled up in a massive chain-reaction collision Saturday, killing five people and injuring 67, police said. Officials said traffic had been moving at a high speed despite dense fog.

Seventeen people were listed in serious condition at local hospitals after the crash on Autoroute A-6, about 110 miles south of Paris.

Police said four cars caught fire and three people burned to death in one of them.

Ambulances had to struggle past a 2½-mile tangle of cars and trucks to reach the injured. Some victims could not be reached for more than an hour, police said, noting that the pileup spilled over into emergency lanes.

More than 80 firemen from four towns cleared wreckage and helped the injured.

FIVE KILLED IN ACCIDENT — A general view of the A-6 highway near Courtenay, France, about 110 miles south of Paris, shows the area where 93 vehicles collided in a chain-reaction accident in fog Saturday morning. At least five people were killed in the collision and 67 injured, 17 of them seriously. Four vehicles caught fire and three persons burned to death. (AP Laserphto)

Agreement Said Near On Contract

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Negotiators for the United Steelworkers and LTV Steel Co. were close to an agreement Saturday that could become a benchmark for the other Big Six steelmakers, a union spokesman said.

"There are still some differences, but the union is satisfied that the targeted date for completion of the package will be met," spokesman Gary Hubbard said as marathon bargaining continued for a third day.

Although the contract doesn't expire until July 31, the nation's second-largest steelmaker had set Saturday as its deadline for a settlement.

"We're several hours away from a final completed package" and talks that went on all night were still in session, Hubbard said at midafternoon.

"There will be some labor cost reduction to the company," he said, "but we don't look at this as a concession agreement because our members will get a contractually guaranteed exchange in equity for any economic reductions." He said that by equity he meant stock, profit sharing and cash.

Calls to LTV offices Saturday went unanswered. Company officials in the past declined comment on the talks.

If an agreement isn't ratified by April 1, the union gains the right to say when its members should be reimbursed for a deferred cost-of-living bonus estimated at $28 million.

LTV agreed to the bonus as part of the repayment of concessions made by the union in March 1983, when the current contract was settled. LTV has said it saved $352 million under the pact.

Students Receive Reagan's Letter

By SUSAN ASKEW
Reflector Staff Writer

Students in Al Braxton's first and second grade class at Pactolus Elementary School received a letter from President Reagan in response to letters they sent him following the recent space shuttle Challenger disaster.

The president thanked the students for their letters, saying that teacher Christa McAuliffe, who died in the accident,taught us "that the future belongs not to the fainthearted but to the brave....the Challenger crew was pulling us into the future, and we'll continue to follow them with more shuttle launches, more astronauts, more citizen-volunteers, and more exploration."

Reagan's letter, dated March 7, said, "Perhaps the best way to honor Christa and the other crew members would be to work hard in school and in your community so that someday you will reach your goals and dreams as she wished you would."

Braxton said the children's "Dear Mr. President" letters were in conjunction with the shuttle disaster and the students' daily language lesson.

Student Brandon Hudson wrote, "I am sorry that the space shuttle fell into the ocean. I hope they find more pieces to the shuttle."

Phillip Moore's letter read, "I am sorry about the people who died in the space shuttle. I hope another shuttle can go in the sky."

Holly Jane Whitehurst wrote, "I am sorry about the people that got killed and left their families behind. I hope somebody will go back in space."

Christopher Eakes' letter read, "I was sad when the space shuttle blew up. I wish they could find somebody alive."

And Patrick Wayne Norfleet wrote, "I am sorry about the space shuttle. I hope another shuttle can go up again. I don't want another teacher to get killed."

Aquino Administration Moves Toward Revolutionary Structure

By MIGUEL C. SUAREZ
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino's administration on Saturday gave its strongest indication yet that it may proclaim itself a revolutionary government. It said popular support for the idea was "building up."

Executive Secretary Joker Arroyo was quoted in an official presidential palace news release as saying the president has received numerous such proposals to speed drafting of a new constitution and dismantling the "unjust structures" left by deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

The palace issued the release hours after former Labor Minister Blas Ople announced he and other members of Marcos' New Society Movement party were severing all ties with Marcos and forming a new party to support her as an "act of contrition."

Ople also said at a news conference that one day before Marcos fled the country Feb. 25, Ople relayed to Marcos what he called a clear message from the U.S. government that Marcos should step down.

The palace news release quoted Arroyo as saying that proposals for Mrs. Aquino to declare a revolutionary government have "breadth and depth." He added, however, that Mrs. Aquino has not yet made a decision, the release said.

Mrs. Aquino has created a special Cabinet committee that is to meet Wednesday on the question of whether to declare a revolutionary government.

Besides writing a new constitution, the proposal includes holding elections for local officials and members of a legislature to replace the National Assembly, which is now controlled by members of Marcos' party.

Ople told reporters he and 13 other New Society Movement assemblymen form the core of the new party, called the Philippine Nationalist Party. Many of the 44 assemblymen who initially agreed on the need for a new group "showed faint-heartedness," he said.

He said, however, he was confident most New Society Movement members would join the new party because they felt betrayed by Marcos' "organized pillage" of the country's wealth during the 20 years he was in power.

Ople was referring to the billions of dollars in government funds Marcos and his associates purportedly diverted to investments in the United States and other countries.

In asking Mrs. Aquino to work together with the National Assembly as it is now constituted, Ople said new alliances after Marcos' ouster assure Mrs. Aquino a clear majority in the assembly.

Ople said he called Marcos in Hawaii last week to tell him to stop trying to run the New Society Movement from Honolulu, and said Marcos has stopped telephoning messages and advice to his former allies in Manila.

Ople was in Washington when top Philippines defense officials broke with Marcos, triggering the "people power" revolution that swept Mrs. Aquino to power. Ople said he served as a major channel for relaying messages from the State Department and the White House to Marcos.

He said the messages from President Reagan were not direct, but the "meaning between the lines" was that he told Marcos: "We (the Americans) suggest you remove yourself, do not employ counterforce against the rebels and, of course, we will guarantee to facilitate your safety and medical services for yourself, members of your family and close associates."

Ople said Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Michael Armacost, assistant secretary, asked him to play that role.

Cesar Virata, Marcos' prime minister, told journalists Friday that before Marcos fled, White House official Dick Childress telephoned Virata and asked him to urge rebel forces not to attack Marcos' palace.

Comet Watching Craze Sweeps Through State

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Halley's Comet fever has hit North Carolina, with tourism officials touting the state's lofty mountain region as one of the best viewing sites in the Northern Hemisphere and citizens jamming dark mountain roads to crane their necks at the sky.

But astronomers say the view may be just as good from the Outer Banks and may be almost as good near your hometown in a very dark area of countryside with an unobstructed view of the southeastern horizon.

"We're excited about the turnout we've had," said Teena Ray of the Asheville Convention and Visitor's Bureau, which is sponsoring bus trips to Mt. Mitchell State Park about 25 miles northeast of the city. "For this to be our slow time, it's really turning out to be our busy time."

The trips to 6,684-foot Mt. Mitchell, the highest point in the United States east of the Mississippi, were planned for this weekend, March 22 and April 5-6. Eight Asheville hotels are offering package deals, some of which include parties, champagne and free tickets, she said.

Buses are also running April 5-6 to Ghost Town in the Sky, a Maggie Valley tourist attraction. Ms. Ray said one deal includes a party with Bill Haley and the Comets and a buffet breakfast.

Grandfather Mountain, a 5,964-foot tourist attraction near Linville, will be opened an hour before the 4 a.m. peak viewing time on March 12-18, officials said.

Meanwhile, astronomy clubs around the state have organized tours to dark, unobstructed vantage points to view the comet, which shows up once every 76 years.

On March 8, superintendents at Pilot Mountain State Park northeast of Winston-Salem had to turn away thousands of people when the park filled with comet watchers shortly after gates opened at 4:30 a.m.

"It was a disappointing trip," said Rick Blakley, president of the sponsoring Forsyth Astronomical Society. "By the time we set up our equipment, the clouds rolled in."

The Morehead Planetarium in Chapel Hill is has been sponsoring sessions at Lake Jordan for the past two Saturdays, with one more scheduled for March 22, said director Lee Shapiro. Some 300 people showed up on March 8, he said.

"The trick is to be in a dark location," he said. "North Carolina doesn't have a lot of real big cities, so it's not too difficult to get out away from the lights without having to drive for hours."

The Florida Keys are probably the best site in the eastern part of the Northern Hemisphere to view the comet, said Bruce Carney, a professor of astronomy at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"The comet is pretty low in the sky, so the further south you go, the higher in the sky and the more visible it is," he said. "Myself, I'm headed to the Outer Banks this weekend."

A new moon on March 10 should keep viewing relatively easy this week, he said. Light from the moon will increase and then wane until another new moon April 9.

The best viewing time is about an hour and a half before sunrise, Carney said. The tail of the comet is visible now even with the naked eye, although binoculars help. As the days pass by, the comet will appear lower and lower in the sky and viewers will have to get up earlier and earlier to see it.

"Astronomers got burned with Kohoutek (a comet in the 1970s that was predicted to be spectacular but wasn't), he said. "This time we know it's not going to be very favorable, although it does look pretty good."

Astronomers say conditions in the Southern Hemisphere should be much better for viewing Halley's comet. Accordingly, the Fayetteville Observer-Times is sending photographer Johnny Horne to Australia on March 29 and paying his expenses of more than $3,000.

Horne said he has the tracking equipment needed to shoot the comet over a period of several minutes. He said the pictures may be published in a special weekend edition after he returns April 14.

Meanwhile, some North Carolinians will be seeing Halley's Comet for the second time.

Jesselyn Riggsbee of Charlotte was five years old when she saw the comet in Greensboro in 1910.

"I remember it very vividly," she said. "What a beautiful sight it was. It was a very starry night, I remember that. I think it was sharper somehow. It seemed to be clearer than all the pictures I have seen."

Carney said the comet probably will seem a lot fainter this time.

"It's been around many times, and it will be back," he said. "If it's any consolation, 76 years from now it's not going to look any better. The next two after that will be spectacular, but you'll have to wait around about 150 years."

Mistaken Identity

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Charlotte man who had been held in jail since Feb. 20 was released after court officials said he apparently had been arrested in a case of mistaken identity.

"It feels nice to be out," said William Vaughn, 38. "There was a mix-up. I don't feel like going through that again. I just hope this is the end of everything."

Vaughn had claimed since his arrest that he was a victim of mistaken identity. His family claimed another man used Vaughn's lost driver's license as identification when he was convicted of assault last June. When the convicted man violated his probation, Vaughn was arrested.

William Koger of the Mecklenburg County probation office agreed, saying Vaughn is not the man who pleaded guilty to the assault charge last year.

"We're going to get the person who used Vaughn's name," Koger said. "Now that we know it isn't Vaughn, we're going to take some appropriate action. I'm sorry that this happened to Mr. Vaughn."

District Court Judge William Scarborough freed Vaughn after probation officials testified they could not identify him as the man who pleaded guilty last June to beating his girlfriend.

Probation officer Catherine Andre told Scarborough she never had seen that defendant because he left immediately after the court hearing.

Council Member In A Pinch Over Car Theft

RALEIGH (AP) — Benson City Council member Nathan Blackmon admits he took a 1984 Cadillac convertible from a Benson car dealer's lot last month, but he says he shouldn't be charged with car theft for taking his own vehicle.

Blackmon, a used-car dealer, says he is the victim of a car-theft ring that investigators believe stole cars in New York and New Jersey, altered their serial numbers and sold in North Carolina.

The Cadillac that Blackmon bought in September for $21,500 at the Columbus County Auto Auction in Whiteville turned out to be one of those stolen cars, he said Friday.

"The car I've got now was stolen Aug. 5 in New Jersey," he said. He said he got the information about his car from documents he obtained from the state Division of Motor Vehicles.

Blackmon said he took his car to a Benson dealership a month ago at the request of a DMV inspector. But when he returned to pick up the car, the inspector told him he could not have it back.

Blackmon said he was told he would be reimbursed by a lawyer in Pittsboro who represented a car repair shop in Siler City that once had handled the car. The lawyer didn't pay him, Blackmon said, so "I came back to the Chevrolet place and I picked my car up."

On March 1, Benson Police Chief Lindell Norton arrested Blackmon, charging him with larceny of a motor vehicle "while in the possession of the state of North Carolina." Blackmon is scheduled for a probable cause hearing Thursday.

Blackmon holds the state responsible and blames a DMV inspector who approved the car for a North Carolina title after examining documents that indicated the car had been wrecked and rebuilt.

"I just feel like it's the state's fault," Blackmon said. "I've got a letter ... from the motor vehicle department certifying that (the inspector) went out and checked the car and OK'd it. All of his OK'ing was completely wrong."

Thompson `Cadillac-Oldsmobile Inc. of Raleigh last week filed suit against DMV Commissioner William Hiatt, a DMV inspector and three auto dealers over four cars it bought from the Whiteville auto auction that were later discovered to be stolen.

Investigators say that in a typical case, a member of the theft ring would buy a wrecked car from an insurance company in a northern state and obtain a salvage title for it. A salvage title allows a car to be rebuilt or sold for parts, but not driven.

A description of the car would then be sent to someone in New York and a car fitting its description would be stolen. The stolen car's serial number would then be changed to match the wrecked car. The stolen car would be brought to North Carolina and presented to a state inspector as a rebuilt wrecked car to get a new title.

Blackmon says he still has his Cadillac, but would be glad to give it up if he could get his money back.

"That's the reason they got the warrant," he said. "I wouldn't give it (the car) to them."

Lobbying Plan Rejected

RALEIGH (AP) — A legislative panel has rejected a proposal to close a loophole in North Carolina's lobbying regulations that allows special interest groups to avoid reporting much of the money they spend to influence the General Assembly.

The Legislative Ethics and Lobbying Study Committee Friday voted not to endorse a proposal that would have required corporations, trade associations, labor unions and other groups to disclose the salaries and retainers they pay lobbyists.

State law now requires lobbyists to disclose at the end of each legislative session how much they spend for transportation, lodging, entertainment and food, and what compensation they receive while lobbyingg the legislature.

But some groups avoid disclosing how much they are spending by reporting that they paid their lobbyists an unspecified salary or retainer, from which the lobbyist can pay for transportation, entertainment, food and other items.

"That is a large loophole in the reporting requirement," Terrence Sullivan, director of the legislature's General Research Division told the committee. Sullivan's staff drafted the proposal that was unanimously rejected.

Several lawmakers and lobbyists said disclosing salaries would violate the lobbyists' right to privacy.

"I just don't see any benefit to the public to know it," said Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe. "If there is no benefit, then we are just invading their privacy for no good reason."

"These folks, as lobbyists, have private rights that are none of our business," said Rep. Larry Justus, R-Henderson.

The study committe, however, tentatively recommended that the General Assembly in June adopt two bills that would tighten parts of the lobbying regulations and put new restrictions on gifts that lawmakers can receive.

The proposed changes would forbid the spouses or business partners of lawmkers from becoming paid lobbyists; require lobbyists to report the names of each legislator for whom they spend $25 or more for meals, entertainment and other amenities; and forbid legislators from accepting a gift worth more than $25 from any lobbyist.

Bomb Scare At Airport

MORRISVILLE (AP) — A novelty clock set off a bomb scare Saturday at Raleigh-Durham Airport after authorities were told seven sticks of dynamite attached to a timing device were found at the N.C. National Guard Armory at the airport.

"It was real-looking, but it didn't have enough wires on it," said a State Bureau of Invstigation bomb expert, who asked not to be identified. "The wires weren't quite right."

The "bomb" was left behind by some members of the Genesis of Atlantic Lows project, a weather research effort being conducted at the airport.

"It's a toy that's been around since the beginning of the project," said Linda Y. Yellin, administrative assistant with the project. "Actually, it was a novelty item that looks like a stick of dynamite.

"We've had it around here in a drawer for quite a while. Some of us were fooling around with it yesterday and I guess somebody just left it out on the table," she said.

The clock was found in a classroom by National Guard personnel about 7:30 a.m., said Donald D. Paschall, chief of the RDU police. When airport security officers arrived, they called for an evacuation of the armory.

When a GALE project official got to the armory, he told police the device was a toy.

"To me," Paschal said, "it had enough wires" to be a bomb.

Law School Dean

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — A law professor at the University of Mississippi has been named the new law school dean at North Carolina Central University.

Louis Westerfield, 37, will assume the post July 1, replacing Dr. Charles Daye, who resigned last year.

Westerfield was the unanimous choice Friday of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors. He was one of three candidates submitted to Chancellor Leroy Walker by a committee of NCCU trustees. He recommended Westerfield.

Enrollment Ceiling

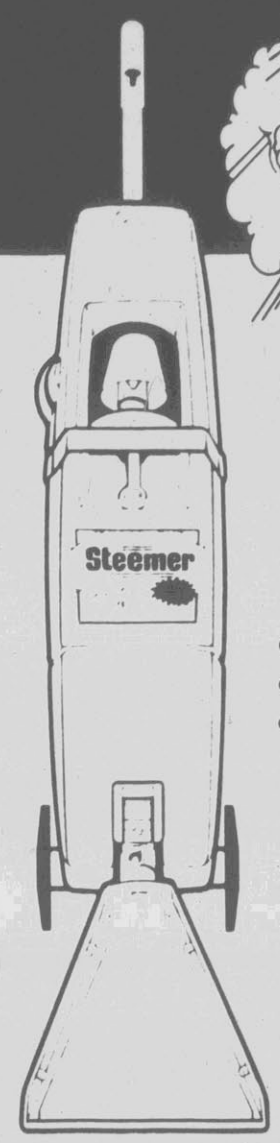

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — The University of North Carolina Board of Governors has voted to set an 18 percent ceiling on enrollment of out-of-state students on most of its campuses.

The ceiling will take effect with the freshman classes entering in 1988 and will apply to all schools except the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem.

Before adopting the policy, the board approved an amendment allowing the chancellors of the 15 other campuses to request exemptions from the ceiling until 1990 if they can show that earlier implementation would cause "serious problems or hardships" at their schools.

Plant Accident A Tragedy Of Errors

By DAVID GOELLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As told to a House subcommittee by Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials, the story of the January accident at an Oklahoma uranium processing plant is a tragedy of errors.

One wheel of a vehicle holding a 14-ton storage tank didn't get on a weighing scale, so too much uranium hexafluoride was put into the tank at the Sequoyah Fuels Co. plant.

To remove the excess chemical, workers at the Kerr-McGee Corp. subsidiary heated the tank. This procedure is against against NRC regulations and has been for years, but nobody had told the tank-fill workers, even though NRC requires classroom instruction on such safety procedures.

When the heat caused the chemical to expand, the tank ruptured, spewing forth a plume of deadly hydrogen fluoride gas that killed one man and may have left others with kidney damage. Workers were unable to find emergency oxygen masks in the dense cloud.

The toxic plume floated into the air around Gore, Okla., but it took plant personnel 15 minutes to alert the Highway Patrol. It was another 45 minutes before anyone from the plant began going door-to-door to warn nearby residents.

Most people in the area learned about the accident even later from local radio news reports.

A Sequoyah official called the NRC in Washington. Had he dialed the two NRC emergency numbers in Texas and New Mexico, he would have discovered they belonged to private homes, not the NRC.

When the agency got new phones, it published them in the Federal Register but did not directly inform the companies it licenses. The NRC approved a Sequoyah emergency procedures plan listing the wrong numbers.

A footnote to the Jan. 4 accident at Sequoyah occurred last Thursday. A weighing scale malfulctioned and another tank was overloaded. NRC officials investigating the January rupture were told by workers that the scale wasn't working correctly, but the NRC didn't test the scale.

Profiting from the lessons of January, this time the tank was emptied without heat.

This is the story that emerged Friday when members of the House Government Operations energy subcommittee — chaired by Rep. Mike Synar, a Democrat whose district includes the plant — grilled NRC and Sequoyah officials.

There was a lot of mea culpa coming from the witnesses, much of it from NRC Chairman Nunzio Palladino.

He acknowledged that the agency, stung by the near-meltdown in 1979 at Three Mile Island in Pennsylvania, had concentrated on safety at nuclear plants to the detriment of the safety of chemical processes in facilities it licenses.

"I don't think the commission has given proper attention to these kind of facilities," Palladino said. "I am concerned there may be inadequate attention to the broader aspects of chemical safety at nuclear facilities."

"I'm committed to take steps," he assured the committee.

Palladino said that in making its annual inspections at plants like Sequoyah, the NRC checks to see whether safety procedures are in place but does not do a detailed review to see if they are being followed.

"It appears to me the NRC is largely a paper tiger," said Synar, adding that the agency seems "concerned that the proper piece of paper is on file," not that licensees are following correct procedures.

Synar and Rep. Bob Wise, a West Virginia Democrat who represents the huge chemical producing complex in the Kanawha Valley, were especially upset about the slow notification to the Gore community about the deadly gas plume.

"Who in the world is watching out for folks outside the (plant's) fence?" as Rep. Bob Wise, D-W.Va. "The first 15 minutes are critical. That's when you get the body count."

French Will Elect New Assembly

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — The French vote Sunday for a new National Assembly in an election that may force Socialist President Francois Mitterrand to govern for the first time with a conservative legislature and premier, or resign two years early.

The Socialists were viewed as certain to lose the absolute majority they have held in the lower house of Parliament for the past five years. All polls predict the united conservative and centrist opposition will win enough seats to take solid control of the 577-seat assembly, which wields virtually all legislative power.

In a simultaneous election, voters also will choose representatives to local councils in France's 22 domestic and four overseas administrative regions.

Major issues such as unemployment and the economy have been largely overshadowed by debate over an anticipated power clash between a conservative premier and Mitterrand, who has two years to go in his seven-year term.

Never in the 28-year history of the Fifth Republic has a president been faced with a hostile parliament and prime minister. Mitterrand has hinted he may resign rather than submit to the conservative program.

Final polls last week indicated the conservative Rally for the Republic party and the centrist Union for French Democracy, which forged a joint platform, will win enough seats to control the assembly. But the campaign has been lackluster and parties on both sides fret about abstentions and the 17 percent of voters indicated by the polls to be still undecided.

The Socialists' goal is to win 30 percent of the vote, which would make them the single largest party in France but leave them far short of a majority.

The constitution says the president presides over the Cabinet, but it also gives the premier and his government power to determine and conduct national policy. The president must sign all new laws but has no effective veto power.

The president can dissolve the assembly and call new elections, but cannot directly fire the premier. The president is the commander-in-chief of the armed forces, but the premier is responsible for national defense.

The constitution, created in 1958 and tailored for Gen. Charles de Gaulle, assumed when it gave the president wide powers that his party would control the National Assembly.

The conservative platform calls for rolling back many of the Socialist programs of the past five years by such steps as privatizing nationalized companies, reducing taxes on corporations and the rich, eliminating price and exchange controls and approving business layoffs.

Socialist leaders have warned of a political mess if the right wins, and Mitterrand has spoken of eventual "disorder."

The new government must be formed before the new parliament convenes April 2.

Rightist leaders, with the exception of former Premier Raymond Barre, say they are prepared to try to work with Mitterrand. Barre, the most popular among opposition figures, is unequivocal in his belief Mitterrand should go.

Mitterrand's resignation and an early presidential election would spell trouble for the right, however. A fight for the presidency among conservative leaders, including Barre and Rally for the Republic leader Jacques Chirac, could split their ranks.

The Socialists got off to a bad start after the 1981 elections with a free-spending program that made worse an already sagging economy. But the government changed direction in 1982 and instituted a tough austerity program.

The result has been a dramatic cut in the annual inflation rate from about 13.8 percent to 3.4 percent, a favorable balance of payments, a buoyant stock market, a surprisingly strong franc, and expectations of a 3 percent economic growth rate this year.

France's economy is expected to benefit further from the drop in world oil prices and the decline of the dollar. The major problem remains unemployment, now at about 10.4 percent.

Orchestra Says No

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Orchestra, citing scheduling conflicts, has declined the Soviet Union's first invitation to a major U.S. orchestra in seven years to perform in that country.

Orchestra officials said Friday they had notified Goskonzert, the Soviet arts agency, that the group would not be able to perform four concerts at Moscow and Leningrad in May.

"We are disappointed. We invested an awful lot of work in this," said Stephen Sell, orchestra executive director.

Attendants' Union Complains

NEW YORK (AP) — Trans World Airlines was flying about 75 percent of its scheduled flights Saturday, its busiest day since the beginning of a 9-day-old strike by flight attendants, a company spokesman said.

The 5,700-member Independent Federation of Flight Attendants, meanwhile, complained to the Federal Aviation Administration that TWA's replacement flight attendants are violating FAA regulations.

The union said Friday the FAA had taken a "cavalier attitude" to its allegations that replacement crew members had been seen drinking alcoholic beverages prior to flights and that planes had taken off without the cabin doors secure.

Sally McElwreath, a TWA spokeswoman, said the airline's training of replacements was in full compliance with FAA regulations.

TWA has been using 1,750 newly hired workers and 1,500 company employees on loan from their other jobs with the airline since the strike began March 7, the airline said.

The airline's planned schedule for Saturday called for 431 flights, including 45 international departures and trips to every city in its system, said TWA spokesman Dan Kemnitz.

The schedule represents 74.2 percent of TWA's normal daily departures, and 84 percent of normal seating capacity, Kemnitz said.

Exact figures would not be in until sometime Sunday morning, he said.

In another development, the City Council in Kansas City decided Friday to continue a $300-a-day lease of space in the Municipal Auditorium to TWA for training new flight attendants.

In a letter delivered to city officials Friday, TWA threatened to sue if it tried to break the lease.

Some council members had indicated Thursday that they would like to accomodate labor officials' request and get out of the lease, which runs from Feb. 14 to March 24.

"This is a knife in the back," James Walsh, an attorney for the flight attendants. Union members will picket the auditorium in protest, Walsh said.

TWA has offered the attendants a contract that cuts their pay 22 percent and requires them to work more hours. The attendants have agreed to a 15 percent cut in base pay, but not to changes in work rules already accepted by other TWA workers.

Astronaut Says NASA Didn't Place Schedule Before Safety

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — An astronaut who flew aboard the shuttle Columbia in January says he doesn't believe safety was consciously jeopardized for the sake of NASA's busy launch schedule.

"We were certainly pushed to the limit. But NASA did not compromise safety for the sake of the schedule, at least not consciously," astronaut George Nelson said Friday.

But a second astronaut said that Challenger nearly blew up on a 1985 flight because an O-ring seal on one of the two boosters failed and its backup nearly burned through. Failure of the seals is thought to be a likely cause of the Jan. 28 Challenger explosion that killed seven astronauts.

Don L. Lind, a scientist-astronaut on the Spacelab 3 science mission aboard Challenger last year, said Friday in Portland, Ore., that he was "disturbed" to learn after the flight that it "came the second-closest to destruction."

"We're not foolish people, we're not frightened people," Lind said. "I think we should know about the problems, and we obviously have not in the past."

"The crew did not know certain risks — we did not know the tradeoffs on the O-rings," he said. "The managers did not pass that knowledge on to the operational people, including the crew."

Sarah Keegan, a spokeswoman for NASA, said the agency "not having seen the story would not comment at this point" on Lind's remarks.

Other astronauts have made complaints similar to Lind's.

John Young, chief astronaut of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, has said safety was compromised during the shuttle Challenger's disastrous Jan. 28 launch to meet schedule demands.

In a March 4 memo, Young criticized the launching of the Challenger despite questions about booster rocket seals, whose failure may have led to the explosion of Challenger and the deaths of its seven crew members.

Young also cited safety problems dating to October 1984 and said crews on previous flights were lucky.

"Technically, John's memos are right," Nelson said, though disagreeing with his conclusions. "I think it's good that they're getting the attention they are."

Columbia's last flight had a series of delays in launch and landing, some of them due to mechanical problems. After one launch delay, technicians discovered a mechanical problem that had gone undetected during the countdown.

That problem could have led to catastrophe if the launch had occurred, said Nelson, who was in Spokane for the local premiere of "The Dream Is Alive," a movie about the shuttle program.

"We were lucky," he said. "But that's the kind of thing that happens. You don't go looking for someone to blame."

Haydon Visits Home

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Artificial heart patient Murray Haydon went home for a visit Saturday and went into his house for the first time since he left in February 1985 to receive the Jarvik-7 pump, hospital officials said.

Haydon, 59, had made two other van rides, including one to his home in the Louisville suburb of St. Matthews, but had not gone inside.

"He went in for a short time after the photographers left," said Humana Hospital Audubon spokeswoman Donna Hazle.

Haydon had been confined to the hospital for nearly a year before he left the grounds in January to travel to a nearby apartment. He also took a van ride to his home in early February but did not get out because it was too cold, said Hazle.

Neighbors gathered in the front yard to greet Haydon at 11:30 a.m. Saturday. He was back in the hospital, as planned, early Saturday afternoon.

Leda Parsons, a neighbor, said Haydon spent about an hour at his home.

"He sat in his favorite chair and watched a (basketball) game," she said. "He didn't say anything to me but I talked to him and told him I prayed for him every night and that he looked good. I told him he looked awfully spiffy in that red shirt and he held my hand and pressed it."

Hazle said Haydon still uses a portable respirator and has had a tracheotomy, but can talk.

"He has several mechanisms that allow him to talk but he didn't have them with him today," she said, adding he has speech therapy every day.

Bumpers Thinks EPA Should Have Banned Chemical's Use

By TOM PARSONS
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The se of pesticide blamed for removal f milk products in eight states hould have been banned by a federal gency that outlawed its manufac- ure in 1983, Sen. Dale Bumpers said aturday.

Health officials said Friday that races of the chemical, heptachlor, ad been found in the milk of as many as 10 breast-feeding mothers ut said the finding did not warrant a witch to formula.

The womens' doctor, however, said hey should stop breast-feeding.

Officals have quarantined nearly 00 dairy farms in Arkansas and Missouri where cattle had eaten feed contaminated with the pesticide, the manufacture of which was banned after scientists linked it to cancer when fed to laboratory rats. Herds in Oklahoma are being tested.

Stores in those three states, as well as Texas, Louisiana, Kansas, Tennessee and Mississippi, have removed from their shelves milk products believed to have come from suspect dairies.

"We wouldn't be in this predicament" if the EPA in 1983 had banned not just the manufacture but any sales or further use of the pesticide heptachlor, Bumpers said at a news conference.

"EPA at that time should have banned it, should have taken it off the shelves," Bumpers said.

Telephone calls seeking comment from the regional EPA office in Dallas on Saturday went unanswered.

On Friday, Dr. Stuart Fitzhugh, deputy state health director, said traces of heptachlor were found in breast milk from combined samples of 10 women, with the amount approaching 0.1 parts per million, the level at which a milk product must be removed from the market under federal regulations.

But Fitzhugh said "we do not feel there is sufficient risk" to recommend that such mothers switch to feeding formula to their children, if the mothers have stopped drinking cow's milk contaminated with heptachlor.

The women's physician disagreed.

"Heptachlor is stored in body fat," said Dr. Greg Kresse of Eureka Springs. "If the dairy products used during pregnancy were contaminated, just because she (the mother) stopped using dairy products doesn't mean that the breast milk was safe.

"I made all my patients stop breast-feeding," he said. "I can't tell my patients, 'You're OK.'"

The state agency has recommended that pregnant and nursing women and children under the age of 1 drink powdered milk because babies are particularly susceptible to toxins. Most people can continue to drink store-bought milk, the officials say.

Also on Friday, three companies recalled evaporated milk processed at a plant in southwest Missouri after tests showed samples contained levels of heptachlor between .19 and .28 parts per million, said Clifford Shane, regional director of the federal Food and Drug Administration's Kansas City office.

State Health Department officials say the cattle feed was contaminated because it contained mash derived from seed-treated grain — grain intended for planting that was treated with the pesticide to protect it until germination.

According to a federal Food and Drug Administration official, the seed-treated grain was used by a Van Buren gasohol-production plant operated by J.E.W. Inc., and the mash that remained was turned over to a sister company, Valley Feeds Inc., which used it in making the feed.

Federal investigators planned to visit Arkansas, Missouri and Oklahoma next week to study the contamination.

Patients Get Reassurance Following Nurse's Arrest

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — Officials of Phoebe Putney Memorial Hospital say its former patients have nothing to worry about following the arrest of a nurse on a charge of murder in the mysterious heart attack death of a patient.

Nurse Terri Rachals, 24, of Albany was held without bond Saturday at the Dougherty County jail, charged with murdering Andrew Daniels, 73, an abdominal abcess patient, with an injection of potassium chloride on Nov. 14. She had been with the hospital six years.

Hospital officials suspected something was wrong when they noticed an abnormally high number of cardiac arrests at the hospital.

Dr. Douglas Calhoun, medical director of the intensive care unit, said Friday that eight patients in addition to Daniels suffered cardiac arrest in the hospital's intensive care unit in November, compared to the normal "three or four" such cases each month. Several patients died.

Potassium levels in several of the victims were found to be abnormally high, he said.

State and federal investigators were called in. Special security was set up but was removed Jan. 31 amid no further signs of foul play.

Then on Feb. 4, another patient died with an elevated potassium level, and "it was concluded that the only way the high potassium content ... could be accounted for was through human insertion," officials said Friday in a statement.

Calhoun stressed that former patients at Phoebe Putney have no reason to fear since potassium poisoning acts quickly, and potassium — a natural element contained in small amounts in many foods — does not build up in the body but rapidly passes out of a person's system.

Authorities have declined to say how many patients' deaths remain under investigation, or to identify them.

"This is not the end of Phoebe Putney. The people in this unit (intensive care staffers) are superlative, and that's why the unit remains full," said hospital administrator Duncan Moore.

"This could happen at any hospital in the country and in 95 percent of the cases, it would not be caught," said hospital authority chairman Harry Willson.

The musical crosswalks are being tested by the Peking Municipal Science Association and the Public Security Administration Bureau, it said.

Officials Attend Olof Palme's Funeral

By STEPHEN H. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Tens of thousands of Swedes stood silently Saturday as Prime Minister Olof Palme's white casket was drawn through the streets from an international funeral to a quiet churchyard burial.

Soldiers in plumed helmets tapped drums muffled in black as teams of young people pulled Palme's catafalque along its route, city church bells pealed and red Social Democratic Party flags fluttered.

Before a funeral audience of royalty, world leaders and ranking envoys, Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson praised his predecessor as a "free and powerful bird, killed in full flight."

King Carl XVI Gustaf, standing over Palme's rose-covered casket, told Swedes their country had lost "a voice everyone listened to." U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar described Palme as the "quintessential man of peace."

Representatives of 120 nations gathered for the civic funeral organized by Sweden's governing Social Democratic Party, which Palme led for 17 years until he was shot Feb. 28 by an unidentified assassin while walking the streets of the capital with his wife Lisbet.

They gathered in the lofty Blue Hall of riverside City Hall, guarded outside by a small naval vessel stationed in icy waters.

"This is the hour to say goodbye to a beloved younger brother," said former West German Chancellor Willy Brandt. Brandt, 72, was an old friend and political ally of the 59-year-old Palme.

Brandt was the last of nine speakers at the civic funeral attended by 1,500 guests. After reading his prepared text in English, he spoke to Palme's family in Norwegian: "Your loss is our loss."

Palme's deeds, he said, using the language he learned as a refugee in Scandinavia during World War II, "will prove stronger than violence."

Palme's widow followed the casket from the hall, walking beside one of her three grown sons.

They were followed by 280 bearers of red Social Democratic district flags, who stood quietly on a long balcony throughout the funeral.

Three thousand Social Democratic honor guards lined the route of the funeral cortege, some bowing their heads as the casket passed in the fading light of a cold, overcast afternoon.

Hundreds of other party bannerbearers also lined the route, joining the procession as it progressed to the cemetery of the 18th-century Adolf Fredrik Church, until nearly 1,000 red party flags, each trimmed in black mourning crape, followed the casket.

The casket, decorated with the red roses that covered it during the funeral, rested on a red-draped catafalque.

Palme's family followed the casket in black limousines. Foreign officials remained at City Hall for security reasons and to hold informal, private meetings.

Dusk was falling as the prolession reached the churchyard, where Stockholm Bishop Krister Stendahl of Sweden's Lutheran state church, who was a friend of Palme's, officiated at a burial attended only by family members and a few close associates.

Lights burned inside the yellow stucco church as the family assembled in the graveyard outside.

Mourning Swedes continued to leave roses at an impromptu memorial marking the assassination site only one block away.

Sweden's national news agency TT said two men were detained earlier Saturday on suspicion of planning to disturb the funeral procession.

The two, said to have been apprehended near the funeral procession route, were taken away for questioning, the agency added, without providing details.

Police spokesman Leif Hallberg said he was unaware of the incident.

Police canceled their regular daily news conference on the progress of the hunt for Palme's killer, saying they had "nothing new to report" Saturday.

A man arrested Wednesday for suspected involvement in the killing was to be held at least until Sunday, said Stockholm Chief Prosecutor K. G. Svensson.

Defense attorneys have described their client as a Swedish anti-communist about 35 years old with no criminal record, and have predicted his release. Under Swedish law, he could be held until Monday without further action by the prosecutor.

The funeral, a civic ceremony as requested by Palme long before his death, drew together foreign officials who were expected to hold talks.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz arranged a meeting with Soviet Premier Nicolai I. Ryskhkov, and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl sat next to East German President Erich Honecker at the ceremony itself.

The two German leaders, who had discounted speculation about a formal meeting in Stockholm, were seen in animated conversation before the ceremony began.

Illinois Launches Parade Of Primaries

By LES BLUMENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — The nation's primary season kicks off Tuesday with former Sen. Adlai Stevenson virtually certain to gain a rerun of his 1982 battle with Gov. James Thompson and Chicago's mayor getting a chance to grab control of the City Council.

Rep. Mel Price, D-Ill., may face the toughest re-election battle of his career as he seeks a 22nd term. Opponents in the Democratic primary cite his age, 81, and his health, factors in his removal last year as head of the House Armed Services Committee.

Democratic Sen. Alan Dixon, who has never lost an election in his 37-year political career, faces only token opposition. But the GOP primary race for the chance to challenge him is heating up between two relative unknowns, state Rep. Judy Koehler and Chicago steel executive George Ranney.

In Chicago, federal marshals have been called out to monitor the court-ordered special elections in seven wards, after concerns were raised about voter fraud.

The ward boundaries were redrawn in January under a federal court order to correct past racial gerrymandering. Three of the redistricted wards are predominantly black and four are mostly Hispanic.

The elections could give Mayor Harold Washington control of the 50-member City Council for the first time since his 1983 election as the city's first black mayor.

So far, his efforts to make appointments, implement programs and award contracts have been thwarted by a hostile 29-member majority bloc. Adding four council allies would divide the council down the middle, 25 to each side, with the mayor holding the deciding vote.

The special ward elections are non-partisan, with the top two vote-getters scheduled for a runoff April 29 in wards where no candidate gets 50 percent of the vote.

The primary season has launched what promises to be a bitter rematch of the 1982 governor's race between Democrat Stevenson and GOP incumbent Thompson, who is seeking an unprecedented fourth term in the November general election.

Thompson won their earlier contest by the narrowest margin in state history — 5,074 votes out of more than 3.6 million cast.

Stevenson, who served two terms in the Senate and is the son of a two-time Democratic presidential candidate, faces token opposition in the primary. Thompson is unchallenged on the Republican ballot.

The two have been trading jabs since Stevenson announced his candidacy last fall.

"Anybody can run a Chicken Little campaign for governor and pretend every day that the sky is falling and that the Earth is flat and that everything is wrong," Thompson said recently.

"He reminds me of a big, blubbering, harpooned whale," said Stevenson. "He'll be thrashing around from now until Election Day."

Thompson aides responded with "Save The Whale" signs for political rallies.

The challenges to Price in the primary come from Madison County Auditor Arthur Fields; the county recorder, Ronald P. Lucas; and Steve Margides, an administrative law judge with the state Revenue Department.

"He served us well, and we recognize that and appreciate that. ... But the issue is bigger than loyalty to the past," said Fields.

"There's a question of whether he's capable of carrying on," Margides said.

"They'll have to search real strong to find a better attendance record at committee or House sessions than I have," countered Price.

In other major contests, Chicago Alderman Danny Davis is battling Democratic Rep. Cardiss Collins in a repeat of their 1984 race. That year, the seven-term congresswoman and former president of the Congressional Black Caucus won 49 percent of the vote to Davis' 39 percent.

Democratic Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the House Ways and Means Committee chairman, faces Gerald Pechenuk, a Chicago political consultant who got 12 percent of the vote when he challenged Rostenkowski in two years ago.

Mrs. Koehler, competing for the right to challenge Dixon for his Senate seat this fall, was elected to the Illinois House in 1980 and made a name for herself as an enemy of legislative pay raises. Her television commercials say she has refused $48,000 in raises.

Ranney, a Inland Steel Co. executive, announced his candidacy at the last minute after several prominent Illinois Republicans — including former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and former Rep. Tom Corcoran — declined to run.

Peace Marchers End Nuke Rally

BARSTOW, Calif. (AP) — Members of the failed Great Peace March began folding up their tents and heading home Saturday, but about 400 hikers said they would continue under a different banner.

A new organization, Great Peace March Inc., was announced at the disintegrating campground 120 miles northeast of Los Angeles, where PRO-Peace founder David Mixner tearfully acknowledged Friday that his plan for an across-the-nation anti-nuclear weapons march had died.

PRO-Peace failed to raise $100,000 it said was needed by Friday to get the marchers across the Mojave Desert to Las Vegas. PRO-Peace said about 950 marchers were in the camp when it failed. California Highway Patrol officers said the number was closer to 500.

Those who decided to leave Saturday braved an icy 40 mph wind as they walked or hitchhiked along Interstate 15 to Barstow, 10 miles from the campsite, to catch a bus or train home.

"It's like these people are my family now, I don't want to leave them, because I don't want anything to happen to them," said Rose Germaine, 40, of Los Angeles, as she departed.

Tim Carpenter, an organizer for PRO-Peace who decided to work for Great Peace March Inc. for free, said the group would leave the campground site Sunday and walk to Barstow to re-organize and try to collect funds to continue the march.

"We're ready to hit the road and spread the word about peace and disarmament," said Daniel Barath, 24, of Akron, Ohio, who said he wanted to continue.

But equipment repossessions that began Thursday continued. Among the items reclaimed Saturday were trucks used for storing food and sorting mail. Trucks carrying portable toilets and kitchen equipment must be returned Monday.

But those who wanted to continue said funding could be found, somehow.

"What I hope to do is go to Vegas to contact churches and conduct services with youth groups to raise money," said Lori Shields, 24, of Lincoln, Neb.

In Claremont, church workers prepared a shipment of food and money for the remaining marchers, accordiing to organizer Sue Keith.

Soviets View Mir As Step Toward An Orbiting City

By KEN OLSEN
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — With the manning of its Mir orbiting station, the Soviet Union has embarked on a new stage of space exploration and taken a step toward realizing a century-old dream of building a city in space.

Soviet scientists say the Mir will become the largest man-made complex in orbit, with a permanently manned core linking large modules outfitted as research and production laboratories.

Mir is being hailed by Soviet news media as a "new generation" of space station that by its very name — the Russian word for peace — symbolizes Moscow's peaceful intentions in space.

"This paves the way for constructing a city in space, with numerous subsidiaries of leading terrestrial research centers and plants," Radio Moscow said Saturday in a report on the inaugural mission.

It said the dream of 19th-century space scientist Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, that human settlements could be opened in the cosmos, "is coming true."

Tsiolkovsky, who died in 1935, is considered the father of Soviet cosmonautics, although much of his work was conducted before the 1917 Bolshevik Revolution that established Soviet power.

Mir, launched Feb. 20, seems intended as a showcase of Soviet technological prowess, which Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev insists is the key to reviving the nation's sluggish economy and improving the lives of its citizens.

While the United States painfully reassesses its space future after the shuttle Challenger explosion, the Soviets are forging ahead with their manned space lab program.

The Mir station is a direct descendent of the Salyut-7 space lab, launched in 1982, and Salyut-6, launched in 1977.

Cosmonauts set space endurance records aboard both stations. The longest was 237 days by Leonid Kizim, Vladimir Solovev and Oleg Atkov in 1984.

Kizim and Solovev docked with Mir on Saturday and are busy preparing it to receive its first unmanned module, which Western experts predict will be ready to launch this spring.

"This is, indeed, a new generation of space station," said one Western diplomat, insisting on anonymity. "What they are intending to do is rather than keep all the equipment for the various experiments on board (one station), the experiments will actually be performed in the modules."

Despite heavy publicity, relatively little detail has been revealed about the Mir station itself and how it will operate. The launch last month was not announced until after Mir was safely in orbit.

Mir's exact size hasn't been disclosed publicly and Western news agency requests for photographs or an artist's conception have not been met.

Konstantin Feoktistov, space technology professor and former cosmonaut, was quoted as saying Mir is "significantly more automated" that the Salyut station and has more advanced computers.

Soviet media reports say the station has six docking ports, two for manned spaceships and four to accommodate separate modules, some of which could be larger than Mir itself.

The modules can be equipped on earth as research or production labs, then sent aloft on booster rockets to join Mir.

Soviet media have said Mir is larger than Salyut-7 and has more creature comforts for the crew. But beyond mention of separate sleeping compartments and armchairs and desks in the work area, few details were provided.

The official news agency Tass said the Mir complex would permit "large-scale production" in space for the first time.

Tass said the station will have special labs for research in medicine, biology, astrophysics, remote earth probing and various other scientific and technical experiments, but their exact nature has not been disclosed.

The Soviets have reported making purer chemical compounds, metal alloys, medicines, semiconductor materials and other items in the vacuum and zero-gravity conditions of space, similar to successes American scientists reported on space shuttle missions.

The Soviets have insisted Mir is intended to be purely a peaceful, scientific endeavor without military applications.

"It has nothing to do with that," said Yevgeny Velikhov, vice president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, when asked at a news conference if Mir could be used for research to counter the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative known as "Star Wars."

But Western experts note that many Soviet cosmonauts have military backgrounds, and that knowledge and experience gained in scientific space missions could easily have military applications.

Past Soviet space station missions have concentrated on the effects on man of long stays in space and on automatic and manual docking procedures, which the Soviets believe they perfected with Salyut-7.

American space engineer James Oberg, who has written books on the Soviet space program, said last week he believes Salyut-7 and Mir could be linked up. He said Mir is in an orbit only 4 miles below Salyut, which now is unmanned.

The Soviets have not mentioned such a linkup, but have confirmed that Salyut-7 remains operative and could accommodate a crew.

Moscow's growing confidence in its space program was underscored Thursday when the Soviets broadcast live television coverage of the launch of the Soyuz T-15 spacecraft that carried Kizim and Solovev aloft.

It was only the fourth time in nearly 60 manned Soviet space flights such a launch was televised live.

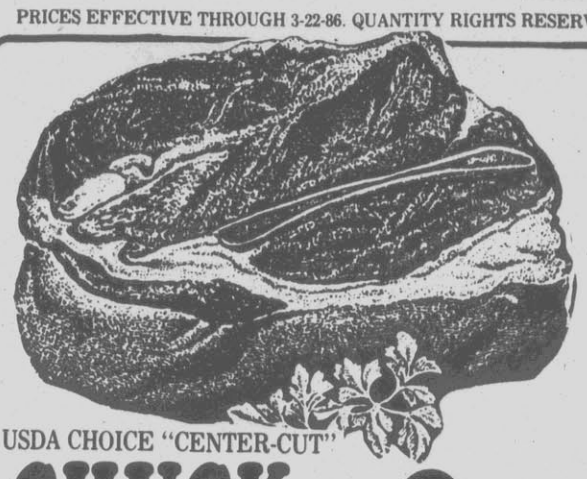

The Mir mission comes as Soviet space scientists are still basking in world praise for the Vega 1 and Vega 2 probes, which this month provided man's first close-up views of Halley's comet.

Though U.S. scientists are working on space station designs, efforts in recent years have concentrated on performing space tasks during comparatively short flights on reusable shuttle craft.

Imelda Marcos' Pet Projects In Limbo

By ALEX GAW
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Huge cultural, medical and educational centers that dot Manila's landscape were dreams come true for Imelda Marcos, but they could become financial headaches for the new Philippine government.

The Parthenon-like Manila Film Center, the spacious Folk Arts Theater and a luxurious guest house built entirely of coconut products were among the pet projects of Mrs. Marcos' "edifice complex," as her critics described it.

During her 20 years as first lady of the Philippines, she also sponsored four well-equipped, specialized medical centers, a convention center and a large university that attracted almost no students.

The new government of President Corazon Aquino, whose supporters forced Ferdinand E. Marcos to resign from the presidency Feb. 25 and flee the country, is apparently reassessing the status of the large projects, frequently criticized as money-losers.

The cultural palaces were built on land reclaimed from Manila Bay over a 12-year span starting in 1969, when Mrs. Marcos, later appointed governor of metropolitan Manila by her husband, set about transforming the city skyline.

Ronald Reagan, then governor of California, and his wife, Nancy, attended the dedication of the Cultural Center of the Philippines, one of Mrs. Marcos' first projects. The 1969 visit formed the basis for a long friendship between the Marcoses and Reagans.

Other buildings followed in quick succession: the Folk Arts Theater, where the 1974 Miss Universe beauty pageant was held, and the Philippine International Convention Center, site of a 1977 International Monetary Fund meeting.

The little-used University of Life offers mainly vocational classes for adults such as running a small store, basket-making and handicrafts, rather than a standard post-secondary education.

Its air-conditioned arena hosts professional basketball games and a German-language school rents classrooms, but the center's future is otherwise uncertain.

Other magnificent government-owned buildings include the 700-room Philippine Plaza Hotel and a trade center.

The "coconut palace" was built for Pope John Paul II when he visited in 1981, but the pontiff stayed instead at the residence of the Vatican's ambassador to the Philippines.

Observers said at the time that Filipino bishops did not want the pope to appear to be endorsing Marcos's rule.

Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Manila, stopped Mrs. Marcos from building a giant basilica to the Christ child on a hillside outside Manila, saying the project was too extravagant.

Critics condemned Mrs. Marcos' projects as lavish and not relevant to the economic development of a Third World nation.

But Mrs. Marcos shrugged off such attacks, saying she was erecting a "sanctuary for the Filipino soul." She ordered that cheap seats always be available for Filipinos, sometimes costing as little as 25 cents.

Isagani Cruz, a literary critic appointed by the new government to run the Cultural Center, said the government erred by building art centers and luxury theaters at a time when many Filipinos suffered from hunger, poor health care and inadequate education.

"I'll be the last to say that culture doesn't benefit the people," Cruz said in an interview.

"But the buildings certainly had no direct tangible, measurable effects on the people. Putting money into the (Cultural Center) and other structures at that time made the government seem like it was more interested in building edifices than feeding hungry mouths."

The new Aquino government is grappling with a depressed economy and huge foreign debt of about $30 billion.

Among other austerity measures, it laid off more than 100 employees of a government-sponsored film foundation, a move widely viewed as a rebuff to Mrs. Marcos' grandiose institutions.

During the building of the Film Center in 1981, the rush to complete it for an international film festival planned by Mrs. Marcos apparently led to lax safety standards. The building collapsed during construction, killing at least seven laborers.

Filipinos were convinced scores more were buried under the debris, but concrete was laid over the site, the center was completed and the festival went on as scheduled. Mrs. Marcos boasted of the speed with which it was built.

