Western Leaders OK Anti-Terror Campaign

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent
TOKYO (AP) — Summit leaders today put their governments behind a six-point campaign against terrorists and their accomplices, "and in particular Libya," and issued a statement prodding Moscow to reveal details immediately concerning the Chernobyl nuclear accident.

The leaders agreed to steps making it harder for terrorists to travel or obtain arms, essentially endorsing measures adopted by European nations last month in the wake of the unilateral U.S. air attack on Libya.

Practically ignoring trade and finance concerns on the first full day of their economic summit, leaders of the industrialized democracies acted on the two issues being pushed extraordinarily hard by President Reagan and his aides.

The statement on terrorism, while hailed as a victory by Reagan aides, contained no commitment to specific economic sanctions against Libya or other sponsors of terrorism and no specific endorsement of military action to combat terrorists. But U.S. officials said it was significant that the group, including Libya's two major trade partners — Italy and West Germany — specifically branded Libya for its role in sponsoring terrorism.

Reagan came to Tokyo with his campaign against Libyan terrorism at the top of his summit agenda and in a written message to the leaders of Canada, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan he said concerted action against terrorism was essential.

"Why should this summit concern itself with terrorism?" it asked. "One reason that is mentioned is the need to do something so that the crazy Americans won't take matters into their own hands again."

One of the six points was apparently written to restrict the activities of Libyan embassies and consulates. The leaders agreed to "strict limits on the size of the diplomatic and consular mission and other official bodies abroad of states which engage in such activities, control of travel of members of such mission and bodies, and, where appropriate, radical reductions in, or even the closure of, such missions and bodies."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said the document sent a strong message to Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy: "You've had it, pal. You're isolated. You are recognized as a terrorist and as far as terrorists are concerned, more and more the message is — no place to hide."

However, summit partners steered clear of some of the toughest anti-terrorist measures suggested by the United States.

Reagan had mentioned to Italian Premier Bettino Craxi and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, whose nations are heavily dependent on Libyan oil, that they look for other suppliers. Yet, the summit statement made no mention of any economic sanctions.

In a paper Reagan passed out to his fellow leaders at dinner, he said the threat of using military force "is essential to deterrence" of terrorism.

"Why should this summit concern itself with terrorism?" Reagan asked. "One reason that is mentioned is the need to do something so that the crazy Americans won't take matters into their own hands again."

Although the summit statement contained general references to improving methods of dealing with terrorism through international aviation and maritime organizations, it did not specify what steps might be taken. The United States has suggested not only tightening airport security but tougher action, such as denying landing rights to Libya's airline.

The United States, with the sole support of Britain, launched a

Reagan Tells Oil Firms To Leave Libya By June 30

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer
TOKYO (AP) — The Reagan administration, embarrassed in its summit negotiations by the continued presence of U.S. oil firms in Libya, today fixed a June 30 deadline for the companies to pull out.

"They will be out one way or the other," Secretary of State George Shultz declared, adding: "They may just have to abandon their assets."

And Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III reinforced the warning. "I think it is appropriate at some point to say to U.S. companies that are still there: you have had sufficient time. We've tried to be as lenient as possible."

Baker conceded it was hard to persuade Western European allies to quit buying oil from Moammar Khadafy as long as U.S. companies are still in Libya.

"I think the United States has to be able to make the point to its allies, if we're asking them to take action, that there are no longer United States' companies operating in Libya with the consent of the U.S. government," Baker said.

He said that, following the April bombing raid on Libya, some of the companies "contacted us and suggested themselves it was time to walk."

Neither Shultz nor Baker mentioned the June 30 deadline specifically. But other administration officials said that licenses permitting the firms to operate temporarily in Libya would not be renewed when they expire on June 30.

Justices Rule No Violation

Court Says Death-Penalty Foes Can Be Kept Off Jury

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, dashing one legal hope of hundreds of death row inmates and perhaps thousands of other convicted murderers across the nation, said today that death penalty opponents can be barred from serving on capital case juries.

The court, by a 6-3 vote in an Arkansas case, said fair-trial rights are not violated when death penalty opponents are excluded, for that reason, from juries deciding guilt or innocence in cases in which death is a possible sentence.

Today's decision reversed a federal appeals court ruling that excluding all potential jurors who say they could never impose a death sentence creates a "conviction prone" jury and thus violates a defendant's right to a fair trial.

The decision leaves just one sweeping death penalty challenge pending before the nation's highest court, one which the justices have not yet said they will consider.

That challenge, embodied in the appeals of several death row inmates, contends that capital punishment is meted out in a racially biased way — that those who kill whites are much more likely to be sentenced to death than those who kill blacks.

In another death penalty decision today, the justices made it easier to reimpose death sentences against defendants whose convictions are overturned and who are then convicted again after another trial.

In other action, the court agreed to decide whether states may require public schools teaching evolution to balance it by also teaching creationism.

It also cleared the way for a new trial in a 10-year-old lawsuit by the three children of the late Karen Silkwood, whose exposure to radioactivity triggered a now-famous battle over nuclear industry safety.

Writing for the court today in the case on death-penalty opponents, Justice William H. Rehnquist said excluding potential jurors opposed to capital punishment from trials in which a death sentence is possible does not violate a defendant's right to be judged by a cross-section of the community.

Rehnquist added that such exclusions also do not deprive defendants of their right to an impartial jury.

Unlike potential jurors who might be excluded because of their race or sex, Rehnquist said, people excluded from juries because of their views on capital punishment "are singled out ... on the basis of an attribute that is within the individual's control."

"It is important to remember that not all who oppose the death penalty are subject to removal for cause in capital cases; those who firmly believe that the death penalty is unjust may nevertheless serve as jurors in capital cases so long as they state clearly that they are willing to temporarily set aside their own beliefs in deference to the rule of law," he said.

Local Races On Ballot Tuesday

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Voters in Tuesday's primary will be faced with local and state races and two statewide issues when they go to the polls. Voters from Pitt County will be casting their votes in 10 precincts in Greenville and at 15 county precincts. Machines will be used in all polling stations.

Polls open at 6:30 a.m. and will close at 7:30 p.m. A total of 41,892 voters are registered in the county.

The names of nine candidates will not appear on Tuesday's ballots because they are unopposed. Those nine are: for the N.C. Senate, Tom Taft (D) and Ed Griffith, (R); Pitt County Commissioners, Republicans Mary Lou Sugg and Andy Andrews, and Democrat Charles McLawhorn;

N.C. House of Representatives, 9th District, Republicans Thomas Herndon and Harold Zallen; Pitt County Sheriff, Lee Pascasio (R), and district attorney, District 3A, Tom Haigwood (D).

Seven candidates are seeking two county commissioner seats, all Democrats. Four are seeking the 1st District seat — Ernest Brown, Rufus Higgins, Tom Johnson and Jim Young. Three are seeking the 4th District seat — Kenneth Dews, Claudie McLawhorn and Burney Tucker.

This year, three Democrats are running for sheriff — Aaron Hines Jr., Jackie L. Moye and incumbent Ralph Tyson.

Three candidates are seeking the Democratic nomination for two state House seats from the 9th District — challenger Lonnie W. Carraway and incumbents Walter B. Jones Jr. and Ed Warren.

In the 6th N.C. Senate District candidates for the Democratic nomination Jeanne Fenner, Mort Hurst and incumbent R.L. (Bob) Martin. Voters living in six Pitt County precincts are part of the 6th District — Arthur, Belvoir, Bethel, Falkland, Farmville and Fountain. In the 6th House District, voters in two Pitt County precincts — Bethel and Carolina (Stokes) — will be voting for two candidates, L.M. (Mutt) Brinkley Sr. and Gene Rogers.

In the non-partisan ballot for the Pitt County Board of Education, voters will cast votes for three at-large members. The candidates are 3rd District, J. Beverly Congleton and Leonard Lilley; 6th District, Jim Black, Darrell Hignite, Dale Manning and Levi Smith, and 7th District, Walter Gaskins.

Other choices facing voters will be clerk of Superior Court, incumbent Sandra Gaskins and Edward C. (Ed) Rose, and Court of Appeals judge, Joseph R. John and Sarah Parker.

Issues facing votes on Tuesday include a constitutional amendment switching elections for state and county offices in odd-numbered years and a referendum on a proposed high-level radioactive waste dump location in North Carolina.

MRS. WILLIAMS

basque waist. Beaded lace motifs were applied on the bodice and lace trimmed the sleeves. Cascading chantilly lace panels edged with a lace ruffle were overlaid on the organza skirt and train and a deep border of chantilly lace edged the hemline of the skirt and train.

She wore a band of white flowers with pearls attached to a fingertip veil of illusion with blusher. She carried a bouquet of white and pink silk roses accented with baby's breath and white satin streamers with love knots and lace.

The bride's sister, Tammy Ivey, served as matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Mindy Fisher, sister of the bride, of Winterville; Debbie Mills of Greenville; Donna Hudson of Grimesland, and Sherry Bazemore, sister of the bridegroom of Everetts.

The attendants wore formal-length gowns of taffeta in shades of seafoam, pink, lavender and peach. Each gown was designed with an open V neckline and three-quarter sleeves accented with self-fabric bows. The fitted bodice extended over the torso to a basque waistline and a softly gathered skirt. Each attendant carried a bouquet of silk roses matching the color of her dress. Each wore silk flowers and ribbon in her hair to match their gown.

Malissa Harris, cousin of the bride, of Winterville was the flower girl. She wore a long dress of yellow taffeta with a scooped neckline and puffed sleeves and carried a small bouquet of yellow silk roses.

The bridegroom's father was best man, and groomsmen were Richard Bowen and Ken Gurganus, both of Williamston; Keith Fisher of Winterville and Phil Bazemore, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, of Everetts.

A reception was held in the Willis Wilson Fellowship Hall and was given by the staff of Pitt Surgical P.A. Joan Respass cut the cake while Ann McLamb poured punch. Goodbyes were said by Osey Fisher and Cherry Williams. Michele Harris presided at the register.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents at Parker's Barbecue.

After a wedding trip to the mountains, the couple will reside at Everetts. The bride, a graduate of D.H. Conley High School, is employed by Pitt Surgical, P.A. The groom, a graduate of Roanoke High School, is employed by the N.C. Department of Transportation.

Reedy Branch Free Will Baptist Church was the scene of the wedding of Becky Renee Fisher and Charlie Mack Williams Jr. at 3 p.m. Saturday. The Rev. Willis Wilson officiated at the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O. Fisher of Route 1, Winterville, and Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Mack Williams of Everetts.

A program of organ music was performed by Corabob Turnage of Ayden. Bill Wyatt, soloist and guitarist, sang "If," "Annie's Song," "The Wedding Prayer" and "My Only Love."

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown and a chapel train of organza with chantilly lace and venice lace motifs over taffeta. The fitted bodice featured a Queen Anne neckline outlined with venice lace motifs etched with seed pearls, leg-o-mutton sleeves and Barry Evans was held at 4 p.m. Sunday in the Mount Olive Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Thomas W. Nance Jr. officiated at the double-ring ceremony. Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Stacy J. Evans of Greenville and Mr. and Mrs. Durwood Kennedy of Mount Olive.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a white satin gown. The gown featured a sweetheart neckline with dropped bodice overlaid in alencon lace accented with seed pearls and matching long sleeves. A full skirt with lace motifs in front extended into a chapel-length train of scalloped alencon lace. She wore a Juliet cap of lace and seed pearls with illusion of fingertip length and carried an heirloom brooch which was a gift to her maternal great-grandmother from her husband on their wedding day. Her flowers were a traditional cascade of misty pink roses, white daisies, pink astromeria, gypsophila and ivy.

Mrs. Lisa P. Niemond of Mount Olive was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Debbie Evans and Mrs. Debbie O. Fail, both of Mount Olive, Mrs. Amy W. Evans of Wilmington and Mrs. Sharon W. Herring of Goldsboro.

The flower girl was Miss Cassie Evans of Mount Olive, niece of the bridegroom.

The bride is a graduate of Southern Wayne High School and attended Wayne Community College. She is employed by Southern Bank. The bridegroom is a graduate of D.H. Conley High School and attended Lenoir Community College. He is employed by E.J. Pope and Son Inc. The couple will live in Mount Olive.

A reception was given in the church fellowship hall by the bride's parents. Cake was served by Mrs. Eldred Wells of Kinston, aunt of the bridegroom, and Mrs. Althea Weatherington of Winterville, sister of the bridegroom.

Punch was served by Mrs. Patricia Blann of Wilmington and Mrs. Carlotta Russell of Morehead City, aunts of the bride. Goodbyes were said by Mr. and Mrs. Lynwood Kennedy, aunt and uncle of the bride, of Mount Olive.

Mrs. Bobby Sue Best presided at the registry. Rice bags were given out by Carl Russell of Goldsboro and Miss Amanda Hill of Smithfield.

The wedding breakfast was given at the Goldsboro Country Club by Mr. and Mrs. E.J. Pope Sr., Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Wolfe, Warren Herring, Mrs. Cecile Parker, Charles Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Williams, Mr. and Mrs. E.J. Bundy Sr. and Col. and Mrs. Bryce Ficken.

Alpha Delta Kappa Chapter Is Preparing For Fall Bazaar

Alpha Iota chapter of Alpha Delta Kappa conducted a crafts workshop recently at Eastern Elementary School in preparation for a fall bazaar at Carolina East Mall.

Five crafts sessions led by Mickey West, Ellen Pauling, Peggy Rowlette, Linda Ferebee and Ann Davis included painting refrigerator magnets, designing pocket pencil holders, making belts and covering baskets.

Dr. Patricia Anderson reported that the chapter scholarship candidate, Andrea Bath, has won the Alpha Delta Kappa Clare Johnson Marley-Mary Earle Berger Fine Arts Scholarship for North Carolina. Presentation will be made at the next meeting.

Judy McCall requested that the chapter donate $25 to the Consumer Convention for Retarded Individuals in Wilmington in May.

Ann Davis expressed thanks to the group for its contribution to the South Greenville School Tidewater Virginia study tour.

Members Elizabeth Avery, June Carson, Sarah Allen and Mickey Wests will attend the state convention in Asheville.

Guests were Dr. Cindi Allen, Frances Mann, Pat Hamby, Debbie Pait, Rosemary Hayes, Betsy Register, and Sandra Hawkins. Hostesses were Ellen Pauling, Nancy Higdon and Judy McCall.

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Correspondence With U.S. Navy Men Is Authorized

DEAR READERS: First I received this letter on Jan. 10, 1986:

DEAR ABBY: My name is Clark Stephens. I'm 20, from Woodstock, Ga., and am now serving in the U.S. Navy aboard a guided missile cruiser.

You recently printed a letter from a U.S. Marine stationed on Okinawa. He said he and his buddies were lonely and wanted some mail. You put out the word in your column, calling it "Operation Dear Abby," and that island was blitzed with more than 30,000 letters! Can you do the same for us? We are at sea for months at a time and we really get lonesome. In this part of the world, even if we were to stop at the ports, it wouldn't do us much good because a guy could get arrested for just looking at a woman in more than a casual way.

Abby, my shipmates and I would appreciate it if you would ask the folks back home to write to us. We get a lot of satisfaction from doing our jobs well, but mail from your readers would be the icing on the cake. Thank you. Sincerely, RM3 CLARK STEPHENS

My reply, Feb. 12, 1986:

DEAR CLARK: I would like to help you and your shipmates, but I have been informed (unofficially) that your mail is delivered by helicopter, and the U.S. Navy may frown on handling the large volume of mail you'd probably get were I to ask my readers to cheer up a lot of lonely U.S. Navy men.

However, if you can get clearance from your commanding officer, I'll include you in Operation Dear Abby.

Finally, on March 3, 1986:

A New Definition For 'Jams': Wild Baggy Drawstring Shorts

By JUDIE GLAVE
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The fashion wave sweeping the junior market for spring and summer is long, baggy drawstring shorts in wild combinations of prints and colors called jams.

But anyone old enough to remember the '60s, "Hawaii Five-0" or "Gidget," will recall the look is not really new, just recycled.

Called kneebusters in the West, clamdiggers in the South and jams or jammies elsewhere, the outrageous shorts — done in mammoth flower, geometric and abstract prints and in color combinations almost too painful to describe — are being snapped up by teens across the country.

"It's phenomenally popular and it's a major trend," said Ed Razeck, of the Columbus, Ohio-based specialty store, The Limited. "They're selling everywhere. They're selling in our Madison Avenue store, our Des Moines store, our Atlanta store. This is not an ocean-related thing. There are no oceans in Columbus and it's hot here."

There's only one rule when putting together a jams outfit, said Terry Melville, Macy's New York vice president for fashion direction: "anything goes."

Hot pink shorts with geometric dashes of red, orange, electric blue and mustard can be teamed with a flaming red T-shirt and a Hawaiian-style flowered shirt in lime green and orange. Like she said, anything goes.

Though elders may be tempted to reach for sunglasses for protection, somehow it works.

The look was first made popular in the '60s during the Beach Boy and surfer-girl craze, Ms. Melville said.

Back then, boys wore their jams topless, mostly as bathing suits. They weren't as popular for girls and when worn it was either as a bathing suit cover-up or with coordinating colored T-shirts. No one dreamed of mixing checks and stripes or dots and flowers.

But today, "We're talking major mix and match, with a heavy emphasis on mix," Razeck said. "Miss Manners would definitely not approve."

Ms. Melville traces the return of the jammie to California and a bunch of kids called "surf punks."

Several California-based manufacturers and one in Hawaii picked up on the look and under various brand names began peddling the old pedal-pushers to surf shops around the nation.

When it became clear they were a hit, specialty shops and department stores got into the act. The result will be coast-to-coast eye-popping styles on American youngsters this spring and summer.

"It's hotter now than it ever was in the '60s," Razeck said. "They're just flying off the rack," said Ms. Melville.

Neither cared to divulge dollar figures on just how popular the ocean look is, but Razeck said, "Someone in the industry estimated it will do $200 million in sales overall, and I wouldn't dispute it." The shorts, some of which go below the knee, sell for $26 to $36.

"They never really died out," Ms. Melville said. Progressive Californians and laid-back Hawaiians always favored the comfortable, roomy look.

"But now they're really back in vogue. Who knows," Ms. Melville said, "the hoola-hoop may be next."

Oreos Eaten Since 1908 Would Reach Moon Twice

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — You can split the chocolate wafers and scrape off the sugary filling with your two front teeth; or you can throw caution to the wind and munch them whole. You can dunk 'em in milk or smash 'em in your ice cream.

However it's done, it's done lots: Oreos chocolate sandwich cookies are the world's top selling cookies — more than 100 billion have been sold since they were introduced 75 years ago, according to the Guinness Book of World Records.

Noting the anniversary, Nabisco Brands Inc. is taking the opportunity to provide most of the information you could ever possibly want about the cookies.

One tidbit Nabisco omits, not surprisingly, is that the Hydrox cookie is older. Invented by an Englishman, Hydrox cookies were first sold in this country in 1908, says their maker, Sunshine Biscuits Inc.

But Oreos are more famous, and by far better sellers.

If all the Oreo cookies that were ever eaten were piled one on top of the other, they would reach to the moon and back twice; if placed side by side, they'd circle the equator 130 times, Nabisco says.

The cookies are sold in 25 countries, and about $1 of every $10 spent on cookies in American grocery stores is spent on Oreos, the company says.

Nabisco says it has been forgotten where the Oreo name came from, but among the theories is that company executives just liked the sound of it.

Another is that the name may be derived from the French word for gold, or. The original label had the product name in gold, with gold scrollwork, the company says.

In 1975, Nabisco introduced Double Stuf Oreos, which have a double dollop of cream in the middle. That cookie now is the fifth best-selling cookie in the country, the company says.

Two years ago, a mint-flavored version was brought out.

"It's a very good brand franchise. By expanding the line, they may have brought some additional consumers into the market," said George Pierdes, an analyst with Standard & Poor's Corp. Other flavors could come follow, he said.

Nabisco, based in Parsippany, N.J., declines to detail Oreo's sales trend in recent years. Sunshine Biscuits also won't provide such numbers. The American Bakers Association in Washington and the Milling and Baking News say they don't have the figures.

But competition has been heating up.

In April, Sunshine Biscuits introduced Hydrox Doubles, which contain extra cream filling plus one of three flavors: mint, fudge and strawberry.

Sunshine, based in Woodbridge, N.J., is planning an advertising campaign claiming Oreos sometimes are made with lard, while Hydrox cookies always are made with vegetable oil.

"We're kind of taking off the gloves and taking on the competition," said Alexander Nichols, director of advertising for Sunshine.

Nabisco has no comment. The company describes the cream filling as a blend of sugar and oil.

But if it's Oreo trivia you're after, Nabisco has plenty:

— More than 1 million Oreos are produced in an eight-hour shift at five bakeries. It takes an hour and 35 minutes for an Oreo to wend its way through the process.

— Over the years, the size of the cookie has varied. The current, 20-year-old version is 1 3/4 inches across.

— A standard Oreo contains 47 calories, the company says.

— Oreos cost about $2.29 for a 16-ounce bag.

— They are most popular with 6- to 18-year-olds.

In Bali

No Hotel Can Be Taller Than Coconut Palms

By KENNETH L. WHITING
Associated Press Writer

BALI, Indonesia (AP) — The widely accepted view is that hordes of tourists have spoiled Bali and polluted its culture. Old Asia hands lament that sacred religious symbols now decorate hotels and cremation ceremonies are scheduled for the convenience of curious foreigners.

