Soviets Turn Down U.S. Offer Of Help

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union turned down an offer of U.S. aid to help deal with the Chernobyl nuclear disaster, and today said radiation at the devastated Ukrainian power plant had dropped.

A Soviet government statement today said 18 people injured in the nuclear plant accident were in serious condition. It said no foreigners were injured.

Secretary of State George Shultz said, however, that casualties were "a good measure" higher than the two dead and 197 injured acknowledged by the Kremlin. He said, "The scope of the accident is certainly a major one."

In Stockholm, Gunnar Bengtsson of Sweden's National Radiation Protection Institute said he was told by the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, Austria, that the Soviets had reported to the agency that the reactor fire was out.

But in Vienna, the agency's chief spokesman, Hans-Friedrich Meyer, said he could not confirm the fire was out. "We have never been informed officially that there was a fire," he said.

The statement that Meyer said the Soviets gave the agency today echoed previous Soviet statements released in Moscow, and said merely that radiation levels around the plant had decreased and a cleanup was under way. The statements have made no mention of a fire.

U.S. intelligence sources in Washington said Wednesday that a fire still was raging at the plant and could burn for weeks.

Also today, the Soviets also turned down an offer from Sweden to accept radiation sickness patients at the Karolinska hospital, officials in Stockholm said.

In Tel Aviv, an Israeli amateur radio operator said a Soviet ham operator told him there were 300 casualties, but that it wasn't clear how many of those were dead.

Hundreds of foreign students, tourists and workers were trying to get out of the Soviet Union today.

A British diplomat said American and British students who arrived in Moscow from Kiev, about 80 miles south of the plant, were tested by Soviet doctors who found they were not exposed to harmful levels of radiation.

The Soviets projected an official air of calm, observing the May Day workers' holiday with the traditional parade through Red Square. Major newspapers relegated a day-old government statement on the nuclear accident to the inside pages.

The official Tass news agency said a May Day parade was held as scheduled in Kiev.

Today's report from the Council of Ministers, distributed by Tass, said radioactivity "on the territory of the NPS (nuclear power station) ... dropped 1.5-2 times," and said work was under way to deactivate contaminated areas.

The five-sentence statement did not specify the current or previous radiation levels. The government statement issued Wednesday night also said radiation had declined at the Chernobyl plant, but did not pro-

Students Cut Off Kiev Tour

MOSCOW (AP) — More than 80 British and American students who returned to Moscow from Kiev today because of the Chernobyl nuclear accident immediately were examined for exposure to radiation. A British diplomat said he was told the tests showed the students were in no danger.

"To my knowledge all of them are well and in no danger at all," said the diplomat, who said information on the tests was given to the British Embassy in Moscow.

"There were different levels of radiation detected, not particularly significant as far as I understand it," he said, speaking on condition of anonymity. "Even at the top end of the range, we believe it is well within safety limits."

The students were tested at a Moscow hospital after arriving from Kiev, the city of 2.4 million people located 80 miles from the crippled Chernobyl nuclear power plant. The tests were done by Soviet doctors.

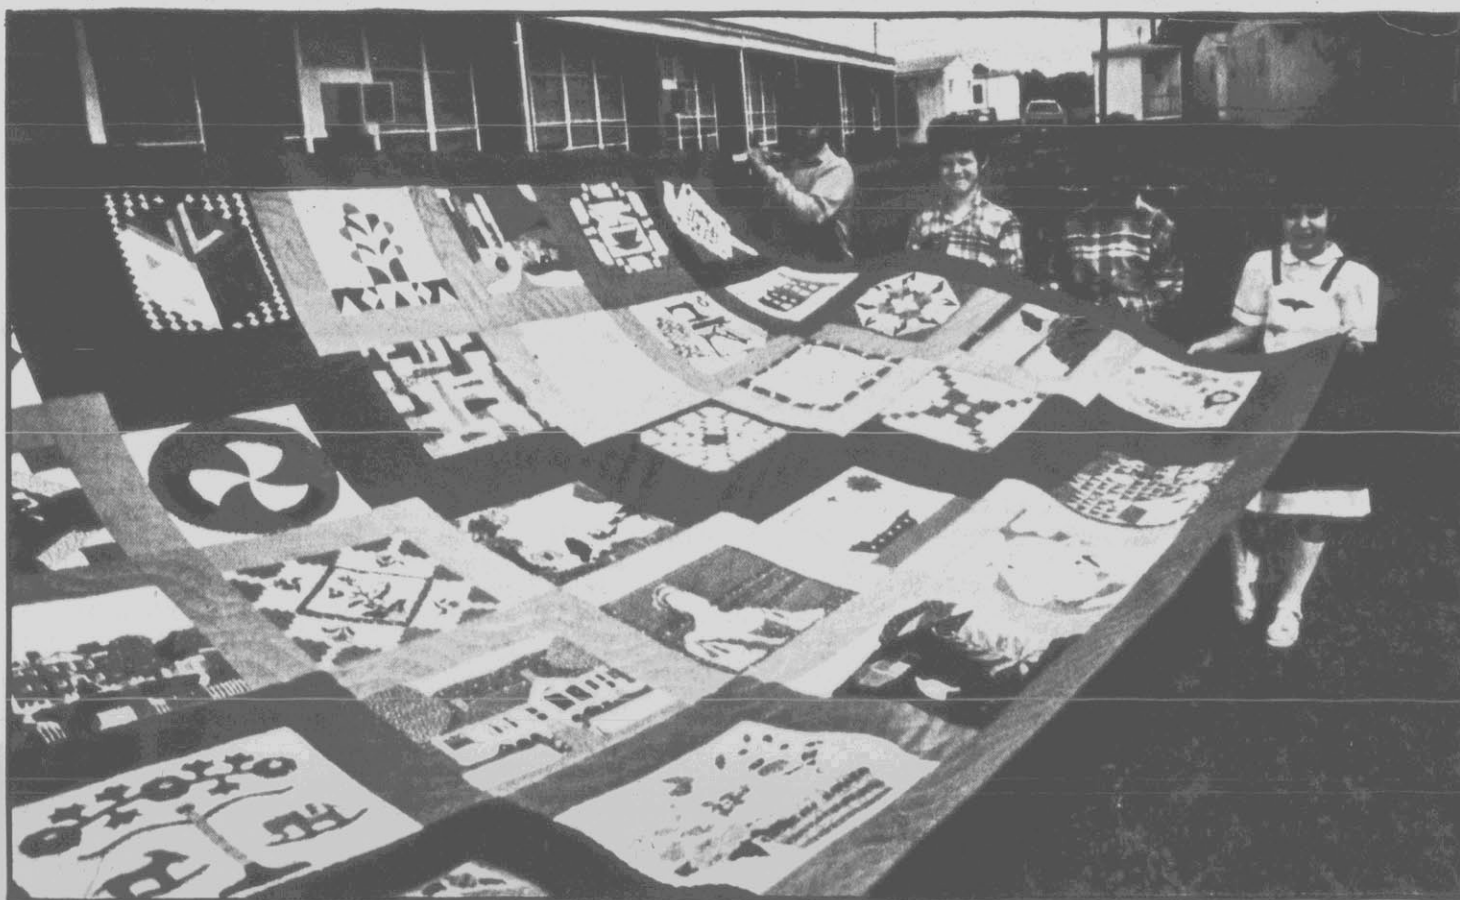

Margo Light, a British coordinator for Russian studies programs in the Soviet Union, said the tests were suggested by Soviet officials.

The student group planned to leave Moscow later today on a British Airways flight to London.

The Chernobyl plant began spewing radiation late last week, and U.S. intelligence sources have said a fire in one reactor likely still is releasing radiation into the air. Some U.S. sources say two reactors, including the one that is burning, may have experienced a meltdown.

The students had been in Kiev for about two weeks. They said they decided to cut short their 10-week tour because of the possible health

Millions Of Blacks Protest Racial Policies In National No-Work Day

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Millions of blacks stayed away from jobs and schools today in what appeared to be the largest anti-apartheid protest in South Africa's history.

The Association of Chambers of Commerce of South Africa, the nation's largest business federation, reported a "massive absence from work" across the country, varying between 70 and 100 percent in almost all urban centers.

Usually crowded commuter trains and buses arriving in Johannesburg, Cape Town, Pretoria and other cities from outlying black townships were virtually empty.

The campaign was organized by labor unions and political groups to demand that May Day be made a public holiday and to call for an end to apartheid, the government's policy of racial segregation that empowers 5 million whites to rule 24 million voteless blacks.

Many black schools also were deserted today as teachers and students alike joined in the strike.

Police had warned that they would act harshly against anyone trying to intimidate blacks who did wish to work, but only a few incidents of violence were reported by midmorning.

A public toilet at a railway station near Cape Town was destroyed by a mine blast during the night, and two cars of a train leaving the Johannesburg township of Soweto were damaged by fire. No injuries were reported in those incidents.

Blacks have made frequent use of regional strikes in recent years.

The most recent major protest strike was in Transvaal Province in 1984, when an estimated 800,000 workers and 400,000 students participated. It appeared that today's protest was far broader in scope, although union, industry and school officials had few precise figures on participation by midday.

The National Union of Mineworkers, a predominantly black union of roughly 250,000 members, said most of the country's gold, diamond and coal mines were being struck, although it had no immediate figures on the number of workers involved.

Marcel Golding, the union's chief spokesman, said soldiers in Kimberly were trying to force miners there to go to work. The union said 25 miners had been injured in disturbances since its strike call took effect at midnight.

In Johannesburg, South Africa's biggest city, stores were opened, but there were relatively few black shoppers or pedestrians. Only a handful of white workers were on the job at a large construction project.

In Soweto and other black townships in the area, streets were virtually deserted, and police cars outnumbered private cars on some roads.

Trade union federations, which had scheduled rallies across the country, reported that they had been prohibited at the last minute from some locations.

Government Told To Cut Back On Cattle Slaughter

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Cattle industry officials won a round in their fight to keep the federal dairy-cattle slaughter from driving down beef prices when a judge ordered the government to cut back on the slaughter.

U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward ruled Wednesday that the Agriculture Department must limit the number of dairy cattle slaughtered to no more than 7 percent of the national dairy herd per year.

On April 1, the government began the $1.8 billion program to slaughter more than a million dairy cattle over 18 months in an effort to cut milk production and reduce dairy surpluses. Beef producers sued, claiming the Agriculture Department caused a dramatic plunge in beef prices by marketing too many dairy cattle at once.

Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng said in Washington today that the federal cow buyout will continue, although department lawyers have not fully studied the ruling.

"It doesn't shut us down," Lyng said. "It calls for new regulations by June 1, so we have a little time" to adjust the program to conform with the judge's order.

David Hutchins, a beef commodity broker in Amarillo, said, "I'm very pleased — ecstatic, you might say. ... He (Woodward) basically agreed with all the cattlemen's arguments. I think it will go a long way toward easing the public's concern about the dairy program."

John Birdwell, president of the Texas and Southwestern Cattleman's Association in Lubbock, said the ruling will help the industry immediately.

Some beef futures prices per hundredweight rose $1.50 Tuesday and Wednesday, the maximum rise per day, because the market was anticipating Woodward's ruling, Birdwell said.

Charles E. Ball, executive vice president of the Texas Cattle Feeders Association in Amarillo, said he is happy with the decision because Woodward "is saying there will be orderly marketing for the five-month period. He's telling the USDA to come up with regulations to accomplish these things."

"What we had asked for was simply orderly marketing of the cattle," he said.

Five Texas cattlemen, a Montana producer and three beef industry groups sued April 8, claiming that the program brought a $25 million loss in the value of beef cattle sold during the first week.

When testimony was presented last week, Woodward allowed more than 30 other cattle associations to join the suit.

American Chefs Improvise in Barcelona

By RUTH REICHL

(c) 1986, Los Angeles Times
BARCELONA, Spain — Bradley Ogden went on his first trip to Europe carrying 2 pounds of blue cornmeal. The San Francisco chef was off to do a little cooking in Barcelona. "I wouldn't have been so motivated to go," he says, "if the rest of the group hadn't been going too."

The group was merely five of America's most famous chefs. They all went at the invitation of the city of Barcelona, which is trying to promote interest in Catalan cooking. In exchange for a tour of the best restaurants of Barcelona, the city officials asked only one thing: They wanted the chefs to cook a meal — for 38, absolutely everybody who counts in the Barcelona food world.

But when they left for Spain two weeks ago the chefs hadn't a clue as to what sort of ingredients they would find when they got there or what kind of a kitchen they would have to cook in. None of them spoke Catalan. They had never collaborated on a meal before, and nobody knew if they would even be able to get along. "It sounded like an adventure!" says Ogden (Campton Place, San Francisco).

"It sounded crazy," says Jonathan Waxman (Jams, New York). "I mean, these collaboration dinners are very hard to do."

"If it hadn't been this group," adds Alice Waters (Chez Panisse, Berkeley, Calif.), "I never would have gone."

"I went," says Lydia Shire (Seasons, Boston), "because I wondered what it would be like to work with Alice Waters. To me she's an idol."

Mark Miller (Coyote Cafe, Santa Fe) took the long view. "I agreed to do it," he says, "because we need to prove that American cuisine has arrived. And what gives American cooking its strength is our ability to share ideas, work together and learn from one another."

Outside of the kitchen they have little in common. And yet this odd assortment of cooks spent a week together — eating Catalan food, choosing a menu, cooking a meal. They learned a lot about the culture, but in the end cooking in Spain proved to be a bigger challenge than any of them had bargained for.

MONDAY

It's 4 a.m. in California, and some of the chefs have been flying for almost 24 hours. But it's only 6 p.m. in Barcelona, and the chefs acknowledge neither fatigue nor jet lag. They are hungry. "I ate all the food on the plane," says Waters, the queen of baby vegetables, "even that terrible tired spinach. But it wasn't much."

The first meal is memorable only because the restaurant is so quaint. It is after midnight when we finish, and clearly the reasonable thing to do would be to go to bed. "On Bradley's first night in Europe?" says Mark incredulously. "Impossible." So off we go to drink champagne and eat the quintessential Catalan dish, "pan y tomquet" (thick slices of bread rubbed with halved tomatoes and drizzled with olive oil).

I suddenly realize that on this trip there will be a lot of food, a lot of wine, and very little sleep.

TUESDAY

The East Coast contingent has arrived; there is much kissing. These chefs seem less like rivals than co-conspirators in the good life. Before noon Waxman has led the chefs into one of the exquisite little cocktail bars that are scattered throughout the city. The drink of the day is an extremely alcoholic concoction called a Pampa; it's quite a breakfast.

We have lunch in the old city port, at a wonderful restaurant where the chefs cook in an open kitchen on a wood-burning stove. Before long we are up to our elbows in fish. There are baby octopuses and tiny squid, no larger than the tip of your little finger, and tiny eels no fatter than pins. There are fat grilled shrimps and "esperdenas," a delicious local specialty (it is filet of slug). All through the meal the wine is passed, and before the afternoon is over, everybody is very merry.

That night The Dinner comes up for the first time. We are at El Dorado Petit, the fanciest restaurant in Barcelona, eating an odd mixture of Catalan specialties like "fabas a la Catalana" (fava beans cooked with blood sausage), large sweet shrimp cooked in sea water, and "fideus rossejat," a sort of golden pasta. As a dish of red peppers stuffed with a mousse of snapper is put before him Waxman suddenly says, "The pimientos are wonderful; we should do something with them."

WEDNESDAY

The Mercado de San Jose is also called "La Boqueria." There has been a market on this exact spot for many centuries. Today it is bustling and beautiful, the stalls neatly stacked with pyramids of fruit, bunches of vegetables, great bouquets of fluffy herbs. The chefs move through the market with little cries of joy.

"Look at those quail!" says Bradley, staring admiringly at the dark-fleshed birds. He calculates the cost and then says, "Fifty cents apiece? Can that be possible? We've got to do something with quail."

Mark has found the baby goats, and he drives one poor butcher woman slightly crazy. The Catalans eat their goats so small that when the butchers take their knives to them they move through the soft bones without a sound. "Larger," Mark keeps indicating with his hands, and she looks bewildered as she keeps getting bigger and bigger carcasses out of the cooler.

Jonathan is taken with some clams called Romeos. The fish monger pats their shells and they all stick out their little red tongues. Waxman stands there laughing, and the fish lady does it again, laughing with him.

Alice is cooing over wild garlic and asparagus. "I love their little lavender tips," she says, stroking the bunches of fat white asparagus. She leans over to break off a baby bean and stick it in her mouth. The chefs move through the market grazing quietly, breaking off a leaf here, a bud there. The market people seem slightly stunned by this, and never make a move to stop them. Lunch is another long, jolly affair, but it is not until later that The Dinner is discussed. They wonder where they will get the grill that they will definitely be needing. "With all the cobblestones lying around we could build our own little fireplace," says Jonathan.

THURSDAY

Jonathan will later blame this particular lunch for the faults of The Dinner. "Let's face it; we were in a very bad restaurant when we planned the menu, and it was not the right place to think about it." But think about it they do. Alice shoos some fried shrimp away from her ("the oil is old"), pulls out a little notebook and in her most businesslike voice says, "We have to decide about The Dinner."

"We should do a lot with vegetables," says Jonathan. "We do a fresher version than they do here; they cook everything so much."

"We've got to have some sort of raw fish," adds Mark. And something spicy. They never eat that. I could make a tuna tartare with chiles."

Alice asks, "Did anyone see any wonderful salad in the market?" Lydia replies, "I'll tell you one thing I saw. Some beautiful calf brains."

Alice doesn't seem to even hear her. She says, "I think we should have a salad course because they don't have that here."

"A cold seafood salad!" says Mark. "Jonathan's really good at what."

"What about the blue corn?" cries Bradley. "I lugged two pounds of it. Nobody can quite figure out what to do with the stuff, so Alice says, 'If we have time, we'll do it. What about dessert?'"

There is a discussion of shortcakes, cobbler, sorbets. Lydai keeps saying, in a small voice, "What about brains?" Bradley is worrying about the blue corn, and Jonathan keeps talking about clams. "I know!" he says suddenly. "Clams casino! It will be great with some of that ham."

Alice suddenly remembers that the one recipe she has brought with her is for blood orange sorbet. "We'll have that for dessert," she says. "It will amaze them." "But where are you going to find an ice-cream maker?" asks Mark. Bradley rises to the occasion, promising to do it by hand. "All I need is a stainless steel bowl and rock salt and ice," he says. They all look at him a bit incredulously. "I didn't know you could make ice cream without a freezer," says Alice.

At dinner that night everybody has a sudden longing for uncomplicated food. Lydia has a steak, Jonathan has an omelet, Bradley has roast chicken. Alice eats French fries, and Mark settles for some roast goat.

FRIDAY

"Oh God, The Dinner's today," says Alice, looking a bit green about the gills, as she sips coffee in a little bar and hands each chef a list of things to buy.

Lunch is an even longer affair than normal. The chefs devour grilled onions in champagne and cream sauce, duck with figs and chestnuts, black rice cooked with squid ink. They drink a great deal of wine. By the time they leave the restaurant it is almost 5 o'clock.

The minute the chefs walk into the restaurant and don their whites, this laid back and slightly inebriated group suddenly becomes intensely professional. And they instantly realize that they've got trouble.

The kitchen is appalling; it is too small to hold all five of them at the same time. There is almost no equipment — not even a measuring cup. There is virtually no help, and the small sink keeps stopping up.

Even worse, some of their carefully purchased products betray them: the wild asparagus turns out to be bitter, the Muscatel they want to marinate the quail in is awful and much of the produce is no good. "We're not going to have enough food," says Alice, an expression heard the first of many times.