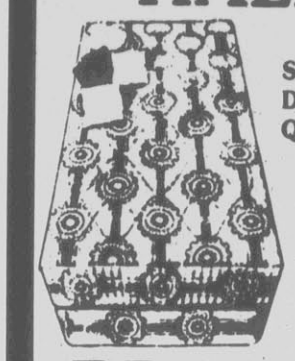

Cruz said he would look into ownership of the foundation that manages the Cultural Center and review the status of employees, especially those who "were appointed but don't seem qualified."

He replaces Lucrecia Kasilag, an accomplished composer whose management of the center won some respect even among Marcos' opponents for spearheading Philippine arts.

The center today houses seven resident companies, including the world-famous Bayanihan Dance Company, the national ballet troupe, and accomplished orchestra and opera ensembles.

Cruz said he is convinced of Kasilag's personal integrity, but said she had to resign because "a lot of value is put on symbols associated with the last regime."

New Rules A Bother To Students On Break

By EVA PARZIALE
Associated Press Writer

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Some disappointed college students are finding "not everything goes" during spring break this year, due to increased efforts to control the estimated 350,000 who have begun pouring into town for sun and surf.

"I wouldn't come back," said Steve Barckley, 22, a senior and student government president at Fairleigh Dickinson University in New Jersey. "It's not an appealing place. The Bahamas is better."

City officials have banned drinking on the beach, vowed to enforce the state's drinking age, recently raised to 21, and said they would try to curtail destruction from the students' six-week party.

Police arrested 830 people during the first 18 days of the break, compared to 889 arrests for the entire period last year. Police Capt. Ed White attributed about 20 percent of the arrests to the drinking laws.

The city also erected a 6-foot cement and wire-mesh wall to widen the sidewalk and reduce automobile-pedestrian accidents. Last year, three people were killed and 100 injured along the narrow 1½-mile strip of beach and bars.

"You can't drink on the beach. They put walls up. It's not as wild as last year," complained 24-year-old Lance Bronson, a veteran spring breaker and now an engineer from Corning, N.Y. "I think they're trying to drive everyone out."

Added Bronson's cousin, Jeff Bronson, 23: "There's too many rules this year. They're going to kill this town if the old fogies get their way."

Police Chief Ron Cochran said the "anything goes" attitude is over in Fort Lauderdale. "Not everything goes, and there are rules. But we think they can still enjoy Fort Lauderdale."

Civic leaders, police and business people insist they're not trying to drive away the students who flock to the city each year during spring break.

"It would be financial suicide," said Bob Gour, general manager of the Holiday Inn, which owns the popular Button bar.

Spending $120 million in 1985 and expected to spend at least that much this year, students have a warm place in the hearts of local businessmen. But some students also drink too much, then leave tons of litter and destroy hotel rooms, residents say.

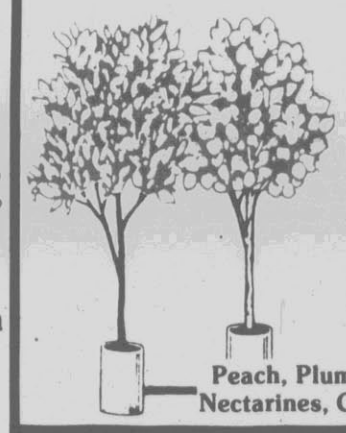

Not so 250 miles north at Florida's other prime spring break destination, Daytona Beach. Police there say they expect less rowdiness and fewer problems from the estimated 500,000 students flocking to their beaches.

"We've got an altogether different breed of kids," said Daytona Beach Police Capt. Noel Ouellette.

Duke Rips Monarchs, 89-61

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — Two years of frustration in the NCAA tournament ended Saturday when Johnny Dawkins led Duke into the NCAA East Regional semifinals with an 89-61 triumph over Old Dominion.

Dawkins scored 25 points on 10 of 12 from the field as the Blue Devils raised their record to 34-2. It's the first time Duke has been into the regional semifinals since a 1980 loss to Purdue in the Mideast Regional finals.

In the two seasons preceding this one, the Blue Devils were ousted by Washington in the first round of the West Regional and by Boston College in the second round of the Midwest Regional.

After escaping with a narrow victory over Mississippi Valley State in an opening-round game, Dawkins said Duke got its game back on track.

"We had one game where we didn't play as well as we thought we could play and we had this game where we played as good as we've played all year," said Dawkins, winner this week of the Naismith Award as the nation's top college basketball player.

"I think we're looking forward to playing that way in the rest of the tournament — but one game at a time," Dawkins added.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said his team's defense was outstanding, as evidenced by Old Dominion's 22 turnovers, 41 percent field goal shooting and 37-29 rebounding deficit.

"They're a good basketball team," Krzyzewski said. "We were an outstanding basketball team today. It wasn't so much what Old Dominion was doing but what we were doing that mattered today."

Old Dominion coach Tom Young said the victory made Duke's strength apparent.

"I think Duke came out, got it together and really came at us," Young said. "I said before the game that Duke is deserving of its No. 1 ranking and they certainly played like it today."

Duke's full-court man-to-man defense forced the Monarchs into 11 turnovers in the first half. That defense also allowed Duke to open a 17-9 lead in the first eight minutes after Dawkins scored on an alley-oop.

Six straight points by Old Dominion cut the lead to 17-15, but the Blue Devils responded with 10 unanswered points. Dawkins started the streak with a jumper from the right corner, Danny Ferry added a pair of layups and Tommy Amaker chipped in the last four points for a 27-15 edge with 8:54 left before halftime.

A 14-5 run which started with an Alarie jumper and ended on a Ferry jumper at the 3:29 mark gave Duke its biggest lead of the half at 43-26

Wolf, Hale Pace Heels By UA-B

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — With center Brad Daugherty playing only 25 minutes, the North Carolina Tar Heels turned to forward Joe Wolf and guard Steve Hale to step into the NCAA West Regional semifinals.

Wolf scored 10 points, had a game-high 16 rebounds and had key free throws and assists late in the game to boost the No. 8 Tar Heels to a 77-59 victory over Alabama-Birmingham in a second-round game Saturday.

Hale scored 16 points while holding the Blazers' leading scorer, guard Steve Mitchell, to just seven points, 10 below his average.

"By far that's the fewest minutes he has played in a second half of a close game," North Caolina coach Dean Smith said of Daugherty, benched with his fourth foul with 16:16 to play.

The 6-foot-11 Daugherty didn't return until 9:52 to play, but finished with 13 points and 13 rebounds. The Tar Heels went into their four-corner offense to keep him from getting his fifth foul.

"Steve Hale did an excellent job on Mitchell," Smith said. "The only two players we wanted playing Mitchell at all were Steve Hale and Kenny (Smith)."

Alabama-Birmingham coach Gene Bartow said North Carolina's defense overpowered his Blazers.

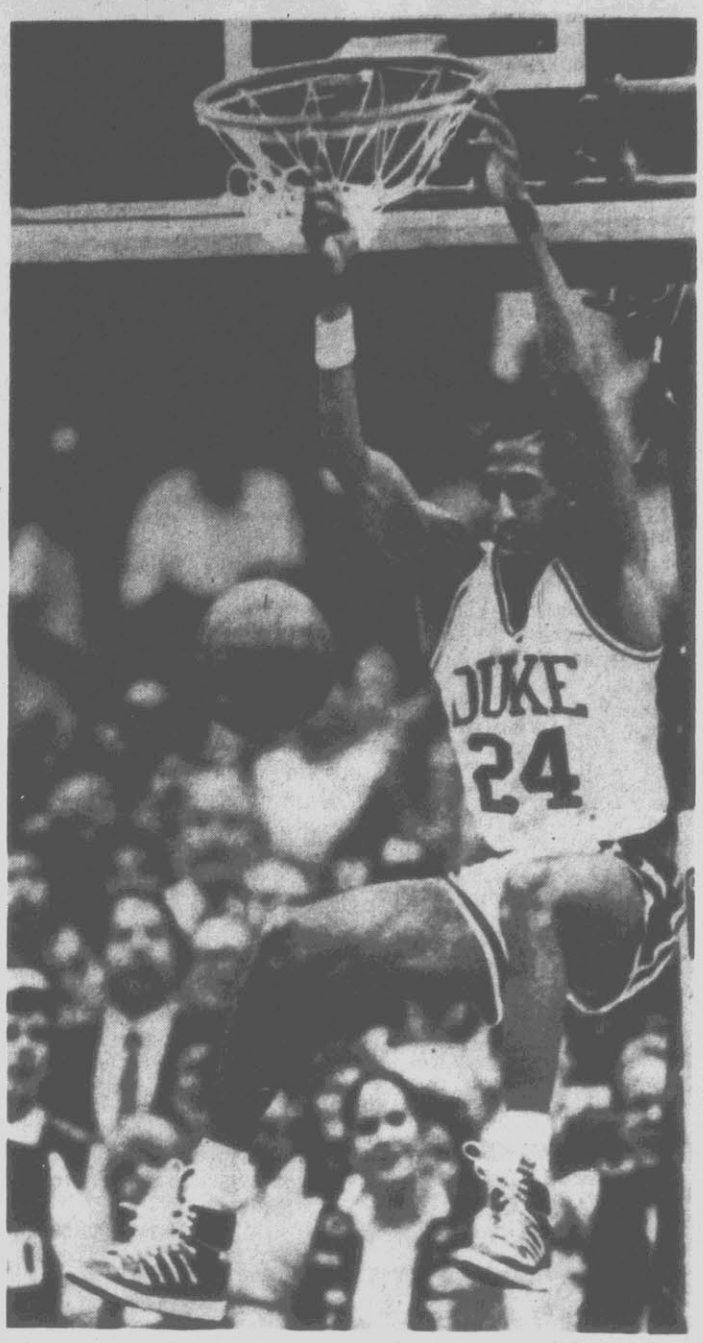

"We've been a spotty shooting team all year, but you have to give their defense credit for making us spotty," he said. The Tar Heels advanced to the West Regional semifinals in Houston on Thursday against Louisville, an 82-68 winner over Bradley in Saturday's first game.

Alabama-Birmingham, 25-11, was led by guard Tracy Foster and forward Anthony Gordon with 10 points each.

Alabama-Birmingham cut the lead to 60-51 on two free throws by Eddie Collins with 7:57 to play, but North Carolina took a 65-51 lead on a free throw by Martin and two inside baskets by Curtis Hunter, both on assists from Wolf.

Chargers Win Eastern Title

WILSON — Marvin Smith, named as the Most Valuable Player, scored 19 final period points to lead Ayden-Grifton to a 65-62 victory over Whiteville in the 2-A Eastern Basketball Regional Tournament Saturday night.

The victory propels the Chargers into the state championship game against North Rowan, a 72-66 victor over Albemarle in the west. The two will meet at 3:30 p.m. Saturday in the Dean Smith Center in Chapel Hill for the championship.

Smith, who finished with 34 points in the game, helped lead the Chargers back from a 16-8 deficit in the opening quarter of the game.

"We lost our poise a little against their press and made some turnovers," Charger Coach Bob Murphrey said of the first quarter. "They went to the boards real good and got some second shots inside." Murphrey said Whiteville held a 12-4 advantage in the rebounding department in the first period.

"But we kept plugging away and finally got rolling. We started beating their press in the second period and got both (Kim) Southern and (Patrick) Lennon in foul trouble. That was a real key for us in the first half."

The Chargers were able to rally, 20-8, and push into a 28-24 lead by intermission.

"Our transition game got us back in it. We picked up the pace on offense, and I think this team is better in a transition game than any I've ever had," Murphrey said. "We got to the basket on the break and picked up a number of three-point plays."

In the third period, Whiteville rallied and outhit the Chargers, 18-14, to pull back into a 42-42 tie.

"The key in the final period was we proved we could rebound with 'em," Murphrey said. "We outrebounded them 10-4."

Whiteville pushed into the lead at 54-53 on a three-point play by Lennon, but Eric Blount returned the lead to Ayden-Grifton.

"A key late, too, was when Southern shot and while the ball was still in the cylinder," Murphrey said, "Lennon dunked it and was called for basket interference."

After that, the Chargers, behind Smith's effort, pulled away and held off Whiteville's finally rally to win it.

Danny West, who was named along with Smith to the all-tournament team, finished with 10 points while Doug Anderson also added ten. Southern led Whiteville with 19 while Lennon had 15.

Ayden-Grifton is now 25-3 on the year while Whiteville falls to 23-3.

Passing Game Tops Attention

East Carolina University's football team will open spring practice this week, with second year Coach Art Baker taking a long, hard look at the Pirate passing game.

Baker's overall spring plans, however, are to keep things fairly simple and make it a learning experinece.

"In the fall, you are preparing to play an opponent each week," Baker said. "In the spring your sole goal is to improve the individual player and locate the players who are the winners and can improve your program.

"You really need to stick to the fundamentals when you are working in the spring. You don't want to get too carried away with a lot of fancy things."

Baker said one of the big goals of the spring is to drastically improve the passing game. "You have to carry good habits from the spring to the fall. That's the key to the spring. If you are smart any spring is a teaching spring. And with us there is an urgency in some areas of teaching. There is not an area of our football program that does not need to be improved."

The Pirates will have two quarterbacks with experience in the spring, junior Ron Jones and sophomore Berke Holtzclaw. Jones started the fall last year, but after he was injured, it was Holtzclaw who came on to guide the Pirates through the latter part of the season.

And while he was thrown into what many believed was an impossible position, Holtzclaw did show improvement as the year wore along.

Also returning is sophomore Todd Abrams and redshirt freshmen Brad Walsh and Travis Hunter.

"One of our most glaring weaknesses last year was our inability to throw and catch the football," Baker pointed out. "We must establish a quarterback who can be a leader and put us in the end zone. We also need a corps of receivers who are dependable and who know secondary coverages and who can consistantly get open and catch the ball. Holtzclaw shoed some promise at the end of the season, but he needs to work more with the option game."

Starting receivers Amos Adams (flanker) and Tony Smith (split end) both return along with sophomore William Carter, who can play either position. But the three caught only 26 passes for 364 yards and one touchdown between then last year.

Junior college transfers Jackie Armstrong and Andre Fields could provide immediate help in the receiving area. Two redshirts, Harry Howard and Teffin Benedict also join the group.

Mike Gainey returns at tight end, and he finished with 13 catches for 184 yards and a score. Cedric Ray and redshirt freshman David Carr add depth.

While the Pirates lost leading rusher Tony Baker, they have strength in senior Dwight Richardson, sophomore Reggie McKinney and junior Terry Paige, all with experience. Fullback Anthony Simpson also returns, along with sophomore Tim James.

Guards Greg Thomas and Paul Hoggard, center Ken Bourgeois and tackle Curtis Struyk all return in the offensive line.

"We played a number of people at tackle last year and you are going to see some new faces this year. We also need a quality back-up center," Baker said.

On the defensive side, the secondary and linebacker will be two areas of concern. Robert Washington, the leading tackler, must be replaced at the latter position.

The secondary lost Kevin Walker and Keith Ford, along with part-time starter Jeff Turner. That leaves only one experience corner in camp, Lewis Wilson. Joining him will be sophomores Roswell Streeter and Flint McCallum and transfer Robert Martin.

"This could be a situation where we lack experience but not talent," Baker said of the secondary. "We have both of our safties back in Ellis Dillahunt and Gary London, along with Lynn Porcher, who can play either position."

The only loss in the defensive line was tackle Aaron Carter. Back are David Plum, Medrick Rainbow, Walter Bryant and John Williamson. Joe Grinage, a 1984 starter, and William Jennette, both come off the injured list.

Mike Donohue and John O'Driscoll both join the line from the junior college ranks.

Junior Bubba Waters returns at one linebacker spot with Baker looking to Bruce Simpson to fill Washington's shoes. They are big shoes indeed, as Washington made 130 tackles last fall.

Ken Portis and Mike Leggett join the cast from junior colleges.

There is both good and bad news in the kicking ranks.

The good news is that Tim Wolter returns to a second year at the punter. The sophomore averaged 38.5 yards a kick last year, with 13 punts inside the opponent's 20. He also did not have a kick blocked.

The bad news is that Jeff Heath, who holds nearly every ECU placekicking record, is gone. And Baker was unable to find a replacement in recruiting. Transfer Craig Losito is the only true kicker in camp this spring.

Baker is taking over the duties of coaching the quarterbacks this year and is hopeful of seeing a great deal of improvement in this area.

The first test of it will be in the spring game, set for 3:30 p.m. April 19. Again, the game will be the feature piece of the annual Purple-Gold Pirate Pigskin Pigout Party, April 18-19.

The second test comes Sept. 6 in Raleigh when the Pirates open against N.C. State.

Pirates Top Connecticut

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina rode the long ball Saturday afternoon and claimed a 6-3 baseball victory over the University of Connecticut for its 11th straight win.

Winfred Johnson, Mike Sullivan and Mark Cockrell each slapped home runs to account for five of the six Pirate runs. Johnson doubled off the fence in right center — just missing a second homer — and later scored the sixth talley.

For Johnson, it was his 55th career homer as he continues his quest to become first NCAA player in history to hit 60 career homers and record 30 career pitching victories. Johnson currently has 26 wins on the mound.

"The long ball proved well for us today," Coach Gary Overton said. "The three home runs were everything as far as the outcome was concerned."

And while he didn't hit any homers, Overton praised the bat work of catcher Jim Riley — who hits in the number nine position. Riley went three for four on the day, including a double. "He battled hard and came back to get two of those with two strikes on him."

Jim Peterson went the distance on the mound for the Pirates, picking up his fourth win of the season. He five up five hits, but all three of the runs off him were earned — the first he's given up this year.

"Peterson has been fighting a head cold, and I thought he pitched quite well all things considered," Overton said. "While he didn't have his best stuff, he did seem to get a little stronger after some shaky middle innings."

Peterson gave up the first two runs in the fifth when he allowed a double and two walks that loaded the bases. He also allowed two hits — including a run-scoring double in the sixth.

But he didn't allow a baserunner the final three innings as he shut the door on the Huskies who fall to 0-7 on the season.

The Pirates missed a chance to score in the third when Riley doubled with one out and Mont Carter walked. Then, with two away, Carter was picked off first to end the threat.

But the Pirates struck for three in the fourth on back-to-back homers by Johnson and Sullivan.

Chris Bradberry walked to open the fourth and Johnson followed with his blast to left-center. Sullivan came up and his one out in just about the same spot and the Pirates had a 3-0 lead.

The Huskies hung in there, however, and fought back for two in the fifth. With two down, Mick Buckmir doubled down the left field line and Peterson issued walks to Delroy Parkinson and H.A. Butterworth, loading the bases. Jon Gery followed with a single to left, scoring both Buckmir and Parkinson.

The tying run crossed in the sixth. Again, the Huskies struck after two were out. Al Franceschini singled and scored when Lee Luiso doubled to center.

But Peterson closed them off there, now allowing another baserunner the rest of the way.

The Pirates pushed back on top in their half of the second. Sullivan led off the inning with a single and was sacrificed up. Then, after a second out, Cockrell blasted the ball out in left to run the score to 5-3.

East Carolina added an insurance run in the seventh. After two outs, Johnson doubled to center — just missing a second homer. Sullivan lofted a fly ball into short left that the fielder dropped, and Johnson scored on the play for the final 6-3 margin.

In addition to Riley, those with more than one hit included Johnson and Sullivan with two each.

No one had more than one for the Huskies.

East Carolina returns to action today at 1 p.m. hosting the University of Virginia. The Pirates then host Pittsburgh-Bradford for a 1 p.m. doubleheader on Tuesday and a 3 p.m. single game on Thursday. They resume Colonial Athletic Association action on Saturday, entertaining Richmond in a 1 p.m. twinbill.

Tech Eliminates Defending Champ

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins found something to be unhappy about in the victory that sent his team home to continue its quest for college basketball's national championship.

Georgia Tech beat defending national champion Villanova 66-61 Saturday in the second round of the Southeast Regional tournament.

After building an 18-point lead six minutes into the second half, Georgia Tech watched it melt to a slender two points with just over three minutes left in the game.

"The thing that disappointed me was that we blew a great lead," Cremins said. "We had an opportunity to put Villanova away and didn't..

"But I never expected an easy game — never."

"We broke down on leadership," Cremins said. "Mark Price got tired, and I took him out for a couple of minutes. We had some bad breaks and got fouled a couple of times, and they kept coming back."

Price said it wasn't fatigue that opened the door for Villanova.

"We just got passive, and they got aggressive," he said.

Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino said the fact that two of his key players got in foul trouble in the opening minutes of the game was "obviously very significant. Mark Plansky and Harold Jensen picked up three personals in the first half."

"We have done a great job this year, and I don't think we should hold our heads any way but up," he said.

The sixth-ranked Yellow Jackets built its 18-point second-half lead on the scoring of Price and Duane Ferrell.

Price and Bruce Dalrymple then had to defend Georgia Tech's dwindling lead at the foul line.

Georgia Tech, 27-6 and seeded second in the regional, led Villanova 52-34 with 14 minutes left in the game.

Villanova, led by Doug West and Kenny Wilson, then went on a 21-5 scoring spree over the next 11 minutes, cutting Georgia Tech's lead to 57-55 with 3:24 to go.

Ferrell converted two free throws at the 2:46 mark and John Salley canned a field goal and Villanova was forced to foul in an effort to get the ball back.

Dalrymple scored three points from the line and Price two, and Villanova's bid to repeat as champion was over.

Georgia Tech now moves to the friendly confines of the Omni in Atlanta, a sometimes homecourt for the Yellow Jackets, to meet Louisiana State in the regional semifinals on Thursday.

Louisiana State downed Memphis State 83-81 on a shot by Anthony Wilson at the buzzer in the opening game of second-round action Saturday at Baton Rouge.

Price finished with 20 points for Georgia Tech, while Ferrell had 14

Doug West had 20 points for Villanova, which saw a seven-game streak of NCAA victories come to an end with a 23-14 record in what was expected to be a rebuilding year.

Price scored Georgia Tech's first 10 points and had 15 at halftime going 4-for-6 from the field and 7-for-8 from the free-throw line, as the Yellow Jackets opened a 40-30 lead at intermission.

The score was tied 18-18 at the 8:50 mark of the first half and Villanova took its only lead of the game, 22-21, on a jumper by West with 7:07 left in the first half.

In the 19-8 run that closed out the first half, Salley had six points and Ferrell four.

Villanova hampered its own comeback effort by going cold from the field. After shooting a respectable, though unspectacular, 43 percent for the first 20 minutes, Villanova hit only 36 percent in the second half — making 12 of 33 attempts.

Georgia Tech hit 12 of its 25 first-half shots, but only eight of 23 in the second half. However, the Yellow Jackets outrebounded Villanova 42-27 over the course of the game, with Salley getting 11 and Tom Hammonds 10.

Geddes, Johnson Share LPGA Lead

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — Jane Geddes and Chris Johnson, playing in a chilly drizzle that finally halted play, shared the lead at 1-under-par Saturday in the rain-plagued GNA-Glendale Federal Classic.

The co-leaders, among the last groups to begin the third round, were able to get in just 12 holes before rain halted play late in the LPGA tournament at Oakmont Country Club.

Geddes began the third round at 1-under-par for the tournament, and Johnson started at 1-over.

The event initially was thrown off schedule Thursday when the first round was stopped because of rain. About half the field didn't finish the second round until noon, so the third round already was behind schedule.

Tournament officials said that, weather permitting, the players would play the final round Sunday, as scheduled, after completing the third round in the morning.

The 26-year-old Geddes and the 27-year-old Johnson, two of the more promising young players on the women's tour, were the only golfers under par when Saturday's competition was stopped.

Geddes, a fourth-year pro who has not won an LPGA event but still collected $108,971 on the tour last year, finished her second round earlier in the day, shooting a 1-under-par 71 to going with a first-round 72.

Johnson, who joined the tour in 1980 and won the two LPGA events in Arizona last year, shot a second-round 70 on Friday after a first-round 75.

Juli Inkster and Laurie Rinker were both at 1-over-par, two strokes back of the leaders, when the third round was halted. Amy Alcott was another shot back.

"It was brutal," Geddes said of the day's conditions, which began with chilly, gusting winds in the morning, then constant rain through much of the afternoon.

"I was just trying to make golf shots ... and pars."

Johnson was philosophical about the conditions, saying, "This is just playing golf in the rain."

Defending champion Jan Stephenson, who began the third round at 4-over-par 148, lost another four shots to par with a 40 on the front nine before play was suspended.

Shelley Hamlin, co-leader after each of the first two rounds, was 3-over-par through 12 holes of the third round, slipping four shots back of the leaders.

The weather and the revised schedule of play in the $250,000 tournament took a tol on some of the top contenders for the $37,500 first prize.

Kristi Arrington, a tour rookie who shared the first-round lead with Hamlin, had a second-round 80 to drop 10 strokes off the pace.

Western Ready For Opportunity

CHARLOTTE (AP) — It's been 15 years since Western Kentucky got its only shot at the Kentucky Wildcats, and Billy Gordon says he is ready for the second opportunity.

"If you get that chance, you have to make the most of it," Gordon, Western's leading scorer at 14 points per game, said Saturday.

"I think at the beginning of the game we'll be sky high, but once it begins, we'll start thinking about what we have to do to win," Gordon said.

The clash between the two teams from the Bluegrass State will be the finale of Sunday's second round action in the NCAA Southeast Regional basketball tournament, coming about 30 minutes after the conclusion of the opener between No. 19 Illinois and Alabama set to tip off at 12:11 p.m. EST.

The two winners will collide Thursday night in Atlanta in the regional semifinals.

Kentucky never has met Western during the regular season.

The Hilltoppers won the only meeting by a whopping 107-83 margin in the 1971 NCAA regional finals at Athens, Ga. It was Adolph Rupp's next-to-last Kentucky team before being forced into retirement with an all-time record 875 coaching victories.

Gordon can draw a little encouragement from his family in this first meeting with the third-ranked Wildats.

Kentucky and Louisville had not met in years when the Cardinals knocked off the Wildcats in overtime 80-68 in the Mideast Regional finals at Knoxville, Tenn., in 1983. One of the stars of that victory was Lancaster Gordon, Billy's brother.

Kentucky, the top seed in this region, carries a 30-3 record and a 12-game winning streak into the contest. The Wildcats won their 36th Southeastern Conference title this year.

Western, the runner-up in the Sun Belt Conference, is 23-7 and seeded eighth in the region.

"It's good for the fans and good for basketball," Western Coach Clem Haskins said of the matchup.

"I didn't seen the '71 games because I was playing pro ball, but I received a play-by-play about two hours later from my brother," Haskins said.

Coach Eddie Sutton of Kentucky tried to downplay any rivalry.

"Kentucky has such great basketball tradition, but so does Western Kentucky. We know Western Kentucky has a good basketball team, but so are the other 31 teams left in the field."

Sutton said the Cats are concerned about Western's size advantage "because we have had trouble all year with big teams."

Kentucky's three losses came against teams with bigger inside players — Kansas, Auburn and North Carolina State.

The Wildcats are led by All-American Kenny Walker, averaging just under 20 points per game.

Kentucky advanced with a 75-55 victory over Davidson Friday night and Western downed Nebraska 67-59, with Cornhusker Coach Moe Iba announcing his resignation immediately after the game.

Illinois, 22-9, finished fourth in the Big Ten Conference race and made its advance with a 75-51 triumph over Fairfield.

Alabama, which tied for second in the SEC, beat Xavier of Ohio 97-80 to lift its record to 23-8.

"I just think we're going to have to have an outstanding game to win it," Illinois Coach Lou Henson said.

"They'll be tough to beat," Alabama guard Mark Gottfried said.

Both teams have strong inside games, with Illinois a little larger.

Ken Norman leads Illinois in scoring at 16 per game and Buck Johnson averaged 21 for Alabama.

Wilson's Final Shot Nips Memphis State For LSU

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Anthony Wilson said his last-second basket that lifted Louisiana State over 12th-ranked Memphis State Saturday was no carefully considered matter.

"I didn't know how much time there was left, and I just pitched it up and it went in," the junior guard said after Louisiana State's 83-81 victory in the second round of the NCAA Southeast Regional basketball tournament.

Wilson had picked up the loose ball after Don Redden missed a short jump shot. The basket climaxed a come-from-behind effort that took most of the second half.

Memphis State was one of three teams from last year's Final Four to lose Saturday. Thirteenth-ranked Georgetown fell to No. 18 Michigan State 80-68 in the Midwest Regional and defending national champion Villanova was eliminated by sixth-ranked Georgia Tech 66-61.

Down 12 points six minutes into the second half, Louisiana State converted 10 free throws in five minutes to ease back into the game.

Consecutive field goals by John Williams tied the game at 77-77 and an outlet pass from Williams to Redden for an easy basket put Louisiana State ahead 79-77.

It was Louisiana State's first lead since a 25-23 advantage halfway through the first half. The lead changed hands 10 times in the first half before Memphis State accumulated a 47-41 halftime margin.

"One word describes it," Louisiana State Coach Dale Brown said. "Guts. Outright guts in the game."

It was the first time since Louisiana State's 1981 Final Four appearance that the Tigers have advanced beyond the opening round of a postseason tournament.

"At the beginning of the season our goal was to win the national championship, and it's our goal now," Redden said. "We have to continue playing hard, playing smart, and we've got as good a chance as anyone."

Louisiana State, which defeated Purdue 94-87 in double overtime in the first round Thursday, advances to next week's regional finals in Atlanta against Georgia Tech.

Louisiana State, playing the first two rounds on its home court, improved to 24-11, while Memphis State ended its season at 28-6.

Louisiana State was led by Redden with 23 points, followed by Williams with 19, Derrick Taylor with 18 and Ricky Blanton with 11.

Baskerville Holmes paced Memphis State with 20 points, followed by William Bedford with 15, Andre Turner and Dwight Boyd with 12 apiece, and Vincent Askew with 10.

It was the first meeting between the two teams' since Brown's first game at Louisiana State in 1972. Louisiana State won 94-81, but Memphis State went on to make the Final Four that year.

Memphis State Coach Dana Kirk said foul trouble plagued his squad in the second half.

Blocked Shot Keys Louisville

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Both coaches agreed that the play which ignited seventh-ranked Louisville to its 82-68 victory over No. 14 Bradley was Milt Wagner's block of a jumper by Jim Les when the score was tied midway through the second half.

Louisville Coach Denny Crum, whose Cardinals had just blown a seven-point lead at that point of their NCAA West Regional basketball tournament meeting with Bradley Saturday, decided to employ a box-and-one defense, putting Wagner on Les.

After blocking the shot, Wagner sank two free throws to make it 57-55. And Louisville was off and running.

Wagner, who finished with 16 points and forward Billy Thompson, who added 14, then scored 12 of Louisville's next 20 points as the Cardinals took a commanding 77-62 lead with 1:23 remaining.

Second-seeded Louisville, in winning its 13th straight game, advanced to the West Regional semifinal Thursday in Houston against No. 8 North Carolina, which beat Alabama-Birmingham 77-59 Saturday.

"The box-and-one was a big factor in the game," Bradley Coach Dick Versace said. "The big play was Wagner's great block on Les."

Crum, who said Louisville's depth was the single most important factor in the game, said he decided to change his defense from a man-to-man "just to change things up. You go to something like a box-and-one to stop a key player, and obviously Les was their key player."

Wagner's block "really gave us some momentum," Crum added.

Louisville's ability to move the ball inside in the closing minutes allowed the Cardinals to go to the free-throw line, where they sank 11 of 15 shots after the game was tied for the final time at 59-59.

"The team was surprised by the box-and-one," Les said.

That was apparent as the Braves fell victim to cold shooting at the same time Louisville made its run.

Les' 20-foot jumper with three minutes remaining in the game, was the only Braves field goal over a six-minute span snapped by another jumper by Les with only 36 seconds to go.

Seventh-seeded Bradley, meeting Louisville for the first time in a decade, could only sporadically employ the run-and-shoot offense which had carried the Braves to the second-best record in Division I in the regular season and Bradley finished the season at 32-3.

Nevertheless, Bradley was down only 35-31 at halftime after each team traded six-point leads in the first 20 minutes.

Louisville's freshman center, Pervis Ellison, scored 10 of his 16 points in the second half and guard Jeff Hall added 11 as the Metro Conference champions boosted their record to 28-7.

Bradley guard Hersey Hawkins had a game-high 22 points, center Mike Williams had 17 and Les finished with 15.

DePaul Upsets Oklahoma

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO (AP) — DePaul held off an Oklahoma rally for a 74-69 victory in the second round of the NCAA East Regional basketball tournament, and Blue Demon coach Joey Meyer says it's the sign of a team that's regained some lost pride.

"Our kids are playing confident and believe they're going to win the game,' Meyer said. "I don't know where this confidence comes from."

Dallas Comegys sank two inside jumpers in the final three minutes to stop a Sooner rally and send the Blue Demons into the East Regional semifinals against top-seeded Duke, which took an 89-61 victory over Old Dominion behind 25 points from Johnny Dawkins.

"Today, Dallas really wanted the basketball and we were able to do a good job and get it to him," Meyer said.

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs reflected his team's disappointment by not bringing any of his players to the post-game news conference.

"We're not very happy right now, and I hope you will understand why I don't feel like dissecting the game," Tubbs said. "We lost it. DePaul played an outstanding game and deserved to win."

The Sooners got within one twice, at 50-49 on Tim McCalister's inside move with 14:04 left, and again at 64-63 on Anthony Bowie's layup with 3:58 remaining. Oklahoma never got a shot at the lead, however, and DePaul pulled away to raise its record to 18-12.

Comegys sank the first of two short jumpers with 2:33 left for a 66-63 Blue Demon lead. After McCalister scored again, Comegys followed with a 10-foot shot inside the lane with 2:05 remaining to stretch DePaul's lead to 68-65.

Rod Strickland converted Terence Greene's steal into a layup and a 70-65 edge with 1:51 left.

Oklahoma fouled Greene, who missed the front end of a one-and-one at 1:11, but Marty Embry converted his bonus with 58 seconds left for a 72-65 DePaul lead.

The Sooners outscored DePaul 4-1 in the next 20 seconds on baskets by McCalister and David Johnson. Kevin Holmes missed a one-and-one chance, but Oklahoma couldn't make up ground. Johnson missed two free throws with 25 seconds left, while Tony Jackson sank one foul shot with 21 seconds left to cap the scoring.

DePaul hit its first six shots of the second half en route to a 58-49 lead. Six unanswered points by the Sooners cut the gap to 58-55 before a basket by Jackson and two free throws by Terence Greene pushed the lead back to 62-55 with 6:01 left.

DePaul had led by as much as 12 points late in the first half.

Embry scored 19 points to lead DePaul. Strickland had 15, while Holmes and Lemone Lampley had 10 each.

Darryl Kennedy led Oklahoma with 21 points. McCalister, who sat out Thursday's first-round action because of an NCAA suspension, added 18, while Bowie and Johnson had 10 each. The Sooners finish 26-9.

PGA Players Hold Closed-Door Meet

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — About 40 PGA Tour players, including controversial Mac O'Grady, held a 90-minute, closed-door meeting Saturday.

"We met to discuss current problems on the tour, and possible solutions.

"We'd prefer not to say anything further at this time," said Roger Maltbie, a player-director on the PGA Tour Policy Board.

O'Grady, facing a series of possibly severe disciplinary actions as a result of a published comments attributed to him concerning Tour Commissioner Deane Beman, declined comment.

O'Grady's attorney, Steve Novak, waited in the rain outside the locker room at the Bay Hill Club while the meeting was in progress.

"I doubt we'll have any immediate comment," Novak said.

The attorney did say, however, that he is scheduled for a meeting with the PGA Tour Commissioner in New Orleans next week.

The meeting took place during a rain-delay in the second round of the Hertz Bay Hill Classic.

The locker room was cleared of all but Tour players and a uniformed guard turned away visitors.

Another player meeting, probably with Beman in attendance, is scheduled Wednesday in New Orleans.

with 3:29 left in the period. Duke led 43-31 at intermission.

Duke continued the runaway in the second half as Dawkins scored six straight points, capping the spurt with a reverse dunk with 8:07 left to give the Blue Devils took a 71-48 edge. Jay Bilas scored three more points and Mark Alarie added a layup at 6:17 for a 76-49 lead.

The lead eventually reached 89-59 on two Kevin Strickland jumpers in the final 1:18.

Alarie added 13 points, while Bilas, Amaker and Ferry scored 10 apiece.

Kenny Gattison scored 17 points to lead Old Dominion, 23-8. Keith Thomas added 13 and Ronnie Wade 10.

North Carolina used two streaks of eight unanswered points to push to a 20-4 lead seven minutes into the game.

Michigan State Topples Hoyas

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Scott Skiles scored, passed and even coached his Michigan State teammates to an 80-68 victory over Georgetown Saturday in the second round of the NCAA Midwest Regional at the University of Dayton.

Skiles, a senior guard, finished with 24 points, 18 in the second half as the 18th-ranked Spartans kept the No. 13 Hoyas from a chance at a third straight trip to the NCAA championship game.

The 6-foot-1 senior handed off for five assists and made 10 of 11 free throws which helped turn the tide toward the Spartans in the final 15 minutes of the game.

Michigan State Coach Jud Heathcote said, "There was no question that our director is Scott Skiles. He's been accused of being our coach. I let him take the credit, also the blame."

Georgetown Coach John Thompson also praised Skiles as well as his teammates.

"The mark of a great player is not how well he plays but how he affects the other people," Thompson said of Skiles. "He has a contagious effect. ... (But) they have other people on that team who can score."

The Spartans placed four players in double figures, debunking the theory that they are a one-man team. But there was no doubt who was leading them.

"Scott kept his head in the game. He kept encouraging his teammates. He made some great passes and he just generally ran the show," Heathcote said.

Thompson managed to make light of his team's exit from the tournament after the success during the career of three-time All-American center Patrick Ewing.

"The past four years I've been working overtime," Thompson said. "This year it looks like I get an early vacation, but it isn't necessarily welcomed."

The Spartans, 23-7, advance to Kansas City next week to face second-ranked Kansas, 33-3, which defeated Temple 65-43 in Saturday's other second-round game in the Midwest Regional.

Skiles, who scored 31 points and hit the deciding free throws with two seconds left in Michigan State's 72-70 first-round victory over Washington Thursday, was limited to just six points in the first half but the Spartans still led 32-30 at halftime.

Skiles, who made just one his first seven field-goal attempts, then scored eight of Michigan State's first 10 points in the second half as the Spartans took a 42-38 lead.

Georgetown, which played in the national championship the last two years and three of the last four, pulled to within 42-40 on a driving layup by Perry McDonald. But at the 14:28 mark, the Hoyas' Reggie Williams, who finished with 15 points, was called for his fourth foul.

Michigan State then went on a seven-point run with Skiles scoring one basket and assisting on another on a behind-the-back pass in traffic to forward Larry Polec to take a 49-40 lead. The Spartans maintained a lead of at least seven points the rest of the way.

Polec had 16 points, Vernon Carr 13 and Darryl Johnson 12 for the Spartans.

David Wingate led Georgetown, 24-8, with 17 points while Williams added 15.

The Hoyas were one of three teams from last year's Final Four to lose on Saturday.

Defending national champion Villanova, which beat Georgetown 66-64 in the championship game last year, was beaten by sixth-ranked Georgia Tech 66-61 in the Southeast Regional, while No. 12 Memphis State fell to Louisiana State 83-81 on a buzzer shot by Anthony Wilson in the same regional.

Lady Cougars Nip Pack To Gain State Finals

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

WILSON — Washington High School fell behind early and simply ran out of time as SouthWest Edgecombe held off the Pam Pack, 47-46, to win the 3-A Girls Regional Basketball Tournament at Wilson Beddingfield High School Saturday night.

The Pam Pack, which trailed 15-4 after the first period and 32-22 at the half, closed to within one at 45-44 with 38 seconds remaining. But SouthWest Edgecombe's Phyllis Gorham, who tallied 14 points for the Cougars, sank a pair of free throws with 28 seconds left to make it 47-44.

Tonya Holley scored for the Pam Pack with seven seconds left to make the final score 47-46.

Trailing by one point, Washington got the ball back with two seconds remaining but couldn't get off a shot.

Washington's Sarah Gray, who was named to the all-tournament team, led all scorers with 21 points. Gloria Sherrod added 11 for the Pam Pack, which finished the season with a 22-2 record.

Pam Gorham, the tournament's MVP, led the Cougars with 17 points, while Terrie Condery added 10. SouthWest which improved to 26-0, plays West Caldwell, a 63-44 winner over Concord, in the state finals at Elon College next weekend.

Washington Coach Donald Gibbs said the key to the game was SouthWest's early lead.

"The difference in the ballgame was the first quarter," he said. "We stood around and watched them play the entire period."

The Pam Pack was held scoreless in the game's first 5:36, while SouthWest Edgecombe tallied eight points.

Washington finally scored when Gray sank a foul shot with 2:24 remaining in the quarter to make it 8-1.

After Gray sank a bucket for Washington, Karyetta Walker scored and Phyllis Gorham, who was also named to the all-tournament team, nailed a 10-foot jumper to give the Cougars a 12-3 lead with 38 seconds left in the quarter.

Gray, who scored all of Washington's first quarter points, hit, but Phyllis Gorham nailed a 12-footer to make it 14-5 at the end of the quarter.

Condery scored for SouthWest to start the second period, but Gray retaliated with two buckets for Washington to make it 16-9 with 6:32 remaining until intermission.

The Cougars then scored eight unanswered points, and Condery's bucket with 4:58 left in the half gave SouthWest a 24-9 lead. During the stretch, Pam Gorham scored six points, including a three-point play.

The Pam Pack bounced back with a rally of their own, outscoring the Cougars, 11-2, in a 2:21 span. Tonya Holley's short jumper pulled Washington to with six at 26-20 with 1:36 to go in the quarter.

But Phyllis Gorham and Pam Goprham combined for six points in the remaining time to give SouthWest a 32-22 lead at halftime.

The Pam Pack came out of the locker room strong and outscored the Cougars, 8-4, in the first five minutes of the secon half to pull close the gap to 36-30.

After Pam Gorham scored for SouthWest the Pam Pack rattled in five unanswered points to close out the period with the score 38-35.

SouthWest Edgecombe's Regina Mabry scored to make it 40-35 with 7:38 to go in the game.

Gray scored for the Pam Pack from inside, while Pam Gorham sank one of two free throws for the Cougars to make it 41-37 with 6:34 left.

Gray scored again, but Phyllis Gorham canned a 10-footer with 6:09 left to keep the margin at four, 43-39.

Washington's Yolanda Olden hit one of two free throws, but Pam Gorhan scored to make it 45-40 with 2:28 remaining.

After SouthWest went into a stall, the Pam Pack stole the ball, and Gray scored with 2:09 to go to make it 45-42.

With 49 seconds left on the clock, Pam Gorham missed the front end of a one-and-one, and the Pam Pack pushed the ball back down the court, where DeAnn Davis scored on a short jumper to make it 45-44 with 37 seconds left.

The Pam Pack then fouled Phyllis Gorham, who promptly swished both.

Despite the loss, Gibbs said he was not disappointed in his team's play.

"We had a good year. You couldn't ask for a better group to coach," he said. "We might just be the second best team in North Carolina."

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Second-ranked Kansas broke open a tight game with a 25-4 spurt in the second half to register a 65-43 victory over Temple Saturday in the second round of the NCAA Midwest Regional tournament at the University of Dayton.

The Jayhawks, 33-3, advance to Kansas City to meet Michigan State in a Midwest Regional semifinal game next week. Earlier Saturday, No. 18 Michigan State upset 13th-ranked Georgetown 80-68.

Temple, which finished at 25-6, was led by Nate Blackwell with 14 points.

The Owls took an early 11-4 lead on the Midwest Regional's top-seeded team, but trailed 26-21 at halftime.

After Temple pulled within 28-24 early in the second half, Kansas ran off 25 of the next 29 points, most of them coming off its fast break, to take command at 53-28.

Second Rainout Prompts Unusual PGA Decision

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) - A second consecutive rainout in the Hertz Bay Hill Classic Saturday prompted an unusual — perhaps unprecedented — decision by the PGA Tour and a scheduled 36-hole windup.

For the first time in at least 20 years, the field was cut to the low 70 scorers and ties on the basis of only 18 holes of play.

That reduced field, 79 players with scores of 75 or better, now are scheduled to complete the tournament with a double round of 36 holes Sunday.

That will make it a three-round, 54-hole event, the third on the tour this year. The sponsors — who could, by contract, cut the purse to three-quarters — agreed to pay the full $500,000, including $90,000 to the winner.

Normally, the field is trimmed only after 36 holes or two rounds of play. Records were not available as to whether any previous 18-hole cut had been made.

"Not to my knowledge," said Wade Cagle, the veteran tournament supervisor for the PGA Tour and the man in charge of this weather-plagued event.

After play was rained out both Friday and Saturday, tournament officials ruled that that the 114-man field would be reduced in order to play two rounds Sunday.

It would not be possible to play two complete rounds with the full field, officials said.

The only other option, officials said, was to schedule second-round play with a full field for Sunday and extend the tournament until Monday.

"The sponsor did not wish to continue play on Monday," Cagle said in a prepared statement.

The statement said the unusual decision concerning the 18-hole cut "after consultation with the Commissioner" Deane Beman, who is not at the tournament site.

"So far as we know, it's unprecedented," said Jim Bell, the tournament coordinator.

"After consultation with the local people, the tour, and NBC (which is scheduled to provide national coverage of the final round), we all pretty much agreed this was the best we could do under the circumstances."

Saturday's play was washed out by violent thunderstorms that struck the Bay Hill course at 10:35 a.m. EDT, and forced the players on the course to seek shelter.

Less than half the field had started play when the round was held up and, eventually, canceled.

Bob Tway, the first-round leader with a 66, still was awaiting his starting time.

Tway, a tour sophomore who scored his first victory in a rain-shortened tournament in San Diego earlier this season, now takes a two-shot lead into Sunday's double-round finish.

Tied for second at 68 were Tom Kite, Ray Floyd, Dan Pohl and Dan Forsman. The group at 69 included Roger Maltbie, Ben Crenshaw, Scott Simpson and Corey Pavin.

Venturini Wins Dixie 300 Race

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Bill Venturini, driving a 1986 Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, drove past David Sosebee Saturday with 14 laps to go and went on to win the Dixie 300 ARCA stock car race at Atlanta International Raceway.

The Chicago driver fell behind briefly after the final caution period when both Sosebee and defending Permatex Super Car series champion Lee Raymond pitted for fresh tires and Venturini chose to stay on the 1.522-mile oval.

The green flag fell for the final time on the 178th of 198 laps, and both Sosebee and Raymond zoomed past Venturini two laps later. But, as their new tires quickly wore down, Venturini re-established his dominance, moving past Raymond's new Monte Carlo on lap 183, then taking Sosebee's new Chevrolet on lap 185.

Venturini, 33, whose pit crew is made up entirely of women, led by his wife, Cathy, picked up the first superspeedway victory of his career and his sixth ARCA triumph.

He beat Sosebee, the pole-winner, to the finish line by one second. Raymond was third, the last competitor on the lead lap.

Bob Schacht was fourth and Scott Stovall fifth, both a lap down.

Venturini, who earned $10,450 for the victory, averaged 122.724 mph in the race slowed by nine caution flags for a total of 50 laps.

There were several crashes but no injuries were reported.

The race featured 17 lead changes among nine drivers. Grant Adcox, who was leading on lap 116 when his engine blew, led three times for 70 laps. Venturini, who took his first lead on lap 166, led twice for a total of 28 laps.

The top 10 finishers in Saturday's ARCA Dixie 300 stock car race, with type of car, laps completed, winner's average speed and money won:
1. Bill Venturini, Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, 198, 122.724, $10,450.
2. David Sosebee, Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, 198.
3. Lee Raymond, Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, 198.

Conley Rallies To Top Kinston

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley rallied for three runs in the sixth inning and pulled out a 9-8 baseball victory over Kinston Saturday to remain unbeaten on the season.

The Vikings struck for an early lead in the ball game, but were unable to hold it as Kinston fought back to take an 8-6 lead going into the bottom of the sixth.

Conley pushed over four runs in the bottom of the first. Jody Vines and Shane Adams both singled and Fred Bryant's double plated Vines. Randy Mills doubled to drive in both baserunners, and a third double, by Butch Mills scored Randy Mills.

Kinston struck back with two in the second, then added three in the third on a homer by Whit Whitley. Conley got one in the bottom of the third for a 5-5 tie. Both teams scored singled runs in the fifth to run it to 6-6, and Kinston used a two-run homer by Felton Mason to take an 8-6 lead going into the bottom of the sixth.

But in the Conley half of the frame, the Vikings rallied to pull it out. Bryant opened with a single and Lee Hardee doubled to drive in courtesy runner Martin Anderson. Brian Joyner reached on a fielder's choice that got the runner going to third. Butch Mills then cracked a two-run homer to give the Vikes the lead for good.

Vines, Adams and Butch Mills each had two hits for Conley. Mason had three, including a double to lead Kinston, scoring four runs. Whitley added two hits, one a double, and Neal Outlaw had two singles.

Conley is now 4-0 on the year and travels to Ayden-Grifton on Tuesday.

SNOW HILL — West Craven scored two runs each in the fourth and fifth and gained a 5-3 baseball victory over hosting Greene Central Saturday.

The Rams added two more in the third for a 3-0 lead.

But West Craven came back with two in the fourth to close it to 3-2.

Then, in the fifth, they pushed ahead with two more. Neal Russell opened the frame with a single and scored on Lee Woolard's triple. Eddie Riggs hit a sacrifice fly to bring in Woolard with the winning run.

The Eagles added an insurance run in the seventh.

Tall Defense

Reeves Spenheur (52) of Wake Forest-Rolesville puts up a tall defense against the drive of Ayden-Grifton's Eric Blount (5) during Friday night's Eastern 2-A Regional game at Wilson Fike. The Chargers won the contest, 73-72, to advance to the championship finals. (Reflector Photo by Karen Frank)

Wake Forest-Rolesville's William Massenburg scored 37 points, but it wasn't enough as Ayden-Grifton, behind a 30-point performance by Marvin Smith, held off the Cougars, 73-72, in the first round of the 2-A Boys Regional Basketball Tournament at Wilson Fike High School Friday night.

Danny West added 16 points for the Chargers, who improved to 24-3.

Joey Wiggins poured in 15 points for Wake, which finished the season at 25-2.

Massenburg, who is normally the point guard for Wake, played a low post on offense in the second half to score consistently from underneath.

"When they moved Massenburg down to the low post, none of us did a good job on him," said Ayden-Grifton Coach Bob Murphrey. "We put four different people on him until we went to a triangle and two. We just ran out of things to do."

"I don't think we've seen an individual player as good as he is," said Murphrey. "I was surprised they posted him up, but it did bring them back."

The Chargers, who opened up a 10-point lead in the second quarter led from then on, but Wake kept fighting back in the second half.

"We were holding on for dear life," Murphrey said. "We played the best first half of the year. We rebounded well, shot well and forced turnovers."

Murphrey said the key to Ayden-Grifton's vicotry was strong work under the boards and key shots by Smith and West.

"I knew we had a real advantage on the offensive boards," he said. "Smith sank some big shots, and West was awfully hot. He's a great shooter."