If President Reagan's experience here starting Tuesday is typical, somebody will tell him: "You think Bali is something, you should have seen it a few years ago."

But is Bali really paradise lost? Or is it paradise preserved?

While the ultimate effect of mass tourism is uncertain, there are signs that Bali is proving remarkably resilient. The onslaught seems under control, thanks to a master plan that segregates most tourists.

For example, the entire presidential party is booked in a new enclave of hotels off the island's southern tip, built under a policy of limiting the impact of foreigners.

The resort complex of Nusa Dua (Two Islands) was erected on two formerly uninhabited islets linked by a causeway to the main island. Four hotels have been completed and blueprints call for three more for a total of 2,700 top-class rooms by 1990.

By law, no hotel can be taller than the coconut palms.

The official hope is that by concentrating most tourists in four areas near Ngurah Rai airport — Nusa Dua, Sanur, Kuta and the capital Denpasar — the rest of Bali will remain untainted.

Tourists are encouraged to take day trips by bus or car to scenic spots and craft villages and return south by evening.

Determined visitors are not barred from venturing into the interior. But there are few hotels elsewhere on the 220-square-mile island and few travelers head north to stay in losmens, or lodging houses.

The sea is dreaded by many Balinese as the abode of demons, according to local lore, while the volcanic mountains inland are revered as holy. Since few of the 2.7 million islanders live near the sea and few visitors want to stay anywhere else, the tourist quarantine seems to be working.

Not that the 64-hour presidential stopover en route to the economic summit in Tokyo is anything less than welcome. Tourism Director General Joop Ave describes it as an honor for the nation which should spur interest in all of Indonesia.

The visit was prompted by first lady Nancy Reagan, Joop said, after she remembered an old movie titled "Beautiful Bali."

The island has survived a series of invasions largely by absorbing or adapting whatever their temporary masters brought with them. In 1500 B.C., settlers from south India installed a still-working farm village infrastructure. The blend of Hinduism and animism practiced today came from eastern Java about 1020 A.D.

The Dutch landed in 1597, at first establishing friendly relations that deteriorated into bloody warfare. Dutch rule, interrupted by Japanese occupation during World War II, ended when The Hague recognized Indonesia's independence in 1949.

Colonial Bali was "discovered" by Western filmmakers, painters, musicians and anthropologists more than 60 years ago. Many of them raved about the place as a paradise on earth where routine tasks of daily life seemed almost as exotic as the temple dances, wood carvings or music.

These new-found admirers began warning that the island would be ruined in the name of progress after the first tourists arrived in 1930.

The blessings have been mixed. Some Balinese art forms that were fading from neglect enjoyed a revival, albeit for commercial reasons with assembly-line production of popular types of carvings and paintings.

The Kecak or Monkey Dance, which some visitors consider their most moving experience, seems primeval but was created only in 1932. Walter Spies, a German artist living near Ubud, is credited with putting it together for a movie by taking a chorus from a sacred trance dance and adding a story line from the Indian epic Ramayana.

Historians say the Balinese have been painting for centuries. They adopted new techniques, including oil paints, from itinerant European artists who started arriving in the 1920s. Now credit cards and travelers checks are accepted at dozens of art shops around Ubud, where more than 1,000 craftsmen live.

Whole villages specialize: Ubud is famed for painting, Celuk for gold and silverwork, Mas for woodcarving and Tampaksiring for ivory and bone carving.

Cockfighting is the most popular sport. Now secularized, cockfights were originally connected with religious rites, the spilling of the blood of the cocks served as a sacrifice to evil spirits.

Villagers still celebrate numerous religious festivals with traditional dancing, but they also cluster around television sets in the evening to watch animated cartoons. Rice remains the diet staple, but Kentucky Fried Chicken is also available.

The soft sandy beaches are still beautiful, but a United Nations study says they could disappear due to the use of offshore coral reef as building material. Concrete breakwaters are being built off Nusa Dua and the central government has budgeted 1 billion rupiahs ($884,955) to fight erosion.

Bare-breasted maidens with flowers in their hair may still be glimpsed, but many are visitors from Australia, Europe or America.

Immigration authorities counted fewer than 6,000 foreign tourists in 1966. Last year there were 207,000.

Hotel and tour operators expect a big increase in the number of American visitors now that Continental Airlines and Indonesia's Garuda have jointly introduced direct flights from Los Angeles via Honolulu and Guam.

Backpackers who get away from tourist-infested areas sometimes find they are treated as honored guests in remote hamlets. At the other extreme is Kuta, Bali's center of sleaze. Excellent surfing conditions, low prices and plentiful drugs made Kuta the last stop on the hippie trail blazed by Western youth in the 1960s.

Now it's a monument to unabashed hucksterism. Peddlers pester sunbathers on the vast curving beach. Advertising signs ("cold beer here") and souvenir shops lend a tawdry air to the village's narrow, rubbish-strewn streets.

Dr. Jarmel Talks About... Neck Pain

Mark E. Jarmel, D.C.

If your neck feels stiff, sore, or painful, one of your neck vertebrae may be slightly out of place. This will irritate the nerves controlling your neck and make the muscles tighten up in a painful spasm. Drugs may provide temporary relief, but they can't move a vertebra back into place. Chiropractic helps correct the cause of the problem by gently moving the vertebra into its proper position and taking pressure off the nerves.

Some of the problems that may be caused by spinal imbalance:

- Headaches
- Neck & Shoulder Pain
- Low Back Pain
- Hip & Leg Pain
- Sinus Trouble
- Arm or Leg Numbness

THE POST CROWN

If you have a tooth that is so badly broken that it is fractured right down to the gum line, your dentist may recommend root canal therapy (to save the tooth) followed by the post-crown procedure. In this procedure, a post is used to provide added support to the crown. The post he uses is a metal rod with a core at the end of it. After root canal therapy, he will fit the metal post directly into the tooth's nerve canal and cement it in place with the core extended out to receive the crown. This is the first stage. A crown will then be prepared to fit over the core so the tooth will be restored to proper function and appearance. The crown will be shaped to match the natural contours of your teeth and a natural-looking color selected.

Often times a tooth will become so badly damaged and decayed that your first thought might be to have it extracted. Any natural tooth is worth saving because no artificial tooth can fully replace its function and chewing efficiency.

If you have a badly broken tooth, call my office for an appointment. I will give you my recommendations to try and save your natural tooth.

Prepared as a public service to promote better dental health. From the offices of: Kenneth T. Perkins, D.D.S., P.A. Evans St., Phone: 752-5126 Greenville 752-5126

Vote Tomorrow

If you feel going to the polls and voting on election day is a drudgery, take a look at the Soviet Union right now where some sort of nuclear disaster has taken place.

The world doesn't know exactly what has occurred; more importantly, the Soviet citizens know practically nothing. That is because they live in a closed society where the bureaucracy is in control of everything, including information which might concern the personal safety of Soviet citizens.

Sure the Soviets vote, but they have no choice in whom they are voting for. All that, too, is controlled by the bureaucracy.

In our nation, the choices of who will operate our governments is wide and we, as citizens, are free to make our choices.

Tomorrow is an election and primary day in North Carolina. We will be choosing the candidates who will represent our chosen political parties in the November elections. In Pitt County there is also a non-partisan election for the Board of Education.

Comparing the closed societies of the world to ours should be incentive enough to prompt us all to visit the polling places and cast our ballots tomorrow. It is a cherished right that we could someday lose if we don't fully use it.

Support

High debt and low prices bulldozed 3,000 North Carolina farms in 1985.

Of the 76,000 remaining, 20 percent could be plowed under by the same machine. The dismal statistics keep coming — farms going out of business, prices and demand plunging. Farm families are watching as the gold that was tobacco fades to dull ochre.

The statistics are backed up by painful proof that they're accurate. Auction signs litter the rural landscape; tractors for sale line country lanes. A livelihood is vanishing.

A startling prophesy for North Carolina is that the effects of this disappearance will be felt disproportionately. Agricultural change will be invisible in some communities; in others it will be painfully obvious. Although farm production only comprises 3 percent of the state's revenues, a loss of farms will severely affect the economies of counties heavily dependent on crops.

In other words, the crisis won't be shouldered equally by North Carolina's geographic regions. Mecklenburg County won't feel the pain quite as much as Greene County. Wake's coffers won't sting from the loss of farms as much as Duplin's.

The entire state must prepare now to provide these adversely affected counties with a network of support, be it economic or political. In the 1970s, rural areas nourished city neighbors when urban problems menaced growth and standards of living. The debt should be repaid when the farm crisis threatens the state's rural economies.

'The Wreck Of Old 97'

Telegrapher David Graves George did not realize it that September Sunday afternoon in 1903 when the Southern Railway's New York to New Orleans Fast Mail flashed by his post in Southern's Franklin Junction, Va., station that the train would — albeit many years later — win for him a modicum of fame and fortune.

But George and other trainmen in the state did have misgivings and solemnly shook their heads, for Old 97 was going too fast. All of them realized that the notoriously dangerous "Long Mile" trestle just north of Danville was only a few miles ahead and engineer J.A. Broady was risking disaster unless he slowed the train before reaching that treacherous semi-circular trestle with its tricky downhill approach.

They gathered in the telegraph office and anxiously awaited word that the train had arrived safely in Danville. However, their worse fears were realized shortly when word was received that Old 97 had failed to make the curve and had plunged 40 feet or more into the ravine below. George and the other trainmen made their way to the scene where they assisted in removing the mangled bodies of Broady, conductor J.T. Blair, fireman A.G. Knapp and seven other dead men and the seven injured. The wreckage caught fire shortly after the crash, making the task of the rescuers more difficult and more hazardous.

George said later that he began writing the words of his doleful ballad the following week and set it to the tune of another sad song, "The Ship That Never Returned." He called it "The Wreck of Old 97" and it recalled how "They gave him his orders at Monroe, Virginia, saying 'Pete, you're way behind time. It ain't 38, but its Old 97 and you must put 'er in Center on time.' George was guilty of a bit of poetic license in his ballad. Whether "Pete" was Broady's nickname or was merely an instance of this poetic license is not clear. However, if George had been sticking closely to the facts, he would have written, "You must put 'er in Spencer on time." For Southern's next division point on Old 97's run was Spencer, N.C.

George also stretched his long bow a bit when he recorded that "he was going down the grade at 90 miles an hour when his whistle blew into a scream." The coroner's jury did find that Old 97 was traveling at an excessive speed. However, freelance writer J. Gaskill McDaniel said in an article published in 1933 that the train actually was going a little over 40 miles an hour, "but such a speed was reckless indeed, considering the treacherous semi-circular trestle" where the wreck occurred.

McDaniel said trainmen generally believed that Old 97 was going too fast because her brakes had failed and that when it passed Franklin Junction, 30 miles north of Danville, office, Gov. Martin has not made his top priority clear," the center says in a lead article on economic development published in the April issue of N.C. Insight magazine.

"At first Martin called attention to the state's mainstream industries," say authors Bill Fingers and Ann Sternlicht. (Fingers is Insight editor. Ms. Sternlicht is a doctoral candidate in economics at UNC-Chapel Hill.) That attention to "traditional industries" has been augmented, however, by continued reliance on industrial recruitment, service sector development and small business expansion, say various officers in the administration.

While those various strategies are all important, Martin will soon have to focus on priorities. "Without some sense of priorities, how can the scores of agencies involved in improving the state's economy coordinate their efforts?" the authors ask. "How can the state Department of Transportation, for example, know what road patterns will best bolster the governor's economic development strategy?"

Coordination may be a word that gets thrown around too often in government press releases and intellectual journals like N.C. Insight. But in the case of economic development, it is extremely important. The center reports that no less than 24 boards and commissions are involved in some aspect of economic development. In addition, state agencies work in eight different areas of economic development spending huge sums of money.

For example, the Department of Commerce spends $13.2 million annually on economic development, the Microelectronics Center $13 million, the community colleges $6.7 million. The Department of Natural Resources and Community Development spends $62.4 million in federal job training funds. The list could be expanded to include money spent on vocational and higher education, roads, ports and airports.

Are all these programs working towards the same goals? the center asks. Or, are they working in different and competing directions.

Obviously, there is some coordination. The commerce secretary and community colleges president meet regularly to map strategies, for example. And the staffs of the various agencies have the sense to keep in touch with each other.

"No matter how smoothly committees or staff-to-staff telephone calls work, however, the ultimate direction of the state's economic development effort rests on the shoulders of one man," Jim Martin, the center says.

To date, Martin has made two mistakes. He's tried to touch "all bases" and failed to develop a clear plan. Also he's been "reacting to external circumstances" like the tobacco and textiles problem. Those "actions were important, but he could spend his entire four years responding to emergencies based in Washington or abroad," and he won't have control over how those emergencies are handled, the center says.

Martin has commissioned a private study of economic development priorities that should be released this spring. At that time, a Martin strategy may become clear.

Populist Revival Builds Up Steam

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressmen Lane Evans and Newt Gingrich are ideological opposites whose votes on most issues cancel each other out, yet both like to call themselves populists.

Evans and Gingrich, Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, and conservative activist Richard Viguerie are trying to portray themselves as the true heirs to the century-old populist tradition.

Why the rush back to populism, a movement that began in rural America in the late 19th Century?

There is no single answer to why some of the most liberal as well as the most conservative politicians want to reclaim the movement.

On the left, it might be that Evans and Harkin are more comfortable referring to themselves as populists at a time when the term liberal is out of favor.

On the right, politicians like Gingrich and Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., have long urged Republicans to broaden the party's base and see a claim to populism as a way of doing that.

Whatever their motives, a lot of politicians see a populist revival under way in America, a movement spurred once again by hard times among farmers and by a widespread hostility to concentrations of power.

Banks and tight money are once again villains in America. So are big corporations and big unions.

right are trying to tap that discontent, they are by no means forming alliances that cross traditional party and ideological lines.

Gingrich, a Georgia Republican, and Evans, an Illinois Democrat, are trying to attract followers into very different camps.

Harkin said he often is asked, "If you are a populist and Richard Viguerie is populist, then what's a populist?"

The senator said he is "not trying to espouse an ideology," but rather is talking in terms of a "value system," a promotion of the idea that people need a bigger piece of the action economically.

Both Harkin and Evans, who met with reporters this week to talk about a one-day conference the New Populist Forum is holding next week, said that a wariness of concentrations of power is the common thread among people on the left and right who consider themselves populists.

But then they quickly drew a line. "I don't think they try to unite people constructively," said Evans of the conservatives.

"They don't have any solutions or any programs for how you break down concentrations of power," said Harkin.

The Iowa also said populism always has had two sides, what he called a "positive approach" and its "dark side," its appeal to "fear, hatred and insecurity." He contended the conservatives are looking more to the dark than the positive side of populism.

Strength For Today

Elizabeth Barrett was a young invalid languishing her life away on a couch thinking how miserable she was. Then one day Robert Browning, the poet, called at her home, and her life took on a new aspect.

The romance and subsequent marriage of Elizabeth Barrett Browning and Robert Browning brought together two of the most fertile literary geniuses of the 19th century. As soon as she really had something to live for, Elizabeth Barrett recovered from her invalidism.

The same was true of Sophia Peabody, an invalid who became one of the "three sisters" of a famous literary family. On her wedding trip with the young writer Nathaniel Hawthorne, she wrote to her mother, "Dear, dear Mother, every step the horses took I felt better."

"The expulsive power of a new affection" certainly demonstrates that love is often a better treatment for some ailments than medicine.

Summit ...

reprisal bombing raid against Libya on April 14 to punish Khadafy for the fatal attack on a Berlin nightclub and hobble what it called the nerve center of his international terrorist operations.

U.S. sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, said the allies have come together in the intervening weeks to find common ground, and that at least one of them — Italy — now says it, too, is prepared to use force against Khadafy in the future.

One senior official said Craxi told Reagan at a meeting Saturday he had warned Libya that "if there should be another threat to Italian territory — just a threat — the result will be a military action."

Italy and the United States have blamed the attack against airline passengers at the Rome airport in December on a radical Palestinian faction backed by Libya.

The formal statement on terrorism, as well as one criticizing the Soviet Union and calling for international sharing of information about nuclear catastrophes such as the Chernobyl accident, were delayed several hours as the leaders toughened anti-terrorist language worked out by their aides overnight.

The statement on the Soviet nuclear catastrophe pointedly noted that Moscow did not alert other nations about the accident and called on the Soviets urgently to provide information.

The final version of the document on terrorism pledged the summit partners to clamp strict limits on diplomatic and consular offices of nations that support terrorism, restrict travel by diplomats assigned to those missions and deny entry to anyone expelled from a member country on conviction for or suspicion of terrorist acts.

Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, meanwhile, said stringent security measures already in place to protect the leaders were being tightened still further following the firing of five makeshift missiles, at least two of which overshoot the summit's opening ceremonies Sunday and exploded harmlessly near the Canadian embassy.

Police blamed the attack on Japan's most notorious radical leftist group, the Chukaku-ha, or "Middle Core Faction," and distributed 100,000 leaflets asking citizens' cooperation in identifying "suspicious persons."

U.S. sources said British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher led the move to toughen draft statements on terrorism drawn up overnight. When she was handed her copy of the draft, a reporter could see a cover note on it from one of her advisers calling the document "pretty weak."

A senior aide to President Francois Mitterrand of France, which has been outspoken in criticizing the U.S. raid against Libya, said, "France was not apart from the others despite the problems over Libya. We are completely integrated. There is absolutely no tension between France over Libya. All that is over."

Other leaders participating in the annual conference, ostensibly to discuss economic matters, are Prime Ministers Yasuhiro Nakasone of Japan and Brian Mulroney of Canada. The European Community sends its representatives as well.

"We have decided to apply these measures within the framework of international law and in our own jurisdictions in respect of any state which is clearly involved in sponsoring or supporting international terrorism, and in particular of Libya, until such time as the state concerned abandons its complicity in or support for terrorism," the summit statement said.

Reserving the right of nations to act on their own — as the United States did in attacking Libya — the summit partners agreed, "Terrorism must be fought effectively through determined, tenacious, discreet and patient action combining national measures with international cooperation."

In addition to barring the export of arms to countries that sponsor or support terrorism, the document calls for strictly limiting the size of diplomatic and consular missions of such countries, control of travel by members of those missions "and, where appropriate, radical reductions in, or even the closure of, such missions and bodies."

That measure is aimed particularly at Libya, whose embassies already have been targeted for cutbacks and expulsions in several countries.

A provision that could be used to keep Libyan diplomats and others believed to be involved in plotting terrorist attacks from moving about calls for "denial of entry to all persons, including diplomatic personnel, who have been expelled or excluded from one of our states on suspicion of involvement in international terrorism or who have been convicted of such a terrorist offense."

The summit partners also called for improved extradition procedures and "the closest possible" cooperation between law enforcement authorities of all their countries.

Reagan spokesman Larry Speakes described the president as "extremely pleased" with the general agreement worked out by the summit leaders over dinner the night before. A few hours later, he told reporters, "We were pleased this morning; we're extremely pleased now."

Putting off their scheduled discussion of various economic issues, including a call for a new round of worldwide trade negotiations, the leaders worked first on the terrorism statement and a hastily drawn proposal on what Speakes called "the need to strengthen the safety procedures and to improve accident reporting procedures" following the Soviet nuclear power plant disaster in the Ukraine.

In another development, the prospects for a U.S.-Soviet summit this year appeared to improve when Mrs. Thatcher relayed a message to Reagan from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev asking her if Reagan still seemed interested in their meeting.

It was "the first message of any kind" sent to Reagan since the Soviets broke off planning for the summit in retaliation for the U.S. bombardment of Libya, said an official who demanded anonymity.

"I invited him," Reagan told reporters at a reception later. "The invitation is still good."

Court Will Consider School Rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today agreed to decide whether states may require public schools teaching evolution to balance it by also teaching creationism.

The justices said they will review a federal appeals court ruling that such a Louisiana law violated the constitutionally required separation of church and state.

The controversy is reminiscent of the famous 1925 "monkey law" trial in which teacher John Scopes was convicted and fined $100 for teaching Charles Darwin's theory of evolution when Tennessee law made it a crime to teach anything but the Biblical theory of man's creation.

Scopes' conviction later was overturned by the Tennessee Supreme Court and his case never reached the nation's highest court.

But in 1968 the justices struck down an Arkansas law that had barred teachers from using textbooks featuring "the theory that mankind ascended or descended from a lower order of animals."

Soon thereafter, creationists rallied behind the "creation-science movement" and its chief legal advocate, Wendell R. Bird.

Now an Atlanta lawyer, Bird served as the lead lawyer for Louisiana in the appeal acted on today.

The creation-science theory is that Earth and most life forms came into existence suddenly about 6,000 years ago. Although it is consistent with religious views, it does not rely overtly on the Old Testament book of Genesis.

The evolutionary theory is that Earth is billions of years old and that life forms began developing gradually several million years ago.

The Louisiana Legislature in 1981 used the same model legislation as had the Arkansas Legislature earlier, in enacting the Balanced Treatment for Creation-Science and Evolution-Science Act.

The Arkansas law that was virtually identical to the Louisiana law also was struck down after a federal court challenge.

In effect, the Louisiana law required the teaching of creation-science in the state's public schools whenever evolution is taught.

U.S. District Judge Adrian Duplantier struck down the law, and a three-judge panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld his ruling last July.

Discounting the law's stated purpose of allowing academic freedom, the appeals court panel said public schools always have been free to teach scientific theory that might coincide with religious beliefs.

"No court of which we are aware has prohibited voluntary instruction concerning purely scientific evidence that happens incidentally to be consistent with religious doctrine or tenet," the three-judge panel said.

