Senate Race Falls Short On Issues

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Less than two months before the May 6 primary, the U.S. Senate campaign is struggling to evolve from a personality contest to a battle between candidates with discernible philosophies.

The better-known hopefuls have focused, for the most part, on their records of public service and leadership qualities. They've discussed issues in such general terms that other contenders have had difficulty finding points of comparison that would take hold.

For example, virtually all 10 Democrats and three Republicans seeking the seat held by retiring Sen. John East have promised to help beleaguered tobacco farmers and textile workers. But few, if any, have made specific proposals.

Former Gov. Terry Sanford, a Democrat, openly acknowledges he doesn't know what to do about the farm crisis. He announced this week the appointment of a committee of farmers to advise him on agricultural policy.

"I could, as most candidates seem to do, get together some position papers, and then go around declaring all the great things I would do in Washington for farmers," Sanford said. "But I won't do that. The problems are too complex and there are no easy answers."

As if taking a cue from Sanford, former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram this week promised to appoint a textile advisory committee.

But Ingram offered no new ideas, repeating oft-expressed views of textile advocates that import quotas should be considered and the Reagan administration should enforce more vigorously existing restrictions.

The other Democratic hopefuls suffer from lack of statewide name recognition, and have spent most of their time and resources simply introducing themselves to the North Carolina electorate.

Although he was the first Democrat to enter the race and has been campaigning since last August, Fountain Odom is using his first two television commercials to report his existence, not discuss his stands.

The TV spots, which began airing last week in Piedmont media markets, portray Odom, 47, as hardworking and energetic. The announcer not-so-subtly contrasts Odom with Sanford, 68, by saying the Senate "is no place to rest on your laurels" and that the job "calls for a man, not a myth."

Still, the viewer gets no hint whether Odom is liberal, moderate or conser-

Schools Await Merger Rulings

By MARY C. SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

Attorneys for the Consolidated Board of Education said this morning they had received no word from the U.S. Justice Department on preclearance of legislation that would merge the Pitt and Greenville systems July 1.

Today was the initial deadline for the Justice Department to approve the merger plan, which was ratified in July 1985 by the N.C. General Assembly.

Eddie West, superintendent of Pitt and Greenville schools, also said at mid-morning he had heard nothing from the federal agency. "We will be waiting for notification," he said.

The U.S. Justice Department told the Daily Reflector it would not release information concerning preclearance by telephone. The school unit and its attorneys are expected to be notified by letter, along with attorneys for the Concerned Citizens for Justice, a local minority rights group that requested the preclearance review.

Ernest Brown, a spokesman for the Concerned Citizens, said to his knowledge the group had not been notified of a decision.

School board attorney Bill Brewer said "we have had no communication to my knowledge" today from the Justice Department. "As of now we haven't heard anything."

School officials and members of the Concerned Citizens indicated the Justice Department may need longer to review the legislation because additional information was submitted recently.

The Consolidated Board agreed in January 1986 to cease operations pending Justice Department approval of the legislation that would consolidate the city and county schools in July. The halt of action was in exchange for the dismissal of a lawsuit filed against its members by the Concerned Citizens.

The suit specifically challenged the legality of the 15-member board that would govern the merged school system. It asked that the court declare the merger legislation — including an amendment that added three appointed minority members — a violation of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. According to that act, the Justice Department must "preclear" or approve changes made in a board's structure or method of election.

Public Asked To Support Aid To Contras

President Links Sandinistas With Drugs, Marines' Deaths

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is seeking to link Nicaragua's leftist government with drug smuggling and the murder of four U.S. Marines as he presses for the votes he still needs in Congress to resume rearming Nicaraguan guerrillas.

Reagan made the charges in a televised address Sunday night while appealing for public and congressional support for his embattled proposal to send $100 million in military supplies and non-lethal support to the rebel forces. The House, which is under Democratic control, is scheduled to vote on the proposition Thursday.

Sen. James Sasser of Tennessee, in the Democratic response to Reagan's speech, said the president was "seizing military options" without giving diplomacy enough of a chance.

Reagan last week sent his special envoy, Philip Habib, on a three-day visit to Central America that did not include a visit to Nicaragua, and the White House said Habib would meet with Habib today.

Following Reagan's speech, the Nicaraguan Embassy said his policy of support for the rebels, known as Contras, could "trigger a bloody regional war in Central America."

And on the sidewalk in front of the White House, hundreds of demonstrators marched with candles and anti-administration placards, shouting, "No more killing, no more lies; we know what Contra money buys."

In his speech from the Oval Office, however, Reagan warned that the aid program is needed "for the defense of our own southern frontier."

As television screens showed a red stain spreading across a map of Latin America and threatening Mexico, the president declared:

"For our own security the United States must deny the Soviet Union a beachhead in North America. ... It is not Nicaragua alone that threatens us, but those using Nicaragua as a privileged sanctuary for their struggle against the United States."

Reagan said the Sandinista leaders of Nicaragua "are transforming their nation into a safe house, a command post for international terrorism."

He charged that the Sandinistas "sponsor terror in El Salvador, Costa Rica, Guatemala and Honduras — terror that led last summer to the murder of four U.S. Marines in a cafe in San Salvador," the Salvadoran capital.

A senior administration official, when asked for the basis of the president's assertion, said, "I don't think we have anything beyond the fact that the headquarters for the El Salvador guerrillas is in Nicaragua and guidance and supplies come out of Nicaragua. I don't believe we have got any information that the Nicaraguans directly advised the headquarters to conduct this attack."

Reagan also showed television viewers a black and white photograph that he said showed Federico Vaughan, identified by the White House as a top aide to Nicaraguan Interior Minister Tomas Borge, loading an aircraft with illegal narcotics bound for the United States.

"I know every American parent concerned about the drug problem will be outraged to learn that top Nicaraguan officials are deeply involved in drug trafficking," he said.

The senior administration official, asked if this meant that Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega was involved, said, "I don't think we have any direct ties to Ortega. Only to Tomas Borge."

Cornelius J. Dougherty, a spokesman for the Drug Enforcement Administration, said a recent DEA investigation led to an indictment of Vaughan but "no evidence was developed to implicate the minister of interior or other Nicaraguan officials."

Reagan's request includes $30 million in non-lethal aid and $70 million in military assistance for the Contras.

BALLOT TIME — French President Francois Mitterrand casts his vote in a ballot box in Chateau Chignon Sunday as his nation voted on a new parliament. Mitterrand's support was cut in the voting, and he now faces a hostile parliament for the first time. (AP Laserphoto)

Mitterrand Faces Hostile Parliament

PARIS (AP) — French voters ousted leftists from power in the National Assembly, but gave the main conservative parties only a bare majority with which to pursue their plans to loosen government control of the economy and reduce unemployment.

Results early today from French overseas possessions pushed the number of seats won by conservatives and allied small parties to 291, two more than the number needed for a majority in the 577-member assembly. Two overseas seats remained undecided.

Mainstream conservatives' hopes for a major victory over President Francois Mitterrand's Socialists in Sunday's elections were derailed by an unexpectedly strong showing for the far-right National Front. Meanwhile, Communist electoral strength fell to a historic low.

The National Front won 33 seats with a campaign that hit hard at anti-immigration and law-and-order themes. Previously it had not been represented in the assembly.

Mitterrand has two years left in his seven-year term, but this is the first time in the 28-year history of the French Fifth Republic that a president has been faced with a hostile parliament.

Mitterrand cannot be forced from office, but he has hinted he has not rejected the idea of resigning rather than working with a government with which he has serious philosophical differences. The major conservative alliance immediately signaled it was not prepared to bend on major issues.

The president has promised that if the right won, he would choose the next premier from among his ranks. Jacques Chirac, head of the neo-Gaullist Rally for the Republic was considered the top candidate.

Premier Laurent Fabius met with Mitterrand for 1½ hours today and then presented his letter of resignation, indicating he and his government were "prepared to resign at the moment you judge most opportune." The presidential Elysee pal-

Divided OPEC Suspends Session

GENEVA (AP) — OPEC oil ministers suspended their emergency meeting today to await a report from a committee of oil market experts, the cartel's president said.

Arturo Hernandez Grisanti of Venezuela told reporters after a three-hour morning session that the 13 ministers expected to resume their meeting on Tuesday.

"I guess we could say the conference will be on standby for the day," Grisanti said through an interpreter.

The Venezuelan oil minister said he and his colleagues would meet informally in small groups this afternoon instead of continuing the full conference.

The decision to temporarily suspend the full meeting is a departure from normal OPEC procedure. It was seen as a sign of the sharp divisions within the cartel on what strategy might best prop up oil prices, which have tumbled 50 percent since December.

After four hours of discussions on Sunday, the ministers reported no progress toward agreement, and Grisanti said after this morning's closed-door session that "no concrete proposals" were presented.

A key question before the conference is whether the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries should revert to limiting production to push up the price of oil. OPEC used that tactic with little success for four years, and abandoned it in December in a deal engineered by Saudi Arabia that triggered an unprecedented plunge in world oil prices.

As on Sunday, nearly all the ministers slipped quietly into their hotel meeting room today through side or rear entrances, avoiding contact with reporters.

Abdul Aziz bin Khalifa al Thani, the oil minister of Qatar, said he was not yet ready to accept a new system of OPEC production limits. "That would be difficult," he said as he entered a morning session.

At an average of about $15 a barrel, oil prices have hit the lowest point since the late 1970s and are one-half their levels of early December.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani was quoted by Britain's Sunday Telegraph newspaper as saying oil prices could fall to $8 a barrel if OPEC and non-OPEC producers did not agree on production limits.

Grisanti, the organization president and Venezuela's oil minister, said the 13 members of OPEC Sunday only conferred on general issues and did not get into details.

Grisanti said OPEC officials would meet Wednesday with representatives of Oman, Brunei, Mexico, Malaysia and Egypt — all who are not members of the cartel.

Analysts say that meeting was unlikely to produce meaningful agreement because the biggest non-OPEC producers — the Soviet Union, the United States, Britain and Norway — are not attending.

"We think non-OPEC producing countries are very much concerned about the current state of the market, and I know that there are many of them who are willing to share the responsibility of trying to stabilize the market at a reasonable level of prices," the Venezuelan minister said.

The Saudis, the largest producer in OPEC, contend that the organization's production cuts were not enough to prevent prices from falling.

Mary Elizabeth Beckman Is Named Pitt County Junior Miss 1986

Mary Elizabeth Beckman was chosen Pitt County Junior Miss for 1986 from a group of 20 contestants competing for the title Saturday during festivities at Farmville Central High School auditorium.

A junior at Arendell Parrott Academy, Miss Beckman is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Beckman of Farmville.

She received a $100 scholarship from a local business. From the Farmville Junior Woman's Club, she received a $500 scholarship, the Junior Miss medallion and a silver bowl. She also received a $250 travel and clothing allowance from the club to assist her in her future competition on the state level. She was also presented flowers and a color portrait.

In addition to her new title, Miss Beckman was the overall winner in the poise and appearance portion of the competition, receiving a $100 scholarship and silver tray from the Junior Woman's Club, as well as overall winner of the creative and performing arts portion of the program, receiving a $100 scholarship from a local business and a silver tray. For her presentation she performed a violin solo, "Meditation."

White Shrine Names Officers

Election of officers highlighted the meeting of Greenville Shrine No. 7 held last week. An open installation will be held April 5 at the Masonic Temple.

Named were: Blanche W. Jackson, worthy high priestess; Bryce Tharp, watchman of shepherds; Jane A. Adams, noble prophetess; Joseph Jolly, associate watchman of shepherds; Annie Turner, worthy scribe; J. Edward Ricks, worthy treasurer; Margaret C. Gray, worthy chaplain; Jane Jolly, worthy shepherdess; and Imelda Stang, worthy guide.

A memory tribute was paid to Myrtle Nobles by Mrs. Gray, worthy high priestess. Clara and John Heuay and Virginia Everett were appointed to prepare resolutions of respect.

Mrs. Jackson reported on the North Carolina-Virginia States Shrine Club meeting held in New Bern March 1-2. She was elected first vice president.

In celebration of St. Patrick's Day, Mrs. Gray told of the "Shamrock Legend."

Annual reports were given during the business session.

Organizations Receive Gifts Of Temporary Hours

Four non-profit organizations in Greenville have been selected to receive eight hours of free temporary help by Kelly Services in celebration of Kelly Week 1986.

Selected were United Cerebral Palsy, The Salvation Army, March of Dimes and American Heart Association. They were announced at a St. Patrick's Day party held this afternoon.

Other activities planned in celebration of the week are providing parties and clown for entertainment at the Winterville Rest Home and the Pitt County Group Home. Each resident will receive a shamrock plant and gifts.

The first baby born today will receive a savings bond and gifts will be given to the parents.

At the open house, the "employee of the year" will be recognized with gifts.

Quality Of American Products Improving

From BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

American goods competing against imports for the trust of U.S. consumers have pulled even with foreign products on issues of quality, and where a product is made could be a deciding factor on which product to buy, according to a Better Homes and Gardens survey.

There is less certainty, however, on issues of competitive price. U.S. consumers believe that American products are too expensive, therefore pricing domestic products out of the market.

Still, it's apparent that American shoppers are increasingly aware of what is U.S.-made and what isn't. Consumer confidence in American-made products is at the point where 84 percent of respondents believe the quality of U.S. goods is equal to that of imports, and if two products are similar in quality and price, 74 percent of shoppers will check to see which is U.S.-made. More than half of respondents in the Consumer Panel survey also report they routinely shop for American-made products.

That's welcome news for U.S. manufacturers who emphasize product quality in the battle for American marketplace supremacy. Margaret Daly, money management, automotive and features editor of the magazine, said "The concentration on quality is paying off for many U.S. manufacturers. It's very likely a battle they'll have to keep fighting. Foreign businesses aren't going to ease up on the quality of their goods either."

Tempering the enthusiasm, however, is consumer belief that while the quality of U.S. goods has improved, prices of American goods are too high. More than 75 percent of respondents say American manufacturers have priced themselves out of the market.

U.S. consumers would support moves to make American products more attractive in foreign markets while protecting U.S. interests at home. More than 60 percent favor a system in which American goods compete with foreign goods without limitation. Another 68 percent favor import limits to help American products on the domestic scene.

The survey was conducted among 500 members of the Better Homes and Gardens Consumer Panel. The panel is drawn on a random basis from the magazine subscriber rolls.

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE Associated Press Food Editor

If you are interested in serving fine food, I urge you to look into "Earle Sieveling's New York Cuisine" (McGraw-Hill). It is an extraordinary contribution because the author, who for many years was a star of George Balanchine's New York City Ballet, is as gifted in the art of cooking as in the field of dance.

In his introduction to his cookbook Sieveling writes: "It is the outgrowth of the abundance of fresh foods from all countries readily available in New York, combined with influences from the myriad cultures represented in this city. This cross-pollination allows the emergency of unique dishes, unrestricted by a single culinary tradition."