"This was our biggest win in 2-A," Murphrey said.

Wake broke out on top in the first quarter as Massenburg broke a 2-2 tie with a bucket and two free throws to give the Cougars an early 6-2 lead.

The Chargers rattled in six unanswered points, and Doug Anderson's hoop with 5:16 left in the quarter gave Ayden-Grifton a 8-6 advantage.

Massenburg and Smith traded baskets, but Wiggins and Antonio Harris, who chipped in 10 points for Wake, scored to put the Cougars ahead 12-10 with 2:59 left in the quarter.

The teams matched baskets until West nailed a 12-foot jumper with 1:07 left to close out the first period scoring and knot the game at 16-16.

The Chargers, who scored 24 second quarter points, opened the period with the hot hand.

Smith and West hit back-to-back shots to put Ayden-Grifton ahead 20-16 with 7:10 to go in the half.

With 4:01 remaining in the quarter, Smith dunked on a breakaway as Ayden-Grifton pulled ahead by six, 28-22.

After Stuart Hall scored for Wake, Eric Blount, who came off the bench to chip in 10 points, and Ronnell Peterson sank buckets to give the Chargers a 32-24 lead with 2:15 left until intermission.

The Chargers outscored Wake, 8-6, in the remaining two minutes to take a 40-30 lead into the locker room.

When the teams returned, Massenburg, who scored 27 second half points, took control of Wake's offense.

The Cougars scored the first six points of the third quarter, and Massenburg's bucket with 5:57 remaining in the period made the score 40-36.

The Chargers finally got on the board when West nailed a 15-foot jumper with 5:34 left in the third period to make it 42-36.

Wiggins and West traded hoops, but Massenburg scored Wake's next nine points, and his basket with 2:11 left in the third quarter pulled the Cougars to within three at 50-47.

The Chargers outscored Wake, 7-2, in the remaining two minutes to give Ayden-Grifton a 57-49 lead with eight minutes left to play.

But Jones and Massenburg scored to make it 65-59 with 4:18 to go.

Smith scored on a layup and was fouled, but he was unable to complete the three-point play when he missed the free throw, making the score 67-59 with 4:07 remaining.

After Massenburg and Smith traded buckets to make it 69-61 with 2:58 left to play, Wiggins sank one of two foul shots. Harris scored, and Massenburg sank two free throws to make it 69-66 with 1:26 left on the clock.

Smith scored with 1:08 remaining to make it 71-66, but Massenburg retaliated with two more free throws to make it 71-68 with one minute left to play.

Blount scored with 49 seconds to go to give the Chargers a 73-68 lead.

Moe Iba Quits As Husker Coach

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Brian Carr says he and other Nebraska players were shocked and saddened by the sudden resignation of head basketball coach Moe Iba, although they knew he was working under heavy pressure and criticism.

"We didn't know anything about it," Carr said. "We just go out and play. ... It's his decision and he's proud of us and that's what hurts. We tried so hard to win tonight and for him to resign is hard to take."

Iba resigned Friday night after the Cornhuskers' 67-59 loss to Western Kentucky in the first round of the NCAA Southeast Regional tournament.

"I have resigned the coaching position at the University of Nebraska in order to pursue another head coaching job," Iba said. "I resigned right after the game."

Iba said he had planned to quit the job as soon as Nebraska lost in the tournament — "even if we had made it to the Final Four" — and he refused to comment further.

With Friday night's loss, the Cornhuskers ended the season with a 19-9 record after finishing in a second-place tie with Iowa State in the Big Eight Conference race.

Iba's record in six years at Nebraska was 107-70 and his career totals are 144-135. He previously spent four years at Memphis State.

Despite his winning record, Iba had been criticized for coaching a game that seemed dull in comparison with Nebraska football. The team sometimes played to a partially filled arena.

"With all the flack he took, he didn't deserve it," said senior guard Harvey Marshall. "Nebraska fans are spoiled from the football team."

Nebraska athletic officials could not be reached immediately for comment. But Carr said they apparently decided it was time for Iba to go.

"He's the kind of guy that's going to do things his way," Carr said. "You've got to give him credit for sticking with what he believes. He took a lot of ridicule from the fans."

Still, Marshall said he thinks Nebraska's basketball program is "headed in the right direction."

"With the right coach, they could really do something," he said.

Western Kentucky coach Clem Haskins said he was sorry Iba was resigning.

"We really have to take a serious look at our game," he said. "I think there's too much pressure put on a man to win at all costs. I am very sorry to hear about Coach Iba, a truly fine coach and gentleman."

Iba is the son of Hank Iba, formerly of Oklahoma State, who also coached several U.S. Olympic teams.

Lee McRae Breaks Indoor 55-Meter World Record

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Pittsburgh's Lee McRae, new owner of the world indoor best in the 55-meter dash, doesn't have much time to think once the gun sounds.

Arkansas' Roddie Haley, new holder of the world indoor best in the 500-meter dash, wishes he was so lucky.

"The 500 isn't my favorite — it's too long," Haley said Friday night after clocking a 1:00.69 in the NCAA Track and Field Championships.

"I start thinking about what I'm doing," said Haley, a 400-meter specialist who was running the 500 for only the third time. "In the 400, I just run. I run better when I don't think; I just go out and run."

Haley's time bettered the previous best set Feb. 7 by Clarence Daniel of Gainesville, Fla., and capped an outstanding day of track highlighted by the two world bests and several NCAA records.

A short time before Haley's race, the sophomore McRae stunned the crowd with his 5.99 in the 55-meter dash. That broke the record of 6.02 set in 1983 by Carl Lewis.

Another sprinter, Georgia's Gwendolyn Torrence, bettered the NCAA record twice — once in the preliminaries, again in the finals of the 55-meter dash. She finished in 6.63 the first time, 6.62 in the finals to beat defending indoor champion Michelle Finn of Florida State.

Other NCAA records were set by Regina Cavanaugh of Rice, who won her third straight indoor shot put title with a throw of 57 feet, 11¾ inches; Freddie Williams of Abilene Christian in the 1,000-meter run, 2:21.74; the Texas women's 1,600-meter relay, 3:36.59; the Villanova men's 1,600-meter relay, 3:07.84; and Leisa Davis Knowles of Oklahoma State in the 500-meter dash, 1:10.44.

Arkansas, the favorite to win a second straight men's indoor title, enters today's final round in good position. Along with Haley, the Razorbacks have two runners in the 3,000-meter finals, one in the 1,000-meter run, as well as finalists in the 3,200 relay, shot put and high jump.

After Friday's six finals, Boston University led the men's division with 14 points, while Fresno State, Washington State, Kansas State, Kansas and Pittsburgh had 10 each.

In the women's standings, Arizona had 18 points, Florida State 16, and Georgia, Rice, Abilene Christian and Texas-El Paso 10.

"I feel real good right now," said Arkansas Coach John McDonnell. "We're in real good position. All our heavy hitters are in the finals."

He felt especially good about Haley, who got off to a slow start this season due to dental problems.

"He wasn't in good shape early, but last weekend he ran two legs of a mile relay in 44.4 and 44.5 an hour and a half apart," said McDonnell. "I knew he was ready then."

"Those splits gave me confidence," said Haley. "I think I can run a minute even. I think I can win it tomorrow."

McRae exploded from the starting blocks and passed a talented field that included Olympian Sam Graddy, who had won his trial heat in an meet-record time of 6.03.

"I knew if I got out quick and maintained it all the way through, something good would come out of it," said McRae, who also set a meet record by finishing his heat in 6.07.

"Earlier today, I was joking around with some of the guys and I told them I was going to break the record," he said. "I thought I could go under 6.0."

Graddy, a silver medalist in the 100-meter dash at the Olympics, was disgusted at his second-place finish.

"That's what I think of it," he said, throwing his spikes against a wall.

Rice's Cavanaugh has been bothered by an elbow injury, but enjoyed the best series of her life in the shot finals, twice going over 57 feet.

One of the best performances was turned in in one of the most obscure events, the 35-pound weight throw. Tore Gustafsson threw the weight 74 feet, 3½ inches, the best in the nation this year.

McNeill In 6th Place

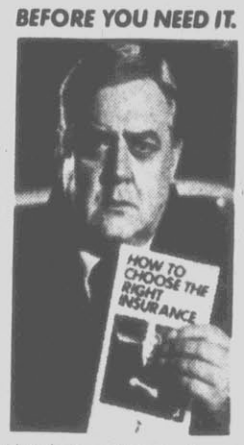

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — East Carolina's Lee Vernon McNeill took sixth place in the 55-meter dash at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships Friday in Indianapolis.

McNeill finished the event in a time of 6.21 seconds. His finish makes him an All-American in the event, matching his outdoor accomplishments of last spring.

McNeill is a sophomore from St. Pauls.

Lee McRae, also from St. Pauls, and a student at the University of Pittsburgh, won the event in the world record time of 5.99.

Rallying to the Challenge!

Pirate Club '86 Fund Drive

ECU EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATION

PITT/GREENVILLE • MARCH 17 — APRIL 19

The ECU Study Center offers a place for all student-athletes to come and study. For those times when assistance is needed Pam Penland, Assistant Athletic Director for Academic Counseling, and her staff are available to help ensure that Pirate student-athletes strive to get the job done in the classroom.

From the Desk of Wayne Dempsey

Volunteer Chairman

Rallying to the challenge — the 1986 theme for ECU athletics has for years been a motivating force behind the University. Recent academic acclaim as published in the U.S. News and World Report, November 25th issue, proclaims in part the efforts of many to have ECU recognized nationally as a comprehensive and diverse academic university. Success to date has not been without deterrents. To be recognized as a university, funding dilemmas and the establishment of a medical school represent but a few of the challenges met in recent years.

As we aspire for recognition nationally in athletics, it too will not come without great effort and sacrifice. Great progress has been made in bringing us to the threshold, highlighted as well by a rallying spirit. With fine athletic staffs, devoted and quality athletes, and an excellent base of fan support, we have the ability. Essential to continued quality growth is an expanded funds base. Scholarships, expanded budgets and better facilities represent short-term needs.

The objectives of the Pirate Club fund drive are to:

A. Raise funds in support of athletic scholarships at ECU.

B. To lighten the financial burden associated with operating a quality athletic program.

C. Assist in securing dollars to be used toward the realization of future goals for the athletic program.

A current goal of one million dollars has been established and is critical. I call upon each of you to "Rally to the Challenge."

Proud To Say East Carolina,

Wayne Dempsey, Chairman
Pitt/Greenville Pirate Club Fund Drive

Indiana, Irish Are Eliminated

By The Associated Press

The state of Indiana, one of the nation's basketball hotbeds, is undergoing a severe cold spell.

It was bad enough on Thursday when Ball State lost to Memphis State and Purdue bowed to LSU in the opening round of the NCAA Tournament. But the real shockers came on Friday when 10th-ranked Notre Dame and No. 16 Indiana were eliminated by upstarts making their first appearance in the tourney.

And what debuts they were.

In the Midwest sub-regional at Minneapolis, the University of Arkansas at Little Rock stunned Notre Dame 90-83. And in the East at Syracuse, N.Y., Cleveland State shocked Indiana 83-79.

"Your only limitation is your imagination," UALR Coach Mike Newell said after the Trojans made sure the Irish will not have a happy St. Patrick's Day.

"It was a great win for the off-Broadway guys against the prime-time guys," said Cleveland State's Kevin Mackey, whose Vikings made Bob Knight an opening-round loser for the first time in his 15 years as Indiana's coach.

Seven members of the Associated Press Top Twenty survived. Third-ranked Kentucky crushed Davidson 75-55; No. 4 St. John's held off Montana State 83-74; No. 5 Michigan shaded Akron 70-64; No. 9 Syracuse swamped Brown 101-52; No. 11 Nevada-Las Vegas trounced Northeast Louisiana 74-51; No. 17 Navy trimmed Tulsa 87-68; and No. 19 Illinois beat Fairfield 75-51. Elsewhere, it was Auburn 73, Arizona 63; Maryland 69, Pepperdine 64; North Carolina State 66, Iowa 64; Iowa State 81, Miami of Ohio 79 in overtime; Alabama 97, Xavier of Ohio 80; Western Kentucky 67, Nebraska 59; St. Joseph's 60, Richmond 59.

Today's second-round games find top-ranked Duke vs. Old Dominion and DePaul vs No. 15 Oklahoma in the East at Greensboro, N.C.; No. 11 Memphis State vs. LSU and No. 6 Georgia Tech vs. Villanova in the Southeast at Baton Rouge, La.; No. 13 Georgetown vs. No. 18 Michigan State and second-ranked Kansas vs. Temple in the Midwest at Dayton, Ohio, and No. 14 Bradley vs. No. 7 Louisville and No. 8 North Carolina vs. Alabama-Birmingham in the West at Ogden, Utah.

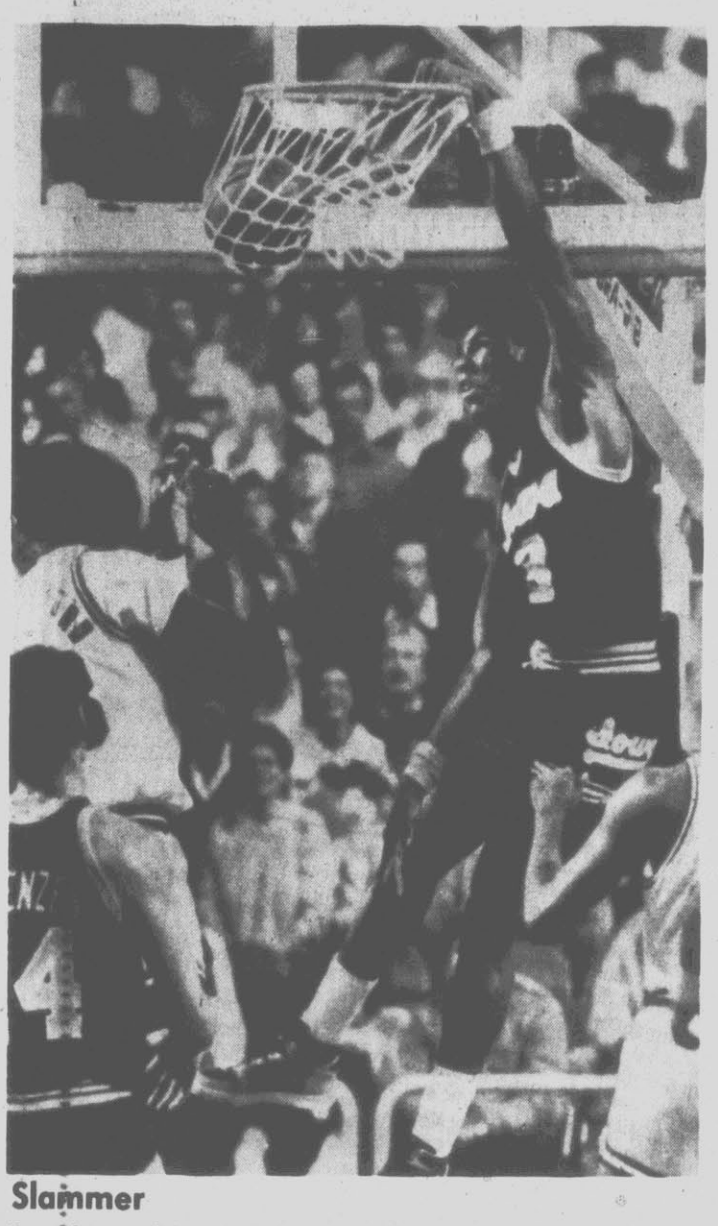

Sunday's schedule pairs Syracuse-Navy and Cleveland State-St. Joseph's in the East at Syracuse; Illinois-Alabama and Kentucky-Western Kentucky in the Southeast at Charlotte, N.C.; Arkansas-Little Rock vs. North Carolina State and Michigan-Iowa State in the Midwest at Minneapolis and St. John's-Auburn and UNLV-Maryland in the West at Long Beach, Calif.

Three players combined for all but 12 of Arkansas-Little Rock's points against Notre Dame. Pete Myers scored 29, Michael Clarke 27 and Myron Jackson 22 and Jackson's layup with 3:35 to play gave the Trojans from the Trans America Conference for good 76-75.

David Rivers scored 25 points for Notre Dame. After Rivers' jump shot brought the Irish within 79-77, Clarke scored on a drive and UALR made nine of 12 free throws down the stretch.

The victory didn't come as a surprise to Newell.

State Parries Iowa's Rally

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Chris Washburn scored 18 points and ignited a 10-0 spurt midway through the second half that gave North Carolina State the lead for good Friday night as the Wolfpack held on for a 66-64 NCAA Midwest Regional first-round victory over Iowa.

N.C. State, 19-12, moves on to Sunday's 1:15 p.m. second-round game against the winner of the Arkansas-Little Rock-Notre Dame game, which was played later Friday.

N.C. State began its decisive rally after two long-range jumpers by Andre Banks gave Iowa, 20-12, a 57-51 lead with 9:45 to play.

First, Nate McMillan hit a 15-foot jumper. Then, Washburn scored his first basket of the second half, rebounding his own miss.

After Teviin Binns tied the game at 57-57 with a 10-footer, Ernie Myers gave the Wolfpack their first lead since early in the contest with a short jumper.

Washburn capped the surge with a rebound slam, giving N.C. State a 61-57 advantage with 5:55 left.

Washburn and Bennie Bolton each missed the front ends of one-and-one free throws, allowing the Hawkeyes to pull within 63-62. But Iowa's Jeff Moe also botched a one-and-one with 1:17 remaining and Washburn followed with two big free throws to give the Wolfpack a 65-62 lead.

Roy Marble, whose layup closed the gap to 65-64, had an opportunity to put Iowa ahead with 12 seconds to go but missed a one-and-one. McMillan, who scored 15 points, closed out the scoring with one free throw but the Wolfpack didn't clinch the game until Moe's desperation 35-footer at the buzzer fell short.

Banks led Iowa with 16 points while Marble and Gerry Wright added 15 points apiece.

N.C. State looked unstoppable in the game's first two minutes as the 6-foot-11 Washburn got the ball inside twice and easily hooked in four of his 12 first-half points to give the Wolfpack a 6-0 lead.

Iowa, however, rattled N.C. State with a full-court press and reeled off 18 of the game's next 22 points to take an 18-10 lead. Wright sparked the surge with six points, including a powerful reverse dunk and an alley-oop jam.

When Wright — who scored 13 first-half points — hit two free throws, the Hawkeyes' lead grew to 33-20 with 7:16 left in the half.

But with McMillan scoring six points, the Wolfpack tallied 16 of the half's final 22 points to close the gap to 39-36 at intermission.

Area Games Washed Out

Rain washed out all of Friday's outdoor sports activity in the area.

Terps Hold Off Pepperdine Five

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — All-America forward Len Bias scored 26 points and Maryland made seven free throws in the final 37 seconds Friday as the Terrapins held off Pepperdine 69-64 in a first-round NCAA West Regional Tournament.

The Terrapins advance to meet 11th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas, which is seeded fourth in the West Regional, in a second-round game Sunday. UNLV overwhelmed Northeast Louisiana 74-51 earlier Friday at the Long Beach Arena.

A three-point play by Bias with 6:25 remaining gave Maryland, seeded fifth in the region, a seemingly safe 55-43 lead, but Pepperdine, the West Coast Athletic Conference champion, battled back.

The Waves, seeded 12th in the West, outscored the Terps 10-3 over the next 3:03 to make it 58-55 with 3:22 left.

Pepperdine got as close as two points twice in the final minute, but two free throws by Bias with 37 seconds remaining, two more by Keith Gatlin with 18 seconds left, another by Derrick Lewis with 11 seconds to go and two more by Bias with three seconds to play kept the Terps on top.

The Waves, who had a nine-game winning streak snapped and finished the season with a 25-5 record, never had possession with a chance to tie or go ahead down the stretch. They had an opportunity to get as close as one point but Grant Gondrezick missed the second free throw after making the first, leaving the score at 62-60 with 39 seconds to go.

Lewis finished with 13 points and 11 rebounds for the Terps, 19-13. Reserve forward Tom Jones and Gatlin added 12 and 10 points, respectively, for Maryland, one of six Atlantic Coast Conference teams selected to play in the tournament.

Gondrezick and Eric White led Pepperdine with 17 points each. Dwayne Polee, the Waves' leading scorer and two-time WCAC Player of the Year, added 12, 10 in the first half. Anthony Frederick had only four points but pulled down a game-high 12 rebounds.

The teams were tied 31-31 at halftime. A three-point play by Bias with 5:01 remaining gave Maryland a 27-19 lead but, paced by Polee, the Waves battled back to score 12 of the next 16 points.

The Terps went ahead to stay by scoring the first six points of the second half, four of them by Jones. The Waves closed the margin to 44-41 before Maryland ran off eight straight points to make it 52-41.

Massenburg scored again for Wake to make it 73-70 with 19 seconds remaining.

In an effort to get the ball back, the Cougars fouled Smith with 10 seconds left to play.

Smith missed the front end of the one-and-one, and Massenburg pushed the ball down the court for a layup with three seconds left to make it 73-72.

Following a Wake timeout, Ayden-Grifton inbounded the ball safely, and the final seconds ticked off the clock.

Ayden-Grifton faced the winner of the Whiteville-Wallace Rose Hill game Saturday night for the right to advance to the state finals.

Play was to continue through Sunday.

Navy Crushes Tulsa, 87-68...

"When you imagine, big things are going to happen," the UALR coach said. "We felt like we matched up very well with them."

"They didn't force too many shots," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps. "Even when we pressed them at the end and went up one they came back and scored. They just smelled it and went after it. They shot 79 percent in the second half. That's what I'm talking about."

The Vikings of Cleveland State, unheralded despite a 27-3 regular-season record, used a pressing defense and Clinton Ransey's 27 points to send the Hoosiers back home to Indiana.

Midwest

Michigan 70, Akron 64

Michigan center Roy Tarpley, who didn't start for disciplinary reasons, scored 13 points, including a three-point play with 8:03 remaining, to open up a close game.

Akron led 32-30 at halftime and trailed only 49-48 with 8:52 to play before the 6-11 Tarpley, Big Ten Player of the Year last season, took over and ignited an 11-4 burst with a basket and free throw. Tarpley also had a rebound slam-dunk and a blocked shot that led to a basket during the spree.

Iowa State 81, Miami, O. 79

Jeff Hornacek, whose 15-foot jump shot with 27 seconds left in regulation play forced the extra session, hit a 22-footer as the overtime buzzer sounded to give Iowa State the victory.

With four seconds left in overtime, Miami's Ron Hunter tied the game 79-79 with a layup on a controversial goaltending call against Iowa State's Jeff Grayer. There were two seconds on the clock when Hornacek took the inbounds pass, dribbled twice and launched his game-winning jumper.

The next round pits Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr against the school he used to coach. Michigan Coach Bill Frieder was his assistant.

"I'm happy we're going to get a chance to play them," Orr said. "It looked for a while like we weren't going to get that chance, and when I was watching their game it looked they weren't going to get a chance to play us either."

North Carolina St. 66, Iowa 64

Chris Washburn scored 18 points and started a 10-0 spurt midway through the second half that gave N.C State the lead for good. The Wolfpack began its decisive rally after two long-range jumpers by Andre Banks gave Iowa a 57-51 lead with 9:45 to play.

East

Syracuse 101, Brown 52

Dwayne Washington and Rafael Addison scored 21 and 17 points respectively as Syracuse entertained a home-court crowd by toying with Brown in one of the most lopsided games in the history of the 47-year-old tournament. The Orangemen took the suspense out of the game midway through the first half, outscoring the Ivy League champions 27-2 over a 7:10 span to lead 51-23 at intermission. Brown center Jim Turner was the only Bruin in double figures with 13.

"We're just too big and too strong for them," said Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim. "They played hard, but we just had too many horses, and that's what is going to happen."

Navy 87, Tulsa 68

Navy got 30 points from 6-11 center David Robinson and 24 from Vernon Butler in posting its 14th straight triumph and snapping Tulsa's six-game winning streak. Robinson and Butler combined for 31 points as the Midshipmen took a 41-38 halftime lead. In the second half, the Midshipmen scored the first seven points to start a 19-6 run that put them on top 60-44 with 11:14 remaining.

St. Joseph's 60, Richmond 59

St. Joe's needed three free throws by Maurice Martin in the final 14 seconds to edge Richmond. Martin scored 21 points, including 9-of-10 from the foul line, but St. Joseph's didn't pull ahead for the first time in the second half until Wayne Williams' two free throws with three minutes left gave the Hawks a 52-51 lead. Richmond got 25 points from Johnny Newman.

Southeast

Kentucky 75, Davidson 55

Kenny Walker scored 20 points to help Kentucky overcame a sluggish start. The Wildcats' victory set up only the second meeting ever between Kentucky and Western Kentucky in Sunday's second round. Western owns a 107-83 victory over the Wildcats in their only previous meeting — in the 1971 NCAA tournament.

Kentucky's 12th victory in a row was slow to develop as Davidson built a 16-11 lead in the first seven minutes and still led 20-17 with 10 minutes left in the opening half. Roger Harden then began a 12-0 Kentucky run with a 20-footer and Walker ended the spurt with a 6-footer with 4:40 left in the half that put the Southeastern Conference champions ahead 29-20.

Illinois 75, Fairfield 51

Anthony Welch scored 22 points and Illinois used intense defensive pressure to break open the game and spoil Fairfield's first NCAA appearance. Welch scored the first 10 points for the Illini and had 16 in the first half en route to a 34-22 lead. After Fairfield cut the lead to 42-36 with 12:28 left, Illinois again applied defensive pressure and used a 15-4 run to take command.

Alabama 97, Xavier, O. 80

Jim Farmer scored 24 points and Buck Johnson added 22 as Alabama never trailed. Farmer had 15 points in the first half and Johnson scored 18 in the second half.

Xavier made a run at Alabama four minutes into the second half, cutting a 10-deficit lead to 49-45. But Johnson, Farmer and Derrick McKey sparked a surge that carried Alabama to a 76-61 lead with 7:30 remaining.

W. Kentucky 67, Nebraska 59

Kannard Johnson and Clarence Martin scored six points each in a 16-4 burst early in the second half that gave the Hilltoppers an 18-point lead. Western Kentucky survived a Nebraska comeback and will now meet Kentucky.

After the game, Nebraska Coach Moe Iba resigned "to pursue another head coaching job." He did not elaborate.

West

St. John's 83, Montana St. 74

Walter Berry shrugged off a sprained ankle to score 31 points and grab 11 rebounds for St. John's. Montana State, the only school in the 64-team field with a losing record (14-16), led by as many as five points in the first half and scored nine in a row midway through the second to cut a 14-point deficit to five.

But each time Montana State got close Berry took over, using his spinning inside moves to get loose for easy close-in shots. He did it despite limping on a left ankle he turned while scoring on a drive 7½ minutes into the game.

UNLV 74, Northeast Louisiana 51

Anthony Jones scored 18 points and Armon Gilliam added 16 and grabbed 13 rebounds as UNLV overcame a sluggish start. The Rebels trailed 15-12 after 12 minutes but outscored Northeast Louisiana 19-6, including an 11-0 run, the rest of the first half to take a 31-21 lead.

Maryland 69, Pepperdine 64

UNLV's next opponent will be Maryland, which got 26 points from All-American Len Bias. The Terrapins made seven free throws in the final 37 seconds to hold off Pepperdine.

A three-point play by Bias with 6:25 remaining gave Maryland a 55-43 lead but Pepperdine pulled within 58-55 with 3:22 left. Pepperdine got as close as two points but four free throws by Bias, two by Keith Gatlin and one by Derrick Lewis kept the Terps on top and ended Pepperdine's nine-game winning streak.

Auburn 73, Arizona 63

Chuck Person overcame a slow start and scored 20 points for Auburn. Neither team led by more than six points until the Tigers pulled away late in the game. Auburn went ahead for good 56-54 on a jump shot by Gerald White with 6:06 left.

Apologies For Selling Team

SEATTLE (AP) — Sam Schulman, former owner of the Seattle SuperSonics, has issued an apology to the city of Seattle for selling his NBA club to Barry Ackerley.

The outspoken Schulman, a Beverly Hills, Calif., movie mogul who was an original owner of the Sonics, sold the team to Ackerley, a Seattle billboard businessman, in October 1983.

The Sonics, who won the NBA title during the 1978-79 season, failed to make the playoffs last season and probably won't make them again this season.

Taking The Challenge

Don Langston (right center) presents a check for $10,000 to the East Carolina Pirate Club as the scholarship funding organization kicked off its 1986 drive last week. The donation was made by First Citizens Bank. Accepting the check is Wayne Dempsey, Pitt/Greenville Fund Drive Chairman. At left is ECU Athletic Director Ken Karr, while Pirate Club Executive Director Dave Hart Jr. is at right.

$10,000 Gift Leads Off Pirate Club Fund Drive

Officers of First Citizens Bank presented a check for $10,000 to the East Carolina University Pirate Club last week to help kick off the 1986 fund raising drive of the organization.

Don Langston and Jack Minges made the presentation at a luncheon at which the drive was officially begun. Funds raised by the drive will aid ECU athletic scholarships.

"We are elated and extremely appreciative of this very kind and generous gesture on the part of Don Langston and First Citizens Bank," said Dave Hart Jr., executive director of the Pirate Club. "This, obviously, has enabled us to begin the fund drive on a very positive, enthusiastic note. This is a vivid illustration of a positive response to the challenge facing the Pirate Club as we seek to reach our goals."

The theme of this year's drive is "Rallying To The Challenge," and the Pirate Club hopes to raise $1 million in this year's campaign.

The kickoff dinner was attended by over 75 fund drive volunteers who were shown a promotional video depicting some of the challenges the university has already met, such as university status, the ECU School of Medicine, scheduling of major football opponents, filling Ficklen Stadium, and creating the tailgating promotion for home games.

It also illustrated future challenges such as stadium expansion, the new Sports Medicine-Physical Activities Building, and a multi-purpose Civic Arena.

The video will be shown at all Pirate Club spring banquet gatherings.

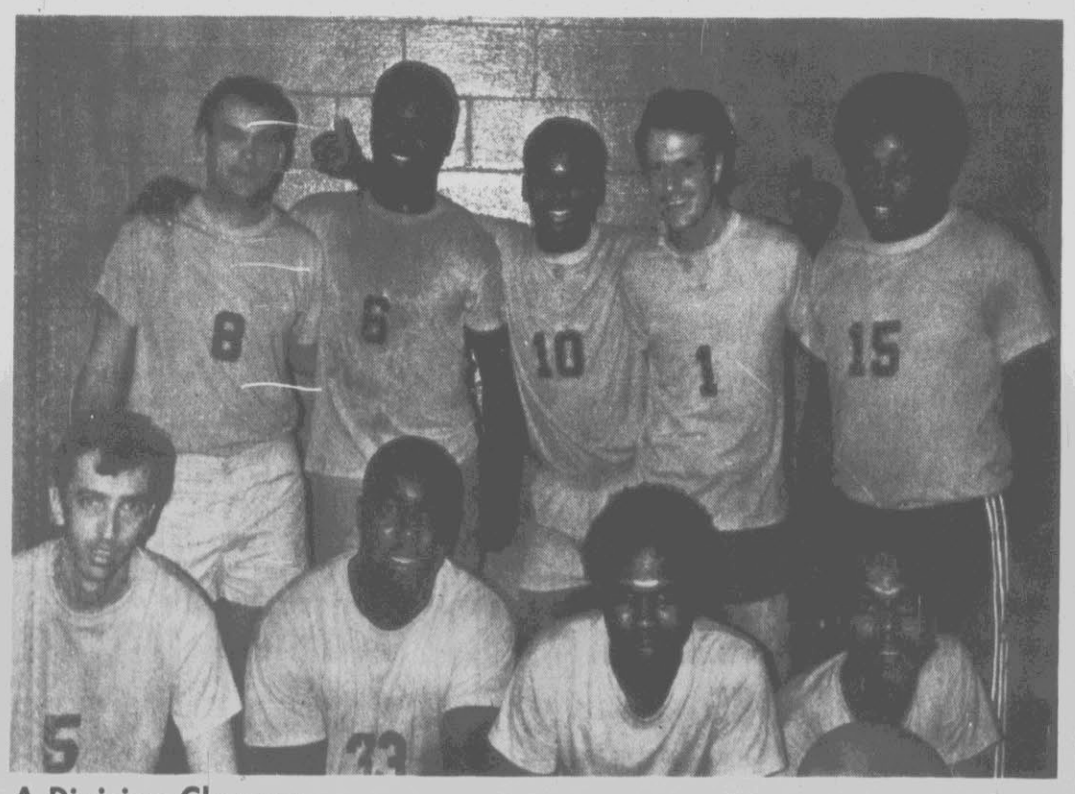

Three Said Among Picks To Suceed S.C.'s Foster

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A newspaper reports that at least three college basketball coaches — Old Dominion's Tom Young, Ohio's Danny Nee and Navy's Paul Evans — are being considered for the vacancy at South Carolina.

The State newspaper identified the coaches in its Friday editions. The report also said four others are interested in applying for the position that opened when Bill Foster resigned under pressure Tuesday.

Gamecock Athletic Director Bob Marcum was in Greensboro, N.C., Thursday watching the opening round of the NCAA East Regionals where Young's team eliminated West Virginia. Before moving to the Norfolk, Va., job, Young was head coach at Rutgers.

The State said Young, who guided ODU to a 22-7 record in his first year at the school, is considered a possibility by Marcum to fill the slot held by Foster for six years.

A Division Champs

Strange Year For Earnhardt

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt is having one strange year.

Earnhardt, who Friday won the pole position for the Motorcraft 500 NASCAR stock car race, has been up and down like an elevator operator since the season began last month at Daytona Beach, Fla.

He opened up by winning the rich Busch Clash for last year's pole winners, then won one of the twin 125-mile qualifying events for the Daytona 500. Those victories were worth more than $97,000 to Earnhardt and the team run by car-owner Richard Childress.

In the Daytona 500, Earnhardt was running right with eventual winner Geoff Bodine when Earnhardt ran out of gas with three laps to go.

A week later, at Richmond, Va., Earnhardt was again in the hunt, dueling with Darrell Waltrip for the lead just two laps from the end when he rammed hard into Waltrip's car and sent both cars hurtling into the guardrail.

NASCAR called Earnhardt's move reckless driving, while Earnhardt called it simply "an error in judgement."

The sanctioning body ordered a fine of $5,000 and a one-year probation and $10,000 bond levied against Earnhardt. But in a subsequent hearing, the fine was dropped to $3,000 and the probation and bond were eliminated.

Finally, two weeks ago at Rockingham, N.C., Earnhardt fell out of contention when he again ran out of gas.

"We've been so close," he said Friday after setting a track qualifying record of 170.713 mph in his Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS. "We really could have won two races already, and I felt like we had a real good chance at the pole in Richmond, but qualifying was rained out.

"The guys on the team have just worked so hard. They realize how good we can be. We've had some real good indications that if we just keep our heads in the right direction, we have a chance to win the championship."

As for the row over the tangle with Waltrip, the defending Winston Cup champion, at Richmond, Earnhardt said, "Junior (Waltrip's car-owner Junior Johnson) and I talked a little bit in Rockingham, and Darrell and I have talked a bit here this week and it's pretty much blown over.

"I hate that it happened. and I'm just glad it's over. Now we'll just have to put all that behind us."

Earnhardt, who last won a superspeedway pole in the spring of 1982 on Atlanta International Raceway's 1.522-mile oval, took a step in the right direction Friday when he led the rain-delayed qualifying session by breaking Neil Bonnett's one-year-old track mark of 170.278.

Qualifying, which was scheduled to be run in two sessions Friday, wound up being lumped into one late-afternoon session after rain kept the track closed until 2:20 p.m. EST.

There was only a 30-minute practice for the NASCAR stock cars prior to the time trials.

Tim Richmond was close behind Earnhardt in another Chevrolet at 170.172, followed by the surprising twosome of Morgan Shepherd, in a Buick LeSabre, and Greg Sacks, in a Monte Carlo, at 169.845 and 169.687, respectively.

Bill Elliott, who won both races at Atlanta last year, was next at 169.545, followed by Cale Yarborough at 169.252, both in Ford Thunderbirds.

Elliott, who won 11 races a year ago, is 0 for 3 this year, having won only the Daytona pole and the other qualifying race there.

Sunday's race will be televised live on ABC beginning at 1:30 p.m. EST.

The lineup for Sunday's Motorcraft 500 NASCAR stock car race, with type of car and qualifying speed in mph:

New Waterfowl Stamp

A pair of Canada geese painted by Tom Hirata was recently selected as the design for the 1986 North Carolina Waterfowl Conservation Stamp and art print. A committee of wildlife artists, biologists and sportsmen made the selection.

"We're sure that sportsmen and wildlife art collectors will be very pleased with the new stamps and prints," said Sid Baynes, contract administrator of stamp and print programs for the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission. "Tom Hirata is an excellent artist, and this painting represents some of his finest work."

Hirata is from Rutherford, N.J., and his painting of a pair of canvasbacks was also featured on the 1985 North Carolina waterfowl stamp. In 1984, one of his paintings was selected for the First-of-State New Jersey Waterfowl Stamp, and in 1982 he won the best of show award at the Ducks Unlimited National Wildlife Art Show. He has also been a Gold Room Exhibitor at the Easton Waterfowl Festival in Easton, Md.

Funds from the sale of waterfowl stamps and royalties from print sales support waterfowl conservation and management in North Carolina. Some of this money recently helped purchase five tracts of bottomland hardwood forest along the Roanoke River. The swampy forest is excellent habitat for many waterfowl species.

The publishing and marketing of the waterfowl stamp prints is being handled by Sport'en Art-Midwest Marketing of Sullivan, Ill. Literature on the program will be sent to art dealers in the near future, and dealers will be taking advance orders for prints.

The 1986 North Carolina waterfowl stamps will not be available until after July 1. However, 1985 waterfowl stamps, featuring Hirata's canvasback painting, may be obtained for $5.50 each from license agents.

Sportsman's Stamp Selected

A wild turkey in snow-covered woodlands was recently selected as the design for the 1987 North Carolina Sportsman's Stamp and art print. Louis Frisino's painting was chosen by a committee of wildlife artists, biologists and sportsmen from a group of finalists.

The stamp will be used as the 1986-87 North Carolina Sportsman's hunting and fishing license which will be purchased by approximately 140,000 individuals. Limited-edition prints of this stamp will also be produced.

The 1987 art prints and sportsman's stamps will not be available until next year. However, orders for the 1986 sportsman's stamp print, which features Duane Raver's painting of a largemouth bass hitting a topwater plug, will be taken through June 30.

The regular limited edition sportsman's print sells for $90 plus tax and the stamps for $7.50. Information and order blanks may be obtained by writing Sportsman's Prints, N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, 512 N. Salisbury St., Raleigh, N.C. 27611.

Commission Tour

The N.C. Environmental Management Commission plans to tour the Pungo River area of the Albemarle-Pamlico peninsula this week to see the effects of land clearing and peat mining before conducting a public hearing on proposed peat mining regulations.

The commission will meet Thursday at 10 a.m. in the Hyde County Courthouse, followed by the tour at 1 p.m. The public hearing will be conducted at 7 p.m. at Lake Mattamuskeet High School.

The proposed regulations would require that the annual draining from a mining site to estuarine nursery areas be equivalent to the amount that would occur if the site were covered with natural vegetation. They also specify that peak drainage flow controls be designed to limit drainage to the amount that wpuld occur if the site were undrained and convered with natural vegetation.

The commission will accept written comments before the public hearing and up to 30 days afterward. Interested persons may speak at the hearing, but may be limited to three minutes at the discretion of the hearing officer.

Fishing Club to Meet

The Carolina Croaker and Marlin Club will hold its March meeting Monday at the Riverside Steak Bar beginning with social hour at 6:30 p.m., followed by a buffet dinner at 7 p.m.

Dave Thompkins, president of the N.C. Saltwater Federation, will speak about the federation's plans and projects for 1986. In addition, David Griffith of the Insititute for Coastal and Marine Services will present a film on under-utilized species such as amberjack, crevalle jack and bonita.

The meeting is open to anyone interested in saltwater fishing. The cost is $5 per person.

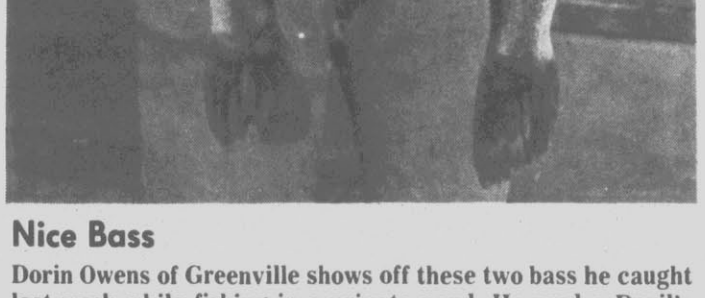

National Fishing Week

Several fishing organizations are seeking to obtain a presidential proclamation to make June 2-8 National Fishing Week.

Interested persons are encouraged to write letters to their congressmen to co-sponsor H.J. Resolution 433. This resolution authorizes and requests the president to proclaim June 2-8 National Fishing Week.

To get this resolution to the House floor, 218 co-sponsors are needed. Members of Congress will not co-sponsor commemorative resolutions unless requested to do so by residents of their state.

Fishing is the second largest recreational sport in the United States. Sport fishermen contribute over $25 billion to the nation's enconomy and play a key role in the protection of aquatic resources.

Nice Bass

Dorin Owens of Greenville shows off these two bass he caught last week while fishing in a private pond. He used a Devil's Horse lure to make the catches. Both fish weighed in at 7 3/4 pounds. (Reflector Photo)

Bulldogs Defeated

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — After trailing the entire first half, seventh-seeded St. Thomas Aquinas of New York took control behind James Carter and Charles Wynn to defeat Atlantic Christian 77-71 Friday for a quarterfinal berth in the NAIA men's basketball tournament.

The Spartans, 36-4, were down 35-32 at the half and took their first lead at 46-45 on Carter's basket with 15:49 remaining. Atlantic Christian gained a tie at 48 on Ed Boone's field goal three minutes later, but a free throw by George Moody put St. Thomas Aquinas ahead for good at 49-48 with 12:40 to go.

Carter and Wynn both hit 18 points in leading the Spartans to their 19th consecutive victory. Ed Melendez got 10 of his 18 points in the first half for the Bulldogs, who finished 25-10.

Miller's Tour Not Over Yet

ATHENS, Ohio (AP) — It could have been a bitter memory for Ohio State Coach Eldon Miller. Instead, it ended up being a sweet one.

Miller, dismissed effective at the end of the season, not only lived to coach another day but won his 400th career game as his Buckeyes defeated Ohio University 65-62 in a first-round National Invitation Tournament game at Ohio U. Friday night.

Characteristically, Miller was low key on his accomplishment.

"When you have as many good players as I've had, (400 wins) is just something that happens," said Miller, who has been named the head coach at the University of Northern Iowa next season.

Two of Miller's top current players guided the Buckeyes down the stretch and into a Monday night matchup with Texas at St. John Arena in the NIT's second round.

Junior forward Dennis Hopson scored 22 points and grabbed 10 rebounds and senior forward Brad Sellers totaled 21 points and had a game-high 13 rebounds as the Buckeyes lifted their record to 15-14 on the season.

Sellers' biggest contributions came with just :18 left when he hit a pair of free throws to give Ohio State a 63-60 lead.

Curtis Wilson added 12 for Ohio State, including a 15-foot jump shot with 1:03 left that gave the Buckeyes a 61-58 lead.

"Brad made the big free throws and Curtis hit a big, big jump shot after we spent a lot of time reversing the ball, trying to get inside," said Miller.

Ohio U., which closed out its season at 22-8, led 34-27 at the half and was on top by as many as nine points in the second half.

But a seven-point run by the Buckeyes — concluding with a Sellers' tip-in at 7:00 — put Ohio State on top to stay, 50-47.

Paul Graham scored 19 points for the Bobcats despite sitting out much of the second half with four fouls, while Robert Tatum had 14 and John Rhodes 11.

"Sellers and Hopson are very talented players," Ohio U. Coach Danny Nee said. Nee is said to be a contender to succeed Miller at Ohio State. "I thought the turning point in the game was when Graham picked up his fourth (at the 18:08 mark) and we had to take him out."

The game was played before 12,897, the second largest crowd ever at the Ohio U. Convocation Center.

"Right now, our magic number is a lot less than 400," Miller said. "We want to win (the NIT). And we have as good a chance as anybody else."

Friday night's contest completed the first round of the NIT. The 16 remaining teams will play their second-round games Monday and Tuesday, as follows:

Monday night — Texas Christian, 22-8, at Florida, 17-12; Clemson, 18-14, at Georgia, 17-12; George Mason, 20-11, at Providence, 16-13; Marquette, 19-10, at Southwest Missouri State, 23-7; Texas, 19-12, at Ohio State, 15-14; McNeese State, 21-10, at Louisiana Tech, 17-13; Loyola Marymount, 19-10, at Wyoming, 21-11.

Tuesday night — Cal-Irvine, 17-12, at Brigham Young, 17-13.

Hershiser Has Strong Start

By The Associated Press

Last month Orel Hershiser won an arbitration case for a million-dollar contract, and now it's time for the right-hander to earn his money.

Hershiser pitched five strong innings Friday to lead the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 6-1 exhibition baseball victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

"I thought it was a pretty good outing," said Hershiser, who gave up one run and seven hits while striking out three. "The first couple of innings, I struggled with my release point. But I settled down as the game went on.

"That's what spring training is for, working on timing and getting ready for the season."

Jerry Reuss pitched four scoreless innings for the Dodgers and Mariano Duncan led the offense with a 3-for-4 game that included a triple and run scored in the first inning and a two-run single in the second.

Only three other exhibition games were played Friday as rain washed out eight contests in Florida and Arizona.

In the other action, the New York Yankees defeated the Baltimore Orioles 5-1; the Cleveland Indians beat the San Diego Padres 10-2; and the Minnesota Twins trounced the Toronto Blue Jays 9-2.

Yankees 5, Orioles 1

Dave Winfield hit two home runs and Dale Berra slammed a tie-breaking two-run shot in the fifth inning as the Yankees defeated the Orioles.

All three homers came off Baltimore starter Mike Flanagan as the Yankees boosted their spring record to 5-1, including four in a row. The Orioles are 1-5.

Rookie Doug Drabek pitched four strong innings for the Yankees, allowing two hits and striking out five.

Indians 10, Padres 2

Tom Candiotti pitched four shutout innings and Brook Jacoby and Cory Snyder hit two-run doubles as Cleveland routed San Diego.

Candiotti yielded three hits while striking out five and walking one. The former Milwaukee Brewer right-hander used his knuckleball to stop the Padres. Candiotti began throwing the pitch last season with Milwaukee's Class AAA team in Vancouver.

Cleveland scored nine runs in the first two innings, seven off Dave Dravecky.

Twins 9, Blue Jays 2

Kent Hrbek drove in five runs to lead Minnesota over Toronto. Tom Brunansky hit his first home run of the spring and Mark Salas had a solo homer for the Twins.

Friday's rainouts included Boston-Philadelphia, Kansas City-Pittsburgh, Montreal-Atlanta, St. Louis-Chicago White Sox, Texas-Houston, Oakland-Milwaukee, California-Seattle and Chicago Cubs-San Francisco.

Spurs Embarrassed By Jazz

By The Associated Press

The San Antonio Spurs had no defense for the way they played against the Utah Jazz.

"We are obviously embarrassed about our play here tonight," San Antonio Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said after his team lost 146-121 to the Utah Jazz in an NBA shootout Friday night.

"I call this defense a 'Matador Defense.' You would have thought we had come here tonight from Mexico instead of San Antonio. We just waved the flag, and, Ol! They just went by us. I'm embarrassed, the team should be embarrassed, and I'm sure our owners are embarrassed."

Fitzsimmons is also frustrated, because his team has lost 11 of its last 12 games. They're currently seventh in the Western Conference, a half-game ahead of Sacramento in the overall standings. The eighth-place team has the dubious honor of playing the powerful Los Angeles Lakers in the first round of the NBA playoffs.

In the other NBA games, it was Denver 101, Washington 91; Philadelphia 109, Cleveland 100; Boston 121, Atlanta 114; Detroit 112, New York 89; Dallas 129, Portland 118; Indiana 114, Milwaukee 104, and Los Angeles Clippers 105, Sacramento 104.

Adrian Dantley scored a season-high 47 points to pace Utah. The Jazz team total was a season-high for the club, beating their previous high of 139 against Dallas.

Dantley scored 27 points in the first half and added 20 in the second half as the Jazz took an early lead and were never threatened.

Rickey Green and Bobby Hansen added 19 points each for the Jazz, with Hansen collecting four three-point goals. Green also had 14 assists and Mark Eaton blocked eight shots.

The Spurs were led by Mike Mitchell's 34 points.

"We didn't play well, but don't take anything away from the Jazz," San Antonio's Alvin Robertson said. "They really had it going tonight. They converted a lot of fastbreaks and Dantley worked the middle very well."

Utah Coach Frank Layden: "We hope that this is the light at the end of the tunnel. We are in control of our own destiny and we have a chance now to catch the teams in front of us."

Nuggets 101, Bullets 91

NBA scoring leader Alex English recorded 33 points to lead Denver over Washington.

English had 29 points by the end of the third period, when the Nuggets led 85-74. English remained on the bench for the first eight minutes of the fourth period, returning after the Bullets had cut the deficit to eight points.

The loss snapped Washington's three-game winning streak and a five-game homecourt winning streak and prevented the Bullets from reaching the .500-mark for the first time since January.

Denver came into the game ranked last in the NBA in rebounding, but controlled the boards against Washington by a 42-32 margin. The Nuggets have not lost any of the 17 games this season in which they have at least matched their opponent in rebounding.

Cliff Robinson led the Bullets with 20 points.

76ers 109, Cavaliers 100

Moses Malone scored 30 points and Julius Erving had 28 as Philadelphia fought off a late Cleveland rally. It was the fourth straight victory for the 76ers, while the Cavaliers lost for the seventh time in their last nine games.

A slam dunk off a steal by Erving gave the 76ers the largest lead of the game, 70-43, with 6:46 left in the third quarter.

Philadelphia held a 91-72 advantage with 9:03 to go, but the Cavaliers rallied behind rookie Dirk Minnifield and closed to 98-89 on a layup by Roy Hinson with 4:29 remaining. The 76ers then scored six of the next eight points — five of them by Malone — and the Cavaliers never again threatened.

Celtics 121, Hawks 114

Larry Bird put Boston ahead to stay with two free throws and then clinched the Celtics' victory over Atlanta with a three-point shot with 1:04 remaining.

The Celtics, who have not lost to the Hawks this year, won their 12th straight game on the Hawks' home court, breaking a 13-game Atlanta winning streak at the Omni.

Bird led Boston with 26 points, while Kevin McHale had 24 points for the Celtics and added 12 rebounds. Dominique Wilkins paced the Hawks with a game-high 42.

Pistons 112, Knicks 89

Kelly Tripucka scored 21 points as Detroit handed the Knicks their sixth consecutive loss. Bill Laimbeer added 18 points for Detroit, while Isiah Thomas and Tony Campbell had 15 each as the Pistons won for the 24th time in their last 30 starts and dealt New York its 10th straight loss on the road.