It added that had the Louisiana lawmakers been interested in promoting creation-science, they would have required its teaching even when evolution was not taught.

"The act's intended effect is to discredit evolution by counterbalancing its teaching at every turn with the teaching of creationism, a religious belief," the 5th Circuit panel said.

The entire appeals court last Dec. 12 voted 8-7 against reviewing the three-judge panel's ruling.

Writing for the seven dissenters, Judge Thomas Gibbs Gee said, "Today we strike down a statute balanced and fair on its face because of our perception of the reason why it got the votes to pass ... After today, it does not suffice to teach the truth; one must also teach it with the approved motive."

Referendum

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's 30,000 soybean farmers will have a chance Wednesday to decide whether to continue a 1-cent-per-bushel assessment to promote their crop and underwrite research designed to improve production.

The soybean referendum, which will be held at agriculture stores, grain elevators and similar locations, will determine if the 1-cent assessment will be collected for six years beginning with the 1987 crop. A two-thirds majority is needed to pass.

Mrs. G.W., Fort Gay, West Virginia
"I have been on Dream Pill for one month and feel great...have lost 27 lbs."

Mr. A.D., Anadarko, Oklahoma
The System's Dream Pill combines the natural substances L-arginine and L-ornithine which can stimulate the body's production of growth hormone.

Dr. Robert Harris, a specialist in nutritional medicine in Stafford Springs, Connecticut, was recently quoted as explaining: "Growth Hormone may be what's responsible for allowing teenagers to down thousands of calories in hamburgers and other foods and still be thin as a rail."

"Growth Hormone is present in people up through the teenage years, then slowly diminishes with age. But L-arginine and L-ornithine make the body 'think' it belongs to a teenager again, allowing adults to eat [their favorite foods] — and still be thin and wiry."

Life Extension Authors Confirm Results

Durk Pearson and Sandy Shaw, graduates of MIT and UCLA respectively, introduced these miracle substances to the public in their runaway best selling book, Life Extension. They discovered the weight-loss effects by accident. Sandy fell and broke her foot and started taking L-arginine because of its well-known healing qualities. Much to her amazement Sandy lost 25 pounds of fat and put on 5 pounds of firm-toned muscle in six weeks. According to Durk's calculations, the pill caused Sandy to lose 400 times as much fat as she would otherwise have lost — without dieting!

LOSE WEIGHT 24 HOURS A DAY

One beautiful thing about the Dream Pill System is the ease with which it works. The pounds melt away 24 hours a day. You wake up every morning, slimmer, happier and feeling younger. The best time to take the pills is just before you go to bed at night. That way, the pounds melt away even as you sleep. You wake up every morning, slimmer, happier and feeling younger!

The super Dream Pill System is already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again. Naturally, individual weight loss results (like those above) may vary depending upon initial weight, metabolic differences and adherence to the Dream Pill System.

Extraordinary Guarantee

Place your order now. If you are not completely satisfied with the thinner "new you" simply return the empty container for a full refund of your entire purchase price. No questions asked. Now what could be fairer than that?

Rocket Failure Will Cause Longer Delay For U.S. Space Program

By MARUA DOLAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Facing its third disaster in less than five months after Saturday's failure of a Delta rocket booster, the nation's space program will be forced to grapple with a critical morale problem and public questioning, as well as a temporary but crippling loss of the ability to launch satellites, space agency officials and members of Congress said Sunday.

With three of the four major launch systems — the space shuttle, the Titan rocket and, now, the Delta — grounded because of accidents, officials predicted a significant interruption in the nation's space capabilities pending a thorough evaluation of space hardware and inspection practices.

"My guess is we are into a major hiatus in our flight program — maybe as much as a year before we are ready to fly again ...," said former NASA administrator James C. Beggs. "I would doubt it would be less than six months."

A high-level space agency official, who spoke on condition that he not be named, predicted a "push" to get a weather satellite launched aboard a Delta this summer. "But these things usually take 30 to 60 days just to get a preliminary understanding," he said, "and I don't imagine we'll be taking anything up (on a Delta) until we understand what went wrong."

Officials said the psychological effect on the space program is bound to be equally serious. "The agency has felt a certain amount of depression after the shuttle accident ...," said Rep. Don Fuqua, D-Fla., chairman of a House committee that oversees NASA's budget. "A successful launch would have kind of restored some of the faith in themselves."

Failure of the Delta, following on the Jan. 28 Challenger disaster and the explosion of an Air Force Titan 34D on April 18, leaves NASA with only the unmanned Atlas Centaur. The next Atlas Centaur launch is scheduled for May 22 to put a Navy communications satellite into space.

"Until we are told to stop, we are continuing to prepare for it," said NASA spokesman George Diller. "But we can always stop ... especially if they find anything (a problem) that could be related."

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, a former astronaut, said the string of failures may cause the space agency to hesitate before proceeding with the Atlas Centaur launch.

"You just have to go through each one of them (launch systems) with the same kind of analysis, whether there were people problems, procedure problems or hardware problems ...," Glenn said. "Anytime you have a string of failures like this, they are going to want to double check everything before it goes."

The Delta rocket was carrying a $57.5 million weather satellite needed for hurricane watches and search and rescue operations. An identical, companion weather satellite, now in the late stages of assembly, could only be launched from a Delta, Diller said.

"The problem is now we have to continue to rely on one satellite and we don't know how reliable it is and we're coming into the hurricane season," Diller said.

Satellites are built to conform to the rockets that will launch them. The Delta generally launches the lighter payload, followed by the Atlas Centaur with an ability to carry slightly heavier cargo and the heavy-duty Titan. A smaller rocket called the "Scout" is used for scientific research purposes.

The last Delta failure occurred in 1977. A five-and-a-half month investigation traced the explosion to one of its nine-solid fuel rocket boosters. Investigators believe Saturday's accident, which occurred after a shut-down of the main liquid fuel engine, will not implicate the boosters.

Both Glenn and Fuqua maintained that the string of recent space failures will not have serious consequences for congressional support of the space program.

"Long-term support of the space program will not be affected," Glenn said. "Obviously, a lot of questions are now being raised about NASA and about NASA leadership ..."

Several officials said the possibility of sabotage would be looked into. White House Chief of Staff Donald T.

Regan, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," called the "uncanny string-series" of accidents and the loss of the well-regarded Delta "very strange."

But there apparently was no evidence to indicate foul play. Glenn noted that the "diversity in location and types of launches would mean it would be difficult to make a pattern of sabotage." The Challenger and the Delta were launched from different locations at Cape Canaveral. The Air Force's Titan exploded during a launch from California's Vandenberg Air Force Base.

Robert Alda Dies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Robert Alda, the stage and screen actor who created the role of Sky Masterson in "Guys and Dolls," and began his film career starring as George Gershwin in 1945's "Rhapsody in Blue," has died at age 72.

Alda, the father of actor Alan Alda, died at his Los Angeles home Saturday night, two years after suffering a stroke from which he never fully recovered, Robert Zarem, the son's New York publicist, said Sunday.

Born Alfonso d'Abruzzo in 1914, Alda combined the first two letters of his first and last names for a stage pseudonym and worked many years in New York theater. He created the role of the flashy gambler Masterson in the musical "Guys and Dolls" on Broadway. Marlon Brando portrayed the character in the 1955 movie.

He married Joan Browne, now deceased, who gave birth to Alan Alda in 1936 in New York. Eventually, Alda took his family to Hollywood.

His Gershwin role landed him a contract with Warner Bros. in 1945.

His film credits also included "Cloak and Dagger" 1946; "The Beast With Five Fingers" 1947; "Nora Prentiss" 1947; "April Showers" 1948; "Tarzan and the Slave Girl" 1950; "Two Gals and a Guy" 1951; "Beautiful But Dangerous" made in Italy in 1955; "Imitation of Life" 1959; "Cleopatra's Daughter" 1963; and "The Girl Who Knew Too Much" 1968.

Alan Alda, who starred in the "M-A-S-H" television series, was returning Sunday to Los Angeles from New York to be with the family, Zarem said.

"He taught me how to tell jokes," the younger Alda said of his father during a 1973 interview. "We would do Abbott and Costello routines. He'd be Abbott and I'd be Costello. We'd do 'Who's on first?'"

Besides Alan Alda, survivors include Alda's second wife, Flora, another son, Antony; a brother, Vincent d'Abruzzo; a sister, Anne Ciafone; and four grandchildren.

Zarem said funeral services would be private.

Number Of People In Service Increases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Defense Department now employs more people than at any point since 1975, and it is charting a small baby boom among the families of its active-duty personnel while supporting the largest number of retired individuals in its history.

Today's active-duty military force also is slightly older, better educated and includes more women than a year ago. It also has grown in overall size and has more men and women deployed overseas.

Those and other statistics are disclosed in the latest edition of an annual Pentagon study, "Selected Manpower Statistics." The new edition consists of 192 pages of tables and covers fiscal 1985, the year that ended last Sept. 30.

The report shows that as of that date, the Pentagon had 2,151,032 men and women on active duty and 1,171,054 civilian employees around the world, including foreign nationals.

"The total DoD manpower level increased to over 3.3 million persons, the highest since June 1975," the report says.

Although the study does not contain any narrative to explain trends, it does show the increase in overall employment results from a major hike in civilian workers. During fiscal 1985 alone, the civilian work force rose by more than 42,000.

The active-duty force also grew, however, climbing by about 12,800.

On balance, many of the tables buttress the statements of Pentagon leaders that the active-duty force is in its best shape in decades. During fiscal 1985, for example, the percentage of enlisted personnel holding a high school degree climbed past the 95 percentile mark.

Earlier reports have shown a dramatic increase in the number of new recruits with a high-school degree. The fiscal 1985 study, however, covers all enlisted personnel — not just recruits. It found the number of enlisted men and women with high school degrees rose from 94.2 percent in fiscal 1984 to 95.5 percent last year.

The study also found today's active-duty force to be slightly older, thanks to some changes on the male side. The median age for women held steady at 23, but the median for men rose to 25 compared with 24 the year before. There were also small but noticeable declines in the number of men aged 19 and 20.

The tables show women continue to make gains in the military. In fiscal 1984, the number of women in the military surpassed the 200,000-mark for the first time since 1945 — the last year of World War II.

In fiscal 1985, the number of female officers and enlisted personnel surged to 211,606 compared with 202,830 the year before. That increase included a jump in female officers from 28,665 to 30,322.

The study also includes some troubling statistics, however. One table shows, for instance, the number of "military annuitants" supported by the Pentagon climbed to 1.48 million as of last Sept. 30 — "the highest level ever recorded."

To the Pentagon, an annuitant is an individual who has either retired with a pension after a minimum 20 years of service; retired with benefits because of a disability, or a family entitled to survivor benefits

GAO Says Some Foreign Aid Returns To U.S.

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — A large proportion of the billions of dollars the United States spends on foreign aid returns quickly in the form of purchases of American goods and of wages, salaries and other payments to Americans, the General Accounting Office says.

A large part of it also comes back to this country eventually in the form of loan repayments. Only a small part is given as grants.

The bureau, which watches spending for Congress, sampled the year that ended Sept. 30, 1984. Its report was written for Rep. David R. Obey, D-Wis., chairman of the subcommittee on foreign operations in the House Appropriations Committee. Dated March 7, it was made available to reporters last week.

Congress approved $5.7 billion for loans to buy military equipment, and another $700 million in grants. Julia McCabe, in charge of this part of the report, said all of this was to be spent in the United States, except for a small proportion in Israel.

The loans are given on easy terms and are intended to be repaid, although other GAO reports show some borrowers are behind in their payments.

California got the most military contracts, $201.7 million worth, followed by New York with $154 million and Pennsylvania, $117 million. The report noted that a few companies dominate the business: McDonnell Douglas Corp. got $1.104 billion and General Dynamics Corp. $1.061 — or 29 percent of the total for the two companies.

The U.S. Agency for International Development spent $4.39 billion. AID money is also largely in the form of long-term loans to benefiting countries. These are for eventual repayment to the United States.

Borrowing governments often use the loans to buy goods here. The General Accounting Office traced payments of $1.5 billion in 1984 to people and companies with a U.S. address. In addition there was $400 million for which addresses were not complete, and $363 million worth of operating expenses, much of it in salaries and allowances to Americans.

"The $1.5 billion is certainly an understatement of the amount coming back to this country," Lynn Moore, project manager for this part of the report, said in an interview. "It wasn't possible to separate it all out."

New York won $160 million worth of contracts, Texas $91 million, and California $73 million.

Cargill Inc., the big grain merchant, got the largest total: $52 million, followed by America-Mideast Educational & Training Services of Washington, D.C., $25 million, and Caterpillar Tractor, $17 million.

The report does not include well over a billion dollars in loans and grants for food aid. Almost all of this goes for farm products grown in the United States, and some of the rest to American shippers. The long-term loans are for repayment to the U.S. government.

For six international organizations Congress appropriated $1.54 billion. They spent $1.59 billion in this country, or about $50 million more than they received. The organizations are: the World Bank, which had the bulk of the money; the Inter-American Development Bank; the Asian Development Bank; the African Development Bank Group; the United Nations Development Program, and the United Nations Children's Fund.

All but a small part what these agencies get is put out again in the form of loans on easy terms rather than as grants. The intergovernmental banks lend the money out again to poor countries as it is repaid.

Of the total non-military spending, New York got the biggest slice: $776 million; followed by California with $470 million, and Pennsylvania with $367 million.

The U.S. Export-Import Bank received appropriations of $1.42 billion and disbursed $1.73 billion, "virtually all... to U.S. suppliers," according to the report. This bank lends money to foreign buyers to encourage them to buy U.S. goods.

The state of Washington did best million, $109 million went to Bechtel International, the big construction firm. of loans, of which $302 million went to the Boeing Co. Of California's $277

Tax Plan May Hit Breaks

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee is setting to work on a new tax-overhaul plan that threatens some special tax breaks widely used by middle-income Americans.

The new bill, drafted by Chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., would allow no further tax-deferred Individual Retirement Accounts for the millions of workers covered by a company pension plan. It would permit no medical-expense deduction until outlays for doctors and medicine exceed 10 percent of income. It would crimp the write-off for car and education loans. And the preferential tax treatment of capital gains would end.

In return for those special benefits, the plan offers a general reduction in individual tax rates — the maximum would drop to 27 percent from 50 percent; a $2,000-per-person exemption for all but the wealthiest people, and increases in the standard deductions. Most people would get a small tax cut from the plan; the biggest winners would be about six million working poor who would be swept off the income-tax rolls.

Packwood and others who endorsed the new effort hailed it as the most-sweeping tax-overhaul plan seriously considered by Congress.

"This dramatic departure from our existing federal income tax system will spur capital formation and economic growth by directing that investment decisions be based on real economic considerations rather than artificial tax benefits," said Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo.

Packwood told a news conference Friday he thinks a majority of the 20-member committee supports the plan, including Republican Leader Bob Dole. But a few hours after Packwood spoke, Dole issued his own statement.

The plan is a good start in principle, the Kansan said, and he supports Packwood's efforts to produce a bill. "However, there are still a number of items that merit attention" and "if these questions can be worked out, then the chairman will have my full support."

The Reagan administration has offered no endorsement of Packwood's proposal, which is based on the plan that President Reagan sent to Congress last year. The new proposal meets Reagan's demands for a top individual tax rate no higher than 35 percent; a $2,000 personal exemption for most; and sufficient incentives for business investment.

But one area that could cause problems for the bill is the section that would repeal preferential tax treatment of individual capital gains, which are profits from the sale of stock and other assets owned more than six months.

In The Area

Open House

The Eastern North Carolina School for the Deaf will hold an open house from 1-4 p.m. Wednesday. A tour of the campus, a student art show and refreshments will be available. A talent show will be held at 7 p.m. in McAdams Hall Auditorium. The school is located on U.S. 301 North in Wilson.

Spring Play

G.R. Whitfield kindergarten and first grade students presented a spring play, "Down By The Creek Bank" for students and parents. The production was a musical directed by Robin Dailey. Parent volunteers provided a cast party for students and a bag lunch for teachers after the play.

Greenville Police Saturday and Sunday

At 7:25 p.m. Sunday, the department said about $599 in miscellaneous items were taken from a residence at 1220-A Battle St. A bike valued at $198 was reported taken from 308 Student St. at 1:02 p.m. Saturday. At 10:47 p.m. Sunday, police said a moped was taken from 15 Village Green.

President Elected

The Greenville Chapter, Professional Secretaries International has announced that Mary Kittrell was elected president of the group. Other officers for the 1986-87 year include Mary Blick, president-elect; Dean Mills, recording secretary; Vivian Bazemore, corresponding secretary; Mary Baker, treasurer, and Wendy Beres, Nila Bland, Kathy Thuma and Charlene Boyd as directors. For more information about the meetings, call Ms. Kittrell at 758-3426.

Science Fair

A science fair was held recently at A.G. Cox School in Winterville. Fourth grade winners were Julie Jones, first place; Ben Mega, second place, and Christina Stewart, third place. Lori Kuykendall received first place among fifth graders; placing second was Aaron Cobb and third place went to April Joyner. Sixth grade winners were Amber Madrin, first place; Stacy McMillian, second place, and Scott Strickland, third place.

Traffic Mishap

No injuries were reported in a Friday traffic mishap that resulted in about $14,000 in damages, according to the Greenville Police Department. Police said cars driven by Robert Lynn Stancil of 704 S. Magnolia Ave. and Ronald Todd Davenport of Winterville collided at 11:01 p.m. on Greenville Boulevard. No charges were filed in the incident, police said.

Two-Night Revival

New Deliverance Mission, Route 1, Winterville, will hold a two-night revival Thursday and Friday at 7:30 p.m. with Shirley Atkinson of Holy Mission and Ann Moore of Tabernacle of Faith as guests. Holy communion will be held at 7:30 p.m. Saturday and quarterly meeting service will be at 11 a.m. Sunday. Dinner will be at 2 p.m. Sunday and at 3 p.m. Helen Webb and the Household of Faith will be in charge.

Man Stabbed

A Bell Arthur man who was stabbed early today was listed in good condition in Pitt County Memorial Hospital, according to the hospital's nursing supervisor. Greenville police said Alexander Monk received injuries after being stabbed at West Fifth and Elizabeth streets at about 2:33 a.m. No charges have been made, and police were continuing the investigation this morning.

Family Violence

Dr. Jane Ollenburger and George Fuller will speak on two aspects of family violence relating to Pitt County at a noon meeting Tuesday. Dr. Ollenburger will present results of a survey of whether Pitt County needs a shelter for abused women. Fuller, a facilitator for the County Family Violence Program, will discuss male abusers. The meeting will be held on the second floor auditorium of the county office, 1717 W. Fifth Street. For more information, call 752-3811.

Shoplifting

Melvin Leon Harrison was arrested for shoplifting at Food Lion grocery store by the Greenville Police Department at about 8:47 p.m. Sunday, according to police.

Balloon Launch Scheduled

ECU News Bureau
A nationwide science project involving a May 12 launch of 175,000 helium-filled balloons will be coordinated in North Carolina by Dr. Floyd E. Mattheis, director of the Science and Mathematics Education Center at East Carolina University. Mattheis is the state coordinator for the Triangle Coalition for Science and Technology Education Balloon Launch involving school children at 500 locations including 11 sites in North Carolina. The launch, scheduled for 1:30 p.m., heralds the first school day of National Science Week. Throughout the United States, 175,000 students will let go of their balloons at the same time. Once aloft, each balloon's journey will be determined by the altitude it reaches and the prevailing winds. The local launch, coordinated by Ruby Jackson, will be held at D.H. Conley High School. Mattheis said that yellow postcards noting the student's name and the launch site will be attached to each balloon. Finders of balloons are requested to fill in information on where the balloons were found and mail the card to the National Center for Earth Science Education at the American Geological Institute in Alexandria, Va. "Cards will then be distributed to post-launch analysis centers and will be returned to the students who launched the balloons," said Mattheis. "The students will participate in science class discussions related to air currents, weather maps and other earth science concepts." Mattheis said 4,000 balloons will be launched from 11 North Carolina sites. The balloons will be supplied by the Du Pont plant of Kinston. Originator and coordinator of the balloon launch, the Triangle Coalition for Science and Technology Education is composed of member organizations from business, industry, labor, science, engineering, medicine and science education all of which are committed to the improvement of science education for all students. National Science Week is sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

Inmates Escape Kinston Jail

KINSTON, N.C. (AP) — Six prisoners escaped from the Lenoir County Jail by breaking out of an "escape-proof window," and a search continued today for the five who remain at large, authorities said.

Donald Edward Hardman Jr. of Angier, charged with one count of felonious breaking and entering and four counts of second-degree burglary, was captured at 7:30 a.m. today on N.C. 55 near the Wayne County line, Lenoir County Sheriff's Detective A.L. Phillips said. Authorities continued to search today for the other escapees. They are: Gregory Turnage of Grifton, charged with breaking and entering and larceny; Mark Turnage of Grifton, charged with breaking and entering and larceny; Calvin Linder of Kinston; Jesse James Montiel of Kinston, charged with assault inflicting serious injury; and James Bryant Jones of LaGrange, charged with three counts of armed robbery.

The prisoners broke out of an "escape-proof window" about 9:20 p.m. Sunday by using a piece of scrap metal to beat out the window and the bars or to pry them off, Phillips said. The escapees covered the noise by "singing and cutting up back there in the jail, causing a little disturbance," Phillips said. "The sheriff says they were holding church services, but I doubt that." The prisoners were discovered missing about 11 p.m., he said.