As I went over the recipes in the book — from Artichoke Ragout to Cold Pork Salad with Cucumbers and Sesame Noodles — it was evident that Sieveling has indeed created some singular dishes.

Here is his version of Wild Rice Salad — as fine a recipe for this particular dish as I have ever come upon.

EARLE SIEVELING'S WILD RICE SALAD

- 1 cup wild rice, rinsed in cold water
- 1-3rd cup olive oil
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt
- 3 teaspoons red wine vinegar or sherry wine vinegar
- ½ cup scallions, diced
- ¼ cup sweet red pepper, diced
- ¼ cup green pepper, diced
- ¼ cup parsley, roughly chopped
- ¼ cup raw carrots, finely diced
- Optional: ½ cup orange sections, membranes removed

Put the rice in a pot and cover with water by ½ inch. Bring to a boil. Immediately lower to a gentle simmer. Cover tightly and simmer for 30 to 35 minutes. Check for doneness. If the rice is not open and cooked, check the liquid. Add a little more liquid, if necessary, cover and simmer until tender. Remove from heat. Cool the rice. (To speed the cooling, you can spread it out on a flat pan in a thin layer.)

Put the rice in a bowl and toss with olive oil. Add the salt and toss again. Add wine vinegar and toss again. Add the scallions, peppers, parsley, carrots and orange sections, if desired. Toss well. Check for seasoning, adding freshly ground pepper to taste.

Yield: Four servings.

PREVENTING CAVITIES

If you have a child whose teeth need protection against cavities, you may want to ask your dentist if he would recommend the pit and fissure sealant technique. This a "paint on" coating applied to the biting surfaces of teeth to prevent decay. When used effectively it may also diminish the need to restore decayed teeth with fillings. The minor decay that may develop when the sealant wears off may not require the filling normally used in tooth restoration.

The technique is not recommended for teeth with decay that extends into the dentin, the area beyond the tooth's enamel which contains the pulp and root canal. Nor is it recommended for patients who have no history of cavities or little likelihood of developing them. Once applied, the sealant should be checked annually for wear to see if a reapplication is needed. It should also be checked for any signs of cavities in unprotected areas. If you are interested in protecting your child against cavities, call my office for an appointment. I will be happy to discuss with you my recommendations for your child to have optimal dental health.

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Abby's St. Patrick's Day Message

CONFIDENTIAL TO YOU: Have a joyous St. Patrick's Day, but if you're drinking, don't drive. And if you're driving, don't drink.

DEAR ABBY: To "Forgotten Parents," who loaned their son $10,000 10 years ago that never has been (and likely never will be) repaid, and to all those who wrote in to say, "The same thing happened to us," you gave sound advice: "Never lend money without a promissory note acknowledging the loan and stating the terms of repayment. Relatives are no exception."

Having made my first million by the time I was 30 and multiplying it several times since then, and coming from a large working-class family, I am often confronted with the problem of a relative in "desperate" need of a loan. Here is an even better way to handle it:

Develop a relationship with a bank—most people with even $5,000 or $10,000 to lend will know their banker. When a relative asks for a loan, tell him (or her) that you're not in the business of lending money, but your bank is. His credit lousy? Or he wouldn't qualify for that much? You'll assist him. Then go to your banker and pledge your money, on deposit with the bank, as security for the loan. The bank will happily make the loan, since their risk is zero. Your relative gets his money, so he's happy. True, you still stand to lose your money if he defaults, but there are several advantages to doing it this way:

1. The bank will make him fill out a loan application, sign a promissory note, maybe even get him to pledge some collateral of his own, however insufficient. It makes the borrower feel "on the hook" and, in fact, his credit rating is at issue if he defaults.
2. It takes you out of the position of creditor and collection agent, which puts a strain on the best of personal relationships. The interest that the borrower owes is paid to the bank, not to you, so no hard feelings.
3. Meanwhile, you continue to get interest on your money deposited in the bank.
4. If the borrower pays the loan as promised, that's an enhancement to his credit rating, and thus an incentive for him to go this route as well.

I've handled several loans to relatives, friends and employees this way and haven't gotten stung yet. Sometimes the borrower, when confronted with the bank's forbidding paperwork, will back off altogether and miraculously find some other way to solve his financial problem. Anyway, it's not foolproof, but it's the best solution to the situation I've found. Sign me, BEVERLY HILLS BENEFACTOR

COMPANY DINNER

Beef & Chili Barley
Broccoli & Salad
Chiffon Pie & Coffee
CHILI BARLEY
2 tablespoons butter
1 small (2 ounces) onion, finely chopped
½ cup medium pearly barley
2 cups clear fat-free chicken broth
4-ounce can chopped green chilies, drained
6 ounces Monterey Jack cheese, cubed (¼-inch)

In a round 1-quart casserole (6½ by 2½ inches) melt butter in a preheated 350-degree oven. Stir in onion, barley and broth. Bake, uncovered, stirring several times for 1 hour. Cover; bake 20 minutes more — liquid should be absorbed but barley should be moist. Stir in chilies and cheese. Return uncovered to oven and bake until cheese melts — about 15 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Danger Time

The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, which will require reductions in federal spending in order to reduce the deficit, is being felt on the local level.

For starters, a major reduction may be ahead for the state Cooperative Extension Service for fiscal 1987.

The administration's budget calls for a 59 percent reduction from $342.7 million in 1986 to $140 million in 1987. For the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service this will mean a loss of $6.9 million or 54 percent.

Extension service personnel see the cuts as far too high in proportion to cuts in other programs.

Pitt County Agricultural Extension Chairman Leroy James says the statewide staff reductions will mean a 25 percent staff cut for Pitt County. He said the impact could be far-reaching in Pitt County. "We'll be limited to just meeting the basic needs," he said. "When you cut staff, you cut programs. There are a lot of concerned people in Pitt County."

Indeed, it seems to be a danger time for farm services. Most of the progress in increasing crop yields and improving farming production methods has come since the establishment of the Cooperative Extension Service. Early farm agents deserve much credit for encouraging farmers to adopt modern farming methods and a businesslike approach to farming.

The proposed 1987 budget cuts strike at the very heart of the extension service. Loss of some of these services also comes at a time when farms are facing economic difficulties which increase the need for advice and assistance.

Cuts of more than 50 percent in the extension service funding are obviously too large in relation to other government spending. This is a budget proposal which the Reagan administration should rethink.

Farm Glut

A glut of agricultural commodities on the world market means yet another blow for America's hard-pressed farmers.

Too much grain, too much cotton and too many soybeans are sending price predictions plummeting. Farmers in America, as well as abroad, are doing too good a job. And by doing so, they're putting themselves out of business — with a little help from federal policies that encourage exports from other countries.

Record global amounts of grain and cotton have dashed hopes of increasing exports and future price recovery. The outlook, based on supplies, is dim.

Although that prediction doesn't directly touch beleaguered North Carolina tobacco growers, the principle applies. Too much tobacco produced in other nations is finding its way into American factories. The availability of the world leaf — at low prices — makes the high-dollar cost of domestic tobacco undesirable.

Tobacco farmers are struggling through this predicament without any help from the federal government. Tobacco grown in Korea comes to America, where it is manufactured into cigarettes which are in turn shipped back to Korea and marketed there. The American tobacco grower is bypassed and U.S. policy is oblivious to the situation.

The future, not only of tobacco but of all America's crops, depends on the ability to export profitably. If burgeoning supplies block this ability, the United States must respond with policy-curbing imports and create a larger domestic demand for its own products.

Public Forum

To the editor:

For almost 30 years, our presidents have sought an end to nuclear testing as a first step in halting the arms race — until President Reagan. The Soviet Union has refrained from testing any nuclear weapons for over eight months, challenging the seriousness of President Reagan's "dream" of a nuclear-free world. How have we responded? In the same eight months, the U.S. government has conducted seven nuclear tests and shows no signs of stopping.

On Feb. 26, 1986, the House of Representatives approved Resolution 268-148 urging the president to resume negotiations immediately with the Soviet Union on a comprehensive test ban. Rep. Walter Jones is to be applauded for his support of this historic arms control initiative. The Senate sent the same message in 1984, voting 77-22 for speedy resumption of CTB talks. Congress is now on record in overwhelming support of these negotiations: U.S. citizens want a test ban agreement and they want it soon.

A nuclear test ban agreement with the Soviets is on everyone's agenda except the president's. Clearly, this overwhelming support from the House and Senate demonstrates that a comprehensive test ban agreement should be discussed at the Geneva summit this summer. It's an opportunity too valuable to pass up.

To the editor:

Imagine 100 people living in the same building. Six of the 100 have more than half of the wealth available, and 94 have to divide the other half. Probably 20 or more of the 94 are starving, the "lucky" ones more quickly. What attitude do you suppose the 94 would have toward the six? Would they admire and respect them. Would they despise them and try to achieve a more equitable distribution of the world's good things?

The six represent Americans, the 94 represent all others, and the building represents our planet. From this perspective, it seems probable that the No. 1 cause of terrorism is Americans' lifestyle, which Walt Whitman described as "shameless stuffing while others starve." People who are happy in this life do not undertake suicide missions hoping to win happiness in the next life.

The Reasons Are Clear

I want you to pay close attention. Unlike Pat Buchanan, I don't consider you all Communists just because you refuse to support President Reagan's request to send money to the contras in Nicaragua. It's quite possible that you're a registered Democrat. In any case, they love you in the Kremlin.

I know I told you the last time out that $27 million would be sufficient to support the freedom fighters in their battle to win their homeland. Well, now it's no longer a fight over one country, but rather a life or death struggle for Western civilization. Are you going to let the Western hemisphere go down the drain for a lousy $100 million? If your answer is yes, then go back to Russia where you belong.

What, you ask, am I going to get for my money? You're going to get a first-class fighting force with guns, ships, tanks, helicopters and a light at the end of the tunnel.

The answer is yes, they can buy all that for $100 million — though supplemental funds may have to be added at a future date to protect the stuff when it arrives.

Now I want to talk to you about San Diego. You all have an approximate idea where San Diego is. It's located on America's doorstep to Central America. A nice clean city, it has friendly people and a sun that shines 365 days a year. Suppose I told you that if we don't give the $100 million to the contras, Nicaraguans will march barefoot right through downtown San Diego and continue along the coast until they reach Disneyland and turn it into a Marxist training camp.

I'm not making it up. I read it in an article by Pat Buchanan, and he works in the White House where they know these things. It is the administration's position that only those Americans who support Ronald Reagan's Central American requests give a damn about what happens to San Diego. The rest of you are in bed with Gorbachev whether you know it or not.

Don't shout at me. I know what's coming next. You're going to ask, if we give $100 million to the contras does that mean we will have to eventually send American boys to fight there? The answer is an unequivocal NO — although we have to keep our options open in case the freedom fighters have trouble against the overwhelming superiority of the Sandinista army, which most of our Democratic members of the House and Senate secretly support.

I want to assure every father and mother that no one wants to see our boys in Central America, and we won't have to send them if each and every one of you goes along with sending the money instead.

You are going to have to dig deep into your pockets to make up for Leninist idiots, Marxist clergy, congressional fellow travelers and pinko do-gooders, who would rather give the $100 million to Castro.

I believe I've made my case. The people who love this country are for Reagan's policy of involvement in Nicaragua. Those who for whatever reason are against it are hereby ordered to report next Monday morning to their nearest passport office to take a lie-detector test.

Before I go, I would like to get personal for a moment. Pat Buchanan was in the U.S. Marines and I was in the U.S. Marines. I didn't know him in the service, but it doesn't matter. I know him now. And I'd just like to say to Pat that no matter what happens, I want to fight by his side in the foxholes of San Diego. I'm not saying Americans will have to fight there; at the same time I'm not saying we won't. It all depends on how many traitors there are in Congress.

The time for debating Reagan's adventures in foreign lands is over. Stand up now and be counted. Which side are you on? If you have forgotten "Remember the Maine" ... Remember the Maine!

Strength For Today

We hear a great deal today about the blessings of a peaceful mind. There is much scriptural support for this position. Jesus constantly dwelt on the beauties of peace.

But this same Jesus declared that he came not to bring peace but a sword. There are many times when Jesus emphasized the necessity for conflict — not conflict with persons but with our own selfish propensities.

A great Spanish philosopher has written, "May God deny you peace and give you glory." Many of us find it impossible to lead righteous lives without conflict. Others have agonizing intellectual difficulties before they can arrive at anything like a satisfactory knowledge of truth. We have to brush aside peace of mind so that we may possess things vastly more precious than peace of mind. We give up peace and gain glory.

Iacocca Shows Interest

WASHINGTON — Once Lee Iacocca was fired as head of President Reagan's Statue of Liberty Commission, he suddenly showed interest for the first time in an unauthorized presidential operation set up in his behalf by Democratic politicians.

The Chrysler chief previously ignored LICC (the Lee Iacocca Campaign Committee). But after his sacking by Interior Secretary Donald Hodel, Iacocca aides telephoned the committee to find out what it was doing. At the same time, Iacocca was on the phone to a backstage Democratic power broker asking how the nomination process works.

A footnote: Prominent in LICC are veteran Democratic political operatives Terry O'Connell and Carl Wagner. Whether or not it ever really runs a presidential campaign, the committee provides what political insiders call a "hiding place" for Democrats not yet ready to support an active 1988 candidate.

Declining advice of former top aides including ex-national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, Jimmy Carter telephoned The New York Times to protest President Reagan's "unfair" attacks on the Carter defense record and wound up with a front-page story.

Brzezinski and other Carter intimates recommended a quiet approach to Reagan, not through The Times. But Carter was burning about the president's defense speech. Several strategic programs Reagan took credit for starting were actually Carter or even Gerald Ford initiatives, including the Stealth bomber and the MX.

A footnote: We erred last week in reporting that Nicaraguan dissident Luis Mora, released during Carter's visit to Managua, was put back in prison once the former president left town. In fact, an 11-year sentence was imposed on Social Democrat Mora after Carter's departure, but he was not incarcerated. He remains under sentence for organizing demonstrations in behalf of Cardinal Obando y Bravo.

Secretary of Labor William Brock is so much the first choice of the White House to head the World Bank that chief of staff Donald T. Regan prevailed on him to reconsider after he had turned down the job flat.

Brock, a former senator and Republican national chairman who gained international experience as U.S. trade negotiator, ordinarily would have loved the coveted World Bank job. But he said his family needed his presence in Washington because of the recent death of his wife, and therefore he should not assume the global travels of a World Bank chief.

When Regan urged Brock to reconsider, the labor secretary agreed and promised a quick answer. If he says no, the White House is left without even a strong second choice and may have to begin a fresh search for a candidate.