Detroit led 53-49 at intermission but pulled away in the third quarter. Successive baskets by Tripucka and Johnson gave the Pistons a 70-60 lead 5:58 into the second half. Detroit led 84-72 at the start of the final quarter before running off a 7-2 spurt to go up 91-74 with 9:57 to play.

Gerald Wilkins led the Knicks with 20 points.

Mavericks 129, Blazers 118

Mark Aguirre scored 35 points and Rolando Blackman added 34 to lead Dallas over Portland.

The Blazers, who lost their 10th straight road game despite a career-high 41 points by guard Clyde Drexler, had cut a 16-point deficit to 112-108 on a Jerome Kersey tip-in with 4:52 to play. But Blackman hit a basket and a free throw and moments later Aguirre hit an eight-footer as the 24-second clock expired to put Dallas ahead 117-109.

A three-point basket and two free throws by Drexler pulled the Blazers to 120-114 with 1:43 left, but a three-point play by Aguirre put it out of reach.

Pacers 114, Bucks 104

Clint Richardson scored 10 of his 21 points in the third quarter as Indiana outscored Milwaukee 31-23 on their way to a victory over the Bucks.

Steve Stipanovich scored 22 points for the Pacers, who broke their 14-game losing streak at the Milwaukee Arena. Bill Martin added 20 for Indiana.

It was the third consecutive loss for Milwaukee, which was led by Sidney Moncrief with 25 points. The Bucks played without two injured starters, Craig Hodges and Paul Pressey.

Kennedy Is Named

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — It's up to Pat Kennedy to straighten out any contract problems he has with Iona, said an official at Florida State, which hired Kennedy away from the New York state school as the Seminoles' head basketball coach.

"The initial contact was by Pat Kennedy. It wasn't a matter of us pursuing him," said Bob Goin, assistant athletic director at Florida State. "It's his job to get the thing cleared up. I think Iona's going to come around."

Kennedy appeared at a news conference Friday in Tallahassee, outlining his goals for the Seminoles. He said he plans for Florida State to become a regular at national tournaments and in the Top 20.

The 34-year-old Kennedy was presented as the fifth men's basketball coach at the school since it first began fielding men's teams in 1947.

"My late father, God rest his soul, said that great things always happen to Irishmen close around St. Patty's Day," Kennedy said. "He certainly couldn't have been any more right about this particular Irishman and this particular St. Patty's Day."

But ever since Kennedy notified Iona Thursday that he had accepted a job offer at Florida State, officials at the New York school have maintained that Kennedy still owes them two years. He has completed only two years of a four-year contract.

Kennedy said Iona's athletic director, Rick Mazzuto, had released him and that he is working for Florida State. Mazzuto, however, said Kennedy still is under contract with Iona and that the matter was under review with the school president, Brother John Driscoll.

Asked if he regarded Kennedy as a coach of two teams, Mazzuto said, "You might say that right now."

He added, however, that it was not likely that Kennedy would return to Iona.

"It would appear that Pat has great interest in being basketball coach at Florida State. It is a commitment he has made to them so I don't have a great expectation of him returning here."

Joe Favorrito, a spokesman for the school in New Rochelle, N.Y., said he thought Kennedy eventually would be released from his contract, but he didn't know under what conditions.

The last man to walk away from a basketball coaching job at Iona was Jim Valvano, Kennedy's immediate predecessor who now coaches North Carolina State.

A Big Haul

NEW YORK (AP) — An intruder entered the hotel suite of singer Patti LaBelle while she was performing and made off with an estimated $50,000 in cash, jewelry and other items, police said Saturday.

There were no signs of forced entry into the hotel suite, and police had no suspects, said Sgt. Ron Severin, a police spokesman.

The stolen property included about $10,000 in cash, plus an estimated $40,000 in jewelry, luggage and other items, Severin said. Credit cards were also taken.

The burglary apparently occurred sometime after 7:30 p.m. Friday when Miss LaBelle and her entourage left for her performance at the Minskoff Theater. It was discovered when the group returned about 1:15 a.m. Saturday, Severin said.

Miss Labelle came onto the music scene in the 1960s with the group Patti LaBelle and the Bluebells. In the 1970s, the group, then known as LaBelle, had a big hit with "Lady Marmalade."

She later went solo, and last year she had two hits from the soundtrack of Eddie Murphy's "Beverly Hills Cop."

A Sure Sign

HINCKLEY, Ohio (AP) — Residents of Hinckley don't need a groundhog to tell them when spring is coming — they have the buzzards.

Every year on March 15, the fabled flock of turkey vultures returns to Hinckley from the south, signaling the end of winter.

The flock of about 75 buzzards returned Saturday, with the first one winging its way into the view of the official spotter, Cleveland Metroparks Ranger Rogert Lutz, at 9:29 a.m.

Lutz wasn't the only one happy to see the birds, which return to roost in a Hinckley Township park, some 20 miles south of Cleveland.

The real celebration takes place on "Buzzard Sunday" when the Hinckley Chamber of Commerce sponsors its 28th annual, day-long pancake breakfast at Hinckley Elementary School.

"Geek," a buzzard from the Cleveland Museum of Natural History, will be at the school to give visitors a close-up view. Geek has lived at the museum since injuring a wing 16 years ago and is a veteran participant in Buzzard Day festivities.

Not everyone will want a look, though. Lutz said the buzzard is a pretty bird to watch in flight "but on the ground they leave a lot to be desired."

Mergers with First State Bank, Winterville, Farmers Bank of Pilot Mountain and Farmers Bank of Sunbury added $141 million in assets, $119 million in deposits, 123 employees and nine new locations to First Citizens.

Storms Generate Gold Excitement

By JOHN HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

CHILI BAR, Calif. (AP) — California's Sierra Nevada, where the 19th-century gold rush was born, is the scene of a new scramble as hunters find the precious metal in streams and canyons where it was exposed by recent storms.

"I know a man who's been prospecting 20 years, and he says he has found more in the past two weeks than all the time before," said one prospector, a 34-year-old Indiana carpenter, who would only speak if he was not identified. "The rains have washed it all down into the streams or behind rocks or into gullies."

By tradition, gold-hunters are discreet, like this prospector who said he would take a reporter to his Amador County site "only if you wear a blindfold when we go in."

Last month, Northern California was lashed by nine days of storms that killed 13 people, injured 57, forced the evacuations of 50,000 residents and caused $320 million in damages.

But there was a nugget of good news: The soggy ground and rain-swollen rivers churned up fresh deposits of gold-rich soil and rock.

"We've had more people in here than at any time since gold was more than $800 an ounce," said Paul Bailey, owner of a hardware store 45 miles east of Sacramento that caters to gold hunters. "I normally put in one or two orders per week (for equipment), now I'm putting in one ever day." On Friday, gold sold for roughly $348 per ounce in world markets.

While few panners were seen along the major rivers, numerous ribbons or pennants were tied to tree branches, signaling the areas had been claimed.

Several prospectors said the isolated, rugged canyons and steep streams have drawn an unusually large number of gold-seekers. Their numbers are expected to increase, particularly on weekends, as the weather warms and the mountains' deep snowpack melts.

"There's probably more gold here (in the mountains) than has ever been taken out," said Jim Kain of Chili Bar, a tiny community of mobile homes, a slate mine and a restaurant. Chili Bar itself, however, has little gold, because of a dam upstream on an American River fork.

The focus of the new gold rush — "We're calling it a gold rush because that's what it is," said Camino prospector Sterling Fletcher — is the 200-mile-long western slope of the Sierra Nevada between Sonora and Downieville, a region crisscrossed by swift rivers.

THREE TIMES CLOSER — Halley's Comet was more clearly visible to those who saw it in 1910 than it is this year. A number of Greenville area residents and former residents were among the viewers then.

Fortunate Few Are Seeing Comet Twice

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Lifelong Greenville resident J.H. (Hap) Moye says he feels fortunate to be among the few people in history who soon will have seen Halley's Comet twice.

"I plan to see it this spring," he said. "And I remember just as clearly as if it were yesterday the night in 1910 when I was 4 years old, my mother and father woke me up in the middle of the night — about 2 a.m., I think — and stood me on a couch at a window to watch it. It illuminated a whole section of the sky. It had a tremendous head and a tail that went 'way out. It was lovely, just lovely. I'll never forget how beautiful it was!"

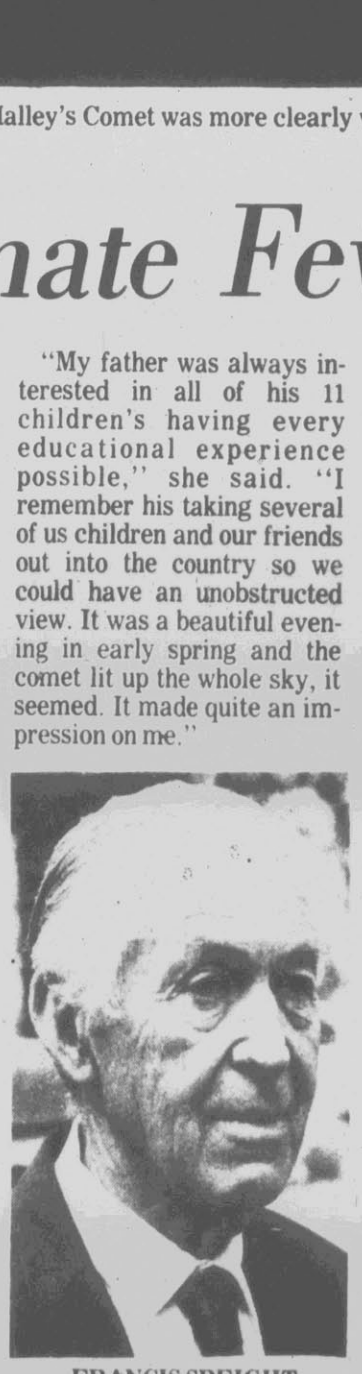

J.H. MOYE

Verna Graber, a Greenville resident for the last 10 years, is 11 years older than Moye. She was a high school student in Spring City, Pa., when she first saw the comet.

VERNA GRABER

"My father was always interested in all of his 11 children's having every educational experience possible," she said. "I remember his taking several of us children and our friends out into the country so we could have an unobstructed view. It was a beautiful evening in early spring and the comet lit up the whole sky, it seemed. It made quite an impression on me."

FRANCIS SPEIGHT

Greenville artist Francis Speight remembers seeing the comet from his home in Bertie County when he was 14. "It was very distinctly visible to the naked eye," he said, "and very beautiful."

He said he has read recently a biography of the man for whom the comet is named. Edmund Halley was a British scientist who determined in 1682 that the comets which had been documented every 76 years since 240 B.C. were one and the same.

Stella Whichard Donaldson, a Greenville native who lives in Tallahassee, Fla., was 7 and her sister, Maggie, was 9 when their parents took them to the roof of The Daily Reflector newspaper office building, then located at Third and Evans streets, to view the comet. "It was a cold dark night," she said, "Oh, there were so many other people up there, too, and everyone was so excited. We waited some time to see the great light sweep across the sky. A comet! Yes! With long sweeping bright lights all below and behind as if the whole sky were on fire. It was really far away, it seemed, but frightening to a little girl.

STELLA DONALDSON

Since that time I have wanted to see it again and it looks as if I will."

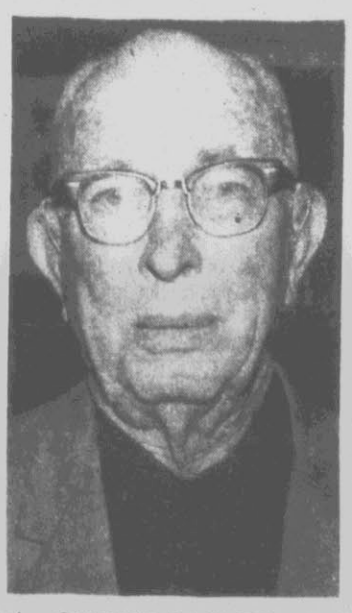

THELMA HARDEE

Thelma Edwards Hardee, a Pitt County native who lives two miles east of Greenville, was a 10-year-old favored by a 15-year-old brother, Loren, with a special outing — a trip to Winterville for an entertainment at his high school. She has long since forgotten everything about the program, she said, but remembers riding home afterward in the family buggy.

"Loren spotted the comet and stopped the horses," she said, "and the two of us sat there maybe 10 or 15 minutes and admired it. It was beautiful, just beautiful! My brother's no longer living and this is one of my fondest memories of him."

Connor Eagles, a Greenville resident, relates a school program to his viewing of the comet, too. "A Professor Wilson from East Carolina Teacher Training School — now East Carolina University — was speaking from the porch of the old Eagles School a few miles south of Fountain. The audience was seated on improvised benches facing it. I remember the talk the professor made very well and I remember the splendid show the comet put on over the roof of that one-room school building."

CONNOR EAGLES

Eagles, then a 10-year-old, said he and his brothers and sister saw the comet other times the same spring and winter from an open field in front of the family home near Falkland.

Bernie Allen Fowler of Ayden said she cried herself to sleep more than one night during the comet days of 1910. "That was a very traumatic time for me," she said. "My mother had died in late 1909. She had requested when she knew she was dying that I, her oldest child, be sent to Raleigh to live with relatives during each school year. She wanted me to have the advantage of better schools.

"Way off up there far from my father and brothers, I just knew that, if all the bad things happened that people — even the newspapers — were predicting when the earth passed through the comet's tail, I would never see my loved ones in Pitt County again. It's easy to look back and say it was all silly. But then I was scared, very scared and feeling very alone.

"I do remember seeing the comet several times and thinking it was very beautiful, in spite of my fear," Mrs. Fowler said.

BERNIE FOWLER

Lifelong Greenville resident David J. Whichard Jr. recalls the fun of after-midnight comet-watching with his sisters, Hennie, then 19, and Essie, then 17, and their friends. "I was 15 at the time and I would have loved being in the midst of all those beautiful girls, even if there hadn't been a comet to see," he said.

H.V. LOFQUIST

H.V. Lofquist, a Presbyterian minister retired in Greenville, saw the comet when he was 12 years old living in Deland, Fla. "I first saw the comet from the front yard of my childhood home," he said. "I remember being out by my mother's red amaryllis bed and admiring it over the little oak trees my father had planted not long before. It was like a white ball with a milky way tail spreading out behind it.

"I'm glad I've lived to see it come again," Lofquist said. "It's been fun this go-'round seeing how interested people are in this lovely part of God's wonderful universe."

Whodunits Turned Out For Audience Participation

By JOHN SWAN
Scottsdale Daily Progress

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Carder Hunt's avocation is to involve people in murder.

And they love it.

Hunt, manager of Scottsdale's municipal airport, writes tongue-in-cheek murder mystery plays during his off-hours for Safari Inc., a San Francisco-based firm whose business is to arrange conventions and travel.

Part of the Safari package is an offer to stage a whodunit as mystery theater entertainment. Enter Hunt, who will concoct an original drama tailored to the occasion and its participants. Murder mysteries, it appears, are the most popular, although Hunt also writes "double theft" mysteries for those with an aversion to murder.

"Murder is the most entertaining mystery crime," he explained. "People want someone to die. Preferably they want to see him or her die before their eyes rather than to hear about it."

The conventioneers are more than mere spectators. "Our goals are to intrigue the guests and involve them as well as entertain them. We want to present them with a solvable mystery and have them solve it themselves," said Hunt.

Safari produces the plays and has developed casts for the productions. "They have 40 or 50 people who can get into the act. We can play with as few as seven or as many as 10 or 12," Hunt said.

Hunt, 36, began writing plays when he was 8 or 9. "Our whole family performed in them — my brother and I, my father and mother," he recalled. "Dad and I each wrote plays and did them for Christmas and birthdays. As we got better, the plays became more involved."

Hunt became involved in writing for conventions when his brother, who was a Safari Inc., employee at the time, called him and asked him to write mystery theater entertainment for a forthcoming convention.

"It sounded like a lot of fun," Hunt remembered, "so I did it."

First step in preparing a play for production is to find out about its audience, Hunt said: "What does the client want? What kind of people will we be addressing — stockbrokers or salesmen? Are they a group whose members are strangers to each other, or a fairly homogenous crowd?

"We always customize our plays. We ask the client to give us two or three people they'd like to see involved. We want to draw a fine line between fantasy and realism, real time and real space.

"There's a lot of stuff out there if you can get the essentials. As the central cast of the play, we let the participants interrogate us as the play progresses. The questioning has to be done in public so people can get involved."

Before staging a typical mystery drama, Safari informs the guests about what to expect. Sometimes, to underscore the atmosphere of realism, clues are left, said Hunt.

"Part of a burned note in an ashtray in the guest's room; a memo to telephone a certain number where a voice responds ominously, 'It's still on.' or 'Meet me at the bridge.'"

Both before and following essential scenes staged for the guests (the murder, for example) the cast mingles with guests, occasionally engaging in mysterious mutterings. Sometimes Hunt plays the part of Inspector Hiram Boggs, a bumbling detective.

"Some of the guests become suspects," said Hunt. "Finally I make an arrest. It's wrong, of course. Then the audience has to solve it, based on all the clues they've been given."

Invariably, there's at least one individual who, Hunt said, "nails it right down."

Some guests can get rather seriously involved. "Once one guy laid four $100 bills on the table," Hunt related, "and leaned over and whispered to me, 'Tell me who did it,'"

Did Hunt weaken?

Did Sherlock Holmes ever fail to solve a case?

Her Goal Is To Help Others With Hearing Problems

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Elizabeth Beldon, who has been deaf since birth, wants to close the gap between deaf and hearing people.

"There's a cultural difference, and many of the hearing (people) take things for granted," she said with the aid of a sign-language interpreter.

She said some people believe deaf people should automatically understand the culture of those who can hear.

"They (hearing people) don't realize that signing is our native language. They think it's English, but it's not," said Mrs. Beldon.

Mrs. Beldon is a faculty member in the public services department of the University of Akron. She is a 1984 graduate of the university and is now working on a master's degree in family development and counseling so she can help the deaf.

She said it's difficult for the deaf to express their feelings to a hearing person through an interpreter. The costs of a counselor and an interpreter, and the interpreter's presence during a counseling session, make many deaf people reluctant to seek professional counseling.

"It's important for me to show other deaf people that some of us are college educated," she said. "I want to be a good role model."

Mrs. Beldon received the 1986 Canton Quota Club Deaf Woman of the Year Award for her work with hearing-impaired people and her accomplishments at the university.

Mrs. Beldon and her husband, James, met while they attended the Ohio School for the Deaf in Columbus. Their son, James Jr., 21, was born deaf. He is a junior at Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C. Mrs. Beldon said he motivated her to attend college.

"He kept saying, 'Mom, you can do it,'" she said.

Her daughter, Judy, 18, is a freshman at Akron University. Another daughter, Jessica, 12, is in the seventh grade at Cuyahoga Valley Christian Academy.

"My goal is to work fully with deaf people because I have a very deep commitment," she said.

Food Critics Find Public Sometimes Fails To Agree With Their Opinions

By JOYCE A. VENEZIA
Associated Press Writer

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Miss Manners might be appalled, but Jane Stern apologizes before she reaches across the table to take a forkful of a guest's dinner.

"Don't mind me," she says. "We have to do this."

The probing fork might seem odd to those who are unprepared for a dinner with Jane and Michael Stern. But these restaurant critics and syndicated food writers know their business, even if their readers might not always agree.

To watch them at work requires careful attention. They eat fast ("like it's a taste test," says Michael) and observe everything. Although they make dinner reservations under assumed names, they know that many times they are recognized by maitre d's who have seen them in newspapers or on TV.

But the couple knows that bad food or service can't change dramatically in a few minutes.

"They're not going to run right out and hire a better chef because of us," Michael says.

"You might get a bigger cut of meat or a prettier plate," Jane says, "but even if your prime rib is hanging to the floor, if the person on the next table has a small cut, then you know."

She interrupts her explanation to make an observation: "I've already noticed that the people at the next table have ordered their drinks twice and haven't gotten them yet."

The public — at least in Connecticut — doesn't always agree with what the Sterns have to say. A review ripping a popular restaurant in the affluent northwest corner of Connecticut drew a backlash of criticism from insulted regulars. But another review in praising a milkshake shop in rural Manchester went unprotested.

The Sterns are perhaps better known for their other projects. Their "Goodfood" restaurant guide on American regional food is popular among travelers. Their cookbook, "Square Meals," includes recipes for such exotic foods as Milky Way cake (made with the candy bars of the same name) and flaming cabbage head weenies.

Their syndicated newspaper column, "A Taste of America," runs weekly on food pages nationwide.

"People think we have our nose in the air in Connecticut, but we are the 'beloved Sterns' in the rest of the country," Jane says.

"At first, it was really weird to have people hate your opinion that strongly," Michael says. "People listen to critics and believe them, but if they think we are wrong, they're not going to bow to us. Reviewing is not some rarified art."

The Sterns said they used to flinch at the criticism, but now they've toughened themselves to become champions of the average American diner. They have not so easily accepted the reaction of wary friends who "are terrified to invite us to dinner," Jane says.

"It's the stupidest thing because they should see what we eat at home," Michael says with a grin. "Fast food, frozen dinners and more."

There have been times when a home-cooked meal has turned more into an adventure than a culinary delight, however. An acquaintance's specialty — steak steamed in a washcloth — was "interesting," Jane says politely.

"But the point is that meals express personalities," Michael says. "She and her boyfriend cared enough to show us how to make their favorite meal."

Working out of their West Redding home, the Sterns have unconventional work habits. They are up at 5:30 every morning, seven days a week, "because of two incredibly demanding dogs," Jane says.

"Then I have a whole day of sitcoms — Bewitched, Leave it to Beaver — one after the other," she says unabashedly. "Michael isolates himself in a very quiet corner. We hardly see each other every day."

When it comes down to actually writing an article, they take turns — one composes, the other edits.

"But there's a lot of talking beforehand," Michael says. "By the time we sit down at the typewriter, we've evolved into a single voice."

Most of the Sterns' national columns focus on true American foods such as chess pie in Harrodsburg, Ky., or vanilla muffins from the Peabody Hotel in Memphis, Tenn.

Unlike many food writers, they are quick to notice what they consider bits of Americana. Anthropologists should pay more attention to straws served stuck to the outside of a wet Coke glass, for instance, they say.

The Sterns say they don't care about nouvelle cuisine in the big cities, keeping themselves happy finding the culinary gems on the backroads of America. They consider themselves fortunate to have very little competition.

"Most food writers are in New York and Los Angeles," Jane says, "and that's fine because they've left the rest of the country to us."

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Couples: Start Over In Your House

DEAR ABBY: May I sit in your chair and pass on a bit of hard-learned advice?

When a couple decide to marry for a second—or third—time, start fresh.

Do not move into "his" house, or "her" house. Sell both houses and start over together in a new house that will be your house. There will be fewer memories, fewer quarrels and fewer hurt feelings. I know.

LEARNED TOO LATE

DEAR LEARNED: How generous of you to take pen in hand to give others the benefit of your mistake. I am reminded of a saying I heard a long time ago: "If we could sell our experience for what it cost us, we'd all be millionaires."

DEAR ABBY: My daughter just turned 10. On her birthday I shed a few tears. I wish I could have held her and told her all the things a mother should tell her daughter when she turns 10. I wish I could have dressed her up and put ribbons in her hair, and ridden the merry-go-round with her until we both got sick, then laughed ourselves silly rolling down hills in the park! I also said a little prayer of thanks for having made the decision 10 years ago to give her up for adoption. I was barely 16 and wanted my daughter to have a better life than I could provide for her.

I feel confident that the parents who were blessed with her can give her what I could not and will love her as much as I did.

I pray my daughter realizes that it was not for lack of love that I gave her up, but because my love was brave and fierce and mature enough to let her go when I was but a child myself.

I pray that when she is 18 she will decide to look me up through an adoption search group, and we will meet again. The last time I held her tiny hand she was only 10 days old.

Until then, my thoughts and prayers are with her and her parents, and her birthdays will be an especially lonely time for this mom.

HOPEFUL IN L.A.

DEAR HOPEFUL: Are you aware that biological parents can register with International Soundex Reunion Registry, P.O. Box 2312, Carson City, Nev. 89702? Adopted children may also register, and when they become legal age, if both parties are registered and want to find each other, a match is made.

Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to the above registry, requesting Soundex Forms.

DEAR ABBY: Problems! Problems! My fiance and I are invited to the wedding of a couple we have known for a long time. They owe us $200. We would ordinarily spend $100 for a wedding gift, but as long as they owe us $200, we plan to deduct $100 from what they owe us, and call that our wedding gift.

How should we word the card?

FRIENDS

DEAR FRIENDS: You may word the card any way you wish—bearing in mind that any reference to their debt would be in the worst possible taste at this time.

DEAR ABBY: My wife insists that it's the man's place to initiate sex. She says if I'm going to wait for her to initiate sex, there won't be any.

I'm tired of always being the aggressor. I've told her I would find it exciting if she would approach me for a change, but she says it's not ladylike and she wouldn't feel comfortable making the first move.

She has never turned me down, and it's very satisfying to both of us when it happens, so what should I do?

TIRED OF ARGUING

DEAR TIRED: Stop arguing. Your wife is replaying the "tapes" of the old admonitions she heard repeatedly as a girl. ("Nice women aren't supposed to be aggressive—it's unladylike.") With counseling she will learn that it's OK for a woman to be aggressive in the bedroom. Everywhere else she can be a "lady."

DEAR ABBY: I am a concerned 71-year-old retired businessman. Less than an hour ago, my doorbell rang. When I opened the door, I saw a pretty, young girl in a Girl Scout uniform. She had long, blond hair, large blue eyes and a winning smile. "I'm selling Girl Scout cookies," she announced brightly. Of course I bought some. She thanked me politely and proceeded on her way.

As I watched her walk away with her blond hair blowing in the wind, I thought: "My God, that child is going from door to door facing strangers. How easy it would be for some sick or evil person to grab her and pull her inside, and do God only knows what to that lovely, trusting child! You read about it in the papers nearly every day."

I telephoned the Girl Scout headquarters and suggested that they have girls go either in pairs or with an adult to sell their cookies. Then I thought I would reach an even wider audience by writing to you.

I hope you think this is worth publishing.

GRANDFATHER OF FIVE

DEAR GRANDFATHER: It is, and I thank you for an important message.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

We've owned enough animals in our time to know they are not putty in the hands of their owners. They have minds of their own.

There are no such things as "domesticate," "train" and "educate," unless they want to be. These are myths perpetuated by people who sell you animals in the first place.

I used to be one of those people who watched animal documentaries on PBS and couldn't believe what I was hearing when William Conrad said the blue-footed booby was "flirting" or a wildebeest was severely depressed. C'mon, how could an animal feel human emotions and how did we know he was feeling them? Believe me, they know.

Why else would a quail board Republic Flight 44 in Phoenix, Ariz., and fly (cargo class) to Des Moines, Iowa? For the beach? For the home cooking? To join the beautiful bird social scene? Because the quail season opened in Arizona that very day, that's why!

Animals have always been a lot smarter than any human will admit. Owners of dogs, for example, are so smug. They think they have their pets under control. To me, "My dog doesn't bite" is an incomplete sentence. I cannot begin to tell you the times I have been invited into a house where a dog galloped toward me, put his paws on my chest and pinned me to the door with saliva dripping on my Liz Claiborn blouse while the owner is saying, "Do you want Erma to think you have no manners? Down boy!"

I'm supposed to trust a dog who licks his underside all during dinner to have manners.

A horse to whom you have just fed $50 worth of honey-flavored grain will step on your foot if he wants to. A vindictive hamster will refuse to spin around all night on his exercise wheel if you take the squeak out. If you alter your cat, expect him to sit on your TV set for the rest of your life and look sullen. If you alter your dog, never turn your back on him again.

I'm telling you, animals have the same intelligent life that we have. Do you know what we'd do to a child who scratched ridges in the door to be let out when the wind chill factor is 22 below and, when we stood there with the door open, sniffed and walked back into the living room by the fire?

No one understood recently when Pope John Paul opened the window of his study in St. Peter's Square and released in the rain two doves to symbolize man's quest for peace, and two seconds later, the doves flew back in and perched on a chair in his warm papal apartment.

Embarrassed, the Pope wagged his finger at the doves and said, "They'll fly later."

I say to this ... only if they feel like it.

About Your Range

Q. The once-shiny reflector bowls for my electric range surface units are now stained blue, gold or brown. What caused this — and how do I get them shiny again?

A. The blue and gold discoloration is caused by extreme over heating of the reflector bowl. This is usually a result of:

1.) Using a large, heavy pan that is much oversized for the surface unit. This type of usage creates a permanent blue or gold discoloration and is not removable from the metal. The most frequently cause of this type of damage is from large, heavy pans which block air flow and trap heat under the utensil — such as a large, heavy canner used continously for several hours on a surface unit set at HIGH heat.

2.) Overheating discoloration also may be caused by using pans with warped or ridged bottoms. Such utensils do no make good contact with a surface unit, allowing heat to be radiated to the reflector bowl rather than to the pan. Some speciality utensils which do not have flat bottoms, such as woks or tea kettles, are frequently identified as the cause of permanent reflector bowl discoloration.

3.) Brown or black stains are usually a result of food spatters, spills or boil-overs that have cooked onto the reflector bowl. Food spatters and spills should be cleaned as soon as the range top has cooled after cooking. The longer food spills cook on, the more difficult the cleaning job.

Badly discolored or permanently stained reflector bowls should be replaced.

Q. We have been broiling all our meat. My continous cleaning oven looks soiled and the finish no longer seems to effectively handle food spatters. How do I get the continuous cleaning system to work?

A. Continuous cleaning oven systems are designed to gradually reduce fat spatters to be a presently clean appearance during normal baking or roasting operations. The system doesn't have time to work effectively during the short broiling cycles, and fat spatters. How do I get the continuous cleaning system to work?

A. Continuous cleaning oven systems are designed to gradually reduce fat spatters to a presentably clean appearance during normal baking or roasting operations. The system doesn't have time to work effectively during the short broiling cycles, and fat spatters continue to buildup. For effective continuous cleaning, alternate broiling with baking cycles at temperatures of 350 degrees to 400 degrees F.

For safety reasons, the oven door area is designed to be cooler than oven walls. Some hand cleaning may be necessary for heavy spatters on the inner door and on walls near the front of the oven.

Be sure to line the bottom of the oven with heavy duty foil to catch spillovers containing sugars or starches. These food soils are very difficult to remove from the oven's surface.

Q. I turned my oven on and it will not heat. Why?

A. First, check the fuse or circuit breaker box to be sure there is power to the oven. Next, check all oven selector knobs to be sure they are set for BAKE and that the temperature control knob is set for the temperature needed. Does your oven have both MANUAL and TIMED bake settings? Be sure the oven is set for manual operation, not automatic timed bake. If none of these checks gets the oven started, you probably have a service problems which requires a technician's assistance.

Q. My self-cleaning oven was really soiled. Why wasn't it completely clean at the end of the one-hour self-clean cycle?

A. The one-hour self-cleaning is probably long enough for regular oven cleaning after typical use periods. For times when there has been prolonged usage with heavy spatters or spills that have cooked on, a longer cleaning cycle is necessary. Depending upon the build-up in the oven and the length of time it has been cooked-on, you may need to use a two or three-hour cleaning cycle. As with the continuous cleaning over system, some hand cleaning of the door near the gasket seal area may be necessary.

Ferre Given Best Collection Award At Milan Show

By DANIELA PETROFF
AP Fashion Writer

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Gianfranco Ferre, the architect turned fashion designer, won the prestigious "Occhio D'Oro" (Golden Eye) award for the best collection presented at the five-day Italian ready-to-wear showings for fall and winter 1986-87.

Thursday's announcement marked the third time the bespectacled, rotund Ferre, nicknamed "the teddy bear" by his fans, has been awarded the golden plaque in the form of an eye.

The semi-annual prize is sponsored by Revlon, and the winner is chosen by an international jury of fashion journalists.

Ferre's newest collection was different from anything he has done before. Known for his aesthetic sense and rigorous style, the Milanese designer shocked his audience with the shortest, tightest skirts seen on the runway this week.

Made of clinging brown leather and cropped way above the knee, they were often matched with zip-front leather jackets.

However, the rest of the collection was more typical of his conservative style. For daytime, Ferre dressed his winter woman in simple gray slacks tapered at the ankle with sporty snaps, and worn with a soft camel-colored turtleneck sweater.

A cozy tobacco-colored shearling jacket, belted at the waist, completed the outfit.

At night, the Ferre woman wore a rich gold lame cowlbacked sweater, over soft black silk pajama pants. A single gold earring and a gold band around the waist completed the look.

Overall, the Italian look for the upcoming fall-winter season is subdued in color and style. The favorite shade for next season is gray, while the cut is softer and rounder than in past seasons.

If not altogether gone, shoulder padding is almost replaced by a lot of dropped shoulders on jackets and dresses alike. There is little draping or fussing in the new collections, except for the gathered peplum front of the Ferre jacket.

Hemlines shown in Milan offered something for everyone, from some almost as short as Ferre's, like the "Complice" skirt designed by Claude Montana, to the ankle-length dresses favored by fashion star Giorgio Armani. Most lengths hovered around the knee, or dropped to mid-calf.

If not an exciting look, fall and winter Italian ready-to-wear appeals to the woman who wants well-cut, snappy clothes that will last more than one season. Prices range from several hundred dollars to many thousands of dollars per outfit.

Ordering Seed Catalogs Is A Favorite Spring Ritual

By LAWRENCE KILMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the cold weeks ahead, men and women alike will be warmed by sensual photographs of smooth skin and firm flesh. The pictures will recall earthy memories and enticing aromas.

These people will pore over luscious pictures of "Lady Luck," a real tomato, and Celosia and Clematis, Cosmos, Pompoms and Dahlia. There is Iholena White, Little Marvel and Alaska Pea. New Ace, Bell Boy and Big Bertha.

The 1986 seed catalogs are here.

Recalling the warm nights of late summer harvest, these are perfect "wish books" for the cold winter months. Harvest memories would not exist without them.

Avid gardeners who want early results have to start ordering seeds long before it is time to plant. And ordering seeds for fruits, vegetables and flowers is far from a mundane task.

First, you might look at your old favorites, remembering the bountiful harvests you've had before. But gardeners by nature are a bold, experimental lot, unafraid of failure, and they often try new things.

Want to try seeds from a new catalog? Harrowsmith, a magazine of country life, lists 113 to choose from. How about a new hybrid? There are as many as 200 new vegetable varieties released each year, according to David Sams, a gardening specialist at the University of Tennessee.

No two catalogs are alike. For example, The Banana Tree, an unillustrated, 20-page catalog, specializes in banana plants with names like "Iholena White" and "Pink Orinoco" and also offers other exotic plants. For those with the greenhouses or the tropical conditions necessary to support these plants, the catalog is available from a decidedly non-tropical address: The Banana Tree, 715 Northampton St., Easton, Pa. 18042. The Cook's Garden catalog from Vermont, claims to have the world's largest selection of salad greens, including 35 varieties of lettuce, 13 chicories and 28 "hard to find" salad greens. The catalog is free from The Cook's Garden, Box 65, Londonderry, Vt. 05148.

The lavish Burpee catalog, one of the nation's favorites, offers an orgy of color photographs in its 191 pages. Among its hundreds of vegetables, flowers, fruits and trees are 56 varieties of marigolds, 34 varieties of tomatoes, 21 varieties of bush and pole beans, 18 varieties of corn, and 12 varieties of watermelon.

The free catalog is available from W. Atlee Burpee Co., 300 Park Ave., Warminster, Pa. 18991.

Here are some of the other catalogs available, with addresses for ordering:

—The Vermont Bean Seed Co. offers far more than beans. It lists more than 140 varieties of beans, peas, corn and other vegetables. The catalog features photographs of some of the 24 new varieties. The Vermont Bean Seed Co., Garden Lane, Bomoseen, Vt. 05732-0308. Free.

—John Brudy Exotics offers seeds for plants like Himalayan Cypress, Japanese Pagoda Tree and True Irish Shamrock. The 12-page, mimeographed catalog contains no pictures but offers good descriptions and growing tips. John Brudy Exotics, 3411 Westfield Dr., Brandon, Fla. 33511. The catalog costs $1, which is deducted from the first order.

—The Abundant Life Seed Foundation, a non-profit corporation, is dedicated to preserving the plants and seeds "of the native and naturalized flora of the North Pacific rim." Its 39-page catalog offers wildflowers, trees and shrubs, herbs, small grains and edible seeds, and a variety of vegetables. Abundant Life Seed Foundation, P.O. Box 772, Port Townsend, Wa. 98368. $1.

—Butterbrooke Farm has a two-page seed list, which hardly qualifies it as a catalog. But the 8-year-old farm cooperative provides a variety of vegetable and herb seeds that mature quickly, a plus for areas like New England where the growing season is short. The seeds are also inexpensive. Butterbrooke Farm, 78 Barry Rd., Oxford, Conn. 06483. Free.

—Bountiful Gardens produces a 77-page catalog aimed at organic gardeners. Vegetable, flower and herb seeds are imported from Chase Organics in England, and additional seeds come from Bountiful's own research gardens. Bountiful Gardens, 5798 Ridgewood Rd., Willits, Ca. 95490. Free.

—Cornell University has seeds for varieties of vegetables that were grown in the 19th century. Seed packets come in two sizes: 22 varieties for a 10-foot-by-15-foot garden, and 36 varieties for a 10-foot-by-30-foot garden. A self-addressed stamped envelope is needed for a price list from The Heirloom Garden Project, Roger A. Kline, Department of Vegetable Crops, 157 Plant Science Building, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y. 14853.

—Mexican food fans can't be without the heart-burning catalog from Horticultural Enterprises, which offers 30 varieties of peppers as well as other Mexican-American vegetables and herbs. Horticultural Enterprises, P.O. Box 810082, Dallas, Texas, 75381-0082. Free.

SEED CATALOGS . . . Shown are various seed catalogs for the 1986 season. In the cold weeks remaining, plant growers across the country will be heartened by the variety of new seed and plant catalogs that the industry has produced this year. Many of the catalogs are mailed out in February and March. (AP Laserphoto)

FRANCOIS BOUCHER

NEW YORK (AP) — An exhibition of the works of Francois Boucher (1703-70) is on view at the Metropolitan Museum of Art through May 4.

The exhibition consists of over 80 paintings by Boucher as well as six tapestries and a number of porcelains after his designs.

The museum says, "Boucher was one of the most accomplished of French artists. He created an ideal world that captured the essence of the court of Louis XV — the most exquisite social and cultural assembly of Rococo Europe. His impact on other painters, decorators, architects and craftsmen, both in France and elsewhere in Europe, was immense."

GNOMON SCULPTURE — Sculptor Thomas Sayre's work, "Gnomon," was recently unveiled on the grounds of the North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics in Durham. The piece is comprised of large concrete slabs cast on the ground and titled upward to make walls. Sayre's expressed goal was "to create sculptures that don't live on pedestals." The work was funded through the "Art Works in State Buildings" legislation passed in 1982 by the N. C. General Assembly.

Wild Horses Readied For Adoption

BOSSIER CITY, La. (AP) — Plucked from the wilds of the west, more than 200 untamed horses and burros will wind up this week in local stockyards, where federal officials will put them up for adoption and prepare them for domestic life.

Some of the animals are likely to be put to work on rural farms. Others will wind up as riding horses for urban cowboy types like James and Claudia Coffey, who already keep 11 formerly wild horses on their 25-acre ranch in the southwestern part of nearby Shreveport.

The Coffeys plan to be at the Bossier stockyards Friday when the 150 horses and 75 burros go up for adoption, courtesy of the U.S. Interior Department.

Interior Department officials make the horses available to anyone interested in owning them for a $125 adoption fee; the burros go for $75. The animals are offered on a first-come, first-served basis. The sale begins March 21 and will continue for three days.

"I love it," said Claudia Coffey. She said the wild horses, if properly cared for and trained, are as easy to work with as horses raised in captivity.

Don Libbey of the Interior Department's Jackson, Miss., office said the department rounds up wild horses and removes them from their native Western states because their numbers have increased rapidly since they were given federal protection in 1971.

He said the department's Bureau of Land Management wants to reduce the population to prevent serious harm to the range land.

The bureau rounds up the animals and takes them to different locations throughout the country, Libbey said. Owners have trained the horses for riding, farm work, showing, breeding and pets, he said.

Libbey estimates that there are now between 50,000 and 55,000 wild horses and burros in eight Western states. Most of the horses are concentrated in Nevada, Wyoming and Oregon, according to Carl Gammon, who also works with the Interior Department's Jackson office. The burros are found mostly in California and Arizona, Gammon said.

Gammon said close to 60,000 animals have been put up for adoption throughout the country since the program began in 1973.

Claudia Coffey said she became interested in the wild horses two years ago when the department held a horse and burro adoption program in Clarence, La., south of Shreveport. The Coffeys, who own a towing business and describe their collection of horses as a hobby, got two horses at the Clarence stockyards. They slowly added to their collection over the past two years.

The horses are given their shots, wormed and checked out by veterinarians before they are adopted, she said. After one year the animals are given a complete checkup.

If the animals are healthy, the people who adopted them are awarded full ownership. If the animals have not been taken care of properly, the federal government can take back the horses, James Coffey said.

The horses have to be trained slowly, Mrs. Coffey said. But some take to their surroundings faster than others.

NCMA Evening Art Lectures

RALEIGH — Three experts on American folk art will discuss its various forms and reevaluate its definition in a series of Thursday evening lectures at the North Carolina Museum of Art.

Lectures are scheduled at 8 p.m. Thursday and on March 27 and April 3. The programs accompany the current exhibition at the museum, "Heavenly Visions: The Art of Minnie Evans." Ms. Evans is from Wilmington and a noted North Carolina folk artist who paints colorful, elaborte scenes of dreams and visions, many of them encompassing angels and areas of lyrical designs.

Henry Glassie, professor of folklore at the University of Pennsylvania, will open the series on Thursday with his lecture: "Folk Art: A History of American Creativity."

On March 27, Herbert Hemphill of New York City, a folk art collector and author in the field, will speak on "Folk and Outsider Art: A Reevaluation."

The series will conclude April 3 with a talk by Charles Zug of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, guest curator of the current exhibition "Five North Carolina Folk Artists" on view at the Ackland Art Museum.

Tickets for the three lectures are $9 ($7 for members of the North Carolina Art Society); single tickets are $3.50. For more information, call the museum at 833-1935.

Writers' Network Making Big Strides

By MEG GUNKEL, N.C. Department Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Writers' Network (NCWN) in less than a year has organized spring classes, conferences, readings and radio broadcasts to benefit writers — from poets and novelists to technical writers — and share their work with the public.

The Writers Network was established in July, 1985 with a N.C. Arts Council salary-assistance grant. Last fall the council agreed to fund a statewide reading series and poetry competition which began in January.

WUNC Public Radio in Chapel Hill is recording state poets for broadcast, and the National Endowment for the Arts, Durham Arts Council and Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation have helped with grants and in-kind assistance.

"The Arts Council grant has probably made all the difference in the success of the Writers' Network," said NCWN executive director Robert Long. "It's hard to overestimate the benefits of that Arts Council support. The writers' network is the first of its kind in the country with a paid staff." The network has approximately 350 members, he added.

Jean McLaughlin, director of the Arts Council's visual/literary arts section, said the salary grant is designed to assist organizations in establishing permanent high-level professional staff positions in arts fields. "The NCWN is a statewide resource center for writers which also programs readings throughout the state, plans workshops on writing and provides publishing opportunities for North Carolina writers and as a coordinating body for literary programming in the state."

Currently, the NCWN is sending 20 writers to 10 locations across the state for a series called "Places and People in North Carolina Literature." The series will feature two writers and a moderator at each location to read and discuss literature.

The series opened Feb. 23 at Weymouth Center in Southern Pines with poet John Foster West and fiction writer Jill McCorkle. N.C. Poet Laureate Sam Ragan was moderator.

Locations, times and panel members for the remaining programs are:

- Reynolda House in Winston-Salem, 8 p.m., March 19, Marianne Gingher, fiction, Julie Suk, poet, and moderator Shirley Anders.
- Poetry Center Southeast in Greensboro, 8 p.m., March 24, fiction writers Margaret Maron and Anne Russell and moderator Ann Deagon.
- UNC-Wilmington, 8 p.m., April 4, poets Kathryn S. Byer and Becke Roughton and moderator Charles Fort.
- Appalachian State University, Boone, 3 p.m., April 9, fiction writer Ann Deagon and poet Nancy Simpson, moderator John F. West.
- Western Carolina University, Cullowhee, 8 p.m., April 10, poet James Applewhite and fiction writer Linda Brown Bragg, moderator Kathryn S. Byer.
- Richard Thornton Library in Oxford, 3 p.m., April 13, poet Gerald Barrax and fiction writer Lee Smith, moderator Judy Hogan.
- Carteret County Library, Beaufort, 7 p.m., April 24, poets Mary Kratt and Mary Snotherly, moderator Carol Hayman.

The Writers' Network also is currently sponsoring classes in nine cities and towns in poetry, short fiction, playwrighting, technical writing/editing, journal writing, query letter writing and interviewing. These began in different dates in February and will end in early April.

A final spring program will be a conference at the University of North Carolina at Asheville May 23-25 to explore "N.C. Women and Literature."

For more information on the N.C. Writers' Network, call Robert Long at 683-1502.

Snyder Play Next For Local Readings

Lynn Snyder, a native of Akron, Ohio, is the playwright to be in Greenville this week as guest of The Playwrights' Fund of North Carolina, Inc.

LYNN SNYDER

On Wednesday, her one-act play, "Zing Zang," will be presented in two reading productions. The first will be held at noon at the Best Lunch Theater Ever at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street. The second reading will be at the Downtown, Downstairs office of the fund in the basement of the Humber Building, corner of Fifth and Washington streets.

Admission to both performances is free and open to the public. Those attending the noon performance can bring bag lunches with liquid refreshments to be served by the staff of the art museum.

Dr. Norman Rosenfeld, a professor in English at East Carolina Univrsity and a specialist in poetry and contemporary literature, will head a post-performance discussion of the play with the audience and playwright.

Jeff Jones is the play's director, with Don Roebuck and Joey Pollock cast in the roles of Sam and Eli, respectively.

In her early years, Ms. Synder moved with her family to Miami and lived there until leaving to attend the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, where she received degrees in English literature and political science.

She has worked in Miami as a freelance writer, then worked with a newspaper in New Jersey before spending a year and one-half in London as a reporter. She has also worked on a newspaper in Los Angeles and as an instructor at a community college in San Francisco.

Last year, on a Jerome Foundation Scholarship, Ms. Snyder was playwright-in-residence at the Playwrights' Center in Minneapolis. She has also received grants from the Minnesota Stte Arts Board, the Mary Roberts Rhinehart Foundation, and a summer residency in Taos, New Mexico from the Helene Wurlitzer Foundation.

Her plays have been produced in Berkley, Calif., at the Berkley Stage Company and Theater of the Blue Rose.

"Zing Zang," her play being presented in Greenville, deals with a 64-year-old man Sam, and his best friend, Eli. Each year the two celebrate their birthdays together by meeting for lunch to read the Talmud. On the birthday covered in the play, Sam tests Eli's capacity for forgiveness when he reveals his almost-affair with Eli's wife.

DECORATING TIPS

Doing the house in colors you like but the rest of the family dislikes is another common color mistake. Don't go with colors that are in fashion just because it is the trend, rather use colors that everyone feels comfortable with and take into consideration the type exposure the room has.

If a room has a Western or Southern exposure, cool colors, such as blue and green will make the room feel cooler. If the room has a Northern or Eastern exposure, a warm color such as red or orange will warm the room.

Remember, every two years the color schemes are changing, so find a color scheme that fits your personality or your family. Most colors do have an effect on you. Green has the least effect and is the easiest to live with. Blue has a tendency to slow you down while warm colors such as red and orange will speed you up.

Even a seemingly simple task of putting together a color scheme can be very complicated with many variables to be considered. At Betsy Drake Interiors, Inc., we offer the expertise necessary to help you achieve a professional look in your home or office decorating. At ECU's Gray Gallery Three Artists To Be Featured

Three artists will have their work to go on view at Gray Gallery, East Carolina University this week.

On Monday, Peter D'Agostino will open his video installation, with work by Al Loving and Paul Oberst to be on view beginning Friday.

A reception for all three, open to the public, will take place at 7:30 p.m. Friday at the gallery.

D'Agostino's videodisc project, "Double You (and X, Y, Z)" is now on national tour. It is supported by the National Endowment for the Arts, the American Film Institute, the Penn Council on the Arts, the Center for Advanced Visual Studies at MIT and Temple University.

The videodisc is a four-part structured interactive work based on the four forces now believed to cause all physical interactions in the universe; light, gravity, strong and weak forces.

D'Agostino received the BFA from the School of Visual Arts in New York City and the MA degree from San Francisco State University in California. He attended the Art Students League in New York City and the Academia de Belle Arte in Naples, Italy. He has received four fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts and other fellowships and grants from Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania.

He currently teaches in Philadelphia where he is associate professor of communications for the Temple University Department of Radio-TV-Film. In 1982 he was a visiting professor of art at UNC-Chapel Hill.

D'Agostino has taken part in group shows in the Museum of Modern Art and the Whitney Museum of American Art, New York City, in San Francisco, and in foreign countries — Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Spain and Switzerland. His work is in numerous collections including those of the Museum of Modern Art and the National Gallery of Canada.

He will give a lecture, free and open to the public, at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the auditorium of the Jenkins Fine Arts Center.

• Al Loving, artist-in-residence at Virginia Commonwealth University, is showing paper pieces and monoprints. His free, open to the public lecture will be given in the Jenkins auditorium at 4:30 p.m. Friday.

He holds the MFA from the University of Michigan and the BFA from the University of Illinois. Loving has exhibited his work in numerous shows, including the Whitney Museum of American Art and Studio Museum in Harlem, both New York City, in other galleries in New York, at the University of Vermont, Burlington, at Notre Dame University, and in Philadelphia and Detroit.

Loving was awarded the National Endowment for the Arts fellowship on four separate occasions, and in 1975 received the Creative Artist Public Service Grant from the New York State Council on the Arts.

Among public commissions he has received are three from New York City, as well as ones from Detroit, Mich. and Albany, N.Y. He is best known for his woven fabric paintings although currently he is working with handmade paper and monoprints.

• Paul Oberst, a visiting artist from Boston, will be exhibiting drawings and sculpture in the Gray Gallery show. His lecture will be at 7:30 p.m. March 24 in Jenkins auditorium.

Oberst's work combines sculpture, painting and drawing. With charcoal and graphite he creates dark atmospheric backgrounds from which he carves plant forms. His work deals primarily with twilight and evening hours.

He has had numerous solo and group exhibitions in Boston, Cleveland, Chicago, and Akron, Ohio. Among his commissioned pieces have been costume designs for dance and a set design for the Footpath Dance Company. He was awarded a 1982 fellowship from the Fine Arts Work Center in Provincetown, Mass.

The three exhibitions will be on view through April 12. Gallery hours are 10 to 5 Monday-Saturday, and until 8 p.m. Wednesdays. For more details, call 757-6336.