Six Are Charged In Drug Probe

Pitt County authorities have charged six people as a result of an undercover drug investigation that began in February, Sheriff Ralph Tyson said today.

Tyson said Gregory H. Scheller of Route 13, Greenville, was charged Saturday by the department with intent to sell and deliver cocaine, possession with intent to sell marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. Scheller was placed under a $20,000 secured bond, Tyson said.

Raymond Warren of Greenville was charged by the department Saturday with simple possession of cocaine, Tyson said. He was placed under a $1,000 unsecured bond.

Other arrests made by the department included Willie Earl Warren of Route 1, Greenville, who was charged Wednesday with possession of marijuana and possession and intent to sell marijuana; Raymond Raymond Harris Jr. of Bethel, who was charged Wednesday with possession and intent to sell and manufacture marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia; Mary Cathleen Bell of Bethel, who was charged Thursday with simple possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia, and Steve Harrington of Greenville, who was charged April 24 with possession with intent to manufacture, sell and deliver valium and possession of second pills.

The department received assistance from Bethel, Farmville and Greenville police departments, and other arrests may be pending as the investigation continues, Tyson said.

Doctors Vote To Create Own Health Organization

ASHEVILLE (AP) — By forming a statewide health organization of their own, North Carolina physicians will be able to control the decision on how their fees are set and how to cut costs without sacrificing quality, a Winston-Salem doctor says.

Dr. Frank Sohmer of Winston-Salem, chairman of the North Carolina Medical Society committee that planned the organization, said the society's organization may be more attractive than health maintenance organizations, or HMOs, and preferred provider organizations, or PPOs, because it is "doctor driven."

"Basically we have no control at all if we join the PPO at Blue Cross, and they establish a fee schedule," said Dr. Kenneth E. Cosgrove, outgoing president of the Medical Society. "We don't really know what's going on with the fee structure."

During the Medical Society's annual meeting Saturday, delegates voted to create the statewide health organization. Delegates also voted to go on record against what it called misleading advertisements for CostWise, a new cost-cutting program created by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina.

The doctors' vote on the health organization left open the form that the organization would take. That will be decided within 60 days.

"The whole profession is changing," said Dr. D.E. Ward Jr. of Lumberton, a surgeon in practice for 34 years and past president of the Medical Society. "The rugged, individualistic doctor, he's resisting it. The younger doctors know they're going to have to deal with it."

Many doctors saw the Medical Society organization as the only strategy to survive financially against the competition for patients from low-cost health care provided by HMOs and PPOs.

In HMOs, doctors agree to provide medical care in return for a fixed monthly payment from each patient. In PPOs, doctors continue to charge a fee for each service.

Sohmer said there were about 12 PPOs and HMOs providing medical care to about 158,000 North Carolinians. More than half, 4,700, of the state's doctors are participating in a PPO or HMO as part of their private practice.

The N.C. Medical Society plan calls for a for-profit organization owned half by the society and half by individual doctor-investors.

It is designed to negotiate contracts to provide medical care for groups of people with a ceiling placed on the total amount the organization can be paid for all medical services. Each doctor still would charge a fee for services rendered. But the financial incentive, not yet defined, would be designed to encourage doctors to minimize costs.

Meanwhile, doctors also adopted a resolution opposing CostWise advertising and other communications that tend to "discredit non-participating physicians as not being concerned with the provision of quality care at a reasonable cost."

Under the insurance plan, participating doctors agree to accept CostWise's maximum allowance — based on usual and customary fees — as payment in full for services rendered to patients.

They also agree to file claims on behalf of patients and receive comparatively quick payments from the insurance plan. Non-participating doctors must get their payments from patients, who are reimbursed from the insurance plan.

One CostWise newspaper advertisement urges consumers to "check your doctor's vital signs," and suggests that participating doctors "deserve a lot of credit ... (for) helping slow the rise in premiums and co-payments."

Some 45 percent of the state's physicians have signed up for the program, and insurance officials have predicted 85 percent participation by the end of this year.

Meanwhile, the Medical Society voted to discontinue its Blue Shield Committee — which has for many years advised Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina on medical practices and procedures — and make the services of its Committee on Health Insurance Companies and Plans available to all insurance companies on an equal basis.

Nuke Sites Dominate Festival

WAYNESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Participants in the 54th annual Ramp Festival Sunday concentrated more on opposing a proposed nuclear waste dump for North Carolina than on their usual political agenda.

The inclusion of the Western North Carolina site on the Department of Energy's list of possible nuclear waste repository sites was the main topic during about 30 minutes of speeches.

"Please vote against the nuclear dump," House Speaker Liston Ramsey told some 6,500 who gathered at the festival, the largest turnout ever for the event.

Sen. Charlie Higgs, D-Haywood, called the nuclear dump issue "the most fundamental problem in the mountains right now."

Four Charged In Murder

WILMINGTON (AP) — Two teen-age sisters have been charged in connection with the murder of their 36-year-old mother, who was found suffocated in a closet, authorities say.

Two other women — one a niece of the victim — have also been charged in the death of Annie Mae Bullock, whose body was found in her apartment April 27, Wilmington police Capt. Woody Bradshaw said Sunday.

Teresa Renee Bullock, 19, was charged Saturday with first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit first-degree murder, Bradshaw said. Geneva Lovetta Bullock, 16, was charged with conspiracy to commit murder.

Fontella Roney Whitaker, 18, the victim's niece, and Sabrina Eline Wallace, 18, who lived with the Bullocks, were charged with first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit first-degree murder, Bradshaw said.

All four women were being held in the New Hanover County Jail. They were scheduled for a first court appearance in Wilmington District Court today, he said.

Police were called to Mrs. Bullock's apartment "after her children reported finding her body in a walk-in closet," Bradshaw said. "She had died of suffocation that Friday morning, two days before she had been found."

He said the slaying was apparently the result of a family argument going on for some time.

Unmowed or littered lawns should be reported to the City Engineering and Inspections Department at 752-4137.

"They had a lot of family problems," Bradshaw said.

Senate Campaign Highlighted By Dullness

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The date was Sept. 11, 1985. Former Gov. Jim Hunt, beloved by many to be gearing up for another Senate bid, instead stunned friends and foes by announcing that he was quitting politics — at least temporarily.

Hunt's decision is one of many bizarre twists in a Senate campaign that reaches only the halfway point with Tuesday's primary election.

The campaign has been roundly derided as dull when compared with the 1984 slugfest between Hunt and victorious Sen. Jesse Helms — the state's most expensive and probably its most bitter Senate battle.

The situation was summed up during a recent candidates' forum in Goldsboro, when Walt Atkins, one of 10 would-be Democratic nominees, tried to pep up the crowd by asking people if they were excited about the race. Silence greeted him.

"Well, are you?" Atkins asked. More silence. Finally, a few people applauded feebly.

"It's simple — people are still burned out from 1984," Merle Black, professor of political science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said last week.

Another widely held opinion is that this year's race has had more than its share of unusual developments. "Downright wierd" was how one candidate's top strategist recently described it.

Item: The first hint of a possible clash for the Republican nomination between Rep. Jim Broyhill and a rival backed by the National Congressional Club came months before Sen. John East had decided against seeking reelection or Broyhill had entered the race. And the "rival" wasn't David Funderburk.

A News Analysis

At the state Republican convention in late June, Broyhill aides put out the word that he would consider running if East didn't. Tom Ellis, chairman of the Congressional Club, promptly said he might run if Broyhill did.

Item: After refusing for months to disclose his intentions, East didn't show up for the news conference at which his decision to forgo the race was announced. An aide read a prepared statement in which the ailing incumbent endorsed Funderburk, a college professor and former ambassador to Romania.

Item: Former Gov. Terry Sanford's first hint that he would run for the Senate came, not in mid-January when he announced his candidacy, but on that long-ago day when Hunt bowed out. Sanford released a short statement saying he wanted to run and would hold a news conference Oct. 1.

The news conference never materialized. Sanford, apparently discouraged by the lukewarm reception he received in Democratic leadership circles, dropped his plans.

Item: The Democratic nomination, now sought by 10 people, resembled a hot potato last fall. One well-known Democrat after another — former University of North Carolina president William Friday, then-state party chairman Wade Smith, former state commerce secretary D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth, and most of the state's Democratic House members — tossed aside the opportunity to run.

Item: Of the 11 little-known Democrats who saw the first team's reluctance as an invitation to step forward, former Pitt County judge Marvin Blount — whom many considered the early front-runner — is the only one to have dropped out.

Item: Sanford and Faircloth, longtime allies, engaged in what many likened to a game of "chicken" in mid-January. Both said they wanted to run, but not against each other. Faircloth openly sought support at a state party executive committee, saying he believed Sanford wouldn't run. Sanford announced his candidacy that night. Faircloth backed out.

Item: Undaunted by talk of a Sanford juggernaut, nine other Democrats filed for the race. Few are regarded as serious contenders; but their presence only enhanced the campaign's surreal nature.

There was Atkins, a Graham city councilman who expounded his views in a daily telephone message called "Dial-A-Senator." There was Katherine Harper, a Charlotte businesswoman who proclaimed she was running on God's orders.

Milton Croom, 75, a Raleigh businessman, momentarily grabbed the spotlight by acknowledging he had ties to political extremist Lyndon LaRouche. And Glenn Miller, leader of the White Patriot Party, joined Broyhill and Funderburk on the Republican ticket.

William Belk, formerly president of the national Young Democrats, created a stir when he told a reporter he hadn't voted in the Hunt-Helms race. At a news conference, Belk at first refused to answer questions about the revelation, then said Hunt strategist Bert Bennett had warned Belk his political career would be over unless he contributed to Hunt. Bennett denied it.

Iacocca Urges Graduates To 'Think For Yourselves'

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

DURHAM (AP) — The next generation should reject solutions such as "trickle-down" economics and demand new ideas from leaders if it is to erase the nation's $2 trillion deficit, Chrysler Corp. President Lee Iacocca says.

"Trickle-down produced more debt in five years than in the previous two centuries," Iacocca told 2,000 Duke University graduates Sunday at commencement ceremonies in Wallace Wade Stadium. "Trickle down is going to become a water torture for somebody, and I think it's you. We've been using your credit card and you didn't even know it."

After World War II the mentality was to build up other countries by suspending the rules, while America remained chained to the ideal of free trade, he said.

"We forgot we couldn't automatically relegate the rest of the world to second-class status," Iacocca said. "Actually, we've got our heads in the sand. We forgot that companies don't just compete against companies. Companies also compete against countries."

While 75 percent of the world's oil is subject to control by cartels and foreign governments impose taxes to limit U.S. imports, American companies are expected to play by different rules, he said.

"I think it's a beautiful ideal ... but it's not one of the Ten Commandments," he said. "And it's not the way the world works."

Iacocca said the best advice he could give is, "Think for yourselves."

"There are more paint-by-the-numbers ideologies that I can ever remember," he said. "They generally work only for the people who devise them."

Iacocca told graduates to "get mad at the people in Washington. Americans have always been a practical people. Until lately, we have always put practicality ahead of ideology. As Americans, we've always done a lousy job of figuring out where we're going, but we've always done a brilliant job of getting there."

Graduates should remember the risks and hardships American immigrants endured and never fear failure, he said.

"The Statue of Liberty stands for the ideals of America, but Ellis Island stands for the reality," said Iacocca, who has been instrumental in efforts to refurbish the statue and have its torch relit on July 4.

Wood Dies

CAMDEN, N.C. (AP) — George Matthew Wood, a Camden County hog producer and former state legislator who built a statewide reputation for business and political leadership, died Sunday. He was 60.

Wood served as a state representative from 1963 to 1966 and state senator from 1967 to 1972 and was also former chairman of the board of trustees at North Carolina State.

He was a candidate for governor in 1976 and gained a reputation as a fiscal conservative with progressive ideas on such issues as capital punishment, which he opposed, and the Equal Rights Amendment, which he supported.

Wood was also on the Board of Governors for the University of North Carolina System. But he usually described himself simply as "a farmer." His 4,000-acre farm in Camden County was for many years one of the top three hog-producing operations in the state.

His funeral will be Tuesday at the Cann Memorial Presbyterian Church in Elizabeth City. Burial will be in the Old Hollywood Cemetery.

Commencement

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina A&T State University's 850 graduates were praised for their achievements and applauded by 10,500 well-wishers who attended the school's 95th annual commencement exercises Sunday.

"Commencement is a rare feast," Clifton R. Wharton Jr., chancellor of the State University of New York system, told them.

N.C. A&T Chancellor Edward B. Fort encouraged the students to tell those they meet in the future that they are graduates of A&T, "a place where dreamers become achievers — from astronauts to presidents."

Senior class president Craig M. Joseph also was cheered when he warned his fellow graduates, the majority of whom are black, that they would have to work twice as hard as their white counterparts to prove themselves.

Wharton and U.S. Rep. Edolphus Towns, D-N.Y., a 1956 A&T graduate, were presented honorary doctorate degrees during the ceremony.

Artist Objects

WEST JEFFERSON, N.C. (AP) — The artist who painted four frescoes in two Ashe County churches that the Episcopalian vestry plans to move said his works are certain to either fall off or crack if the churches are moved.

"It would be sensible to leave it (the church) alone, there's nothing wrong with it now," Ben Long told about 100 residents who gathered Sunday to hear him discuss the proposed move. "It would be dangerous to move. It could be small damages or (the fresco) could come off like a sheet of ice."

The vestry of the Parish of the Holy Communion voted last month to move its three churches — St. Mary's in Beaver Creek and Holy Trinity in Glendale Springs, which contain the four frescoes, and St. Matthew's in Todd — to a 157-acre site in Fleetwood that the church bought last year. Members of the vestry have not said when the move will take place.

Two of the frescoes, the 17-by-19 foot "The Last Supper" and the 12-by-16 "Crucifixion," were painted on reinforced brick walls. The other two, "Mary Great with Child" and "St. John the Baptist," were painted on mobile supports made of metallic glass.

Austrian Voters Force Waldheim Into Runoff

By GEORGE JAHN
Associated Press Writer
VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Voters narrowly denied Kurt Waldheim an absolute majority in an election dominated by charges that he covered up a Nazi past, forcing the former U.N. chief into a runoff election for the Austrian presidency.

Waldheim received 49.64 percent of the votes Sunday, just 16,746 ballots short of absolute majority he needed. He will face socialist Kurt Steyrer in the June 8 runoff, Austria's first such election since 1951.

Of the 5,436,726 eligible voters, 89.5 percent cast ballots. Waldheim, who was U.N. secretary-general from 1972 to 1981, received 2,343,387 votes. Steyrer received 2,061,162.

Both candidates agreed that Waldheim, candidate of the center-conservative People's Party, had been aided by sympathy votes from people who thought he was being victimized by foreign accusers.

The World Jewish Congress in March publicized the first in a series of accusations: that Waldheim was enrolled in Nazi youth groups, that he knew of deportations of Greek Jews from the Balkans and that he was connected to atrocities against Yugoslav partisans and unarmed civilians.

Waldheim, 67, has said he served in a German army unit that killed partisans, and whose commander was executed as a war criminal. But he denies belonging to Nazi organizations, knowing of the deportations or participating in atrocities.

"After nearly 50 percent have shown confidence in me, this shows that my program ... is accepted by this impressive plurality," Waldheim told reporters.

Nevertheless, the gaunt former statesman appeared fatigued from weeks of campaigning against his accusers.

But Waldheim said Sunday that his platform would not change because it was built on "morality, fairness, productivity, and decency."

Alluding to the attacks by the New York-based World Jewish Congress, Waldheim said, "They were surely unpleasant, but they had the opposite effect from that what had been hoped for by those who unleashed them."

He added, "I hope the campaigning will be conducted more fairly and decently than has been the case in the last few months."

But Steyrer and his supporters, including Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, say the five weeks remaining until the runoff could work against Waldheim if proof of wrongdoing surfaces.

Also, supporters of Freda Meissner-Blau, the candidate of environmentalist Greens, lean toward Steyrer. Mrs. Meissner-Blau received 5.5 percent of the vote.

Otto Scrinzi, a rightist candidate, received just 1.2 percent. Most of his supporters favor Waldheim.

In the last presidential runoff, Theodor Koerner used the extra weeks to erase front-runner Heinrich Gleissner's lead and become postwar Austria's second president.

"These are new conditions," Sinowatz, whose Socialist Party is the senior partner in coalition with the Freedom Party, said of the runoffs. "The cards have been dealt again."

Steyrer, a dermatologist and former health minister who resigned to run for the presidency, described the June vote as a chance for a "new decision."

The post of president is largely ceremonial and elections to choose a new head of state usually are little noticed abroad. They drew international attention this time because of the controversy surround Waldheim and the wide support he enjoyed.

Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal, one of Austria's most prominent Jews and head of Vienna's Jewish Documentation Center, expressed disappointment no decision was reached Sunday. He said he hoped emotions would cool in subsequent campaigning.

In Israel, however, legislators asked the government to consider banning Waldheim from ever visiting their country if he wins the presidency. U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese is studying a similar request made by Neal Sheer, his department's top Nazi hunter.

A spinoff of the Waldheim controversy has been resurgent anti-Semitism here, fueled by the perception that the World Jewish Congress was interfering in Austria's internal affairs.

Wiesenthal, consistently skeptical of the World Jewish Congress allegations, said the group's reports were prepared by "a bunch of people (who) cannot read German documents."

Afghan Leader Resigns, Making Way For Secret Police Chief To Take Over

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer
ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The head of the secret police, Najibullah, replaced Babrak Karmal as leader of Afghanistan's communist government and vowed to use his experience and abilities to crush Moslem rebels.

Radio Kabul, in a report monitored Sunday in Islamabad, announced that Karmal was resigning as the head of Afghanistan's ruling Communist Party because of poor health, and that he would be replaced by the 39-year-old Najibullah.

The government radio said Karmal, who appeared to have fallen out of favor with Afghanistan's Soviet allies, would retain his lesser post as president of the Revolutionary Council and his seat on the seven-member Politburo.

Najibullah, a member of the Politburo, has been chief of the secret police and other state security agencies, and is reported to have close ties to the Soviet KGB secret police.

Some Western reference works give the new leader's name as Mohammad Najibullah, but the Afghan Embassy in Islamabad said today that he has only one name — Najibullah.

In a brief statement broadcast by Radio Kabul, Najibullah praised Karmal for his past work and pledged to use his security and military experience to defeat anti-communist guerrillas battling the Marxist government.

Karmal, 57, was installed by Soviet troops in December 1979 when they entered Afghanistan and deposed President Hafizullah Amin, who also was a Marxist. Amin was killed.

Karmal's resignation came on the eve of the resumption of indirect United Nations-mediated talks in Geneva between Afghanistan and Pakistan on a political settlement to end the war in Afghanistan.

The U.N. talks, which began in 1982, are to discuss for the first time the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan, the final clause in a proposed four-point agreement on ending the war.

In a statement broadcast by Radio Kabul, Karmal said that after deep thought he had decided to step down because of poor health.

He urged the Afghan people to maintain their friendship with the Soviet Union and continue the war against the rebels.

"I dedicate my life and my blood to my people and my country," Karmal was quoted as saying.

Najibullah's elevation appeared to be a statement that the Afghan regime and its Soviet supporters were not backing down from their tough stand in the U.N. talks, Western diplomatic observers said.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman read a statement that said: "We will not attach undue importance to the changeover in leadership in Kabul (the Afghan capital). The identities of those who hold leadership positions are of less significance than the continued presence of 120,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan."

There have been growing indications that Karmal was out of favor in Moscow.

The Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda published an article on April 27 criticizing the Afghan leadership for its failure to defeat the rebels and for slowness in making changes in the backward Central Asian nation.

Speculation that Karmal was ill or in political trouble mounted when he failed to appear at the April 27 celebrations in Kabul of the anniversary of the 1978 communist seizure of power.

Karmal was reported to be in the Soviet Union on a month-long visit for medical treatment, and when he returned last Thursday the government said his treatment had taken longer than expected.

There have been reports in the past that Karmal has lung problems.

Moscow Radio, monitored in London, also reported Karmal's resignation. The radio identified the new Afghan leader as "Comrade Najib," a reference to Najibullah, and said he was unanimously elected party secretary-general.

Najibullah graduated as a doctor from the medical school of Kabul

University. He holds the rank of major general in the army and has been credited with creating the 60,000-member secret police, which has gained a bloody reputation in its war against the guerrillas and other opponents of the government.

Karmal still holds the title of president of the Revolutionary Council, but the post is of minor importance and the Communist Party is dominated by the higher-ranking Politburo and its Central Committee.

Quake Hits Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A moderate earthquake, the second in five days, shook Mexico's capital city but apparently caused no injuries or damage.