Although President Reagan revealed to reporters over breakfast that he opposes the 22nd Amendment, limiting presidents to two terms, he did not explain the real reason why: fear of being a lameduck.

Conservative Route

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin's recently revealed plan to handle prison crowding is about to set two of the state's conservative political traditions against each other.

Conservative tradition holds that taxes be kept low and that criminal punishment involve tough prison sentences. But Martin, an unabashed conservative, says those two principles can no longer survive in one state prison policy. North Carolinians can have one, but they can't have both.

North Carolina has never coddled its criminals. Just think back to some of the political rhetoric we've heard in the last half-decade. In 1980, for example, Gov. Jim Hunt and Attorney General Rufus Edmisten teamed up to push a drug sentencing bill that each called "the toughest in the nation" in terms of sentence length. Hunt, three years later, pushed a drunken driving bill through the Legislature which he and others called "the toughest in the nation."

The "Fair Sentencing Law" that went into effect during this time set out mandated prison sentences and eliminated much judicial flexibility.

"For the past 50 years, North Carolina has ranked among the top states in the country for the two major indicators of prison crowding," Martin's prison report, "Corrections at the Crossroads," says. North Carolina now ranks ninth among the states in absolute size of its prison population and seventh in terms of its per capita incarceration rate.

A few years ago, North Carolina was regularly first or second in incarceration rate. But the trend of the past decade and a half has been decidedly upward. Since 1970, the state's prison population has risen by 76 percent, and most of that increase has involved felony convictions.

Some North Carolinians point to the penchant for imprisonment as reason for the state's relatively low crime rate. Others point to Pennsylvania, a similarly sized state which has an almost identical crime rate, and a much smaller prison population. North Carolina doesn't need to jail so many people to keep crime down, these people say.

Martin is apparently listening to those who point to Pennsylvania because he's advocating a major move away from prison punishment for crime. He's saying the state can hand out stiff sentences that involve probation, community service, victim restitution and defendant treatment without locking away some defendants.

Why is Martin moving away from the conservative tradition of tough prison sentences? Because he also believes in the conservative tradition of low taxes. The impending prison costs for maintaining the state's current philosophy of "lock'em up and throw away the key" are staggering.

If Martin has his way, the state's prison population will remain level at about 17,600, for the next 10 years. To do that, he figures the state will have to put 4,700 people who otherwise would have gone to prison into new alternative punishment programs.

Consider the savings involved if that works. If the 4,700 inmates are not diverted from prison, Martin figures the state will have to depart on a $203.4 million prison building program. In fiscal 1986, he figures, the annual operating budget of the Correction Department will have swollen by $98.5 million. Those figures don't figure in inflation.

If the 4,700 offenders are diverted, however, the cost of building new prisons will be reduced by $117 million and the annual operating costs will rise by only $70.6 million, a savings of $27.9 million a year.

When these two conservative ideals clashed, Martin clearly chose to follow the conservative tradition of saving money.

First place: Casey Bland, Erica Whitehurst, Randy Potter, Michelle Abel; second place: Patrick Black, DeMarcus Haddock, Jason Hardee, Wendy Handley, Carrie Wimmer, Elaine Wonzy, Keith Bilby; third place: Shawn Skinner, Kelvin Mayo, Kim Allen, Tracey Mayo.

Attends Course

Greg Brown of Pitt County was one of 47 young tobacco farmers who attended a tobacco short course conducted by the North Carolina Agricultural Extension Service.

GREG BROWN

The four-day course featured a visit to the Philip Morris leaf processing, manufacturing and research facilities in Richmond, Va. Brown attended the course on a grant provided by Philip Morris, USA.

Sierra Club

Nineteen people participated in the Sierra Club Cypress Group's Wicaccan River canoe outing on Saturday.

The group debarked from a point in east-central Hertford County. They viewed the mixed forests along the banks, saw several beaver lodges and had a picnic on the banks on the Wicaccan, before ending the trip at a point on the Chinkapin Creek. Buster Thompson served as float trip guide.

A basecamp outing is scheduled for March 22-23 at Lake Phelps in Pettigrew State Park. Other upcoming events include a cleanup project at the Rachel Carson Estuarine Sanctuary near Beaufort and a wildflower hike at Eno River State Park.

The April 14 meeting will include a program titled "Kayaking through the Grand Canyon." Information on the Sierra Club is available from Grace Smith, membership coordinator, 756-3905, or Diane Hankins, Cypress Group chairman, 758-4552.

NAACP Meeting

The NAACP Executive Committee will meet at 7 tonight at 403 Hudson St. The agenda will include Mother of the Year and county redistricting.

Dancer's Visit

Dancer Robert Small, Readers' Digest affiliate artist, will meet with students at E.B. Aycock Junior High School at 10 a.m. Wednesday in the school library. Small, a modern dancer, will share his art with Aycock students in an informal setting.

His appearance in Greenville is sponsored by the Readers' Digest Association, the N.C. Arts Council, the National Endowment for the Arts. At Aycock, he is being presented by the East Carolina University Department of Theater Arts. Small is a participant in a three-day dance festival at ECU this week.

Brown Elected

Ernest Brown was elected Region 4 vice president of the North Carolina Central University Alumni Association at its regional convention held Saturday in Rocky Mount.

Brown is a 1970 graduate of NCCU and serves as president of the Pitt County Chapter of the NCCU Alumni. He is associate director of review services for Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency Inc. Region 4 covers the area east of Durham.

Scholarship

Millard A. Bell and Dan Coleman recently received the first scholarship awarded by the jazz department of North Carolina Central University in Durham. Bell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Millard F. Bell of Greenville.

Revival

Revival services will be held daily at 8 p.m. today through Friday at Pictolus Holy Church on the Rocks with pastor Mable Hargrove of Joy Temple as the guest speaker.

Today the Clemons Grove Choir of Winterville will perform and Thursday Little Rock Choir of Chocowinity will sing. Friday's service will feature the New Hope Choir of Belhaven.

Excavation At Old Gold Mine Displays View Of Mid-1850s

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — The opening of an archaeological excavation is offering visitors to historic Reed Gold Mine a more complete glimpse at life during the mid-1850s. The excavation, a short walk from the current mine museum, has revealed the remains of a large ore processing facility.

All that survives of the facility is the masonry foundation, a chimney, huge piles of tailing and a cavernous pit which once supported the boiler that provided steam to power three Chilean mills and a stamp mill.

"We're finding an array of artifacts which reflect the industrial nature of the facility," said Dr. Michael Trinkley, head of the archaeological team employed by the state to develop the site. "We're also finding a number of items of a more personal nature."

Among the artifacts unearthed are pipe fittings, wrenches and other tools and parts of tools, hundreds of nails, shards of glass from patent medicine and other bottles, bits of metals of undetermined function, horseshoes, bits of rubber and leather, bolts, and curiously, the ceramic boot from a doll of the day.

Initial preservation of the artifacts is being done at the site, but the entire collection will be sent to Raleigh for final cataloging and preservation.

"The significant and important pieces will be sent back to Reed Gold Mine for eventual display in the museum," said John Dysart, site manager at Reed, a state historic site.

Findings at the excavation support photographic and other evidence that as many as three buildings stood on the site during the past 130 years. The first building, constructed in 1854, stood 45-by-55 feet and included the massive chimney still standing at the site.

"The original structure was an industrial site and reflects a period of a lot of activity at the mine," Trinkley said.

Ore from the nearby engine shaft was brought up from the shaft and ferried the short distance to the processing plant. "The precise flow of activity inside the building has not yet been determined," Trinkley said, "but we hope to discover more about that."

The original foundation, unearthed and now plainly visible, was laid by an expert mason as evidenced by the smooth and regular arrangement of stones in the foundation and in the chimney.

"The second building was built around 1894 and was considerably smaller than the first," Trinkley said. Also visible and laid within the first, this foundation indicates the second structure was no more than a third the size of the first.

"Economic times were worse, and the need for the large building no longer existed. Please remember that this was a working site, and they built nothing they did not need. We suspect that they took what they needed from the original building to construct the new one," Trinkley said.

Trinkley said the second building was simply "slapped up. You will notice that the arrangement of the stones in the second foundation is not nearly so skillful as the arrangement in the original and larger foundation."

The third building was very likely what was left of the second, Trinkley said, after a major portion of it was

Farm Scene

By SAM UZZELL
Pitt Extension Agent

As planting time approaches, more and more fields are once again brought back into cultivation. Many of these fields will be worked wet. Others will be disked several times prior to planting. Some of these cultivations are unnecessary and some will also cause problems later in the growing season.

One of the problems that may occur with unnecessary disking of farm land is the formation of a hard pan, tillage pan or pan layer. This is a dense, compacted layer of soil at a depth of six inches to eight inches which restricts root growth and therefore affects plant growth.

Very few annual plants have a root system that can effectively penetrate through this pan. On some soils, large yield increases are possible where the plow layer is broken so as to allow roots to grow into the subsoil below this compacted zone. Obviously, a larger root system can obtain moisture and nutrients in a larger area.

Traffic pans form due to the combined effects of soil properties, machinery traffic, the action of tillage tools and the weight of the surface soil itself. This problem becomes more severe when certain soil properties are present. It is related to three factors: the influence of sand in the soil, the roughness of the sand particles and the effects of changing moisture levels during the year.

With the advent of larger tractors and more weight on the tire, soils that have a tendency to form hardpans often do. Heavy equipment is thought to be the most important contributing factor to soil compaction. An important consideration which research points out is that disking is responsible for compacting soils. It has been stated that when a hard pan has been broken by chisel plowing or subsoiling, disking will recompact 85 percent of the hardpan.

So an important consideration is to not disturb a subsoiled field with additional disking. It is better to plant the crop rather than move an additional tillage tool across the field.

In a year where profits will likely be low for the farmer, there is a potential savings of production costs by eliminating unnecessary trips when a yield loss can further decrease a potential profit.

Growers who wish to obtain additional information on hardpans should contact the Agricultural Extension Office in their county and ask for a copy of publication AG-252, "Subsurface Compaction and Subsoiling in North Carolina."

Porn Law Worries Academics

By The Associated Press

No one ordered Thomas Tedford to store his X-rated slides, but the University of North Carolina at Greensboro professor says he dropped the slide show from his course on free speech because of the state's new obscenity laws.

"It is the chilling effect of this George Orwellian, fascist law that has caused so many teachers to pull in their material," Tedford said in a recent telephone interview. "They don't want to hassle with it."

A Guilford County prosecutor and an assistant state attorney general both say the communications professor had no reason under state law to fear that his classroom would be raided.

However, Tedford said he interpreted the laws to say that he risked arrest if he continued to show his slides, which included a 10-inch phallus of an ancient Chinese statue to the acrobatics of modern Danish porn queens to trace the history of sexual censorship.

A North Carolina Institute of Government attorney agreed with the professor that he could be prosecuted.

Tedford recently wrote that he's so disturbed by new laws that he's seeking a new job out of state "where free speech and academic freedom are not so regularly threatened as in North Carolina."

Revised by the Legislature last year, the laws upgrade dissemination of obscenity from a misdemeanor to a felony. They allow law officials to make arrests and seize questionable material without first asking a judge to declare the material obscene in a civil hearing that was previously required.

The laws rely on community standards instead of the old laws' statewide standards, to determine what is obscene. And they use an open-ended "suitable-to-minors" criterion for material available to anyone under 18.

Under the old laws, material with "educational" value was specifically exempted; under the new laws, it is not. But attorneys say the laws still provide some shields for educators.

Some professionals in libraries and art museums also are concerned about the revised laws.

Gene Lanier, chairman of the North Carolina Library Association's Intellectual Freedom Committee, said that in recent years, North Carolina libraries had seen more than 200 cases of attempted censorship, some for publications such as Webster's Dictionary and a volume of World Book Encyclopedia, which contains an article on reproduction.

Lanier, a professor of library science at East Carolina University, said he believed the new obscenity laws could only encourage such efforts at censorship.

Other critics agree. "A law must tell people exactly what is expected of them and what is prohibited, and this law fails to do so; it's vague and overbroad," said George Gardner of Greensboro, executive director of the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union.

"Conceivably, a librarian could be prosecuted for pornography for handing out a book of classical art. ... How do we know some nutty district attorney isn't going to cave in to the remnants of the Moral Majority and go after that library?"

But Thomas Ziko, an assistant attorney general who helped draft the new laws, said such fears are groundless.

"Obscenity prosecutions don't arise in classrooms; we're talking about dirty bookstores," he said. "To my knowledge, professors in the classroom have not been prosecuted since the turn of the century."

State's Universities Getting Larger Share Of Defense Research Dollars

By The Associated Press

North Carolina universities don't build weapons or conduct classified experiments, but their research dollars from the Department of Defense are growing and so are the concerns of many academics.

Some professors are struggling with the ethical issues involved in conducting warfare-related research, and several are refusing to accept military contracts altogether.

But more widespread is the concern about the potentially chilling effect of academia's growing dependency on military dollars.

"There's a concern that it (the Defense Department) might control the direction science goes in," says Duke University chemistry professor A.L. Crumbliss, who is part of a research team studying the biocatalytic reduction of carbon dioxide for the DOD's Office of Naval Research.

"Faculty members slant their overall emphasis to match the funding source," says Professor Harold Martin, chairman of the electrical engineering department at North Carolina A&T State University. "That has the potential to steer the whole university."

Increasingly, North Carolina college classrooms and labs are the site of military-funded research. In 1980, Defense Department research contracts on the University of North Carolina's 16 campuses totaled $2.9 million. Five years later, that amount had leaped to $6.8 million for research that focuses on solving fundamental scientific problems without concern for eventual applications.

Martin said the Defense Department does not dictate the kind of research universities do, but it can "indirectly" influence what research is done through the projects it funds.

While both Crumbliss and Martin have questions about the Defense Department's role on campus, they went to the military for money because they believe in their projects' scientific importance.

Crumbliss said he doesn't know how the Navy will use his research. Like many "basic" researchers, he doesn't care very much. What matters to him is the opportunity to pursue his scientific investigation freely and to publish his findings.

"I would prefer my funding didn't come from the DOD," Crumbliss said. "But the DOD hasn't told us what to do. There are no strings attached. ... My research will be available to the international scientific community as fast as it will be available to the Navy."

Last year, 10 percent of Duke's sponsored research outside of the medical center came from the Defense Department. The research contracts totaled $2.5 million, up from $1.6 million in 1980, and included projects in computer science, business, biology and physics.

North Carolina State University, with its large engineering school and computer science program, is the state's largest recipient among universities. Its research funded by the military has more than doubled in the past five years, jumping from $1.5 million in 1980 to $3.9 million last year.

In that same five-year period, defense-funded research at UNC-Chapel Hill has risen from $586,000 to $1.3 million. Precise figures weren't available for East Carolina University and N.C. A&T.