Jonathan immediately begins to make stock for the sauce for the quail, and Lydia puts water on to boil to poach the brains. Mark goes out to the dining room where he stands peeling artichokes, a great pile of leaves growing at his elbow. Alice inspects her greens, throwing out the spinach with disgust, tests the wild asparagus, (too bitter, out it goes too). Bradley, his hands covered with blood, is cutting up the quail.

Jonathan soon discovers that there is no broiler; clams casino will be out of the question. He shrugs, says, "Well, we'll put the clams in the salad."

These chefs are accustomed to the services of minions. And yet in the absence of real help, the chefs manage a sort of kitchen ballet, handing off knives and bowls and burners. At one point, Bradley is kneeling by the stove checking his blue corn cakes (which he has had to bake in flan crocks), while inches from his ear Lydia and Jonathan share the two burners.

Lydia works in this chaos as if it were a model kitchen, steadily poaching the brains, then taking them into the dining room to roll them in bread crumbs. She fries them in a tiny pan, 2 at a time, then tops them with a sherry sauce she has somehow conjured up. Topped with little fried capers, they are an immediate hit.

Mark also scores a hit with the tartare, the fish that he has laboriously chopped by hand for what seems like hours until it is as fine as sand. He mixes it with chopped chiles, some lime, the cilantro and then heaps the mixture onto toasted croutons.

As the brains and tartare are passed around the dining room, there is a little buzz of approval. Alice looks out into the dining room, turns pale and says, "Le tout Barcelona has arrived; we've got to get moving." The chefs form a sort of assembly line and begin dressing mache and radicchio with the vinaigrette and piling it onto the plates. Alice arranges the white asparagus, Jonathan adds the marinated beans, the peppers, his steamed clams. Lydai goes around arranging the shrimp on the plates, Alice adds some chervil and Bradley sprinkles fava beans which have been laboriously peeled and parboiled on the top. (They will occasion much comment from the assembled guests.)

Outside on the cobbled streets Mark and Lydia grilling the quail to the total delight of the children of Barcelona. Inside Jonathan is making the sauce out of his reduced stock and the cooked garlic and butter. Alice is wringing her hands over the fact that there are so few potatoes, and shaking the artichokes in the pan. "Alice, Alice, it's all right. Relax," says Jonathan calmly, for the 10th or 20th time.

The quail go out on the plate with the artichokes and the blue corn cakes and potatoes. "Everything's brown," wails Alice. (Indeed, the local chefs will later ask if there was chocolate in the corn cakes.) "It's OK," says Jonathan, "the salad was very colorful. Now all we've got to worry about is the sorbet."

Alice tastes it; she is not happy. "It will be fine with some of the wild strawberries," soothes Jonathan. "What if we mixed the strawberries with the Muscatel?" Alice tastes it, decides she likes it. "More," says Jonathan. Alice pours more. As the pretty plates of red ice tumbled with wild strawberries and slices of blood orange get assembled, even Waters admits that they look pretty.

There is much applause for the meal; the chefs are disgruntled ("If we did it again tomorrow it would be perfect"), but the guests have been astonished. "It was so interesting to see our own products used in such different ways," said the Julia Child of Barcelona, a man, Ramon Cabau. When the chefs come out of the kitchen to take a bow they are exhausted — and hungry. There is not a morsel left for them.

At 4 a.m. they are sitting in a sleazy all-night joint that is the only place open. They are munching on greasy French fries, pallid sandwiches and the world's worst pizza. "This isn't quite what I imagined when I thought about coming to Europe," says Ogden. He smiles and drinks some more champagne.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Appeal To Landlord's Heart, Abby Says

DEAR ABBY: This may sound insignificant to you, but it means the world to me. I've lived in this apartment for three years. When I moved in, I had a female, spayed cat. She's 8 years old now and sleeps all day. I bathe her, clip her nails and brush her teeth. Now the owner says, "By June 1, either the cat goes, or you go."

Other tenants have abused the landlord's generosity; some have had two and three animals.

I can understand his point of view, but I have mine, too. I lost my son eight years ago in a terrible accident, and soon after his death, my 6-year-old daughter brought this stray cat home. She filled the gap and helped to heal my broken heart. She's too spoiled and attached to us to live with anyone else. We'd have to put her to sleep.

I offered to pay a little extra rent for her, but the landlord doesn't want it. He considered it once, but changed his mind. I have never met him and it's hard to get past his secretaries. I love this apartment and can't afford to move. Please help me.

HURTING

DEAR HURTING: There are exceptions to almost every rule, and I think your case merits an exception.

Mail this to your landlord, and sign it with your cat's pawprint (as you did in your letter to me). Enclose your telephone number and a stamped, self-addressed envelope for his reply.

You have nothing to lose but a 22-cent postage stamp. Good luck.

DEAR ABBY: Our 31-year-old son is being married soon. I am sure our 35-year-old unmarried daughter will be asked that stupid question: "And when are you getting married?"

There will be aunts, uncles, cousins, grandparents and various other relatives attending the wedding, and this is bound to happen. I want to spare my daughter any embarrassment I can.

Can you give me a snappy comeback?

DREADING THE DAY

DEAR DREADING: Please

don't dread your son's wedding day in anticipation of "stupid" questions or hurtful comments from insensitive people. In the first place, don't assume that your daughter needs your protection; she may be well able to take care of herself. Also, a smile and quick getaway without answering a stupid question is preferable to a snappy comeback that could provoke more stupid questions.

your sister to pay for your parents' 40th because you paid for their 25th. By the way, no one handed Sis her job, her savings, or made her investments for her. She worked for what she has, single or not.

If you can't afford to split the cost of the 40th, tell your sister the truth. And don't make any commitments for 10 years from now.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

DEAR ABBY: My sister just called to ask me to split the cost of a party for our parents' 40th wedding anniversary.

I took out a loan 15 years ago to pay for my parents' 25th wedding anniversary party, which took place shortly after I was married. My sister was a teen-ager then, so I certainly didn't expect her to pitch in. Now "Sis" is in her 30s, has a good paying job (with benefits), savings and investments, and she is single!

I have a wife and three children and I'm living from paycheck to paycheck. I think that since I paid last time, this one should be on my sister. I would be happy to split the cost of the 50th.

STRUGGLING SON

DEAR SON: I don't believe anyone should go into debt to finance a party. I also don't believe that you should expect

Knox Offers Self-Help Family Therapy

An East Carolina University professor, Dr. David Knox, has written a book of self-help for families experiencing conflict.

"How To Be Your Own Marriage and Family Therapist," can be used for classes in marriage and family living and is also designed for use by the individual family which would prefer not to go public with its problems, Knox says.

The first portion deals with facts and myths about marriages that last. Knox says, in successful marriages, partners are committed to making the marriage work. They are likely to spend time together, to communicate and make compromises effectively, to have resolved the affair issue, to show mutual respect and flexibility while maintaining their individual strong egos and to empathize with each other.

He said the more frequently heard reasons unhappy spouses stay with each other have to do with money, children, fear and parents.

Common myths about happy marriages are that the partners are lucky, always happy, rich, and that do not have problems nor seek therapy.

Later chapters in the book include, "Enjoying Young Children," "Enjoying Teenagers," and "Drug Abuse."

Knox writes for professional and lay readers. He is a nationally known specialist on only children, having co-authored a book titled, "One Child By Choice."

Response

We have wondered why Moscow has not shown concern over failures of its weaponry and training program supplied to Moammar Khadafy for use in deterring U.S. air strikes. In their shoes, we'd be tremendously worried.

It turns out that Moscow was alarmed by Libya's feeble response to April's air strike despite advance warnings it was coming. As Libya's principal arms supplier, the Soviet Union wants explanations.

Of equal importance, a Libyan newspaper has asked for an investigation of what Libya did wrong ... it criticizes propaganda claims of heavy American losses and raps media praise of air defense performance ... warning that "we have to know exactly who got confused, who was wrong, who ran away and who remained on the scene."

That kind of language is not that of Khadafy.

It is the kind of hard-nosed reaction that produces results in other governments and might work to Khadafy's dismay.

The newspaper went on to say "we need to clean up our Libyan house" and "examine how we behaved hour by hour in the crisis." That approach to self-examination represents a stronger response to American military action than all the posturing and rhetoric by the country's leader.

Somebody over there, and it does not sound like the colonel, wants to make sure it won't happen again.

Roads

A group representing Greenville and Pitt County appeared at a state Department of Transportation hearing in Beaufort Wednesday to present the highway needs of the area.

Representatives of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, the city and the county discussed the county's highway needs.

They are large. Included are improvements to Evans Street, the northwest bypass, completion of the Farmville bypass, Arlington extension and other projects.

Our area's needs will be considered along with many other requests for highway improvements.

Pitt County's requests are urgent because the traffic load on local thoroughfares is building so rapidly.

We would expect that these area projects will be funded. It is virtually certain that new funding for highway projects will have to be found by the state and the governor has proposed a program for this. It may not be totally acceptable to the Legislature but certainly it will form a basis for a program to increase highway fund revenues.

Soviets May Be Taking New Route

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

When U.S. warplanes raided Libya, a lot of nervous Americans and Europeans no doubt asked themselves what the Soviet response would be. After all, Moscow has provided at least $10 billion worth of military equipment to Libya since 1970, and an estimated 2,000 Soviet military advisers were in harm's way when the American planes struck.

As it turned out, the Soviets took some face-saving diplomatic moves, including the cancellation of a scheduled meeting between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze. And there was some sharp rhetoric from Kremlin boss Mikhail S. Gorbachev. But Soviet military forces did not move in to protect Libya.

It would be unwise to assume that Moscow would exercise the same kind of restraint if a similar challenge occurs in a place of greater importance to Soviet pride and national security. In recent months, however, Western analysts think that they have seen signs of a more cautious, less adventurous Soviet approach to involvement in the Third World.

The new program adopted at the 27th Communist Party Congress in February expressed the Soviet Union's "profound sympathy" for countries fighting "the heavy and demeaning yoke of colonial servitude." But it put "socialist-oriented" regimes, a formulation that refers to pro-Soviet Marxist governments in places like Angola and Ethiopia, on notice that they must develop their economies "mainly through their own efforts."

That is a far cry from the language of the previous party program, adopted in 1961 when Nikita S. Khrushchev was the head honcho in Moscow. That document exuberantly proclaimed that "a mighty wave of national-liberation revolutions is sweeping away the colonial system," and promised help to so-called national wars of liberation.

The Soviets indeed went on a roll in the 1970s, when the United States was demoralized by the Vietnam debacle. The decade saw the birth of new Marxist-led regimes in Cambodia and Laos, Mozambique, Angola, Ethiopia, Grenada, Nicaragua, South Yemen and Afghanistan.

Those client states voted consistently for Soviet positions in international forums and in several cases provided the Russians with facilities that helped to give Soviet military power a global reach.

The United States became increasingly unwilling to accept the Soviet definition of detente, under which Moscow felt free to support anti-Western revolts while simultaneously pursuing arms control and advantageous trade relations.

President Carter managed not to get too excited about Soviet adventurism in Angola and Ethiopia, but the invasion of Afghanistan shocked him into inaugurating a rearmament program. It also killed chances for Senate ratification of the second strategic arms limitation treaty and helped smooth the way for the election of Ronald Reagan and his harder line.

Meanwhile, the economic cost of the growing Soviet empire also became burdensome. Gorbachev, building on a reassessment that began even before he was elevated to the top job, clearly seems to be giving top priority to the rejuvenation of the economy.

That does not mean that the Soviet leader is prepared to cut defense spending, but the evidence suggests that he is anxious to avoid any big increases. Hence his obsession with avoiding a stepped-up race with America in "Star Wars" technology.

There is no reason to believe that Gorbachev is willing to walk away program efficiently enough to merit a tax increase from the public. His major example was the lack of enthusiasm in North Carolina for asphalt recycling.

When Gov. Jim Martin proposed a 2.75-cent per gallon motor fuels tax increase this month, he also proposed a large scale recycling program. From here on, Martin said, almost every repaving project done in the state will call for recycling. That should save the state $10 million a year, he said.

In the recycling process, the asphalt currently on the road is scraped up by special equipment, ground up into aggregate right there on the site, and then mixed with new liquid asphalt and laid right back down on the street. Officials with the Department of Transportation said that with modern equipment the process takes about the same amount of time as traditional methods.

North Carolina experimented with recycling a number of years ago when a 16-mile stretch of I-95 between Lumberton and the South Carolina border was resurfaced. Money was saved, but recycling wasn't made a top priority.

Redman says private industry opposition was part of the problem. "One of my constituents told me it was a terrible idea," Redman said referring to his battle for more recycling back in 1981. "Now he thinks it's wonderful." Private industry didn't own the right equipment back then. Now, that equipment is plentiful.

In a January letter to Martin, Redman said private industry and the state have to make a "firm commitment: the industry to purchase new, or retrofit existing, equipment to handle recycling and the state to insure an ongoing program that would assure the industry they could amortize their equipment investment."

Redman has been convinced of the benefits of recycling because of Wisconsin's experience. Since 1979, Wisconsin has repaved 2,937 miles of roads at a savings of $48 million. In 1983, Wisconsin peaked with 677 recycled miles and a savings of $14.3 million.

There are other savings benefits. Energy saved in Wisconsin through this program alone, Wisconsin DOT says, could heat 85,000 homes for one year. The program has also re-used 5.8 million tons of asphalt aggregate. Some of that aggregate would otherwise have been dumped in a landfill.

Recycling also makes for better roads, Redman says. By scraping up the old asphalt before putting down a new layer, the state avoids asphalt build-up. "As you drive around ... please observe the number of layers of asphalt that have been laid and the gutters that are almost gone," Redman said in his letter to Martin. By recycling, the state can maintain current gutters and curbs, keep manhole covers where they are, and preserve the slope of the street as originally designed.

Redman is angry that the state didn't move to recycling earlier. It could have meant a $60 million savings since 1979, he says. But it appears he's finally going to get his way now.

A Case For Waldheim

Despite unfounded accusations, it is my humble opinion that Mr. Waldheim was a victim, as were most German officers of World War II.

I cannot verify it, but this is probably what happened.

Mr. Waldheim, then a bright young officer of Austrian birth, was assigned to Gen. Lohr's staff. Lohr's job was to kill as many Yugoslavs and Greeks as he possibly could and solve the Jewish Balkan question once and for all.

But Lieutenant Waldheim never knew about any of this. He was under the impression Lohr's mission was to keep the Yugoslav and Greek partisans from looting stores.

When Waldheim first arrived and presented himself to Lohr, the general told him, "I need a translator."

"Jawohl," said Waldheim. "What would you like me to translate?"

"Shakespeare. I love to read Shakespeare in the original. It relaxes me after a long day on the battlefield." Lohr handed Waldheim a German copy of Shakespeare and said, "I want a new play on my desk every night."

"What about my fighting, sir?" "Don't worry about fighting. Leave that for our boys in the field."

So Waldheim moved into an office three doors down from the general and started to translate Shakespeare.

Every so often someone would rush in and say, "We have 5,000 Greek men, women and children in trucks outside. What should we do with them?"

Waldheim would yell, "That's not my department. Can't you see I'm translating 'Hamlet'?"

Or an SS sergeant would crash in and say, "Where are the freight trains for the Jews of Salonika?"

Waldheim would put his hands over his ears so he couldn't hear what the man was saying and run out of his office.

For three years Waldheim kept his hands over his ears and eyes, never once hearing or seeing anything that the Germans were doing in the Balkans. As long as he completed his Shakespeare translations no one ever asked him to do anything for Hitler's war effort.

Probably one of Waldheim's great triumphs was translating "All's Well That Ends Well" while Lohr and his troops wiped out 15,000 Yugoslav partisans in the infamous "Operation Black."

The fact that Waldheim appears in a photograph at a Montenegro airport in full uniform with other officers a few days preceding the operation in no way means that he was involved in it. He was just saying hello to old friends before he went off to his tent with his German-English dictionary.

Some people maintain that it is awfully difficult to serve on a Nazi general's staff in the Balkans from 1942 to 1945 and not know what went on. Kurt Waldheim was the kind of guy who could do it.

If he made any mistake it was not mentioning in his autobiography that he served in the Balkans as a translator of Shakespeare for Gen. Lohr. The only reason I can guess for the omission is he was ashamed to admit he had no idea what happened in World War II.

Strength For Today

Two boys were running a race at a track meet.

As they rounded the first turn, one jostled the other. There were a few heated words exchanged. Again they jostled each other. The epithets flew thick and fast. Suddenly they stopped and lit into each other with their fists. The others ran on and finished the race. These two fellows stopped halfway through to fight it out.

Twenty years after this incident occurred, old grads when they met at reunions used to say, "Do you remember the day Bob and Harry dropped out of the race to sock each other in the jaw?" The inference was that Bob and Harry were a pair of idiots, that they had been disloyal to the school and that they had sacrificed something worthwhile for something too cheap and worthless for real men to bother about.

And yet we all do it every day. We quarrel and bicker about little things which are worthy of no consideration.

Public Forum

To the editor:

All of you have heard the saying, "Wealth cannot buy health," but you and I can help in our own small way.

Normally, at birth, a being is endowed with the potential to explore, expand and exploit, with the brain controlling the entire network. Each person is an individual and their growth and capabilities stop at various levels. However, all may experience physical illness or pain such as measles, chickenpox, colds, fevers, headaches, allergies, heart problems, cancer and epilepsy, just to name a few. Many people are unfortunate enough to have mental illnesses like panic disorder, manic depression and schizophrenia. Should that be looked upon any differently from physical illness? A remark heard frequently is, "I'm just not with it today." How would you like not to be "with it" every day if people were not concerned about your welfare?

I hope you tuned in to CBS April 6 when Marlo Thomas magnificently portrayed Marie Balter in "Nobody's Child" — a true story of a girl who spent 20 years in a mental institution who had the stamina and courage, with support from caring persons who believed in her, to return to sanity and found the Balter Institute in Massachusetts, where today she is helping to better mental health programs.

The stigma attached to mental illness must be dropped. All of us should take inventory of ourselves and be thankful that we are blessed with the mental and physical attributes necessary to reach out to the mentally ill.

Many events have been planned for May, which is Mental Health Month, for promoting community wellness. Special emphasis is on May 24, a "Fun Day" at The Plaza shopping mall.

Your Mental Health Association needs and welcomes you as a member and/or a volunteer.

Diplomatic Fallout May Haunt Moscow

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Kremlin's failure to answer questions about the Chernobyl reactor calamity is not in line with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's reputed candor campaign and could thrust Soviet ties with the outside world into a nuclear winter of many years, experts predict.

"The longer they stonewall, the longer the rest of the world is going to be hostile," said Marshall Goldman, a professor at Harvard University's Russian Research Institute.

"We forget things after a while. But I don't think we will forget this so easily," said Goldman, predicting that the Chernobyl disaster would damage Soviet ties with the outside world far more than the downing of a Korean Air Lines jet in 1983 or the invasion of Afghanistan in 1979.

"If the Soviet Union does not open up and make a lot of information available, it could lead Western nations to be much more skeptical about cooperation in other areas," said Loren Graham, a specialist on Soviet science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"It's not going to go away," said Goldman. "They cannot take the traditional Soviet response: 'hunker down, it will go away.' It is something more than the KAL incident. There is no way they can blame this on anybody else."

In Bali, Indonesia, President Reagan told reporters Gorbachev had contacted U.S. officials about the nuclear disaster but that there was no response on an American offer of humanitarian and technical aid.

"We're trying to keep track of what's going on over there but we're limited in our knowledge," the president said.

Reagan did not say when or how Gorbachev had been in touch with U.S. officials.

The meltdown was believed to be most severe crisis faced by Gorbachev since he rose to power in March 1985, and he did not appear to be living up to his calls for "glasnost," or candor, said experts in and out of government.

The Soviet leader had not answered increasingly sharp demands for information by Western European nations, which are normally circumspect in their statements regarding the giant to their east.