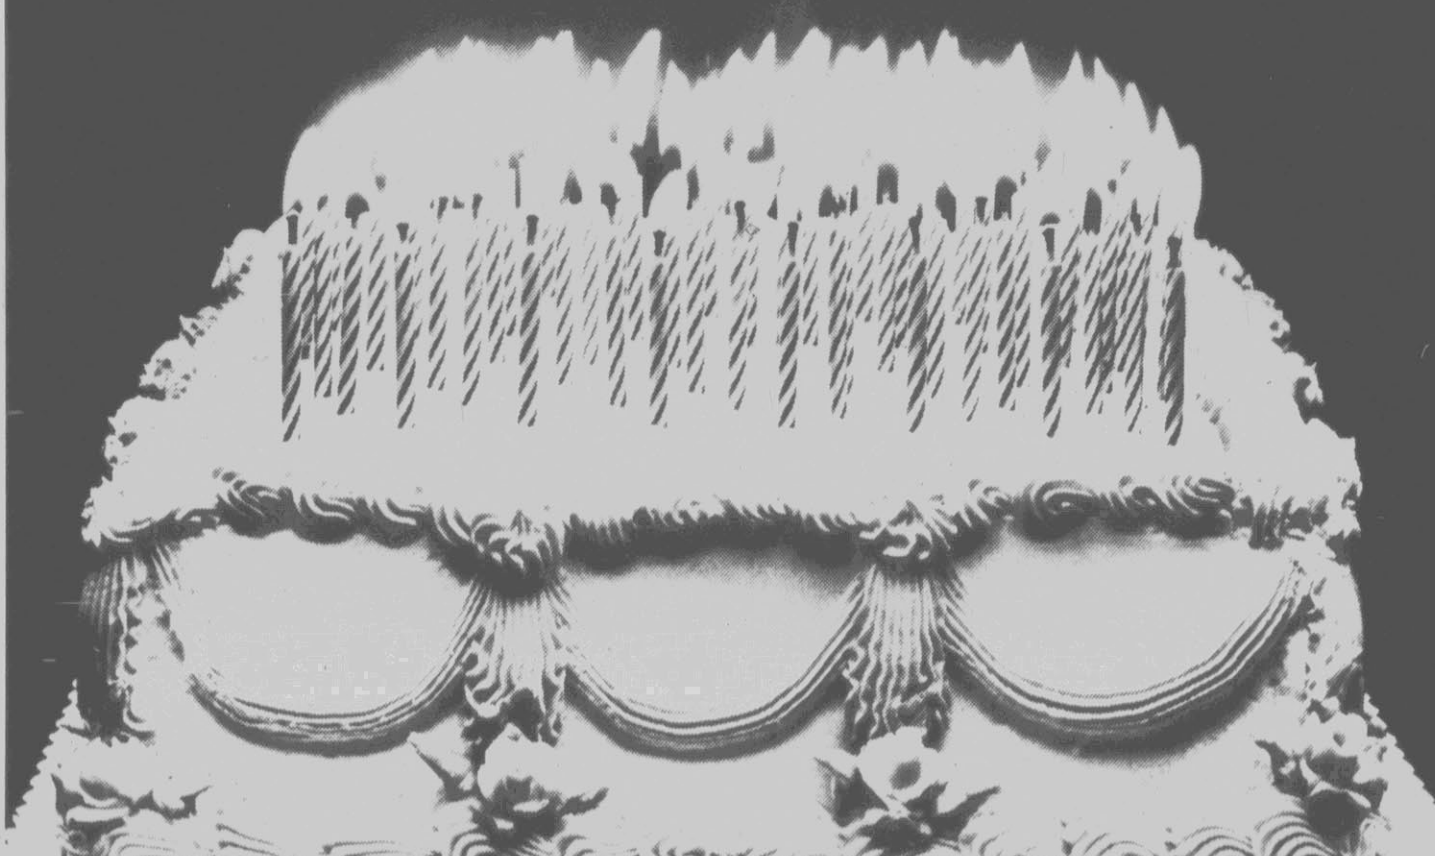

The quake struck at 11:50 p.m. Sunday (1:50 a.m. EDT today) and was centered in the Pacific Ocean off the Mexican coast, according to seismological reports.

Last September, a quake measuring 8.5 on the Richter scale killed 8,000 people and caused extensive damage in the Mexico City area.

Mexico City's Tacubaya seismological station said the Sunday night quake registered 6.0 on the Richter scale, and that it had no reports of damage. John Minsch, a geophysicist with the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., said it registered 5.4.

Soviet Official Says Radiation High At Chernobyl

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet television showed scenes of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster area and assured viewers there had been no massive destruction, but a top Kremlin official on a visit abroad said the site was dangerously saturated with radiation.

Boris Yeltsin, Communist Party chief for Moscow, said in Hamburg, West Germany on Sunday that 49,000 people have been evacuated from four communities around the Ukrainian power plant since a fire broke out in one of its atomic reactors April 26.

Yeltsin also told The Associated Press that radioactive emissions at the site 80 miles north of the Ukrainian capital of Kiev have dropped, but were at 150 roentgens per hour — an amount Western scientists call dangerously high.

Atmospheric radiation levels soared throughout Europe after the accident, but returned to normal or near-normal in most places by Sunday.

However, increases in ground-level radioactivity were recorded in Austria and parts of central West Germany, where readings were five times higher than normal.

In Japan, where President Reagan was attending a summit with leaders of six other industrialized Western nations, an early morning rain was tainted with non-hazardous levels of radiation. Reagan told reporters the situation was "not alarming."

At their session today, the seven leaders expressed sympathy with the Soviet Union in a statement, but criticized the Kremlin for releasing too little information about the tragedy and called urgently for more.

The statement from the United States, Japan, Britain, Canada, France, Italy and West Germany offered medical and technical help to the Soviets, and called for an international agreement in accord with International Atomic Energy Agency guidelines to ensure information exchanges in nuclear emergencies.

The head of the Vienna-based international agency, Hans Blix, left Austria for Moscow today to discuss the Chernobyl accident. Blix, a Swede, was accompanied by two safety specialists for the agency, Leonard Kostaninof of the Soviet Union and Morris Rosen, an American.

About two minutes of footage showing the Chernobyl site, shot from a helicopter, were broadcast on the Soviet Union's main national news program "Vremya" (Time) on Sunday night. The program is customarily viewed by millions of Soviets.

No people or signs of activity were visible in the film, which showed the undamaged building housing Chernobyl's reactor No. 3, what appeared to be an adjacent smokestack or cooling tower, and the wreckage of the building housing fire-swept reactor No. 4.

As in a still photograph shown on the news four nights earlier, no smoke or fire could be seen.

Footage also was shown of a huge, deserted housing area. Dozens of giant, prefabricated high-rises could be seen in the city that had apparently housed tens of thousands of people.

It was not clear, however, how far the evacuated area was from the power station.

The announcer did not specify when the footage was shot, but told viewers, "As you can see, there is no vast destruction such as the Western mass media have talked about incessantly."

However, blackened walls and chunks of twisted metal were visible in the film of the damaged reactor housing, indicating there had been a fire, explosion, or both.

In his interview in Hamburg, where he was attending a meeting of West German Communists, Yeltsin indicated that the gravity of some people's injuries suffered in the Chernobyl disaster had worsened.

Earlier, official Soviet reports said two people were killed and 197 were injured. Of the latter, 49 were reported released from hospitals and 18 were said to be in serious condition.

Yeltsin said Sunday that 20 to 25 people were in serious condition from unspecified injuries, and that another 10 to 15 may be added to that list. He said 154 people remained hospitalized.

The Moscow party leader said the danger area around the plant had shrunk from a circle 18 miles in diameter to one 12 miles in diameter, but said livestock there had been slaughtered and farming halted.

The 150-roentgens-per-hour figure cited by Yeltsin was described as dangerously high by Western scientists.

A roentgen is a unit of quantity used in measuring ionizing radiation, such as X-rays or gamma rays. Chris Rice, a radiation specialist with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in Washington, said anyone exposed to more than 90 minutes of radiation at the rate of 200 roentgens an hour could die within two months.

On Sunday, the official Tass news agency issued a government statement thanking nations, individuals and businesses that offered assistance and condolences to the Soviet Union since the accident.

The Soviets specifically expressed their gratitude to American bone-marrow specialist Dr. Robert Gale, who arrived in Moscow on Friday to help treat accident victims.

In an interview published in today's Los Angeles Times, Gale was quoted as saying he had begun performing surgery on people who had been brought to Moscow after being exposed to radiation from Chernobyl that attacks bone marrow.

"I am actually at work," Gale was quoted as saying. The newspaper said he declined to provide details in the Sunday interview.

Soviet state-run media and official representatives continued accusing the West of blowing the disaster out of proportion and using it for political ends.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda claimed Sunday that the West had exaggerated the accident's severity to draw the world's attention away from "the barbarity and disgraces" of U.S. foreign policy.

Georgy Arbatov, a specialist in U.S.-Soviet relations, also charged during an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp. that Reagan and other U.S. officials were using the accident to discredit the Soviet Union.

Western Leaders Express Concern

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials said they weren't trying to gain a propaganda victory from the Chernobyl nuclear accident as Western leaders at the Tokyo economic summit today issued a statement of concern over Soviet handling of last week's accident.

"We, the heads of state or government of seven major industrial nations and representatives of the European Community, have discussed the implications of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station," said the statement read at a news conference by Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe in Tokyo. "We express our deep sympathy for those affected. We remain ready to extend assistance, in particular medical and technical, as and when requested."

The Western leaders called for each country to provide "detailed and complete information on nuclear emergencies and accidents, in particular those with potential transboundary consequences."

"Each of our countries accepts that responsibility, and we urge the government of the Soviet Union, which did not do so in the case of Chernobyl, to provide urgently such information as our and other countries have requested," the statement read.

The leaders commended the Soviet Union for its plan to begin discussions this week with the director-general of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan on Sunday lashed the Soviets for not meeting demands from neighboring nations for more information on the nature and status of the accident.

"Frankly the way they've handled it is an outrage," Regan, in Tokyo for the summit, said on NBC's "Meet the Press." "We think that with over a third of the world's population directly affected by this accident, they have a moral obligation to tell the world what is going on."

"And to try to stonewall it, keep the information to themselves and let the rest of the world try to figure out whether they are in danger or not, is beyond what civilized nations should do," Regan said.

Regan said specialists have been sent to the U.S. Embassy in Moscow to monitor radiation levels.

American Doctor Treating Soviets

By WILLIAM J. EATON
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

MOSCOW — An American doctor who is an expert on bone marrow transplants said Sunday that he has started operating on Soviet victims of the Chernobyl nuclear plant disaster.

Dr. Robert P. Gale, who was invited by the Soviet Union to provide expert medical advice, said by telephone that victims of radiation exposure in the Chernobyl area had been brought to a Moscow hospital for treatment.

"I am actually at work," he said, confirming that he performed surgery Saturday and is scheduled to continue doing so.

Gale, an associate professor of medicine at the University of California, Los Angeles, and head an international registry of bone marrow centers, declined to give further details.

He said he expects Soviet authorities will soon disclose additional information about medical care of the victims. "It would be in everyone's best interests to do so," he said.

Gale was mentioned by name Sunday night in a formal expression of gratitude by the Soviet government which was transmitted by the official news agency Tass and broadcast on the main evening television news.

The Kremlin also invited Hans Blix, director of the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency, to come to Moscow with two IAEA nuclear safety experts in connection with the Chernobyl accident. They are expected to arrive Monday for an indefinite stay.

The IAEA announced in Vienna that Leonard Konstantinov, deputy director-general of the agency and head of its department of nuclear energy and safety, and Morris Rosen, director of the agency's division of nuclear safety, would accompany Blix.

Meantime, the nightly television news program, Vremya, for the first time since the accident in late April showed film of the Chernobyl area, taken from a helicopter hovering over the damaged plant.

A narrator said the film — which showed the roof blown off one part of the building but other parts still intact — indicated that Western news media were exaggerating the extent of the disaster.

The film also showed apartments of workers in a small town nearby, but the area appeared to be deserted except for some truck traffic.

Special teams have been formed to decontaminate the area, the announcer said, and the level of radioactivity there has dropped by up to two times. He gave no radiation readings, however.

West Texas Voters Finally Settle Odd Races

By DORALISA PILARTE
Associated Press Writer
EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Voters in this border city finally had their say after a campaign involving candidates in a bar, jails, a mental hospital and a grave.

Before Saturday's elections, one bewildered reader wrote the El Paso Times, saying:

"Good luck, El Paso. We are confronted with candidates who, if elected, will conduct our political affairs in a jail, hospital, a lunatic asylum, a beer joint or a cemetery. And that's some of the good ones. Best regards."

Of those candidates who prompted the letter, the only one who got a second chance was Justice of the Peace

Walter McGhee. He faces a June 7 runoff for the Democratic nomination against Louis R. Lopez, with the winner meeting Republican Roy E. Kohn III in the November general election.

Lopez, who got 2,445 votes, or 46.7 percent, disapproved of McGhee's choice of the Incredibles bar as campaign headquarters and called for his resignation. McGhee, who received 1,537 votes, or 29.4 percent, dismissed Lopez's disapproval and decried the finger-pointing.

"My word, the mudslinger is going to meet an old pro," McGhee said after the results were in.

The late State District Judge Edwin Berliner lost the Democratic nomination to lawyer Peter S. Peca Jr., who found himself in the sticky predicament of running against a dead, but still popular, opponent. Berliner died March 22, too late to get his name off the ballot. Another live candidate was unsuccessful in trying to join the race after the deadline.

Peca, a political unknown who found himself in a situation requiring much diplomacy, said his victory resulted because he campaigned on his own merits. Peca got 16,567 votes to Berliner's 8,489.

Hoss Garvey, a real estate investor and country singer, complained that he was not allowed out of a mental hospital to cast his vote for county judge, the highest administrative post in El Paso County.

Garvey, committed Thursday for 90 days after he threw two bowling balls through a neighbor's window, said his rights had been violated. He contended police failed to take him seriously when he asked them to escort him to the polls.

County Attorney Danny Anchondo, who posted $5,000 bond to get out of jail last week, lost his attempt to retain his job for another term. He called his arrest and indictment on a felony charge of cocaine possession politically motivated and obtained a court restraining order against District Attorney Steve Simmons. The order later was dissolved.

Anchondo lost to lawyer Joe Lucas

17,528 to 9,390, or 65.1 percent to 34.9 percent. Lucas, who got out of law school just 3½ years ago, called his victory "just incredible."

Michael Webster, who also said his arrest last week on a felony theft charge was a political move to discredit him, lost the election to Orlando Fonseca for a seat on the county commission. Webster received 147 votes to Fonseca's 4,713, or 5.8 percent to 60.6 percent.

Webster's former campaign manager filed a police complaint, alleging that the candidate had hit him on the head when he tried to retrieve a stove, washer, dryer, refrigerator and television set.

Yuppies Finding Costs Going Up

By DENISE GELLENE
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

If your yuppie pals seem unhappy these days, here is why — it now costs more to collect such vital necessities as BMWs, imported sneakers and souped-up video cassette recorders.

So says Hugh Gee, publisher of Money Power Confidential, a San Francisco investment newsletter which offers stock tips that only the wealthiest young urban professionals, or yuppies, can afford.

According to Gee, it costs at least $30,829 to buy the 10 essential items that yuppies cannot be yuppies without. That is 5.9 percent more, he says, than the $29,117 yuppies would have plunked down to buy the same items a year ago.

High on Gee's list is the BMW 528e "the true chariot of the over-reachers." It now costs $26,000, up from $24,000 a year ago, he says.

Similarly, English-made Reebok Hi-Top aerobic shoes cost $5 more than last year and dinner for one at Berkeley's Chez Panisse costs $45, up from $40 a year ago, according to Gee's yuppie Index. Still, die-hard yuppies will pay the price, as the restaurant is to yuppies "what Disneyland is to mice," says Gee.

Gee's list has uncovered a few bargains. An Apple Macintosh Plus home computer has dropped in price to $2,499 from $2,795 and a Cuisinart DLC-7 Super Pro food processor which "does everything but make reservations" costs $260, down from $290. And prices of the Sony CDP 302 compact disk player and the Trivial Pursuit board game are unchanged.

Other things yuppies must have are a JVC HR-D75U video cassette recorder for $974, up $5; a one-year membership at a 24-hour Nautilus club for $258, up $8; and cocaine — "the real yuppie chow" — for $110 a gram, up $10, although, Gee notes "dealer prices may vary."

Gee, who is too old to be a yuppie, says he drew up the list by putting himself in a yuppie's tennis shoes. "I tried to decide what I would want if I were a yuppie," he explains.

And who are the yuppies? Gee acknowledges that young urban professionals "who once thought nothing of jumping in the old Bimmer (BMW) and heading down to the local gourmet grocer for some Brie" are keeping a lower profile, fearing they may be called "Too Yup." But while it may not be fashionable to behave like a yuppie, it is still OK to spend like one, he says. "They are still with us."

Gee says he analyzed the yuppie lifestyle to determine whether yuppies would be good customers for his monthly investment newsletter, which, at $225 a year, is one of the priciest ones around. His conclusion: With all the money they are spending, "Regretably, there's not much left for them to invest," he says. "Yuppies are a very poor prospect."

New Time Confounds Chinese

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

PEKING — China embraced another Western custom Sunday, daylight savings time, and in the process demonstrated once again how remarkably difficult it can be to impose even the most modest change upon this tradition-bound society.

At 2 a.m. Sunday, a quarter of the world's population leaped ahead by an hour. Although many other nations have employed this energy-saving technique for decades, it was the first time ever for this country, which hopes to save 1.5 billion kilowatt hours of electricity annually by the time change.

For the past two weeks, newspapers and television stations have been exploring the possible effects of the new time on everything from the human digestive system to individual work habits to the regional divisions between northern and southern China.

"Although mealtimes will be earlier during daylight savings time, the time from meal to meal will not change," the Peking Evening News assured its readers, quoting a professor of physiology who solemnly concluded that the time change would be "beneficial to health."

On Sunday morning, China's omnipresent outdoor loudspeakers, those tinny, static-filled devices that in days past filled the air with revolutionary slogans from Mao Tse-tung, were put to work reminding the nation of the need to reset clocks and watches.

A railway official at the station acknowledged that there had been "some problems" Sunday because of the time change, but he insisted they were not too serious.

The transportation problems were not solely the fault of errant individuals forgetting to adjust their watches. Chinese authorities compounded the difficulties by creating a patchwork system of scheduling adjustments.

Airplane schedules were moved ahead by an hour, so that any plane scheduled to leave at 2 p.m. before the time change would take off at 3 p.m. under daylight time. But Chinese trains, boats and buses kept to their same schedules, so a train that regularly left at 2 p.m. before daylight savings time would still depart at 2 p.m. afterwards.

First ECU Kidney Transplant Patient Hale, Hearty At Five-Year Checkup

By Tom Fortner
 ECU Medical Writer

Stuart Jackson rarely thinks about it these days — only at Christmas and on May 4, the anniversary of his kidney transplant at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Five years later, he is more interested in matters of natural concern to a healthy 21-year-old, including his job as a painter and his friendship with a certain young lady.

For Jackson's mother, though, the past has not yielded its claim on the present quite so readily. Eloise Jackson still carries the memory of her youngest child's brush with death. And though Stuart's doctors say he has every chance to live a long and happy life, she worries.

"You know how mothers are," Mrs. Jackson said. "I do think about it. Not everyday, but there's still a little fear."

Jackson reached that fifth-year milestone Sunday, a date that also marked the anniversary of the inception of the kidney transplant program at the East Carolina University School of Medicine. Jackson was the first person to get a second chance at a normal life through the program. Since then, 110 people like him have received a new kidney at the medical school/hospital center.

ECU-PCMH is one of five medical centers performing kidney transplants in North Carolina. The Greenville program averages about one transplant every 10 days, a higher volume than any other center in the state, according to Dr. Francis T. Thomas, chief transplant surgeon.

At Stuart Jackson's most recent checkup Dr. Thomas pronounced him in "good health and fine fettle." It wasn't always so.

In the fall of 1980, during his freshman year at D.H. Conley High School, Jackson began complaining of nausea. A few weeks later, after a night of vomiting and seizures, he was rushed to Pitt County Memorial Hospital, where the diagnosis of kidney failure was made.

When Dr. Thomas first saw Jackson the situation was, in his words, "touch and go." The youth was semi-comatose, with heavy fluid buildup throughout his body and surrounding his brain. Further tests substantiated that Jackson's kidneys were "permanently damaged," Thomas said.

Jackson made it through the immediate crisis, and in January began renal dialysis treatment to remove toxic wastes from his blood. Four months later, Jackson became the first person to receive a kidney transplant in eastern North Carolina.

Kenneth Jackson, the oldest of the five Jackson sons, donated one of his kidneys to his brother. At the time, Kenneth modestly downplayed the significance of this precious gift, calling it "no big deal." Today, the 35-year-old Pitt County auto mechanic says he is on no special regimen. "I can't tell any difference," he said.

Though Stuart Jackson admitted he initially had doubts about being the first kidney transplant patient at ECU, Thomas' record of having started two other successful transplant programs helped allay his concerns. Then, too, having Jackson close to home eliminated the burden that a two-month stay at a distant hospital would have placed on his family.

According to Thomas, most people in this area were receptive to the new transplant program, perhaps, he said, because they felt it was something the region deserved.

"We were extremely happy about bringing this technology to the area," Thomas said. "I think once people were convinced that we could do it they really united behind us."

Although kidney transplantation has become relatively routine, Thomas said it still has not reached its potential as a therapy for end-stage renal disease. The largest obstacle — yet the one that is perhaps most within our power to overcome — is the shortage of donor organs, he said.

Stuart Jackson received his kidney from a living, related donor, but about 70 percent of all transplants involve kidneys provided by the victims of fatal accidents who have been identified — by themselves or their families — as organ donors. According to Thomas, only a small percentage of kidneys that become available in this way are actually ever transplanted. Meanwhile, he said, as many as 15,000 potential recipients nationwide are on the waiting list at any given time.