The military applications of many university projects are not immediately clear. A&T's Martin, for example, is trying to shorten computer time for complex computations by splitting up mathematical tasks and parceling them out to smaller computers. He has a three-year contract with the DOD for his project.

Like Crumbliss, he isn't sure how his research will be used. But he said the computer system he is designing could be useful in a variety of military operations, particularly surveillance.

"I'm not interested in supporting warfare," he said. "That bothers me. But because this would probably be used for defensive rather than war-making purposes, that's different for me."

Farm Aid of a Different Feather

You can see them on tobacco farms, livestock farms, all kinds of farms.

Perdue chicken houses are nearly as common as tractors in some parts of North Carolina.

More than 1,000 independent farmers around the state have discovered that a Perdue operation can give their cash flow and net income a healthy boost. For many of them, it's been the difference between getting by and getting ahead.

Unlike an investment in a combine that you'd use just a few weeks out of the year, a Perdue broiler house "harvests" a steady income year round. It helps smooth out the seasonal ups and downs of other crops.

State-of-the-art design makes a Perdue broiler house easy to operate. Many of our producers operate two or more houses without hired labor, in addition to their other farming or off-the-farm jobs.

This ease of combining a chicken house operation with other enterprises has a lot to do with poultry's new status as the state's number-one cash crop. Poultry earned over $1.3 billion for North Carolina farmers in 1985. Not exactly chickenfeed!

Even if you have no experience in the chicken business, getting started with Perdue is easy because your Perdue serviceman will advise you every step of the way. That's an important part of Perdue's commitment to our North Carolina producers.

When it comes time to talk about financing, the Perdue staff can help you with the paperwork and show you what kind of cash flow you can expect. Excellent financing is available from lenders around the state who have worked with Perdue through the years and have seen how a Perdue operation can pay off.

We'd appreciate the opportunity to tell you more about the potential a Perdue broiler house holds for you, either as a full-time business or as one part of a diversified operation.

SBI Takes Aim At 'Recreational' Drug Users

RALEIGH (AP) — So-called recreational drug users should be concerned — some of their friends might be talking about them to the State Bureau of Investigation, state Attorney General Lacy Thornburg says.

"If they are violating the law, they should not feel comfortable in thumbing their noses at it," Thornburg said.

"We draw the line where the law draws the line," he added. "Now the small-time dealer and user are just as important in the SBI scheme of things as the drug trafficker. We no longer are prioritizing."

As far as the SBI is concerned, there is no such thing as "recreational use" of an illegal drug, Thornburg said.

He said some operations might be concentrated in public schools.

"I would not rule it out," he said.

"We would certainly check and coordinate with school officials. We have officers you would not be able to pick out of a high school class."

But some SBI agents and others in law enforcement aren't happy with the agency's new policy, which is one of the few in the nation aimed at users.

"Going after the kids and the users didn't work before and it won't work now," one agent, who asked not to be identified, told the Greensboro News & Record. "We don't have enough agents to concentrate on users. If we start doing this, the jails are going to be filled and the traffickers are going to feel like they are home free."

"We'd much rather be prosecuting someone who has been selling drugs," said William Andrews, past president of the North Carolina District Attorney's Association. "Obviously there are more users than dealers. It remains to be seen how effective it will be."

"It will work for a while," said Gerald Arenberg, executive director of National Association of Chiefs of Police. "But you're talking about an industry that's bigger than the federal government, it's bigger than General Motors."

"Agents have got more than they can do anyway," said Greensboro lawyer Robert Cahoon. "I think it's more or less like stamping out quicksand. The more you stamp, the deeper you get."

Most states, including North Carolina, all but halted the prosecution of minor drug users years ago when jails and prisons began to overflow with such people. The SBI began concentrating its approximately 60 drug agents on traffickers trying to smuggle large amounts of drugs, mainly marijuana and cocaine, into the state.

"Even when the penalties (for drug use) were horrendous, people were not deterred," said George Gardner, executive director of the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union.

Thornburg said that the criticism is not valid and that the new approach will work better than attempts to stop major dealers. And he said agents will keep looking for the big busts.

"If an agent knows of somebody that has a kilo of cocaine, I'm not going to divert him to go after your (small amount) of marijuana," SBI Director Robert Morgan said.

Interviews with drug authorities across the country indicate North Carolina is one of the few states in the nation with such a drug policy.

"I'd say North Carolina is on the front edge of the movement looking at the user," said Lt. Mike Robinson of the Michigan State Police. Robinson is also president of the National Alliance of State Drug Enforcement Agencies.

However, a report issued earlier this month by the President's Commission on Organized Crime recommended that states begin prosecuting individuals for drug possession again.

"It is these people who are spending $1,000 a year on drugs that keep the problem going," said Eugene H. Methvin, a commission member.

Thornburg said he and Morgan decided to shift the state's drug enforcement policy after school board members and small-town police chiefs asked for help against street-level drugs.

Thornburg also talked with SBI drug agents, some of whom, he said, insisted that the agency should continue focusing on traffickers.

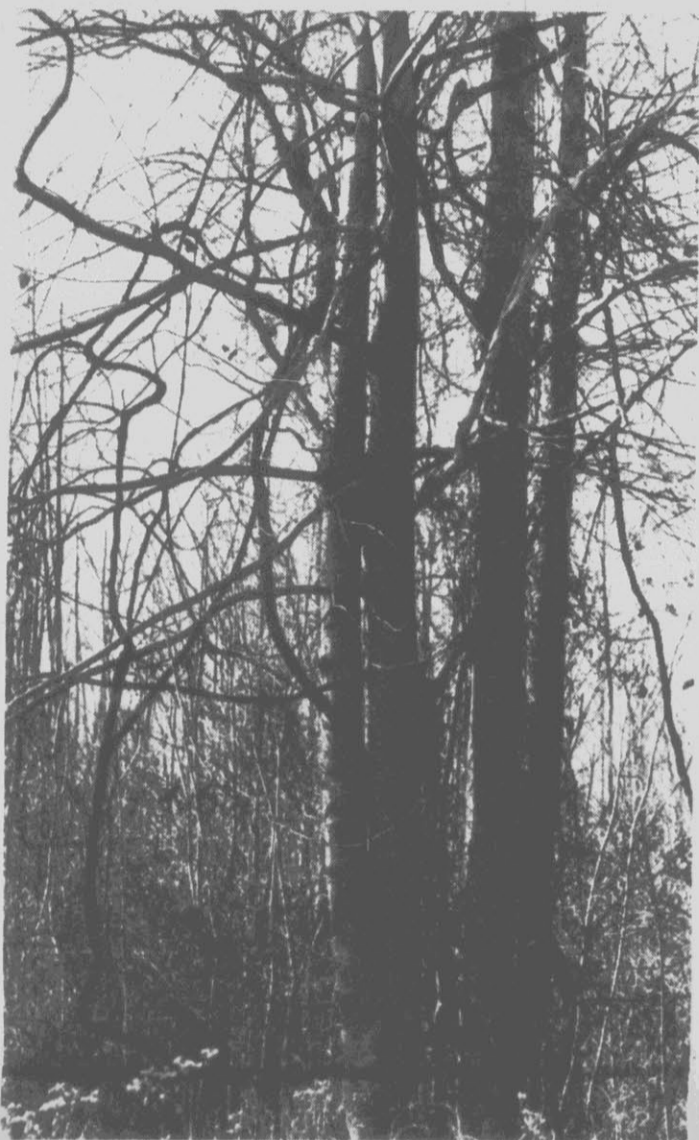

"I listened, but I began to realize that what we were doing wasn't keeping drugs out of North Carolina," he said. "We weren't able to stop it.

Morgan and Thornburg said the success of the policy depends on how prosecutors and judges react to it.

"If judges and prosecuting attorneys take a hard line, it will be extremely important," Thornburg said.

For a first offender carrying a small amount of marijuana, the maximum penalty would be a $100 fine. Second offenders could face a prison term of up to two years. For misdemeanor possession of cocaine, a first offender could be sentenced to up to two years in jail and pay a fine set by the court.

Martin Faces Tough Chore In Financing Road Repairs

RALEIGH (AP) — If Republican Gov. Jim Martin proposes an increase in the state's gasoline tax to pay for highway construction, he may run up against tough opposition even in his own party, one lawmaker says.

"When the Republican legislators have been together, the opposition to a gas tax has been immense," Rep. Ray Warren, R-Mecklenburg, said. "There is some real anger that it has even been considered."

Warren said many GOP lawmakers were elected on a platform of cutting or holding down taxes.

"If Martin really wanted it, he could get a majority of Republicans to go along," he said. "But he would really have to push."

At a ceremony Wednesday, Martin will receive a copy of the North Carolina Transportation Task Force's report, which says the state needs at least $200 million more each year for roads. Appointed by Martin in response to growing traffic congestion in North Carolina cities, the task force has held several hearings across the state.

Martin has said it would take 18 years to meet rural road needs at current funding levels and nearly 60 years to meet urban highway needs.

Although the panel did not recommend how to raise more money for roads, it laid out some options, including boosting the 12 1/4-cent-a-gallon motor fuel tax by 3 to 5 cents a gallon; imposing the 3 percent state sales tax on motor fuel, which is now exempt; and issuing bonds to create a road-building fund from which cities and towns could get interest-free loans.

A 5-cent-a-gallon increase in the motor fuel tax would raise $177 million a year.

Another option cited by the task force was to transfer the financing of the state Highway Patrol from the Highway Fund to the General Fund. But Democratic lawmakers have promised to resist attempts to shift revenues from the General Fund to the Highway Fund.

"The Democrats are playing a dangerous game that might backfire on them," Warren said. "The leadership seems to be ruling out all other alternatives to force the governor to raise the gas tax."

Democrats say they are simply trying to keep Martin from making them responsible for an unpopular tax increase.

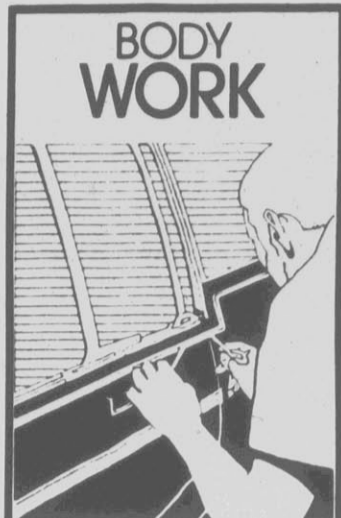

"If the governor comes forth with a realistic proposal ... I think the Legislature would be responsible and would deal with it in a non-political way," said Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan. "But they are not going to let the Republicans shunt responsibility on this to the Democrats just so they can take political advantage of it."

Democratic House Speaker Liston Ramsey added, "If he doesn't propose it, there won't be any."

Martin said he would make his decision in April, but some administration officials said he appeared to be leaning against a tax increase.

"My best guess is he would be opposed to any increase in taxes unless he was absolutely convinced that those big needs can't be met" any other way, said C.C. Cameron, state budget director.

Parks Need New Revenue Source

RALEIGH (AP) — A new source of revenue, such as a new fee or tax, is needed to support North Carolina's park system and give a new facelift to its dilapidated facilities, a state parks official says.

"As I see things, the state has never bought the idea of having a state park system," William W. Davis, director of the state Parks and Recreation System, said in a recent interview. "The people have come to (state officials) and said, 'Here's some land. We want you to preserve it, protect it and manage it.'"

"They said, 'Fine, we'll take it.' But they've never come across with the bucks to be able to even preserve and protect it," he said.

Almost half the state's parkland has been donated, he said. Some of those areas have never been developed, and many of the developed areas badly need repair.

Davis estimated it will cost almost $20 million to make the needed repairs.

He pointed to the sewer and water systems at Mount Mitchell State Park, which have been condemned within the past two years.

"To provide safe drinking water for the visitors (last summer) we had to borrow from the Army National Guard these big water buffaloes," he said. "You drive them to the Blue Ridge Parkway and hook them up to a fire hydrant and take the water and truck it up the mountain."

The year before, sewage ran down the side of the mountain, Davis said.

Those problems have been fixed, but he cited other problems that persist because of a lack of money.

Among other problem areas in the park system are sagging buildings at Fort Macon and Hanging Rock parks, a collapsing bulkhead at Hammocks Beach and troublesome water and sewer systems at Kerr Lake, he said.

And at Carolina Beach, the only marina in the state parks system, is silted to the point that people can't their boats in and out.

"We don't have the money to dredge the marina ... and the docks are broken," Davis said, adding that a sign had been posted warning people that it was dangerous to walk on the docks.

Davis cited a study by the National Association of State Park Directors that, for the year ending June 30, compared funding levels among the states. North Carolina's parks received only seven one-hundredths of 1 percent of the state budget. Parks in only seven other states received smaller shares of their state budgets, he said.

How much could a $16 billion bank care about your $1000 deposit?

Realistically, how much could your deposit be worth to one of the megabanks—all advertising claims aside? After all, your $1000 deposit is less than one sixteen millionth of their deposits.

On the other hand, you could deposit your money in one of First Federal's federally-insured accounts. We're especially interested in attracting your deposits for two good reasons. First, while our assets are over $112 million, your deposits with us are a much larger proportion of our deposit base. And second, since we only operate offices in Pitt County, your continued patronage is our main source of retail funds. So, we're quite serious when we say we want and appreciate your business at First Federal.

The real proof that we really care about your deposits at First Federal is the high rates we pay in interest. Compare. You'll find that our investments will generally yield higher rates than the big banks. And your deposits at First Federal are safe, insured to $100,000 with the FSLIC.

When you add it all up, a bigger bank isn't necessarily a better place for your investments. It's only, well, bigger.

HOGS: Trend is $1 lower at N.C. buying stations. Kinston, Spivey's Corner, Murfreesboro, Siler City and Robersonville, 40.50; Clinton, Fayetteville, Dunn, Pink Hill, Pine Level, Chadbourne, Ayden, Laurinburg and Benson 40.25; Wilson 40.50; Rowland 40.50. Sows: (500 pounds up) Fayetteville 37.00; Whiteville 34.00; Wallace 38.00; Spivey's Corner 38.00; Rowland 38.00.

BROILERS: The North Carolina job dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 47.25 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2 1/2 to 3 pounds birds. 98 percent of the loads offered have been confirmed with a final weighted average of 47.68 cents job dock or equivalent. The market is steady and the live supply is adequate for a moderate demand. Average weights desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina Monday was 1,628,000, compared to 1,863,000 last Monday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn steady to 3 cents higher at mostly 2.64-2.76 in East and mostly 2.78-2.81 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans mostly unchanged at mostly 5.32-5.47 in East and mostly 5.27-5.30 in the Piedmont; wheat mostly 3.11-3.38; (new crop wheat 2.18-2.51; new crop corn 1.97-2.31; new crop soybeans 4.81-5.07).