State Department officials said it was too soon to predict whether the accident would alter Soviet dealings with the United States, ranging from plans for a summit to arms control talks in Geneva or U.S. plans to open a consulate in the Ukrainian capital of Kiev.

One State Department official said it appeared "the Soviets are involved in a cover-up. ... It may be like Afghanistan. We know there are atrocities going on but there is nothing we can do."

"We were hoping that they would learn the lesson that cooperation works better than secrecy. And that might lead them to agreements on arms control or other issues," said the State Department official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Nations throughout Western Europe angrily urged Moscow to provide more information about radiation from the crippled reactor, which was first detected by Swedish workers Monday, before the Soviet Union acknowledged the accident had occurred.

"Soviet society is far too primitive to use such a sophisticated technique as nuclear power," thundered the newspaper Svenska Dagbladet, of neutral Sweden.

The West German government called for the Soviet Union to shut down other nuclear plants.

"What kind of people govern the Soviet Union?" demanded Die Welt, a conservative West German newspaper.

Poul Schueter, the prime minister of Denmark, said "it shouldn't be that way in a modern society. If anything like this would ever happen again, the Danish and other governments would be notified."

Soviets ...

Wednesday's statement said a reactor was ripped apart in the accident, but gave no cause. The U.S. intelligence sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said they believe problems began Friday at the reactor leading to a meltdown, and that a non-nuclear explosion occurred Sunday.

Radiation from the Ukrainian plant spread over Scandinavia and Eastern Europe, prompting anger over the Soviets' failure to provide full information about the accident.

Shultz, who was accompanying President Reagan on an Asian tour, said in Bali, Indonesia, that the Soviets rejected a U.S. offer of humanitarian and technical aid because they "felt they had what they needed to deal with the problem."

Shultz said he did not know when officials in Washington received the Soviet response, but that he learned of it today. "The casualty rates are higher than those announced by the Soviet Union by a good measure," he said, but gave no figures.

Swedish Foreign Ministry spokesman Ulf Haakansson quoted a senior Soviet official as saying his country had "sufficient material, scientific and technical resources to handle the consequences of the breakdown."

An Israeli ham radio operator, David Ben-Bassat, said he talked in English for four minutes Wednesday with a Soviet ham who told him he lived 30 miles north of the reactor.

Ben-Bassat quoted the Soviet ham as saying, "Nobody drinks the water. We are afraid." He refused to give the Soviet man's call letters or name.

About 80 British and American students who had been in Kiev were taken today to a Soviet clinic in Moscow for radiation tests.

A British diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the embassy in Moscow was told that different levels of radiation were detected but that the students were not exposed to harmful levels.

Margo Light, a British coordinator for studies in the Soviet Union, said Soviet officials suggested the students be tested.

The students were scheduled to fly to London today. Some said the situation in the Ukrainian capital was calm and that there was no sign of a nuclear disaster.

In New York, Finnair said 31 tourists from New York, including some high school students, left the Soviet Union today for home, cutting short their trip. The group was in Kiev earlier this week.

A report on Wednesday night's television news said there was no "gigantic destruction or fire" at the four-reactor complex, and specifically denied reports that thousands had died.

Neither state-run television nor the government has said if there was an explosion or if a second reactor suffered a meltdown, as reported by the U.S. sources.

Wednesday's government statement said the damaged reactor was shut down.

Students ...

hazard from radiation.

"Life is going on totally as normal, absolutely," said Hank Birnbaum of Sagle, Idaho, who was coordinating the students' programs in Kiev for the London agency Progressive Tours.

"It's unfortunate we have to leave and it's also unfortunate we can't find out concretely what has happened and what exactly the level of danger was when we were in Kiev, or even here," Birnbaum said upon arriving in the Soviet capital.

He said there was some disagreement among the students as to whether it was necessary to leave, but that "basically we decided it was better to be safe than sorry."

One American student who refused to identify herself complained that she thought the significance of the accident "has been blown out of proportion" and that cutting short their visit was unnecessary.

"It was just really staying for 10 weeks that bothered us," said one English girl who refused to give her name.

An American girl who refused to give her name told a Western reporter as she came out of the hospital that she had been checked by a machine she believed to be a geiger counter, given a blood test and had her blood pressure and chest checked.

Students told television reporters they were given certificates that they understood said they were radiation-free.

Each examination lasted only a few minutes and no students reported receiving the results of blood tests.

Possession Charges

Greenville police said two local men were arrested early Wednesday for controlled substance act violations.

Police said John Charles Graham of 315 Green Mill Run and Stuart Lamar Teeter of 2506 E. Fourth St. were charged with possession of cocaine at about 1:10 a.m. near Cotanche Street.

Municipal Clerks

The week of May 11-17 has been proclaimed "Municipal Clerks Week" by Greenville Mayor Les Garner.

"The office of municipal clerk is the historical mainstay in local government, entrusted with the dual responsibility of preserving the past and using modern technology to access that information for the future," Garner said in his proclamation.

Mid-East Chairman

Bethel Town Commissioner Sam Carson has been elected chairman of the board of directors of the Mid-East Commission.

The five-county board includes a county commissioner from the counties of Beaufort, Hertford, Bertie, Martin and Pitt, along with a representative from each of the 34 member municipalities.

The commission, established by the North Carolina Legislature in 1972 as a lead regional organization clearing house, deals with multi-county problems such as housing, economic development, natural resources and human resources.

Collectors Gather

The Eastern Carolina Collectors Club will sponsor a convention of comic book and record collectors at the Holiday Inn on Memorial Drive from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday.

More than 1,000 old and new comic books and records will be featured. Mike Ernest of Greenville, creator of "Yuk Comics," will be on hand to answer questions.

For more information, call 758-6909 from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. or 752-6389 from 7-10 p.m.

Educational Exhibit

The First Goldsboro African Violet Society will conduct an educational exhibit and demonstration at Berkley Mall May 9 and 10, according to Alice Deane, publicity chairman.

Krantz To Speak

Dr. Allen Krantz, director of research at Syntex Inc., Mississauga, Ontario, Canada, will speak on "Development of Novel Biochemical Techniques for the Design of Inhibitors of Clinically Relevant Enzymes" at 8 p.m. Friday at Ballentines Restaurant in Wilmington.

Reservations may be made by calling the chemistry department, East Carolina University, at 757-6711.

Association Head

Dr. Constantine G. Kledaras, professor of social work in the School of Allied Health and Social Work, East Carolina University, has been elected president of the N.C.

CHAMBER MEMBERSHIP DRIVE — The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce today kicked off its 1986 membership campaign by erecting this billboard on Greenville Boulevard with the chamber's logo and the theme "Your Sign of Welcome, Our Symbol of Integrity." Posters and mailers featuring the theme will be provided to all chamber members as part of the drive, which will continue until May 15. (Reflector Photo By Cliff Hollis)

Association of Social Workers for Mental Health.

Kledaras, 51, has been a member of the allied health faculty since 1971. He is a past president of the state chapter of the National Association of Social Workers and was named Social Worker of the Year in the state in 1982.

DR. CONSTANTINE G. KLEDARAS

Last year Kledaras received the state chapter's highest honor, the Isabelle Kirkland Carter award.

A Raleigh native, Kledaras was administrator of out-patient services and supervisor of social services at Dorothea Dix Hospital from 1960 to 1967. He received his bachelor's degree from Duke University, a master's degree in social work from UNC-Chapel Hill and a doctorate from Catholic University.

Chapter Members

Seventeen East Carolina University students were initiated into the Beta Mu Chapter of Epsilon Pi Tau, the international honorary professional fraternity for education in technology, at the chapter's spring initiation ceremony.

The inductees were selected from the top 10 percent of students majoring in industrial technology at ECU. They have completed a minimum of 16 credit hours in their major.

Dr. William R. Hoots, a professor of industrial technology, was installed as the fraternity's trustee, replacing retiring Dr. Robert W. Leith. Leith was presented a plaque recognizing his 24 years of service to the fraternity as a charter member, a co-trustee and trustee. Installed as co-trustee was Dr. Douglas W. Kruger of the industrial technology faculty.

James L. Lanier Jr., vice chancellor for institutional advancement at ECU, delivered the featured address.

Area students inducted include Floyd G. Brothers of Washington, William F. Purser of Chocowinity, and Ronald H. Gilmore of Greenville.

NCHC Chairwoman

Janice H. Faulkner, director of the Regional Development Institute at East Carolina University, has been elected chairwoman of the North Carolina Humanities Committee for a two-year term beginning June 1.

The statewide 24-member committee was established in 1972 to promote public understanding of and involvement in the humanities.

Mrs. Faulkner, a member of the English faculty at ECU as well as RDI director, has been a member of the N.C. Humanities Committee since 1983 and has served as vice chairwoman since 1984.

JANICE FAULKNER

A Martin County native, she received bachelor's and master's degrees from East Carolina and has served in various administrative positions including director of alumni affairs at the university. She is a former executive director of the state Democratic party.

Ruel W. Tyson, associate professor and chairman of the department of religion, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, was elected vice chairman.

New ECU Trustee

Stephen R. Cunanan, a senior psychology major who is the new president of the Student Government Association at East Carolina University, was sworn in recently as a member of the ECU Board of Trustees.

Cunanan, who will serve on the board by virtue of his SGA office, was sworn in by Sandra Gaskins, clerk of Pitt County Superior Court, in a ceremony in the office of ECU Chancellor John M. Howell.

The son of Dr. and Mrs. Oscar Cunanan of Cary, the new SGA president succeeds David Brown of Raleigh as head of the 14,000-member student body at ECU.

Student Chosen

Leigh Hadley Taylor, a student at Arendell Parrott Academy, Kinston, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vance B. Taylor of Farmville, has been selected to attend Governor's School June 22 through Aug. 2.

Miss Taylor has received awards in English, biology, algebra, geometry, physical science, Latin and U.S. history. She has been named a class marshal, is vice president of the Beta Club and junior class, and pitches for the girls' softball team.

Appellate Judge Says Her Experience Can Help Court

By HAROLD JOYNER
Reflector Staff Writer

After serving 16 months on the N.C. Court of Appeals, Judge Sarah Parker says she is content with her job and wants to continue to be a part of the state's judicial system.

Judge Parker, 43, is one of two Democratic candidates running in the May 6 primary for the seat on the state's appellate court. The winning candidate will serve until Dec. 31, 1990.

The Charlotte native received her bachelor's degree in English from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and her judicial degree from the UNC-CH School of Law. She is a member of Christ Episcopal Church in Charlotte.

Campaigning since February, Judge Parker said she has traveled to many N.C. towns to let North Carolinians know she wants to continue to serve the courts. "It's quite an honor to be a judge," she said, "and I think my experience on the Court of Appeals will help keep North

SARAH E. PARKER
"Carolina's judicial system stable."
Judge Parker also said that, despite her numerous affiliations with various civic and community clubs, she remains committed to doing her job well. "I'm not doing this on a whim. I gave up a lot when I decided to serve for the state. That shows, I think, my dedication," she said.

In 1969, Judge Parker was admitted to the N.C. Bar and later became a member of the law firm of Cansler and Lockhart.

Mecklenburg County Bar activities have included Young Lawyers' Speakers Bureau and Law Day Chairman of the Executive Committee. State Bar Association memberships include the Litigation, Commercial and Banking Law and Labor Law Sections.

Civic service, Judge Parker said, has included serving on the board of directors of the Charlotte YWCA, being a swimming instructor, being a former member of the League of Women Voters, being a past member of the State Democratic Party Executive Committee, and a Charlotte Chamber of Commerce member.

In The Area

Superior Rating

The G.R. Whitfield and Chicod School bands received a superior rating at the King's Dominion Band Festival in Richmond, Va.

The two bands are under the direction of Annie Fleming and consist of advanced sixth, seventh and eighth grade students.

Soybean Vote

Pitt County soybean farmers will vote Wednesday on whether to keep the 1 cent per bushel assessment on all soybeans marketed in North Carolina, according to Pitt Extension Chairman Leroy James.

Polling places include Tri-County Feed Mills, Bethel; Belvoir General Merchandise; L.N. James and Co., Bethel; F.C. Owens and Sons, Fountain; Farmville Southern States, Farmville; Parker Grain, Ayden; A.W. Ange and Co., Winterville; Southern States, Greenville; Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, Greenville; J.P. Davenport and Son, Pactolus, and Agricultural Extension office, Greenville.

Swampbusters

Farmers who plow highly erodible land or drain wetlands for the first time in 1986 could lose U.S. Department of Agriculture benefits, according to Pitt Soil Conservation Service officials.

The "swampbuster" and "sodbuster" provisions of the Food Security Act of 1985 are designed to discourage farmers from converting highly erodible or environmentally important wetlands into cropland. The law does not stop such conversion but will deny federal crop support or loans to the farmer who makes the conversion, the spokesmen said.

SCS officials asked that farmers call 752-2720 before clearing questionable land.

Student Tour

Students from Stokes Elementary School toured Pitt County Memorial Hospital, including the emergency, shock trauma and nursery areas and the East Care helicopter units.

The field trip concluded a unit of study on health and social studies.

Trips Planned

In preparation for the construction of a planetarium and health education facility at River Park North, local teachers are being offered a chance to visit other similar facilities across North Carolina.

A trip to the North Carolina Zoo scheduled for June 24-25 includes instruction by the zoo's education staff on use of off-campus resources.

A trip to the Charlotte Nature Center, where the planetarium is identical to the facility proposed for River Park North, is also planned.

Space on the trips is available and registration is open until May 20. For further information call Jerry Everhart at 752-2934, extension 231.

Student Dead

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A Campbell University student who was to have been commissioned as an officer in the Army Reserve Officers Training Corps in May was found shot to death in a Cumberland County mobile home, officials say.

The victim was identified by Cumberland County detectives as Linda Jean Coats, a resident of Newport in Carteret County. She was found Tuesday, which was her 24th birthday.

Officers said they went to Ms. Coats home after receiving a telephone call at about 6 p.m. from a man identified as John Fishel, an out-of-state resident who was working with a contract firm at Fort Bragg. Officials said Fishel told officers that he went to the mobile home to see Ms. Coats shortly before 6 p.m. and discovered the body.

Inmates Riot After Guards Refuse To Work

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — Enraged inmates rioted at seven prisons and destroyed one of them with fire to protest restrictions imposed after most of Britain's 18,500 prison guards refused to work overtime.
At least nine people, five prisoners and four guards were reported hurt in the violence. Forty-two prisoners who escaped in the confusion Wednesday remained at large today.
The violence was largely under control, but the situation in the prisons remained tense.
Authorities said the inmates became enraged when they were told Wednesday that the guards' refusal to work overtime meant they would have to spend up to 23 hours a day locked in their cells and that visits by relatives and others would be cut.
A total of 52 prisoners escaped in the resulting riots, 10 of whom were caught by early today, authorities said.
Some violence was reported early today at Wymott prison in Lancashire in northwest England, where authorities said the approximately 800 prisoners started fires along the compound's perimeter fence. Most of them later returned to their cells, authorities said.

Alan Taylor, vice chairman of the Prison Officers Association, said the prison violence "proves that the dispute is about safe manning levels, not overtime."
At issue is the government plans to cut guards' average 16 hours a week overtime to 10 hours.
The guards, who earn an average annual salary of $23,250 for a 55-hour working week that includes 16 hours overtime, said the cuts would leave too few on duty to contain potential violence.
Britain's 134 prisons, many of them antiquated Victorian buildings, hold 46,600 prisoners, nearly 9,000 above normal capacity.
British Broadcasting Corp. radio today said the situation could worsen

Friday afternoon when shift patterns leave 10 of the country's top security jails severely understaffed.
"Executives of the guards' union have said they are determined to continue with their action. But many prison officers, horrified at the events of the night, may think again about continuing with the overtime ban," BBC said.
Home Secretary Douglas Hurd, whose department is responsible for prisons, told Parliament Wednesday night that police would be given all necessary assistance to deal with the violence.
However, his department said there were no plans to call in soldiers to restore order.
Authorities gave these details of Wednesday's violence:
—At Wymott, prisoners went on a rampage and started small fires late Wednesday. Police summoned from around Lancashire to surround the establishment said five of the rioters received minor injuries in the violence.
—Prisoners smashed tables and chairs at Belfast's Crumlin Road jail in Northern Ireland where guerrilla suspects are held to await trial. Four guards were slightly hurt in the violence.
—Between 50 and 60 inmates at Horfield prison near Bristol in western England seized control of two wings, smashing furniture and forcing prison guards to withdraw. Like most police, prison guards in Britain are unarmed.
About 100 police, some in riot gear and others with guard dogs, entered the building Wednesday night to restore order.
—Forty of the 130 inmates at Erlstoke prison, a youth detention center at Devizes in southwest England, escaped during disturbances in which several small fires were started. Ten of the escapees were caught later Wednesday. Army helicopters with searchlights combed the area during the night for the others.
—Northeye minimum-security prison near Bexhill on the south coast of England was virtually gutted by fire after 60 of the 450 inmates rioted. Police said a total of 12 inmates, some armed with stolen kitchen knives, were believed to have escaped.

—Inmates started a fire in an empty room at High Point prison, a minimum-security facility in eastern England. Four guards who tackled it suffered from smoke inhalation.
—Inmates at Lewes prison in southern England set fires in two or three cells, but they were quickly put out.

Justice Department Refuses To Let Democrats Discuss Waldheim Case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department is turning down requests from 14 Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee to meet with the attorney general or his chief deputy on the status of Kurt Waldheim.
The lawmakers' request was made Wednesday, two days after Attorney General Edwin Meese told a news conference he has no plans to act immediately on the recommendation of the department's top Nazi hunter, Neal Sher. Sher says Waldheim should be barred from entering the United States.

Until recently, Waldheim, a candidate for the presidency of Austria in this Sunday's elections, had not disclosed his World War II service with the German army in the Balkans, where numerous Nazi atrocities were committed against Jews and Yugoslav partisans.
Meese said Monday that Sher's recommendation had not reached his desk yet and that no decision on whether to bar Waldheim would be made before Sunday's Austrian elections.
Department spokesman Patrick Korten said that a meeting between the representatives and Meese or his deputy "would be premature," since the matter has not reached the top of the department and "no decision has been made." Assistant Attorney General Stephen Trott still has to review Sher's recommendation, which then must move up the chain of command prior to a final decision, said Korten.

"In light of the possibility that Dr. Waldheim will soon become president of Austria, any action which may be taken to address this situation has now become a matter of urgency," the 14 Democrats said in a letter addressed to Meese, who is in California on official business until the weekend.

Waldheim says he was not involved in and had no knowledge of the deportation of Jews from Salonika, Greece, to Nazi death camps or of the slaughter of Yugoslav partisans.
Besides Schumer, the lawmakers who signed the letter are Howard Berman of California, Mike Synar of Oklahoma, Don Edwards of California, Barney Frank of Massachusetts, John Seiberling of Ohio, Frederick Boucher of Virginia, Larry Smith of Florida, Harley Stagers of West Virginia, William Hughes of New Jersey, John Conyers of Michigan, Patricia Schroeder of Colorado, Edward Feighan of Ohio and Bruce Morrison of Connecticut.

AIDS Victim May Stay In School

FRANKFORT, Ind. (AP) — Teen-age AIDS victim Ryan White may stay in school, a judge has ruled, but a lawyer for parents who protest his presence in the classroom says he will continue the fight to ban the boy.
Judge Jack R. O'Neill affirmed Wednesday an order he granted April 10 that allowed Ryan to return to seventh-grade classes at Western Middle School, denying the protesters' request for a stay.
But David Rosselot, attorney for the protesting parents, said he intends to bring the case before the Indiana Court of Appeals.
In arguing for a stay of O'Neill's order, he said Ryan's presence in school could cause irreparable harm to his classmates.
"Because AIDS is fatal, there's no better term to use than irreparable harm," he told the judge.