Thomas said the best way to remedy this continuing tragedy is through public education. According to Thomas, medical professionals must be willing to approach grieving relatives even though they feel awkward and intrusive. Family members mourning the loss of a loved one must be shown that some positive good can come from disaster. And more organ donors, he said, must be identified and registered so that decisions will have been made in advance.

For the thousands of people on the waiting list for a kidney, these issues are more than academic. The difference between life on dialysis and life with a transplanted kidney can be enormous, Thomas said.

"It's the difference between feeling healthy and not feeling healthy, and that's an almost universal reaction," he said.

The distinction is also not lost on Eloise Jackson, who knows what it's like to have her child's life threatened and then restored. It's the kind of experience that keeps reordering your priorities, even five years later, she said.

"People have been so good to us," she said. "These things are not forgotten."

ANNIVERSARY — Stuart Jackson, seated left, with his mother Eloise and brother Kenneth Jackson was the first person to receive a kidney transplant at the East Carolina University School of Medicine/Pitt County Memorial Hospital center five years ago. U.S. Truck Is Bombed

KIRCHHEIMBOLANDEN, West Germany (AP) — A bomb attached to a U.S. Army truck exploded early this morning, destroying the vehicle and three nearby fuel storage tanks but causing no injuries, the military said.

The blast occurred at about 3 a.m. at the Haide barracks near the town of Kirchheimbolanden, the Army said in a statement sent by telex to news organizations. The site is a refueling stop for the U.S. Army about 35 miles southwest of Pfkurt.

"German police investigating the incident found a clock and battery mechanism near the site of the blast" and U.S. authorities were investigating, Army officials said.

The statement, sent by Army officials in Kaiserslautern, did not say whether there were any suspects. A bomb exploded in a West Berlin discotheque April 5, killing a U.S. serviceman and a Turkish woman and injuring 230 other people. The Reagan administration blamed Libya for the West Berlin blast and launched an air raid against the North African country 10 days later.

Body Found

CURRITUCK, N.C. (AP) — A 28-year-old Currituck County man has been charged with first-degree murder in the death of an elderly woman who died of multiple stab wounds, authorities said Sunday.

The body of Ethel Sumrell Owens, 79, of Harbinger woman missing since last week, was found about three miles west of Barco in dense undergrowth near U.S. 158, Currituck County Sheriff Norman Newbern said.

Nine Die As Trains Collide At Station

POVOA DE SANTA IRIA, Portugal (AP) — A passenger train barreled into a station in this Lisbon suburb today and slammed into a waiting commuter train, killing at least nine people and injuring more than 80, rescue officials said.

"We count nine dead so far," said Gil Martins, who coordinated rescue crews of the Portuguese Red Cross at the scene. The Lisbon radio station Antenna Um said three more bodies had been found.

Two hours after the 12:15 p.m. collision, Martins said rescue teams were still trying to cut through the twisted wreck of the express train to retrieve people trapped inside.

Authorities said 83 people had been taken to hospitals near the crash site and in Lisbon.

Allison Takes Winston 500

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Bobby Allison, the longtime head of NASCAR stock car racing's "Alabama Gang," was beginning to look like the leader of the "Over The Hill Gang."

The 1983 Winston Cup champion had not won a NASCAR stock car race since taking the World 600 at Charlotte, N.C., in May 1984.

There were some people saying the 48-year-old Allison was getting too old to drive race cars competitively.

"I may be over the hill, like some people have been saying, but I still enjoy what I'm doing," Allison said Sunday after ending his 55-race victory drought in dramatic fashion with a triumph in the Winston 500 at Alabama International Motor Speedway.

The 82nd win of his illustrious career — fourth on the all-time victory list — made him the oldest man ever to win a race in NASCAR's top division. Richard Petty was 47 when he won at Charlotte in October 1984.

"When I was in my early 20s, I won 19 in a row here in Alabama," said Allison, who lives in nearby Hueytown and considers Talladega his home track. "I lost in that 20th race and I wondered then if I'd ever win again. That's just the way it is."

"But I never start any race without feeling like I can win it, even in the worst of times."

Allison, driving a Buick LeSabre, held off Dale Earnhardt's Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS in the final turn of the last lap to win the race by about two car-lengths.

However, Allison and the other starters in the fastest field in stock car history appeared to be out of the hunt until a broken piston sent record-setting pole-winner Bill Elliott into the pits just 14 laps from the end.

Elliott led the record field with the fastest qualifying lap in stock car history, 212.229 mph. He led 118 laps and appeared ready to pull away from everyone except Allison and possibly Earnhardt before his problem.

"I felt like we had reserve on everybody else all day, but Bill had us beat," said Allison, who was running second when Elliott's Thunderbird slowed.

"He (Elliott) had more power than we did, but we handled better in the corners all day long. We could whittle away on his lead, but I wasn't going to beat him unless he let me."

Elliott's engine spewed oil onto the 2.66-mile oval and brought out the last of nine caution flags in the 500-mile race.

"We broke a piston," explained Elliott, who won 11 races last year but still is winless this season. "I'm a little disappointed, but I'm not mad, I'm not sad and I'm not glad. I'm not feeling much of anything right now. I just had a funny feeling all day something would happen."

"When Bobby and I were racing together, I thought he had something left he wasn't showing. But as long as I stayed in front of him, I thought I had enough in the car to handle whatever he had left."

The leaders all pitted after Elliott's exit, and Allison came out fifth, with Buddy Baker leading and the hard-charging Earnhardt between Allison and the top spot.

"I felt like there wasn't anybody out there ahead of us that we couldn't get, and there was still plenty of time left (when the green flag came out on lap 179)," Allison said.

Allison, who averaged 157.698 mph, was fourth on lap 181, second on lap 182 and, charging past Baker with Earnhardt right on his back bumper, took the lead for good on lap 183.

On the final trip around the track,

Earnhardt moved underneath Allison in the fourth turn, just getting the nose of his car ahead for an instant.

"I just felt I'd beat him to the line," said Allison, who led 38 laps in the race. "I had a great car and a strong engine all day."

Earnhardt said, "I got beat. I took a shot at him at the end of the straight and got by him, but he was awful strong and got right back by me."

The winner earned $77,905 from the total purse of $614,000. He also joined Daytona 500 winner Geoff Bodine as a candidate to win the "Winston Million," a $1 million bonus to any driver who can win any three of NASCAR's "Big Four," the Daytona 500, Winston 500, World 600 and Southern 500 at Darlington, S.C.

Bodine's chances of a second 500-mile victory ended when he was involved in one of the few accidents in the race, getting tangled up with Kyle Petty when Cale Yarborough blew an engine and spun into the wall on the backstretch on lap 64. Trevor Boys also crashed in that melee, and Allison's car took a piece of debris in the windshield that shattered it and "gave me a mouthful of glass before I knew what was happening."

Allison's Stavola Brothers crew was able to replace the windshield during the caution flag without their driver losing a lap.

"They really came through in that crisis and every time I came into the pits today," Allison said.

This was Allison's third victory in the Winston 500 and first since 1981.

Earnhardt moved into the lead in the Winston Cup point standings with his second-place finish. Defending champion Darrell Waltrip, who came into this race leading the standings, dropped out on lap 103 when his engine blew.

There were no injuries in the race, which was attended by a crowd estimated at 130,000, the biggest in Alabama sports history.

Police Chase Pace Car Thief

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — An unidentified fan jumped into an unoccupied pace car Sunday and delayed the start of the Winston 500 NASCAR stock car race while police on motorcycles and in squad cars chased him down.

The Pontiac Trans-Am pace car had been sitting in front of the main grandstand at Alabama International Motor Speedway awaiting the start of the 500-mile event.

The car finally was halted in the fourth turn of the 2.66-mile circuit when track safety and maintenance trucks formed a blockade across the track.

The man, who stopped the car without incident after getting up to more than 100 mph on the 3,000-foot backstretch, was taken into custody and quickly driven away in a police car.

The crowd for Sunday's race was estimated at more than 120,000.

Shark Wins Vegas Going Away

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Greg Norman became almost testy when someone suggested that his $207,000 check and a record-matching victory may atone for his loss in the Masters.

"Nothing will ever make up for it," the Australian said, leaning forward in his chair.

"Even if I win the next 20 tournaments, that won't make up for it. When you've lost, you've lost. It's gone. It's history," he said.

"I'd dearly love to have the green jacket (which goes to the winner of the Masters).

"But it's nice to be able to come back in the next few weeks and win again. It takes away a little of the bitterness," said Norman, who lost to Jack Nicklaus by a single stroke in the Masters, and by one to Fuzzy Zoeller in the Heritage in his last two starts.

Those losses, he said were on his mind when he teed off Sunday in the final round of the 5-day, 90-hole Panasonic Las Vegas Invitational, with $1,150,000 in prize money the richest tournament on the PGA Tour.

"You don't want to think like that (about the losses), but it's there in the back of your mind," Norman said.

But he quickly erased any thoughts of victory from the minds of would-be challengers. The Australian known as "the Great White Shark" birdied two of the first four holes, increased his lead to four shots and then took it out of doubt with a burst of four consecutive birdies beginning on the eighth hole.

"That's it, boys. You'll have to go hard to catch me," the light-haired Norman said.

No one even came close.

From the lead, Norman shot a 7-under-par 65 over the last 18 holes at the Las Vegas Country Club and won by seven strokes, matching the largest margin on the Tour this year.

His 333 total for the week — which included two eagles, 34 birdies and 11 bogeys — tied the Tour record for 90 holes and, at 27 under par, equaled the most strokes below par ever shot.

It appeared he would break the mark until he 3-putted the last two greens, for a bogey on 17 and a par on the 18th.

"I had a feeling I was around the tour record, and that finish really disappointed me," said Norman, a non-winner for two years.

His third American tour triumph, which goes with more than 30 others around the world, was worth $207,000, which lifted him into the money-winning lead for the year at $343,774.

Dan Pohl finished a distant second at 69-340. He won $124,200.

Former U.S. Open and PGA champion Larry Nelson, with a closing 69, and Steve Pate, with a 67 in the gusty winds, were another shot back at 341. Each earned $66,700. Don Pooley, 67, and Andy Bean, 68, were next at 342. Each won $43,700.

Mavs Dump Lakers, 120-118

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

The Dallas Mavericks believe they may be the team that knocks the defending NBA champions out of the playoffs for the 17th consecutive year.

"We have a good chance to win the series," Dallas Coach Dick Motta said after the Mavericks defeated the Los Angeles Lakers 120-118 on Sunday, deadlocking the Western Conference playoff series at 2-2. "Now our team knows what we have to do to win."

The Lakers, seeking to become the first team since Boston in 1969 to repeat as champions, won their first five playoff games by an average of 22 points and appeared ready to breeze to their fifth consecutive appearance in the finals. But two consecutive two-point losses in Dallas have put Los Angeles in a dogfight.

"We've got a good chance now, but the Lakers are still the Lakers and we won't have the upper hand until it's over," said Mark Aguirre, who scored 21 of his 39 points in the first quarter took the lead for good.

In other playoffs Sunday, Denver also won its second straight at home, beating Houston 114-111 in overtime to even that series 2-2. Boston, despite a 106-94 loss at Atlanta, still leads that best-of-seven series 3-1.

Philadelphia, leading 2-1, plays host to Milwaukee tonight. On Tuesday, Atlanta is at Boston. Denver at Houston and Dallas at Los Angeles.

Dallas led by 12 after a 45-point first quarter against Los Angeles that tied the Lakers' NBA playoff record established last year against Phoenix. The Mavericks shot 74 percent from the field in the period.

The Mavericks maintained a 67-58 lead at halftime and a 98-87 margin after three quarters before Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, playing in a league-record 173rd playoff game, led a Los Angeles rally. Abdul-Jabbar had been tied with former Celtic star John Havlicek.

Abdul-Jabbar, who scored 33 points, scored 10 in the fourth quarter, and when Maurice Lucas tipped in a shot with 1:04 to go, the Lakers trailed only 118-116. But Aguirre, who scored only four of his 39 points in the fourth quarter, then hit the 15-foot turnaround jumper with 38 seconds left.

"Nobody can guard me 1-on-1 and that's what the Lakers were doing," Aguirre said of his performance.

After Byron Scott's two free throws again cut the deficit to two, the Lakers forced a 24-second violation and had the ball with six seconds remaining. Abdul-Jabbar's sky hook from 10 feet was off the rim at the buzzer.

"I just fumbled the ball in my hands on the last shot," Abdul-Jabbar said.

"Seven of eight times Kareem will hit that shot," said Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who had 29 points, 15 rebounds and 14 assists for the Lakers.

"Everybody in the building knew Kareem was going to take the shot," Dallas center James Donaldson said. "He was a little further out that he wanted to be, but he couldn't back me into the basket because there wasn't time."

Rolando Blackman scored 28 points and Sam Perkins 23 for the Mavericks.

Hawks 106, Celtics 94
Dominique Wilkins scored 37 points and 5-foot-7 Spud Webb added 21 points and 12 assists as Atlanta beat Boston for the first time in 10 meetings this season.

Wilkins scored 10 straight points during one stretch of the third quarter, giving the Hawks a 70-62 lead they never lost. The Celtics got within 90-87 with 4 1/2 minutes left in the game, but a three-point play by Glenn Rivers started a 12-2 streak to put the Hawks out of reach.

"There were a lot of big plays today but the biggest was the last play of the game, then looking up at the clock and seeing that the season wasn't over," Wilkins said.

But to win the series, the Hawks must win twice at Boston Garden, and the Celtics have won 35 straight at home since December.

Boston stayed close for most of the game despite hitting only 34 percent from the field, including 5-for-19 for Larry Bird, who finished with 20 points. Kevin McHale led the Celtics with 26.

Backman Leads Mets Over Reds

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Those losses continue to pile up for the Cincinnati Reds... and the New York Mets aren't helping any.

"We've played good, hard baseball," said second baseman Wally Backman, who had a two singles and a pair of doubles in Sunday's 7-2 rout of the Reds that swept their three-game series. "I think the other ballclubs knew we were a good club, but we've turned some heads."

While the Mets have turned some heads with their 16-4 start, best in the club's history, the Reds have raised some eyebrows by losing 12 of their last 13 for a 5-15 mark, the worst in the majors. Their 10 consecutive losses at Riverfront Stadium is their worst home streak in more than 27 years.

The Reds ended game with a .217 team batting average and .291 on-base percentage.

"I've been saying for a week that the law of averages will eventually catch up with us," said Reds player-manager Pete Rose, who broke an 0-for-12 slump with his first single of the season Sunday. "But when you don't swing the bats and you don't pitch, how can the law of averages catch up with you?"

In other NL action Sunday, Philadelphia beat Atlanta 5-1; Montreal edged Houston 7-6; St. Louis turned back Los Angeles 3-1; Pittsburgh stopped San Diego 5-2; and San Francisco swept a doubleheader from Chicago by identical 2-1 scores.

Mets 7, Reds 2
Darryl Strawberry hit two homers off Mario Soto and Ron Darling pitched 6 2-3 strong innings, extending the Reds' losing streak to eight games.

Strawberry hit a two-run homer in the first off Soto, 2-3, and added a solo homer in the third to power the Mets to their 14th victory in 15 games. Soto has allowed 10 homers in 35 1-3 innings pitched.

Darling, 2-0, allowed just four singles and six walks over 6 2-3 innings.

"I look for certain pitches (from Soto) in certain situations," Strawberry said of his first-inning homer with Backman on base via a double. "When I get 'em, I know what to do with 'em. When I saw it coming, my eyes lit up. It was a fastball, right down the middle."

Phillies 5, Braves 1
Kevin Gross pitched a four-hitter and Steve Jeltz drove in three runs with a bases-loaded double as Philadelphia snapped a three-game losing streak.

Gross, 2-3, struck out three and walked three. The only Atlanta run came on Terry Harper's seventh-inning homer. Joe Johnson, 3-2, took the loss.

The Phillies took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Juan Samuel's first home run of the season, then sewed up the game with their four-run fourth. Glenn Wilson had a sacrifice fly before Jeltz's key hit.

"I used to try to hit the ball out of the park in a situation like that," Jeltz said of his key hit. "Now I just try to hit it through the middle. I try to relax and put the pressure on the pitcher."

Expos 7, Astros 6

Houston first baseman Glenn Davis bobbled Al Newman's grounder in the ninth, allowing Andres Galarraga to score Montreal's winning run from third base.

Galarraga led off the ninth with a double off Dave Smith, 0-1, and took third on Tim Wallach's infield single. Newman then chopped a 2-2 pitch which Davis couldn't handle.

Jeff Reardon, 4-2, pitched one inning to pick up his second victory in as many days.

"Buck (Expos manager Rodgers) gave me a chance and I'm glad I was able to help the team," Newman said. "In that (ninth-inning) situation, all I was trying to do was avoid a strikeout. I just wanted to make contact and get the ball in play."

The Astros wasted a grand slam by Terry Puhl in the third inning.

Cardinals 3, Dodgers 1
Bob Forsch and three relievers combined on a three-hitter and Mike LaValiere and Ozzie Smith singled in third-inning runs to lead St. Louis over Los Angeles, snapping the Dodgers' seven-game winning streak.

Nuggets 114, Rockets 111
Alex English scored six of his 28 points in overtime, and Lafayette Lever and T.R. Dunn hit key free throws down the stretch for Denver against Houston.

"I think sometimes people don't realize how good this team can be," English said. "But today we showed everyone. When a team plays that hard for that long like we did today, you just know you're going to be in it at the end."

A free throw by Robert Reid with 1:31 left put the Rockets ahead 111-108, but Houston didn't score again while Denver got its final six points on free throws. English hit two with 1:19 remaining and Lever added two more with 1:02 left, giving Denver its first lead since early in the third quarter.

Dunn, fouled after Reid missed a jumper, made both free throws with six seconds remaining to complete the scoring.

Ralph Sampson, whose 15 third-quarter points had put Houston ahead, had 28 points and 13 rebounds. Reid finished with 24 points and Akem Olajuwon, who fouled out with 3:09 left in overtime, added 23.

The Nuggets trailed 104-99 with 44 seconds left in regulation, but Denver reserve guard Elston Turner made a three-point basket and then a reverse layup with 11 seconds remaining to force the extra period.

"We're in a pretty good spot right now, but let's not get carried away," Denver Coach Doug Moe said. "There are two games left in the driver's seat."

Tribe Moves Into First Place

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

C'mon Chief Wahoo, start beating those war drums. The Tribe is in first place.

The Cleveland Indians, led by Brook Jacoby's hot bat, zoomed into the top spot in the American League East Sunday with their seventh straight victory, a 6-4 triumph in 10 innings over the Chicago White Sox.

"To be realistic, no, I didn't think we'd be in first place," Cleveland Manager Pat Corrales admitted. "But we have a long way to go and a lot of games to play."

Cleveland is not leading by much, only 11 percentage points over the second-place New York Yankees. But for now, that's enough for the Indians, who went 60-102 last year and have not been in first place this late in the season since May 17, 1981.

Tonight, the 14-8 Indians play Kansas City in the opener of an eight-game homestand. That should be enough to keep Chief Wahoo, the team's ever-present symbol of optimism, smiling for awhile.

In other AL games on Sunday, Boston beat Oakland 4-1; Kansas City ripped Baltimore 11-1; Toronto downed Seattle 3-2; Texas got past New York 4-3; Detroit defeated Minnesota 4-1; and Milwaukee stopped California 5-3.

Jacoby singled home a run in the first inning, tied the score 4-4 with a solo homer in the eighth and sparked the winning, two-run uprising in the 10th with an RBI double.

"Sure it feels good," Jacoby said. "Last year you could get three hits and it wouldn't mean anything because we would lose."

Andre Thornton led off the 10th with a double against Bob James, 1-2, and took third when center fielder John Cangelosi bobbled the ball for an error. Jacoby followed with his double and later scored on Joe Carter's sacrifice fly.

Jacoby raised his average to .368 and leads the team with 16 RBI. But he said credit for Cleveland's surge did not belong to him, or any of the Indians' batters.

"I don't want to talk about hitting," Jacoby said. "Our pitching keeps us close and that's how we're winning ball games."

Ken Schrom started for Cleveland and went 7 1/3 innings, giving four runs, three of them earned. Ernie Camacho got the final two outs of the eighth inning, and Scott Bailes, 4-1, pitched two shutout innings for the victory.

The loss dropped the White Sox to 7-15, the worst record in the AL.

"The games are in our hands," Chicago Manager Tony LaRussa said. "We aren't winning because we aren't executing. The other teams are not beating us."

Red Sox 4, A's 1
Roger Clemens, making his first start since striking out a major-league record 20 batters, fanned another 10 while holding Oakland to three hits in eight innings.

Clemens, 5-0, asked to be taken out after throwing 124 pitches. Bob Stanley struck out the side in the ninth inning for his fourth save.

The only run allowed by Clemens came on Dave Kingman's fourth homer leading off the seventh at Fenway Park.

Boston scored all of its runs in the first inning. Jim Rice's bases-loaded single drove in the first run, and another scored on Don Baylor's double-play grounder. Catcher Mickey Tettleton's throwing error allowed another run to come home, and Marty Barrett capped the uprising against Rick Langford, 1-3, with an RBI double.

In 17 games at Fenway Park Kingman is 18-for-63 with 11 homers and 18 RBIs.

comeback by pitching three-hit ball over seven shutout innings, and Angel Salazar sparked a 17-hit attack by driving home five runs that led Kansas City over Baltimore.

Blue Jays 3, Mariners 2
Willie Upshaw barely beat out an infield single with the bases loaded and two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, lifting Toronto over visiting Seattle.