Volunteers Crucial To North Carolina Archaeology

By Meg Gunkel
N.C. Department
Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — Some 1,000 years ago, members on an Indian community in Onslow County ritualistically buried a dog. A grave was dug, lined with oyster shells, and after the interment, more shells covered the animal.

The dog remained at rest until 1984 when developers started construction of a marina and townhouses. State archaeologists and volunteers excavated a portion of the coastal site, finding five dog burials, pottery, stone tools and plant and animal remains. The site was radio carbon dated to A.D. 830.

The dog skeleton was removed, encased in an earthen block, and for the past year Malcolm Davis and other Raleigh volunteers have painstakingly brushed away the dirt, then cleaned, identified and analyzed each bone.

Davis has been a volunteer with the Archaeology Branch of the Department of Cultural Resources for seven years. He spends his days as a manager for Durham Life Insurance Company. His weekly help in the archaeology lab is an outgrowth of a childhood passion of searching for arrowheads and other Indian artifacts.

"I get a thrill when we are removing things from the earth — to think I am the first human to see it after so many years," said Davis, who also is president of the Friends of North Carolina Archaeology, Inc., a nonprofit support group for the Branch. He has spent vacations at archaeological digs of prehistoric Indian sites, including the possible sites of Secotan and Pomeiooc, which were visited by artist John White in 1585 during the Roanoke voyages of Sir Walter Raleigh.

The dog burials are particularly intriguing to Davis. "The interesting thing to me is that these were deliberate burials," he said. "The excavation was lined with oyster shells. I never thought prehistoric man had an affection for dogs like that."

DOG GRAVE . . . About ten centuries past, members of an Indian settlement in what is now Onslow County buried a dog in a ritualistic manner. The dog's skeleton was uncovered in 1984 when state archaeologists and volunteers excavated a coastal site in Onslow. Five dog burials, pottery, stone tools and other artifacts were uncovered. (Photo courtesy N.C. Department of Cultural Resources)

Since undisturbed dog burials are rare, there are few data for comparison, but state archaeologist Bill Oliver said the dog was about the size of a large beagle and "something like a pit bull." Davis' work will provide the state archaeology program with a comparative collection of dog bones for future references.

Davis and his dog bones typify the work of the Archaeology Branch, which depends on volunteers and cooperation with developers and private citizens in saving archaeological resources, which literally litter the state.

Davis is one of about a dozen volunteers trained by staff archaeologists to help with the lab work needed to continue analyzing and interpreting archaeological discoveries.

Various Artifacts

While the dog bones are carefully analyzed, volunteer Barbara Lucas may be scrubbing artifacts such as pigs' teeth, glass and pipe stems, silver buttons and buckles, nails, spoons and a whalebone comb found at another coastal site known to have been inhabited since the late 1600s by early, and affluent, European settlers.

The cardinal rule in her work, she said, is not to get the artifacts confused. "We have to keep track of everything, like where it's from and what it's found with," she explained.

Young Volunteer

At 14, Jason Lyon is one of the youngest volunteers. He stops by the archaeology lab about once a week, usually after school, and tackles heaping trays of pottery fragments called potsherds. He sorts them by texture and surface features. Some pieces may be a mixture of clay and crushed shells or clay and sand. Designs were made by carved wooden paddles, fabric impressions, cord impressions, and more rarely, corncobs.

The work of these volunteers is often tedious, but always important, said Stephen Claggett, chief archaeologist for the state.

"It's not by any stretch of the imagination an Indiana Jones-type thing," he stressed. "Our volunteers are very dedicated and they help us a lot. It's well worth it to supervise and train these people, and serves as part of our public education role too."

Volunteers Fill Gap

The Archaeology Branch, in fact, does very little excavation because of limited time and manpower. Without volunteers, even less field work would be accomplished. "The volunteers really do fill a gap for us, by bringing a lot of enthusiasm to their work," Claggett said. Even a small excavation, however, generates a lot of artifacts, and the lab also has a large backlog of artifacts from collections of other archaeologists and amateur collectors.

Claggett said one major goal of his office is to maintain an inventory of archaeology sites throughout the state. He estimates North Carolina has on record 15,000 prehistoric sites dating back to 10,000 B.C., plus several thousand historic sites. A prehistoric site pertains to a culture with no written history, and a historic site includes a written history, such as diaries or household bills and records.

"Town Creek Indian Mound would be an example of a spectacular prehistoric site," Claggett said, "while a less spectacular site would be someone finding an arrowhead on the ground." Historic sites range from tenant farm locations to former plantations.

Depends On Public

The Archaeology Branch, which has offices in Raleigh, Asheville and Kure Beach, depends heavily on public information. Two Indian canoes "buried" in Phelps Lake at Pettigrew State Park were spotted by the park superintendent, who contacted the Archaeology Branch. Claggett surmises that the Phelps Lake areas was an Indian settlement now probably underwater. The location and artifact records are entered on maps and computers as a way to keep track of sites, even if they are not excavated.

The archaeologists identify many sites through compliance and review functions. Any construction involving state and federal permits must be reviewed by the archaeologists for possible impacts on archaeological remains. Many sites unfortunately are lost through land development, while others are never excavated.

Options Possible

"It rarely comes down to stepping in front of a bulldozer," Claggett said. "You can't be unreasonable, but some sites bear saving and there are several options we can work with." A road planned to run through an identified site may be altered to bypass the site, he explained, or condominium developers may be persuaded to incorporate a green space where the site is located. "So, even if we don't know exactly what is there, it is preserved," he said.

More uncommonly, the Archaeology Branch's interest in a site becomes contagious. In December 1984, a real estate partnership deeded just over five acres of Randolph County land to the Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina, Inc., acting on behalf of the Archaeology Branch. The land was part of a tract known as the Thayer Farm and slated for residential subdivision.

The site had been officially recorded in the early 1960s, but not seriously investigated until the construction threatened it. Testing at the site revealed undisturbed late prehistoric (ca. A.D. 800-1200) deposits covering as much as 20 acres. Pottery, arrowheads, animal bone and shell were collected, along with human bone, indicating the presence of burials.

Significant Donation

The Thayer Farm site donation was the first donation of its kind to the Archaeology Branch and the Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina, Inc., and highlights the type of cooperation the archaeologists depend on to preserve and interpret the heritage of the state.

Reenactment Of Battle March

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department
Of Cultural Resources

BENTONVILLE — History will repeat itself Thursday through Sunday as uniformed Confederates recreate the Averasboro to Bentonville march, this time for pledges for the Red Cross.

The marchers, duplicating the route taken by Col. William Hardee's troops and camping near the same 120 year-old campsites, will be marching for pledge-per-mile contributions to benefit the Red Cross and the Bentonville Historical Association.

Reenactment Cpl. Craig Braswell will lead reenactment units from all over North Carolina to retrace the route taken by forces under command of Hardee and Gen. Joseph E. Johnston to Bentonville Battleground. The march will culminate Saturday at the battleground where marchers will be honored in 4 p.m. ceremonies.

Following the march, volunteers will recreate the field hospital set up in the home of John and Amy Harper during the battle, and Civil War camplife in the fields surrounding the house.

For the first time, volunteers will bring alive the entire field hospital including simulated conditions in several areas of treatment and surgery.

Cliff Tyndall, programs coordinator for the Bentonville Battlefield site, will also take the role of the Union surgeon who served there.

In addition to the functioning Union field hospital at the Harper House where visitors may witness surgery in progress and talk to Sherman's soldiers, displays will include a U.S. Sanitary Commission, forerunner of the American Red Cross; and a Red Cross exhibit. First person interpreters will give tours of all areas.

During the anniversary weekend, activities will be continuous on Saturday from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and on March 23 from noon to 3 p.m.

All events are free and open to the public.

Bentonville Battleground is located near Newton Grove, three miles north on US 701 and then three miles east on SR 1008. The telephone number is 549-0789.

In addition to Clements, ten other speakers from locations all across the U.S. are scheduled to conduct workshops. These include Rev. David C. Dr. Bratton's History Of East Carolina University Published

ECU News Bureau

Copies of the official institutional history, "East Carolina University: The Formative Years 1907-1982" by Dr. Mary Jo Jackson Bratton have been placed on sale locally and are ready for distribution.

Publication date of the 550-page work is April 18, and a schedule of publication events has been announced by the Office of Alumni Affairs and the university.

Dr. John M. Howell, ECU chancellor, said he had read drafts of the book. "I found it very thorough, a scholarly endeavor which has captured the essence of East Carolina University. I read it with a great deal of pride," Howell said.

James L. Lanier Jr., vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement, said, "The book was especially written for alumni and friends, for people who've shared the ECU experience. The Alumni Association leadership thought this book would be such an important asset to the University, they agreed to help underwrite the cost and to market the book.

"University histories are not written to make money, but we hope this one hits the best seller list among our alumni. We're indebted to Dr. Bratton for her extensive work and to the Alumni Association for making it available to the public," Lanier said.

An official reception announcing the book and honoring Dr. Bratton will be held at the Chancellor's residence Thursday, April 10 from 5-7 p.m. That same day from 1-3:00 p.m. the Student Store in Whichard Building will host an autographing session.

"It's quite an impressive volume. We're very proud of the book and of Dr. Bratton's work. We knew when we read the manuscript that she had done a fine job, but somehow seeing the text in its final form, pictures, dust jacket and all, is even more gratifying. We've been waiting four years for the finished product, and I believe the wait was well-worth it," Howell said.

Dr. Bratton added, "It's hard to believe it's really, finally here. I think the printers did a fine job. My strongest hope is that our alumni will be happy with the volume, that they will claim this history as a part of their history. I want those who read the book to realize anew, or perhaps for the first time, how vibrant and strong this great university has always been."

The Friends of the Library will sponsor an autographing party in the lobby of Joyner Library on Alumni Day, April 19. The public is invited to attend from 3-5 p.m.

Mail order forms are available from the Office of Alumni Affairs, Linda Morton, Taylor/Slaughter Alumni Center, 901 E. Fifth Street, Greenville, or by calling her at 757-6686.

Alumni, students and faculty may purchase the book by mailorder for a special introductory price of $19.95 through October 1, 1986. The suggested retail price is $22.95.

A MANY-LIMBED TREE — Just before the arrival of obscuring spring leaves, the multiple heavy-limbed growth of this tree is easily discernible. Nearly a dozen big branches grow from a relatively small trunk. The tree is located in the yard of a homestead next door to The Doctor's Museum in Bailey. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Chimney Rock Opens For The 1986 Season

CHIMNEY ROCK — Chimney Rock Park, a natural scenic attraction in Western North Carolina, opened its gates for the 1986 seson March 15. Chimney Rock, a huge monolith rises out of the base of sheer cliffs which afford a spectacular panorama of Hickory Nut Gorge. The rock was so named, some claim, as early settlers decided the formation looked like a smokestack. Others say it received its name because Indians used it as a platform for sending smoke signals.

Baseball Caps Becoming Popular

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

WAYCROSS, Ga. (AP) — Baseball caps continue to spread the word for fertilizer and seed companies, but their low cost and utility have carried them from the barnyard to the boardroom as one of the nation's hottest promotional items.

"It's something you can give away and it will be utilized," said Bennie James, 48, who is credited with establishing Waycross as a major manufacturing center for baseball caps. "You give them a cap and they'll just pop it on their heads."

Baseball caps used to be identified with good ol' boys in pickup trucks, or sports fans who donned them to identify with their favorite teams. But with companies passing them out by the millions to promote everything from banking to booze, it is almost un-American not to own at least one.

Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner sometimes sports a baseball cap, as does actor Burt Reynolds, who was born in Waycross. Even Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev once slipped one on during a visit to Canada.

Now, baseball caps have been elevated into the realm of diplomacy. With the People's Republic of China gearing up to sell caps in the United States, the U.S. government has placed baseball caps on the agenda for negotiations that will establish apparel and textile quotas, according to Roy Langenberg, president of the Headwear Institute of America.

America's 250 manufacturers produced about 154 million baseball caps last year, while another 156 million were imported from places like Taiwan, Korea and the Carribean, he said.

"They're everywhere," Langenberg said of the $750 million-a-year industry. "We're selling more than one cap to every man, woman and child in the United States in a year, so they're going someplace."

Their popularity has been mounting since the early 1970s, when implement dealers began passing out "harvest hats" emblazoned with company logos to Midwest farmers.

As tastes shifted to casual attire and active sportswear, more people began wearing them to conceal bald pates, to provide eye shade or to keep heads warm on chilly days.

Some wear them to identify with a product or to convey a message. Others have joined a growing number of collectors.

"Our salesmen have found that literally everyone is a prospect," said Langenberg, who runs a hat factory in Washington, Mo. "It is a part of working-class America, but also leisure America. I'm sure we have our share of corporate executives who have their Caterpiller cap while they're barbecuing in the back yard."

The cap industry in Waycross got its start in the early 1970s, when James became frustrated over his inability to obtain an adequate supply of Little League caps for his sporting goods shop.

He dispatched an employee to Virginia to learn cap making, then assigned two workers the job of stitching them together for a company he formed in 1975. When James sold out a few years later, his company had 80 employees.

At present, there are seven baseball cap companies within a 35-mile radius of this south Georgia railroad center, many of them started by James' former employees.

Locally, the industry provides jobs for about 800 workers who produce up to 50,000 caps a day, according to Joey McQuaig, owner of Brand Images, a company that makes promotional and novelty caps.

In one section of McQuaig's factory, workers screen designs on the front panels of caps. The "puff ink" they use contains yeast that causes the lettering and art work to rise when heated, making the designs stand out better than than normal inks.

Elsewhere, women sit at high-speed machines stitching together panels of nylon mesh and foam-backed cotton that will become the hat crowns. Others sew on visors and sweat bands.

Near the end of the production line, a worker operates a hydraulic press that attaches cloth-covered steel buttons to the tops of the caps.

At another plant operated by Transco Group Inc., art director Ann Thrift and her staff hunch over drawing boards working out designs to be applied to the fronts of caps.

The artists also coin many of the slogans that appear on the novelty caps sold at convenience stores throughout the South. The slogans range from the nice to the naughty: "American By Birth, Rebel By Choice" or "Warning, Sex Spreads Germs (Quick, Make Me Sick)."

Owner Jimmy Hickox, who founded three of the area's cap companies during his 10 years in the business, described the front of a baseball cap as a "walking billboard." About 80 percent of Transco's caps are used to promote products and services.

While some might opt for a hat bearing a Confederate flag and the slogan, "Dixie, Closest Thing to Heaven," Hickox has begun making corduroy caps with subtle designs for customers with more conservative tastes.

Hickox also has invested $50,000 in a computerized machine that promises to usher in a new generation of caps, with designs embroidered directly onto the fabric.

"That's seen as a little bit more quality, a little bit more fashionable," said Quentin Hatfield, vice president of marketing for K-Products Inc., the nation's largest promotional cap manufacturer based in Orange City, Iowa.

"All spectrums, all income levels are wearing baseball caps," said Hatfield, a board member of the New York-based Headwear Institute. "It is the No. 1 wearable promotional item."

Langenberg said consumers can expect new colors ranging from pastels to earth tones and a greater variety of materials.

"The consumption is growing ... and it's tied in with today's casual living," he said. "People either want to play sports or look like they play sports."

PREPARING FOR COMPETITION . . . Members of the Rose High School Symphonic Wind Ensemble are shown in a recent rehearsal at the band room in Rose. Chuck Allen is the conductor. This group, along with the Aycock Concert Band and the Aycock Symphonic Ensemble, will be taking part in the annual North Carolina State Bands Contest Festival. The Rose group will perform at Rocky Mount Senior High March 26; the Aycock groups will perform at Beddingfield School, Wilson, March 22. (Reflector Photo by Christ Bennett)

Book News
From Sheppard Memorial Library

By WILLIE MAE GIBBS

The South African woman and her struggle against apartheid is the focus of two new books at the library.

"Winnie Mandela," a biography written by South African journalist Nancy Harrison, depicts the remarkable life of a woman who has unceasingly led a fight for justice for more than 20 years.

Separated from her husband for 23 of their 26 years of marriage, Winnie Mandela became a leading force in the effort to reform South African society. She has endured countless arrests, bannings and dententions, and has served terms in prison, including 17 months in solitary confinement.

Her husband was sentenced to life imprisonment, her children persecuted, her friends harassed. Through all of this Winnie never abandoned her ideal of a just South Africa in which blacks and whites would be equally free to enjoy the land of their birth.

Banished to the remote farming community of Brandfort in 1977, Winnie continued her struggle by leading villagers in forms of protest and by organizing relief efforts to assuage the severe ghetto conditions.

Government attempts to send her into obscurity and to curb her influence failed as Winnie Mandela became the focus of international attention.

This admiring biography pays tribute to her dignity and courage and indicates how she could emerge as an important figure in her own right.

• In a book called "Poppie Nongena," Elsa Joubert has written the story of another South African woman's struggle against apartheid. Poppie's contented childhood ends and her struggles begin when she married a migrant worker and moves to Cape Town, the center of the country's black resistance movement against apartheid.

No sooner has she established roots there than the authorities want her and her children to go to the Ciskei, her husband's homeland. Her husband, as a laborer, may stay. Poppie's struggle to keep her family together in the teeth of a system that makes life a series of uprootings is what this story is all about.

'My Beautiful Laundrette' A Winner

By MATT WOLF
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Without big names or a big budget, "My Beautiful Laundrette" is spinning its way to success with a gritty, often humorous depiction of British racism and sexual politics.

Cited as best film at the London Standard Film Awards in January, it has grossed $560,000 in London alone after three months of release. It opens in New York and Los Angeles during the first week of March and then elsewhere in the United States later in the month.

The movie presents an England that few Americans know.

"It's more about Britain than 'Brideshead,'" said director Stephen Frears, who contrasted his film's contemporary portrait of Asian immigrants with the languorous, upper-class types in the popular television series, "Brideshead Revisited."

The racism in the movie is unfortunate but true, Frears added.

"The movie has a sensitive finger on the pulse of this country now," said Roshan Seth, who stars in the $882,000 film.

The only Asian in his class at the prestigious London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art in 1965, Seth won critical acclaim for his depiction of the late Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru in the Academy Award-winning movie, "Gandhi." He also was praised in his off-Broadway role of a right-wing novelist in David Hare's "A Map of the World."

Seth said that in its own low-cost way "My Beautiful Laundrette" is revolutionary because its examination of British racial and sexual politics conflicts with England's cinematic obsession with nostalgic period pieces set among the leisured class of whites.

Seth portrays Papa, an indolent drunk. He is an immigrant from Pakistan whose son, Omar (Gordon Warnecke), is given a laundromat to manage by Papa's entrepreneur brother, Nasser (Saeed Jaffrey).

"Papa belongs to a generation of Asians that I recognized very clearly," Seth said in an interview.

"Conditioned to believe in the superiority of white liberal values, Papa is betrayed in his mother country. He has no escape route but the final one of drink."

The two brothers represent two different roads in England, said Hanif Kureishi, who wrote the script.

"The drunk is liberalism and its failure in England. Nasser is the enterprise culture of Thatcherism," he said, referring to the self-starting initiative favored by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Caught in the middle, Omar finds racial and social acceptance complicated by his rekindled romance with a reformed white thug named Johnny (Daniel Day Lewis), who was once part of Britain's racist National Front.

Nasser, who is married to an Asian woman, has his own secret trysts with a white mistress.

"Most English films show Europeans in exotic costumes copulating in India. This shows Indians in exotic costumes copulating in England," laughed Kureishi.

For the screenwriter, the success of "My Beautiful Laundrette" is just a beginning. "We live in an intolerant and deeply racist society," he said. "As a writer, this area is so rich, and it's hardly been touched.

"There are so many stories to be told, and we've got to get on with it. I hope this film shows it is possible to get an audience."

The movie is 90 minutes long. But it could have been a serious epic, Kureishi said.

"It would have been quite easy to make a long, hard, harrowing film, but our daily life is so harrowing," he said.

"My Beautiful Laundrette" was originally intended as a television movie. It was made a theatrical release after enthusiastic screenings at the Edinburgh and London Film Festivals.

New Money Source For Country Stars

EDITOR'S NOTE — The rhinestone cowboys and coal miners' daughters that whetted the nation's appetite for country music decided that rather than hide from their adoring fans they should invite them to their homes. And charge admission. And sell souvenirs. Today it's a big business.

By JENNIFER JOHNSTON
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music has taken a tumble in popularity since the urban cowboy was riding high several years ago, but you couldn't tell it by walking the streets of this hillbilly heaven.

Drawn like pilgrims to a religious shrine, fans come by the millions each year to view the homes and possessions of their favorite stars or attend a live performance at the Grand Ole Opry, the Carnegie Hall of country.

People like Bernard Murray from Bayonne, N.J., a city rimmed by oil company storage tanks in the shadow of the Statue of Liberty. Murray, like Barbara Mandrell, was country when country wasn't cool. But it took him 37 years to finally get to Nashville.

"This has been my greatest dream," said the 63-year-old retired factory worker, collecting souvenirs in the schlock shops along famed Music Row.

Nashville's record companies keep sales figures confidential, but country music's share of the record market has declined to about 10 percent from a high of about 20 percent about five years ago after the release of "Urban Cowboy," the movie that starred John Travolta.

Nonetheless, more than 7 million tourists visit Music City and spend more than $600 million each year, according to the Chamber of Commerce. The Opryland theme park, home of the Grand Ole Opry in recent years, attracted 2.4 million alone in 1985.

Indeed, the jingle of coins is the Nashville sound.

About 80 percent of the visitors come to witness country music, be it at the Grand Ole Opry ($8-$10 per ticket), Opryland theme park ($13.95 for a three-day pass), or George Jones' car collection ($3) on Music Row, said Terry Clements, the chamber's director of tourism.

Five dollars gets a tourist into Johnny Cash's museum to see the marble collection of the star's son, or entrance to Mandrell Country, where Barbara Mandrell's honeymoon nightgown and first mink coat are on display.

At Twitty City, Conway Twitty's estate, it costs $5.50 to view miniature replicas of the entertainer's first home and his touring buses. It takes $8.50 to get into the museum of country stars Ferlin Huskey and Marty Robbins.

Things have come a long way in the 60 years since the days of a small-town radio show bringing the hillbilly sound crackling into the nation's living rooms. Humble singers, guitarists and fiddlers have catapulted to superstardom.

They croon to dedicated fans, who follow their favorite entertainers' lives like soap operas.

But in a nation where pop sensations are made — and broken — overnight, the country music industry is an anomaly.

"The short course in that is the lyrics of country music address everyday life," says Tom Adkinson, a spokesman for Opryland USA. "It's something people can relate to. If a country singer has a fan, he has that fan forever."

Taking advantage of that fan's devotion — with museums, souvenir shops and other enterprises — is a "logical" part of the country music business, Adkinson says.

"An entertainer is a business person in a very peculiar industry," he says. "He's not going to do something that's not going to produce profits sometime."

The stars say their side businesses developed naturally, meeting a growing demand from their followers.

Twitty, who lives on the grounds of his Twitty City complex, said before he moved under the watchful eyes of his security personnel, fans trooped across the lawn of his private home for a peak in his window.

Like many other country music stars, Twitty says he merely came up with an alternative to withdrawing behind a shield of body guards and solitude. He built a tourist spot.

"When entertainers of all kinds are building fences and putting in sophisticated burglar alarm systems, this is the only place in the world where you're invited into an entertainer's home," said Twitty, who sometimes strolls out of his red-bricked mansion for a chat with the faithful.

Twitty City is "very, very successful," he says, although neither he nor other country music stars would discuss finances.

"It's a giant investment and you expect a return on that investment," added Twitty, whose hits include "Don't Call Him A Cowboy" and "Hello, Darlin'."

About an hour's drive west of Nashville lies Loretta Lynn's Dude Ranch in Hurricane Mills, Tenn. There were so many fans traipsing across their property for a peek inside the house that the family decided to clear some trees and build a campground, said Mooney Lynn, husband of the country music diva, whose life story was told in the movie "Coal Miner's Daughter."

Loretta Lynn's restaurant, stables, mill, museum and general store were a natural outgrowth in Hurricane Mills, a town the Lynns own.

"Them old country music fans will go anywhere or do anything if they think they'll get a chance to maybe see a country music singer," Lynn said. "Some of them just want to get out of the factory and see the country."

At Cash's museum, House of Cash — just down the road from Twitty City in the Nashville suburb of Hendersonville — Johnny Cash fans can see the bedroom suite Cash once shared with his singer-wife, June Carter Cash.

Cash's secretary, Irene Gibbs, said the House of Cash opened as a result of pressure from groupies, who wanted to be close to anything that had to do with "the man in black," whose hits include "Ring of Fire" and "I Walk the Line."

"People would drive out here when we didn't even have a place open. Just a recording studio out back," Ms. Gibbs said. "There was nothing out here, but people kept coming inside and asking if they could just stand in the lobby. I think they just wanted something of John's to look at."

Entertainers say their side businesses provide stability in an often uncertain music industry.

Country music stars who are at their peak look for investments, knowing that fame can be fleeting, said Tim Bucek, president of Barbara Mandrell One-Hour Photos. That peak for Miss Mandrell came in 1980 when she landed her own television show with sisters Irlene and Louise.

It was Miss Mandrell's idea to put her name on the photomat marquee, said Bucek, a 50-50 partner in the deal.

Miss Mandrell, who sings "Sleeping Single in a Double Bed" and "I Was Country When Country Wasn't Cool," also has a museum, where the nightgown, mink coat and a replica of her bedroom suite are on display.

At 72, Sarah Cannon could live quietly and comfortably from her years as the loud-mouthed country comic Minnie Pearl. She says her museum is a way to pay back the fans for "the years they came to see me on the road." The Grand Ole Opry matriarch and Hee Haw regular stops regularly at the museum.

Pearlie Scott owns Scott's Sales Co., which operates several Music Row souvenir shops named for country music superstars.

ECU Hosting Three-Day American College Dance Festival

THE SMALL DANCE COMPANY . . . will be one of the participants in the American College Dance Festivasl gala performance to be presented Saturday at 8:15 p.m. in McGinnis Theater on the East Carolina University campus. Robert Small, who heads the company, will be one of the adjudicators of the festival, which will have performers from 15 schools in the Mid-Atlantic region, including five North Carolina universities.

The American College Dance Festival gala performance, featuring university dance programs across the mid-Atlantic region, will be presented Saturday at 8:15 p.m. in McGinnis Theater on the campus of East Carolina University.

The gala is being presented as part of a three-day regional dance festival hosted by the ECU Department of Theater Arts and is one of the many American College Dance Festivals being held across the country.

Fifteen schools will participate in the Mid-Atlantic Regional Festival, including ECU, Meredith College, North Carolina Central University, Wake Forest University and the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

The focus of the festival will be on dance as a performing art; the aim is to encourage and recognize excellence in performance and choreography on the college level.

The purpose of the festival is to provide an opportunity for college dancers to have their works adjudicated and critiqued by established professionals, and to provide professional classes, workshops and performing experiences as well as opportunities for interaction among participants.

As part of the festival, each college may present for adjudication two pieces, one of which must be choreographed by a student. The most outstanding of these pieces will be chosen for the gala performance. Adjudicators for the festival are dance critic Camille Hardy and modern dancer/choreographer Robert Small.

Ms. Hardy is dance critic for Dancemagazine. She is presently on the faculty of New York University Tisch School of the Arts, director of Dance Critics Association, and has been on numerous dance panels, including the National Endowment for the Arts.

Small, a modern dancer, choreographer, teacher and artistic director of the Small Dance Company, performed as soloist for eight years with the Murray Louis Dance Company. He presents solo and company concerts and residencies throughout the United States and Europe.

This project is partially funded by ECU; a joint grant from the North Carolina Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts in Washington; a grant from Capezio Foundation, and the American College Dance Festival Association.

For more details and reservations call 757-6390.

Africatown Festival Sets International Theme

By GARRY MITCHELL
Associated Press Writer

PRICHARD, Ala. (AP) — A cadre of volunteers who directed the recent Africatown Folk Festival wants to expand the legacy of the last slave ship to enter this country, making it an international celebration of black heritage.

Dorothy Davies, managing director of the festival, headed discussions held on the site of a 150-acre state park that will permanently commemorate the settlement of Africans who arrived in Mobile in an 1859 slave shipment from Ouidah, Benin, West Africa.

Official representatives from the African country have also established formal ties to Prichard.

"The city of Ouidah, from whence we sailed from Benin, will become a sister city to Prichard," said Ms. Davies, a third-generation descendant of slave ship passengers.

Besides the governmental activity, visitors to the festival sampled a score of events, including a reenactment of the voyage of the slave ship Clotilde, as well as art shows, dances, dinners, gospel, politics — anything that could draw attention to Africatown.

According to historians, the Clotilde entered Mobile Bay in 1859 bringing the last slave cargo. One of the Africans was Polee Allen, who was Ms. Davies' great-grandfather. He settled with others in an area of Mobile now known as Africatown.

Ms. Davies said the festival brings rewards that both blacks and whites could enjoy.

"When the fruits start to bear, it's gonna rain on all of us when the money starts coming in," said Ms. Davies.

She was referring to the goal of erecting facilities on the 150-acre site of the Africatown state park in Prichard by 1995.

"There is no grant, no money from any government, no seed money," she said. "We are trying to do it strictly on a private basis."

Africatown committees are springing up in other states through the work of volunteers, she said. She said 19 states already have active groups supporting the park.

Ms. Davies said by 1995, the festival, which began in 1982, hopes to have each state represented at the park with black heritage exhibits.

Music Awards

ECU News Bureau

More than 100 students in the East Carolina University School of Music have been awarded music scholarships this year, in amounts ranging from $100 to $500, with additional credits of $950 awarded some students from out of state.

The recipients were selected on the basis of talent, achievement in music studies, academic record and desirable personal qualities. Some scholarship programs are restricted to students majoring in a particular field or instrument, or to students who reside in a specific locality.

The $950 "credits" are tuition waivers presented to outstanding students from out of state. Non-North Carolina resident students are normally charged higher tuition rates than students whose parents live in North Carolina.

Local students receiving scholarships are:

•Ayden — Sandra Phillips, daughter of Shirley and Stephen Lewandowski, $250 Friends of the School of Music Scholarship.

• Williamston — Christopher Holliday, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Holliday, $250 Friends of the School of Music Scholarship; Natalie Beacham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raleigh Beacham, $250 Piano Pedagogy Scholarship; Robert Todd, $250 Friends of the School of Music Scholarship.

• Winterville — J. Guy Buck, son of Mr. and Mrs. Coy Buck, $500 Harold Grant Scholarship; J. Glenn Buck, son of Mr. and Mrs Coy Buck, $250 Friends of the School of Music Scholarship.

Four Student Recitals Set

Four students in the School of Music, one junior and three seniors, will present recitals during the coming week. All will be held in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall on campus, and are free and open to the public.

The four scheduled to perform are:

• Monday, 9 p.m. — Sally Anne Copoeland of Portsmouth, Va., a student of Dr. Henry Doskey, will give her junior recital in piano. For her program she has chosen Bach's "Prelude and Fugue II"; Mozart's "Sonate — KV 281"; Villa-Lobos' "DAnso do Indio Bianco", and Schumann's "Faschingsschwank aus Wien."

• Thursday, 7 p.m. — Cindy Bullock of Lumberton, a student of Paul Tardif, will present her senior recital in piano. Compositions she has listed for her recital are Mozart's "Sonata in A, K310"; Bach's "Prelude and Fugue" from Volume I; Chopin's "Barcarolle, Opus 60", and Debussy's "L'isle joyeuse."

• Friday, 7 p.m. — Angela Hinton of Raleigh and John Waskiewicz of Albemarle will present their senior recitals.

Miss Hinton, a student of Dr. Paul Topper, is a violin major. She has listed three works for her program — Elie Siegmeister's "Song for a Quiet Evening"; Paganini's "Cantabile for Violin and Guitar", and Beethoven's "Sonata No. 4." She will be accompanied by James Gilliam, piano and assisted by Joe Mauger, guitar.

Waskiewicz, whose instrument is the French horn, is a student of James Parnell. Works he has selected for his recital are Mozart's "Concerto No. 2"; the first and second movements of Samuel Adler's "Sonata for Horn and Piano", and Marin Murais's "La Basque." He will be accompanied by Katina Brewer.

Greenville was named in honor of General Nathaniel Greene, hero of the Battle of Guilford Courthouse.

Sam Grogg, An Unknown Name, May Ring Bells At Oscar Time

By ALAN SAYRE
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The name Sam Grogg probably doesn't ring a bell with movie fans. But he was a key ingredient in two films that have been nominated for Academy Awards.

Grogg, a leading figure in the infant Texas movie industry, was the money behind "Kiss of the Spider Woman," up for best picture and three other awards, and "The Trip to Bountiful," which has received two nominations.

He's the managing general partner of FilmDallas Investment Fund, a private venture capital fund formed to invest in the motion picture industry.

When FilmDallas was organized by Grogg in 1984, his group wasn't taken all that seriously by the motion picture industry, he said in a recent interview. It's different now.

"We've gotten a lot of attention lately," said Grogg.

"It's like 'Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid,'" he said. "They keep looking over their shoulders and asking, 'Who are these guys?'"

Grogg, who's taught at Bowling Green University, the University of Maryland and American University, worked at the American Film Institute for six years and later headed the Dallas-based USA Film Festival. In 1984, he joined Richard Kneipper and Joel T. Williams III to form FilmDallas.

According to FilmDallas' standards, the group will invest no more than $500,000 in each project, which must have a budget below $2.5 million. The group also wants to invest in Texas-oriented projects, although not all of its films have fit into that category.

With potentially lucrative markets in cable TV and home video now available, the advantage of investing in lower-budget films is obvious, Grogg said.

The group's first investment was in the 1984 with the movie, "Choose Me," a quirky romance starring Genevieve Bujold, Keith Carradine, Lesley Ann Warren and Rae Dawn Chong.

The Alan Rudolph film, made for $1.2 million, has grossed about $4.5 million in domestic box office receipts.

However, "Kiss of the Spider Woman," the story about the relationship between a political prisoner (Raoul Julia) and his homosexual cellmate (William Hurt) who entertains them with reenactments of B movies, has brought FilmDallas the most attention. Beside being nominated for best picture, Hurt is up for best actor, Hector Babenco for best director and Leonard Schrader for best adapted screenplay.

"The Trip to Bountiful," which was filmed in north Texas last year, is the story of an elderly woman who dreams of going back to her hometown, only to find that it no longer exists. The film won nominations for best actress (Geraldine Page) and best adapted screenplay (Horton Foote).

"By emphasizing quality pictures and using the leverage of critical praise, we've been able to reach a position where we're being noticed in the industry," Grogg said.

The state's filmmakers would be wise to use the same approach, he said, because "there never will be a totally independent Texas film industry."

"Texas has not built up a relationship with the mainstream industry," Grogg said. "This industry is based upon that."

FilmDallas also has invested in two other movies, "Crazy Wheels" and "The Dirt Bike Kid." Future projects include "Square Dance," starring Jane Alexander, which will be shot this spring in Dallas.

Grogg also plans to launch FilmDallas II, a separate investment group that will pursue other entertainment related areas in addition to motion pictures.

The Bizarre History Of A Film That Has Garnered Acclaim

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When a studio is launching a big-budget, award-winning movie, the star is usually brought to town and set up in a posh hotel for a round of interviews.

Not so for Jonathan Pryce, star of "Brazil."

"Universal wouldn't pay for me to come here," said the Welsh actor. "I came here on my own, and I'm staying with friends. I still get the feeling that Universal would like the picture to die."

"Brazil," Terry Gilliam's Orwellian vision of bureaucracy gone mad, refuses to die. It was relegated to the shelf by Universal Pictures chairman Sid Sheinberg, who believed the frenetic nature of "Brazil" would not attract a big enough audience to warrant the millions needed to market it.

The movie became a cause celebre when Gilliam took ads pleading with Sheinberg to allow it to be seen. Gilliam finally managed to show it to the Los Angeles Film Critics Association, who promptly named it best picture of 1985.

The award, as well as the publicity over the squabble, convinced Sheinberg that the film had attracted enough interest to hazard a release. It opened last month for a week in Los Angeles to allow it to qualify for the Academy Awards. It also opened in New York, where it received critical raves.

Alan Sutton, a spokesman for Universal, said the company is behind "Brazil" and is "platforming" the movie's release. Besides New York and Los Angeles, it will be in 100 theaters later this month and more later.

Still, Pryce felt Universal was halfhearted in its release of "Brazil," as evidenced by its failure to send him on a publicity tour.

However, Gilliam now says he is satisfied with the marketing and promotion and he will be going on nationwide tour.

Few films in recent history have had such a bizarre history as "Brazil," which has nothing to do with the country except for playing the song, "Brazil." The movie is a black comedy set in the near future about a lower-level civil servant whose life becomes a nightmare because of a bureaucratic blunder.

It was directed by Gilliam, the only American of the Monty Python zanies. He wrote it with Tony award-winning writer Tom Stoppard and Charles McKeown.

The director of "Time Bandits," Gilliam found financing for "Brazil" from Universal ($9 million for United States-Canada) and 20th Century Fox ($6 million for Europe). He assembled a stellar cast of cameo players: Robert DeNiro, Ian Holm, Bob Hoskins, Michael Palin (of Monty Python) and Ian Richardson. The role of Sam Lowry, the Everyman who endures the horrors of a computer society, was more of a problem.

"Terry wrote the script for me, starting in the late '70s," recalled Pryce, a lean man with long face and innocent eyes. "As the years passed, it became a Dorian Gray situation: I aged but the part didn't.

"When Terry arranged the American connection, the studio wanted a member of the 'Brat Pack' to play Sam. So I figured I was out of it. But in his heart Terry knows what he wants, and during the time he was looking for another Sam, he kept coming back to me."

Three years ago, Gilliam sent Pryce the "Brazil" script.

"I was overwhelmed," said Pryce. "The script reads just as strongly as it plays on the screen. I saw no reason why I could not play Sam. True, I was in my early 30s (he is now 38), but time had not been too cruel to me. I could comb my hair forward (to cover a bald spot). I saw Sam as the kind of character Jimmy Stewart did in the 1930s and 1940s, an innocent who looked older than the young man playing him."

Pryce, who had starred in "The Ploughman's Lunch," and "Something Wicked This Way Comes," did something he had never done before: He asked to be tested.

Gilliam was reconvinced, and for five months Pryce worked every day. He even did some strenuous fantasy scenes that involved flying like a bird to the strains of "Brazil."

"There were some rough days, but I never felt tired," said Pryce. "I always looked forward to going to the studio. Working with those guest stars was enough to keep my energy up."

A native of Holywell, North Wales, Pryce has had a distinguished stage career in England. His Hamlet, in which he played both the hero and his father's ghost, was a hit at the Royal Court Theater.

Last year, he gave a critically acclaimed performance on Broadway in "Accidental Death of an Anarchist."

THE PRINCE OF HUMBUG

NEW YORK (AP) — Phineas Taylor Barnum, entrepreneur of amusements and impresario of oddities, is the subject of a new exhibition at the New-York Historical Society March 12-June 15.

The exhibition, "P. T. Barnum: Prince of Humburg, Merchant of Delight," consists of photographs, letters, broadsides, posters, tickets and other ephemera from the society's collection which document Barnum's genius for giving the public what it didn't know it had to have.

Barnum was one of the first to understand the power of the press in creating demand. His masterful promotion of the American appearances of Tom Thumb and Jenny Lind demonstrated his ability to sense and then fulfill the needs of his ontemporaries.

AESTHETIC MOVEMENT

NEW YORK (AP) — The first comprehensive exhibition ever organized on the subject of the Aesthetic Movement in the United States will be shown at the Metroplitan Museum of Art, Oct. 23, 1986-Jan. 11, 1987.

The exhibition, "In Pursuit of Beauty: Americans and the Aesthetic Movement," will contain some 250 works in a great variety of media from furniture, stained glass, ceramics, metalwork, textiles, wallpaper, and book design and illustration, to painting and sculpture.

STUBBORN LEAVES . . . Each year the leaves of the silver-bark beech trees are the last to let go and fall to earth. This branch of weatherworn beech leaves was photographed in early March, still holding on even as small tight buds of 1986 leaf growth begin to show.

A SECRET WINTER PLACE . . . The fairy cave formed by the odd root growth of a tree is easily accessible for children's play in winter months. The dark opening in cold months with its clearly defined shadows gives the impression it might house miniature dragons. Soon it will be hidden from view when new ground growth forms a mantle of weeds and vines that will cover the tree-root cave.

THE LAST DAYS . . . of a small ear of corn that escaped the harvesting machine last year is shown here. It is supported in the bend of a stalk still partially upright. Within a matter of weeks, the interesting design of the ear of corn in its winter final resting position will fall prey to machinery preparing the land for spring planting.

A Look At Nature's Designs In Late Winter Before Spring Arrives With New Growth

A MANY-CHANNELED SYSTEM . . . The crossview of a section of cypress log sawn long ago clearly reveals nature's way of providing moisture for a cypress, which grows best in a watery location. Channels, or hollows within the trunk of the tree, facilitate the flow of moisture to the tree's higher reaches.

OLD AGE EXPOSURE . . . With the passage of years, the rough outer cover of a large fox grape vine — this one as large as a man's arm — has fallen away to reveal a network of fibrous inner growth. Despite the advanced age of the vine, it will put forth large leaves in late March and early April.

LIKE VEGETABLE PARCHMENT . . . At winter's end, the rind of a citron melon has dried to a lightweight covering mottled with colorful veins. The rind, round and firm when the fruit was green in summer and pale burnished gold in autumn, has partially collapsed and will soon complete its cycle of deterioration.

Cordless Appliances Gain In Popularity

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

When you wear only natural fiber clothing, a session with the iron is generally part of getting dressed in the morning.

But New Yorker Barbara Stillman has figured out how to make mornings a lot less aggravating. She acquired a cordless iron.

"It's so much easier to use and faster without the dangling cord," she says.

"I used to be scared stiff of carving," recalls Jules Joseph of Milwaukee. Now, his cordless electric knife has turned him into a hero at carving time.

Cordless irons, rechargeable knives, can openers and mixers in the kitchen, as well as power tools, lights and personal care appliances are putting greater convenience into many homes. Cordless appliances were hot items all over the country this past Christmas, according to the trade newspaper, Home Furnishings Daily. As a result, more companies have scheduled new cordless product introductions for the upcoming April housewares show in Chicago.

"I can see the day when cordless will be the standard for some items, such as the cordless iron and hand mixer," says Mike Miller of Hamilton Beach. The company currently markets a cordless electric knife and a cordless iron and in April will introduce a hand mixer, a can opener and a second cordless iron. West Bend Co. will be showing a new cordless product it calls the "Three-in-One."

It consists of a can opener, a mixer and a knife all on a single power base. All three hang on the wall when not in use and require only one plug. The company will also show a cordless electronic iron with an automatic shutoff.

Though today's round of products started proliferating after 1979, the technology behind them dates back to World War II, according to Wayne Smith of Sunbeam Co., which will also be bringing out new products this spring. (Cordless irons, however, employ traditional technology. Heat is generated in a plug-in base; the iron itself is engineered to heat very quickly and hold the heat longer.)

The Germans developed rechargeable nickel cadmium batteries during the war and the technology entered the United States as part of war reparations, Smith added. However, little use was made of the invention at first "because we couldn't figure out what to do with it."

Experimentation began in the 1950s and a number of cordless products were introduced during the late 1960s and early '70s. Among them were cordless toothbrushes (successful) and the cordless mixer (unsuccessful), grass shears and power tools.

One reason why some products failed was that batteries were not up to the job of powering the appliances; the products were also expensive. The early failures gave nickel cadmium batteries a bad reputation which more recent products have had to overcome, said Smith.

Today's batteries are more efficient and product engineering has also improved, says Louise Retzer of Black and Decker, which markets about 14 rechargeable battery appliances.

Here are some points to consider when choosing between a cordless and corded appliance or between two different cordless brands. As a rule, the cordless product will cost more. Furthermore, since batteries will eventually have to be replaced (5 to 7 years is generally the estimated usable life) maintenance will be required for the cordless. On the positive side, these products offer considerable convenience. You will be able to take a cordless mixer to the stove or table, to pack a cordless knife for a picnic or brief camping trip.

Generally speaking, appliances with five batteries will provide more power longer than the same type of appliance with only three batteries. Compare product warranties, too; they range from one year to three years.

You may find that using a cordless appliance goes against the grain at first. These appliances should be plugged in at all times when not in use. Sunbeam's product development team explained the electricity cost is small. They add it's best to completely discharge an appliance through use at least once a month. When unplugged, the appliance loses about 10 percent of its charge per day, according to the Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers.

If all the appliances have to be plugged in when not in use, it does create a problem in kitchens where electric outlets are precious. Several manufacturers have addressed the issue. West Bend's "Three-in-One" uses a single electric base and only one plug. Black and Decker's plug extender has six outlets and requires only one plug. Sunbeam has dealt with the problem by having three cordless appliances plug into one another so that only one wall outlet is required.

On The House

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

A good time to start your varnishing project is when nobody else is in the house. If that's not possible, the least you can do is not begin the job until the room you are working in is dust-free and you are certain nobody will walk into the room for several hours.

The great enemy of varnish is dust. You may not think any is there, but even the tiniest particle of it will somehow find its way onto your newly varnished surface. Select a work area where currents of air are not likely to carry dust across the room, where nobody will visit you to see how you are making out, and where you are sure everything is dust-free. That includes your clothing and the surface of the wood, especially a surface that has been sanded. If you think that is an exaggeration, consider this: Old-time wood finishers were said to have performed their duties only after they had stripped off their clothing!

Since this is an era of regular varnishes and synthetic varnishes, such as polyurethane, it is important to read the label on the container and follow the instructions carefully. For example, shellac, diluted with denatured alcohol, has always been considered a good undercoat for regular varnish, but the manufacturers of polyurethane say not to use it.

Every so often, somebody who has used varnish finds that bubbles form on the surface of the wood after it has been applied. This usually is due to one of two things. Either the can of varnish has been shaken or the wet brush has been dragged across the inside of the can to remove the excess. Either practice can cause bubbles as the varnish is spread. The proper procedure is to dip the brush about one-third the length of the bristles and remove the excess by tapping it lightly against the inside of the container.

In applying varnish, use long, light strokes in the direction of the grain, then immediately stroke against the grain. Complete the application by stroking lightly with the tips of the bristles in the direction of the grain, using an almost dry brush. All three times, work with a light pressure. Do not bear down as you might do when painting a fence.

If you use stain under the varnish, put a coat of sealer over it and wait at least 12 hours before applying the finishing material. As mentioned earlier, check the varnish label to find out what can and cannot be used as a sealer. We recently saw penetrating stain pre-applicator pads that allow you to find out ahead of time how well the stain takes, depending on the coloration, grain pattern and porosity of the wood. By testing this applicator pad on a section of the wood that is not noticeable or on a sample piece of the same wood, you will know exactly the shade you will get. The appearance of the stain is further enhanced by the final clear finish.

Also new are wood finishing pads, designed as an alternative to sandpaper or steel wool. The manufacturer claims they are especially good for sanding curves and spindles. You will get your best finishes with varnish and other materials by sanding lightly between coats. This smooths out any irregularities. Be sure all grit is removed any time sanding is done.

A help in varnish operations is what is called a "tack" rag. It's simply a clean rag sprinkled with turpentine and some of the varnish you are using. This keeps the surface of the wood free from dirt, dust and grime when used carefully, but a hand vacuum is also a big aid in this respect. You can make your own tack rag or buy one. You can use a tack rag many times if you wring it dry after each use and place it in a covered metal container.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, remover, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.)

Here's the Answer

Q. — We have wallboard in our house. A long crack has developed in the dining room wall. It goes from the ceiling to the floor, apparently where there is a seam. What is the best way to fix this?

A. — Make the gap in the seam a little wider, then fill it in with the joint compound used for gypsum board. Smooth the area with a putty knife. This remedy will be sufficient most of the time. When it isn't, you may have to put the compound into the opening, cover it with special tape for such seams and then apply some more compound.

Q. — I understand I can give an antique look to a piece of furniture I am refinishing by using a glazing material. I have been told this will save me the trouble of taking off the old finish. Is this so?

A. — You are talking about glazing, which is sometimes referred to as antiquing. It is a finish which calls for a base coat and then a glaze applied on top of it. Since it is something you have never undertaken, the best way to get a good introduction to the process is to buy an antiquing kit sold at most home supply centers, hardware stores and paint dealers. It comes with all the necessary materials and instructions. Removal of the old finish is not necessary.

Q. — We have a pushbutton outside our front door that rings chimes inside the house. The trouble is that, when we are in certain parts of the house, we cannot hear the chimes. We now would like to add chimes at two other locations in the house and also put pushbuttons at the rear and side doors. Some years ago, the batteries that operated the pushbutton and chimes were replaced by a transformer installed by a professional electrician. Do you think we should hire an electrician to make the changes or can we do it ourselves?

A. — Impossible to know whether you can take care of it yourself, since that depends on your skill. However, working around a transformer is not something that should be undertaken by a novice in electrical work. The electrician will have to determine whether the transformer can handle the additional load. It may be the transformer is OK for the job, but that additional wiring will solve the problem.

Q. What are some trees for moist to wet areas?

A. Sycamore, baldcypress, sweet gum, tulip poplar, sweet bay (Magnolia virginiana), tupelo (Nyssa sylvatica), dawn redwood (Metasequoia glyptostroboides), pin oak (Quercus palustris), any of the willows, any of the poplars (Populus ssp.), red maple, Southern magnolia, American holly and any of the birches. However, by moist area, I hope you do not mean over a water, sewer or septic line since some of these trees have invasive roots which could clog the lines.

Q. How much fruit does the average strawberry plant produce in one season?

A. The average yield per plant is about one-third to one-half pound of fruit. Generally, 25 plants of an early season variety and 25 plants of a mid-to-late season variety will provide enough berries for a family of four.

Q. What is the importance of soil pH?

A. Soil pH influences bacterial action, soil structure, nutrient availability, nutrient leaching and toxicity of certain nutrient elements. A optimum pH range for the growth of most plants is between 5.5 and 7.0. Within the range microbial activity is greatest and applied nitrogen is readily converted by microbes to forms that plants can use. In the optimum range, clay soils tend to remain granular and are easily worked, whereas if pH rises or falls below the optimum the same soils become sticky and difficult to work. Soil pH is not an indicator of soil fertility, but it does influence the availability of nutrients. North Carolina soils tend to be naturally acidic. Soil pH can be determined by taking a soil test. Accurate pH adjustments can only be based on a soil test.

Q. Name some shrubs with yellow flowers that can be grown in North Carolina.

A. Winter jasmine (Jasminum nudiflorum), leatherleaf mahonia, forsythia, some barberries, Lady Banks rose, some hybrid tea roses, St. John's wort, some rhododendrons and some deciduous azaleas.

IT'S THE LAW

AS OF JANUARY 1, 1986, NORTH CAROLINA STATE LAW REQUIRES ANYONE EXCAVATING WITH MECHANICAL EQUIPMENT ON HIGHWAY RIGHTS-OF-WAY, PRIVATE UTILITY EASEMENTS OR PUBLIC SPACES TO NOTIFY ALL UTILITIES TWO WORKING DAYS PRIOR TO DIGGING.