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market dropped sharply today, giving back some of last week's record gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 21.43 points to 1,771.31 in the first hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 3 to 1 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said many investors scrambled to cash in on the market's recent gains today, reasoning that stock prices had risen too far, too fast in last week's upsurge.

Some observers also questioned whether a letdown might be coming after the steady flow of favorable news reaching Wall Street of late.

Brokers also noted uncertainty over the oil price outlook, with Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries ministers meeting in Geneva to try to reach an agreement to allocate production and stabilize the world market.

Among actively traded blue chips, American Telephone & Telegraph dropped 1/4 to 23 3/4; International Business Machines fell 1/2 to 149 3/4, and Sears Roebuck was down 1/2 at 47 1/2.

Salvage Ship Attempts To Hoist Debris Linked To Shuttle Booster

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A salvage ship today began hoisting from the ocean floor a 500-pound chunk of debris that could be vital to the investigation into the explosion of space shuttle Challenger.

The Stena Workhorse began the retrieval after a robot submersible, the Gemini, attached lift lines to the piece.

It is a 4-by-5-foot section that might be from the right solid rocket booster, which is the chief suspect in the accident that killed seven astronauts on Jan. 28.

Photographs show the chunk contains part of the external tank attachment ring. And if it is the right-hand rocket, that ring was just 19 inches from the joint between segments where the explosion sequence is believed to have started.

The Stena Workhorse, which has a lifting capability of 100 tons, already has one large piece of a rocket booster on board. It is a 6-by-18-foot chunk weighing 3,250 pounds that was plucked from a depth of 400 feet Sunday 28 miles northeast of here.

After that recovery, the ship moved four miles farther north where the smaller piece rested in 650 feet of water.

"We still don't know if they are parts of the left or right SRB," said Lt. Cmdr. Deborah Burnette, spokeswoman for the Navy search and salvage operation. She reported today that recovery conditions were excellent, with calm seas and unlimited visibility.

Investigators have concentrated on a joint between the bottom two segments of the right booster. Launch photographs show a puff of black smoke in the area of the joint on lift-off and a plume of flame spewing from the same area 58 seconds later, 15 seconds before the explosion.

Theories to explain a possible joint failure include that cold weather robbed synthetic rubber O-ring seals of their resiliency, that the seals were damaged when the segments were mated or that they were improperly manufactured.

Conference Set On Small Towns

ECU News Bureau
Revitalization of small communities will be the focus of a conference May 15-16 at East Carolina University.

"Small Town-Downtown: The Big Challenge" will provide a forum for intensive discussion of the issues facing small communities interested in revitalization.

Members of downtown committees, planners, architects, business leaders, chamber of commerce representatives, county and municipal elected officials are expected to attend. Sponsored by the ECU Regional Development Institute in cooperation with the Division of Continuing Education, the conference will be held in the auditorium of the Brody Medical Sciences Building.

Speakers will include Dr. Willard Phillips of the U.S. Department of Agriculture; Dr. Paul Delary of the University of Georgia Center for Community Education; Mayor Joan Saliba of Hartwell, Ga.; John Cartwright, program manager of commercial assistance for the Tennessee Valley Authority, and Dr. Jesse White, executive director for the Southern Growth Policies Board.

In addition, other presentations will be made by Tom Richter of Washington, N.C., for the N.C. Department of Natural Resources; Rodney Swink of Raleigh for N.C. Mainstreet; Jack Steelman, Rocky Mount, for the N.C. Downtown Association, and Watson Brown, Tarboro, a city planner and architect.

A panel consisting of ECU faculty members will discuss university assistance to small towns considering revitalization that cannot afford to hire a planner or professional consultant.

A registration fee for the conference includes breakfast, lunch and evening social. For more information contact the ECU Regional Development Institute at 757-6650.

Mitterrand can accept the resignation immediately and appoint a new premier, or ask Fabius to stay on until a replacement is appointed.

According to official figures, Chirac's party won 150 seats and its ally, the centrist Union for French Democracy, won 127. Allied minor parties won 14 seats, and an independent extreme right group won one seat.

Socialists won 198 seats and their close allies the Left Radical Party won seven. Communists won 35 seats and candidates of minor leftist parties won 10.

"The French have chosen a new majority. They have, therefore, chosen a new politic," said a joint statement by Chirac's party and the Union for French Democracy.

"This new politic can only be applied by a premier and government (prepared) to put into action, without compromise or concessions, the objectives of the RPR-UDF platform," the statement said. It asked that the president choose a prime minister approved by the conservative alliance.

French commentators said the statement appeared to be an attempt to block Mitterrand from naming as premier anyone other than Chirac or Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the former president and leader of the Union for French Democracy.

trative, or how he stands on a balanced budget or aiding the Nicaraguan contras.

Recognizing this, the Mecklenburg County commissioner will begin this week a mountain-to-coast swing designed to get publicity for his environmental platform, which emphasizes recycling hazardous wastes and dealing with acid rain and air pollution.

Odom acknowledges his strategy is a gamble, based on the hope that voters worried about nuclear wastes being burned or buried in North Carolina will get excited about what traditionally has not been a big statewide issue.

Specific issues have gotten more attention in the Republican campaign, thanks to the efforts of David Funderburk and the National Congressional Club to portray Rep. Jim Broyhill as less than conservative. They have singled out Broyhill's votes on defense spending, "Tip O'Neill's liberal budget," the Martin Luther King Jr. memorial holiday, and abortion.

But Broyhill, who even Funderburk concedes is the front-runner, has refused to return his opponent's fire, except to complain that his record is being distorted.

Broyhill has declined challenges to debate Funderburk, has traveled extensively to solidify his grassroots organization, and has talked mostly about his 24 years in Congress. His discussions of issues have been general statements of support for textiles, President Reagan and traditional conservatism.

"While others might fight for headlines, I've been fighting for North Carolina," he says in one TV commercial.

Thad Beyle, political science professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, says the GOP primary campaign is both issue- and personality-oriented. But he says an even bigger factor is the underlying struggle for supremacy between the New Right and traditional wings of the state Republican Party.

"It's a fascinating election (on both sides), so different from what we went through in 1984," Beyle said. But so far, he said, the majority of the electorate does not appear excited about it.

"It could very well be that a lot of people who normally get energized by this time spent a lot of money and energy in 1984 ... are just worn out," he said.

Thefts Reported

Greenville police said 10 thefts were reported to the department over the weekend.

Officer M.A. Jordan said two knives and two jars of pennies were taken from a mobile home at 1300 Drum Ave. in an incident reported at 3:12 a.m. Saturday, while Officer R.G. Mendenhall said four dresses valued at $200 were taken from J.C. Penney Co. at The Plaza in an incident reported at 8:16 p.m. Saturday and a pizza was taken from a Domino's delivery man at the Heritage Inn on Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 11:06 p.m. Sunday.

Officer J.G. Jenkins said a television set was taken from 1700 Evans St. in an incident reported at 6:12 a.m. Sunday, while Officer W.C. Widener said a box of change was taken from Saad's Shoe Shop at 113 Grande Ave. in a break-in reported at 12:40 p.m.

Officer R.S. Sawyer said clothes valued at $500 were taken from washing machines at the Wash House on 14th Street in two incidents, both reported at 3:27 p.m., while Officer C.M. Credle said $150 in cash was taken from 101 Cypress Gardens in an incident reported at 5:20 p.m.

Officer J.G. Btridges said $10 in pennies and a flashlight were taken from 206 Kings Arms Apartments in a break-in reported at 5:57 p.m., while Officer C.A. In Double Overtime

State Downs Ark-Little Rock

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A club that was once considered a team of destiny and another that hopes it will be this year's team of destiny have emerged from the NCAA Midwest Regional at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome.

North Carolina State, which shocked the nation in 1983 when it won the national title; and Iowa State, which shocked No. 5 Michigan on Sunday, advanced to Kansas City, Mo., where they will meet Friday.

On Sunday, N.C. State, 20-12, outlasted Arkansas-Little Rock 80-66 in double overtime and Iowa State, 21-10, edged the Wolverines 72-69.

Last year at this time, a highly touted Michigan team was wondering why it lost to an inferior Villanova team; that inferior Villanova team went on to win the NCAA crown.

Can Iowa State also use a victory over Michigan as a springboard to greater heights?

"I don't believe in that," Cyclones Coach Johnny Orr said, dismissing the "team of destiny" notion — at least for now. "If we win the next game and the next game, then I'll let you know..."

With more efforts like those he received from Jeff Grayer, Ron Virgil and Jeff Hornacek, one never knows. Grayer led the Cyclones with 16 points, Virgil added 14, and Hornacek — who won Friday's first-round game over Miami of Ohio with a 22-footer at the overtime buzzer — played a superb floor game.

Michigan Coach Bill Frieder was obviously disappointed by the defeat, although he said he was not disappointed with his team's season.

"If you can't enjoy a season where you win the Big Ten championship and 28 games," he said, "you better get out of the business."

"If I had to lose," he added, "I couldn't lose to a better guy. I love Johnny Orr."

Frieder was Orr's assistant in 1976, when Orr coached Michigan to a Final Four appearance.

Sair Orr: "It has to be my biggest victory. Ever. I took a program that couldn't do anything six years ago. Everyone thought I was crazy ... when I left Michigan."

Anyone who would have thought unknown Arkansas-Little Rock would even be in the position to challenge for a spot in the "Sweet Sixteen" may have been considered crazy.

But if Ken Worthy would have made his second free throw with 14 seconds left in regulation, it might have been Little Rock going to Kansas City.

"We were very fortunate to win," said Wolfpack Coach Jimmy Valvano, who got 23 points after halftime from Ron Bolton, including 12 in the two overtimes. "If that kid makes the free throw, we lose."

Six-foot-11 man-child Chris Washburn also played a key role in the Wolfpack's triumph. Not only was he an offensive force — especially in the first half, when he scored 16 of his 22 points — but Valvano's switch of Washburn to the wing in N.C. State's zone defense helped disrupt UALR's attack.

"They put Washburn on Jackson's side," Trojans Coach Mike Newell said in reference to UALR's Myron Jackson, who scored 15 points in the first half but none in the second. "That put him out farther than he usually shoots the ball. We got to the point where size was the difference in the game; we were just worn down at the end."

Meanwhile, there seems no way to wear down the Wolfpack, who also came from behind to defeat Iowa in the first round.

"We got down by five in the first overtime," the hoarse Valvano croaked, "and I said, 'Yeah, we got 'em where we want 'em,' because we're so used to being behind."

Pirates Down Virginia, 9-5, As Johnson Goes The Distance

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina's Winfred Johnson continued his pursuit of NCAA history Sunday as he hurled the Pirates to a 9-5 baseball victory over the University of Virginia.

Johnson went the distance, giving up 12 hits, and admitted he didn't have all that great a day. But he laid much of the credit at the feet of the Virginia batters.

"The balls they hit were not all that bad," he said. "They're a good hitting club. I was shaky for a couple of innings there, but as the game went along, I mixed it up more and I think I did a better job. But the balls they hit were not so much mistakes in pitching as it was just good hitting on their part."

The bulk of the damage against the senior righthander came early, as he gave up four runs in the first three innings. After that, however, he allowed only one and scattered just four hits.

Johnson now has 27 career victories to go with his 55 career home runs as he attempts to become the first NCAA Division I player to win 30 games and hit 60 home runs.

"I don't feel any pressure," Johnson said. "I'm just trying to see the ball and hit it and win."

And Johnson doesn't feel that the Pirate win streak — a record-setting 12 in a row — is putting pressure on him and his teammate either. "We're not waiting for it to stop. I think one game last week, we were kind of sitting on the lead, playing not to lose, and we realized that and we've been playing to win since then."

Meanwhile, Johnson and his teammates were banging out 13 hits of their own off two Virginia hurlers, led by Mike Sullivan's two doubles and a single. Sullivan scored three runs and drove in one.

"We're all hitting the ball better," Sullivan said. "(Assistant) Coach (Billy) Best deserves the credit for that. He got us out early this spring and worked us hard and it's paying off. Everything I hit today was off-speed, and I think he's just a great hitting coach. He's done a lot for the program."

Best should know how. He's second in school history in at-bats, hits, third in runs batted in and leads in runs scored.

"We beat the best club we've played to date," Head Coach Gary Overton said. "I think Winfred summed up his performance well. He spotted the ball well against a good hitting club. And I think that (Virginia's talent) was the reason for the hitting."

"One of the things that impressed me, however, was that when they scored, we answered. And we kept manufacturing runs and gradually put the game away," Overton added.

It was a game that saw every one to come to the plate — nine batters for Virginia and 10 for East Carolina — get at least one hit.

Virginia struck first, getting a run in the second. With two away, Kevin McDonald doubled down the left field line, scoring on a hit to left by Mickey Fugua.

East Carolina struck right back for four in the bottom of the inning. With one away, Sullivan singled and Jay McGraw beat out an infield shot off the third-baseman's outstretched glove. Steve Sides reached on a fielder's choice that got McGraw at second and Mark Cockrell walked, loading the bases.

Jim Riley then drilled one through the gap into left, scoring both Sullivan and Sides, and an error on the play allowed both Cockrell and Riley to advance a base. Mont Carter followed with a single to left, driving in both baserunners for a 4-1 lead.

The Cavaliers came swiftly back to push over three in the top of the third. It was an inning that could have been worse for the Pirates but for a good move by Johnson.

David Guy led off with a single, but Johnson picked him off first. Keith Kowalski followed with a single to right and Mike Basara also got a hit to right. Bill Narleski reached on a fielder's choice that nailed Basara, and Kent Savedge followed with a three-run homer to left, tying it at 4-4.

Again, the Pirates came right back to push over three more for a 7-4 edge. With one away, Chris Bradberry reached on an error and stole second. He scored on Johnson's double to left. Courtesy runner David Ritchie came home when Sullivan doubled to right, and a sacrifice moved Sullivan to third. Sides walked and Cockrell singled to drive in Sullivan.

The Pirates added one in the sixth. Riley reached on an error and courtesy runner Robert Lanstong advanced on a wild pitch. Ritchie, batting for Carter, singled to right to score Lanstong.

The final Pirate run scored in the seventh. Sullivan doubled to center and was sacrificed up. He scored on Cockrell's second hit of the day.

Virginia picked up its last run in the eighth. Basara doubled to open the frame and Narleski got a single to center. His hit — he was the last Cavalier without one — kept up a hitting streak that now extends to 30 straight games.

Basara, moving to third on the hit, scored on a sacrifice fly by Savedge. Basara led the Cavalier hitting with three while Dave Horton collected a pair.

The loss dropped the Cavs to 8-6 on the year, while the Pirates are now 12-0.

East Carolina takes today off, then returns to action on Tuesday hosting Pittsburgh-Bradford in a 1 p.m. doubleheader. The two teams meet in a single game on Wednesday at 3 p.m.

ECU returns to Colonial Athletic Association action on Saturday, hosting Richmond in a 1 p.m. doubleheader.