After the Blue Jays loaded the bases against Mike Moore, 1-3, Upshaw slapped a ball that second baseman Danny Tartabull knocked down in short right field. Upshaw slid headfirst into first base just ahead of the throw.

Toronto's Dave Stieb, who has lost all three of his decisions this season, took a 2-0 lead into the ninth, but the Mariners tied it when Tartabull hit an RBI double with two outs and scored on Barry Bonnell's double.

Reliever Tom Henke retired Jim Presley on one pitch, and was credited with the victory, making him 3-1.

Rangers 4, Yankees 3
Larry Parrish singled home the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning, and Texas hung on to beat Ron Guidry and New York.

Don Mattingly, who had an RBI single in the first inning, hit a two-run homer in the seventh that pulled the Yankees even at 3-3.

But with two outs in the eighth, Pete Incaviglia singled for his third hit of the game, took second on a walk to Toby Harrah and scored on Parrish's second run-scoring single of the game. Guidry lost for the first time in four decisions.

Export Grain Has Little Difficulty Meeting Standards

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reports by the Agriculture Department show U.S. grain is having little problem meeting current federal quality standards as it moves into the export market.

The reports were recently sent to Congress, which is looking at the possibility of tightening the grain standards, which critics say are too loose to maintain good quality control.

According to the department's Federal Grain Inspection Service, shipments of wheat, corn and soybeans on the average in 1985 "met or exceeded requirements" for the grades specified by commodity shippers.

In the case of corn, which represented 48 percent of the total of 3.55 billion bushels of grain inspected for export last year, a comparison showed improvements from 1984 in test weight, the amount of broken kernels and foreign material, and damaged kernels. There was an increase in moisture content, however.

Test weights for No. 2 grade of corn must be at least 54 pounds per bushel. To be No. 1, corn must weigh at least 56 pounds. On the average, corn checked by USDA inspectors last year tested 55.7 pounds per bushel as it was cleared for export. No. 3 corn, which has a minimum of 52 pounds, averaged 55.9 pounds.

Moisture content of No. 2 corn averaged 14.4 percent, compared with a maximum of 15.5 percent, while No. 3 also averaged 14.7 percent, compared with a lid of 17.5 percent. Moisture as a grade factor was eliminated as of Sept. 9, 1985, but still must be stated on certificates.

The category of BCFM — broken corn and foreign material — is a touchy point among critics of the standards who say the tolerances are too great. In this category last year, exports of No. 2 corn averaged 2.8 percent BCFM, compared with the maximum allowed of 3 percent. No. 3 grade corn contained 3.6 percent, with a limit of 4 percent.

In the category of damaged kernels, No. 2 corn averaged 2.9 percent, compared with a 5 percent maximum, while No. 3 had 3.2 percent against a 7 percent maximum.

The fifth category, heat damaged kernels, showed only a negligible amount of corn with those defects in 1985.

In recent testimony, a Senate Agriculture subcommittee heard complaints and saw evidence of the problems of dirty grain and the dockage or foreign material that wheat, corn and soybeans collect along the marketing pipeline.

Rep. Cooper Evans, R-Iowa, and others favor legislation to tighten the standards, a view generally supported by the administration.

Myron Laserson, president of the North American Export Grain Association, said quality problems have been exaggerated and he defended the re-blending of grain dust and other material cleaned from grain as necessary to meet the specifications of buyers who want to buy lower grades.

The National Grain and Feed Association told the subcommittee it would support several changes in the federal standards "to more accurately reflect the quality characteristics of grain."

One change recommended by the association would be the reporting of dockage in wheat to the nearest tenth of a percent. Dockage now reported by rounding down to a measured level to the nearest half percent. For example, 0.6 percent dockage is reported as 0.5 percent — and so is 0.9 percent.

Also, the association said a uniform plan for the loading and sampling of grain barges should be developed as "a first step toward minimizing non-uniformity and conditioning problems of export grain shipments when they arrive at foreign ports."

African Farmers Fail As Economic System Turns Richness Into Poverty

By MORT ROSENBLUM
Associated Press Writer

THIKA, Kenya (AP) — Alex Njorogeh needs no expert to explain why his neighbor's corn grows fat while his shrivels and dies. He can see the reason next door, placidly chewing grass into manure.

"I had a cow, too, but I sold it to feed my children," Njorogeh said. "I can't afford chemical fertilizer. No manure, no maize (corn), no milk, no meat. But what could I do?"

Like most African farmers, he is depleting his soil. In more arid regions of Africa, famine has already resulted.

Instead of corn, Njorogeh grows coffee, coaxing a ton each year from his two tired acres. World prices are soaring, but he gets the equivalent of only a dime a pound. Corrupt middlemen take much of that.

In the end, he cannot buy enough food for his family, let alone another cow, or shoes.

Farther south, on Tanzania's high Kitulo Plateau, peasants' potatoes would humble an Idaho farmer. But 60 percent rot. Tanzania, desperately low on trucks and fuel, cannot move them to market.

Eroded land and drought leave calamitous shortages in parts of Africa. In Zimbabwe alone, however, 1 million tons of excess maize lie unsold under tarpaulins. Malawi's surplus is 300,000 tons.

Few farmers feel the impact of hundreds of millions of dollars that foreign donors spend each year on improving food crops. Most could use advice, but their problems are more basic.

"Africans are good farmers," said Norman Borlaug, who won the 1970 Nobel Peace Prize for agricultural advancements that became known as the Green Revolution. "But no matter how good a farmer is, he must be linked to an economic system."

Now teaching at Texas A & M University, he was interviewed while on a visit to Tanzania.

"A farmer needs a reasonable amount of fertilizer at affordable levels and the assurance he will be paid something similar to world prices," Borlaug said. "But governments have removed incentives."

Officials have held urban food prices so low that some farmers grow at a loss, he said.

Borlaug is involved in Global 2000, a project of former President Jimmy Carter to help farmers grow better grains. The plan calls for $2.5 million in private grants to enable foreign experts to advise about 50 farmers at strategic points in Tanzania, Zambia, Sudan and Ghana.

Farmers will continue using pointed sticks and hoes, Carter said during a visit here, but better seeds, fertilizers and techniques can double and triple yields. He told an interviewer in London he would stay with the project until it succeeded: "My own reputation is at stake."

But overall challenge is vast, and problems go far beyond low yields, experts say.

In fat years or lean, Africans starve in tragic numbers on land that could feed them with ease. Good land, badly treated, dies. For reasons more political and economic than agricultural, they are sowing future famine.

Poor farming causes permanent damage, said Sir Michael Blundell, for 60 years a senior Kenyan agriculture official and farmer. The answer, he said, is education — but also capital and political will.

"If semi-arid areas are properly managed, they can contribute considerably to food production," Blundell said. "But with overstocking (of cattle) and deforestation, there is only one end in sight."

He added that European nations and the United States should work together to assist farmers, assure better management and provide capital across Africa's threatened regions.

"They need to act in concert and decide what items will be bought from each instead of scheming against each other. If they are going to feed Africa for the rest of the century, they had better take a firm grasp of the nettle."

Veteran agronomists say Africa's food problem is more economic and political than it is agricultural.

"We always push for better yields, but the African seeks to minimize risk," said Joanny Guillard, a specialist in Paris. "He would rather have one ton every year than three in one year and zero the next. His life depends on it."

Most African countries are hard put to move food surpluses to deficit areas within their own borders. Few are able or willing to buy from their neighbors. Most rely instead on U.S. or European food aid.

For farmers, teetering on the brink of hunger, every crop is a gamble. Too much means wasted capital. Too little means depending on a meager trickle of gift food which may never come at all.

Even farmers who grow enough grain can seldom afford the cooking oil and protein sources they need to protect their children from crippling malnutrition.

Hard-pressed farmers chop down dwindling forests, selling wood or charcoal as an emergency source of income. Nearly 95 percent depend on wood for cooking and heating. Anything else is too costly.

When land is depleted, farmers often move on, slashing and burning to clear new plots of fragile land which, in turn, dies without nutrients.

Advanced techniques show some promise on larger farms. In Kenya, for example, cooperatives share heavy equipment and buy seed and chemicals in bulk. Government agents offer advice on new research.

But such farms are often badly managed, and some officials steal profits. State farms in Zambia, among others, offer little incentive to workers who save their energy for their own small plots.

And most Africans work small subsistence plots by traditional methods. They know what they need: credits, fertilizers, pesticides and simple tools. Above all, they need market prices to cover their costs.

Njorogeh is a dramatic example.

Until 1984, he drove a cab in Nairobi. Like most Kenyan workers, he kept a shamba — a small farm — to feed his family. Then he crushed his leg in an accident. The shamba was his unemployment insurance.

"Farming is all I can do now," he said, swinging on crutches between his coffee plants and banana trees toward a simple mud house he built himself.

The shamba was a gift from his father who moved north where the land was richer. "This is poor land for food, now," he admits. But, only 45 miles from Nairobi, it is worth $1,500 an acre.

With elaborate precision, Njorogeh explained his economics.

Food comes to the equivalent of $800 a year. Firewood to cook it is $185. Nine crop sprays a year cost $60, and 400 pounds of fertilizer, $55. Each harvest, he pays a coffee picker a dollar a day for 10 days.

His brother drives him to Nairobi to see a doctor, but treatments for his leg can cost $70. Everything else — clothing, school costs for two children, care for his infant daughter — are extra.

Coffee earns him $250. When mature, his five avocado trees should add $50. The government pays nothing. He and his wife, each working dawn to dusk, end the year $1,000 in the hole.

"How do you manage?" a visitor asked. Njorogeh shrugged. "We manage."

MODIFIED MOWER — A lawn mower modified to clip tobacco plant beds can increase uniformity in plant beds, according to Pitt extension agent Mitch Smith. This is the second season clipping has been utilized in the county. (Reflector Photo By Mary Schulken)

As transplanting tobacco draws to a close in the county, time to reflect upon the practice of plant bed clipping becomes available. Growers who participated in this activity last year noticed distinct differences between conventional and clipped plants.

Approximately 300,000 square yards of tobacco plant beds were clipped in Pitt County in 1986. Clipping performed as demonstrations, combined with growers who modified individual mowers, constituted the increase of clipped yardage. Some 70 Pitt County growers participated in this practice.

Noted benefits of this practice were observed similar to those in 1985. The most noted benefit was the uniformity produced on the plant bed area. Plant beds which were clipped at least twice were found to have the most uniformity of all plant beds. Large plants were delayed while smaller plants were allowed to continue to grow and reach the preferred transplanting height.

Differences in root development were also a major advantage of plant bed clipping. When plants are clipped, leaf area is delayed in growth for about four days while increases in stem diameter and root mass are observed. This change allows for easier transplanting and better survival of plants placed into dry field conditions. The heavier root system is ideal for enabling the plant to absorb the fertilizer nutrients banded into the root zone of the plant.

Plant bed clipping is a new practice which has received much attention across the flue-cured producing area of our state. While the initial response has been extremely positive, more emphasis needs to be placed on the actual management of clipped beds. Beds scheduled to be clipped should be clipped at least twice with the first cut being made when the plants are five inches in height. The next cut should be done about four days later under normal growing conditions. Clipping plants which are from 8-10 inches in height may delay transplanting for a short period of time but does not allow for the maximum uniformity to be experienced.

Pictures and measurements of modified mowers are available by calling Mitch Smith of the Pitt Extension Service. A special packet of materials has been prepared for growers considering modifying mowers for next season.

Wheat Council

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Wheat Industry Council, which oversees a research and education program intended to increase the consumption of wheat products, has been assigned a 1987 budget of $1 million, according to the Agriculture Department.

Paul M. Fuller of the department's Agricultural Marketing Service said the council's program will include an advertising campaign to "Eat Wheat America."

The USDA agency oversees operations of the council's programs, which are financed by assessments paid by bakers and other wheat product users. The assessment is 1 cent per 100 pounds on their purchases of processed wheat.

Congress authorized the program in a 1977 farm law. The council was established in 1981.

JACKIE L. MOYE

Over the past months you have seen advertisements in the newspaper attempting to introduce you to the Sheriff of Pitt County. Yes, it's strange, after 21 years of service, the Sheriff is a stranger.

Since January 15, Jackie L. Moye has met with the citizens of Pitt County face to face at civic clubs, fire departments, rescue squads, churches, factories, festivals, schools and homes. Jackie L. Moye has listened to the voices in Pitt County and he knows the Sheriff of Pitt County has to be accessible 24 hours a day, not just at election time.

Now, which candidate knows what Pitt County needs—one you read about, or Jackie L. Moye, the candidate you can talk to and a candidate that will listen.

The question is which candidate for Sheriff is really concerned about YOU and Pitt County.

Doctors Expect Shortage Of Whooping Cough Vaccine

By SALLY SQUIRES
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

ORLANDO, Fla. — Pediatricians and public health officials are bracing for a major shortage of pertussis vaccine this summer and fall.

"The United States is facing a crisis situation in the next six weeks over the pertussis vaccine," said Dr. Martin Smith, president of the American Academy of Pediatrics in an interview at the academy's annual spring meeting here.

Manufacturing delays by one drug company — Connaught Laboratories Inc. — have already produced a shortage in the federal government's stockpiles at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. Liability insurance for the vaccine division of the only other U.S. manufacturer — Lederle Laboratories — will expire in June, which could place supplies in further jeopardy, Smith said.

Pertussis, also known as whooping cough, is a childhood illness that generally afflicts children under 2. Prior to immunizations, the disease claimed thousands of lives each year.

But today, protection against pertussis begins at 2 months of age with an injection known as DPT, which also provides immunity against diphtheria and tetanus. Children receive four additional booster shots: at 4 months, 6 months, 18 months and between 4 and 6 years.

The CDC in Atlanta has "very, very little DPT vaccine," said Dr. Alan Hinman, director of the CDC's immunization division. The reason, Hinman said, is a "delay in the manufacture and release of vaccine from Connaught Laboratories," which produces 60 to 70 percent of the vaccine in the United States.

The shortage is expected to worsen this summer and fall, after Lederle Laboratories, which produces 30 to 40 percent of the DPT vaccine for the U.S. market, loses its liability insurance. Experts predict that when the insurance runs out, Lederle will pull its vaccine from the market.

"We have not as yet made a decision about what we will do," said Lederle spokeswoman Martha Homma. "In light of the current liability insurance situation, there certainly is a strong possibility that we will withdraw from the market."

"We're quite concerned about the problem," Hinman said. "What we potentially face is a nine-month period in which basically we would have two thirds of the vaccine that we normally use."

Unlike other childhood illnesses, pertussis cases are on the rise, although this rise is not related to the current vaccine shortage. Last year, the number of American children who contracted whooping cough increased 50 percent from about 2,300 cases reported in 1984 to almost 3,300 cases in last year.

Most recent cases of pertussis, Hinman said, "have occurred in children who are too young to be immunized or should have been and weren't because of economic reasons or competing priorities."

Some of the increase in pertussis may also be accounted for by better diagnosis and reporting of outbreaks, Hinman said. A few cases are the result of "parents making a conscious decision to not have their children immunized."

Like all immunizations, pertussis vaccine has some possible side effects. Approximately one in every 310,000 children who receives the DPT vaccine develops a neurological complication, according to the CDC. Media reports in the past several years depicted poignant stories of children who allegedly experienced such side effects, and those reports may have discouraged some parents from immunizing their children, experts say.

"We know that the vaccine is not ideal," AAP president-elect Dr. William C. Montgomery said in an interview at the annual spring meeting. "But the problems of the disease are much greater than the problems of the vaccine."

In the meantime, officials are also pursuing new vaccines against whooping cough. Scientists at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development will start clinical trials later this month of a new type of pertussis vaccine, similar to a brand currently used in Japan and Sweden.

This new vaccine "relies upon a single protein, called pertussis toxin, which has been detoxified in a novel manner," explains an NICHD spokesman. "Its mode of action will be similar to our current diphtheria and tetanus toxoid vaccines," and is expected to have fewer side effects than the vaccine now in use.

But even if the trials are successful, experts say, it will be at least two or three more years before the new vaccine could receive approval from the Food and Drug Administration — too late to help with the current shortage.

Rise In Cancer Rates May Occur As Population Ages

By DAVID ZINMAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

NEW YORK — The nation is expecting a big jump in the elderly population over the next four decades, and federal health officials are gearing for a parallel rise in cancer rates — particularly in two cancers affecting women: breast cancer and cancer of the ovaries.

"The graying of America will have a profound impact on our nation's health-care system," says Rosemary Yancik of the National Cancer Institute. "The demands for cancer care and treatment are likely to increase significantly since ... as age advances, incidence rates increase."

No one knows why exactly. Cancer experts feel it may be caused by exposures to cancer-causing substances over many years combined with the gradual weakening of the body's immune system.

The one thing that seems certain is that there will be more cancer-susceptible people around. By 2030, government officials expect the number of people 65 and over will grow to 65 million. The elderly will make up about 20 percent of the nation's population. That's more than twice the total of older Americans (22.4 million) living in 1975 and double the percentage of the population they represented then.

In a talk last month before the American Cancer Society's science writers seminar in Daytona Beach, Fla., Yancik noted that age is the single greatest risk factor for all cancers. Statistics make the point:

- Cancer rates in the 55 to 59 age group amount to 749 cases per 100,000. Those figures almost double in the next 10 years to 1,160 cases per 100,000 for the 65 to 69 age group.

- About 65 percent of all cancers occur in persons 65 or older.

- Close to 60 percent of all cancer deaths take place after age 65. Cancer deaths for aged men are most frequently from lung, prostate and colon cancer; for older women, breast, lung, and colon cancers.

"Breast cancer will be an even greater problem for older women in the near future, barring major prevention and treatment breakthroughs," said Yancik, an assistant director in the cancer institute's prevention and control division. "About 2.2 million women (compared to 1.2 million today) will be living with breast cancer by the year 2030. And sixty-four percent — almost two-thirds — will be sixty-five and over. ... We are looking at a ten-percentage point increase over the 1985 estimate. From the public health perspective, that must get our attention."

Even so, experts contend the increasing numbers of elderly will probably not slow the improving overall five-year survival rate of all cancers, which has steadily climbed to 40 percent. The rate, considered a yardstick of the battle against cancer, was 25 percent in the 1940s and 33 percent in the 1960s.

"If you just project a straight line from the data now — assuming no changes in survival, mortality, and incidence — then the answer would be 'yes,' (survival rates would drop)," said Dr. Vincent DeVita Jr., director of the National Cancer Institute. "But we don't see that. Survival rates are increasing by one-half percent per year."

Yancik did not take issue with DeVita. But she pointed out that no definitive studies have focused exclusively on this large group of postmenopausal patients. "Breast cancer as a major problem in older-aged women has received little specific attention. ... (Yet they are) more prone to illness because of their frailty and more apt to develop chronic problems or experience greater severity in acute conditions."

In addition, she said, breast cancer may present different problems in the elderly because many older women have limited financial assets, are likely to be living alone, and may have additional disabling conditions. There is concern, she said, that these factors might play a part in their delaying medical care, refusing to follow treatment regimens, and declining follow-up care.

Not all experts interpret the data as Yancik does. Dr. John Clark, a breast-cancer specialist at the University of Pennsylvania, said he knows breast cancer cases have been rising. "We used to say one in fifteen women will develop it. Now we say one in eleven."

"Clearly, there are special problems among older breast-cancer patients. But I would not want to make those generalizations. At the University of Pennsylvania, we have been impressed with their adherence to medical treatment. They are willing to do whatever it takes to be cured."

Yancik said another concern in elderly women is cancer of the ovary, the least responsive to treatment of all gynecologic cancers. Only 37 percent of ovarian cancer patients survive five years after diagnosis.

'Talking' Computers Cover All Fields

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A surgeon, hands busy with the many tasks of the operating room, notes his findings simply by talking as he works. A computer listens and logs the information.

A jet fighter pilot checks his fuel level by asking how much gas is left. The on-board computer checks and gives him an answer.

A child asks her toy panda, "Would you like to play?"

"Yes," it replies. "That sounds fine."

Such images are not so far-fetched, experts say, and not so far away. Teddy bears, operating rooms and fighter bombers are being fitted out with the latest twist in computers, simulation and understanding of human speech, and dozens of companies are looking for ways to use it.

One measure of interest in the still-tiny field is that industry giants International Business Machines Corp. and American Telephone & Telegraph Co. made their first appearances last week at Speech Tech '86, an annual trade show in New York.

IBM is working on a system that converts speech into text — a kind of voice-operated typewriter — while AT&T's system lets people make transactions and get information from a computer by speaking into an ordinary telephone.

"Speech is a very easy idea to sell because it's such a natural," Richard Wiggins, the show's program chairman, said Tuesday. He directs speech-recognition research at Texas Instruments Inc. in Dallas.

General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. are both using speech-recognition devices from Intel Corp. that allow autoworkers to keep their hands and eyes free while noting defects in a car on the assembly line.

Wiggins said the Defense Department is pouring money into speech research for possible use in aircraft and Audec Corp. of Saddle Brook, N.J., plans to introduce its talking toy panda in September.

The toy recognizes five phrases and makes responses, he said.

Sales of voice products should rise to about $3.5 billion in 1995 from $114 million in 1985, estimates Eric Arnum, an analyst for International Resource Development Inc. in Stamford, Conn.

"This is where the computer industry was in the early '50s. We're at the point where people are amazed the devices work at all," Arnum said.

Speech technology is likely to displace thousands of workers who use the telephone to take orders, make reservations and do other routine jobs, industry spokesmen say.