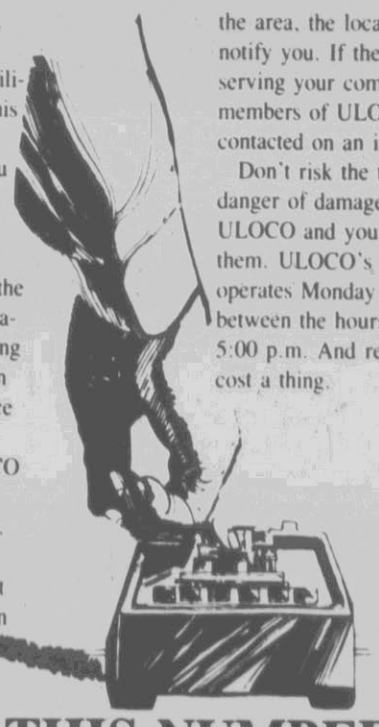

If you plan on digging, excavating, demolishing, or moving the earth in any way that could damage buried utility lines, take a few minutes to call this toll-free number at least 48 hours before work begins. It could save you from disrupted service, expensive repairs and personal injury.

A phone call to the number below will put you in touch with ULOCO, the Utilities Locating Company, a corporation formed and funded by participating utility companies and municipalities in order to increase job safety and reduce utility damages.

Within minutes of your call, ULOCO will contact participating members in your area and tell them of your plans.

If there are buried utilities in your path, they will be staked or marked at no cost to you. If there are no lines in the area, the local companies will notify you. If the utility companies serving your community are not members of ULOCO, they should be contacted on an individual basis.

Don't risk the trouble, cost and danger of damaged utility lines. Call ULOCO and you'll be sure of avoiding them. ULOCO's toll-free number operates Monday through Friday between the hours of 7:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. And remember, it doesn't cost a thing.

Yesterday's Crytoquip: MODERN GENEALOGIST'S CONCERN: THE SHADY SIDE OF THE FAMILY TREE.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: H equals B

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Teen-Ager Gets Teaching Assignment

LEVITTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Security at a Long Island elementary school has been tightened after a 16-year-old girl was accidentally assigned as a substitute teacher for a third-grade class, officials said Thursday.

"Be assured that this was a one-time occurrence," Gardiners Avenue Elementary School Principal John H. Furlong wrote in a letter sent to parents. "We are usually very good about checking substitutes."

The incident occurred on Feb. 11. "It was a miserable day and we had trouble getting substitutes," Furlong said.

He said the teen-ager, identified only as Carol, arrived at the main office "at the time when our substitute teachers usually sign in." The girl, who was described as mature looking, was told to take the third-grade class.

The mistake was not discovered, however, until children in the class told their parents their substitte teacher was only 16 and told them to call her "Carol."

School officials did not know who she was or why she was at the school.

"It did point out some flaws in our procedure," Furlong admitted. Superintendent Gerald Rauber said the district was improving security as a result of the incident.

When Peugeot designed a sedan suited for long distance driving, they kept one thing in mind.

The driver.

Only the Peugeot 505 STI comes with a complete package of performance features you might look for, but not find, on the Audi, Volvo, or even BMW. A package that includes four-wheel independent suspension. And limited slip differential. Peugeot provides one additional comfort the others don't: orthopedically inspired full foam seating. To fully appreciate the true comfort of these cars, visit us for a short test drive. And recognize the Peugeot's long-range possibilities.

Car Restoring Has Become Big Business

By HOYT HARWELL
Associated Press Writer

ALBERTVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Paul Smith, his father and two brothers started it in 1936. They would get three or four other men, pile into a car or truck, drive up North, buy used cars and drive them to Albertville.

They would recondition the cars, clean them and resell them.

"I've pulled a lot of cars from Cincinnati and Chicago and sold them for $15 or $25 more than I paid for them and came out real good," said Smith, now a car dealer in Albertville. "You couldn't even make the trip for that now."

From that beginning has grown the largest industry in Marshall County, reconditioning used cars. Most of the industry is concentrated along a 10-mile stretch of U.S. 431 from the Albertville area south to the Boaz area.

The highway is lined with dozens of body, paint, trim and upholstery shops. Comparatively little mechanical work is done, because good ol' boys have learned how not to buy ailing cars.

"Farming was the major industry back then," said Margie Cherry, who owns the Sand Mountain Auto Auction at Boaz. "Most people wanted something better and a lot of them learned to recondition cars."

Every Wednesday, from 650 to 750 cars are run through her auction, three lanes at a time, with dealers buying three cars every two minutes.

Mrs. Cherry charges a fee of $30 a car to each buyer and $55 to each seller, "probably the lowest in the nation," she said.

"Real estate and cattle auctioneers talk about half as fast as our auctioneers," she said. "We have to relieve an auctioneer every hour or so."

Smith and his family were driving cars from Cincinnati in 1937 when the engine in a 1936 Ford car burned out.

"We went into a hardware store, bought trace chains and tied bumpers together," he said.

"That was the first car ever towed in here."

From that, the haulers went from knuckle bars to tow bars to cables. Now, virtually every car brought in comes on hauling trucks.

Smith, 63, has been in the car business since he was 15, starting with his father who had a Hudson dealership in Albertville.

"We would make two trips a week to Chicago, or three to Cincinnati," he said.

"The people up here on Sand Mountain got a lot of ideas from Cleveland, Tenn., and Murray, Ky., where car reconditioning was a big industry," he said.

Now the folks along gasoline alley in Marshall County claim they do more reconditioning than any other part of the country.

Early each Monday morning, sellers start calling Mrs. Cherry's office to get a number, just as in a barber shop, for the cars they want to auction on Wednesday — a number for each car.

The county has 463 licensed dealers.

The used cars, now bought all over the North and the Southeast, are stripped of their seats, cleaned inside and out, and retouched as needed. The seats are then reinstalled.

"In the early days they used toothbrushes on the chrome," Mrs. Cherry said. "They wore out a lot of toothbrushes. Now it's more of an assembly-line thing."

However, most of the shops have been in the same families for years, with the sons learning from their fathers.

The reconditioning industry has spawned dozens of parts and tire stores, plus related businesses.

"Cars bought at auction are ready to sell," Mrs. Cherry said. All a dealer has to do is wash them and set them on his lot."

Different dealers show up at her auction each week, each buying several cars.

"We make the sellers stand behind the cars, and we have those rules posted," she said. "We have very little complaints, and we arbitrate those.

"We screen the dealers very closely. It is as important to us to have a good seller as it is to have a good buyer."

Several years ago there were complaints about odometers being turned back on cars on Sand Mountain. "Now we have a guaranteed mileage program," she said.

GOREN BRIDGE

By CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
1983 Tribune Company Syndicate, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—We had a terrible result the other night when I held the following hand:
♠6 ♡KQ52 ♢Q87642 ♣95
My partner opened the bidding with one spade and I responded two diamonds. Partner drove to game, we were doubled and it cost a packet. Partner said I did not have the values for a two-over-one response and should have bid one no trump. I am sure that, somewhere in one of your books, I read that all no trump bids show balanced hands. Not so? — R.F.N., Washington, D.C.

A.—I don't know where you came across that statement, but it is certainly not in anything I wrote. By and large, it is true, all no trump bids do tend to show balanced hands. That is especially true of opening bids and opener's rebids. However, that is not the case with one-level responses.

Any jump response in no trump by responder does promise a balanced hand. But consider the hand you submit. You have seven points in high cards and a distributional point in clubs. However, you should not add 2 points for your singleton spade, since that can hardly be considered an asset.

Thus, you have enough to respond, but not enough to go to the two-level. Should you elect to pass, you could easily miss a sound partscore, or even game, in hearts. To give yourself the opportunity to reach such a spot, it is essential that you give opener a chance to rebid. Since you cannot progress to the two-level, the only response available to you is one no trump.

There is one case where you can bend the values for a two-over-one response slightly. That is when you have a good, long suit and little else. You intend responding in that suit at the two-level, and then rebidding it at the three-level. However, on the hand you submit your suit quality is not good enough for such action. At the very least it should be something like AQJ9xx.

Q.—I have read about systems where a pass actually shows the values for an opening bid. Does that mean that you can double one of those passes for takeout? —J.R., New York City.

A.—That is only one of the problems that these new, artificial systems are posing for lawmakers, and it will be a while before this mess gets sorted out.

Some years ago there was a brouhaha in France when a player using a pass to show a normal one club opening bid, passed and his opponent bid one club. Third seat asked for a review, and the bidder said: "Your partner passed and I opened one club." The passer called for the tournament director, insisting that his opponent had conveyed illegal information about his one club bid. He maintained that since his pass actually showed a one club opening, the one club bid was an overcall and not an opening bid! It's a strange world we live in.

To answer your question: you cannot double a pass.

Armstrong's Show Is No 'Cheers' Clone

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — There's evidently some sort of comic justice at work in the life of actress Bess Armstrong.

This week, her new NBC sitcom, "All Is Forgiven," makes its debut right after "Cheers," a show which was a hit even before Bill Cosby waved his magic wand and made the network's Thursday lineup look like the only game in town.

And "Cheers" was the series the creators of "All Is Forgiven" had in mind for Miss Armstrong the last time they were looking for an actress to speak the funny lines. Miss Armstrong is anxious to emphasize that she heard about "Cheers" when it was barely a twinkle in its parents' eyes, in advance of any official casting moves — and long before Shelley Long made know-it-all barmaid Diane Chambers her very own.

"Don't give your readers the idea that I was officially offered the role," says Miss Armstrong. "It was simply that I'd worked for James Burrows and Glen and Les Charles, the creators of 'Cheers,' and Jim wanted to know if I'd be interested in taking on a series if the opportunity ever came up.

"My answer was no, I wasn't, and the fact that the show went on to become a huge success does not in any way change my mind," she says. "Shelley is much better as Diane than I ever would have been. It's impossible to imagine anyone else playing that part."

Miss Armstrong admits that she assumed her adamant refusal of a weekly paycheck from the Charles-Burrows-Charles triumvirate disqualified her from any further consideration — and she is pleased that she was wrong.

"I guess my timing turned out pretty well," she says. "All of a sudden, NBC is the most successful network and 'Cheers' has a loyal audience, which, hopefully will be interested to see if my show is as good.

"That could work against me, of course," she says. "NBC may now be less inclined to stay with a series that is not an immediate hit, and since 'All Is Forgiven' is not a clone of 'Cheers,' it may not appeal to the same audience!"

Bess Armstrong is back on her own. The actress stars as soap opera producer Paula Russell in "All Is Forgiven," a new series premiering Thursday, March 20 on NBC.

Oh, what tangled webs we weave. Just ask Punky Brewster (Soleil Moon Frye), who gets caught in a web of horror in "The Perils of Punky," the episode of "Punky Brewster" airing Sunday, March 16 on NBC.

"Entertainment This Weekend Presents Rona Barrett"

By Alan W. Petrucelli

Twelve years ago, Rona Barrett had it all. She lived, with her doting husband, in a Beverly Hills mansion, drove a Rolls-Royce that boasted personalized license plates (MS RONA), ran a corporation that bore her name and earned a seven-digit annual salary. Then there was her best-selling autobiography "Miss Rona," the five fan magazines that bannered her name and her stint as entertainment editor for "Good Morning America." It didn't matter that Ryan O'Neal once mailed her a tarantula. Forget that Frank Sinatra verbally abused her — "Rona Rat" was one of his more amusing (and printable) monickers. Yes, Rona Barrett had it all. She was happy. Or so she thought.

"This may sound childlike," Miss Barrett says, her familiar New York nasal twang making her sound like a displaced Valley Girl, "but I finally feel like an adult. I really feel grown up. And it only happened two years ago, when I was able to sit back and watch others attempt to do what I did. I spawned an industry," she adds matter-of-factly, "and when I saw others try to do what I did and fail, well, that's when I realized I was no longer a child."

Miss Barrett, who left network-television reporting in 1982, joined the cast of "Entertainment Tonight" last year. This week, she takes a break from her chores as senior correspondent for the syndicated series and hosts "Entertainment This Weekend Presents Rona Barrett," an hour-long special in which the former gossip queen does what she does best — reporting, investigating and commenting on the business called show business. Miss Barrett affectionately calls the special "my version of '60 Minutes.'"

Those expecting the petite (5-foot-1-inch) blonde to expose the sleeping habits of Sean Penn or the bra size of Madonna will be in for a surprise. That kind of reporting is called gossip — and gossip is no longer Miss Barrett's middle name.

"I don't believe that what I did in my past should remain with me forever, like some badge to be worn or exploited by others," says Miss Barrett. "If I wrote gossip 25 years ago, it's because that's what the times called for. But people love to label people. I started out being a fan club president (for Eddie Fisher and Steve Lawrence), and for 20 years, I couldn't get rid of that label. It's terribly appalling," she adds, "that some people won't allow me to change. So I fight. When you're a child and told you're not going to live," she adds, "all you can do is fight back."

Indeed, Miss Barrett's real-life story is the stuff of Hollywood: As an overweight child, she contracted a mysterious muscle ailment, and was told by doctors she was going to die within a few years.

BEHIND THE SCENES

London forfeits film for quality television

By Frank Lovece

Sooner or later, it seems, everyone in television goes to London. Not the city — but Jerry London, the director and occasional producer of such miniseries as "Shogun," "Ellis Island" and this week's globe-trotting caper, "If Tomorrow Comes." The seven-hour miniseries, starring Madolyn Smith and Tom Berenger, airs Sunday, March 16, Monday, March 17 and Tuesday, March 18 on CBS.

Jerry London

"I try to do a different type of project each time," says the 49-year-old veteran of nine miniseries, 13 TV movies and pilots and countless episodic shows.

"'Ellis Island,'" he explains, "was a period piece. 'Chiefs' was a murder mystery down South. This new one is about an international cat-burglar, and it's soapy and light and lots of fun — a 'To Catch a Thief' sort of thing."

London may boast impressive directing and producing credits, but it took him 18 years before he was allowed to direct drama. He got his start in comedy, as an apprentice film editor at Desilu Productions ("I Love Lucy," "Make Room for Daddy"). London went on to edit the "Hogan's Heroes" pilot, and eventually became that series' associate producer. After pooling his experiences, he became a director — and found himself pigeonholed in comedy.

"I had a hard time breaking out," he recalls. "I finally did a comic 'Godfather'-type segment of 'Love, American Style.' People at the network saw it, liked it and sent me a letter asking what kind of stuff I really wanted to direct. Some luck!"

With that push, London spent the next two years as a staff director at Universal. "I directed 36 hours of 'Marcus Welby,' 'Kojak' and 'Six Million Dollar Man,'" he says. "I learned all the tricks of the trade."

With the 1977 miniseries "Arthur Hailey's Wheels," London found his niche: large canvases, armies of characters, the need to control plots as intricate as tapestries. Then came "Shogun."

The natural question now is, why not direct movies? "Ever since 'Shogun,'" London explains, "I've been offered five to six movies a year. But they're usually B-movies — kooky stuff, cheapie sci-fi. I'd rather do the best television I can than make a mediocre movie. If you make one film and it doesn't work," he adds, "you may not get the chance to do another."

Domestic Battles

John Lithgow is currently in Atlanta filming "Resting Place," a "Hallmark Hall of Fame" presentation for future broadcast on CBS. The film, set in the early '70s, is about small-town prejudice that erupts when attempts are made to bury a black Vietnam War hero in a "white" cemetery. Lithgow stars as the Army major who is assigned to uncover the mystery of the young soldier's death.

TV Chatter

When her CBS series "On Our Own" went off the air in 1978, Bess Armstrong was truly on her own. The actress tackled film (the ill-fated "High Road to China" with Tom Selleck) and miniseries (the top-rated "Lace"), but Bess stayed away from series TV because, she explains, "if I had to say another mayonnaise joke I'd die." This week, however, there is "All is Forgiven." In the new NBC series, the 30-year-old actress stars as a soap opera producer who's trying to save her show from being canned. "I took the role because my character's not a Barbie doll who also happens to be a Penthouse centerfold," says Bess. "She's a real woman. When you tune into my show, you won't see Krystal Carrington. You'll see a woman with problems. You'll see the best of 'Looney Tunes.'"

The film may be called "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," but the reviews have been down and out raves. That's not surprising, considering that the Paul Mazursky comedy stars several talented heavyweights. Make that former heavyweights. For her role as dipsy housewife Barbara Whiteman, Bette Midler told us she got in shape by training with body builder Jake Steinfeld. "I lost 20 pounds by working my butt off with Jake," says Bette. "It was hard — real hard." Richard Dreyfuss, who plays Bette's hubby Dave, also slimmed down, as did Tracy Nelson, who plays the Whiteman's anorexic daughter Jenny. "I stopped eating halfway through the filming," Tracy reveals. Then there's trim Nick Nolte, who insists he didn't lose weight for his role as bum Jerry Baskin. But that's not what we heard. "Nick has two scenes in which he bares his backside," says a "Down and Out" source, "and there's no way he would have done them without dropping those 30 pounds."

First it was Judy Garland. Mae West, Grace Kelly and Hedda and Louella followed. Now the life of another Hollywood star — former gossip queen Rona Barrett — is being brought to the small screen. The senior correspondent for "Entertainment Tonight" is talking with CBS about turning "Miss Rona," her best-selling 1974 autobiography, into a miniseries. Rona, who hosts a one-hour "E.T." special this weekend, plans on writing a sequel to the tome, which detailed her rise to fame. "I'd like Whoopi Goldberg to play me," Rona quips. "That way I can call it 'The Color Rona.'"

We'll keep this one brief. He may cater to the lifestyles of the rich and famous, but no one can accuse Robin Leach of aping their actions. The TV host was recently spotted in Alexander's, a basement-budget New York City department store, rummaging through a bin of bargain-priced underwear. Leach settled on six pairs, size-38. ... We always knew Burt Lancaster and Kirk Douglas were good friends — and tough guys. Now they're proving it. The veteran actors have begun filming "Tough Guys," a comedy about a pair of robbers who are released from a 30-year jail sentence. Burt and Kirk last appeared on the screen together 22 years ago, in the 1964 movie "Seven Days in May."

News Renewed

CBS's prime-time news magazine, "West 57th," returns to the tube in April after a brief hiatus. "West 57th" made its network debut last August with six initial broadcasts, and next month's reprisal constitutes a 13-week run for the program, which stands in the shadow of the quintessential prime-time news hour, CBS's "60 Minutes."

SHOW AND TELL

She has beauty; now Randi needs a hit

By Gregory Garver

HOLLYWOOD — If one good thing results from Randi Brooks' role on the new NBC series "The Last Precinct," it's that the actress will never be typecast.

Randi Brooks

If you saw the one episode that has been shown so far — there will be more coming soon — Miss Brooks plays transsexual policewoman Officer Melba Brubaker, the beautiful blonde who once was a man.

Miss Brooks claims it's a tricky role to play. "I try to play it pretty straight," explains the actress, "but there are times when a flagrant flaming comes out of her. Whenever she gets stuck, she sort of flounces around. Most of the time, I play it straight. After all," she adds, "Melba always wanted to be a woman."

Miss Brooks says her character's humor comes mostly from the script, rather than from her actions — such lines as "I'm just sort of finding my feminine intuition. I guess it came with the operation."

Miss Brooks had her first big break in the 1981 movie "Looker," which was followed, two years later, by another break in the short-lived (two months) CBS series "Wizards and Warriors." Neither was a hit, so Miss Brooks is hoping "The Last Precinct" will help solidify her acting career. And, like other models-turned-actresses, she realizes that her beauty can work against her.

"It can be a handicap," she says, "but you have to be willing to bring the person you are first thing in the morning to your job. I know when I wake up in the morning and look in the mirror, I'm not exactly the same person I am on the screen.

"So I have to be willing to bring the raw me to the screen. I am willing to do that, and I think that's an asset," she adds, "because in that rawness there is still an attractiveness."

Miss Brooks says she is thinking of having some early-morning photos taken to show casting directors. "My husband has some pictures like that," she giggles, "and he is blackmailing me."

Caribbean Capture

Mid-March finds Susan Sarandon and Kristy McNichol in the Philippines. The two actresses are on location for "Women of Valor," a CBS drama about WWII American Army nurses who are captured by the Japanese and endure a war camp. Miss Sarandon portrays Army nurse Margaret Ann Jessup and Miss McNichol is a young American civilian captured with the medical personnel.

Monterey Recalls Rock's Golden Age

By E.A. Vare

Before Woodstock there was Monterey, the 1967 music festival held just south of San Francisco that ushered in "the summer of love." Now, Sony Home Video has released a cassette of the concert film "Monterey Pop," a 72-minute excursion into musical history.

Although "Monterey Pop" contains no documentary narration about the era it portrays, it is still a chunk of visual and audio anthropology. Filmmaker D. A. Pennebaker came into this burgeoning hippie culture as an outsider, a member of another generation. He saw Monterey as a cultural artifact even as it occurred: His camera lingers, fascinated, over teenagers in outlandish clothes, their faces gaily painted and their hair decked with flowers. He was as astonished at Jimi Hendrix's performance as the ABC television executive who backed out of the entire project when he saw the guitarist play: "I'm damned if that maniac's going to burn his guitar on network TV," said the exec, as Pennebaker recalls.

But it was the music, not the wardrobe, that made history at Monterey. So many legends, so many of them now gone. Keith Moon, bashing his drum kit with such frenzied abandon — and total disregard for the beat — that you suspect Pete Townshend smashed his guitar out of pure frustration. Jimi Hendrix, who set the crowd on fire metaphorically long before he set his instrument on fire literally. Big Brother and the Holding Company, playing so out of key that you want to cover your ears — until Janis Joplin opens her mouth, and all is forgiven. Mama Cass, so fluid and true. Otis Redding, the definition of soul. Ravi Shankar (still alive, thank goodness) performing an 18-minute raga that is breathtaking.

"Monterey Pop" has it flaws as a rock concert tape, especially compared to today's sophisticated video imagery. But the soundtrack was digitally remastered for this release, and is excellent. The picture, transferred onto videotape from an original film negative, is fine. You don't need a narrator to guide you through this view of the recent past.

Unlike Victor, Begley Is No Chauvinist

By Jay Carman

Stick out your hand when you meet Ed Begley Jr. and you won't just get a hearty handshake. If the tall, laconic actor likes you, you'll also get a white ballpoint pen. Its printed inscription reads: "Ed Begley Jr. since 1949."

Begley's whimsical gift-giving habit is typical of a personality that, in real life, seems every bit as offbeat as that of Dr. Victor Ehrlich, the character Begley plays on "St. Elsewhere."

Ehrlich is the nerd's nerd. He's such a natural male chauvinist that most of his colleagues refer to him as a pig. But, according to Begley, what Ehrlich is really exhibiting is not a hate for the opposite sex, but an all-consuming fear. "He's been such a loser with women all his life that he just tries to reject them before they get a chance to reject him," explains Begley.

"Now that Victor has been demoted by his nemesis, Dr. Craig (William Daniels), from surgery to ob/gyn, he always says that he's repelled by giving intimate examinations to his female patients. But the reality is that he's so desperate for contact of any kind with women, that he panics at the notion of touching them platonically. Poor old Victor."

Although Begley admits to a variety of insecurities, he obviously doesn't share Ehrlich's fear of women. He's been happily married to his wife Ingrid for almost 10 years and dotes on his 6-year-old son Nick and his 8-year-old daughter Amanda. The family lives in Ojai, which, says Begley, is "just far enough away from Los Angeles that we can stay sane but I can still get to work every day."

Begley's most recent film, "Transylvania 6-5000," bombed, but he got good personal reviews for his work in "Protocol," "Cat People" and "The In-Laws." Even better, his "St. Elsewhere" character has become something of a cult figure among viewers.

This state of affairs is particularly sweet to Begley since he was seriously contemplating getting out of acting just before he was cast as Ehrlich. He says his father, Ed Begley Sr. (best known for the films "Sweet Bird of Youth" and "Inherit the Wind"), neither discouraged nor encouraged him to follow in his acting footsteps.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Singer Gloria Loring recorded a duet called "Friends and Lovers." Who is her partner on the tune? And what else can you tell me about Miss Loring? — DEDE HARRIS, DENTON, N.C.

Balladeer Carl Anderson is warbling along with Miss Loring on "Friends and Lovers." Gloria was once married to "Growing Pains" star Alan Thicke, and the couple have two sons, Brennan, 11, and Robin, 9. They split in 1984 on the same day that Thicke's "Thicke of the Night" talk show was cancelled. Miss Loring is perhaps best known to TV viewers as Liz Chandler on daytime's "Days of Our Lives," whose cast she joined in 1980. What viewers may not know is that this gal is a real trooper. She was performing recently as an opening act for George Burns at Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas. Suffering from a bout of bronchitis and a flu-like condition, Miss Loring began coughing and choking after belting out several songs, including "The Facts of Life" theme, which she co-wrote with Thicke. While the packed house looked on, she cracked jokes about coughing, blew her nose, drank some water and eventually composed herself for a grand finale. A tireless worker for the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, Miss Loring has raised more than $500,000 since her son Brennan was diagnosed with the disease. All proceeds from her album, "A Shot in the Dark," the two volumes of "The Days of Our Lives" Celebrity Cookbook" and "Gloria Loring's Guide to Health and Beauty" are donated to the foundation.

Dear Michele: I detect a resemblance between Michael Lembeck, the handsome star of "Foley Square," and Harvey Lembeck, who starred in Phil Silvers' "Sgt. Bilko" series. Are they related? — RHONDA HUFFORD, BEAVER, PA.

Thirty-seven-year-old Michael Lembeck is Harvey's son. Harvey Lembeck died of a heart ailment on Jan. 5, 1982. He was 58.

Dear Michele: Help! We know that Pat Boone's father-in-law was a famous country singer, but we're going crazy trying to remember his name. — BARBARA COLMAN, PALM SPRINGS, CALIF.

Boone is married to the former Shirley Foley, daughter of country singer Red Foley. Red died in 1968.

The Right Direction

Will it never end? "Dallas" star Linda Gray, aka Sue Ellen, has made her directorial debut with an episode of the series. She keeps in the tradition of a cast that seems opposed to letting the series production team do its job; Larry Hagman and former "Dallas" star Patrick Duffy both directed several episodes, and last week's episode was written by Susan Howard, another "Dallas" denizen.

Soap Snippets

Steve Ford, of CBS's "The Young and the Restless," has bought a racehorse with friends and studio personnel; two-year-old Lottery has been training since January. Other acquisitions were welcomed by the two other network soap stars: Stork deliveries visited "As the World Turns"' Hilary Bailey Smith in January with baby girl Courtney and Charles Jay Hammer of "Guiding Light," the proud papa of two-month-old Nicholas.

Soap Weddings Are Finally Finished

By Connie Passalacqua

The February sweeps may be safely behind us, but all true soap fans must still be hung over from the absolute orgy of daytime weddings that took place the week of St. Valentine's Day. Seven couples on different shows marched down the aisle in what definitely was the biggest case ever of soap opera overkill.

Why so many weddings at once? St. Valentine's Day, of course, is the time for love. It conveniently takes place during a sweeps month, when soaps traditionally rev up their story lines in an attempt to inflate the size of their audiences. And soap opera fans just love weddings. It's their chance to share the one moment of happiness granted to soap couples, whose long romances usually go from one tragedy to the next.

Soap weddings are also a rare opportunity for soaps to generate outside publicity. "Brides" and "grooms" appeared on talk shows all over the country. This year as always, each wedding was advertised as "the most lavish soap opera wedding ever." Big bucks were certainly spent this year, but not one of the recent weddings came close to the true title holder — the 1981 "General Hospital"nuptials of Luke and Laura.

This last series of weddings was really a competition of which show could out-gimmick the other. "Days of Our Lives" staged a double wedding — between Pete Jannings (Michael Leon) and Melissa Anderson (Lisa Trusel) and the older Mickey (John Clarke) and Maggie Horton (Suzanne Rogers). On "Another World," Liberace tinkled the ivories at the reception for his good "friend," Felicia Gallant (Linda Dano) and her new husband Zane Lindquist (Patrick Tovatt). "General Hospital" sent half its cast to Charleston, S.C., to tape the wedding of gospel singer Terry Brock (Robyn Bernard) and Kevin O'Connor (Kevin Bernhardt).

Comedy was the gimmick used at both Felicia and Zane's wedding and the wedding of Tad Martin (Michael Knight) and Hilary Georgia (Carmen Thomas) on "All My Children." Felicia couldn't seem to find the correct church where her wedding was supposed to take place. Tad got locked in a bank vault, stopping him from getting to the church on time. Neither gimmick was funny.

Nick Mancuso tackles new Cannell series

By Gillian George

If you're familiar with Nick Mancuso's acting career, the last place you would look for him is in a grubby, unheated, unlit warehouse in a rundown section of Los Angeles.

Nick Mancuso

You'd have looked for the handsome actor in Europe, Canada or the United States. After all, Mancuso gets around: He had headed for France to shoot "Paroles Et Musique" with Catherine Deneuve and Christopher Lambert right after finishing up "Heartbreakers" with Peter Coyote in Hollywood.

Before that, he had played a sexy rock star in "Blame It On the Night." Following that, he did an episode of "Ray Bradbury Theater," before heading to Texas for "Death of an Angel."

Then the 31-year-old actor took nearly a year off. "I spent the time reading, learning to cook and to play piano and taking aikido (martial arts) lessons," says Mancuso.

Now, however, he's back with a vengeance. The grubby warehouse he sits in belongs to Stephen J. Cannell, the writer-producer of such popular series as "The A-Team," "Riptide," "Hardcastle & McCormick" and "Hunter." Now Cannell has resumed production of the new NBC series "Stingray," in which Mancuso plays the title role.

Many television insiders were surprised to see the series get back in gear more than six months after its two-hour pilot premiered. Mancuso says he doesn't really know what produced the time lapse, especially since the pilot garnered impressive ratings.

In any case, the actor says he's delighted to be back playing a mysterious character. "Stephen calls him 'the Lone Ranger with a heart' and I'm inclined to agree with him," Mancuso says.

After describing his professional adventures during the past six years, Mancuso, quite logically, concluded by saying that he would welcome a long run of "Stingray." And even though he swears his heart is in Canada — the actor is a native of Toronto — Mancuso's love of warm weather suggests that for him, California is now home.

She's young, talented and beautiful. Now Troy Beyer is a TV star. The actress stars as Jackie Deveraux, the daughter of sultry singer Dominique Deveraux in "Dynasty," airing Wednesday, March 19 on ABC.

Dr. Tom Rigby (David Dukes) beseeches his bride Carol Dryden (Victoria Tennant) not to believe the tale of his gambling debts in "Deadly Honeymoon," the episode of "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" airing Sunday, March 16 on NBC.

Sudsy Saga

Now nighttime-soap enthusiasts can retrace the smoking-jacket low-cleavage lineage of their favorite nouveau riche clans with "Dallas: the Early Years" next week on CBS. Introduced by soap-star emeritus Larry Hagman, the three-hour movie traces Ewing-Barnes history from the 1930s through the '50s.

CBS Intensifies Its NCAA Coverage

By Adam Beckerman

April is the cruelest month because there are no more college hoops. But CBS wants to help — by letting us pig out on the NCAA tournament in March. On Sunday, March 16, from noon till 6:30 is a second regional triple-header; on Thursday, March 20, it's a regional semifinal double-header starting a 9 p.m. (ET); On Friday, March 21, another regional semifinal double-header, starting at 10 p.m. (ET); then on Saturday, March 22, from 1:20-6 p.m. (ET), CBS airs the Southeast and West regional finals. Brent Musburger will be among the CBS sportscasters calling the games.

NBC exudes an automotive air on Saturday, March 22: The IMSA Miami Grand Prix from 2-4 p.m., then the Hertz Bay Hill Classic from the Lakewood Country Club in New Orleans.

The climax of the womens' indoor tennis season takes place this week in New York, airing nightly on the Madison Square Garden Network, a large regional cable service. The Virginia Slims Championship pits the 16 top pointgetters in single elimination competition. The finals are next Sunday, when USA Network will jump in the act.

With the America's Cup trials scheduled to begin in seven months in Fremantle, Australia, ESPN airs on Sunday, March 16, the fourth in its monthly installments of "America's Cup '87: A World View." The bulk of this edition concentrates on the 12-meter World Championships, which were held in the middle of February in the Indian Ocean off the western Australian coast. Twelve of the 14 syndicates scheduled to compete for the Cup romped in the heavy, tempestuous waves.

Also in this week's edition, ESPN introduces us to Chris Dickson, a 24-year-old skipper of one of the two New Zealand boats that faired surprisingly well, winding up second in the round-robin competition. We also learn why the French Kiss has trouble with its name. And how the Hawaiian breezes are treating Dennis Connor, helmsman of Liberty, who lost the Cup to Australia II three years ago and has set up his own syndicate called Sail America.

Live racing coverage begins in December — earlier, says Bill Fitts, executive producer of the series, "if the competition or viewer interest demands it."

Good health begins with you

Report to the Community 1984-85
Pitt County Memorial Hospital

In pursuit of good health

Good health. Poor health.

It's not necessarily the luck of the draw. Much of the groundwork for illness in later years is now being laid. But by adopting good health practices now, you can provide for a healthier future.

Less than 100 years ago, much of the illness in America was related to infectious disease. Today, many of these diseases have been eliminated thanks to better health standards, improved sanitation conditions, immunization and vaccine discoveries, pasteurization and a higher standard of living. As a result, today's chronic diseases, such as heart disease, stroke, emphysema, cirrhosis of the liver and cancer, are more directly related to lifestyles and environment. By controlling these two elements in our lives, we can help prevent, or at least postpone, illness.

Maintaining a healthy lifestyle helps prevent illness and lessens dependence on health care providers, thereby reducing medical costs. But just as important, a healthy lifestyle improves the quality of life.

At Pitt Memorial, we provide health care to the sick and injured but we also promote wellness by providing information on how to maintain a healthy lifestyle. This past year we expanded the health improvement programs for our employees to include exercise and nutrition classes and stress reduction workshops. In the end, however, you are the only person who can take control of your health and prepare for a promising future. Your health is in good hands — your own.

We have asked several employees at Pitt Memorial to share some ideas on how they have taken responsibility for their own health as well as the health of their families. Exercise and good nutrition are probably the most basic elements of a healthy lifestyle. Regular checkups by a physician are an important part of preventive care. Knowing how to manage stress and being prepared for the unexpected also make for a happier, healthier life.

Good health habits are doubly important when a baby is on the way — both for the mother and child. And as more of our population reaches retirement, it is important to stay active and healthy.

We hope you can use these ideas in your everyday life to take charge of your health, because after all, good health begins with you.

Jennifer Odenwaldt on nutrition

Who's minding the kitchen

It's said that he who runs the kitchen decisively influences family health and happiness. There's truth in those words, because what and how much we eat directly influences our physical and mental well-being.

Proper nutrition is essential to good health, but it doesn't always come easily. "It does take an effort to eat right, and to buy and prepare the right foods," says Jennifer Odenwaldt, a dietitian at Pitt Memorial. "Becoming aware of the need for good nutrition is a key to good health."

Eating the right foods and getting plenty of exercise are vital parts of Jennifer's overall wellness program. She shares her enthusiasm with others at a local fitness club where she teaches weight reduction classes and provides nutritional advice to clients. Jennifer and her roommate Karen Stegall, also a dietitian at Pitt Memorial, take turns preparing meals and enjoy trying new foods and cooking methods.

Eating the right foods is important to maintaining good health, but it's also crucial to a patient recovering from surgery or illness. Jennifer works with patients at Pitt Memorial to make sure their individual nutritional needs are met. For example accident victims need a high protein diet to promote healing, and diabetic patients need a diet that will not adversely affect their blood sugar levels. She also works with burn patients, elderly and pediatric patients and those who have had surgery.

A delicious chinese dinner of chicken and vegetables cooked in a wok is nutritious and easy to prepare.

A common misconception is that poor eating habits lead to a weight problem. Not always true, says Jennifer.

"Poor nutrition may not always show up in an overweight problem," Jennifer says. "Other symptoms are fatigue, irritability, mood swings and susceptibility to colds or other illnesses. All these things could be related to diet."

A native of Fairfax, Virginia, Jennifer came to Greenville to earn a degree in foods and nutrition and institution management from East Carolina University. She is well acquainted with the southern diet, which includes good foods but also is typically high in fat and sodium — two major contributors to heart disease.

Cooking with fatback, salt pork and bacon grease increases the fat and sodium content in foods, and Jennifer suggests using spices and herbs in their place. "It's hard to change the diet you have been brought up with and I wouldn't expect people to do this overnight," she says.

Jennifer helps patient Whit Johnson of Kinston choose from the hospital's menu.

Pork barbecue is a rich part of the culture of Eastern North Carolina but it's also high in fat. Jennifer says the connoisseur doesn't necessarily have to eliminate pig pickin's and barbecue sandwiches completely, just cut back to once a month. Eating seafood and poultry in place of red meat also helps cut down on fat intake.

Changing the times we eat can make a difference in the nutritional value we get from our food. Many people skip breakfast, may or may not eat lunch and then eat a large supper followed by no exercise. Jennifer encourages switching the meals around and eating a large breakfast, a light lunch and an even lighter evening meal.

Cooking methods also affect the nutritional value of the foods. For example, steaming vegetables helps to retain the vitamins and minerals. Try stewing, broiling, baking and grilling meats to cut down on fat and retain the meat's natural juices.

Take a look at your daily diet, Jennifer suggests, and make sure it contains the proper foods from the four basic food groups — meats, vegetables and fruits, milk and milk products, and breads and cereals. Everybody needs the essential elements offered by each of these groups to maintain a proper nutritional balance.

After the planning, shopping and cooking, the real fun begins. You can sit down and enjoy a meal that not only is good for you, but tastes good too!

"Food is something you should enjoy," Jennifer says. Bon appétit!

Dr. Bill Minteer on exercise

A matter of the heart

It clears the cluttered mind, relieves stress, and burns calories. It helps prevent illness and allows you to fight back hard when you get sick. What is IT?

Regular exercise. And it's important for everyone, says Dr. Bill Minteer, a Greenville cardiologist and a member of Pitt Memorial's medical staff. That's because medical studies indicate that a sedentary lifestyle makes a person more susceptible to a number of illnesses.

Because of his profession, the illness that most concerns Bill is coronary artery disease. A multitude of factors can play a role in the development of the disease, including age and gender, family medical history, the presence of diabetes, hypertension or obesity, and the influence of smoking and dietary habits.

Exercise is also a part of this complex equation, though its precise impact is hard to measure. Some evidence indicates that exercise can actually lessen the risk of coronary artery disease. At a minimum, though, people who exercise regularly tend to better tolerate heart problems, Bill says. And some form of exercise is a standard prescription for most of his patients.

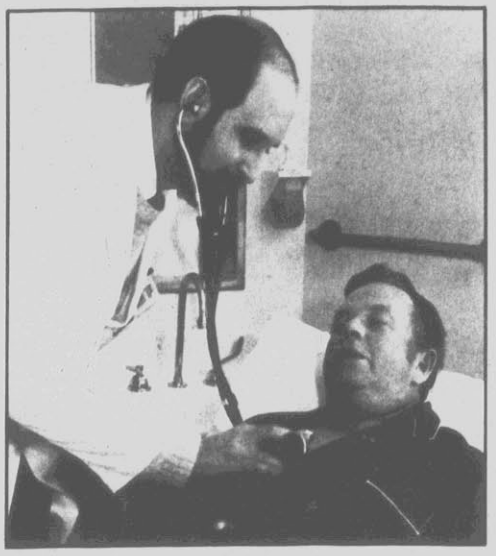

Vigorous exercise is the most beneficial, Bill says. Activities such as brisk walking, cycling, rowing and swimming relax the arteries while making your heart work harder to pump blood. For the greatest cardiovascular benefit, the exercise should be sustained for 20 to 25 minutes. As a result, the heart muscle becomes stronger, more efficient and less likely to be overtaxed.

''Aerobic dancing is another good exercise, if you can keep up with it,'' he laughed.

Bill says he usually ''mentions jogging last,'' because joggers risk orthopedic complications such as joint and muscular problems. And he doesn't encourage weight lifting, saying, ''Isometric exercise, where you are performing against a resistance, does not have any real training effect on your heart. It shoots up your blood pressure and, for some patients with heart disease, it can be dangerous.''

Patient Robert Dunn of Kinston gets a listen from the doctor.

Inclement weather should not hamper regular exercise, Bill says. When the weather's bad, he encourages people to walk in shopping malls, where it's warm in winter, cool in summer and it never rains.

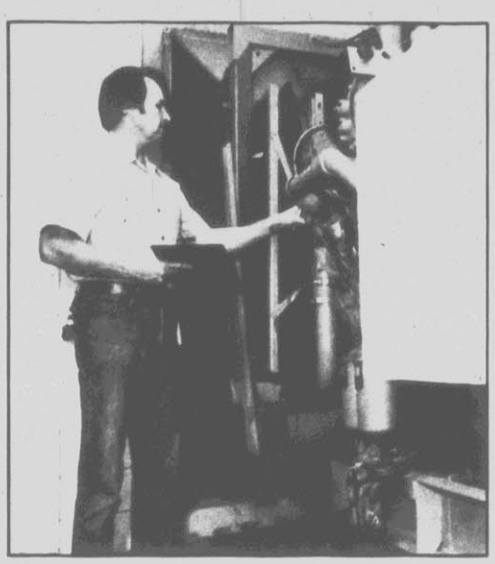

Nor should money be an obstacle. You don't have to belong to a health club to be in good health. Walking costs nothing and can even be fun if you do it with a friend, spouse or other family member.

Bill and his wife Melissa, a clinical instructor at Pitt Memorial, like to relax by riding bikes along Greenville's bike paths — ''more for enjoyment than anything else.'' For more vigorous exercise, they work out on a rowing machine and exercise bike in their home. He encourages others to spread their exercise activities over the week rather than cramming everything into a weekend. Ideally, regular exercise means working out three to four times each week.

Not everyone needs to have a complete physical examination before beginning an exercise program. But for people over 40 and for those with risk factors, Bill recommends that they first check with a physician, preferably their family doctor.

''It's good to consult someone who is going to be familiar with your medical history,'' he said. ''There are a number of things a family physician can look for by knowing what has happened to one's parents and siblings.''

In other words, you have to get into exercise gradually, but first, folks, you have to get off the couch. Whether your training program turns out to be rigorous and demanding or more moderately paced, you'll find that exercise is a wonderful way to a healthier you.

Lyman checks Pitt Memorial's emergency generator.

Lyman Hardee on safety

Don't take chances

It was two years ago this month that Lyman Hardee, utilities supervisor at Pitt Memorial, sat in his car and watched the torrential rains come to a sudden and eerie standstill.

Lyman, who has been fire chief of the Eastern Pines Fire District for 22 years, had been at the station when his wife Linda called. Their daughter was studying at a friend's house and Linda was concerned about the storm. Lyman picked up his child and took her home before the weather got worse, then returned to the station where more than 100 people were playing bingo. It was just after 9 p.m. on March 28, 1984.

As he sat in the car and watched, the rain came down harder than Lyman had ever seen before. Then the wind and rain suddenly stopped and the air turned hot.

"I went in the back door of the firehouse and told my boys, 'I don't know what it is but I don't like it.' About that time it hit."

What hit was a series of violent tornadoes that left nine people dead in Pitt County, five of whom lived in the Eastern Pines area. Though Lyman and his immediate family weren't harmed, his brother-in-law was killed in the storm. And for a few hours that night, the peaceful community was transformed into a war zone. Hampered by wind and rain and darkness, Lyman and his men made their way through the devastation to aid family and friends they had known all their lives.

Rescue workers turned the fire station into a small trauma center. Workers made do with what they had, in some cases making splints from bed sheets and boards found in the debris and carrying the injured on ironing boards to waiting rescue vehicles. By daybreak, rescue squads from Eastern Pines and other areas had transported nearly 150 people to Pitt Memorial.

Today a few splintered stumps are the only evidence of the damage done two years ago. Homes have been rebuilt and fields replanted. But those who lived through the storm will never forget that terrible night, nor will they forget the outpouring of love and labor that rebuilt their shattered community.

Though it was surely his most memorable emergency, the tornado disaster of 1984 wasn't Lyman Hardee's first brush with a tight spot. In 1985 alone, he and his squad fought 131 fires in the Eastern Pines Fire District, the most populous in Pitt County.

Lyman's expertise in matters of fire safety is put to good use at Pitt Memorial Hospital. In addition to looking after the hosital's heating, air conditioning and ventilation systems, Lyman instructs every new employee in such skills as the proper use of fire extinguishers and how to evacuate patients in case of fire. And for each new worker his advice is the same as it is for his 49 firemen: "Don't take chances."

That's sound advice, both on the job and at home. Lyman recommends that everyone have at least one smoke detector in the house and check it regularly to make sure it's working properly. Have fire extinguishers nearby and know how to use them. Keep a list of emergency telephone numbers beside the phone and teach younger children how to dial them. Finally, Lyman says many fire departments offer free home safety inspections; take advantage of them.

Of course, when there is an emergency, it's reassuring to know that Pitt County Memorial Hospital is equipped with one of North Carolina's four Level I trauma centers. And the EastCare helicopter can bring the life-saving resources of the hospital to an accident scene in a matter of a few minutes.

But whether it's a fire, a household accident or a tornado, the critical factor in an emergency is still you. Being prepared for the unthinkable before it happens can often make the difference between a catastrophe and a close call. That's why Lyman Hardee's advice is still the best — Don't take chances.

The Eastern Pines Fire Chief heeds the call of his community.

Dr. Archer Heinzen on stress management

You can't have it all

Despite what the popular ad says, you can't have it all. And realizing that is probably the best thing you can do to reduce stress in your life, says Dr. Archer Heinzen. She believes a key part of stress management is to make compromises by deciding which things you are willing to give up and which you want to put your time and money into.

As the hospital's employee assistance counselor, Archer shares stress management techniques with employees but also puts them to work in her own life. The mother of three has what she calls a "commuter marriage." For six- to eight-week stretches her husband Jim works in Panama, where he is a management consultant in the field of international economic development. While Jim is away, Archer assumes the role of mother and father to their 11-year-old son Stearnes and daughters Molly, age 9, and Harriotte, age 3.

Between a full day's work and maintaining a household, there's not much time left to spend with her children. Archer says she compromises by spending less time on housekeeping and more time with her family, but she cautions, "The things I give up may not be things other people are willing to give up. My compromises are not necessarily going to be good for someone else."

Another stress management technique is to try to take a short break both in the morning and afternoon and be sure to take time to eat lunch, says Archer, who has a Ph.D. in counseling psychology. Eating lunch not only provides the nutrition you need, but it also gives you a chance to relax away from work.

It's also important to take a break between leaving work and jumping into activities at home. When she arrives home, Archer sits down and reads the newspaper before she begins dinner.

"That time is really important because it gives me a chance to shift gears and get a little respite," Archer says.

A cooperative family that respects this quiet time is helpful but not always possible, especially with small children at home. Archer says some employees are still able to have some readjustment time by going to the hospital cafeteria for a break before heading home. Others who have long drives home use this time to relax. Archer has found that waking up earlier in the morning and getting ready before the rest of the family rises gives her additional time to herself.

Archer counsels a hospital employee.

Good nutrition and exercise are also important aspects of stress management, and Archer works hard at providing a low-fat, low-sugar diet for her family. Avoiding the fast-food trap is an important stress reducer. When there's no time to prepare an evening meal, Archer sometimes stops by the hospital cafeteria for take-out dinners.

Activities that bring the whole family together are important, Archer says. She looks for activities interesting to all the family members, whose ages range from 3 to 43 years old. Movies, swimming and trips to the mall are family favorites, and Archer has liberal visiting privileges for her children's friends.

A support group made up of family, neighbors, co-workers, friends or people in your church is essential to overall wellness, Archer says. All of us need someone we can talk with and share our feelings.

At Pitt Memorial, we realize such a support group is especially important to our patients. Each patient is surrounded by a support group made up of patient representatives, doctors, nurses, technicians, social workers, volunteers, psychologists, chaplains and many other caring employees. This group provides medical as well as emotional care, and sometimes the emotional healing is equally important to recovery, Archer says.

"People's emotional states have a big influence on their health," she says. "Positive emotional states contribute to good health, and vice versa."

A vigorous swim is a good way for the Heinzen kids to relax.

Virginia checks the inventory of supplies used in the critical care unit at Pitt Memorial.

Virginia Daniels on children

Bringing up babies

More than 2,300 babies were delivered at Pitt Memorial last year, but the miracle of life never becomes routine or unexciting.

The same holds true for Virginia and Willie Daniels, who had their second baby boy in February. Their 5-year-old son Lee was also born at Pitt Memorial and he was thrilled at the prospects of a brother or sister. "I'm going to have a baby," he boasted.

Welcoming the baby is a family affair at the Daniels' home. Virginia, a unit clerk in the hospital's cardiac care unit, encouraged Lee to help get things ready for the new baby. Lee says he doesn't mind sharing his bedroom with his new brother and offered to move his toys to make more space.

Virginia and Willie know all about the hospital's neonatal and pediatric services. Within hours after Lee was born, the doctors discovered he had respiratory problems and was anemic.

"I knew something was wrong the first time I saw him," Virginia said. "I had never seen a newborn before but I knew he didn't look right."

Lee was taken to the neonatal intensive care unit, where he spent the next 10 days under the close supervision of highly trained doctors, nurses and technicians. The next time Virginia saw Lee, he was 10 hours old and was attached to several monitors and wires.

"I had been used to seeing adults in the critical care unit hooked to lines, but not children. I was scared at first, but they explained what every tube and wire was for and why it was there," she said. "It seems like every time I came to the unit, the doctor was there to talk to me, and I just felt so much better. I really appreciated it."

Because Lee was in the neonatal unit, Virginia was not able to take advantage of the rooming-in program, which allows the newborn to remain in the mother's room during most of the hospital stay. Nevertheless, the bonding between mother and baby that comes from physical contact is crucial, and the nurses encourage mothers to hold their babies. Virginia was hesitant at first to hold Lee for fear of disturbing the wires, but with the reassurance and help of the nurses, she was soon confidently holding and feeding her new son. Virginia was discharged after three days but continued to return to the unit each day to visit and feed Lee. On days she could not come, her sister or sister-in-law would come and feed him.

Pitt Memorial's neonatal intensive care unit is a blessing, Virginia says. "I'm so glad it's here!" she said. Without it, Lee would have been taken to Durham or Chapel Hill, placing a hardship on Virginia and Willie. Because Lee was close to home, Willie was able to continue working, and both Willie and Virginia could visit their baby at any time.

Because of his anemia, Lee needed a blood transfusion at two months and had his spleen removed last year. He continues to be under the care of a hematologist.

During both pregnancies, Virginia worked varying shifts at the hospital. Aware of the strain of an irregular schedule, she was especially careful to eat nutritious meals.

Many studies have shown that prenatal care helps prevent complications of pregnancy and childbirth. Eating the right foods and maintaining a good balance of exercise and rest are part of this care that keeps both baby and mother healthy. A family doctor or obstetrician can help expectant mothers do what is best for themselves and their unborn children.

Virginia and Willie are thankful their second child is healthy and didn't need the specialized care of the neonatal intensive care unit. But they are also glad it's here for those babies who need the lifesaving care during those first critical hours of life.

Five-year-old Lee helps his mom choose an appropriate gift for the new baby.