Lady Pirates Take Pair From E. Connecticut St.

East Carolina swept a doubleheader in Eastern Connecticut St., 4-2, 8-2, in Women's Softball Action on Sunday.

The two wins gives the Lady Pirates a 13-1 record on the season.

In the first game, ECU broke a 2-2 in the bottom of the fourth inning when Eva Hughes walked, stole second, and was singled home by Sandy Kee to make it 3-2.

The Lady Pirates added an insurance run in the bottom of the sixth when Linda Barrett's sacrifice fly brought home Jeannie Murray from third. Murray had walked and advanced to third on two passed balls.

Stacy Boyette got the win. Her record is 6-0.

In the second game, ECU broke open the contest with a four-run second inning.

Leading 1-0, the Lady Pirates scored on an RBI single by Sandy Key and a run-scoring double by Mona Jackson. The third run of the inning was forced home on a bases-loaded walk, and the fourth run crossed the plate on a passed ball.

Robin Graves, who allowed just one hit, picked up the win on the mound. It marked her sixth win in seven decisions.

The Lady Pirates host Virginia Commonwealth in a doubleheader on Tuesday at 2 p.m.

Cavs Fire Karl In His Second Year

CLEVELAND (AP) — At a time when George Karl thought he would be leading the Cleveland Cavaliers into the NBA playoffs, the second-year coach is suddenly unemployed.

Karl was dismissed as coach of the Cavaliers, the day after Cleveland lost 102-100 at home Saturday night to the New Jersey Nets.

Cleveland has lost three straight games and five of the last six, but still is the leading contender for the final playoff spot in the NBA Eastern Conference.

Karl, 34, guided the Cavaliers to a 25-42 record so far this season.

Gene Littles, an assistant coach under Karl, takes over the duties on an interim basis for the remainder of this season. Littles, 42, is in his fourth year as a Cavaliers' assistant. He previously was an assistant for three years with the Utah Jazz.

Cavaliers General Manager Harry Weltman, in making the announcement Sunday, said Karl was told last Monday that his contract would not be renewed after this season ended. On Thursday of last week, Karl interviewed for a basketball coaching position at the University of Pittsburgh.

"In view of the fact that he is actively interviewing for another position, we think it is in our mutual best interests to release Coach Karl from any further obligation to the Cavs in the current season," Weltman said. "This will permit Coach Karl to turn his full attention to his current efforts to secure a new position and will allow the Cavs to finish the season with undivided attention to the task of gaining a position in the playoffs."

SEC, ACC Place Four Apiece In Final 16

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The Big East has gone south — Southeast, actually — and there will be a fresh four in the NCAA's Final Four, with the Southeastern Conference joining the tradition-rich Atlantic Coast Conference by placing a quartet of teams in basketball's Sweet Sixteen.

Sunday was not a day to be in the Top Ten as fourth-ranked St. John's was stunned by Auburn (SEC) 81-65; No. 5 Michigan lost to its old coach Johnny Orr and his new Iowa State team 72-69; and ninth-ranked Syracuse discovered that home isn't always sweet, disappointing a Carrier Dome crowd of 21,713 by dropping a 97-85 decision to No. 17 Navy.

Cleveland State, one of the tournament's two Cinderella teams, stayed in the NCAA ball with a 75-69 triumph over St. Joseph's while Arkansas-Little Rock, a first-round conqueror of No. 10 Notre Dame, bowed out by losing to North Carolina State (ACC) 80-66 in double overtime after leading 61-56 in the first extra session.

Auburn's victory over St. John's sent the Tigers to the West Regional in Houston for a Thursday night game against No. 11 Nevada-Las Vegas, which held off Maryland 70-64. The other game in Houston will match seventh-ranked Louisville against No. 8 North Carolina (ACC). On Saturday, Louisville downed No. 14 Bradley 82-68 and North Carolina trimmed Alabama-Birmingham 77-59.

Thursday's Southeast Regional at Atlanta pairs third-ranked Kentucky (SEC), a 71-64 winner over Western Kentucky, and Alabama (SEC), which nipped No. 19 Illinois 58-56 on Terry Coner's last-second shot. The other game matches No. 6 Georgia Tech (ACC) and LSU (SEC). On Saturday, Tech eliminated defending champion Villanova 66-61 and LSU outlasted No. 12 Memphis State 83-81.

Friday night, the East Regional at East Rutherford, N.J., sends No. 1 Duke (ACC) against DePaul and Cleveland State against Navy. On Saturday, Duke trounced Old Dominion 89-61 and DePaul defeated Oklahoma 74-69.

In Friday's Midwest Regional at Kansas City, No. 2 Kansas goes against No. 18 Michigan State and North Carolina State (ACC) meets Iowa State. On Saturday, Kansas drubbed Temple 71-46 and Michigan State ousted No. 13 Georgetown 80-68.

St. John's became the final member of last year's Final Four — Villanova, Georgetown and Memphis State were the others — to bite the dust. The Redmen joined Big East colleagues Syracuse, Villanova and Georgetown on the sidelines when Auburn thrashed them behind senior Chuck Person's 27 points and 15 rebounds.

"As I stated coming in, I was very disappointed at not making any All-American teams," the 6-foot-8 forward said after outscoring All-American Walter Berry 27-20. "It was very emotional for me. I don't think there's any doubt now I can play with best. I'm not bragging, but that's the way I feel."

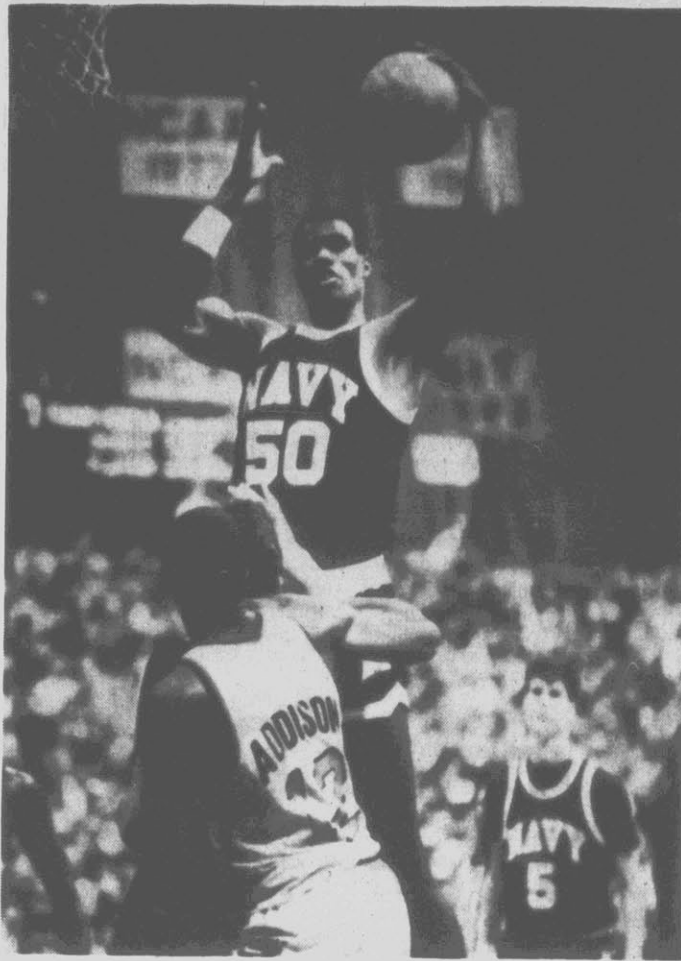

Auburn built a 44-32 halftime lead. The heavier Tigers constantly got second and third shots on offense and used their defensive rebounding to trigger numerous fast breaks.

"They looked much more physical than us," St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca said. "We looked anemic. Nobody belted us like that, and we played them all. They were completely in charge, completely in charge."

"Coming into the game, we felt like we could run on them because they only play five guys," Person said. "I don't look at this as an upset. I think we proved to everyone there's not only football in Alabama."

embarrassed Syracuse on its home court, where the Midshipmen lost 89-67 in December. Robinson, a 6-foot-11 junior, only a 61 percent free-throw shooter, made 21 of 27 from the line — 16 of 19 in the second half — as Syracuse center Rony Seikaly and his backup both fouled out. Navy made only 28 field goals but converted 41 of 52 from the foul line.

Navy snapped a 39-39 tie and broke the game open with an 18-7 run, Robinson scoring 14 points during the spree. Vernon Butler, who finished with 23 points, converted a three-point play to put the Midshipmen up 70-53 with 6:25 remaining. Syracuse's Dwayne Washington scored 24 of his 28 points in the second half, most of them after Navy took a comfortable lead.

"What made the win good was that Robinson made his free throws," said Navy Coach Paul Evans. "He's been inconsistent with them, but he's made them when we had to have them."

But Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim insisted that: "Free throws were not a factor. We had to foul. The key to the game was Butler. We contained him earlier this season, but with Robinson going the way he was, we had to pay too much attention to him."

Cleveland St. 75, St. Joseph's 69
Guard Ken "Mouse" McFadden scored 23 points and had a 70-foot assist late in the game as the Vikings, first-round winners over Indiana, recorded their 14th straight triumph. Cleveland State also got 17 points from Clinton Ransey and 16 from Clinton Smith, whose slam-dunk off McFadden's long pass with one minute left put the game out of reach at 71-59. St. Joseph's was led by Wayne Williams' 25 points.

McFadden never played high school ball and was painting houses and working for his high-school diploma when Cleveland State Coach Kevin Mackey found him playing Amateur Athletic Union games in New York City.

"He's got all of New York City in him — the shake and bake," Mackey said.

SOUTHEAST
Kentucky 71, Western Kentucky 64
All-American Kenny Walker scored 32 points on 11-for-11 shooting and Kentucky survived a late charge for its 13th consecutive victory. The Wildcats' 54-38 lead dwindled to 63-59 on Fred Tisdale's layup with 3:55 to play. Western Kentucky, getting only its second shot ever at its intrastate neighbor, could never get closer. Kannard Johnson led Western with 20 points.

"Don't give me all the credit," said Walker. "Roger Harden and the other guys were able to deliver the ball to me for those points."

Alabama 58, Illinois 56
Coner drilled a 12-footer from just inside the free-throw line with one second remaining after Alabama had blown a 13-point first-half lead. Coner got his chance when Buck Johnson blocked a shot by Illinois' Efreem

Winters with 26 seconds to play. Alabama called a timeout with 19 seconds to play and Coner held the ball near midcourt until starting his move with nine seconds left, taking Illinois defensive ace Bruce Douglas into the lane before hitting the game-winner.

"I think the officials know they missed the traveling violation," Henson said. "No question (that he walked). There's no doubt about it."

Henson's didn't belittle Coner's a driving jumper in the lane that tied the score with 56 seconds left.

MIDWEST

Iowa State 72, Michigan 69
Jeff Grayer scored 16 points and Ron Virgil added 14 as Iowa State built an 11-point lead and held off a second-half Michigan rally. The triumph was a sweet one for Orr, who coached Michigan to a Final Four appearance in 1976 when current Wolverine Coach Bill Frieder was his assistant.

"It has to be my biggest victory — ever," said Orr. "I took a program (Iowa State) that didn't do anything six years ago. Everyone thought I was crazy. I feel sorry for Bill. I would have rather not played him."

"If I had to lose, I couldn't lose to a better guy," said Frieder. "I love Johnny Orr."

Iowa State led 46-35 with 16:17 to play but Roy Tarpley scored 14 of his 25 points in the last 16 minutes to pull Michigan within one point on two occasions. Elmer Robinson's dunk and six free throws down the stretch clinched the victory.

Shepherd Outduels Earnhardt To Capture Motorcraft 500

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — Tears that proclaimed Morgan Shepherd's joy at winning almost were his undoing.

Shepherd, a 44-year-old driver from Conover, N.C., kept Dale Earnhardt at bay in a bumper-to-bumper duel over the last four laps Sunday to win the Motorcraft 500 NASCAR stock car race at Atlanta International Raceway.

"It's been a long time since 1981 when I won my first (Winston Cup) race," Shepherd said. "I was just trying not to cry. I knew it was getting near the end and that I had to keep control or I was going to lose it. But I nearly had tears in my eyes because the car was working so good."

When he pulled into Victory Lane after his Buick LeSabre beat Earnhardt's Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS across the finish line by about one car-length, Shepherd let his emotions go.

Interviewed on national television by ABC, which broadcast the race live, Shepherd, his voice breaking with emotion and sobs, said, "It's been a long time coming. I can't hardly talk."

Shepherd's racing career has been one of ups and downs, but mostly downs. He ran his first NASCAR stock car event in 1970 and has run cars for 19 different owners in a total of 130 races since. His only previous victory came 112 races ago in the spring, 1981 event at Martinsville, Va.

And that victory did little to move him up the ladder.

"It's been three years since I've had a solid ride," he said. "A lot of guys can't afford a guy like me because I can't bring a solid sponsor with me. All I've got is my talent."

This year, Shepherd took over the seat occupied in recent years by Ron Bouchard on the team operated by Connecticut businessman Jack Beebe.

There is no sponsor on the side panels of the car, only the name of Beebe's horse farm, Race Hill Farm.

"We've been talking with some people right along (about sponsorship)," said Shepherd, who is scheduled only to drive 14 or 15 superspeedways this season. "Maybe this will help something along."

Earnhardt, who dominated early in the race after capturing the pole position with a track qualifying record, led four times for 167 laps in the 328-lap race on the 1.522-mile oval.

"Something happened to the engine about halfway in the race," explained Earnhardt. "We lost some power. Man, I was doing everything I could to catch him there at the end. There was just no way."

Shepherd said he had handling problems through much of the race, but his team finally found the right tire combination to go with the chassis setup during a caution period pit stop on lap 263.

"It took us most of the day to get it figured out, but this is a handling track and that's what won it for us," Shepherd noted.

Terry Labonte's Oldsmobile Delta 88 was third, followed by the Chevrolet of Darrell Waltrip and the Ford Thunderbird of defending champion Bill Elliott.

Waltrip hung onto the Winston Cup point lead with 655 points, followed by Labonte at 643, Earnhardt 628 and Geoff Bodine 574.

Elliott, who still is looking for his first victory of 1986 after winning 11 times last season, was running a strong second when the ninth and final caution flag came out just 10 laps from the end.

All the leaders pitted for gasoline and at least two tires and Elliott lost any shot at the victory when a lug nut stuck and forced him to make a second pit stop.

"I drove that car until its tongue was wagging and mine was, too," Elliott said. "But, in the end, there wasn't anything I could do with Morgan."

"If I hadn't gone in for the stop, probably Morgan wouldn't have either. So we just had to gamble. It was the only way, and it turned out to be a bad gamble."

Shepherd averaged 132.126 mph on the way to earning $62,350, by far the biggest pay day of his driving career.