Ryan, 14, has spent little time at school since being diagnosed in December 1984 as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which he contracted from blood products he received for his hemophilia.

His presence in classes has been opposed by school administrators and parents who fear their children may get the deadly disease.

S.C. State Administrators Quit To Protest New Chief

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina State College's top academic administrator and two of his deputies have resigned, citing the fear that the school may lose "hard-fought" gains under the school's new president.

Carl A. Carpenter, vice president for academic affairs, had applied for the top job. He denied that his resignation was because he didn't get the presidency.

Carpenter said he is concerned about incoming President Albert E. Smith's background in athletics and what that will mean for the college's academic programs.

"We have all witnessed recently in our own state what happens when, whether real or imagined, academics cease to be the focal point of an institution of higher learning," Carpenter said in a letter to faculty members on Tuesday. He was referring to events in the past few years at Clemson University.

Smith was not available for response today at his North Carolina A&T office.

The letter also announced the resignations of two of Carpenter's assistants: Andrew Hugine Jr., assistant vice president for academic affairs; and Joann Boyd, director of Title III and special academic programs. He said they plan to remain at South Carolina State and return to full-time teaching this fall.

Carpenter said the three were not asked to resign but decided to leave their administrative duties because they sensed "a desire on the part of many decision makers to seek a new administrative direction for South Carolina State College."

The college's board of trustees last month chose Smith, vice chancellor for development and university relations at North Carolina A&T University, as the successor to retiring President M. Maceo Nance Jr.

Smith, 53, was chosen largely because of his strong fund-raising ability, his vast experience in college administration and his desire to continue many of the programs and policies initiated by Nance, board Chairman L.S. Levy Johnson said at the time.

Carpenter said Wednesday that Smith's background in athletics indicates trustees may want a new emphasis in that area.

Before accepting the vice chancellor's post at North Carolina A&T in 1976, Smith was athletic director and education professor at Eastern Michigan University, 1971-75; athletic director and student union director, N.C. A&T, 1968-71; and assistant dean of men and baseball coach at Knoxville, Tenn., College, 1964-68.

Carpenter said he wanted to alert faculty of his concerns that academic programs developed during his six years as vice president of academic affairs may not receive the same attention under the new administration.

He cited the college's new master's and bachelor's degree programs in agri-business, undergraduate programs in computer science and marketing and two new programs in education administration as his areas of concern.

"We just don't know what the plan is," he said. "What we are saying is that as academicians, we would feel more comfortable with someone with that type of background."

Johnson said Wednesday that he could not comment on Carpenter's concerns because he had not spoken with him.

"Personally, I have the utmost respect for his ability and talents. I am sorry he has elected to resign," the board chairman said.

Research Centers Fear Revenue Loss

By EITH B. RICHBURG
Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — America's major research universities fear that new points of tension may be straining their long-uneasy partnership with the federal government, the prime source of college research money.

The tension, according to university presidents who met here last week, is caused by budget cuts for higher education, proposals to revamp the tax code that could discourage large private donations, and stricter accounting rules from the Office of Management and Budget that have made colleges bear more of the cost of federally sponsored research.

"All these different points converge" on college campuses, said Robert M. Rosenzweig, president of the Association of American Universities (AAU). "There's no other place where the totality of the effect of different initiatives can be taken account of."

Universities and the government have always viewed each other with suspicion, despite a mutually dependent relationship involving research grants and contracts.

The government needs the schools to supply expertise and conduct most of its basic research — a need that has grown even more intense with the Reagan administration's emphasis on the ambitious space-based Strategic Defense Initiative, also known as "Star Wars." The campuses, while dependent on government funds, are wary of being drawn into too close a relationship — particularly on a controversial project like Star Wars. Universities have long viewed the government, with its demands for secrecy, as the main threat to their cherished academic freedom.

The latest points of tension, however, are budgetary. The university presidents who gathered here said that various unrelated government policies had the cumulative effect of impairing the large research schools in fulfilling what they termed their "national mission."

Peter McGrath, president of the University of Missouri, said the decline in federal support for graduate student fellowships and training grants under the Reagan administration has led to a "national crisis" in graduate education, with most science- and math-related graduate courses now populated largely by foreign nationals.

McGrath said foreign students now account for more than 40 percent of all graduate students in engineering schools, 50 percent of the graduate population in math and almost 40 percent in computer science.

Regarding the tax code, Harvard President Derek Bok said proposed changes would "diminish the incentive to give," a potentially serious threat to private schools such as his that depend in large measure on gifts from wealthy donors.

Bok said while it is true that universities' endowments have increased with the rebounding of the stock market under the Reagan administration, "vast accumulated backlogs of deferred maintenance" can easily drain any increases. Reduced federal funding for higher education coming at a time when tax changes could reduce donations, amounts to "a pincer movement," Bok said.

Stanford University President Donald Kennedy expressed fears — also voiced by many other college presidents recently — that proposed changes in OMB accounting regulations will reduce the amount of research overhead the schools can be reimbursed for.

Those overhead costs have been a sore point, with aggressive auditors forcing some schools to pay back money to the government when disputes arise over bookkeeping. Kennedy said the new regulations, due to take effect in July, could cost universities $100 million a year.

Cop's Robbery

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — A man convicted as part of a gang of robbers who made their getaway in a helicopter faces up to 55 years in prison.

A U.S. district Court jury deliberated an hour before finding Augusta Rogers, 41, of Houston guilty of the July 1984 robbery of the Valley View bank that netted $20,000. No sentencing date was set.

The 5-minute robbery by men armed with automatic weapons followed a similar holdup in Leesville, La., and preceded one in which robbers escaped by airplane from Overton, Nev.

Helms Says No To After-Primary Ads Attacking Broyhill's Stance

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

GOP Senate hopeful David Funderburk says he knew nothing of the National Congressional Club's plans to keep blasting Rep. Jim Broyhill in TV commercials after Tuesday's primary, but Sen. Jesse Helms doesn't expect the ads to run.

"I would suggest that nobody hold his or her breath until such ads run," Helms, R-N.C., said Wednesday in a telephone interview from Washington. "Don't hold your breath because you'll turn blue."

Carter Wrenn, executive director of the Congressional Club, which is running Funderburk's campaign, said Tuesday that the club was considering post-primary commercials attacking Broyhill. He said the club, Helms' political organization, wanted to set the record straight in response to criticisms Broyhill had made of a club-sponsored campaign commercial.

Helms said he didn't "want to say Carter has foot-in-the-mouth disease, but maybe you ought to check on that."

In a telephone interview from Washington, Broyhill said he was surprised by Wrenn's remarks because Helms and incumbent John East had promised to campaign for him if he wins the nomination.

"If Carter Wrenn is doing that, he is like a rogue elephant out of control," Broyhill said. "He's not doing anything to build party unity."

Funderburk, campaigning in Asheville, said he did not know whether continuing to criticize Broyhill after the primary "would be a wise move." But he added, "What the Congressional Club will do after the primary is their own business."

Helms repeated his earlier promise to campaign for the Republican nominee, whether it is Broyhill or Funderburk.

Meanwhile, 11th District GOP chairman Harold Corbin accused the Congressional Club of "dirty campaign tactics."

"I think they are the rottenest political organization in the nation."

Corbin said Wednesday. "They are using dirty tactics in this Broyhill-Funderburk campaign. They're a Gestapo-type political organization."

Corbin said he fears few Republicans know the club is running Funderburk's campaign.

During a campaign swing through the mountains, Funderburk hammered away at Broyhill.

"Jim Broyhill is misleading Republican voters about the nuclear waste dump," Funderburk, former U.S. ambassador to Romania, said in an Asheville news conference.

Funderburk said Broyhill was trying to duck responsibility for a 1982 bill he co-sponsored that authorized a study of whether a high-level nuclear waste repository should be located in the Eastern United States. North Carolina is one of seven states under consideration to host the facility should it be authorized.

Broyhill says his bill was not designed to have a dump put in North Carolina, and that Funderburk is playing on voters' fears.

Elsewhere, former Insurance Commissioner John Ingram vowed to call for a runoff if he finishes second in the Democratic primary for U.S. Senate and the first-place finisher fails to get a clear majority of the vote.

Ingram, who came from behind in 1978 to upset banker Luther Hodges Jr. for the Democratic senatorial nomination, said he expected to come out on top in Tuesday's election. He is among 10 Democrats vying for their party's nomination to succeed retiring Republican Sen. John East.

Democratic leaders, including state chairman Jim Van Hecke and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, said last week that if a candidate comes in first by a wide margin but falls short of a majority, they might encourage the second-place finisher to forgo a runoff for the sake of party unity.

A poll commissioned by three television stations, which was released last week, showed former Gov. Sanford preferred by 45.7 percent of the voters surveyed. Ingram was second with 11 percent. Another 29.1 percent were undecided, while no other candidate got more than 5.4 percent.

Sanford campaigned Wednesday in Greenville and Fayetteville, and told an audience at East Carolina University that as governor in the early 1960s he had helped launch efforts to save the federal tobacco program from "utter destruction."

With the election less than a week away, other Democratic candidates flocked to their party's state headquarters in Raleigh for news conferences. Ingram, Walt Atkins and Milton Croom, all candidates for the Senate, voiced their stands.

Atkins, a Graham city council member, said Democrats should nominate him because he is their party's most conservative candidate.

"Not even a good Republican can beat a conservative Democrat in North Carolina," he said.

"The Republicans are going to try to paste liberalism, abortion, high taxation, anything they think is bad all over our candidate ... unless I'm the nominee," Atkins said.

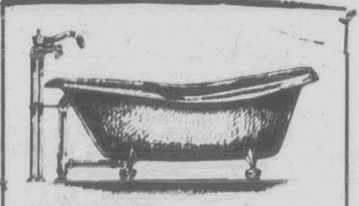

Croom, a Raleigh businessman who has praised political extremist Lyndon LaRouche but insists his campaign is not affiliated with the LaRouche organization, criticized Sanford for supporting a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget.

"Raising taxes, cutting defense, and cutting other necessary ... programs will not produce a recovery," Croom said. "The only workable approach to ... eliminating the deficit is to dramatically increase production and expand our tax base."

Several newspapers endorsed Senate candidates in Tuesday's editions. The Chapel Hill Newspaper endorsed Broyhill and Sanford in their respective primaries, while The Richmond County Daily Journal recommended only Sanford.

The North Carolina Institute for Legal Elections said Wednesday that 133 candidates for Congress and the General Assembly, including Senate hopefuls Sanford, Ingram and Charlotte businesswoman Katherine Harper, had signed a "fair practices code" binding them not to conduct negative campaigns.

Long Says N.C. Pays For Others' Insurance

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Carolinians paid a dollar in liability insurance premiums for every 56 cents in claims paid by insurers in the state from 1975 through 1984, a study by a national insurance consumer group shows.

For medical malpractice insurance in North Carolina, insurers paid 27 cents in claims for every dollar of premiums collected over the 10-year period, said the study by the National Insurance Consumer Organization.

North Carolina's ratio of losses to claims for all liability insurance, 56 percent, was about par for the nation, according to NICO.

State Insurance Commissioner Jim Long said the NICO figures support his view that North Carolina insurance customers are paying for other state's liability losses.

NICO President Robert Hunter released new state-by-state insurance cost comparisons Wednesday in an attempt to refute the industry's claim that excessive losses due to large court awards for damages have brought on the liability insurance crisis.

Hunter estimated the industry's net 1985 cash flow at $27 billion. He charged that industry "price-gouging" and its refusal to write less lucrative kinds of policies have brought on the crisis.

"It's an overcapitalized industry," Hunter said. "The crisis requires regulation."

Marc Rosenberg, vice president of the Insurance Information Institute, called the NICO findings misleading and said that they confuse insurer profits with surplus money needed to pay future claims on current policies.

"Of all the attacks on the insurance industry, today's (by NICO) was probably the most intellectually dishonest," Rosenberg said.

In North Carolina, the ratio of claims paid to premiums collected for liability coverage — except auto and fire insurance — ranged from 45.5 percent in 1981 to 54.6 percent in 1984, Long said.

For most types of liability insurance, North Carolina's ratio of premiums to claims paid was two to three times the national average, Long said.

Long said North Carolinians are absorbing liability insurance rate increases brought about because of high court awards in other states for damages.

But court awards in North Carolina have been consistently low, he said, and the rate increases are not justified.

Purple Heart

BERLIN (AP) — The U.S. Army has awarded the Purple Heart medal to a serviceman from North Carolina who was critically injured in the April 5 terrorist bombing of a West Berlin discotheque.

Staff Sgt. James Goins, 29, of Ellerbe, N.C., received the Purple Heart from Gen. Glenn K. Otis, commander of the U.S. Army in Europe, and Richard Burt, the U.S. ambassador to West Germany, when they visited his room Wednesday in the intensive-care unit of Steglitz Hospital.

The Purple Heart is awarded to American servicemen wounded in the service of their country.

The early-morning bomb blast at the La Belle discotheque killed two people — a U.S. Army sergeant and a Turkish woman — and wounded 230, including 63 Americans. Two other American servicemen remain hospitalized in West Berlin and the United States.

Goins, who was severely burned and has had both legs amputated above the knee, appeared unaware of the presence of Otis and Burt despite attempts by his wife to rouse him.

forcement officers on a chase through Alamance County that caused a trooper to collide with another vehicle, officials say.

The chase lasted about an hour and ended when the motorcyclist fell off his bike on the U.S. 70 bridge in Haw River when he was struck by a patrol cruiser Tuesday evening, according to the North Carolina Highway Patrol.

Todd Koch, 20, was charged by the state Highway Patrol with driving while impaired, driving while license revoked, speeding in excess of 100 mph, failure to stop for a blue light and siren and speeding to elude arrest.

The Alamance County Sheriff's office charged Koch with speeding 90 mph in a 55 mph zone, careless and reckless driving, failure to stop for a blue light and siren, driving with no operator's license, running a stop sign and driving while license revoked.

Name Change

RALEIGH (AP) — Denny W. Anderson of Wilmington wants to change Cape Fear's name to something less scary.

Anderson is writing newspapers and congressmen in a one-man crusade against a name he says is associated with dread. Cape Fear is the name given to the entire region along the Cape Fear River. He'd rather see the region named something like "Cape Paradise."

"Fear is not a word consistent with the paradise around this area that God has blessed us with," Anderson said. "I am convinced that negative words are something we don't need in our life."

The name Cape Fear dates to 1585, when the crew of a ship reported their vessel nearly wrecked on the "Cape of Feare" while en route to Roanoke Island, according to "The North Carolina Gazetteer," a geographical dictionary by historian William S. Powell.

Two Plus Two

ASHEVILLE (AP) — North Carolina Department of Community Colleges President Bob Scott has called for a major cooperative effort between the state's secondary schools and vocational institutions.

Scott said Wednesday the effort is needed to counter what he called a "growing crisis" in the education and skills training of the state's workforce.

Scott's plan, Two Plus Two, calls for allowing high school students to begin preparations for some degree vocational programs under the Department of Community Colleges. The plan would require expanding high school curricula to include more applied courses and calls for more intensive and directed vocational counseling for secondary school students who are not college-bound.

The program would allow high school students to take applied courses to prepare them for two-year associate degrees and one-year degrees in fields such as allied health, electronics, agricultural and natural resources, Scott said.

Standoff

MAGGIE VALLEY, N.C. (AP) — A 34-year-old Haywood County man held a loaded gun to his head and threatened to kill himself for 7½ hours Wednesday before officers talked him into surrendering the weapon, authorities said.

Haywood County Sheriff Jack Arrington said officers had gone to the home of Tony Dillard of Maggie Valley to serve him with five breaking and entering warrants. Dillard was also wanted for parole violations. Officers said Dillard was armed with six rifles and two handguns.

Publisher Retires

SHELBY, N.C. (AP) — Ned N. Smith, publisher of The Shelby Star, retired today after 36 years with the newspaper and Editor Ted Hall was appointed to succeed him.

Announcement of Hall's promotion to editor and publisher was made by John F. McGee, president of Clay Communications, the West Virginia-based company that bought The Star three years ago.

Smith was one of the owners of The Star when it was sold. After serving as circulation manager, business manager and general manager of the newspaper, Smith became publisher when Henry Lee Weathers, one of the former owners, retired shortly after the sale.

Scientists Seeking Cause Of Dead Trees In Southern Appalachians

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer
MOUNT MITCHELL, N.C. (AP) — Dead trees litter the top of Mount Mitchell, frustrating scientists who still don't know exactly what is causing the spruces and firs of the Southern Appalachians to die at an alarming — and accelerating — rate. It looks like a war zone on this 6,684-foot mountain, the highest peak in the eastern United States, with some trees splintered into pieces and others toppled over, their roots rattling in the cold wind. "At the very top of Mount Mitchell, I'd say 70 percent of the trees are dead or dying," said Dr. Robert I. Bruck, associate professor of plant pathology and forestry at North Carolina State University in Raleigh. "Most of the mature trees in the ecosystem are dead or dying. You don't need a Ph.D. to figure that out." But it may take several dozen Ph.D.s to figure out why. Bruck, one of about 100 researchers involved in a $2 million-per-year program sponsored by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. Forest Service, believes the answer will be complex. He was to testify today before a House subcommittee considering a bill designed to reduce acid rain, which many people consider the prime suspect in forest decline. Acid rain is believed to be caused by sulfur and nitrogen oxides that industries spew into the air. But "it's much too premature to point fingers at any given cause-and-effect relation," Bruck said in a telephone interview from Raleigh. "That's what I'm trying to stress to Congress. They're looking at regulating (air pollution) with the idea that the trees are going to be resurrected, but we don't have a lot of confidence that's going to happen. "It's not like a lake, where you add acid and all the fish go belly-up. You're dealing with microorganisms, climatic stress, wind, temperature and soil types," he said. "We're on the cutting edge. We're just beginning to formulate the data." Bruck, who leads 12 staffers at the spruce-fir research program at N.C. State, said it was only North Carolina university involved in the study. Schools from Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee and South Carolina are also involved in the program, called the Southern Appalachian Research Resource Management Cooperative. SARRMC researchers monitor forest sites around the region, including Mount Mitchell, where the EPA this week is setting up a $600,000 study to test the chemistry of clouds. Various types of air pollution may be among the causes of tree deaths, Bruck said. He has compared the Southern Appalachians to similar forests around central Europe, Alaska, the Rockies, the Cascades and Mount Everest and found that the areas without pollution have healthy forests. But that doesn't prove air pollution caused the destruction in the Southern Appalachians, he said. In this region during 1985, there was a 30 percent increase in the number of trees afflicted, he said. That "very rapid increase" may have been the result of the extreme cold of January 1985. The two primary tree species involved are the red spruce and the Fraser fir, which inhabit cool climates similar to Canada's. N.C. State researchers discovered last summer that microscopic worms called nematodes may also damage the trees. But Bruck said they have been found only above 6,000 feet, so mortality below can't be blamed on them. "It's a complex issue — which came first, the chicken or the egg?" he said. "Do stressed trees get attacked by nematodes, or do nematodes stress them and make them more susceptible to other things?" An insect called the balsam wooly aphid has been killing Fraser firs for 30 years, but the red spruce is not susceptible, he said. Researchers are also looking at ozone in the atmosphere and the combined effect of many factors on the mountain soil and the microorganisms in it.

Chemical Car Catches Fire

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — A railroad car carrying a dangerous chemical caught fire briefly before the blaze was extinguished, but no one was injured, officials say. The car, which was on fire for about 15 to 20 minutes Wednesday night, was carrying potassium nitrate, which is used to make fertilizer, Nash County Emergency Services Director Dave Cauble said. The chemical can explode when heated to high temperatures. Cauble said the blaze just outside Rocky Mount broke out when one of the bearings in the train's main wheels became dry and caught fire about 8:30 p.m.