Edythe Price on retirement

Not ready to retreat

"Life's a battle. You retreat and you surrender." Edythe Price may have retired, but she certainly hasn't raised a white flag.

During her seven years as a volunteer at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, Edythe has given more than 3,500 hours of her time to help patients and their families as well as the hospital's staff.

Following her retirement in 1978, the former high school English teacher moved from Charlotte to be near her daughter and her family in Greenville. A friend of Edythe's was a volunteer at the hospital and invited her to come along. "After the first couple of visits, I was addicted," she says smiling.

Edythe works one day a week in the speech and audiology department doing clerical work and one day in preadmissions serving as an escort for new patients. She accompanies patients to the laboratory and other areas for tests and then helps them settle into their rooms.

"I've worked in many areas throughout the hospital and I think overall my favorite is preadmissions because I have direct contact with the patients. So many of the people who come into the hospital are older people or those who have never been in a hospital before. Some have been in so many times they are becoming very discouraged. Others are away from home and have no family nearby. Just to have someone to be friendly and give some assistance means a great deal to them. Working with patients has the greatest return of any job in the hospital."

Edythe has a strong philosophy about how to make the most of retirement. "One of the worst things about retirement is that people withdraw," she said. "When you retire, you retreat from a lot of the activities you formerly took part in and some people almost retire from society."

She agrees there is nothing wrong with enjoying the new-found freedom from the responsibilities and pressures of a career, but adds that many people soon begin grasping for something to do to make themselves feel useful. She encourages these people to find something that puts them in touch and keeps them in touch with others. And the hospital is an excellent place to do just that.

A reassuring smile and a kind word put patient Patricia Alligood of Washington at ease.

Keeping a young attitude is important to Edythe, who says one of the best ways to try to keep young is to be around young people. "That was one thing I enjoyed so much about teaching because I worked with young people and I was able to catch their enthusiasm."

The retired educator has not set the schoolbooks aside. As part of the hospital's school program, she tutors young patients so they won't fall behind in the work they miss while hospitalized.

Regular checkups, good nutrition and exercise are also important in keeping a healthy outlook, Edythe says. She lives with her sister Ruth, who also is a retired teacher, and together they share cooking duties. And Edythe's volunteer work provides plenty of exercise walking up and down the corridors at Pitt Memorial. When she is not volunteering, she enjoys needlework and reading.

"I'm a great believer in psychosomatic medicine. If you're happy with what you are doing, I think you feel better physically," Edythe said.

It doesn't take long to realize that Edythe enjoys what she does. So do the other 545 volunteers at Pitt Memorial who work in virtually every part of the hospital. Etsil Mason, director of volunteer services, tries to place the volunteers in work settings that make the most of their individual talents. And more volunteers are always needed. To become part of the group that makes Pitt Memorial a special place for people of all ages, call Etsil at 757-4491.

Edythe helps her grandson Neil Harrington study for an upcoming test.

The year in review . . .

1985 was an exciting year for Pitt Memorial and the community. Many new services were created, while others were expanded as we sought to improve the quality of health care available in Pitt County and Eastern North Carolina. Here is a list of some of the significant developments that took place during the year:

- Initiated EastCare, the first emergency helicopter ambulance service for Eastern North Carolina.
- Welcomed a second cardiac surgeon and started a pediatric cardiac surgery program.
- Joined with the medical school in welcoming to the medical center 68 new medical students and 46 new resident physicians training in a variety of specialties.
- Contributed $55,000 to the Pitt County United Way and the 30 health and human service agencies it represents.
- Welcomed back more than 200 former neonatal patients and their families for a Christmas party.
- Served as a training center for student nurses from ECU, Pitt Community College, Atlantic Christian College and Beaufort Community College as well as technical institutes in Tarboro, Wilson and Rocky Mount.
- Initiated a physician-clergy breakfast program, received accreditation for the Clinical Pastoral Education program and recruited a second full-time chaplain for the hospital.
- Combined the expertise of East Carolina Health Services, Inc. (a wholly-owned subsidiary of Pitt Memorial) and Brim & Associates, Inc. of Portland, Ore., to form East Carolina Rural Hospitals, Inc. This joint venture will provide rural hospitals access to appropriate financial, management and clinical resources.
- Opened a new, expanded emergency department and trauma center and received a Level I designation as the regional trauma center for Eastern North Carolina.
- Supported the medical school in opening the state-of-the-art Radiation Oncology Center for the treatment of cancer.
- Joined the medical school in celebrating its tenth anniversary as a four-year school.
- Started a patient representative program to serve as a liaison between the hospital and its patients.
- Joined with the Pitt County United Way in purchasing 50 Communi-Call units, a two-way emergency response system that keeps communication lines open between medical personnel and the homebound.
- Developed special clinics for general rehabilitation, rheumatoid arthritis and spinal cord injury patients.
- Initiated a rehabilitation program for patients with chronic pulmonary problems and started a support group for patients with spinal cord injuries.
- Developed a new service using radiology equipment to detect swallowing problems.
- Formed a multidisciplinary support team to address the nutritional needs of our patients.
- Cooperated with local motels to offer discounts to patients and families.
- Began admitting some patients on the same day as their scheduled surgery, thus reducing costs to the patient.
- Developed a laser surgery program.
- Received three-year accreditation from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.
- Opened a pediatric park for use by hospitalized youngsters.
- Developed an in-house alcohol abuse treatment program offered to patients and their families.

"YOUR WEEDS HAVE FINALLY MET THEIR MATCH."

Head Groundskeeper Jim Delfino

"CHEMLAWN GOES THAT EXT AND GIVE YOU A THICKE

I'm a professional groundskeeper at San Francisco's Candlestick Park. The grass I have to take care of is no ordinary lawn—it's a battlefield seven days a week. When there's a game, it's the home team against the visitors. The rest of the week it's me against weeds. Fortunately, I have a full-time staff of trained professionals to help me.

But when I'm at home, I'm on my own. That's why I decided to hire ChemLawn. Their lawn care specialists have as much training as my staff. And they always go the extra yard to make sure the job is done right.

Now, for the first time, my lawn will be thick, green and lush—and more weed-free than ever.

"ChemLawn Specialists have the know-how it takes to help eliminate weeds."

Your ChemLawn Specialist knows how to take care of oxalis, dandelions, chickweed and over 60 other broad-leaf weeds.

He also knows that applying one treatment of weed controls and forgetting about them is about as effective as wishing them away. Weed control is an ongoing process. So, your specialist will keep checking to make sure they're not attempting a comeback and threatening to take over your lawn.

And because you see your lawn every day, you are a major force in helping your specialist combat particularly insistent weeds. If you notice any, just call him and he'll rush back out to your home to deal with them head-on.

Together, you and your specialist can win the battle against weeds and have a plush, green lawn with a thick, dense turf—which in the long run is a lawn's best defense against weeds.

"They give your lawn what it needs, when it needs it."

Lawns are finicky eaters. Yours has nutritional needs that are determined by grass type, the makeup of the soil, shade conditions and the season.

Your ChemLawn Specialist has the training to spot signs of nutritional imbalance. For instance, can you tell when your lawn is "starving" and needs extra Nitrogen? Or when it's "tired" and needs a pick-me-up of Phosphorus or Potassium? Your ChemLawn Specialist can. His proper care and feeding will give your lawn the right nutrients at the right time.

Bugs don't conform to a given calendar. Some are a threat all year long. Others thrive for only a brief period, and inflict great damage before they're even noticed. With the help of ChemLawn's agronomists, your specialist will keep alert to which insects pose a danger in your area. He'll look for signs of insect damage that you might not recognize, and apply environmentally safe insect controls as needed.

"Their lawn care specialists are well-trained, full-time pros. Not just kids on a summer job."

It's a fact. Many ChemLawn Specialists have a college background in agriculture or agronomy. Add to this a continuing program of staff seminars and study, and you'll see that the ChemLawn Specialist has a professional's credentials.

To introduce himself to you, your local ChemLawn Specialist will give you a complete lawn analysis. It's absolutely free, no strings attached. He'll study grass types and density, thatch depth and weed intrusion for valuable clues to what your lawn needs. Naturally, he'll also look for signs of disease and harmful insects. (You don't even have to be at home when he does all this. He'll leave the results on your door, and get back to you later to discuss them.)

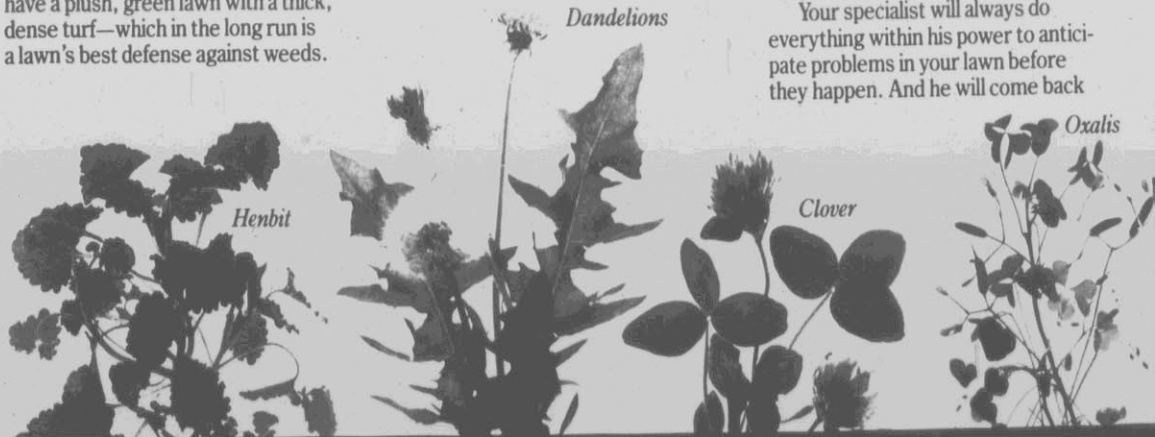

Based on what this inspection reveals to the specialist, he'll come up with a plan tailored to your lawn, and give you an exact price quote.

And here's a nice surprise. The cost of ChemLawn care is little more than you'd spend to do the job yourself, when you consider what you'd pay for the necessary materials and equipment. Not to mention all your time spent buying and applying them.

"If you call with a problem, they respond within 48 hours. No matter what."

Weeds, insects and disease do their dirty work fast. But not fast enough to outmaneuver ChemLawn.

Your specialist will always do everything within his power to anticipate problems in your lawn before they happen. And he will come back throughout the season, to check up on its condition.

However, should you ever spot something that looks not-quite-right, just call. He'll respond within two working days to deal with the trouble.

Should weeds ever make an appearance, for instance, just let him know. He'll waste no time getting back onto your lawn with an additional weed control application. Remember, never hesitate to contact your specialist. His service calls are free. He's dedicated to making your lawn its absolute best, and he'll welcome any help in achieving that goal.

When it comes to making your lawn thicker and greener, your ChemLawn Specialist is probably harder to please than you are. He'll keep coming back and he'll keep working until you're completely satisfied with the results. At that point, if what you see doesn't measure up, he'll give you your money back.

"No one cares more about an environmentally safe program."

ChemLawn sets the industry standard in its commitment to the health and safety of its employees, customers and the general public, and the protection of the environment. All pesticides used in the ChemLawn program have been registered by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the appropriate state agency, and have passed additional evaluations by ChemLawn's own experts. All materials are applied in dilute solutions which are no more toxic than most common household products. ChemLawn applications equal or exceed the safety of lawn care products sold in retail stores and provide the advantage of professional handling and application of these materials.

Now's the time to stop weeds and start greening up.

So why wait any longer to get your lawn into its best condition ever? Call ChemLawn today—or drop the attached postage-paid card in the mail—to schedule your free lawn analysis.

Remember, there's no obligation. A ChemLawn Specialist will examine your lawn, evaluate what you need and give you an exact price quote.

So don't delay. After all, now is the prime time to get a head start on the season and insure that your lawn has its best year ever.

Our free lawn analysis is a good way to see what we can do. We'll study your lawn's condition thoroughly and leave you a written report.

The ChemLawn Specialist applies exactly the right treatment at the right time to most effectively control weeds. He won't be satisfied until you're satisfied.

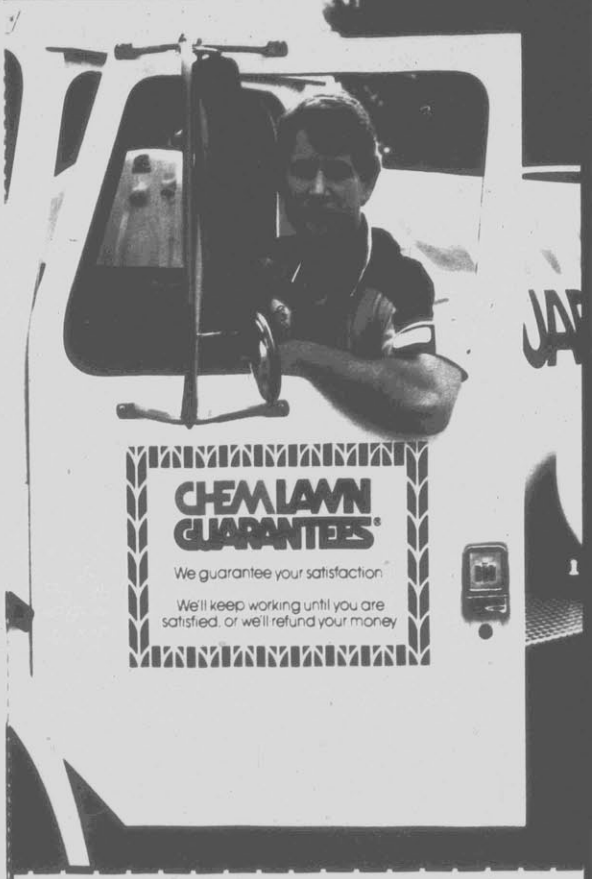

Have a question? Spotted a problem? Give your specialist a call anytime. He'll respond within two working days. Guaranteed.

Your specialist will give you tips on how to mow your lawn. He'll even help readjust your mower, if necessary, to see that it cuts to the proper height.

Q Who are the only three female governors in the U.S.?—Marie Harris, Montclair, N.J.

A Madeleine Kunin of Vermont and Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky are the only two women who currently hold governorships. Both are Democrats.

Q Priscilla Presley writes in her memoirs that, for five or six years before their wedding in 1967, when they were living together in Memphis and elsewhere, Elvis refused to engage in sexual relations with her until they were married. Since Elvis was a noted "swordsman," doesn't this observation by Priscilla read like a fairy tale and lend doubt to her memoirs? —Diane F., Murfreesboro, Tenn.

A Not necessarily. Elvis Presley was a highly sexed young man, but his methods of achieving sexual satisfaction may well have eschewed the loss of Priscilla's chastity without depriving him of release.

UPI/Bettmann

Priscilla and Elvis Presley on their wedding day

Q Do readership surveys support so frequent publication of questions and answers about Nancy and Ronald Reagan? One or the other or both appear in nearly every Personality Parade. Also, for whom was Larry Speakes a spokesman before he became the voice of the President? Is that the name he was given at birth or the stage name he has taken in the Reagan Theater at the White House?—Norman H. Jacobson, Middleton, Wis.

A Curiosity about the President and Mrs. Reagan, their activities, friends, policies and children appears to be insatiable. As for Larry Speakes, the deputy press secretary, he was born on Sept. 13, 1939, in Cleveland, Miss., and christened Larry Melvin Speakes. From 1968 to 1974, Speakes was employed as press secretary by James Eastland, the Democratic Senator from Mississippi. Subsequently he worked in the Nixon and Ford White Houses and for the public-relations firm of Hill and Knowlton. In 1980, after Reagan defeated Jimmy Carter, Speakes asked James Brady, Reagan's press secretary, for a job. Brady took him on as his deputy. On March 30, 1981, Brady was severely wounded in the attempted assassination of the President, and Speakes took over many of Brady's duties. Since then, he has survived and thrived.

MacArthur with Ike, his former aide but no admirer

Q Why is it that when Gen. Douglas MacArthur died and his funeral took place—in Norfolk, Va., I believe, on April 11, 1964—President Lyndon Johnson showed up, but former Presidents Truman and Eisenhower did not? Did Ike and Truman dislike MacArthur that much?—F.F., West Point, N.Y.

A In April 1964, Truman was almost 80 and Eisenhower nearly 74. Neither admired MacArthur personally. Truman regarded him as a pompous, troublemaking insubordinate. Ike had worked under MacArthur in Washington, D.C., and the Philippines in the '30s and did not hold the general in the highest light—except, he said, as an actor. Incidentally, though President Johnson issued a White House proclamation honoring MacArthur as an American hero, he was unable to attend the funeral in Norfolk and sent Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

A Five.

Are the fanciest "investments" you have the equity in your home and some money in a federally insured bank?

Are your only "tax shelters" an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) or a Keogh plan?

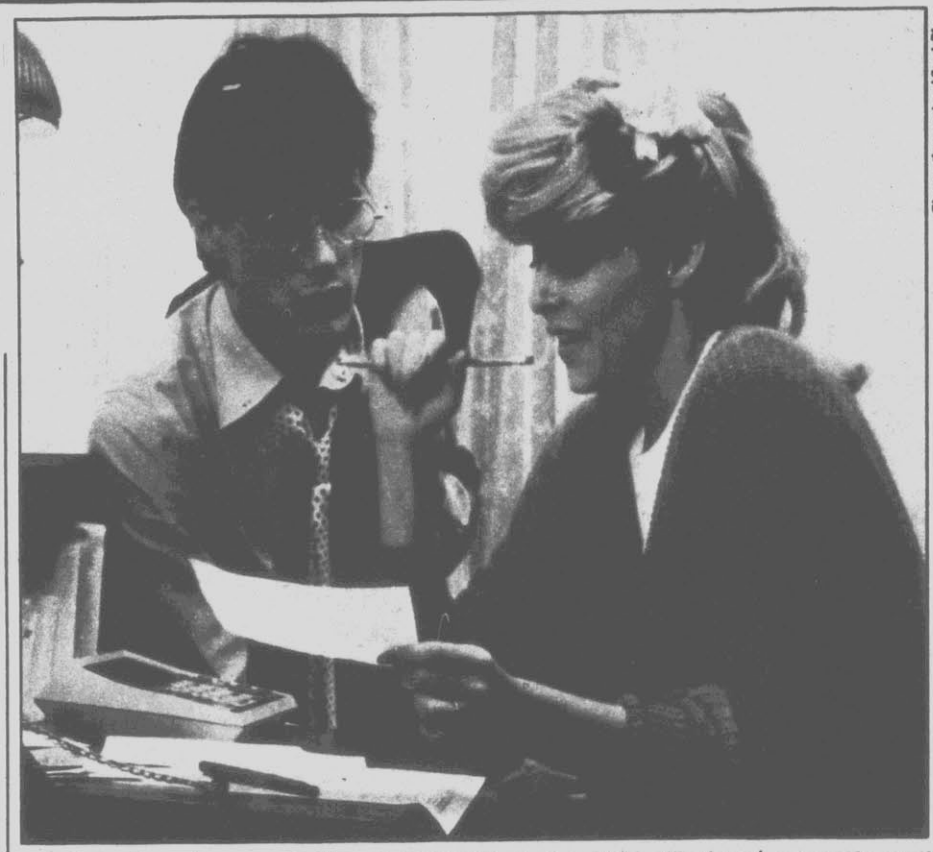

No oil deals? No film production limited-partnership interests? No second-mortgage trust deeds? No program of commodities speculation or covered-options writing?

Relax. You're probably doing the right thing.

There are some simple, common-sense things to know about money (you probably know them already) beyond which the waters get murky, the sales pitches get feverish and the results are often disappointing.

I'm not suggesting that it helps to be ignorant about money, or that all your investable funds—once you have investable funds—should be in the bank. But I would suggest that 90% of the financial security and success you can reasonably expect to have is likely to come from a few simple, prudent precepts. If you follow them, you may have less to worry about than you think.

How do you score on this checklist?

Channel International Stock Photo

Deborah Feingold

'These 20 simple, common-sense principles are the secret of financial security. Do you follow them?'—A.T.

1. Do you know where you stand now and where you'd like to stand in the future? Have you made a budget or plan to get there? Most people retire with little "not because they plan to fail," as financial adviser Venita Van Caspel is fond of saying, "but because they fail to plan."

2. Do you save something from each paycheck? "Pay yourself first," whether through a payroll deduction plan or by directing a portion of each paycheck to a savings account or no-load (no sales commission) mutual fund.

3. Do you spend less each year than you earn? Incredible as it may seem if you are struggling to get by on $85,000 a year, other people in similar circumstances manage to break even on $65,000. Really, they do! Live like them for a couple of years, and you'll sock away the seed of a small fortune. Incredible as it may seem if you are struggling to get by on $19,000 a year, (a) families earning $85,000 consider it a struggle too, and (b) other people in similar circumstances manage to break even on $17,000. Live like them for a couple of years and, even though you won't amass a small fortune, you'll at least have begun a steady march out of your financial hole and onto higher ground.

None of this is easy, which is why most people never get out of the hole. But once you get into the habit, saving becomes easier. Taken alone, forgoing a night out on the town is a disheartening and all-but-meaningless sacrifice. But as part of a grand plan, like getting out of debt or stashing away the downpayment for a house or building a $500,000 retirement, the same sacrifice can actually be satisfying. You're stuck at home, but instead of thinking how much you'd rather be out, you can be dreaming of the summer place you want to buy. You have a plan. You're making the sacrifice because you want to, not because you have to. You're in control.

4. Do you buy nonperishables in bulk when they're on sale? If so, you probably can make $1000 stretch to buy $1400 worth of the very same goods you would have bought during the year anyway—a 40% tax-free "return" on $1000 tied up in tuna fish, hot cocoa mix and shaving cream. It's convenient (fewer trips to the store), you beat inflation by buying now instead of later, and you rarely run out of anything. Seven-Eleven is great, but Seven-Eleven is no bargain. To someone approaching the 50% tax bracket, a penny saved—not spent—is nearly as good as two pennies earned.

How To Feel Secure About Your MONEY

BY ANDREW TOBIAS

(When you add in Social Security and local income tax, you may be closer to the 50% tax bracket than you think. If you're single and making $24,000 a year in Minnesota, $40 or so of the next $100 you earn will be taxed away. Single and self-employed earning $37,000 in New York City—$60 or more.)

5. Do you shop carefully for higher-ticket items? In Miami, you can get a good lawn sprinkler system installed by reputable tradesmen for $1040—or for $500. You can get good insurance for a late-model Buick in Evansville, Ill., if you're 40 and violation-free, for $687—or for $340. You can be cremated in New York for $550—or for $250.

The more expensive product or service is often a better value for the long run—but often it's not. Sensible cost control, whether you're an aerospace firm or a math teacher, is half the battle for financial success. Boring but true.

6. Do you distinguish between spending and investing? Two thousand bucks on a Caribbean cruise is money spent. Well spent, no doubt, but spent. Two thousand dollars paid for a used car to get to work, or for an electronics course to give you a shot at a better job, or for cleaning and painting the house you're trying to sell, is money invested. (Two thousand dollars laid out for a hot mining or technology stock somebody told you about, trading for just pennies a share, is money out the window.)

7. Have you paid off all your high-interest loans? The simplest way to earn 20%, risk-free, is not having to pay 20% on a credit card. If you can possibly help it, don't be one of those people for whom life is 20% more expensive than for everyone else. Although most interest rates have come down, the real cost of borrowing—the interest rate minus inflation—is much higher than it was a couple of years ago.

Social Security

A Yankelovich, Skelly & White survey showed that 73% of "young professionals" aged 25 to 39 had "little or no confidence" in the Social Security system, with fully 40% believing they'd likely receive nothing from it.

But actuaries and common sense argue otherwise. It's true that there will be more and more retirees per worker; but even when we yuppies retire, there still will be a lot of working people paying Social Security tax. What's more, a trillion-dollar surplus is expected to mount in the years to come, which should at least partially help to provide for distant shortfalls.

The important thing to remember is that Social Security will never provide more than a bare minimum—nor was it ever designed to. Basically, we, not the government, are responsible for providing for our golden years. (One eminently sensible way to stretch benefits further would be to make them fully taxable. For poorer people, no tax would be due; for rich people, at least part of the unneeded benefit would be returned.)

To be sure the government has credited you with all the Social Security payments you've made, and to get an idea of what benefits your family could count on if you died or were disabled this year, write or call your local Social Security office.

8. Do you take full advantage of a 401K salary reduction plan, if your employer offers one, or an Individual Retirement Account, or a Keogh plan if you are self-employed? These are truly good deals for almost everyone, in that the money you contribute cuts your tax bill and, even more important over the long run, compounds untaxed until you begin withdrawing it.

Is it foolish for a 23-year-old, just starting out, to squirrel away $2000 in a well-managed mutual fund under the umbrella of an IRA? (Virtually all mutual funds eagerly offer IRA accounts.) Maybe so, but if it's a mutual fund that manages to grow at 14% a year—not easy, but no pie-in-the-sky either—that single $2000 contribution, which might have cost just $1500 after tax savings, would be worth $490,000 at age 65. Admittedly, that $490,000 would be subject to tax as it was withdrawn. Admittedly, too, $490,000 isn't likely to buy nearly what it buys today. On the other hand, the idea isn't to put away $2000 once but to put away as much as you can every year.

And if you ever absolutely had to, you could withdraw all or part of your funds (by borrowing, in the case of a 401K plan, or by paying a penalty and taxes, in the case of the IRA or Keogh).

If you're going to save any money for your last two or three decades, it may as well be under the shelter of one of these plans. What's more, just about the time inexpensive term life insurance ceases to be inexpensive—your mid-50s—a retirement fund grown fat with years of contributions can largely or entirely take its place.

9. Do you diversify? The future is unknowable. The more certainty with which someone predicts it, the more skeptical you should be. Strong cases can be made that we're headed for explosive inflation, ruinous deflation or just a gradual, generally prosperous, only modestly inflationary muddling through. I'm a muddler myself, but it's not inconceivable that things will come unhinged. To bet everything on one or another scenario is truly gutsy—or foolish.

If you're lucky enough to have some money after covering the basics—paying off all but the mortgage and subsidized loans, obtaining adequate insurance, fixing the roof and so on—it makes sense to have a four-pronged strategy:

- Some liquid funds. Money in the bank, a money-market account—wherever.
- An inflation hedge. A home is the most common; someone else's home, if you can afford it, is good too. Precious metals, precious metal stocks, precious-metal-stock mutual funds, options on precious metal stocks—these are much more aggressive inflation hedges but a gamble most people should undertake sparingly, if at all. Pepper, someone recently suggested, might be good: Relatively little is grown; people don't much care what they pay for it, so prices have room to rise; and it keeps a long time. Somehow, even if I knew how to invest in pepper, I think I'd stick to real estate.
- A deflation hedge. Long-term Treasury bonds, for example. You'll look awfully smart having locked in 10% for 30 years if long-term Treasury rates ever decline to 8% or 6% or 4%. (Impossible? See "Interest Rates" box on this page.)

Interest Rates

Traditionally, interest rates sit about 3% above expectations of inflation. If inflation comes roaring back, interest rates will soar. But younger readers may be interested to note that home mortgage rates had never exceeded 6% in this century until 1966. From 1880 through 1965, the rate on prime corporate bonds ranged from 4% to 6%. Today, it's 10% to 11% or so. The rate on long-term municipal bonds—now around 9%—averaged 3% for most of this century. The case is frequently made that interest rates will soon be shooting back up—and they may. But it's also obvious that there's plenty of room to fall.

Peter Yates

Deborah Feingold

'A home's a great place to live, but may no longer be a great investment.'

—A.T.

Real Estate

If inflation comes roaring back, the folks mortgaging themselves to the hilt to buy property with nothing down will do fine. But the easy money in real estate is over. In part, that's because, after rising faster than inflation for decades, real-estate prices in most areas can no longer be thought of as bargains (buy low, sell high). In part, it's because juicy tax incentives seem to be on the wane. And, in part, it's because banks will no longer take the fall. Gone are the 6% mortgages that locked the banks in for 30 years but that you could typically prepay without penalty after one year.

As always, if you're smart, experienced and willing to work really hard at it, you can probably do well with real estate. But that's true of almost any field.

• A prosperity hedge. Your own business. Common stocks. There hasn't been a single 25-year period in this century—not even the one starting in 1928 or 1929—when stocks did not substantially outperform bonds and other "safe" investments. In the long run, stocks perform better precisely because they are riskier. The market in effect pays you to take the risk.

How you weight your assets among these four prongs depends on your own circumstances and appraisal of the future. But, at least, examining your assets to see how you are weighted can be a useful exercise. If you find that 85% of your assets are inflation hedges, ask yourself whether you're that sure inflation is going to come roaring back. If you find 90% of your assets are in deflation hedges like long-term bonds, ask yourself what would happen to you if inflation did come roaring back. If all your investable funds are in money-market funds and two-year certificates of deposit, ask yourself whether you're really that confident interest rates will be headed back up over the years to come. Because, if they're not—if they're headed down—you should, with at least some of your funds, be locking in today's high rates for decades, not months.

The Deficit

It's too big. Everybody agrees. And every year it swells the total national debt, currently about $2 trillion (not to mention all the local government, corporate and personal debt). The potential hazards are much publicized, and that's good, because it keeps pressure on free-spending politicians. But it's also worth noting—as Stephen Leeb does in his optimistic new book, Getting In on the Ground Floor—that, as a percentage of Gross National Product, the federal debt, at about 43%, is in line with (a little lower than, actually) its average of the last 60 years and much lower than it was in 1949, at the outset of a 16-year bull market.

It's not necessary ever to pay off the national debt, any more than most healthy corporations or wealthy individuals are ever entirely debt-free (you can be rich and still hold a mortgage). What's important is that the size of the debt relative to the economy as a whole not grow much more—better still, begin to shrink.

With that in mind, consider this: If the economy were to grow at 3.5% yearly in real terms, and inflation added another 3.5% in artificial growth, for a total expansion of 7%, the national debt could also increase 7%—by $140 billion or so—without growing at all relative to the size of the economy.

This isn't to minimize the deficit problem or to suggest that we shoot for $140 billion deficits (for, if we do, we'll get $200 billion deficits in good years and $400 billion deficits in recessions). But it may help to explain why the sky hasn't fallen—and why, with restraint, it may not.

10. Do you buy tax-free municipals? It's not the interest you earn on your money that counts, it's the interest you keep. To someone in the 50% tax bracket, earning 9% tax-free is not like earning 18%, as all the ads imply—it's like earning 9%. But—and this is, of course, the point—you get to keep it. At this writing, municipal bonds maturing in five to 30 years have robust yields not that much lower than those of taxable bonds. But, in selecting them, be aware of the credit risk (even municipal sewage authorities can go broke), the market risk (if the general level of interest rates rises, bond prices fall), and call provisions (almost all municipals can be called in 10 years after issuance—and will be, if interest rates decline significantly).

And shop around. Two brokers may charge significantly different prices for the same bond. If you have at least $25,000 or $50,000 to invest, you may wish to consult with a municipal bond specialty house (two with toll-free numbers: Lebenthal & Co. and Gabriele, Hueglin & Cashman). If you have less (or even if you don't), you may prefer the convenience and diversification of municipal bond mutual funds—but you pay for it.

11. Do you buy low and sell high? Or do you shun things like stocks and real estate when they're "sick" and come back for another try when they've doubled and are "healthy" again? It's better to buy things when nobody wants them and the prices are low than when prices are so high they're making headlines.

12. Do you invest in the stock market through two or three carefully selected no-load mutual funds? Beating the market averages is tough. Most highly paid professional money-managers, though skilled and hard-working, actually do a little worse than average. This is because overall they virtually are the average—the entire market—except that, unlike the statistical averages, their performance is diminished by brokerage

Gramm-Rudman

The Gramm-Rudman bill mandates a balanced budget by 1991—even if it wrecks the economy in the process. Obviously, what Congress has passed, Congress can repeal.

commissions. The Dow Jones Industrial Average doesn't have to pay brokerage commissions; everybody else does.

Brokers, on average, are even less likely than fund managers to outperform the averages with any consistency, because they have to spend so much time selling, hand-holding and unsnarling paperwork. Find a couple of good no-load mutual funds instead. Some do seem regularly to beat the averages. But don't just choose a fund that's been doing well recently—this year's best performers are very often next year's worst. For guidance, see the Sept. 16, 1985, issue of Forbes and Money magazine's twice-yearly survey at your library. Or send a tax-deductible $36 for The Handbook for No-Load Fund Investors (Box 283, Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y. 10706) or $49 to subscribe to Mutual Fund Forecaster (3471 N. Federal Highway, Fort Lauderdale, Fla. 33306).

13. Are you patient? For all but a very few, slow but steady does win the race. It was the temptation to make a fast killing that wrecked Ralph Kramden with regularity on The Honeymooners and that wrecks so many of us today.

14. Are you properly skeptical? I am sure he's out there, but I have yet to meet the man or woman who ever got rich investing in something sold to him over the phone by a stranger or introduced by a piece of bulk mail.

If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. You get what you pay for in the financial marketplace—if you're careful. Try to get more, and you generally get what's coming to you.

Ask yourself: If this is such a great deal, why are they offering it to me? Ask yourself: What's in this for the guy or gal selling it to me? I don't care if the two of you were classmates or belong to the same church. If the salesperson gets a commission, he may very well have convinced himself it's a great deal for you; he may fervently hope it works out well for you; but his enthusiasm and high hopes don't make your money grow.

It's fine to take a crazy flier for the fun of it, the dream of it—but be aware that, when you do, you are in all likelihood spending money, not investing it. You pay a price for fun.

15. Do you buy financial products—as opposed to being sold them? You do a lot better deciding in advance what meets your needs and then finding it, rather than investing in something that finds you.

16. Do you take responsibility for your own affairs? You can hire all the experts you want—be they financial planners, brokers, insurance people, mutual-fund managers or a full-fledged business manager (like the Hollywood stars have). All will be willing to take little slices of your assets—but, ultimately, it's you who are in charge. No one cares about your money as much as you do, and it should be you who make the grand plan, such as whether to hire anyone at all and, if so, who and why.

Many financial planners do a fine, professional job. But you should be aware that they, and even many accountants, often will get a commission on deals they put you into—so it's hard for them to be entirely objective. Whether you spend $2500 for a financial planner or $250 for a mail-order plan

Savings Bonds

For the small saver, U.S. Savings Bonds, available at most banks in chunks as small as $25, are no longer to be sneered at. They are reasonably liquid (you can cash them in after six months); they provide a modest deflation hedge (guaranteeing a minimum of 7.5% interest if held 5 years); a modest inflation hedge (the rate you ultimately get is tied to an average of Treasury rates, currently 8.36%); and a modest tax shelter (no state or local income taxes are ever due, and federal income tax may be deferred for many years—perhaps even until after you retire and are in a lower tax bracket).

If you're at all interested in retiring with $500,000 —pick up the phone.

Open an Allstate Cash Developer IRA today. You can build substantial retirement savings while you actually reduce your taxes!

Call your Allstate agent today!

Pay yourself instead of paying taxes.

An Individual Retirement Annuity (IRA) is a special tax sheltered saving plan created by Congress to help you save for your retirement. It allows you to place up to $2,000 of your annual income into a tax deferred annuity. It's money you put away for your tomorrow. Instead of paying taxes on it today.

Build up a tremendous retirement fund.

Because the interest your IRA earns is tax-deferred, your savings build up rapidly. For example, if you're 29 years old and contribute $2,000 a year, at the current 9.25% interest rate, you'd retire at age 65 with $547,175. Of course, the 9.25% rate is not guaranteed, but even with the guaranteed minimum rate of 5%, you'd have $201,256. And while this money is taxable at withdrawal, you'll probably be in a lower tax bracket when you retire. So the advantages of an IRA's tax-deferred savings can be dramatic.

With an Allstate IRA, all it takes is $1,000.

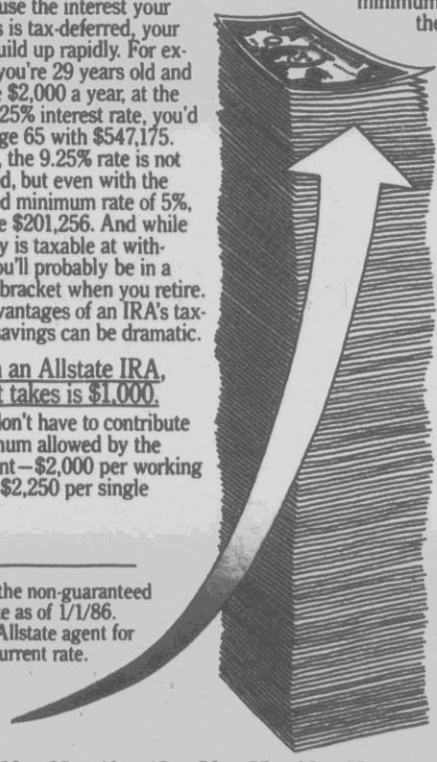

You don't have to contribute the maximum allowed by the government—$2,000 per working spouse or $2,250 per single income couple. You can open an Allstate IRA for just $1,000 or design your own savings program with payments as low as $80 a month!

Allstate Cash Developer IRA

An Allstate IRA earns interest at current competitive rates plus guarantees a minimum.

You pay no annual fees or sales charges.

Many IRAs have sales charges. As much as 8% of your payment! With an Allstate IRA, every dollar you pay works for you.

Allstate gives you the option of a level guaranteed retirement income for as long as you live.

or $3.95 for a paperback book, the aim is essentially the same: namely, to push you into getting organized and planning for the future. No one can really do this for you but you.

17. Do you invest only in things you understand? That may limit you to some pretty simple investments; but simple, such as inexpensive term life insurance, is often best. Bells and whistles aren't free, and sometimes they are even designed to obscure poor value.

Your Best Asset

For many of us, our biggest asset by far is our own earning power. Protect it with disability insurance if you're not already adequately covered by plans at work. And, especially if you're in the early or middle stages of your working life, consider that one of the best investments you can make is in yourself. Are you earning up to your capacity? Would a course in word-processing help? Or a college degree earned at night? Or the purchase of a franchise?

Retirees switched by their brokers over the last few years from money-market funds, which they understood, to "Ginnie Mae" funds, which they didn't, heard the words "government guaranteed" and "high interest." But Ginnie Maes—bonds issued by the Government National Mortgage Association—are complicated. What many of these retirees didn't hear was that the first $390 of each $10,000 they switched went to the broker—poof, gone—and that, under certain circumstances, their remaining funds could shrink.

18. Do you analyze tax shelters primarily on their economic merits? A brilliant computer scientist sheltered a bonanza bonus one year by investing $24,000, on the best of legal advice, in an oil-and-gas deal that provided a four-to-one write-off—$96,000 in deductions. He knew nothing about oil and gas but needed the deductions. It cost him $24,000 in cash but saved him $48,000 in taxes. And soon the first little royalty check came rolling in.

Sound too good to be true?

There were no further royalty checks, and now it appears that the $96,000 in deductions will be thrown out, the $48,000 in taxes reclaimed, with interest, and the original $24,000 gone forever.

The same story, with variations, could be told a million times over. You can get rich in oil or real estate or leasing or research-and-development—but almost never as a passive armchair investor out to shelter a little money from taxes. Not all the fat cats you read about who pay little or nothing in taxes should you envy. It often costs them $10,000 in cash to save $5000 in taxes. In most cases, they really do save the taxes; but if the $10,000 never comes back—and often it does not—you begin to wonder just how great the tax saving was.

19. Do you ignore those inky credit-card carbons everyone's trying to thrust into your hands? I mean, come on! Your liability for phony charges is small, and the chances of the underworld's actually pulling your number out of the garbage have to be pretty low.

20. Do you have a will? The preferred answer to this question—as you've no doubt guessed—and to the 19 preceding it: Yes.

Giving It Away

Just as it's rarely wise to invest in something brought to your attention by bulk mail, so is it risky to give money to a charity on the basis of a slick, plaintive solicitation.

Perhaps the most hair-raising example of this was a much-publicized group that granted dying children their last wishes. According to The New York Times, the group raised $237,000 in 1984. Of that, $10,000 went to grant wishes; the rest was spent on "professional fund-raising organizations, salaries, car rentals, jewelry, rent, unsecured personal loans, a VCR and a videotape titled Sex Games."

To make your charitable dollars go as far as possible, you may wish to check prospective charities to see what proportion of the funds they raise go for the intended cause—and what proportion for fund-raising and administration. Write the National Charities Information Bureau, 19 Union Square West, New York, N.Y. 10003, for its free Wise Giving Guide.

Meanwhile, if you have a hefty long-term gain in one of your stocks, you're better off contributing some of the shares themselves, as opposed to cash, to the charity of your choice. You get a deduction for the full value of the shares without first having to pay tax on the capital gain. Naturally, this is only practical and worth the added paperwork for large gifts.

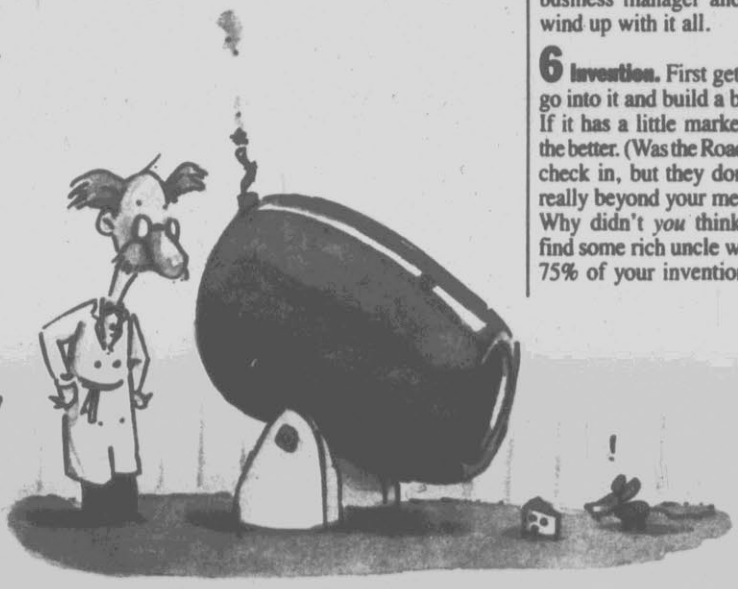

And for those of you for whom having enough isn't good enough, here are the...

10 Ways To Get Rich

BY ANDREW TOBIAS

Everybody I talk with asks the same thing. They've read the story about King Midas and his golden touch, sure—everything he touches turns to gold, including food, which makes it more than tough to get anything to eat—but still they want me to tell them how to get rich. Well, of course, I don't know how to get rich.

Oh, OK. Here are the ways to get rich. They may not do you much good, but here they are.

1 Inheritance. Be nice to your mega-millionaire parents and, "in good time" (a cruel phrase meaning "long after you're young enough to really enjoy it"), it all will be yours.

Illustrations by Patrick McDonnell

2 Marriage. So what if your hubby takes out his gun and shoots the TV when something comes on that he doesn't like? You can buy new ones by the truckload.

3 Lottery. You can win $2 million in the California lottery, which, because it is really $100,000 a year for 20 years, comes to about $800,000 in today's money. Except it's not $800,000 because it's taxable, so it's more like $400,000. (What it really is, judging from the first few months' winners, is a scheme for flushing out illegal aliens.) OK: Win it twice.

4 Crime. Even the least remunerative of crimes will do if there's a book-and-movie-deal somewhere in it.

5 Talent. If you're Johnny Carson or Johnny Bench or Johnny Cash, it's easy, though fully taxable. Just be sure your business manager and ex-wives don't wind up with it all.

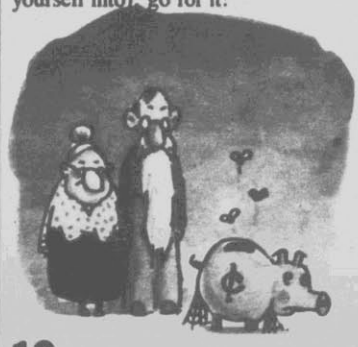

6 Invention. First get a garage. Then, go into it and build a better mousetrap. If it has a little marketing pizzazz, all the better. (Was the Roach Motel—"They check in, but they don't check out"—really beyond your mechanical ability? Why didn't you think of that?) Then find some rich uncle who, for a modest 75% of your invention, will help you launch it.

7 Investment. Invest $5000 in a stock that doubles in six months and a day (the long-term capital-gains holding period). Repeat eight or 10 times, depending on how rich you want to be. This virtually never works but theoretically could. Likewise: puts and calls, commodity futures, roulette, keno, slots and Mississippi marbles.

8 Longevity. Invest with more realistic goals but for a longer period of time. A penny continuously invested at just 2% from the day Jesus was born would today be worth $198 trillion—a thousand times over.

9 Entrepreneurship. Quit the security of your job and risk the family savings on a Mrs. Field's cookie franchise or a car wash. Work harder than you dreamed anyone could, be smart and a little lucky, expand and branch out, and someday you'll sell the empire—at capital-gains tax rates—to a subsidiary of a subsidiary of Beatrice. (Tropicana orange juice, Avis rental cars, many of those men's room hot-air hand-drying machines—they're Beatrice.)

Most new businesses fail, but many don't. And therein lies the juice that propels and regenerates our economy. If you think you can do it (for heaven's sake, find out first what you're getting yourself into), go for it!

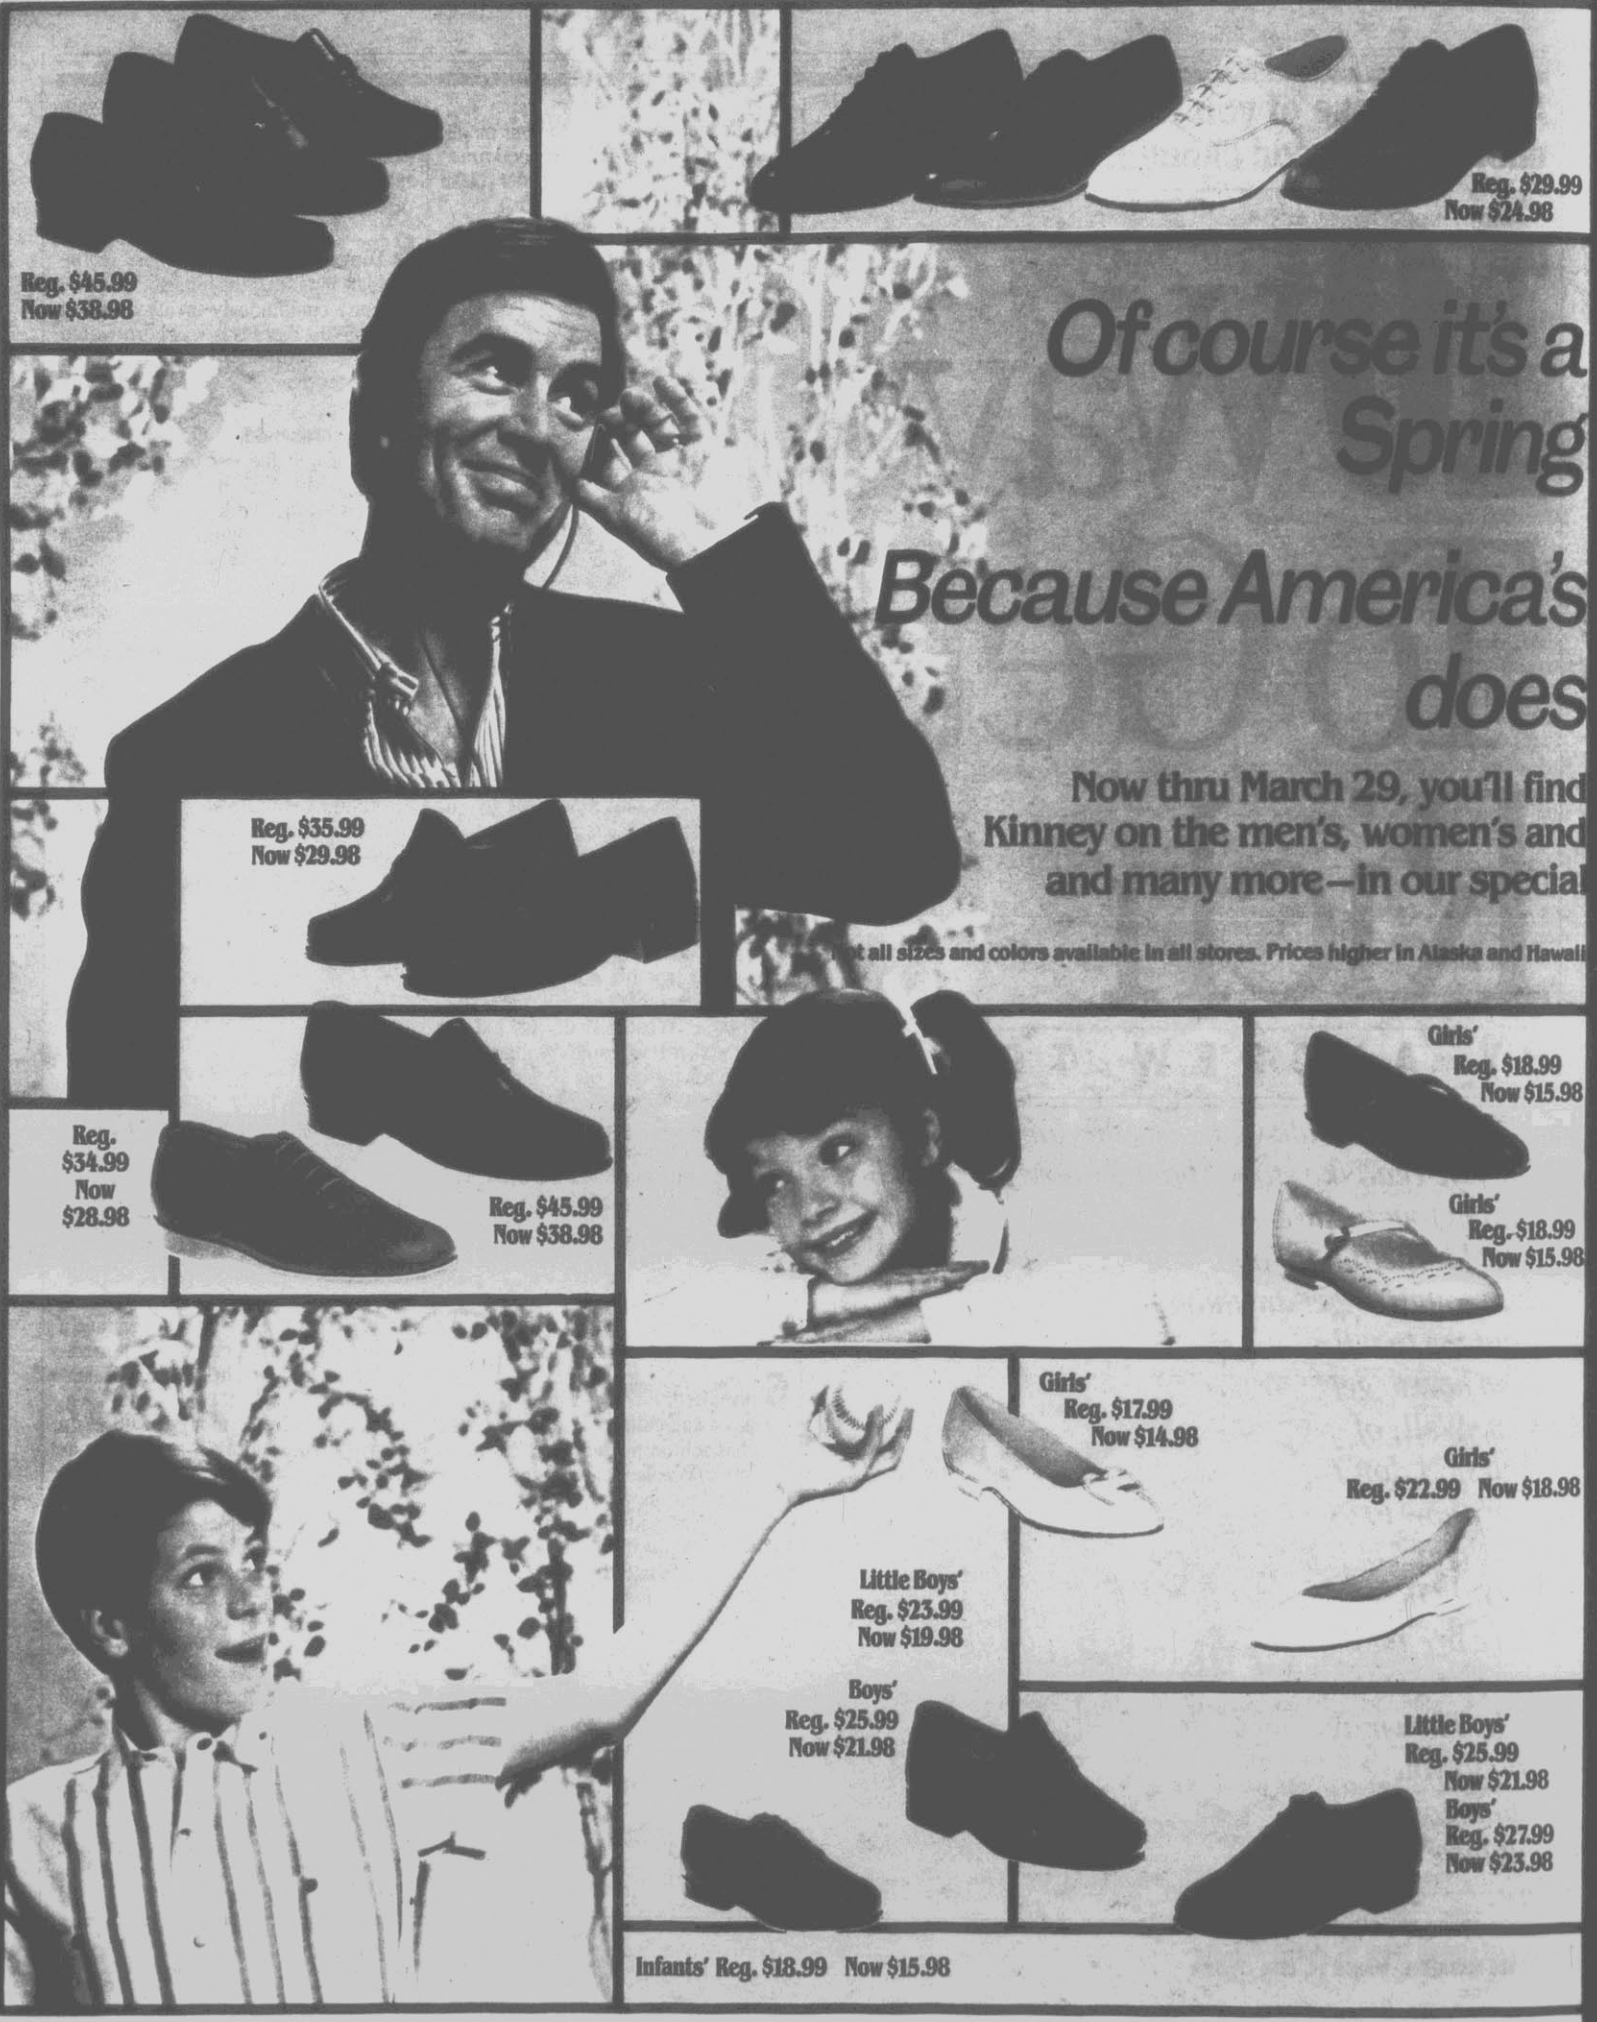

10 None of the above. If the fortune you check is "none of the above," ask yourself whether that's really so terrible. Is it possible to be happy with just a remote-control color TV and a car and a well-stocked refrigerator, decent medical care, warmth in the winter, a Touch-Tone phone, hot and cold running water, and a secure, if modest, future? In Roman times, and even as recently as 1952, this was enough.