A computer can do the job at a fraction of the $30,000 a year it costs to hire and maintain an operator, said Allen Peterson, vice president of marketing and sales for Speech Plus Inc. in Mountain View, Calif.

To avoid conflict with labor unions, companies such as Speech Plus say their machines should free people to do more creative work.

Peterson said computers are also doing some work people don't like doing — such as calling debtors and asking them to pay up. The person can say yes or no. But if he hangs up, the computer notes that, too, he said.

Automation goes only so far, though. Some newspapers that are putting in speech-recognition systems have a special feature so that if a customer wants to cancel his subscription, a human being comes on to talk him out of it.

Since each person's voice pattern is unique, companies such as Voxtron Systems Inc. are building security systems that require people wanting to get into a building to say a few words into a microphone first.

RE-ELECT

TYSON

SHERIFF

TO THE CITIZENS OF PITT COUNTY:

I would like to take this opportunity to remind you and the other members of your family that the Democratic primary election day this year is Tuesday, May 6, 1986.

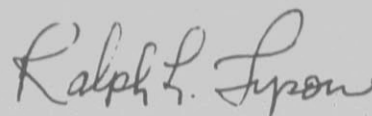

As you may already know, I am a candidate for re-election to the office of Sheriff of Pitt County. I am asking for your vote and support in the up-coming primary and general election and I assure you that I will continue to render the most effective and efficient law enforcement service possible to the citizens of Pitt County. I pledge to you that the members of the staff of the Sheriff's Department will continue to use all available means to provide the most courteous, thorough and impartial law enforcement available for you.

I would also be grateful if you would contact your many friends, neighbors, and relatives on my behalf. With your help and the help of your family and friends, we can be successful in the Democratic primary and the general election in November, and can continue to provide the progressive law enforcement programs you deserve as residents of Pitt County.

I deeply appreciate the support and confidence you and other citizens of Pitt County have shown me in the past by electing me as the Sheriff of Pitt County. I assure you that I will continue to devote to this position of trust all of my energy and attention. With your help, I know that we will be successful. Although it is not possible for me to contact each individual personally, I did want you to know that I actively seek your support and assistance in the May 6 Democratic primary and in the general election in November.

If I can be of any assistance in the future, please call me.

Yours very truly,

Ralph L. Tyson

GRADUATE — Savie Peacock Moses, 70, hasn't let her age get in the way of her education. She'll receive her high school certificate in exercises in Goldsboro this month. (AP Laserphoto)

At 70, Goldsboro Woman To Get GED

GOLDSBORO (AP) — Savie Peacock Moses did not let her age or lack of a car keep her from accomplishing a life-long dream.

Now 70, Mrs. Moses will be among the students participating in graduation ceremonies at Wayne Community College in May. After eight years of study, she has received her General Educational Development degree.

In order to achieve her goal, Mrs. Moses had to walk a three-mile round-trip to attend classes. She also had to arrange her schedule so she could attend classes and also take care of her husband, who was ill.

Earning her GED was not easy, but Mrs. Moses doesn't complain. She considers herself fortunate to have achieved her dream of getting an education.

"I always wanted to go to school, but never had the opportunity," she says.

While in the third grade, her father died and she had to quit school in order to work and help her mother.

Mrs. Moses stayed with a white family who loved her and whom she loved. She helped around the house and they provided for her and her mother's needs.

Though she received clothes, food and shelter, she did not receive schooling.

When Mrs. Moses was 13, her mother died. She says she was then sent to live with a relative who was mean to her.

Another family, also white, knew of her situation and hired her to work for them. "I kept house and lived there, and they paid me," she recalls.

At 16, she "slipped away" and got married. When the family read about her marriage in the newspaper, they cried because they felt she was too young for such a step.

"I told them it was what I wanted to do," she said.

She has been married to James L. Moses for 53 years. They have seven children, two of whom are deceased.

Mrs. Moses made sure her children got their high school degrees. Her daughters also attended college.

"I was determined to see my children in school," she says. They went to school regularly. Every one of them graduated.

When her husband, a farmer, became disabled, the couple moved to Goldsboro. This provided Mrs. Moses with her first opportunity to go to school.

The fact that she and her husband had never had a car did not stop her.

"I decided to see if I could walk (to school)," she recalls. I had walked all my life anyway." On the average, she attended school two to three days a week for eight years.

"There were some semesters when I could not go, but I studied at home," she says.

She originally planned to just

She became tired at one point and considered "dropping back."

Sue Potter, director of WCC's Directed Studies Lab, offered to work with her if she would return, Mrs. Moses said. She told Mrs. Moses she did not want to see her stop her education when she was so close to completing her goal.

Mrs. Moses says her teachers were very helpful. In addition to spending extra time with her and encouraging her, some provided rides home when the weather was bad.

Mrs. Moses received her GED diploma in November. She says her children and husband, who now is in a nursing home, are pleased with her achievement.

"My husband (originally) felt the study would be too much on me, both workwise and in walking distance. (But) he was happy to see me do" it, she says.

When I told him I had my diploma, he said, "What are you going to do next?"

Mrs. Moses is planning on returning to school in the future, though she has not set a definite date for doing so.

"Education is special because I've seen the need of it so badly," she said. "It does a lot for you. It not only teaches what's in the books, but ... builds awareness and self-esteem."

Science Winners

Mary Ellen Lyons and M. Doug Lee, both students at D.H. Conley High School, won third place in advanced science at the 13th annual State Research Paper competition of the N.C. Student Academy of Science held at East Carolina University.

Ms. Lyons also won the Naval Science Meritorious Achievement Award and the Marine Corps Biochemistry Award. She was also chosen as an alternate delegate to the American Junior Academy of Science meeting scheduled for May.

Scopes Trial

Biology teacher John Scopes was arrested on this day in 1925 for teaching Darwin's theory of evolution. Scopes became the center of a national controversy by answering an advertisement placed in a newspaper by the American Civil Liberties Union. The advertisement asked for a teacher who would volunteer to teach the theory of evolution in the public schools. Scopes was found guilty, but his conviction was overturned by the state supreme court.

Former Black Panther Runs For U.S. Senate

By JOHN HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Former Black Panther leader, international fugitive and prison inmate Eldridge Cleaver sits in a sunny neighborhood cafe, nibbles a croissant and explains how he changed from radical militant to God-fearing Republican.

"It was the repression of other governments I encountered as a fugitive," said Cleaver, who spent seven years in self-imposed exile. "The oppression of the United States was nothing to that of countries like Cuba and North Korea. In Cuba, we wore fatigues and grew beards as revolutionary gestures, but I began to realize that the people viewed those fatigues as a symbol of repression."

Eventually, he said, he concluded that "too much government was dangerous." That perception, he said, accompanied by a conversion to Christianity, led him into the ranks of conservatives who oppose big government and of church-goers who espouse traditional moral values.

The 48-year-old author of the critically acclaimed "Soul on Ice," who inspired a generation of black militants in the 1960s, is one of 13 candidates for the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate.

Cleaver stands little chance of winning; he does not register on statewide polls.

But the former information minister of the Black Panther Party drew cheers and a standing ovation from hundreds of delegates at the state Republican Party's recent convention for urging listeners to fight the "international communist menace."

"I barely had enough money to get down there; I spent the night at the home of a student," he said. Cleaver supports himself largely by lecturing and writing, but receives no royalties from "Soul on Ice." A brief foray into marketing men's clothing also did not pan out.

"Soul on Ice," a collection of essays exploring Cleaver's feelings on youth, race, love, imprisonment and religion, contained some of the most powerful protest writing of the 1960s. In one essay, entitled "On Becoming," Cleaver described his rape of white women as "an insurrectionary act. It delighted me that I was defying and trampling upon the white man's law ... defiling his women. ... I wanted to send waves of consternation through the white race."

Cleaver, who spent a decade in California's toughest prisons for assault with intent to commit murder, appears positively benign today with his hair graying at the temples, his conservatively cut clothing, his spectacles. He lives in a white frame house in Berkeley, an American flag fluttering in the front yard. Most people who see Cleaver on the street don't recognize him.

His second-floor living room resembles the comfortable quarters of a well-off college student, filled with books, electronic equipment and posters. A word processor, flanked by computer disks and mounds of notes, covers a table.

There are photographs of his wife, Kathleen, now studying law at Yale University, and two children, both of whom were born while Cleaver was a fugitive.

But the most striking decoration in Cleaver's home is a poster-sized reproduction of a 1954 prison photograph, in which a teen-age Cleaver, a number across his chest, glares fiercely into the camera. The startling picture is dominated by his eyes.

"That," Cleaver said 32 years later, "is my favorite picture. I had it made from my prison ID card."

Cleaver, who co-founded the Black Panthers in 1966 with Huey Newton, left the country in 1968 following a shootout between police and the Black Panthers in which hundreds of rounds blasted a West Oakland neighborhood. Black Panther Bobby Hutton died and Cleaver was wounded.

Cleaver, accused of attempted murder and assault, fled to Montreal and began a seven-year odyssey that took him to the Soviet Union, Cuba, France, Algeria and North Korea.

But in 1975, Cleaver came home, denounced the Black Panther Party and declared that he had experienced a religious conversion. He drew angry criticism from blacks, particularly the Black Panthers.

After a five-year legal battle, while he was free on $100,000 bail, Cleaver pleaded guilty in an agreement with prosecutors to assaulting an Oakland police officer. In return the attempted murder charge was dropped. Finally, 12 years after the Oakland gun battle, Cleaver received probation and was ordered to perform 2,000 hours of community service.

"Everybody changes, not just me," he said. "I was pulled over in my car with my secretary for a traffic thing and one of the officers walked up to the car, and saw me sitting inside. He took off his hat and said, 'Hey, Eldridge, remember me?'"

"He used to be a Panther," Cleaver said. "It was hard to believe."

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1986

YOUR DAILY Horoscope from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Interesting new situations arise for you early in the day so be sure to be up and about early so you can get the benefit of this condition. Creativity is heightened.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) A friend can give you a modern idea that can help you to gain some wish that means a great deal to you.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Contact a most prominent person you know who can guide you on how to best use your finest talents.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Arrange a trip that could bring you greater success, but don't delay or you could lose out where it counts the most.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Improve your image with the public in general and put your best foot forward. Keep calm, cool and collected.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Forget all those antiquated ideas and become more modern so that you can get ahead much faster.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Begin the new week properly by using novel business systems and become more efficient and skillful.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Get together with those you trust and act in a positive manner and then you can gain your aims quickly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Yesterday you decided on a new method for improving your activities so get busy and try it out today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Enjoy a different kind of entertainment that you have not delved into before this, but watch expenses.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) All kinds of situations arise at home, but handle them in a most efficient manner. Be cooperative with family members.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Use advanced ideas and you can make your activities more profitable. Gain the data you need from experts.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Get right into practical plans you have made and gain success with them. Try to be more modern.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will definitely be a product of the Jet Age and at an early age should be sent to the most modern schools where your progeny can make rapid progress. Your progeny will go from one interest to another very quickly in order to round out the knowledge.

Newsman Produced Film As Punishment

By DIANE DUSTON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — An emotion-filled documentary on drunken driving, which will be broadcast on public television Wednesday night, is more than a story of the horrors that can result from driving under the influence. It is one man's legal punishment.

Kelly Burke, a Washington TV reporter, produced "Drinking and Driving: the Toll, the Tears" on orders from a judge after Burke caused a fatal accident while he was driving drunk.

The documentary details eight accidents involving alcohol, with interviews from drivers and victims, including the family of the man Burke killed.

The newsman said putting the program together was worse than the jail term he could have received.

"I had to spend a lot more time facing the place of alcohol in my life," said the WRC-TV reporter, who worked several months on his own time to complete the one-hour documentary. "I don't drink at all anymore. It has no place in my life."

Burke first took the finished documentary to his station, but was turned down. WETA, Washington's public TV station, welcomed the project and got it on the air.

Burke takes viewers to homes, prisons, churches, cemeteries and hospitals where he interviews families and drivers telling tearful stories of regret.

"It's an unlikely alliance saying the same thing," he said. "Believe me, you don't want to go through this."

Burke's accident July 1, 1984, killed Dennis Lee Crouch, 32, of Pooleville, Md. In January 1985, he was fined $500 and placed on two years' probation on the condition he do the documentary, which was his suggestion to Montgomery County Circuit Judge William Cave.

When Cave agreed to the project rather than sentence Burke to jail, Crouch's widow and Mothers Against Drunk Driving protested.

At the time of the crash, Mrs. Crouch, a Montgomery County police officer, was eight months pregnant. The documentary shows her attending her husband's funeral and later playing with her infant daughter, Denise.

"I pride myself in being a professional police officer ... handling a drunk driving case will be very, very difficult," Mrs. Crouch says in the program. "Dennis was my life."

"It was very difficult for me to put the Sandra Crouch segment together," said Burke.

He conducted all the interviews in the program, except the one with Mrs. Crouch. "I didn't want to put us both through that," Burke said. He said he wrote her a letter, but she didn't write back. For the program, she did talk at length with a colleague of his.

"She was wonderful in the way she cooperated," Burke said.

Burke avoids statistics or such journalistic possibilities as discussions with psychologists and law enforcement officials.

"People are only motivated by their self-interest," he said, explaining that he hoped these horror stories from both sides of the accident would make viewers stop and think.

"A lot of nights I couldn't sleep," says driver David Fleming, who is serving a prison sentence for killing Margaret Haley, a mother of 11. "I wake up crying. I did the whole first year. Still bugs me ... there's not a day passes that (my mind) don't drift off to the accident."

Robert Williams, who killed seven people when he blacked out at the wheel, said he wished he too had died.

From prison, where he is serving 35 years without chance of parole, Williams says: "I pleaded guilty, you know ... All I ask is for their forgiveness, that's all. Maybe I'm paying for all of it, all the wrong and everything I've done in my life. I don't know. And maybe that's why I was spared — to suffer."

Alan Alda Does It All In 'Sweet Liberty' Film

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — He's actor, writer, director and — salesman. Alan Alda does it all.

Having seen triple duty for his new Universal Pictures release, "Sweet Liberty," Alda is now hustling to 22 U.S. cities to spread the news about the movie. It's the culmination of 2 1/2 years of pure devotion.

In "Sweet Liberty," Alda plays a Revolutionary War scholar whose best-selling book is being adapted — miserably — into a big-budget movie. The film company descends on his college town, and Alda tries to infuse integrity into the script, meanwhile dallying with the movie's star, played by Michelle Pfeiffer.

In his suite at the Beverly Hills Hotel, Alda recently talked about the origins of the movie.

"I've always been interested in the colonial period, and I wanted to know more about it," he said. "I know how people behave today, but how did they behave then? How did they flirt together, what did they argue about?"

"I also wondered what it's like when a movie is made in a small town. I thought it would be fun for a guy who has written a book to watch it being made. He would be an outsider to the movie making, and everything would have to be explained to him."

The protagonist, he said, sees history in his own way and not as the film company does. "The company uses history as a stepping-stone for entertainment; the main thing is to get a funny story. So each has his own uses of truth. As I began to write, the theme developed: Everyone has a different version of reality, and to get anything done, you have to give a little."

Alda spent a year or so working on the script.

"Everything had to be down on paper before shooting. I knew I was going to be very busy on the set, and I wanted to get everything out of the way so I wouldn't have to be writing the final draft on the set. Every camera move, every dolly shot, every lens was planned beforehand, and the entire script was storyboarded. I ended up with a big book of drawings and instructions so that nobody would be confused."

Alda and producer Martin Bregman chose Sag Harbor on New York's Long Island to double for a North Carolina college town. The cast included Michael Caine, Michelle Pfeiffer, Bob Hoskins, Lise Hilboldt and Lillian Gish, also actors portraying the crew of the movie-within-a-movie.

"We had virtually two film crews — one real and one actors," Alda said. "The assistant director, Yudi Bennett, had a great idea: She offered a prize to crew members who did the best job of teaching the actor crew members how to do their jobs."

Alda was asked if his directorial duties caused him to slight Alda the actor.

"I don't think so," he replied. "I had the advantage of writing and directing, so I knew the emotional underpinnings of the story; I had spent a year or so of figuring them out."

Mark Harmon Has Trouble Breaking From His Role

By MICHAEL E. HILL
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Actors, some of them anyway, like to play the parts of people totally different from themselves and different from the parts they've played before. They have terms for it, like "stretching," "playing against type."

Mark Harmon, the squeaky clean pitchman for Coors beer and former doctor on the "St. Elsewhere" staff, thought he was in for a long stretch when he took the part of Ted Bundy, a convicted mass-murderer on death row in Florida, sentenced in the killings of two coeds and a 12-year-old girl and suspected in 36 other sex slayings. Now, that's a stretch.

But then he found himself stalking women in the supermarket.

Harmon plays Bundy in "The Deliberate Stranger," a two-night, four-hour miniseries Sunday and Monday nights on NBC. The story is based on the book "Bundy: The Deliberate Stranger," by Richard W. Larsen, a former Seattle Times reporter.

The drama, produced and directed by three-time Emmy winner Martin Chomsky ("Holocaust," "Attica" and "Inside the Third Reich") tells the story of the five-year manhunt for Bundy, suspected or convicted in slayings in California, Utah, Colorado and much of the Pacific Northwest.

The irony lies in the fact that Bundy, outwardly, is much like Harmon — handsome, bright, charming and smooth, the sort of fellow women want to take home to meet the family.

As he got deeper into the Bundy character, Harmon began to lose touch with the part that most resembled him and got closer in touch with the dark side.

"I feel it's understandable that I'm not sleeping more than two hours a night," he said during a short break in the filming. "I had thought initially that the charming side of Ted Bundy was something that I was going to be able to find fairly easily and that the other extremes were going to be more difficult. ... Now, in week six of shooting, it's the charming side that's more difficult to find. ... It kind of gets in your head a bit."

Harmon, looking a bit haggard but very fit, said immersing himself into the part had kept him up at night. When that happened, he went running.

"People who have known me for 20 years come over to the house, take one look at me and turn around and leave. ... My dogs don't recognize me. ... This is make-believe, and I try to keep in perspective, but in a role like this, I find myself reminding myself more and more of that all the time."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK92 ♥82 ♦AQ104 ♣KQJ
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1♦ Pass 1♥ Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—Obviously, it is simply a matter of whether you bid two no trump or not. We do not believe in bypassing a good four-card major in favor of jumping in no trump. That runs very little risk. If partner is so weak that he passes one spade, your chances for game at no trump are slight.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ95 ♥KQJ82 ♦8763 ♣7
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South East
1♦ Pass 1♥ Pass
2♣ Pass ?
What do you bid now?
A.—The auction is developing quite nicely for you. However, there is no need to go jumping around just yet. A bid of two spades is not only forcing but shows a good hand, since it is a reverse. Partner's next bid will help clarify where you want to play the hand—three no trump is still a possibility.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J1054 ♥Q983 ♦K6 ♣A72
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South East
1♣ Dble ?
What action do you take?
A.—Unless you have some method of showing a limit raise of partner's suit after the enemy interposes a takeout double, the only sensible bid you have is to redouble. When you next support partner's suit, he will realize that you have this type of hand.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQJ52 ♥7 ♦93 ♣A1093
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1♣ Pass 2 NT Pass
3♣ Pass 3 NT Pass
What action do you take?
A.—You do not yet want to give up all thoughts of slam, but you cannot make any drastic move. Bid four spades. That confirms your 6-4 distribution and tells partner you don't need much in the way of trump support from him.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K763 ♥9842 ♦72 ♣AJ3
North East South West
1♥ Pass 2♥ Pass
3♥ Pass ?
What do you bid now?
A.—Partner is asking you to evaluate your diamond holding for game purposes. With four-card trump support, a doubleton is a reasonably favorable holding. Since you have an ace and a king on the side, we think the hand just merits a raise to four hearts.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q109 ♥3 ♦87642 ♣QJ63
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South East
1♥ Dble ?
What action do you take?
A.—There is a classic way of showing a hand that is worth next-to-nothing: pass. Since that is what you have, that is the auction you should take. Don't worry about the possibility that the double will be left in for penalties. That seldom happens and, even if it does, you cannot be sure that one heart is not the best spot.

'Superman' Gets Image Uplifted

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Don't mess with the new Clark Kent. One of America's best-known wimps has taken a cue from Dirty Harry and no longer will tolerate being embarrassed in front of Lois Lane, or anyone else.
"Clark Kent is going to be more aggressive — not so squeaky clean," said John Byrne, a Fairfield cartoonist working to modernize "Superman" comics.
"Miss Lane will look more sophisticated and Superman's arch-enemy, Lex Luthor, will be a wealthy businessman, instead of a mad scientist, in an effort to make the comic series more appealing to today's youth."
"Superman is still truth, justice and the American way — just with more grit. Superman had turned into Mary Little, we want to try to make him a little more like Dirty Harry," Byrne said.

Program: SUNDAY IN THE PARK
This year promises to provide area citizens with the best summer program yet, and, as usual, the concerts are free and are meant for the entire family. So bring a blanket or folding chair and join us on the grassy slopes of Reade Street between 3rd and 4th Streets. All the concerts begin at 7:00 PM and in case of inclement weather, a substitute date, whenever possible, will be announced.

Entertainment Dates:

June 8 - Rose High Concert Band
June 15 - Eastern Symphonette
June 22 - The Monitors
June 29 - (Rutabega Brothers & Lemon Sisters, Mike "Lightning" Wells, and Others) An Evening of Rhythm & Blues
July 6 - Hometown Boys & Greengrass Cloggers (Bluegrass Festival)
July 13 - African-American Dance Ensemble
July 20 - The Wind Machine