Lighthouse Lovers Say Lights Can Be Saved

By DANIEL BEEGAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The ravages of nature and vandals are threatening some of the nation's Coast Guard lighthouses, but the once stately buildings can be saved without a lot of federal help, preservationists said.

Some lighthouses can be incorporated into parks or preserved by historical societies, while others can be saved by turning them into restaurants, inns, youth hostels or even vacation homes, the preservationists told a congressional panel Wednesday.

"Inns, bed and breakfasts, restaurants, camp or picnic sites, museums, private homes and other reuses will also make the lights more accessible and open up the lighthouse keepers' history and heritage to the public," Valerie Nelson, executive director of the Lighthouse Preservation Society of Rockport, Mass., told the House Coast Guard and navigation subcommittee.

While some lighthouses already are owned privately or are part of national parks, others still are owned by the Coast Guard.

Formerly, the lights were run by live-in keepers, but as technology advanced, the Coast Guard automated most of the lighthouses still needed as navigational aids.

"The process of automation, begun several decades ago, was carried out, until recently, without sufficient regard for the historic value of lighthouses and their surrounding structures," said Rep. Gerry E. Studds, D-Mass., chairman of the Coast Guard subcommittee of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. "Deterioration, brought on both by natural elements and by vandals, caused many lighthouses to fall into serious disrepair."

Studds said the Coast Guard, because of the shortage of federal dollars, cannot be expected to maintain lighthouses on its own.

Nelson and others said there is no need for that military service to have to do the job alone.

Retired Coast Guard Rear Adm. Richard A. Bauman, testifying for the San Francisco-based U.S. Lighthouse Society, also recommended that the Coast Guard lease more lighthouses to non-profit groups such as states, municipalities or historical societies.

But Bauman said he would stop short of endorsing uses such as inns and fancy restaurants.

F. Ross Holland Jr., a lighthouse historian, testified he feels the best way to save lighthouses is to incorporate them into a park or have them preserved by a historical society.

But not all lights can be saved that way, he said.

"There are a number of potential adaptive uses for light stations as vacation homes, youth hostels, restaurants, shops. Generally, the exteriors of the structures forming the light station complex need to be protected, but often interiors can be altered to meet many modern needs," Holland said.

Nelson said the Coast Guard should alter its leasing policies to make it easier for appropriate commercial operations to be run at lighthouses.

In addition, she said, the Coast Guard should stop using unmanned lighthouses for military housing.

But Coast Guard Rear Adm. Kenneth Wiman disagreed with that recommendation.

Using the lights and their keepers' homes as housing for Coast Guard personnel is both cost-effective and a good way of saving them, Wiman said.

Task Force Told Care Of Elderly Prohibitive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nursing home care, not unexpected illness, is the financial burden that will drive millions of elderly Americans into poverty before their deaths, and few healthy older people realize their jeopardy, an administration task force was told.

Witnesses testifying Wednesday before the presidentially established panel said most elderly people believe wrongly that they're already covered for eventual nursing home care by Medicare or by private supplemental insurance, usually called "medigap" policies.

Too often, witnesses said, it is only when the time comes that an aging person must seek long-term care that they find they have no coverage except Medicaid, the federal-state program for the poor.

And to qualify for Medicaid, they usually must sell off virtually all their assets and spend the proceeds on care until they are impoverished.

Then, Medicaid will pay for their nursing homes — but it also requires that almost all the proceeds from Social Security and private pensions be applied to the bill first.

That grim picture was painted at the first hearing of a task force appointed by Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen to help him develop recommendations for President Reagan.

Reagan has told Bowen to report by year's end on how private business and government can work together to protect Americans from the cost of treating catastrophic illnesses.

But while most people think of catastrophic illness as disease or injury requiring long and expensive hospital care, that actually affects only a tiny fraction of the elderly, witnesses said.

The most common health disaster is entering a nursing home, with estimates that 25 percent of the elderly eventually will need long-term care. Paul L. Willing, executive vice president of the American Health Care Association, called the problem "a basic reality that most people must face in their lives."

A Harvard study released last year of a sample of single 75-year-olds in Massachusetts found that 46 percent would be impoverished within three months of entering a nursing home, and 72 percent would be broke within a year.

"The majority of older people need catastrophic insurance not to insure against the cost of a long hospital stay, but against the uncovered expenses of nursing home care, community-based services and chronic illnesses requiring long-term care," William R. Hutton, executive director of the National Council of Senior Citizens, told the task force.

Florida Will Let Pharmacists Write Some Prescriptions

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida today became the first state in the nation to let pharmacists prescribe drugs for minor ailments, a development heralded by some druggists and advocates for the elderly.

But the law that went into effect today hasn't been greeted enthusiastically by doctors, who warn that misdiagnoses by pharmacists could cause major medical problems for patients who try to heal themselves.

Florida pharmacists can now prescribe shampoo for head lice, certain drugs that are stronger than over-the-counter medicines for ailments like colds and headaches and fluoride products aimed at preventing tooth decay.

Until today those remedies required a doctor's prescription.

Pharmacists will also be allowed to charge customers "professional fees" for the evaluation service and will be required to take patients' drug histories before recommending any prescription medicine.

Pharmacists still won't be able to prescribe drugs for pregnant or nursing mothers, issue refills or prescribe more than a 34-day supply.

Supporters say the law will reduce health-care costs by allowing people who know what ails them to go directly to druggists and bypass doctors' bills. But physicians say self-medication could lull people who are really sick into a false sense of well-being.

"Even in the medical profession, misdiagnoses are a major contributor to malpractice suits being filed," said George Palmer, assistant director of legislative affairs for the Florida Medical Association, which opposed the bill.

"Just because you're a nice guy and have been in the business 20 years, you're not immune to something going wrong."

Failure to abide by the law could be a first-degree misdemeanor, punishable by up to $1,000 fine and a year in jail. Infractions of the rules could result in punishments ranging from a reprimand to revocation of license.

House Passes Bill To Fund FHA Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Housing Administration is preparing to go back into business now that Congress has raised the FHA credit ceiling that was reached this week as a result of the hot housing market.

"My guess is that we will be back in business on Monday," acting FHA chief Silvio J. DeBartolomeis said Wednesday after the House passed the emergency legislation on a voice vote.

The bill, which is expected to be signed into law by President Reagan, "will serve to stave off any disruption in the market" caused by the suspension of FHA's authority to underwrite mortgage insurance.

Arrangements were being made to deliver the bill to Reagan, who is traveling in Asia, so he can sign it into law, DeBartolomeis said. "We are hopeful that the bill will be signed quickly so we can get back into business."

But White House spokesman Dale

Petroskey said it had not been decided whether to send an Air Force plane to the Far East with the bill so Reagan could sign it promptly, or await his return from the Tokyo summit on May 7.

The House acted quickly to accept the Senate version of a bill it already had passed a week ago. The Senate approved an amended version of the House bill Tuesday night.

"It is absolutely essential we do this today because there are a lot of first-time homebuyers out there waiting for closings today," Rep. Chalmers Wylie, R-Ohio, told colleagues.

"This is essential so we can keep the credit allocation markets open for home purchasers," said Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee's housing subcommittee. "There is beginning a chaotic situation in the mortgage market, and I think this is an essential action."

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices dropped again today in early trading, one day after the market suffered its worst single-day point loss in history because of what analysts called investor concern over the economy and the consequences of the Soviet nuclear disaster.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, Wall Street's best-known barometer, fell 5.09 points to 1,778.89.

Broader indicators of stock values also declined. The New York Stock Exchange composite index, which measures all listed issues, fell 0.76 to 134.99. The American Exchange market value index fell 0.87 to 268.10.

Losers outran gainers by a 4-1 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume exceeded 21.4 million shares in the first hour of trading.

The widespread view among market analysts was that anxiety over the economy has intensified because of discouraging Commerce Department statistics about the increasing trade deficit and declining factory orders. Another department report released today showed construction spending fell 1.2 percent last month.

On Wednesday, the Dow Jones industrials plunged 41.91 to 1783.98, the indicator's biggest one-day point loss, eclipsing the previous record plunge of 39.10 points set Jan. 8.

But in percentage terms, the Wednesday drop was only 2.3 percent of the average's total value, far less than the plunge on Black Monday — Oct. 28, 1929 — when the average plummeted 12.9 percent in value.

Losing issues outnumbered advances by about 4 to 1 Wednesday on the NYSE. Big Board volume totaled 147.46 million shares, against 148.77 million in the previous session.

Bingo
MIAMI (AP) — The Seminole Indians have signed a contract for a bingo hall deep in the Everglades that will offer a rich jackpot, the tribe's lawyer said.

"We have to make it attractive enough for people to come out there," Seminole counsel Jim Shore said. Shore refused to say how high the stakes will be. At the tribe's Hollywood bingo hall, stakes run from $10,000 to $150,000.

Martin To Propose 3.2% Raise For State Workers

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin said today he will recommend a 3.2 percent cost-of-living raise for state employees as part of his revised budget for 1986-87, or about a third of the increase sought by the State Employees Association of North Carolina.

In addition, Martin said he would propose eliminating the first step in the payroll schedule for teachers, which would increase the pay for beginning teachers by about 5 percent.

"There is only enough money in recurring funds for a cost-of-living increase," Martin said. "Even to do that, we've got to make some reductions. Some jobs that are vacant will have to be turned in."

The employees association this year recommended a $2,000 raise for each state employee, which Martin said would cost over $350 million. He said the cost-of-living raise he proposes will bring state worker salaries close to what he proposed last year as part of the biennial budget package.

"Last year, I proposed a 7.5 percent raise for state employees, with a reserve for a similar raise in the second year," Martin said. "But the General Assembly instead proposed a bigger pay increase the first year — 10 percent — with no reserve for the second year."

Martin said he expected to have his final budget proposals ready within 10 days.

The governor admittedly dodged questions about the Republican U.S. Senate primary between Rep. Jim Broyhill and Campbell University professor David Funderburk, saying he did not want to jeopardize his chances of "pulling the party together" after the primary.

That race has become increasingly bitter, with Broyhill supporters accusing the National Congressional Club, which is managing Funderburk's campaign, of distorting Broyhill's voting record. The Congressional Club has accused Broyhill of being too quick to compromise conservative principles and of writing the bill that could bring a high-level radioactive waste dump to the state.

"There's no question that there's an intense rivalry over the U.S. Senate nomination," Martin said. "My intention is to be in a position to pull the party together after the primary and I think we will be in a position to do that."

Martin said he has already voted by absentee ballot, and "If you want to know how I voted, it was by absentee ballot."

"I am not going to be drawn into the Republican primary," Martin said. "Both sides agree with that stance, and I would hate to sacrifice that just to get a little dicey quotation. I am not responding to (questions about the race), except evasively."

Lakers Holds Off Mavs, 117-113

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas-Los Angeles playoff series has heated up, said Lakers' Coach Pat Riley, and that's the way he wants it. "I like it this way. I like it intense," Riley said following the Lakers' 117-113 victory over the Mavericks on Wednesday night. "Now I want us to split in Dallas." Defending NBA champion Los Angeles breezed through the opening round of the playoffs, trouncing San Antonio in three games. The Lakers then opened the Western Conference best-of-seven semifinals with a front-running, 130-116 decision over the Mavericks last Sunday. But Dallas came back strong in Game 2, leading most of the way until Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Earvin "Magic" Johnson took over in the waning minutes to give their team the victory and a 2-0 lead in the series. "Nobody yawned through that one," Riley said. "It was an uphill battle for us all the way. This is what the playoffs are all about. This was a great game."

"Dallas has to be very confident going home because of the way they played in this one." The third and fourth games of the series are scheduled Friday night and Sunday in Dallas. Tonight, the Philadelphia 76ers are at Milwaukee, where they beat the Bucks in Game 1 on Tuesday night. Friday, Boston visits Atlanta, with the Celtics leading 2-0, and Houston is at Denver, with the Rockets ahead 2-0. "It was good for us to play a tough game because that's going to be the nature of things the farther we go," said Abdul-Jabbar, who scored eight points in the final 4½ minutes, 12 in the final quarter, and 26 in the game. "Give Dallas credit. They played very well, and they'll come out and play us tough again next time." "It was anybody's game down the stretch, but I think our experience and poise took over and won the game," said Johnson, who had 10 points in the closing period and 21 for the evening. "I think having a close game like this will help us. What we have to do is come out early and play aggressive like we did in Game 1." The Lakers' victory overshadowed a fine outing by Derek Harper of Dallas, who had 19 points, 16 assists and seven steals. "Losing hurts, but now we realize we can play with these guys," Harper said. "I really think we have the advantage going back to Dallas." "If we can put a couple of games like this together at home, we'll have a good chance of evening things up." Mark Aguirre led the Mavericks' scoring with 28 points, but he fouled out with 5:33 left and the game tied at 102. "I was aware of my foul trouble, but in that situation, you've got to play defense," Aguirre said. "It's tough to deal with, but you've got to survive and come back stronger." The Lakers, who had trailed since midway in the second quarter, tied the contest at 100-all with 6:11 remaining. The clubs then traded baskets until the Lakers made it 114-110 with 1:31 left on a hook by Abdul-Jabbar and a pair of free throws by Johnson. Another Abdul-Jabbar hook and a free throw by James Worthy in the final minute gave the Lakers a four-point advantage. "I didn't think they were flat, I thought we played well," said Dallas Coach Dick Motta. "Los Angeles has one of the great finishers in the league, and he came through." "The turning point was when Kareem's hook was blocked with the shot clock running down and he got his own rebound and made the hook (making it 108-108)." "That guy has done that to me so many times in my (coaching) career."

CAA To Have Own Officials

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The upstart Colonial Athletic Association, responding to growing complaints from its men's basketball coaches, said Wednesday it will stop using Eastern College Athletic Conference officials and will form its own officiating bureau instead. CAA Commissioner Tom Yeager said Dan Woolridge, who retired this past season after 27 years as a collegiate official, will head the new bureau. Woolridge, 51, of Salem, has worked games in the Atlantic Coast, Metro, Southeastern, Sun Belt and Ohio Valley conferences.

prompted by increasing dissatisfaction with the officials from the Centerville, Mass.-based ECAC. The CAA recently completed its first year of men's basketball competition. Its members — American, East Carolina, George Mason, James Madison, Navy, North Carolina-Wilmington, Richmond and William & Mary — formerly comprised the ECAC-South conference.

Lady Rams Near Conference Title

FARMVILLE — Greene Central began the countdown toward the 1986 Eastern Plains softball championship with a 17-1 romp over Farmville Central Wednesday. The victory brought the Lady Rams to 9-0 in the league with three games left to play. They have clinched one of the league's playoff spots. The Lady Rams got all they needed in the first inning, scoring three times. Stephanie Streeter reached on an error and Chanel Hooker singled. Denise Warren then sacrificed Streeter in with the first run. Renee Sullivan reached on an error and a second misplay allowed Hooker to score. Laticia Warren was safe on still another error, allowing Sullivan to score. Greene Central went on to add six in the second, five in the third, two in the sixth and one in the seventh. Farmville Central's only run scored in the seventh inning.

Trenette Daniels and Laticia Warren each had three hits to lead Greene Central. Streeter, Hooker and Dalen Herring each added two. No one had more than one for Farmville Central. The Lady Rams, 15-2 overall, can clinch at least a share of the championship — and top seeding for the league in the playoffs — with a win over South Lenoir at home on Tuesday. Farmville Central, now 4-11 overall and 2-9 in league play, travels to Ayden-Grifton on Tuesday.

West Carteret.....11
Washington.....3

MOREHEAD CITY — West Carteret High School spotted Washington an early lead, then came back to take an 11-3 softball victory in Coastal Conference action Wednesday. Washington got the initial run in the game in the top of the second, but West Carteret tied it up with one in its half of the frame. The Lady Patriots then pushed ahead with two in the third. Washington came back with one in the fourth to trail, 3-2. But in the bottom of the fourth, West Carteret scored three times to put the game away, taking a 6-2 lead. G. Gilbert walked and Laura Brown reached on an error. Sanora Lambert singled in Gilbert and D. Corbett reached on an error, scoring both Brown and Lambert. The Patriots added two in the fifth and three in the sixth while Washington got one more in the fifth. Mary Green led the West Carteret hitting with three while Lambert had two. Gloria Sherrod led Washington with four while Wanda Ange and Amy Youmans each had two. Washington dips to 3-6 in Coastal play and 3-10 overall. The Lady Pack is idle until May 9, when it hosts North Lenoir, pending the rescheduling of Tuesday's postponed game with D.H. Conley.

Brown To Join Bucs

East Carolina University has announced the signing of Howard Brown to a basketball grant-in-aid. Brown is a 6-4 guard out of Sheraton Junior College in Wyoming. He will be a sophomore in eligibility. Brown averaged 21.3 points a game and 11.5 rebounds with 7.8 assists as a freshman on the 23-8 Shearson team last season, earning his all-Wyoming honors and all-region junior college selection. Brown is a native of Raleigh where he attended Millbrook High School, playing in the 1984 North Carolina High School All-Star game, scoring 24 points. At Millbrook, he was an all-East and all-State selection. "He's a big guard who is very versatile. We feel he can come right in and play the point for us. But he can play off-guard or small forward as well. That's what kind of athlete he is. He's very aggressive at both ends of the floor and I think he'll really be as asset to us right away." This brings to five the number of recruits signed by the Pirates.

Maintaining streams and waterways on the City's storm drainage system is one of the responsibilities of the Public Works Department.

Thurmond Just Misses No-Hitter

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Maybe next time, Mark Thurmond should get his wife to rub a rabbit's foot.

"This afternoon, I told my wife if she rubbed my feet, I'd throw a no-hitter. And she did," Thurmond said Wednesday night after he almost upheld his part of the bargain, pitching a one-hitter against St. Louis as the San Diego Padres beat the Cardinals 5-0.

Thurmond took a perfect game into the seventh inning before Willie McGee's one-out blooper fell in shallow center field for a single. Thurmond allowed only one other baserunner, a two-out walk in the ninth inning to Vince Coleman, and struck out three.

McGee's hit landed just beyond the outstretched glove of shortstop Garry Templeton and in front of charging center fielder Kevin McReynolds.

"When he hit it, I thought there was no doubt it's in there," Thurmond said.

"It was fun," said Thurmond, 2-1, who entered the game in San Diego with a 6.16 earned run average. "I would have liked to have had the no-hitter, but I'll settle for the win and the shutout."

In other National League games, New York downed Atlanta 8-1, Montreal beat Cincinnati 8-0, San Francisco edged Pittsburgh 6-5 in 12 innings, Houston held off Philadelphia 1-0 and Los Angeles defeated Chicago 4-0.

No Padres pitcher has ever thrown a no-hitter, and Thurmond's one-hitter was the 10th in team history. Templeton and McReynolds both knew they would not be able to preserve Thurmond's no-hit bid when McGee lofted his soft fly to center.

"That ball was just out of reach of both of us," Templeton said. "I gave it a good shot, but there was nothing we could do about it. We both felt bad about it."

"When I didn't hear Mac, I had the feeling I was going to have to make the play. I saw Mac out of the corner of my eye and I realized he didn't have a chance," Templeton said. "I put my glove out hoping I would have a chance. I thought I have a chance to catch it, but the farther I ran the farther it kept going."

Said McReynolds: "I wasn't even close to it. I didn't get the greatest jump on the ball. I knew the only chance was if Tempy caught the ball."

McReynolds did help Thurmond with his bat, driving in two runs with a homer and a double. Thurmond helped himself with an RBI single.

The loss was the ninth in the last 10 games for the Cardinals.

"The way we've been going lately, everybody looks like Lefty Gomez or Grover Alexander," St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog said.

McGee said Thurmond "pitched a good game, the score and hit totals show you that."

"We hit the ball hard at times but it was right at them," McGee said.