The part of personal financial management that sometimes gets short shrift is the part about deciding what's important. Managing expectations. One way to be rich is to get an extra million or three. Another way is to require less.

There's a natural desire to have more than everybody else. Life's a rat race, and whoever has the most things when he dies wins. But since we can't all be a little richer than our neighbors, perhaps enough is enough.

What's enough? For most of us, it's a little more than we have now.

Through good planning and a little self-discipline, you can live a little better every year. Pace yourself.

The day peace ended in Lee, Maine

The Rev. Daniel Dunphy, preaching in the Baptist Church in Lee, Maine.

Photos by Joe McGrath

IT WAS A SUNDAY IN May 1983, and the hamlet of Lee, Maine (pop. 700), basked in the calm of a Sabbath morn. Suddenly, from the square belfry of the Baptist Church on Lee's village green, hidden loudspeakers began broadcasting the voice of the Rev. Daniel Dunphy, proclaiming his message of the day: "The Bible: Why I Believe and Why You Should." For the next half hour or so, farmers, shopkeepers, schoolteachers and woodsmen round about were compelled to hear the Word of God as interpreted by the fundamentalist minister.

That amplified sermon brought a rash of complaints from the church's neighbors. The town constable called Assistant District Attorney Patricia Locke, who advised him that he could cite the pastor for disorderly conduct for making unreasonable noise in a public place. But no such charges were ever filed.

The pastor, in turn, insisted that he had chosen to address the entire town in this fashion only because some local people had tried to disrupt one of his church services with rock 'n' roll music after he had burned some $2000 worth of rock 'n' roll recordings in a public bonfire. If they could use those "satanic sounds" to drown out God's message, Dunphy said, then certainly he could force a community full of sinners to listen to the Gospel for a few minutes.

And so the stage was set for a bitter tug-of-war between a congregation that seems genuinely dedicated to its doctrine of moral absolutism and many others among the North Country people in and around this tiny village who have long enjoyed relative tranquillity in the austere but majestic timberland east of the Penobscot River. It was but a reflection of the battle being waged all across the country these days—between those who believe in immutable standards of morality rooted in divine law and those who contend that behavior should be governed by long-established community mores.

Sheila Crocker and her father, John: She was the object of a months-long struggle between her father and the pastor that may have figured in a wild melee in the church during services.

Ironically, Dunphy may be more in tune with the oldest traditions of Lee, which, according to one local history, was hewn out of the wilderness in 1823 by settlers from the Kennebec Valley who were "strictly Puritanic in their religious views." But the same history records "a gradual declension of religion in the town." For as long as anyone there can remember, all the town's sects—Congregationalists, Methodists, Baptists, Universalists, Catholics, even a few Jews and an occasional Muslim from the private Lee Academy—had worshipped side-by-side in the Baptist Church, the very-white clapboard building Dunphy now occupies.

This began to change in the late 1970s, when the Rev. Franklin Ouelette, a zealous fundamentalist, became the church's minister. Gradually he imposed a sterner tone, less forgiving of other creeds and customs. That was ratcheted up a notch when Dunphy succeeded him in 1982. For several years, tensions between Dunphy's fervent congregation and its resentful neighbors festered in relative silence. Then, last July, they erupted in melodramatic violence.

When Violence Rocked A Church

BY J. ANTHONY LUKAS

At one point, Crooker admitted, he punched the minister

Parishioners entering Baptist Church in Lee for Christmas season services.

At the Sunday evening service on July 21, Pastor Dunphy was just launching into his sermon before some 80 parishioners when several men—variously estimated at seven to 12—burst through a doorway. Among them was John Crooker, 43, a millwright at a nearby paper mill and the father of two teenage girls, Rebecca and Sheila, who had been the objects of a months-long struggle between Dunphy and Crooker.

According to a tape recording of the event, supplied by Dunphy's lawyer, the episode began like this:

Crooker: "We're here for Sheila Crooker."

Dunphy: "You cannot interrupt... You cannot interrupt the service. I'm sorry. You're in a private building..."

Crooker: "We got... we got four carloads here, my friend." (Crooker denied making this remark.)

At that, a wild melee broke out, during which several of the invaders waded into the congregation wielding pipes and heavy logging chains. Fistfights erupted in the aisles and outside on the church steps. Women screamed, children scampered to safety, several people clambered out the church windows.

At one point, John Crooker admits, he punched Pastor Dunphy in the face—allegedly because the pastor had taken off his glasses and coat and was advancing menacingly on him. Dunphy later displayed a deep gash on his scalp, which he said had been inflicted by a pipe. At least three other people were injured, some requiring stitches to close their wounds. Windows, chairs and desks were broken.

Mark Stevens, 22, who had married Rebecca Crooker earlier that summer, ran from the church, retrieved a chain saw from the trunk of his car and went toward the attackers.

By the time a state trooper and three deputy sheriffs reached the scene, some 50 members of the congregation and 100 hostile neighbors were milling around outside the church. The Baptists angrily demanded that the police arrest John Crooker, his twin brother, Joey, and their 22-year-old nephew, Jimmy Cole, whom they identified as instigators and leaders of the attack. But John Crooker denied that he and his two companions had anything to do with the men who arrived that evening bearing chains and pipes. "All I wanted to do was get my Sheila back," he said. "I didn't know who those other men were—never seen them before in my life."

A Penobscot County grand jury evidently believed him, because it failed to indict the Crookers and Cole. Instead, it indicted four men from neighboring towns on charges of aggravated assault: two brothers, Paul and Alden Brown; Merle Knowlton and Milton Herbest.

The same grand jury on the same day indicted Pastor Dunphy for a seemingly unrelated incident—the alleged beating

Courage. Bravery. Incredible daring. Unbelievably, the Shoshone eagle catcher hid amongst rocks and captured live eagles with his bare hands. If the catcher survived he was wealthy in valuable eagle feathers, rich in tribal honors. It was an extraordinary tradition.

For the first time ever, the New England Collectors Society is issuing a strictly Limited Edition of "The Eagle Catcher" by the acclaimed American artist Michael Boyett. Each sculpture is individually serially numbered, hallmarked, registered and accompanied by a Certificate of Registration.

Each "Eagle Catcher" is individually cast of cold-cast bronze, a modern sculptor's blend of finely powdered bronze and resins. Cold-cast bronze captures even finer detail than traditional hot-casting.

of a student at the church school some eight months earlier. Steven James, 16, asserted that the pastor had beaten him while he was living in Dunphy's house. The pastor vehemently denied the allegation.

Dunphy's lawyer, Marshall Stern of nearby Bangor, has assailed Penobscot County District Attorney R. Christopher Almy for bringing a frivolous charge against Dunphy and for failing to press more vigorously for the indictment of John Crooker.

Stern, who is Jewish, has little personal sympathy with Dunphy's brand of Christian fundamentalism. Indeed, when they first met, Dunphy expressed grave doubts that they could work together, citing the Biblical admonition, "Be ye not unequally yoked," which he insisted was a warning against relationships between Jews and Baptists. But the two men gradually developed an uneasy rapport marked by mutual but lighthearted recrimination. A former director of the Maine Civil Liberties Union, Stern said he was defending Dunphy's right to free expression and suggested that District Attorney Almy was caving in to "mob" rule. "If you're elected by a majority vote," he said, "you don't want to ruffle the feathers of the majority."

Almy refused to discuss the evidence he submitted to the grand jury.

Dunphy's critics in and around Lee were also sensitive to Stern's charge that they were an intolerant "mob" bent on restricting the pastor's right to free expression. Their objections, they said, were not to Dunphy's vigorous preaching of his fundamentalist faith, nor to his literal interpretations of the Scripture, but to his "abrasive" style and outspoken scorn for the way many of his neighbors live.

Not only did he inveigh against alcohol, drugs, homosexuality and sex outside marriage, but he also had denounced owners of a nearby general store for selling "pornographic" magazines, condemned women for wearing slacks in public and warned that men and women must not bathe at the same beach lest they be tempted by the sight of each other's scantily clad bodies.

Dunphy should know. "Everything I preach against I used to do," he concedes. "I was an alcoholic, a doper. I tried everything. As a juvenile, I had a record a mile long."

Born in Island Falls, about 40 miles north of Lee, Dunphy dropped out of high school to join the Marine Corps, serving as a mortician in Vietnam. Later, he worked as a grave digger, truck driver, clothes presser, crane operator, woodsman and backhoe operator. While married to a Chinese woman, whom he had met on leave in Taipei, he had an affair with a 17-year-old girl.

By late 1975, Dunphy was working in Carlisle, Ill. One day his employer invited him to a Bible-study group. At first, he loathed it. But on Feb. 14, 1976, while seated in his kitchen, he says, he "accepted Jesus as my personal savior." After studying at Indiana's Hyles-Anderson College, a bastion of Christian fundamentalism, he was ordained a Baptist minister. In June 1982, at age 31, he accepted his first ministerial position—pastor of the Lee Baptist Church.

From the start, Dunphy proved zealous. He launched a "soul-winning" program, in which pairs of evangelists from the church called on nearby families, confronting them with their "sinfulness" and urging them to seek salvation at the Lee Baptist Church. Dunphy proved particularly effective with young people. Though he began by offering them candy or goldfish to come to church, ultimately it was his dark intensity and palpable conviction that seemed to win them over.

Among the families approached that summer were John and Madeline Crooker of Prentiss, Maine. The first of the Crookers to attend the church was 11-year-old Melissa. Before long, Sheila, 13, Rebecca, 14, Angela, 16, and Madeline herself were won over too.

John Crooker soon came to feel that Dunphy was taking the women in his life away from him. "I got to the point," he recalls, "where I could no longer tolerate the man controlling my family." John and Madeline argued over Dunphy's influence in their lives and, on one occasion, John hit Madeline with a poker, chipping a bone in her elbow—for which he was arrested. Charges were later dropped.

Ultimately, Madeline adopted her husband's position. But Sheila and Rebecca were ever more loyal to the pastor. In April 1985, they ran away from home and soon sought legal "emancipation" from their parents. On May 29, District Judge Margaret Kravchuck granted emancipation to Rebecca, who almost immediately married Mark Stevens, a member of her church. But the said, Crooker talked with other men who were subsequently to be charged in the church attack.

On the basis of this new information, the grand jury indicted Crooker that very afternoon. The next day, he came into court and pleaded guilty to two misdemeanors: simple assault on Dunphy and conspiracy—with Merle Knowlton, Milton Herbest, Alden Brown and Paul Brown—to assault Dunphy and other parishioners. "I'm just here to clear up a matter," Crooker said laconically.

And there was another intriguing development. According to Almy, Thurston told him that Crooker had assured the men that they didn't have to worry about the State Police. The police, he said, also were fed up with Dunphy and would give them an hour to do their "job" at the church. In fact, according to the county sheriff's department, the first State Police officer arrived no more than 40 minutes after the incident at the church began. Though the district attorney later said he regarded Crooker's alleged statement as "idle boasting" designed to encourage the others, Dunphy's lawyer has referred the matter to the U.S. Justice Department for investigation.

Then, on Feb. 7, Justice Eugene Beaulieu in Penobscot County Superior Court found Dunphy not guilty of criminal trespass but guilty of assault in the May 29 incident involving Christine Thurston. In announcing his decision to a courtroom packed with the pastor's supporters, Beaulieu told Dunphy, "I don't think at any time you intended to inflict any bodily injuries on Christine Thurston." However, he concluded that the minister had "knowingly and recklessly" caused the assault on the woman as he escorted Sheila Crooker from the house.

Dunphy—who could be sentenced to a year in jail and be fined $1000—was unrepentant. He told reporters he would pay no fine, would refuse to report to probation officers and would insist that authorities "drag" him off to jail. "That way I'm not admitting my guilt," he said, "because I'm not guilty."

Regardless of how this or other legal issues are resolved, nobody believes that the court contests will do much, if anything, to settle the age-old struggle between moral absolutism and community mores.

He launched a "soul-winning" program, in which pairs of evangelists from the church called on nearby families, confronting them with their "sinfulness" and urging them to seek salvation at the Lee Baptist Church. Dunphy proved particularly effective with young people. Though he began by offering them candy or goldfish to come to church, ultimately it was his dark intensity and palpable conviction that seemed to win them over.

Among the families approached that summer were John and Madeline Crooker of Prentiss, Maine. The first of the Crookers to attend the church was 11-year-old Melissa. Before long, Sheila, 13, Rebecca, 14, Angela, 16, and Madeline herself were won over too.

John Crooker soon came to feel that Dunphy was taking the women in his life away from him. "I got to the point," he recalls, "where I could no longer tolerate the man controlling my family." John and Madeline argued over Dunphy's influence in their lives and, on one occasion, John hit Madeline with a poker, chipping a bone in her elbow—for which he was arrested. Charges were later dropped.

Ultimately, Madeline adopted her husband's position. But Sheila and Rebecca were ever more loyal to the pastor. In April 1985, they ran away from home and soon sought legal "emancipation" from their parents. On May 29, District Judge Margaret Kravchuck granted emancipation to Rebecca, who almost immediately married Mark Stevens, a member of her church. But the said, Crooker talked with other men who were subsequently to be charged in the church attack.

On the basis of this new information, the grand jury indicted Crooker that very afternoon. The next day, he came into court and pleaded guilty to two misdemeanors: simple assault on Dunphy and conspiracy—with Merle Knowlton, Milton Herbest, Alden Brown and Paul Brown—to assault Dunphy and other parishioners. "I'm just here to clear up a matter," Crooker said laconically.

And there was another intriguing development. According to Almy, Thurston told him that Crooker had assured the men that they didn't have to worry about the State Police. The police, he said, also were fed up with Dunphy and would give them an hour to do their "job" at the church. In fact, according to the county sheriff's department, the first State Police officer arrived no more than 40 minutes after the incident at the church began. Though the district attorney later said he regarded Crooker's alleged statement as "idle boasting" designed to encourage the others, Dunphy's lawyer has referred the matter to the U.S. Justice Department for investigation.

Then, on Feb. 7, Justice Eugene Beaulieu in Penobscot County Superior Court found Dunphy not guilty of criminal trespass but guilty of assault in the May 29 incident involving Christine Thurston. In announcing his decision to a courtroom packed with the pastor's supporters, Beaulieu told Dunphy, "I don't think at any time you intended to inflict any bodily injuries on Christine Thurston." However, he concluded that the minister had "knowingly and recklessly" caused the assault on the woman as he escorted Sheila Crooker from the house.

Dunphy—who could be sentenced to a year in jail and be fined $1000—was unrepentant. He told reporters he would pay no fine, would refuse to report to probation officers and would insist that authorities "drag" him off to jail. "That way I'm not admitting my guilt," he said, "because I'm not guilty."

Regardless of how this or other legal issues are resolved, nobody believes that the court contests will do much, if anything, to settle the age-old struggle between moral absolutism and community mores.

of a student at the church school some eight months earlier. Steven James, 16, asserted that the pastor had beaten him while he was living in Dunphy's house. The pastor vehemently denied the allegation.

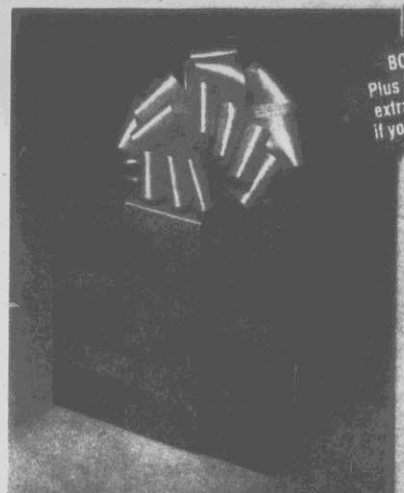

Dunphy's lawyer, Marshall Stern of nearby Bangor, has assailed Penobscot County District Attorney R. Christopher Almy for bringing a frivolous charge against Dunphy and for failing to press more vigorously for the indictment of John Crooker.

Stern, who is Jewish, has little personal sympathy with Dunphy's brand of Christian fundamentalism. Indeed, when they first met, Dunphy expressed grave doubts that they could work together, citing the Biblical admonition, "Be ye not unequally yoked," which he insisted was a warning against relationships between Jews and Baptists. But the two men gradually developed an uneasy rapport marked by mutual but lighthearted recrimination. A former director of the Maine Civil Liberties Union, Stern said he was defending Dunphy's right to free expression and suggested that District Attorney Almy was caving in to "mob" rule. "If you're elected by a majority vote," he said, "you don't want to ruffle the feathers of the majority."

Almy refused to discuss the evidence he submitted to the grand jury.

in Carlisle, Ill. One day his employer invited him to a Bible-study group. At first, he loathed it. But on Feb. 14, 1976, while seated in his kitchen, he says, he "accepted Jesus as my personal savior." After studying at Indiana's Hyles-Anderson College, a bastion of Christian fundamentalism, he was ordained a Baptist minister. In June 1982, at age 31, he accepted his first ministerial position—pastor of the Lee Baptist Church.

From the start, Dunphy proved zealous. He launched a "soul-winning" program, in which pairs of evangelists from the church called on nearby families, confronting them with their "sinfulness" and urging them to seek salvation at the Lee Baptist Church. Dunphy proved particularly effective with young people. Though he began by offering them candy or goldfish to come to church, ultimately it was his dark intensity and palpable conviction that seemed to win them over.

Among the families approached that summer were John and Madeline Crooker of Prentiss, Maine. The first of the Crookers to attend the church was 11-year-old Melissa. Before long, Sheila, 13, Rebecca, 14, Angela, 16, and Madeline herself were won over too.

John Crooker soon came to feel that Dunphy was taking the women in his life away from him. "I got to the point," he recalls, "where I could no longer tolerate the man controlling my family." John and Madeline argued over Dunphy's influence in their lives and, on one occasion, John hit Madeline with a poker, chipping a bone in her elbow—for which he was arrested. Charges were later dropped.

Ultimately, Madeline adopted her husband's position. But Sheila and Rebecca were ever more loyal to the pastor. In April 1985, they ran away from home and soon sought legal "emancipation" from their parents. On May 29, District Judge Margaret Kravchuck granted emancipation to Rebecca, who almost immediately married Mark Stevens, a member of her church. But the judge declined to emancipate Sheila, then 16, requiring her to return to the foster home where both girls had been staying since leaving their parents' house.

That same evening last May, Dunphy came to the foster home in Hudson, Maine, and took Sheila away. Christine Thurston, the foster mother, maintained that Dunphy shoved her around when she tried to prevent him from taking the girl. The minister was charged with trespass and assault. Though he denied those charges, Dunphy refused to say where Sheila was.

This apparently set the stage for the melee at the church on July 21. Although John Crooker later denied any connection with the four men indicted in that attack, he publicly indicated that he had not given up on his efforts to get his daughter back. On a radio call-in program shortly thereafter, he warned of "another commando raid" if Sheila wasn't returned. "We've got flesh and blood in there," he said.

For some time after the July incident, armed sheriff's deputies from Bangor patrolled the streets of Lee, but there was no further violence.

Nevertheless, Carl F. Andrews Jr., the county's chief deputy sheriff, expressed some concern that the story wasn't over. "That's logging country up there," he said. "They're rough people who work hard and express themselves. Most of the trucks and cars you stop have weapons in them. I'd have to say that, as long as the minister has the Crooker girl, there's a potential for future violence there."

Finally, last month, the courts began sorting out the snarl of conflicting charges. On Feb. 3, in a pretrial interview, Christine Thurston told District Attorney Almy that John Crooker and his wife had paid two visits to her house last summer, during which he talked with Miss Thurston's boyfriend, Merle Knowlton, about an attack on Dunphy. Later, Thurston said, Crooker talked with other men who were subsequently to be charged in the church attack.

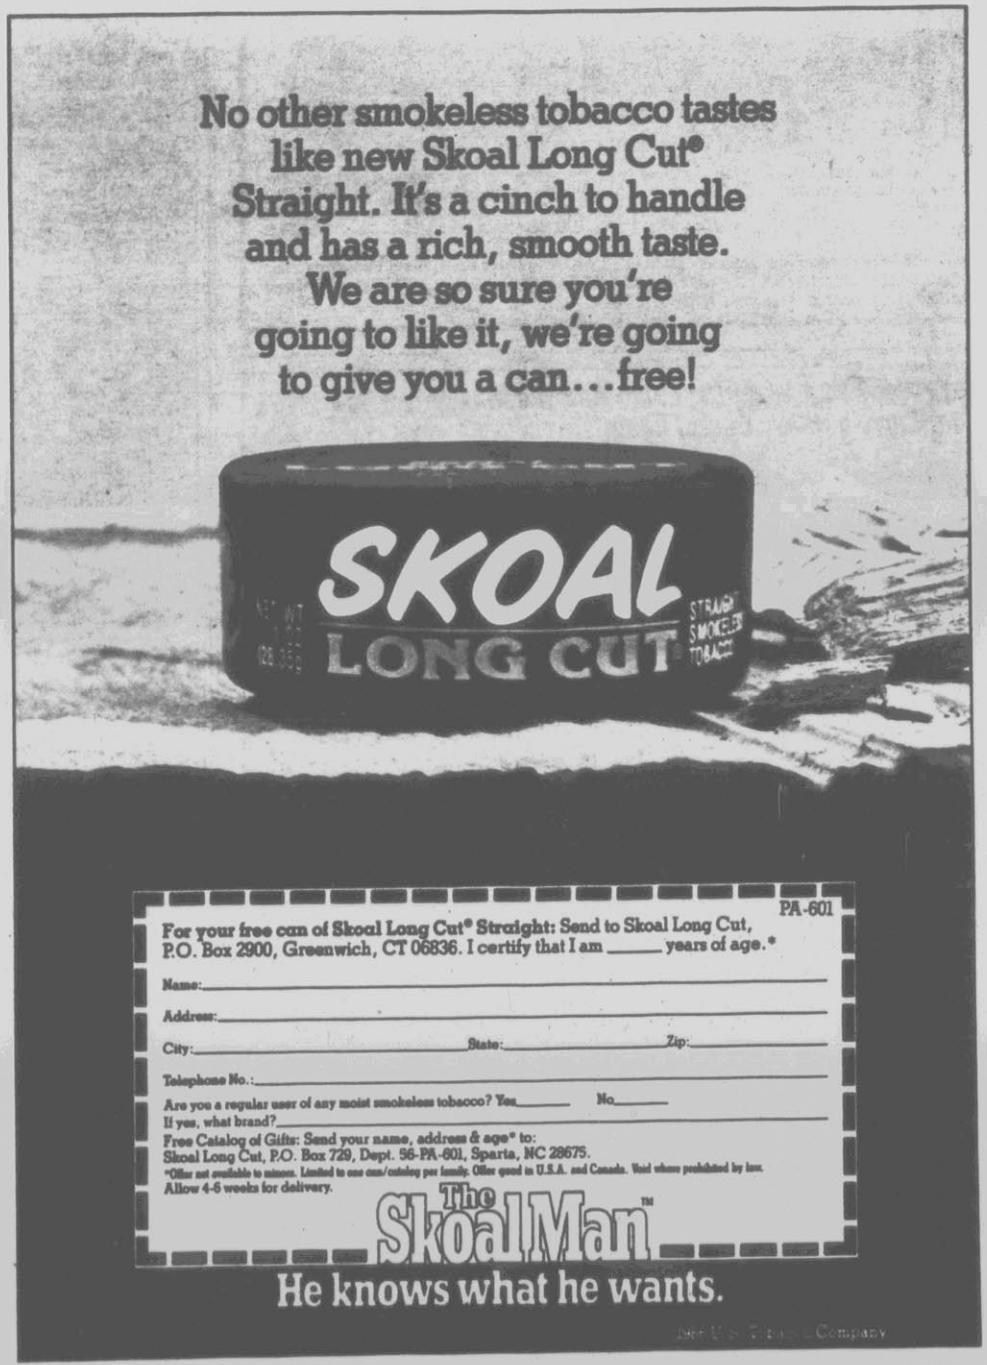

On the basis of this new information, the grand jury indicted Crooker that very afternoon. The next day, he came into court and pleaded guilty to two misdemeanors: simple assault on Dunphy and conspiracy—with Merle Knowlton, Milton Herbest, Alden Brown and Paul Brown—to assault Dunphy and other parishioners. "I'm just here to clear up a matter," Crooker said laconically.

And there was another intriguing development. According to Almy, Thurston told him that Crooker had assured the men that they didn't have to worry about the State Police. The police, he said, also were fed up with Dunphy and would give them an hour to do their "job" at the church. In fact, according to the county sheriff's department, the first State Police officer arrived no more than 40 minutes after the incident at the church began. Though the district attorney later said he regarded Crooker's alleged statement as "idle boasting" designed to encourage the others, Dunphy's lawyer has referred the matter to the U.S. Justice Department for investigation.

Then, on Feb. 7, Justice Eugene Beaulieu in Penobscot County Superior Court found Dunphy not guilty of criminal trespass but guilty of assault in the May 29 incident involving Christine Thurston. In announcing his decision to a courtroom packed with the pastor's supporters, Beaulieu told Dunphy, "I don't think at any time you intended to inflict any bodily injuries on Christine Thurston." However, he concluded that the minister had "knowingly and recklessly" caused the assault on the woman as he escorted Sheila Crooker from the house.

Dunphy—who could be sentenced to a year in jail and be fined $1000—was unrepentant. He told reporters he would pay no fine, would refuse to report to probation officers and would insist that authorities "drag" him off to jail. "That way I'm not admitting my guilt," he said, "because I'm not guilty."

A 6-FOOT-10 CENTER from Virginia whose passing is "out of this world" and who shoots "18-footers with either hand," according to his coach, is the Player of the Year on PARADE's 30th All-America High School Boys Basketball Team. He tops the list of 44 athletes from 21 states and the District of Columbia.

The player, J.R. Reid of Kempsville High in Virginia Beach, didn't exactly come out of nowhere, either. This is the second year he was named to the team. Reid received one of the highest ratings ever accorded by the college coaches, scouts and recruiters who annually select the PARADE team.

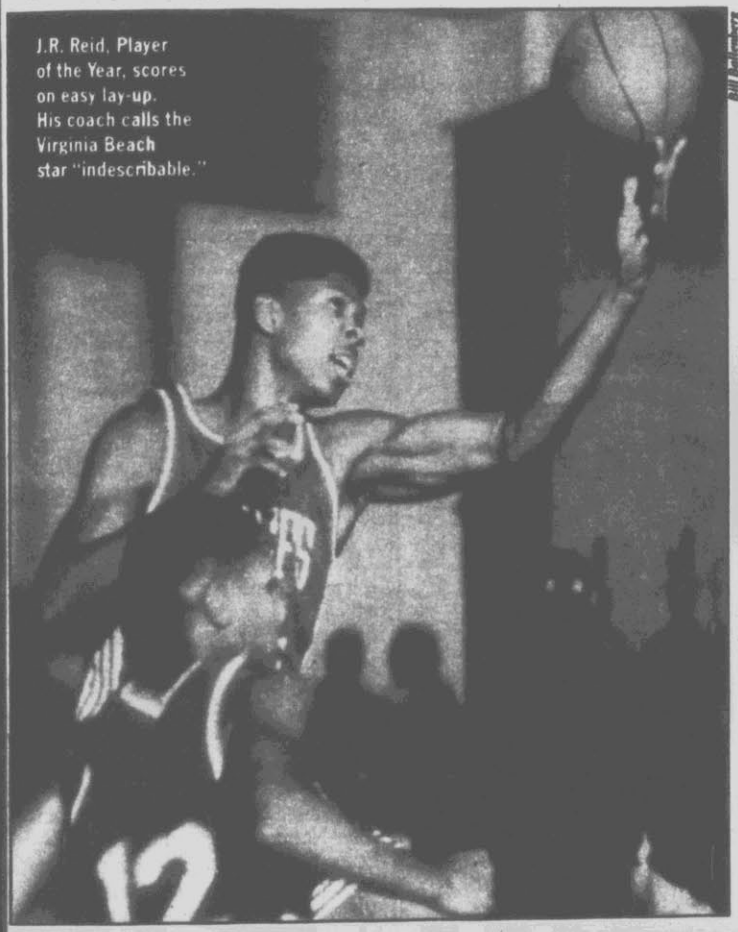

Reid's home state of Virginia placed five players on the squad, while California and Illinois had four each, Georgia and New York three.

Dick Ponti, Reid's coach, says: "J.R. is just an outstanding player with so many skills that words cannot describe him adequately." In addition to his shooting and passing skills, Ponti notes, Reid dribbles like a guard and is a great rebounder. "He has very good grades," the coach adds, "is well spoken and has the knack of drawing people to him. There's no question that he will be an outstanding college performer and, if he desires subsequently, should be a topflight attraction in the National Basketball Association."

Rated close behind Reid on the team were Terry Mills, a 6-foot-10 center from Romulus, Mich., who also made last year's squad; Rex Chapman, a 6-foot-5 guard from Owensboro, Ky.; and Lloyd Daniels, a 6-foot-8 center from Queens, N.Y., who is only a junior.

Very few players have made the PARADE team three times. They include Patrick Ewing of the professional New York Knickerbockers; Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of the Los Angeles Lakers, the reigning NBA champions; and Chris Washburn of North Carolina State University. Yet three sophomores—Alonzo Mourning of Chesapeake, Va.; Shawn Kemp of Elkhart, Ind.; and Jerrod Mustaf of Hyattsville, Md.—were named to this year's squad, and they may well repeat twice more. In fact, there are more underclassmen on this PARADE team than ever before.

Most members of our previous squad now play for major college teams. Some examples are Jeff Lebo, Steve Bucknall and Kevin Madden, who played a good deal this season for the University of North Carolina, which is ranked No. 1 at this writing. Indeed, three-quarters of that team consists of former PARADE all-Americans.

Danny Ferry, last year's Player of the Year, starred with the powerful Duke University team, while Rodney Strickland played for De Paul University, and Terry Dozier did well on the University of South Carolina team.

At the time we were going to press, J.R. Reid had not yet committed himself to a college. Here, however, are the college commitments made by some of the other outstanding players on this year's PARADE team: Terry Mills and Rumeal Robinson—University of Michigan; Rex Chapman—Kentucky; James Munlyn—Georgia Tech; Stephen Thompson—Syracuse; Anthony Pendelton—Iowa; Scott Williams and Pete Chilcutt—North Carolina; Keith Robinson—Notre Dame; Felton Spencer—Louisville; Mark Randall—Kansas; Alaa Abdelnaby—Duke; Barry Bekkedam—Villanova; Ron Huery—Arkansas; Sylvester Gray—Memphis State; Larry Rembert—University of Alabama at Birmingham; Ricky Jones—Clemson; Dwayne Bryant—Georgetown; Larry Smith—Illinois.

Life-size photos of the 11 players on our First Team will be displayed for a year beginning July 1 at the new Basketball Hall of Fame building in Springfield, Mass.

Jack Nicholson, John and Anjelica Huston: Hoping Prizzi is honored with Oscars

On March 24, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will conduct its 58th annual awards ceremony at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion in Los Angeles. The pavilion seats 2800 and is usually sold out to the Academy members at $40, $60 or $100 per ticket. Occasionally, however, a few dozen of the $40 tickets go unsold and become available to the general public four or five days before the ceremony.

The Oscar presentations are followed by a ball thrown by the governors of the Academy, featuring dining, dancing, drinking and other celebration ingredients. The gala is held in the Beverly Hilton, and admission is $350 per person. It is limited to 1200 Academy members and their guests, because the hotel ballroom holds no more.

A screenwriter member of the Academy, who prefers not to be identified, estimates that attending both functions with his wife "will set me back at least $2000," about half of which will go for his wife's new gown and accessories. "Worse yet," he adds, "my wife couldn't care less about who wins or doesn't win an award —and in all truth, I must tell you, neither do I."

On the assumption that such jadedness is atypical of the Academy's 4226 voting members and that millions of moviegoers still retain an interest in the Academy Awards, this reporter offers for your consideration his fearless forecast for the 58th Oscar Sweepstakes.

BEST PICTURE

Out of Africa. A magnificent travelogue and period piece in search of an ending. Romantic, elegant adaptation of Danish writer Isak Dinesen's life in Africa.—1-1.

The Color Purple. Based on Alice Walker's novel of heroic, long-suffering Southern black women and their no-good men. Won 11 Oscar nominations but not one for its director, Steven Spielberg, an omission that may have started a backlash.—1-1.

Prizzi's Honor. Directed by John Huston, 79, this offbeat crime comedy featuring Huston's daughter, Anjelica, already has won several honors.—1-1.

Witness. An appealing film of love and violence directed by Australian Peter Weir and intensively publicized by Paramount.—3-1.

Kiss of the Spider Woman. A Brazilian production about a transvestite homosexual window-dresser and a naive revolutionary who share the same jail cell.—5-1.

BEST ACTOR

William Hurt ("Kiss of the Spider Woman"). If Jack Nicholson doesn't win it for his work in "Prizzi's Honor," Hurt can run off with his first Oscar. He is 35 and, in the course of six films, has developed into an actor of extraordinary and boundless talent.—Long shot.

Jack Nicholson ("Prizzi's Honor"). He is a superb actor with eight nominations and two Oscars to his credit. But he is not particularly well-liked or admired by the film establishment for his libertine lifestyle. Even so, he is the odds-on favorite.—1-4.

Jane Fonda with nominees Meg Tilly and Anne Bancroft (l-r) in Agnes of God

Jon Voight ("Runaway Train"). Another alternative to Nicholson, Voight is best known for his performance opposite Jane Fonda in "Coming Home," for which he won an Oscar in 1978. It would surprise few in Hollywood if he were to win a second for his "Runaway" achievement.—3-1.

Harrison Ford ("Witness"). Acting in Steven Spielberg and George Lucas films has earned Ford a fortune, but not until "Witness" has he shown himself to be a sensitive, top-notch actor.—5-1.

James Garner ("Murphy's Romance"). He's been around Hollywood for years, starring in the "Maverick" and "Rockford Files" TV series. He's returned to feature films, but "Murphy," opposite Sally Field, is not an Oscar-winning vehicle.—5-1.

BEST ACTRESS

Geraldine Page ("The Trip to Bountiful"). At 61, she has been nominated for an Oscar eight times but never won. If Page can attract enough of the Academy's "sentimental vote," she'll enter the winner's circle.—Long shot.

Meryl Streep ("Out of Africa"). Her superlative performance as a sensitive, idealistic woman running a coffee plantation in Kenya is worthy of her winning a third Oscar. And she probably will—unless Geraldine Page noses her out.—1-3.

Anne Bancroft ("Agnes of God"). If the film, in which she plays an inflexible Mother Superior, had done well at the box office, she'd stand a better chance.—3-1.

Whoopi Goldberg ("The Color Purple"). A comedienne, highly acclaimed for her one-woman Broadway show, she was chosen by Steven Spielberg to make her film debut as a brutalized girl in Georgia who, over a period of 30 years, refuses to let a hard life demoralize her.—3-1.

Jessica Lange ("Sweet Dreams"). She won an Oscar in 1982 for her work in "Tootsie," but Lange's portrayal of country singer Patsy Cline is not strong enough to win her a second.—3-1.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR AND ACTRESS

For the first time since 1936, when the Academy introduced award categories for the best performances by an actor and actress in supporting roles, all 10 players in the running this year are first-time nominees. The actors are Don Ameche for "Cocoon," Klaus Maria Brandauer for "Out of Africa," William Hickey for "Prizzi's Honor," Robert Loggia for "Jagged Edge" and Eric Roberts for "Runaway Train." Our choice: Klaus Maria Brandauer, the Austrian stage and screen star who masterfully plays Meryl Streep's husband in "Africa."

The actresses are Anjelica Huston for "Prizzi's Honor," Margaret Avery and Oprah Winfrey for "The Color Purple," Meg Tilly for "Agnes of God" and Amy Madigan for "Twice in a Lifetime." Our pick: Meg Tilly, the anguished nun accused of killing her infant in "Agnes."

A Good Looking Haircut Every Time!

You can learn to cut hair and get professional results. There's no mystery about it. It takes patience and practice, but once you've got the idea you'll be able to turn out a good-looking haircut every time. You'll be surprised how easy it is to cut hair when you use Consumer Guide's® new HOME HAIRCUTTING MADE EASY. And just think of the advantages.

If you knew how to cut hair at home you wouldn't have to spend a fortune come September getting the kids ready for school. If a friend or family member could cut your hair, you wouldn't have to spend good money at the beauty parlor or barber shop for a style that somehow doesn't turn out just (or even remotely) like what you had in mind. You wouldn't have to spend time waiting for the stylist to finish with the difficult client ahead of you. And you won't have to make an appointment!

All the instructions you need are in this book, illustrated with drawings that take you step-by-step through the three basic cuts. You learn the versatile layered and blunt cuts which can be adapted to long or short hair and look good on men, women and children. Plus you learn the wedge cut which is popular with women and girls. The equipment you need? Just a scissors, a comb, a few hair clips, towels and a sheet—all of which you probably have at home—and perhaps a thinning shears or straight edged razor for some variations on the basic cuts (easily obtainable at a drug store or beauty shop).

So buy yourself some convenience and save yourself some money. Order HOME HAIRCUTTING MADE EASY today!

Laugh Parade

By Bill Hoest

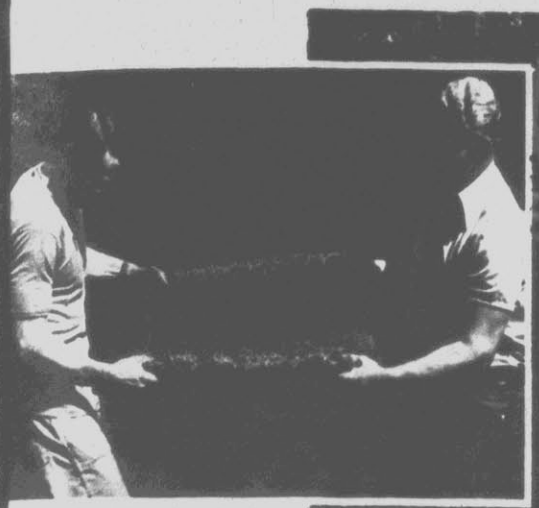

"Daddy says my hair looks like a mop... What's a mop?"

"Not only can Howard play dead, he precedes it with a highly dramatic death scene."

"You're a lucky man, Mr. Gearhardt. You have a very inexpensive disease."

So deep-rooted is Amazoy... it grows into practically indestructible turf.

A WORRY FREE LAWN

Amazoy withstands active kids and cook outs. Gives you time to relax since it needs little water and cuts mowing two-thirds.

GRASS SEED WILL NEVER GROW A LAWN LIKE THIS—DROUGHT & WEAR RESISTANT!
Amazoy lawns stay green right thru scorching heat and drought!

Two Grown Men Can't Pull It Apart! Zoysia Saves Time, Work & Money

Amazoy is the Trade Mark Registered U.S. Patent Office for our Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass

FREE! UP TO 900 AMAZOY PLUGS JUST FOR ORDERING NOW

By Jack T. Johnson, Agronomist

Every year I see people pour more and more money into their lawns. They dig, fertilize and lime. They rake it all in. They scatter their seed and roll and water it.

Birds love it! Seeds which aren't washed away by rain give them a feast. But some seed grows, and soon it's time to weed, water and mow, mow ... until summer comes to burn the lawn into hay, or crabgrass and diseases infest it.

That's what happens to ordinary grass, but not to Amazoy Zoysia.

"MOWED IT 2 TIMES," WRITES WOMAN

For example, Mrs. M. R. Mitter writes me how her lawn"...is the envy of all who see it. When everybody's lawns around here are brown from drought ours just stays as green as ever. I've never watered it, only when I put the plugs in...Last summer we had it mowed (2) times. Another thing, we never have to pull any weeds—it's just wonderful!"

LAWN WATERED ONLY ONCE

And from Iowa came word that the state's largest Men's Garden Club picked a Zoysia lawn as the "top lawn —nearly perfect" in its area. Yet this lawn had been watered only once all summer up to August!

CHOKES OUT CRABGRASS

Thick, rich, luxurious, established Amazoy grows into a carpet of grass that chokes out crabgrass and weeds all summer long.

FOR SLOPES, PLAY AREAS, BARE SPOTS

End erosion of slopes with Amazoy. Perfect answer for hard-to-cover spots, play-worn areas.

NO NEED TO RIP OUT PRESENT GRASS—PLUG AMAZOY INTO OLD LAWN, NEW GROUND OR NURSERY AREA

Just set Amazoy plugs into holes in ground like a cork in a bottle. Plant 1 foot apart, checkerboard style.

When planted in existing lawn areas plugs will spread to drive out old, unwanted growth including weeds—from part shade to full sun. Goes off its green color after killing frosts. Begins regaining its green color at the time when the temperature in the spring is consistently warm. This, of course, varies with climate. Easy planting instructions with order.

NO SEED, NO SOD!

There's no seed that produces winter-hardy Meyer Zoysia. Sod of ordinary grass brings with it the problems of seed: like weeds, diseases, burning out, other ills. Save time, work, money. Plug in Amazoy.

FREE

PATENTED STEP-ON PLUGGER WITH ORDERS OF 600 PLUGS OR MORE

Amazoy exclusive! No one else can offer you this patented 2-way plugger. Saves bending, time, work. Light, rugged, invaluable for transplanting. Cuts away competing growth as it digs plug holes.

WEAR RESISTANT

When America's largest University tested 13 leading grasses for wear resistance, such as foot scuffling, the Zoysia (matrella and japonica Meyer Z-52) led all others.

Your Amazoy lawn takes such wear as cookouts, lawn parties, lawn furniture, etc. Grows so thick you could play football on it and not get your feet muddy. Even if children play on it, they won't hurt it — or themselves.

Amazoy thrives in porous, sandy soil, "builder's soil" — even salty beach areas! Beauty is but one advantage of Zoysia Grass. It's also so vigorous and rich it thrives in soils where lesser grasses have failed you repeatedly. Start your Amazoy lawn this Spring, and never re-seed your lawn again!

CUTS YOUR WORK, SAVES YOU MONEY

Your deep-rooted, established Amazoy lawn saves you time and money in many ways. It never needs replacement...ends re-seeding forever. Fertilizing and watering (water costs money, too) are rarely if ever needed. It ends the need for crabgrass killers permanently. It cuts pushing a noisy mower in the blistering sun by ⅓.

YOUR OWN SUPPLY OF PLUG TRANSPLANTS

Established Amazoy gives you Zoysia plugs to plant in other areas as desired!

Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass was perfected by U.S. Govt., released in cooperation with U.S. Golf Assoc. as a superior grass.

Gene Kelly

Culver Pictures

Kelly today and (top) singin' in the rain in 1952. Every movement takes on a lithe, limber poetry.

Eddie Adams

BORN: Aug. 23, 1912, in Pittsburgh.
PHYSICAL: 5 feet 9, 165 pounds.
PERSONAL: Married to Betsy Blair 1941-57; one daughter, Kerry. Married to Jeanne Coyne 1960-73; one son, Timothy, and one daughter, Bridget.
EDUCATION: BA in journalism, a few months of law school.
FIRST HIT: Pal Joey, 1941.
FILMS: Include For Me and My Gal, 1942; Anchors Aweigh, 1945; The Pirate, 1948; On the Town, 1949 (he co-directed), An American in Paris, 1951; Singin' in the Rain, 1952 (co-directed); Brigadoon, 1954; Inherit the Wind, 1960.
AWARDS: Special Oscar in 1951 in appreciation of his versatility as actor, singer, director, dancer and film choreographer; Kennedy Center Honor for lifetime achievement, 1982.

IN HIS FIRST TWO STARRING ROLES, Gene Kelly was a rat.

In 1941 on the Broadway stage, he was "Pal Joey"—John O'Hara's classic heel—conniving and charming, not to be trusted with your bankroll or your wife. Hollywood took him up, and in 1942 MGM paired him with Judy Garland, now graduated to grown-up roles from those Andy Hardy films and The Wizard of Oz.

The film was For Me and My Gal, with Judy and Gene playing a couple of entertainers who fall in love just in time for World War I. Kelly doesn't want to lose Judy, or impending stardom, and he cold-bloodedly slams a theater trunk on his hand, maiming himself to avoid the draft. Judy recoils in disgust and heads for France to entertain the troops. Kelly, who has now lost everything, including his self-respect, shows up in the final reel as an ambulance driver, and they clinch as the big guns roar. Old movies always end like that.

Gene Kelly hasn't played a rat since, in show biz or in life.

I caught up to him recently in a New York hotel, still with that cocky grin, that little trademark scar, the dancer's grace with which just sitting down in a chair takes on a sort of lithe, limber poetry. He is an Irish kid out of Pittsburgh, whose parochial school nuns he blames for that gravelly singing voice, rehearsing him over and over again in the school choir.

Inevitably, we talk about Astaire. "If they wanted someone to play Prince Charming or to wear evening clothes, they got Fred," Kelly says. "I was always the blue-collar dancer, the guy with the rolled-up sleeves and the white socks." He and Astaire are the best dancers Hollywood ever had, and in a year when we marvel at Baryshnikov's ability to act in White Nights, you remember just how good an actor the dancer Kelly became. As the cynical reporter in Inherit the Wind, competing with heavyweights Spencer Tracy and Fredric March, Kelly more than held his own.

He is also a director and a choreographer and, ever since An American in Paris won the Oscar in 1951, a lover of France—so much so that the State Department once dispatched him on a tour of French-speaking countries. His youngest daughter, Bridget, now 21, has been studying in Paris.

I remember seeing An American in Paris up in the Korean mountains on Christmas Day of '51. We marines had a little Korean kid with us, an orphan named Chang, and we took him to the movies. It was wonderful, he said, what they could do in Hollywood, creating all those beautiful buildings and broad, lovely streets. Chang didn't believe there really was a Paris—only some clever movie tricks, with Gene Kelly and Leslie Caron dancing on bridges that never were.

Today in Beverly Hills, along posh Rodeo Drive, they've laid a long green carpet. It's the St. Patrick's Day Parade, and Gene Kelly is grand marshal. If anyone can lend a touch of class to this curious idea, he will.

BRADY'S BITS

His second wife, Jeanne Coyne, died in 1973. I asked Gene if they ever went out dancing, just like civilians. Oh, sure, he said, but it was tough: "People expected me to be throwing her around and dancing on tables. And all we wanted was to do the fox trot."

• COIN CALLS! Probably, if you are blindfolded, and someone hands you a U.S. cent, dime, nickel or quarter, you will be able to identify the coin by the way it feels.

However, if you are at all uncertain, there is a sure way of telling a cent from a dime or a nickel from a quarter. How's that?

Dimes and quarters have milled edges, while edges of cents and nickels are smooth.

• MATH TWIST! The answer is 327. You've taken a number, doubled it, turned the answer upside down and divided by three. What number did you take originally?

It works out with the number ninety-three.