The victory gave Beebe his second triumph as a car owner, the first coming at Talladega, Ala., in August of 1981 when Bouchard won. It also was the first victory for Buick since Bobby Allison took the May, 1984 World 600 at Charlotte, N.C.

Davidson Crushes ECU In Ladies' Tennis, 9-0

Davidson College romped to a 9-0 tennis victory over East Carolina's Lady Pirates Sunday.

The Pirates were able to extend the Lady Wildcats only twice, taking them to three sets once each in the singles and doubles.

"Davidson is a Division III power and played a fine match," Coach Pat Sherman said. "Lisa Eichholz, Amy Ziemer and Ty Myers all played well in their matches after getting off to slow starts in the first set."

"We still have a lot of hard work to do and lots of improvement to make."

The Pirates are now 1-2 on the spr-

'Hill Street Blues' Revives But Future Still Uncertain

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Death and near-death may have brought "Hill Street Blues" back to life, which raises a new set of complications as the NBC series winds down its sixth season.

In episodes last month, when Capt. Frank Furillo (Daniel J. Travanti) barely survived a shooting and Joe Coffey (Ed Marinaro) didn't, the award-winning cop series achieved its highest ratings in two years.

Those ratings reflect more than just the hyped numbers that TV often extracts with promotable plot twists about birth, death and weddings. Larger audiences also attest to the revitalization of a show that had grown unwieldy and formula-ridden last season.

Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment, said it's still too early to say whether "Hill Street" will return next fall for its seventh season. But he's pleased with the show's changes, particularly the addition of the tacky anti-hero, Lt. Norman Buntz, played by Dennis Franz.

"I think he's sensational," Tartikoff said. "If they can come up with two more characters like that, I think they can really bring the show up."

Executive producer David Milch said several characters were being developed "that I think will be terrific in a 'Hill Street' environment or another environment. The question is where to put them and devote our imaginative attentions."

It's a real Catch-22. What might give "Hill Street" greater vitality, if it gets renewed for 1988-89, would be new characters playing off old favorites. But since standard contracts tie actors to a series only for seven years, the show could fall apart or prove too costly to continue after next season.

"All bets would be off then," Milch said, who noted that Travanti and Veronica Hamel, who plays Joyce Davenport, Furillo's wife, have said they want to move on to other acting roles. He added that he didn't expect all the current cast to return next season, "but I haven't gotten around to considering that."

What Milch and co-executive producer Jeffrey Lewis are considering is whether any new characters they create would be wasted in a "Hill Street" lame-duck season. The other dynamic, though, is that these new characters in search of a series could find their own spinoff via a "Hill Street" showcase.

One of the new characters, who was introduced last week, gets special attention this Thursday. She's a lesbian cop who becomes the new partner for Lucy Bates (Betty Thomas). Lindsay Crouse plays the role. "We want to do more with women," Milch said.

A further complication for Miss Crouse's character is her availability. Milch noted that Miss Crouse, who is married to playwright David Mamet, is interested in doing theater work.

Nevertheless, dialogue of any sort about the future is a positive sign for this most acclaimed drama series. Last spring, after the dismissal of creator and executive producer Steven Bochco, "Hill Street" was on the critical list.

"I think we did OK," Milch said. "There were some doubts, but you can't let them paralyze you. You have all sorts of ambivalences and uncertainties but you keep them in a room. Sometimes at 3 in the morning, you go up, open the door and wave to them. But then you close the door and go on."

The producers effectively walked a tightrope between change and allegiance to the show's glorious past. They experimented with new storytelling methods. One show occurred entirely at night, another took Furillo and his wife back to his roots. In the riveting Furillo-gets-shot episode, the origins of the Furillo-Davenport relationship were explored through flashbacks.

Unlike other years when Bochco frowned on publicizing plot twists, Furillo's shooting was heavily promoted. "Bochco felt 'Hill Street' worked on its unpredictability," Tartikoff said, "and if you promoted Furillo getting married or getting shot, people would not have the same sensation."

Another change this season was that "Hill Street" managed to deliver more episodes on time, cutting down on the momentum-killing reruns, often from the year before, that have plagued the series.

The producers went to a seven-day shooting schedule, rather than eight. A result was that some shots were not lit as well, Milch said. But for viewers, it was more important that they have seen just three reruns, when they ordinarily would have faced eight. Plans call for no more repeats until all original episodes run out in April.

Nominees For Supporting Actress Honor Diversified

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — From a nun who gives birth to a baby to a Mafia princess, this year's race for the supporting actress Oscar provides great diversity.

This year's nominees are Margaret Avery and Oprah Winfrey, "The Color Purple"; Anjelica Huston, "Prizzi's Honor"; Amy Madigan, "Twice in a Lifetime"; and Meg Tilly, "Agnes of God."

The Academy Award for supporting actress has in the past proved to be a springboard to bigger things for such performers as Goldie Hawn, Meryl Streep, Mary Steenburgen and Jessica Lange. Also, in the past two years, the winners have been predictable: Linda Hunt for "The Year of Living Dangerously" and Peggy Ashcroft for "A Passage to India."

This year, however, the wide range of performances has precluded a real favorite. Any of the five nominees could prove the winner, though Miss Huston appears to have a sentimental edge because of her family connection. Her father, John Huston, has been nominated as best director for "Prizzi's Honor."

Both in person and on the screen, Meg Tilly seems gentle, even wispy, but she is infused with inner strength and an iron will. She survived the loss of a prize role and then campaigned relentlessly for another.

Miss Tilly had been cast as Mozart's wife in the Academy Award-winning "Amadeus" and was preparing to film in Czechoslovakia when she tore her leg ligaments playing soccer. Instead of lamenting the loss of the promising role, she sought the role of the young nun in "Agnes of God."

"I read that Columbia had bought the rights, and it took me three months of phoning to get in to see Norman Jewison, who was producing the film," she recalled. "He said, 'Why are you phoning us? We don't even have a go-ahead for the studio. We don't even have a script. Leave us alone.'"

"I kept bugging them, working on the role in the meantime. It took me nine months to get in and test for it."

Margaret Avery offers another lesson in persistence. She kept telling Steven Spielberg that he couldn't film "The Color Purple" without having her play Shug Avery, the free-living blues singer who changes the life of the heroine, Celie.

"I was attracted to Shug Avery because of her freedom of life, her free spirit, her gutsiness — things that Margaret Avery is not," she said. "The character of Shug Avery gave Celie a sense of self-worth. In real life, Shug gave Margaret Avery a sense of self-worth."

"The qualities that I have only recently acquired — aggressiveness, assertiveness, believing in myself, going for it even when I didn't have the encouragement of others — that kind of relates to my background."

Miss Avery has been acting for 15 years. Her films include "Scott Joplin" with Billy Dee Williams and "Louis Armstrong, Chicago Style" with Louis Armstrong.

In contrast, fellow nominee Oprah Winfrey made her movie debut in "The Color Purple." The hostess of a popular TV talk show, she plays the sharp-tongued Sophia.

After studying speech and drama at Tennessee State University in Nashville, she became a TV reporter and later anchor in Baltimore. She started her nationally syndicated show in Chicago last year.

About the competition between herself and Miss Winfrey, Miss Avery said: "Of course Margaret Avery would like the award. But you know what? Because of where I've been in the business and the 15 years it's taken me of scuffling and working hard even to be recognized, I feel like such a winner already."

For Anjelica Huston, the Oscar nomination held special pleasure. Throughout her lifetime she had been in the shadow of one man — her father, and she has spent the last 10 years in the shadow of another — Jack Nicholson.

As Maerose, the Mafia princess, in "Prizzi's Honor," she found the role of a lifetime, funny and utterly ruthless. "This woman does not spend a lot of time questioning herself, because her motives are so pure. ... She is going to take over the family and become the power behind the throne, the eternal matriarch."

Like all of the contenders for supporting actress, it is Amy Madigan's first Oscar nomination. She was named for her role as the daughter who responds with rage when Gene Hackman abandons his wife (Ellen Burstyn) for a younger woman (Ann-Margret) in "Twice in a Lifetime."

A former student of Lee Strasberg, Miss Madigan has delivered a string of commendable performances in such films as "Lovechild," "Places in the Heart" and "Alamo Bay."

"This is the greatest job in the world as far as I'm concerned," she said. "I'm so fortunate to have it, and anyone can, if they stick with it. I've been doing this a long time, but that makes me strong. I'm real proud of my perseverance."

Imelda Marcos Served As 'Star' For Filipinos To See From Slums

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

Those were the days... Bulletproof powder rooms and a grand piano by the bed. A fat man in diapers jumping from a birthday cake. Three thousand pairs of shoes. Smart-alecky pillows in a Manhattan mansion, crowing "I love champagne, caviar and cash."

Imelda Marcos called it Camelot. "Filipinos want beauty," she said years ago, when husband Ferdinand Marcos ruled without challenge. "I have to look beautiful so that the poor Filipinos will have a star to look at from their slums."

It's only now, with the Marcoses in exile, that Filipinos are gauging the magnitude of that star: the self-indulgence, the excess, the staggering cost.

To look beautiful, Mrs. Marcos had 3,000 pairs of shoes. Sixty-eight pairs of gloves. Five shelves of Gucci handbags. A bed 10 feet wide, with a grand piano and big-screen TV for amusement, and six baskets of imported soap in the bathroom.

There were bills left behind: $1 million for jewelry, $2 million for antiques. A single day's shopping.

"The minute you see these things, you realize that they didn't know the value of money anymore. They just kept buying and buying," said Bea Zobel, a Manila socialite who headed a committee to clean up the abandoned Malacanang Palace.

This wasn't the way Imelda Marcos chose to present herself.

"They call me corrupt, frivolous," she said last November. "I am not at all privileged. Maybe the only privileged thing is my face. And corrupt? God! I would not look like this if I am corrupt. Some ugliness would settle down on my system."

President Corazon Aquino's new government opened the palace to the public last week, giving the people a glimpse of such things as a life-sized portrait of a half-naked Marcos as Adam and Imelda as Eve swirling out of a sea of mist.

Among the videotapes found at Malacanang was one of a birthday party at which the guests wore baby clothes, and a fat man jumped out of a cake.

There's still more to see, and still more to find.

Jovito Salonga, chairman of the Philippines' Commission on Good Government and charged with tracking down Marcos' assets, estimates that the former president was worth up to $10 billion.

When he got to Hawaii, however, Marcos had considerably less — $1.45 million worth. But it was all in pesos, and the exile entourage ran up a bill of $39,000 at the PXes at Andersen Air Force Base on Guam and at Hickam Air Force Base in Honolulu, where Marcos is living temporarily.

Some of the clues to Marcos' wealth may be in the 1,500 financial documents he brought to Hawaii. The Reagan administration has promised to hand them over to the Philippine government but Marcos' lawyers are trying to keep them sealed.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Aquino's government is looking all over the place:

— The Center for Constitutional Responsibility has tied up an estimated $350 million in Marcos assets in New York, including a townhouse in Manhattan worth up to $15 million counting its lavish contents and those cheeky pillows. Missing, a representative of the new government said, were the paintings to match plaques which mentioned Picasso, Van Gogh and Breughel.

— Ramon Diaz, a member of the good government commission, claimed last week that Marcos had $800 million in just one Swiss bank account.

— A two-story, white block home in Princeton, N.J., built around 1720 and reportedly occupied by Marcos' daughter, Imee, when she attended Princeton University. It was recently offered for sale for $850,000.

— Michael E. Tigar, a University of Texas law professor, says he will file suit this week on behalf of the Philippine government, seeking to recover assets in the state including $19.2 million of bayfront real estate in Corpus Christi and $13 million in real estate near Fort Worth.

— London's Mail reported that the Marcoses owned $14 million worth of British art and real estate, including a $1 million penthouse.

— Gen. Fabian C. Ver, former chief of the Philippines armed forces,

U.S.-Soviet Talks Produce Little In Way Of Progress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz found Soviet Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov, a fellow economist, "an interesting and able person," but the two men found little other common ground in the first high-level U.S.-Soviet meeting in four months.

An obviously disappointed Shultz flew home Sunday after meeting Ryzhkov in Stockholm in the first cabinet-level superpower talks since the "fireside" summit in Geneva. The two met after attending funeral services for Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme.

"It's basically where it stood," Shultz said of the snagged attempts since the first of the year to set a date for a second summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

On the flight home, Shultz told reporters that Ryzhkov, whom he had never met before, was "an interesting and able person, easy to converse with and to relate to." But Shultz also left no doubt they had not achieved any breakthrough.

Shultz said he and Ryzhkov agreed at their one hour and 45 minute meeting on Saturday that "neither of us is satisfied with developments" since the Geneva summit.

The secretary refused to answer when asked whether he was abandoning hopes for a summit in the United States by the end of the year. He would say only that Ryzhkov told him at the end of the meeting that "we'll look forward to further discussions."

Also, Shultz expects the Soviets to agree to U.S. overtures for a meeting between him and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

But at this point, there is no date for Reagan and Gorbachev to meet again and the two sides are still far apart on nuclear arms control, which the Soviet leader would like to make the centerpiece of the second summit.

Shultz said the Soviets have failed to respond to U.S. proposals on space-based defense systems and on sharply reducing long-range nuclear bombers, submarines and missiles.

He said negotiators in Geneva had "narrowed the issues a bit" on reducing U.S. and Soviet medium-range weapons, those with a range below 3,500 miles. But there is no prospective agreement there either.

Shultz handed Ryzhkov a letter from Reagan to Gorbachev outlining the president's latest proposal to have Soviet monitors at the U.S. test site in Nevada for the next underground weapons blast to see for themselves that explosion limits set in a 1974 treaty were observed.

The Soviets have reacted coolly to the proposal, which Reagan said could set the stage for Senate ratification of the agreement and a 1976 accord by demonstrating new technology is a safeguard against cheating on both sides.

A reporter asked Ryzhkov, through a Soviet interpreter, if Soviet monitors could be expected to be in Nevada for the next test, probably in April. He answered by saying the Reagan administration ought to consider carefully Gorbachev's proposal to end such tests on both sides.

was served with a subpoena in an investigation by a federal grand jury in Alexandria, Va., of possible kickbacks involving more than $100 million in U.S. military aid.

— A federal grand jury in Pittsburgh is investigating whether Marcos got most of $80 million that may have been paid to one of his close associates by Westinghouse, which was seeking a nuclear plant contract.

Professor Sees New Age Of Temperance In U.S.

By SUSAN OKULA
Associated Press Writer
NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A half century after the repeal of Prohibition, a temperance movement is surfacing in the United States riding a wave of renewed anti-alcohol sentiment, a Yale University professor says.

The formation of vocal groups opposing drunken driving, the raising of states' legal minimum drinking ages and changes in the population's alcohol consumption habits are indications of a trend toward temperance, said Dr. David F. Musto, a professor of psychiatry and the history of medicine at the Yale School of Medicine.