Doubles by Tony Gwynn and McReynolds gave San Diego a 1-0 lead in the first inning against Rick Horton, 0-3.

McReynolds hit his third homer leading off the third, and a wild pitch and Thurmond's run-scoring single made it 3-0 in the fourth. Steve Garvey homered in the fifth, his third of the season.

The loudest noise the Cardinals made until McGee's hit came in the fifth inning when Jack Clark took a called third strike. Clark and Herzog vehemently protested and were ejected by home plate umpire Harry Wendtstedt.

Mets 8, Braves 1

Darryl Strawberry went 5-for-5, including a two-run homer, and Gary Carter hit the 250th home run of his career, sparking New York to its 11th straight victory. The Mets' winning streak ties a team record.

Dwight Gooden, 4-0, pitched six-hit ball for eight innings. The only run he gave up was pinch-homer to Dale Murphy in the fifth inning.

Murphy suffered a nine-stitch cut in his right hand Tuesday night when he ran into the center-field fence, and Atlanta team officials had said he would be out of action for a week. But Murphy stepped up and connected for his fifth homer of the season, and also played in his 676th consecutive game — the longest active streak in the major leagues.

Strawberry set a personal high with his five hits, which included his two-run homer and a double. The visiting Mets rapped 13 hits off Joe Johnson, 3-1, and two relievers.

Giants 6, Pirates 5

Chris Brown tied the game with a sacrifice fly in the ninth inning and then won it in the 12th with a two-out, bases-loaded single. The victory gave San Francisco a 13-8 record, its first winning April since 1973.

The Giants scored the winning run as Rob Thompson led off the 12th with a single against Bob Patterson, 0-2. Joel Youngblood beat out a bunt single, Bob Brenly sacrificed and Dan Gladden was intentionally walked, loading the bases.

Rookie Will Clark struck out, but Brown lined a single into left-center for his game-winner.

Sid Bream homered for visiting Pittsburgh.

Dodgers 4, Cubs 0

Bob Welch scattered six hits, and Mike Marshall, Franklin Stubbs and Steve Sax hit home runs that paced host Los Angeles to its fourth straight victory.

Welch, 3-1, struck out six and walked one in his second shutout of the season.

Marshall hit a two-run homer in the fourth off Chicago's Dennis Eckersley, 0-2. It was Marshall's sixth home run of the season.

Stubbs led off the seventh with his third homer, and Sax opened the eighth with his first home run.

Expos 8, Reds 0

Jay Tibbs shut out his former teammates with a four-hitter and Hubie Brooks drove home four runs to lead Montreal past Cincinnati.

Tibbs, 3-0, struck out eight and walked three in sending the host Reds to their fifth straight loss. The Expos acquired Tibbs in an off-season trade with Cincinnati.

Tim Raines had a double and three singles and Tim Wallach hit his fourth homer of the season. Montreal finished with 13 hits and saddled Tom Browning, a 20-game winner last season, with his third loss in three decisions this year.

Astros 1, Phillies 0

Mike Scott pitched six strong innings and got relief help from Frank DiPino, Charles Kerfeld and Dave Smith as Houston held off the Phillies.

Glenn Davis homered in the fourth inning for the game's only run in Philadelphia.

Scott, 3-2, gave up six hits in 6 1-3 innings. He was working on his second straight shutout when pinch-hitter Greg Gross led off the seventh with a single.

One out later, Rick Schu singled Gross to second. DiPino retired Von Hayes on a grounder that put runners on second and third, and Kerfeld intentionally walked Mike Schmidt to load the bases before getting Glenn Wilson on a pop-up.

Kerfeld pitched a hitless eighth, and Smith threw a hitless ninth for his seventh save.

Davis hit his fourth home run of the season against Kevin Gross, 1-3.

Only two pitchers in the history of the major leagues have won over 400 games. Cy Young is the all-time champ with 511 and Walter Johnson had 416.

Greene Central Wins Tennis

PIKEVILLE — Greene Central won two of the three doubles finals and came away with its first-ever Eastern Plains Conference tennis championship Wednesday.

The Rams finished the afternoon with a total of 28 points while regular season champion Charles B. Aycock finished with 26. Farmville Central took third over Ayden-Grifton, 6 points to 3.

The championship went down to what really was a match between the Rams and Falcons as all of their entries made it to the finals. The two teams split the singles competition, each winning three, before the doubles ended it.

Steve Harrison and Brian Minchew teamed to win the number one doubles match and Timmy Sauls and Mark Hall came up with the win at number two, insuring the Rams of the championship.

Harrison, Sauls and Minchew also won singles titles for the Rams.

The teams return to action next week in the sectionals.

S. Pitt League

- Hornets ..... 12
- Bethel Mets ..... 2

BETHEL — The Hornets gained a 12-2 baseball victory over the Bethel Mets Wednesday in the Southern Pitt Little League.

Daniel Beacham hurled the victory, recording nine strikeouts and getting a one-hitter. The Hornet hitting was led by Beacham with two.

Bethel's only hit was recorded by William Perkins.

The Hornets are 2-0 while the Mets are 0-2.

Little League

- Pepsi-Cola ..... 6
- True Value ..... 3

Dante Mayo hurled a four-hitter as Pepsi-Cola took a 6-3 baseball victory over True Value Hardware in the Tar Heel Little League Wednesday. It was the opening game for both teams.

Pepsi scored twice in the first inning to take the lead, then added two more in the second to wrap it up.

Mayo led off the second by reaching on an error. Geoff Stallings followed with a double, driving in the run. A wild pitch and an error allowed Stallings to come the rest of the way for a 4-0 lead.

Pepsi picked up single runs in the fourth and fifth innings to wrap up its scoring. All three True Value runs crossed in the third inning.

Mayo struck out nine in getting the win. He also led the Pepsi hitting with two. Brooks Honeycutt led True Value with two hits.

- Coca-Cola ..... 8
- Kiwanis ..... 1

Adam Charlton and Hollis Gunn each hit home runs and Mark Taylor pitched a one-hitter as Coca-Cola rolled up an 8-1 baseball victory over the Kiwanis in North State Little League action Wednesday.

Taylor struck out 16 along the way, allowing only a third-inning double by Walter Peadin. Peadin went on to score the only run for the Kiwanis in that inning.

Coke got all the scoring it needed in the first inning, getting a pair of runs. Charlton doubled and advanced on a wild pitch. Gunn then rapped his homer, driving in two runs.

Two more crossed in the third, when Charlton hit a solo homer to lead off the inning. Coke added three more in the fourth and one in the fifth to wrap up the scoring.

Ken Coward, Taylor, Gunn and Charlton each had two hits to lead Coke.

Elliott's Car Is Running Now

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Bill Elliott's car is beginning to perform like it did during his record-breaking 1985 NASCAR season, and the 30-year-old driver said he may have a chance to set more records during today's qualifying for the pole position at the Winston 500.

Elliott, of Dawsonville, Ga., drove his Ford Thunderbird around the 2.66-mile Alabama International Motor Speedway Wednesday at an average speed of 209.005 mph.

During last year's qualifying for the Winston 500, Elliott set a stock car record with a speed of 209.398 mph — and he didn't rule out a faster run during today's session.

"I think it depends on the weather," he said. "The car's running good, and if nothing happens, I think it can be done. But a lot of cars are running good, a lot of cars."

Today's qualifying at the Talladega tri-oval will determine the first 20 starters in the 40-car field for Sunday's race.

Two drivers stayed close to Elliott during time trials on Wednesday.

Geoff Bodine and Tim Richmond, who both drive Chevrolets owned by Charlotte, N.C., auto dealer Rick Hendrick, had speeds of 208.637 mph and 207.333 mph, respectively.

Other top speeds were: Bobby Allison at 206.803 in a Buick; Morgan Sheppard at 206.785 in a Buick; Neil Bonnett at 206.522 in a Chevrolet; and Rick Wilson at 206.348 in an Oldsmobile.

Cale Yarborough, who had tested at better than 210 mph in his Ford and was expected to be Elliott's chief challenger for the pole position, was one of several drivers who blew engines Wednesday.

"It's been bad," said Yarborough, a former record holder at Talladega. "We lost our shot at the pole when we lost our first engine, but we hope to run better Thursday."

Red Sox Hurlers Fan 16 More

By The Associated Press
The Seattle Mariners are having trouble finding some things... such as victories and the baseball.

The Mariners dropped a 9-4 decision to the Boston Red Sox Wednesday night for their fifth consecutive defeat. They are last in the American League West at 7-14 after a 5-3 start.

On Wednesday, the Mariners struck out 16 times against three Boston pitchers a night after Roger Clemens fanned a major-league record 20 batters. The 36 strikeouts broke the two-game total of 32 Seattle had set Tuesday night.

In 21 games the Mariners have whiffed 202 times, or 9.6 times a game. Over a 162-game season the total would be 1,555. The major-league record was set by the 1968 New York Mets who struck out 1,203 times.

The chief contributor has been outfielder Phil Bradley, who has struck out 22 times in his last 48 at-bats.

"They're young players and are going to have to adjust," Seattle Manager Chuck Cottier said. "We've run into some good pitching, but all of it hasn't been that good."

Elsewhere in the American League it was, New York 3, Minnesota 2; Toronto 6, California 4; Kansas City 7, Detroit 3; Milwaukee 5, Oakland 1; Chicago 8, Baltimore 6; and Cleveland 6, Texas 4.

"You know things are going bad for them," joked Boston relief ace Bob Stanley, "when I come in and strike out two batters in a row to end the game."

"It's always frustrating," said free-swinging veteran Gorman Thomas as he ducked into the shower to avoid interviews in the Seattle clubhouse.

Ed Romero's two-run, bases-loaded double-broke a tie as Boston rallied for five runs in the seventh. The Red Sox added two insurance runs in the eighth. They finished with 13 hits, including three by Jim Rice, and 10 walks.

Boston starter Bruce Hurst struck out eight and reliever Sammy Stewart, 1-1, fanned six before getting help from Stanley.

Yankees 3, Twins 2

At New York, Don Mattingly hit a three-run homer — his first of the season — off Minnesota's Bert Blyleven in the fifth inning as the Yankees finished with 14-6 record in April, erasing the 13-10 mark they posted in 1974.

"I was thinking about not having hit a home run, but it wasn't a major distraction," Mattingly said. "I was glad to get it in a situation that helped us win a ballgame."

The Twins' Kirby Puckett had four hits to run his hitting streak to 13 games. During his streak Puckett is 27-for-60 for a .450 pace with seven homers, four doubles, a triple and 14 RBIs.

Royals 7, Tigers 3

At Detroit, Argenis Salazar doubled home the tying run and scored on Willie Wilson's single to key a five-run rally in the ninth inning that lifted Kansas City over Detroit. The Royals did most of their damage against relief ace Willie Hernandez, 1-1, who took over for starter Dan Petry.

"I had been watching Salazar for a couple of years and I liked him," said KC Manager Dick Howser, who got Salazar in a trade April 2 with the New York Mets. "If he ever gets strong enough to hit, he's going to be something for us."

Blue Jays 6, Angels 4

At Toronto, Jesse Barfield broke out of a power slump and hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning to lead Toronto over California.

Barfield was given a shot of cortisone earlier this week to help ease the pain in his left wrist.

"I woke up about 3 in the morning the other night and couldn't even move my wrist," said Barfield. "It was a pretty scary feeling."

Rick Burleson's home run had given the Angels a 4-3 lead in the seventh. Burleson's bases-empty shot — his first since Sept. 9, 1981 — came on a 3-2 pitch from winner Doyle Alexander.

White Sox 8, Orioles 6

At Chicago, Ron Kittle's two-run homer capped a six-run third inning to lead Chicago over Baltimore. It was Kittle's 100th major-league homer.

Kittle dedicated the homer to his father. "He deserves the 100th more than I do and it has nothing to do with birth or anything," Kittle said.

"He has meant a lot to my baseball career," Kittle said. "He keeps my head at an even keel and my personality, too."

White Sox' starter Richard Dotson staggered through five innings. Bill Dawley pitched three innings and Bob James finished for his fourth save.

Brewers 5, A's 1

At Milwaukee, Mike Felder drove in three runs and Ted Higuera scattered five hits as the Brewers defeated Oakland.

"He's been outstanding the last three games," Milwaukee Manager George Bamberger said. "Higuera can pitch as well as anybody. He has three great pitches and can throw strikes."

Milwaukee overcame a four-hit, eight-strikeout performance by A's pitcher Jose Rijo, and a bases-empty home run by Dusty Baker, to give Higuera his third victory against one defeat. Higuera struck out eight and walked one.

Indians 6, Rangers 4

At Arlington, Pat Tabler hit a two-run homer and Julio Franco added a two-run double as Cleveland defeated Texas for the Indians' fourth consecutive victory. The game was delayed 2 hours, 4 minutes in the top of the fifth inning because of rain.

Don Schulze, 2-0, struck out four in 3 1-3 innings of relief and Ernie Camacho pitched 1 1-3 innings for his sixth save.

Azinger Hopes To Learn From Losses

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Paul Azinger had two chances to win on the PGA Tour this year. Both got away.

Azinger, however, said he turned the losses at San Diego and Hawaii into what he called "positive experiences."

"I benefitted from San Diego. I benefitted from Hawaii. It's a pressure-packed situation out there, when you're trying to win maybe $90,000 and you make a couple of mistakes and win $1,000," Azinger, a co-leader after the first round of the PGA Tour's richest event, said. "It's pressure for me, anyway."

"But the more often I get in those positions, the more comfortable I feel. I learned from San Diego and Hawaii. You just got to keep knocking on the door."

And he rapped at the door again Wednesday, compiling a no-bogey, 8-under-par 64 that put him in a tie with Jeff Grygiel for the first-round lead in the Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational.

The five-day, 90-hole tournament, played over three courses at this desert resort, offers $1,150,000 in official prize money with $207,000 to the winner.

The format has the 156 professionals playing one round on each of the three courses, each day with a four-man amateur team, before the field is cut for the final two rounds at the Las Vegas Country Club.

Azinger played his opening round at the Desert Inn course, generally regarded as the most difficult of the three courses.

"I don't think I've ever broken 74 (there) before," Azinger said. "I'm glad to have it out of the way."

Grygiel, who will play Desert Inn today, won 20 mini-tour events before joining the PGA circuit last year. He hit an 8-iron to within two feet for a birdie on his final hole at Spanish Trail to tie for the lead. He, too, played without a bogey and required only 30 strokes over his back nine.

Gary Koch, with a 65 at the Las Vegas Country Club was one stroke off the pace.

The group at 66 included Roger Maltbie, John Cook, Tony Cerda, rookie Dave Rummells, Jack Renner and Dan Halldorson. Rummells, Renner and Halldorson played at Spanish Trail. Cook was at Desert Inn while Maltbie and Cerda were at Las Vegas.

"The weather was so good there was no excuse to do anything but play well," Cook said of the sunny weather and gentle breezes. And more than half the field took advantage of the conditions to break par 72 on each of the courses.

Fuzzy Zoeller and Tom Watson were not among them, however. Zoeller, who needs to couple a victory here with his triumph at Pebble Beach to collect a $250,000 bonus, had a 72. Watson was one shot higher. Defending title-holder Curtis Strange, a winner last week in Houston, could do no better than 71.

Azinger, who will play at Spanish Trace today, dominated the par-5 holes as the key to his 64. He birdied the first three, then hit a 30-yard drive on the 15th, needed only a 6-iron second shot, and dropped an 18-foot putt for an eagle.

Grygiel, one of the last men to finish, bolted into contention with a string of four consecutive birdies coming home, then got his share of the lead with the last-hole birdie in the desert twilight.

Kinston In Tennis Win

Kinston handed Greenville a 5-4 defeat in a 4.0 Division tennis match in the Downeast Tennis League Wednesday.

Cubs Rip Rocky Mt.

ROCKY MOUNT — Rose High School's junior varsity baseball team took a 10-4 win over Rocky Mount Wednesday.

Jeff Mahoney hurled the victory for the Rampants, earning his fourth victory on the year.

Adrian Barnhill led the Rampant hitting with four hits while Dallas McPherson and Wes Jackson each had two hits. McPherson had a triple among his two.

Rose is now 9-0 on the season, and plays host to Beddingfield today.

Farm Commodity Prices Keep Upward Spiral

By BILL SING
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

U.S. farm commodity prices rose sharply for the second straight day Wednesday amid speculation that a second meltdown at the Soviet nuclear plant in Chernobyl could further damage that nation's grain and livestock production and increase purchases of U.S. food overseas.

Prices of grain, soybean, livestock, cotton and sugar future contracts rose on U.S. commodity exchanges, with the prices of some contracts rising to the limit allowed for daily trading. More price rises may come, some analysts said, depending on future news about where the clouds of nuclear gases are blown and whether the fallout is strong enough to sicken livestock, contaminate crops and milk, pollute waterways, make fields unsafe to work or sterilize land.

"If the radiation is not severe, the Soviets just might decide to use the crops anyway" and production might not be affected much, said John Urbanchuk, director of international agriculture at Wharton Econometric Forecasting Associates, a Philadelphia-based economic research firm. "But if it's real severe, they might not be able to harvest at all."

The Chernobyl reactor site in the Soviet Ukraine is on the northern edge of an important farming region that produces about 25 percent of the Soviet Union's grain, as well as much of its sugar beets and meat. "It's the Iowa of the Soviet Union," one expert said.

If Soviet crop production is hurt, it could be good economic news for American farmers beleaguered by a worldwide grain glut, depressed exports and prices. U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc nations — which had been expected to be cut nearly in half this year from last year — could recover somewhat. However, partly because of political reasons, it is not clear how much the sales would increase. The Soviet Union, the world's largest importer of grain, has in recent years bought more of its grain from non-U.S. sources.

But the nuclear disaster could be a blow to a recovering Soviet agricultural system and the economic policies of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev. The Soviet harvest this year has been expected to be one of the best in years, after generally lackluster harvests and bad weather for much of past decade. The higher production was expected to cut Soviet imports of grain worldwide by as much as 40 percent. Gorbachev and other Soviet leaders also had hoped to upgrade the Soviet diet by producing more meat.

The nuclear disaster could also hurt production of dairy products and pork in Scandinavian and Eastern European nations, where increased levels of radiation have been detected. Denmark, for example, supplies 20 percent of the world's pork exports. Poland is a major supplier of ham and other pork products to other Eastern bloc nations.

However, analysts said it is still highly unclear how much damage, if any, the disaster will actually have on Soviet or European food production because of the lack of information about the extent of radioactive fallout and lack of scientific knowledge about the impact of radiation on crops.

News that winds blowing clouds of radioactive gases had shifted Tuesday in a southeasterly direction — after initially blowing toward the northwest and away from the crop regions — further jeopardized Soviet crops.

"But we don't have a lot of experience with this kind of thing," analyst Urbanchuk said. "There have been nuclear accidents in the past, but nothing of this scale and not in an agricultural area."

It also is not clear how badly the fallout will contaminate Soviet water supplies and soil. Such contamination might not affect current crops — the winter wheat crop will be harvested within the next two months — but could harm growing conditions "for a number of years," said William O'Neill, research director for Rudolf Wolf Futures Inc., a New York commodities brokerage.

W. Texas Races Are Different

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — West of the Pecos where men are men and women are women, the politicians are ... well, different.

One candidate in Saturday's primary is based in a psychiatric ward, another bellies up to his campaign from a bar, and a third is dead.

Two others hit the campaign trail running just as soon as they posted bail and got out of jail.

Hoss Garvey has set up temporary campaign headquarters in the psychiatric wing of the county hospital, where he was confined for eight days after allegedly throwing two bowling balls through a neighbor's window.

"I am running for county judge. I will always run, that's why they made me wear my tennis shoes," said Garvey, 32, a real estate investor and country singer, as he was led away after his competency hearing Wednesday.

County Court-At-Law Judge Herb Cooper ordered Garvey committed for observation and treatment for 90 days.

Walter McGhee, a veteran justice of the peace, is being attacked by his two opponents, who don't think it's quite right that his campaign headquarters is a bar in northeast El Paso. McGhee predicts a landslide re-election.

The name of District Judge Edwin Berliner remains on the ballot even though he died in March, too late to get it removed. Despite that, opponent Peter S. Peca Jr., a political unknown, is considered an underdog in the Democratic primary.

"Some people may not want to vote for a man who's dead, but a lot of people think (Berliner) was a good man and that he should go through life and through death undefeated," said Harry Guilford, secretary of El Paso County's Democratic Party.

The Republican Party has no candidates running for the district judgeship, so should Berliner be nominated, the Democratic Party would select his replacement, who automatically would win the November election.

Meanwhile, El Paso County Attorney Danny Anchondo, 39, who was appointed in January and is seeking re-election to the post, is free on bail of $5,000 on a felony charge of possession of cocaine.

Anchondo, who was indicted Tuesday by a grand jury, says his arrest was politically motivated. His brother is also charged.

County Commission candidate Michael Webster, who was released from jail Tuesday on $5,000 bail on a felony theft charge, also says the charge is political.

Richard Hobbs, Webster's former campaign manager, has accused the candidate of punching him and refusing to return a stove, washer, dryer, refrigerator and television set. No assault charges have been filed.

Wall Street Reflects Biggest Daily Loss As Dow Index Nosedives

By CHRISTOPHER LINDSAY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A stunning stock price retreat on Wall Street may in fact merely be a regrouping and not a precursor of a greater slump, analysts say.

The market plummeted Wednesday with the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials losing 41.91 to close at 1,783.98. It was the biggest loss in absolute terms for a single day, eclipsing the record 39.10 point drop on Jan. 8.

Analysts said the big drop was no cause for panic. The market just needs to relax after climbing so far so fast, they said, pointing out that when Wall Street started its surge last fall the average was below the 1,300 level.

But some investors rushed to sell stocks and collect profits — or limit their losses — in case the market gives up more ground. Part of the action was attributed to automatic "program selling" linked to stock futures indexes.

In other economic news Wednesday:

—The House gave final congressional approval to emergency legislation reviving the Federal Housing Administration's authority to insure home mortgages. The White House indicated President Reagan will sign it.

—The government said the U.S. trade deficit swelled to $14.5 billion in March as imported manufactured goods flooded the country.

—The Commerce Department also reported that orders to U.S. factories for manufactured goods fell 2.3 percent in March, the second decline in a row and the biggest drop in almost two years.

—Congress, tied up for weeks last fall in a battle over increasing the national debt ceiling, will have to face the issue again before the end of August, said Assistant Treasury Secretary Charles O. Sethness.

The administration's latest estimates showed that the national debt would total $2.11 trillion at the end of September, almost $30 billion over the current limit of $2.08 trillion, Sethness said.

Last fall, Treasury Secretary James Baker came under sharp criticism for resorting to some fancy bookkeeping techniques to keep the government afloat while Congress debated raising the limit.

Sethness said the Treasury is negotiating with congressional leaders over a proposal to take away Baker's power to avoid the debt limit by such maneuvers as removing investments from the Social Security trust funds.

At the housing agency, Silvio J. DeBartolomeis, FHA's acting administrator, said: "My guess is that we will be back in business on Monday."

The bill "will serve to stave off any disruption in the market," he said.

DeBartolomeis said arrangements were being made to immediately deliver the bill to Reagan, traveling in Asia.

The bill would allow the FHA to resume issuing mortgage insurance and revive the authority of the Government National Mortgage Association to guarantee mortgage-backed securities.

The March trade report showed that America already is receiving substantial benefits from lower oil prices.

Even with the fall in the oil bill, total imports rose to $33.4 billion. U.S. exports were up as well, rising 6.6 percent to $18.91 billion, their highest level in a year.

'Thinking Machine'

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — A rapid-thinking computer that processes information thousands of times faster than conventional machines could be one of the most significant advances in years, experts say.

The computer, called the Connection Machine, is able to process up to 64,000 pieces of information at once. Conventional computers process information in a sequence, piece by piece.

Thinking Machines Corp. said the larger version of its machine, which will cost $3 million, can perform 1 billion instructions per second. In contrast, a traditional mainframe computer performs 25 million instructions per second.

"It's a tremendous advance," said Thomas Martin, a computer expert with the Arthur D. Little consulting firm.

Civil Rights Proponents Hail Court Decision

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civil rights groups are hailing as a breakthrough in eliminating racial bias in the courtroom a Supreme Court ruling that bars prosecutors from ever disqualifying potential jurors because of race.

By a 7-2 vote Wednesday, the justices strictly limited the use by prosecutors of peremptory, or automatic challenges, to shape a jury to their liking. The decision was a rebuff to the Reagan administration, which defended the use of such challenges in a Kentucky case.

Steve Raiston of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund said the ruling "will go far in finally eliminating all discriminatory practices and insuring that juries are truly representative of their communities."

He added: "The misuse of peremptories has become the standard method for excluding blacks from jury service. The problem is nationwide in scope, with cases involving the issue arising in New York, California, Illinois and Massachusetts as well as in the South."

Millard Farmer, an Atlanta defense lawyer, said the decision "will mean that black people have an opportunity to have a fairer jury and it will mean that racial discrimination is one step closer toward being eliminated in the courtroom."

And Justice Thurgood Marshall, the high court's only black member, called the decision "a historic step toward eliminating the shameful practice of racial discrimination in the selection of juries."

The prosecution and defense are allowed a number of peremptory challenges in criminal cases that permit them to disqualify — without giving a reason — potential jurors. Under this ruling, the prosecution would have to show that its decision to exclude a potential juror was not racially motivated.

The court said excluding potential jurors from any criminal trial because of their race violates the equal-protection rights of defendants and of those people excluded.

In a separate decision, the court said murder defendants facing a possible death sentence must be allowed to ask potential jurors about their racial views if the killing was interracial.

The juror-exclusion case revises a 1965 high court ruling that barred systematic exclusion of black prospective jurors, but denied defendants the right to attack as racially discriminatory a prosecutor's use of individual peremptory challenges.

The 1965 ruling placed "a crippling burden of proof" on defendants in challenging prosecutors' tactics, Justice Lewis F. Powell said Wednesday for the court.

The court threw out James Kirkland Batson's conviction on charges of second-degree burglary and receiving stolen property stemming from the theft of two purses in Jefferson County, Ky.

Batson, who is black, was convicted by an all-white jury after four blacks among the people called as potential jurors were disqualified by a state prosecutor using his peremptory challenges.

Wednesday's decision said prosecutors now must show "that permissible racially neutral selection criteria and procedures have produced" all-white or predominantly white juries.

"The harm from discriminatory jury selection extends beyond that inflicted on the defendant and the excluded juror to touch the entire community," Powell said. "Selection procedures that purposefully exclude black persons from juries undermine public confidence in the fairness of our system of justice."

The Reagan administration sided with Kentucky prosecutors in urging that prosecutors be allowed broad discretion in use of peremptory challenges.

A prosecutor's use of the automatic challenge to eliminate a black person from the jury does not on its face violate the defendant's rights, the administration said.

Nothing in Wednesday's decision bars defense lawyers from using their peremptory challenges to exclude potential jurors based on their race, because equal-protection guarantees protect individuals — in this case, defendants — not the government.

Besides Powell and Marshall, the majority included Justices William J. Brennan, Byron R. White, Harry A. Blackmun, John Paul Stevens and Sandra Day O'Connor.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and William H. Rehnquist dissented. The court also voted 7-2 to throw out the death sentence of convicted Virginia murderer Willie Lloyd Turner, who is black, for the 1978 killing of W. Jack Smith Jr., a white jewelry store owner in Franklin, Va.

White, writing the court's main opinion in the case, said, "A capital defendant accused of an interracial crime is entitled to have prospective jurors informed of the race of the victim and questioned on the issue of racial bias."

White said trial judges have the authority to choose the number and form of such questions, including whether potential jurors should be questioned as a group or individually.

Budget Facing Threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bipartisan fiscal 1987 budget threatens to unravel after the Senate voted to raise taxes to keep alive the lone welfare program slated for elimination.

"That's what's called a budget meltdown," said Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., after a 55-42 vote restored the work incentive program for welfare recipients known as WIN.

President Reagan and Senate GOP conservatives, including Dole, oppose the budget drafted by the Senate Budget Committee. The plan cuts the president's military spending request by $25 billion and has $12 million more in taxes than Reagan proposed, while rejecting many of the president's proposed domestic cuts.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the budget committee, has called his panel's proposal a politically realistic way of reaching the $144 billion deficit target Congress must meet under the Gramm-Rudman law.

In more than a week of debate, the Senate has shown little willingness to make deep domestic cuts — and has added new taxes. Maintaining the WIN program costs $174 million in taxes in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 and $590 million over the next three years.

Senate leaders had planned to wrap up budget consideration tonight, but Dole sounded pessimistic after the WIN vote.

"The vote was 'an indication of what a weak budget we have before us,'" he said, "I would say the chances for compromise are not very good."

Ten Republicans joined 45 Democrats in approving the amendment offered by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., to preserve the WIN program. The counseling, job training, and other WIN subsidies encouraged recipients to return to work, reducing costs in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children welfare program, Moynihan said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., called WIN, "the lifeline, the hand up rather than the handout."

But Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., argued that three-fourths of the money spent on WIN was eaten up by government overhead, and other existing programs could duplicate its benefits more efficiently.

Reagan proposed eliminating more than 40 domestic programs, but the Senate rejected that package last week, leaving only three: WIN, federal revenue sharing with local governments, and the selling of the Conrail freight railroad. An attempt to revive revenue sharing was defeated.

Delaying a final budget vote until next week would give Dole more time to draft a substitute plan, and the Senate's social schedule has been helping stretch out the debate.

GOP Says Contra Aid Faces Strings

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans admitted defeat in their attempt to win an unfettered vote on President Reagan's $100 million aid request for Contra rebels in Nicaragua, virtually assuring that any military assistance would be tied with strings Reagan doesn't want.

It marks another setback for Reagan's plan to supply $30 million in non-lethal and $70 million in military aid to the Contras, whom he calls freedom-fighters.

House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., conceded Wednesday that majority Democrats have the votes to delay indefinitely renewed House consideration of the plan. Earlier he had said he hoped to have the vote as early as mid-May.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said he will bring the Contra aid issue to a vote during the week of June 9 — but apparently in a form that hasn't been acceptable to Reagan or the Republican leadership.

NASA Says Forced Savings May Pay For New Shuttle

WASHINGTON (AP) — The grounding of America's space shuttle fleet, until the cause of the Challenger accident is found and fixed, is generating $1.5 billion in savings that could help pay for a replacement shuttle.

"That comes from basically being out of flight operations for the current period and going back into flight operations at a reduced rate," said William R. Graham, acting administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

"We are not using expendable tanks, solid rocket boosters; we're not putting time on the engines; we are not turning around orbiters (readying them for reflight)," he said in an interview Wednesday. "All of that will have savings associated with it."

Although President Reagan is known to want a shuttle replacement, he has not asked Congress for the $2.9 billion needed for a new orbiter, to fix the problems in the solid rocket boosters and make spare parts. He is awaiting recommendations from the Senior Interagency Group for Space, a top-level unit of the National Security Council.

In its most recent meeting, that group — according to sources — decided the administration would not ask Congress for supplemental funds to build the replacement, but would look for savings among a number of government agencies — NASA among them.

There were these other developments Wednesday:

—There was word that John W. Thomas, the NASA executive assigned to redesign the booster rocket joint that caused the accident, has found evidence for the presidential shuttle commission's theory that cold weather contributed to the failure. The cold theory had long been resisted by other NASA engineers responsible for the booster rockets.

—The commission announced it will hear witnesses in a closed session on Friday on the history of problems with those joints. The commission, which already has finished the first draft of its report due June 6, had not been expected to hear further testimony.

—James C. Fletcher, who was NASA's administrator from 1971 to 1977, was approved 15-1 by the Senate Commerce Committee for a second stint as head of the agency. The full Senate is expected to vote later this week or early next week to confirm him.

Steger Team Nears North Pole

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty-one dogs, two sleds and six adventurers today drew to within 30 miles of the North Pole in their bid to become the second expedition to reach the pole without air support.

The five men and one woman of the Steger International Polar Expedition, who had covered 470 miles since setting out March 8, were spotted Tuesday by a Canadian military reconnaissance plane at 89 degrees, 30 minutes north latitude, just short of the pole, which is 90 degrees north latitude.

"They are pretty tired people," Capt. Bernie Poole, the crew commander for the flyover, said Wednesday. "They waved their arms, but they didn't jump up and down."

"We had anticipated ... that they would have been there by today," said Jim Gasperini, who operates the radio at the team's base camp at Resolute Bay, Northwest Territories.

"So we're hoping any time today or possibly early tomorrow."

He told WCCO Radio in Minneapolis that he had received a satellite position on the team before dawn today showing them at 89 degrees, 33 minutes north, or 30 miles from the pole.

The bright red covers of the sleds and the yellow tents stood out against the shimmering white ice, making the camp easy to find, Poole said. "When we first spotted them they were in the tents. They had been traveling all night."

But when they heard the drone of the plane, he said, the six adventurers — who are going to the pole without the luxury of having supplies airlifted to them — came out and set up their radio transmitter.

"I think they knew they were pretty close to the pole," Poole said in a telephone interview from Inuvik air station. "They estimated that they would be there in 36 hours, and that was pretty close to our calculations."

He said he reported the team's position to the base camp in Resolute Bay, where the radio operator had not heard from it since April 23.

From the low-flying plane, Poole's crew could see obstacles remaining for the six, but he could not warn them.

"We were not allowed to give them any information because this is an unsupported expedition," he explained. "We weren't allowed to drop anything or tell them anything about the ice conditions."

Pool said the team would have to cross 15- to 30-foot ridges of ice in their final approach to the pole, "but that's nothing new to them." He also said there was some open water in their way, but none that was impassable.

The team members had arranged the flyover before they set out from Ward Hunt Island, the northernmost point of Canada, in hopes of replicating Robert Peary's 1909 feat when he led the first expedition to reach the pole.

Since then the only successful expeditions have relied on extensive air drops of food, fuel, dry clothes and equipment.

The Steger team's only concession to modern times is the transmitter. Expedition leader Will Steger has said he wanted to reach the pole unassisted, but not at the cost of lives.

The expedition packed just a 50-day food supply. But rations were stretched with the departure of two of the eight original team members. New Zealander Bob Mckerrow was airlifted out after a sled hit him, breaking some ribs, and Bob Mantell of Alaska was flown out with frostbitten feet.

Twenty-eight of the original 49 dogs were lifted out as planned, rather than eaten as was the practice in Peary's time. Three sleds have been burned for fuel.

The remaining members, including Steger and co-leader Paul Schurke, both of Ely, Minn., are Americans Anne Bancroft, Brent Boddy, Geoff Carroll, and Richard Weber of Canada.

Tennessee County Returns To Fold

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Scott County, which seceded from Tennessee out of loyalty to the Union when the Civil War broke out, has officially rejoined the state after 125 years of independence.

The east Tennessee county seceded in 1861 when Tennessee joined the Confederacy, and never formally applied for readmission until this year, when it petitioned the governor and Legislature.

"After 125 years of independence, in this year of Tennessee Homecoming, the Scott commissioners and the people of the Scott have declared the Free and Independent State of Scott to be dissolved and disbanded," Gov. Lamar Alexander, who signed the readmission resolution, said Wednesday.

The resolution says the Scott County Court met in 1861 and voted unanimously to secede from Tennessee after the state proclaimed its secession from the Union. A messenger was sent to Nashville to inform state lawmakers of the county's decision to become a state of its own.

New Satellite Will Track Hurricanes

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A new hurricane-tracking satellite scheduled for launch tonight in the first liftoff here since the Challenger tragedy will restore U.S. ability to track the Atlantic and Pacific storm-spawning grounds.

A three-stage Delta rocket is to lift off at 6:18 p.m. to hurl the GEOS-7 payload into a stationary orbit 22,300 miles above the Atlantic Ocean where it will have a clear view of the eastern United States and the hurricane-spawning grounds of the Atlantic all the way to the African coast.

The satellite, whose name satnds for geostationary operational environmental satellite, is to replace GOES-5, which lost its ability to transmit cloud pictures two years ago, leaving a big gap in satellite coverage of hurricanes in the Atlantic and typhoons in the Pacific.

Normally, two fixed weather satellites are located over the Atlantic and Pacific, looking at the U.S. from East and West. But after GOES-5, the Atlantic satellite, failed, GOES-6 was repositioned by radio command to a point south of Texas to cover the whole country from a central location.

From this location, GOES-6 cannot photograph storm systems in the central Pacific or near Hawaii or western Alaska, nor can it survey the Atlantic off the African coast.

Once the new satellite is in position over the Atlantic, GOES-6 will be shifted back to the Pacific to again provide full coverage.

The launching has attracted considerable attention because of the explosions of the space shuttle Jan. 28 and a Titan 34D rocket in California April 18.

Until problems with these two vehicles have been fixed, the United States has only two rockets, the Delta and Atlas-Centaur, capable of orbiting heavy satellites. An Atlas-Centaur is scheduled for launch here May 22 with a Navy communications satellite.

"Obviously the agency would like to see a success here," Delta launch director Charles Gay told reporters Wednesday. "In today's environment, considering what has happened, a success would be uplifting."

Delta, the workhorse of NASA's expendable rocket fleet, has logged 167 successes in 177 launches over 26 years. The last 43, dating back to September 1977, have been successful.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is paying the National Aeronautics and Space Administration $42 million to launch the $57.5 million satellite.

Opening lead: Five of ♠ stead of flying in with the ace and taking his heart trick, he chose to lay low. He was given no second chance.

One round of trumps was all declarer needed. After the ten won, he abandoned trumps and started on clubs. When East could not ruff the third club, the slam was home. On the fourth club, declarer pitched his losing heart as West vainly trumped with the ace for the defenders' only trick.

Turkey Fine

RICHMOND, Mo. (AP) — Ray County conservation agent George Hiser told his wife to "take your best shot" when the turkey came out of the woods. A lucky shot gave her two birds — and a ticket from her husband.

Not only did Marcia Hiser drop the first turkey at 40 yards, she hit a second one 15 yards behind it with the same blast.

Missouri regulations prohibit killing more than one turkey during the spring season, so Hiser cited her for the second bird. "He has to do it," said Mrs. Hiser, who faces a $5 fine and court costs. "I know what his job is."

Don't treat what we write in this column as holy writ. The advice given fits most situations, but each hand must be considered on its own merits.

We have often suggested that aces were made to capture kings and should not be wasted on low cards. That should be tempered by the thought that, when you see the tricks to defeat a contract, you go ahead and take them before they vanish into thin air. This example is illuminating.

North-South bid well to a small slam. Since North had made a two-over-one response, South's jump rebid of his own suit was unconditionally forcing. North felt he was too strong for four spades, so he showed his diamond feature. When he then supported spades over South's heart cue-bid, the small slam was reached with the help of Blackwood.

With a sure trick in trumps, West decided his best chance to build a fast second trick was in hearts. He was right in theory as well as in practice, but failed in execution. Declarer played low from dummy on the heart lead and East's ten forced the ace. Declarer led a low trump and West fell from grace. In-

ECU Revives Carillon Chimes

REVIVING CHIMES — The automated "brain" of the carillon is programmed to strike each hour and play Alma Mater at noon. The mechanism was stored on the campus of East Carolina University since the early 1970s, and has now found a home atop Mendenhall Student Center. (ECU News Bureau Photo By Tony Rumble)

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

After more than 15 years of silence, East Carolina University's carillon is chiming again, filling the air surrounding the 370-acre campus with hourly reminders of the time and a noon rendition of the Alma Mater.