"Look at business lunches in New York," Musto said in a telephone interview. "Before it was very common to have a couple of martinis. The pressure now is not to have any alcohol because of its effect on efficiency.

"People aren't noticing this (the move toward temperance) much because the changes have been gradual. But there are great changes taking place."

A temperance movement is a major change in the public's perception of alcohol resulting in restrictions of its availability, Musto said. The current movement is fueled by a shift from "the atomistic individualism that marked the 1960s and early 1970s to a greater community-mindedness," he said.

The breadth of the movement to control alcohol consumption is reflected in a 1984 federal law that required states to set their drinking age at 21 in order to retain all of their federal highway funds, Musto added.

Vermont, Hawaii and Louisiana are the only states with a minimum drinking age of 18. Vermont is raising the legal age to 21 on July 1.

"For the federal government to require states to change drinking ages through an indirect form of blackmail is the closest approach to national prohibition sentiment since 1933," Musto said.

Alcoholic beverage industry officials agree that consumption is dropping, and they cite federal and state tax hikes on liquor and "social reasons," including concerns about drunken driving and healthy diets, as factors.

According to the latest figures available, per capita adult consumption of liquor fell from 2.87 gallons a year in 1974 to 2.46 gallons in 1984, said Lisa Tate of the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States.

During the same period, she said, wine consumption rose from 2.36 gallons to 3.12 gallons per person, while beer drinking increased from 30.75 gallons to 32.61 gallons per person. "Beer and wine have seen a sales slump in the last year or so," she said, adding that the spirits council anticipates a 2 percent drop in liquor consumption when 1985 figures are in.

Ms. Tate and Musto agreed that about one-third of American adults are teetotalers.

Musto has been studying the history of narcotics policy for the past 15 years and more recently began investigating controls on alcohol. In the late 1970s he served on the National Academy of Science's panel on alcohol policies for the United States.

The nation has seen two previous temperance movements, Musto said. Prior to the Civil War, more than a dozen states prohibited the consumption of alcohol. A similar movement preceded the 13-year national Prohibition that ended in 1933.

During the last temperance movement, the United States experienced its first cocaine epidemic, Musto said, drawing a parallel to the widespread use of cocaine today.

"In a way a drug... epidemic helps energize people to get control of dangerous substances," he said.

Musto notes other indications of a current temperance movement. Alcohol is increasingly being regarded as a "toxic drug," he said, referring to current advice to pregnant women to avoid all alcohol as a precaution against birth defects.

"Once something is perceived as a substance and then perceived as a drug, such as a toxic drug, then controls follow," he said.

Then there is the attack on tavern "happy hours," now outlawed in Massachusetts, the increase in liability lawsuits against bars, and the recent rise in federal excise taxes on alcohol, the first since 1951, he said.

Musto doesn't see any evidence of a contemporary movement toward the outright banning of alcohol.

"But temperance movements have a way of gradually evolving (into prohibition) and now is the time to be aware of this pitfall and to avoid it," he said.

Farmers May Lose On Grain

WASHINGTON (AP) — The latest estimates by Agriculture Department economists show that grain farmers probably will lose money again this year, if all production expenses are taken into consideration.

In the case of corn, for example, the total "economic costs" of production, which include allowances for variable expenses, taxes, insurance, capital replacement and returns to operating capital, were put at about $285 per planted acre.

The average yield of 1986 crop corn was gauged at about 115.6 bushels per planted acre, and the farm price at harvest at $1.92 per bushel. That would make an average gross of about $222 per acre.

In 1985, according to the analysis by the department's Economic Research Service, total corn costs were about $287 per acre, $2 more than the 1986 projected cost.

But at about the same yield and a price of $2.16 per bushel, corn grossed farmers an average of $250 per planted acre. That was still below the 1985 cost of production, but not by as wide a margin as indicated for this year.

When only cash expenses are considered, corn producers do much better, according to the report. Those expenses were computed at about $212 per planted acre in both 1985 and for 1986, well below the gross market value of the crop.

FAST OVER — Mitch Snyder, an activist for the homeless in the District of Columbia, ends his 32-day-old hunger strike by breaking bread with Washington Mayor Marion Barry Jr. during a news conference Sunday. Snyder ended the fast after the federal government agreed to give the District of Columbia $5 million and a crumbling building now used as a shelter for the homeless. (AP Laserphoto)

Study Challenges Federal Statistics

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's economic statistics are not keeping pace with a rapidly changing economy and as a result policy-makers are relying more and more on misleading data, a congressional study contends.

The study for the Joint Economic Committee blamed Reagan administration budget cutbacks for much of the problem but it said government statisticians have failed to make necessary reforms even when not constrained by tight budgets.

The study, prepared by Courtenay Slater, chief economist at the Commerce Department during the Carter administration, was released Sunday and will be the subject of a hearing today before the committee.

"Business leaders and government policy-makers are operating in the dark because of the poor and declining quality of government information gathering," Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., said in a statement accompanying the study. "For very minor savings in budget items we are risking inappropriate decisions in both government and private business that could cost the country billions."

Robert Ortner, Ms. Slater's successor at the Commerce Department, said he could not comment specifically on the allegations because he had not yet seen the report.

However, he said the administration would consider any recommended improvements.

"Our goal is to have the best statistics procedures that we can," he said.

Among the study's findings:

—A key classification system for American businesses has not been updated since 1972, giving a skewed picture of the economy because it fails to properly take into account the fast-growing service sector. The system, the Standard Industrial Classification, was close to being revised in 1981 but it fell victim to Reagan budget cuts.

—The monthly trade statistics produced by the Census Bureau are subject to serious distortions because an "archaic processing system" has been overwhelmed by a rising volume of imports.

Processing delays mean one-third or more of a given month's import figures are for items that actually entered the country in an earlier month. This discrepancy has played havoc not only with the trade numbers but with other key economic barometers which rely on trade data, such as the gross national product.

In a particularly glaring example, the government first reported that the economy, as measured by the GNP, was growing at a robust 4.3 percent rate in the final three months of 1984. But after soaring imports were properly counted nearly a year later, this GNP growth was reduced to a rate of 0.6 percent, a near-recession.

—The definition of poverty adopted 25 years ago remains in effect today even though it is based on a standard that does not take into account changing economic conditions.

Child Poisonings Decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of American children who die after accidentally swallowing medicines or household chemicals has declined by nearly 90 percent since concerted poison-prevention efforts began a quarter-century ago.

The development of improved medical care through poison control centers, and child-resistant closures on many products, have been major factors in this improvement, said Dr. Toby Litovitz of Georgetown University Hospital in Washington.

National Poison Prevention Week began today, the 25th annual effort by a coalition of government, industry, health and consumer groups to deliver the poison safety message.

Accidental poisonings claimed about 450 lives of children under age 5 in 1962 when the observance began in 1962. The toll had dropped to 55 — an 88 percent reduction — by 1983, the latest figures available from the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

 Saturday's Cryptoquip: KIND GARDENER LEAFED THROUGH BEAUTIFUL BOOK.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: T equals C

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1986

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
 from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The day and evening bring a restlessness which can easily make you discontent unless you keep your thoughts on a cheerful and constructive level.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Study into what it is that is keeping you from being successful in your undertakings. Improve your methods of operating.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Get busy with practical affairs in the morning; persevere if you want to get fine results. Don't worry if a friend acts peculiarly today.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Be very precise in handling all your interests in the business world and then all works out fine for you.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Study every phase of that new outlet that appeals so much to you and later you can turn it into profit-making income.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) You feel that you have so much work to do that you cannot handle important personal matters, so handle only the most vital duties.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Continue conversations with an interesting partner until you reach perfect understanding with this person.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Don't get into an argument with a fellow worker who is full of ire in the morning. Try to be with logical and industrious persons.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Plan for recreations you have not enjoyed for some time and arrange them wisely. Stop playing tricks with others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Make new contacts from whom you can learn a great deal, even if they are not straight shooters like you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Put your ideas across to those who are important to your welfare, and impress them wisely. Be happy at home tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Get in touch with friends with whom you want to join for some recreation; but first make sure you can afford it.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Know what it is that family desires and go along with their ideas, and you will have more accord at home now.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will have every ability to understand the needs and troubles of others and should make use of this fine capability. Teach to be more objective, otherwise a martyr complex could easily develop. One who will need a happy home life for best results throughout the lifetime.

St. Patrick's Day Brings Out Marches And Parties For Irish

By JONATHAN OATIS
 Associated Press Writer

Millions of Americans of Irish ancestry and millions of others who wear the green just once a year mark St. Patrick's Day today with parades and parties, while thousands from Boston to Beverly Hills got into the swing of things early with weekend bashes.

In New York City, the nation's oldest and biggest parade was expected to draw its usual crowd of about 750,000 people, but with a mood less politicized than in past years.

Officials in Savannah, Ga., expected 300,000 people to turn out today for a parade featuring 30 bands and more than 40 floats. The bars in this coastal city were ready to serve the revelers green beer, green grits, and green eggs.

Chicago's 31st annual St. Patrick's Day parade was expected to draw 120,000 spectators to watch 202 groups, including a bevy of Illinois politicians in this election year. As always, the Chicago River was to be dyed green with 100 pounds of vegetable dye.

President Reagan, America's No. 1 Irish-American, planned to mark the holiday by meeting with Irish Prime Minister Garrett Fitzgerald in Washington.

Another leader of Irish descent, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney was to arrive in the nation's capital tonight, exactly one year after his "Shamrock Summit" with Reagan in Canada. Mulroney and Reagan are to meet Tuesday.

Over the weekend, Irish-Americans and would-be Irish-Americans turned out in Boston, Baltimore, Atlanta, New Orleans, Denver, Los Angeles, Beverly Hills and Shamrock, Texas, to watch floats and marching bands or celebrate in other ways.

"We've been partying for three days," Ron Reed, manager of the Long Branch Saloon in Savannah, Ga., said Sunday night during that coastal city's celebration, which officially starts Saturday and ends Tuesday. "There's thousands of people down here, getting drunk, having a good time."

Memphis, Tenn., officials made that Mississippi River city's celebration drier by banning the annual pub crawl.

In New York, about 750,000 people were expected to turn out to watch 100,000 marchers, including 38 bands of bagpipers and 82 other bands, strut down nearly 3 miles of Fifth Avenue.

St. Patrick's Day parades in recent years have been spiced by controversy over Northern Ireland, but the 225th edition promised to be calmer.

Grand Marshal Alfred O'Hagan Jr. has expressed determination that the parade not be politicized, and the Irish government has dropped its boycott of the event.

While O'Hagan supports a "free and undivided Ireland," he has not taken as radical a stance as some past grand marshals, who back the Irish Republican Army. The IRA is fighting against British rule in Northern Ireland.

Police also expect the parade to be a quiet one. The Police Department said about 3,200 officers were being assigned to the event, down 10 percent from last year.

In Boston, a crowd police estimated at 500,000 waved green balloons and carnations at marching bands and politicians Sunday. Nineteen people were arrested, most of them for disorderly conduct, said Police Department spokesman Tom Santry.

Entertainer Gene Kelly led a celebrity-studded parade in Beverly Hills, Calif., down a green-carpeted

"Emerald Mile" on Sunday, but rain kept the crowd down to about 2,500 to 3,000 people, said police dispatcher Janice Biswell.

Such stars as James Stewart, Ernest Borgnine, Fred MacMurray, Jennifer O'Neill, Tom Bosley, Hal Linden, Pia Zadora, Dennis Weaver and Mike the Dog of the hit film "Down and Out in Beverly Hills" attended the event, which featured 15 floats, 50 horses, antique cars and bands.

In Memphis, what used to be known as the St. Patrick's Day Pub Crawl was replaced Saturday by a parade featuring floats, Navy and Marine Corps drill teams and police escorts.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠72 ♥10953 ♦J9842 ♣94
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 NT Dble Rdble ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—You have not yet been invited into the auction. Partner has said he can beat one no trump, and he knows from the auction that he can't expect any help from you. If he runs to two clubs and that gets doubled, you might try two diamonds. But leave the decision to him. Pass.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠Q10932 ♥KJ653 ♠9 ♣Q10
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 Pass 1 ♦ 1 ♥ 1 ♣
 Pass 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—What an unpleasant development. Since you have already virtually promised a five-card spade suit, partner could have raised with three-card support. This hand has all the hallmarks of a misfit. We would pass before we get too high—it sounds as if partner has at least five clubs.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠754 ♥83 ♦KQ107 ♣QJ62
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 1 ♣ Pass 1 NT 2
 What action do you take?
 A.—Your hand is perfect for a sacrifice. Length in partner's suit, little or no defense, sufficient length in opener's suit to suspect that partner does not have too many, and the vulnerability is in your favor. Bid five diamonds. Not only should that not be too expensive, but it could even push the opponents to five spades where you might have a chance to defeat them.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AQ10965 ♥AJ54 ♦AK ♣6
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 3 ♥ 4 ♣ Pass 6 ♣
 Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—For his jump to six spades, partner cannot possibly have less than the ace of clubs, king of spades and a singleton or void in hearts. Bid seven spades. Not to go on to the grand slam would be the height of cowardice.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K76 ♥K954 ♠Q83 ♣AQ6
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 2 NT Pass
 3 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Although you have a perfectly balanced hand with good stoppers in the unbid suits, this is not the hand for three no trump. Partner's hand is unbalanced and should play better in a suit; indeed, there could be a suit slam in the cards. Your first step must be to bid three spades, and leave the driving to him.

Q.6—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠8 ♥AQ10 ♦AJ5 ♣KQJ763
 Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with four spades. What action do you take?
 A.—Even though you might be punished very badly, you should bid five clubs. East has made life difficult with his preempt, and we cannot give you a guarantee with every bid you make. If you don't bid with hands like this, aggressive opponents will steal you blind.

St. Pat's Pirates

While celebrating St. Patrick's Day, those of Irish descent might also give thanks to the pirates who brought young Patrick to Ireland in the first place. At the age of 16, Patrick, the son of a wealthy British alderman, was kidnapped and sold into slavery in Ireland. After six years, he escaped and returned to Britain. But his experience instilled in him a determination to convert the Irish to Christianity. He returned to Ireland to found more than 300 churches.

DO YOU KNOW — What plant is the traditional symbol of Ireland?

FRIDAY'S ANSWER — Albert Einstein was born in Germany.

Soviet Visit

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The West German newsmagazine Der Spiegel says Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev plans to visit West Germany by June.
 Der Spiegel, quoting unnamed "high-ranking" sources in the East German Communist Party, said that by visiting Bonn, Gorbachev wanted to increase pressure on West Germany "to clearly detach itself from Washington's security policy."

Chief government spokesman Friedrich Ost said Bonn had no knowledge of such a visit and "will not participate in these speculations."