All songs and hourly strikes played by the electronically operated carillon are recorded on tapes set into action by a timer.

The carillon, which had been in storage for the last 10 years, was repaired by the ECU television repair shop and installed on the roof of Mendenhall Student Center in February.

"I feel the carillon will add tradition and heritage to ECU," said David Brown, Student Government Association president. "Few students know the Alma Mater. By hearing it every day, many more will recognize the song."

The carillon was purchased in 1969 by the SGA for $4,000. It was dedicated to then chancellor Leo Jenkins, and installed on top of new Austin Building, where it first chimed the hour and played the Alma Mater at mid-day.

But school officials said the sounds emanating from the mechanism disrupted classes, leading to a decision to shut it off.

"The carillon was taken out of use because of complaints that its location on the center of campus distracted classes," said Bill Shires, director of the ECU News Bureau.

Last fall the University Facilities Committee recommended the carillon be brought out of storage and installed atop Mendenhall, where it would be less distracting to students in class.

Students met with Rudolph Alexander, University Unions director in November to decide what should be played.

In addition to the striking on the hour and the Alma Mater, patriotic songs will be played on Memorial Day, Independence Day and Veteran's Day. Special music will be played for Commencement, and non-secular Christmas music will be played throughout the month of December.

While the carillon is now fully operational and in fine working order, Alexander said a few technical problems had to be rectified.

"There was a delay in installation because of roof problems at Mendenhall. It had to wait until we got a new roof," he said.

Once the carillon was installed, a few problems had to be worked out. "The darn thing was striking the hour on the half hour," Alexander said.

But, now that all the quirks have been corrected, Alexander said responses to the carillon have been encouraging.

"I think the students really like it," he said. "All the comments that have reached me have been very positive."

Proposed Tower Unites Campus

By HAROLD JOYNER
Reflector Staff Writer

Members of the 1986 East Carolina University senior class will leave the school with plans of building a 50-foot high bell tower, making it the tallest non-residential structure on campus.

Senior Class President Kirk Shelley said even though nothing has been approved, the idea is catching on across campus. A recent preliminary design contest brought 56 student entries, with environmental design major Greg Jackson's sketch winning him $125.

The tower would not actually house bells, Shelley said, but a clock so that classes would not be interrupted by chimes.

Because plans for the tower have to be placed on a university priority list, it could take two to three years before actual construction takes place, said Jim Lanier, vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement. "I feel very good about the project," he said. "I'm also very proud that the students have gone through the proper channels. It will make the process smoother."

"The leadership of this proposal is very impressive," said Charles Blake, assistant to the chancellor. "It's nice to know that students have an interest in continuing traditions of the university."

Shelley said one possible location for the bell tower is a clearing on the campus mall, facing Wright Circle. "One of the stipulations in the proposal," Shelley said, "is that no trees be destroyed in building the tower. I personally like the mall location because the central walkway would lead right into it."

The total ground-level space of the tower would be 30 feet, Shelley said, with 15 of that to be utilized as a sitting area.

Another possible location is the old city swimming pool parking lot at Fifth and Cotanche streets. The university is in the process of purchasing the site in order to make "an official entrance to ECU," Shelley said. A replica of the cupola of old Austin Building would be placed on top.

"I like the design of the artist's rendering," Lanier said. "I think it's a very attractive design that pulls together the old style of campus, and yet has a contemporary look."

The estimated cost of the structure is $150,000, which Shelley said is one of the cheaper projects on campus, making it more appealing to faculty senate committees who must approve the project. The final decision rests with the school's board of trustees, Shelley said.

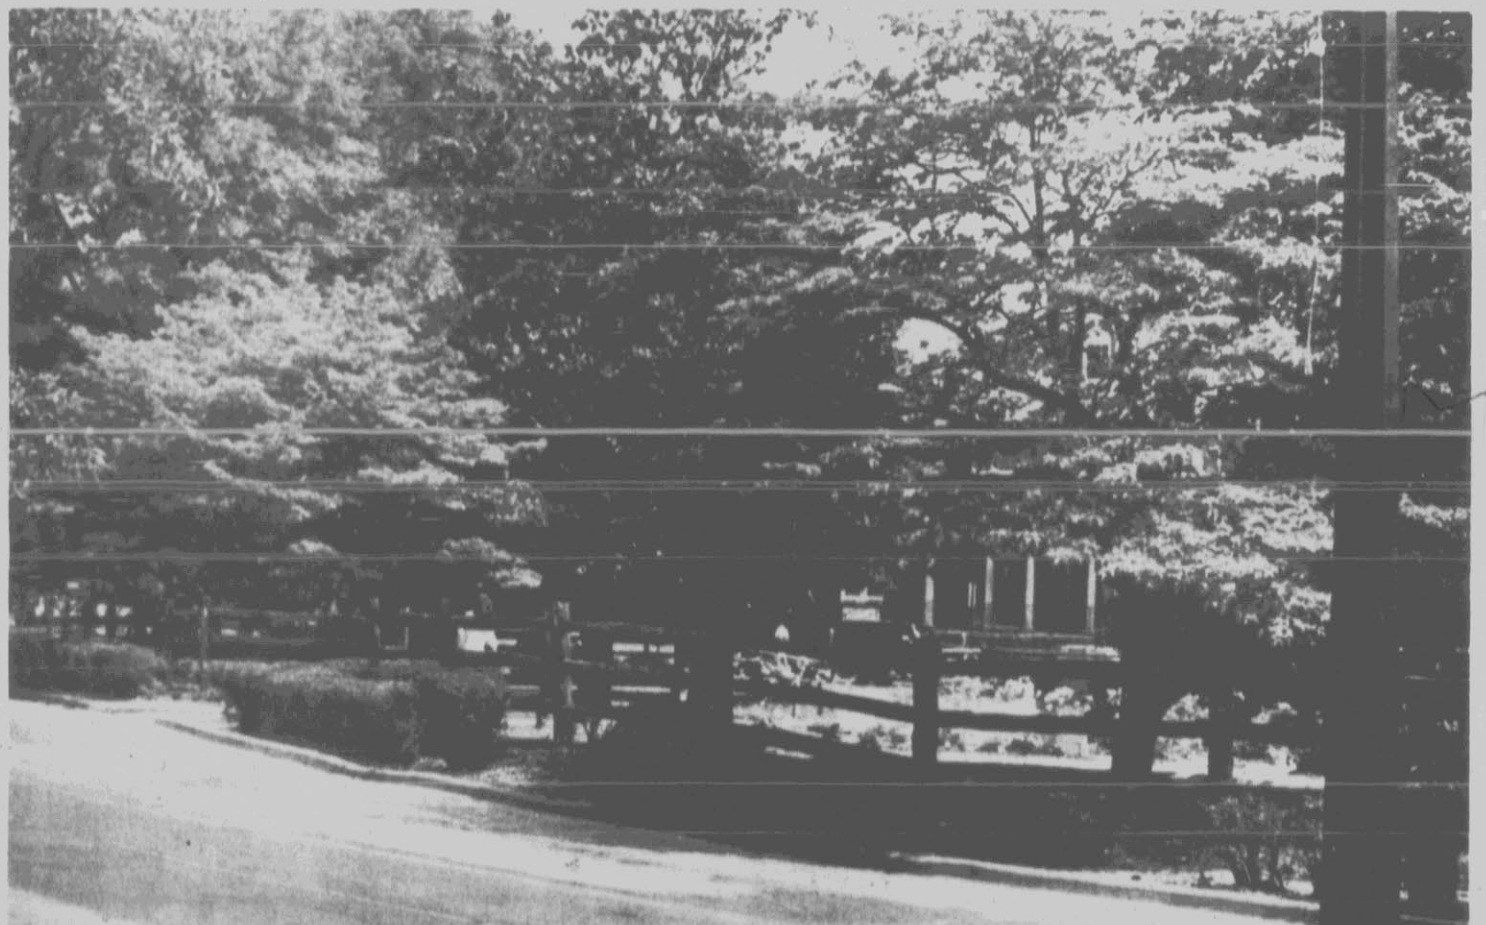

Lanier said committee members sometimes have to decide whether to use money for capital improvement or for scholarship funds.

"One of the problems of being a student is that time eventually runs out," Shelley said. "I hope the next group of senior councils will move forward with the project, and students and the community begin fundraising."

He also said once plans are finalized, fund-raising efforts may be started through the ECU's Office of Institutional Advancement and funds could be solicited from graduating seniors.

FUTURE TOWER — The winning student design of the proposed bell tower features a contemporary look and yet retains the old architectural style of the campus. ECU student Greg Jackson, an environmental design major, won $125 for the preliminary design of the 50-foot tower. If approved by faculty committees, construction of the tower could begin in three years.

MALL ENTRANCE — One of the possible locations for the new bell tower is on the ECU campus mall, facing Wright Circle. The cost of the project, officials say, may run close to $150,000. The idea was introduced by the Senior Class Council, and will now go through several committees for approval. (Reflector Staff Photo By Harold Joyner)

Reagan Expresses Disappointment Vietnam Cut Off Talks On MIAs

BALI, Indonesia (AP) — President Reagan today expressed great disappointment that Vietnam has broken off talks on "the last vestige" of the Vietnam war, the search for Americans still listed as missing in action.

Hanoi cut off discussions with the United States two weeks ago, saying the April 14 bombing of Libya in reprisal for terrorist attacks on Americans had poisoned the atmosphere for further discussions.

Reagan, addressing a meeting of Southeast Asian officials, said he wanted "to mention a humanitarian issue of great personal concern to me, my administration and the American people."

He told the foreign ministers of six non-Communist nations of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) he was grateful for their help in dealing with Vietnam on the MIA issue, which remains an open wound 11 years after the fall of the Saigon government the United States fought to save.

"Vietnam's recent apparent attempt to link this last vestige of the war to other issues is a great disappointment to us," Reagan said. "We were pleased with the evident progress over the past year" in which the United States and Vietnam held direct talks and conducted joint efforts to recover the remains of Americans lost during the war.

The talks "indicated Hanoi had agreed with us that resolution of this issue was in their national interest," Reagan said.

"We hope Vietnam will soon resume these important talks," Reagan said.

On his first day of formal talks, mid-way through his 13-day journey to the Far East, Reagan also conferred separately with President Suharto of Indonesia and with Philippine Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel.

The president will fly to Tokyo on Friday for talks with allied leaders and the seven-nation economic summit of industrialized democracies.

Delivering the official welcoming speech of the ASEAN meeting, Laurel said the bloc of non-communist Asian nations "treasures the warm and close relationships we have nurtured with the United States."

Philippines Seeks Reagan's Assurances

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

NUSA DUA, Indonesia — Philippine Vice President Salvador Laurel said Wednesday he wants President Reagan to sweep away "cobwebs of doubt" that linger among Filipinos about whether the United States fully recognizes the legitimacy of the new government of Corazon Aquino.

Although other U.S. officials have reassured him of the administration's support for the Aquino government, Laurel said he wanted to hear "straight from the horse's mouth" that Reagan does not recognize former President Ferdinand Marcos as leader of the Philippines. Laurel is to meet with Reagan Thursday.

Laurel's comments Wednesday followed a telephone call between Reagan and Marcos last weekend in Hawaii during which Marcos said he wanted to return to active participation in Philippine politics and Reagan told him that Aquino is now the recognized leader of the Manila government.

After meeting Secretary of State George P. Shultz Wednesday afternoon, Laurel said he was told "there is no question" of Reagan's support for Aquino and, "Mr. Marcos should forget all plans to return to power."

But Laurel said "lingering doubts" about Reagan's recognition of the Aquino government could be traced to a comment Reagan made earlier this year after the Philippine election saying both Marcos and the Aquino-led opposition had committed fraud. Reagan later modified the statement, but Laurel said it left "cobwebs of doubt in the minds of many" that he hoped Reagan would resolve "once and for all" in their meeting Thursday.

A senior State Department official brushed aside Laurel's concern.

"I don't think there are any cobwebs of doubt left, if there were any," about the U.S. commitment to Aquino, he said.

'Fantasticks' Will End Long N.Y. Stand June 8

NEW YORK (AP) — Even "The Fantasticks" has a final curtain. The world's longest-running musical will close June 8 after more than 26 years and 10,864 performances at off-Broadway's tiny Sullivan Street Playhouse.

"Like Rocky Marciano, I want to go out a champ," said producer Lore Noto. "I felt the show had to close eventually, and there's no easy way to do it. But we are going out proud and happy."

The final performance will begin at 10 p.m., June 8, the producer said, and finish shortly after midnight, Noto's 63rd birthday.

"I've been with this show since I was 36. There must be something else I can do," laughed Noto, who said the musical's financial condition, while not as strong as in recent years, was not the major factor in deciding to end the run.

"The closing doesn't come as a surprise. We had discussed it with Lore earlier this month. But it still will be emotional," said Harvey Schmidt, who along with Tom Jones, wrote "The Fantasticks."

The musical is based on an obscure Rostand play called "Les Romanesques," a spoof of "Romeo and Juliet," in which two fathers invent a feud in order to bring their children together. The stars of the original production were Jerry Orbach as the narrator, Kenneth Nelson as the boy and Rita Gardner as the girl.

The musical, which opened May 3, 1960, cost $16,500 to produce at the 153-seat theater. The reviews were mixed, but Noto, using part of his own savings, had put by $3,000 to keep the show running during that first lean summer, and his persistence paid off. Since its opening, the show has paid its backers an 8,242 percent return on their investment.

Several factors prolonged "The Fantasticks" run. In its first struggling months, the show had dedicated supporters including actress Anne Bancroft and producer Cheryl Crawford, who called friends and urged them to see the musical.

Singers like Ed Ames, Harry Belafonte and Barbra Streisand began recording songs from the show, especially "Try to Remember" and "Soon It's Gonna Rain," and the tunes brought in new audiences.

In 1964, Noto allowed a television version, which starred Ricardo Montalban, Bert Lahr, Stanley Holloway, Susan Watson and John Davidson. Instead of hurting the show, the telecast helped business, as did release of production rights to stock and amateur groups.

The statistics are staggering: as of Jan. 1, 1986, 8,913 productions in the United States alone, including amateur productions, and 472 productions in 67 foreign countries. Performers ranging from Liza Minnelli to John Carradine and from Tom Poston to Anna Maria Alberghetti have appeared in different productions of the show.

The New York production has its first father-daughter cast members. George Lee Andrews is now playing the narrator, while his daughter Jennifer, who wasn't even born when the show opened, plays the young girl. For Noto, a one-time commercial artist, "The Fantasticks" has become a full-time career.

Book On Murders Spawns TV Series

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Seattle newspaper reporter Richard Larsen remembers Ted Bundy as a charismatic young law student working hard for the Republicans. He seemed to have a bright future in politics and was "very handsome, very well-liked," Larsen said.

Bundy indeed went on to make headlines — but as a notorious murderer.

In the early 1970s, a killer stalking young women in the Seattle area was known only as "Ted." Nobody connected to Ted Bundy. Eventually police came to suspect Bundy of killing more than 36 women in six states. He is now in prison in Florida waiting execution.

Larsen wrote a book about Bundy called "The Deliberate Stranger." It has been adapted to a two-part miniseries by NBC, starring Mark Harmon as Bundy. The program will be broadcast Sunday and Monday.

George Grizzard plays as Larsen. Marvin Chomsky ("Peter the Great") directed, and Hesper Anderson wrote the screenplay from Larsen's book.

In 1972, Larsen was covering politics and the governor's race for the Seattle Times. "I noticed this good looking guy, very bright, working for (Republican Gov.) Dan Evans. He seemed to have a special quality," Larsen recalled.

"Part of my job was to keep an eye on young people on the rise in politics. Certainly, this was one. He seemed to have a passionate concern for the well-being of people."

Larsen became friends with Bundy and wrote a story about him in the aftermath of the 1972 gubernatorial campaign, in which the Democratic Party contended Bundy had acted as a GOP spy while attending numerous political functions. "I didn't think it was a valid charge and wrote a piece defending Ted," Larsen said.

Larsen is now an associate editor of the Seattle Times, where he writes a column and does commentary on public issues.

Bundy was convicted of kidnapping in Utah and taken to Colorado to stand trial in a case there. He escaped twice, and the second time he got away.

Soon afterward, he was arrested in Florida and charged with two murders in a sorority house. He was convicted and sentenced to death. He was never tried in Washington.

Soviets Mark May Day With Red Square Parade

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev and other Politburo members assembled atop Lenin's tomb today as workers trooped across Red Square in a May Day celebration that seemed unaffected by a disastrous nuclear accident near Kiev.

National television and radio broadcast live coverage of the precision march by hundreds of thousands of participants, and major newspapers also devoted much of their space to the officially sanctioned workers' holiday.

The newspapers festooning their front pages with banner headlines in red ink proclaiming "happy holiday comrades," drawings of the Kremlin and other festive decorations.

They paid scant attention to the nuclear disaster at Chernobyl in the Ukraine, running a day-old government statement on their inside pages.

But in keeping with Gorbachev's style, the celebration did lack some of the adulation traditionally given Kremlin leaders.

For the first time in recent memory, the Soviets did not erect portraits of the members of the Politburo, the Communist Party's policy-making body, around the capital.

Gorbachev led the Politburo members and other leading officials onto the top of the mausoleum that contains the remains of Vladimir I. Lenin, founder of the Soviet state, just before the demonstration began.

They waved to the crowd and received flowers from a column of schoolboys and girls who scampered up the monument's steps.

The marching workers carried flowers, banners, placards and balloons that turned Red Square into a sea of red, lavender, yellow, blue and green. They were shepherded into the square along Moscow's main streets by hundreds of civilian organizers and police, and kept in neat ranks inside the square.

Television coverage showed all of the Moscow-based Politburo members were on hand for the parade, including President Andrei A. Gromyko, reported to have been hospitalized briefly in late April.

Gromyko, 76, the Politburo's senior member and former Soviet foreign minister, appeared fit as he chatted with Gorbachev.

Portraits of Politburo members were carried in the mass of humanity that surged across Red Square between the soaring walls of the Kremlin and the huge GUM department store, which was decorated with a four-story-high May Day poster.

On past May Day and Nov. 7 Revolution Day holidays, the leaders' pictures were hung on several buildings in Moscow, along with Lenin's portrait. Three-story-high portraits were put on metal stands on Kutuzovskiy Prospekt, a major thoroughfare in central Moscow.

But since coming to power in March 1985, Gorbachev has cut back on some of the trappings of public adulation of the leadership, and now the Kremlin apparently has decided to end the holiday tradition of color portraits as well.

Many of the placards carried through Red Square focused on Soviet proposals for disarmament and the Kremlin's call for a ban on space weapons. Billboards on city streets also reflected these themes.

TV and radio reporters interviewed Soviets and foreign guests on the square who said they supported Soviet arms control policy.

One worker interviewed said the Soviet Union was trying to ward off "direct attempts by imperialism to thwart policies of peace and disarmament."

Early in the parade, officials piped a radio link to the Mir (Peace) space station through the loudspeakers that also blared slogans and patriotic music onto Red Square.

"We are celebrating May Day just as the entire country is, and in fact together with the entire country," cosmonaut Leonid Kizim, who has been aboard the orbiting platform with Vladimir Solovev since March 15, said from space.

FOCUS

Merry May

American celebrations of May Day pale in comparison to those held in Europe, where spring merry-making parties are centuries old. Some experts say celebrations on May 1 began with the tree worship of the Druids. Others say the spring festival dates back to ancient Egypt and India. In 1889, European socialists began demonstrating for workers rights on May Day. Because American Puritans frowned on the celebration, May Day gets only slight attention in the United States.
