Hostage Scheme Planned By Loner

By The Associated Press

The former law officer who died along with his wife in an aborted attempt to exchange schoolchildren for $300 million was a loner and gun enthusiast who had planned the get-rich-quick scheme for over a year, relatives and acquaintances said Saturday.

David Young committed suicide Friday after a bomb held by his wife, Doris, exploded as they kept 150 students and teachers hostage at Cokeville Elementary School in Wyoming. Seventy-nine people, most of them children, were hurt and Mrs. Young was killed.

Young, a drifter who recently had been in Iowa, Idaho and Arizona, had served briefly as marshal of Cokeville six or seven years ago before being dismissed by the mayor, officials said.

County Seeks Ways To Lure More Teachers

By SUE HINSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Recruiting teachers has become big business. Take the the annual Chapel Hill Job Fair, for example.

Two months ago, Tina Drye, director of certificated personnel for the Pitt County schools, attended the fair along with recruiters from school systems across the nation in hopes of luring top level soon-to-be teaching graduates.

She went armed with folders and handouts pointing out benefits of the Pitt-Greenville area — benefits such as proximity to a state university and opportunities for higher education.

Ms. Drye also went prepared to tell about Pitt-Greenville's expanding industrial and business base, its abundance of top-rate medical services, its quality of living and the areas's public school system, considered one of the state's best.

But she didn't have much luck. Not when her competitors, recruiters from California, Florida, Virginia, Tennessee, were dangling salaries of $2,000 to $5,000 more a year than the Pitt County schools. Not when those school systems offered teacher supplements reaching into the thousands. Not when out-of-state recruiters were willing to fly job candidates to their schools for interviews and to show off their systems.

"That's when I woke up," Ms. Drye said, "and came face-to-face with the teacher shortage."

According to Furney James, director of career planning and placement at East Carolina University, there is indeed a teacher shortage — a "drastic one" that is beginning to affect school systems across the state.

"The figures are staggering," he said, citing a 59.7 percent decrease since 1971 in numbers of student teachers in all fields at ECU — not just math, not just science, not just

Power, Gas Purchases Anchor GUC Budget

BY STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The largest items in the $71.02 million tentative budget approved last week by members of the Greenville Utilities Commission board for the coming fiscal year are for the purchase of electric power and natural gas.

The proposed 1986-1987 budget — some $2.68 million more than the $68.34 million approved for the current year — includes $45.8 million for the purchase of electricity ($42.03 this year but projected to total only $41.09 million by fiscal year-end) and $4.59 million for the purchase of natural gas ($4.76 million budgeted this year, but projected to total $5.43 million by June 30.)

The electric fund has the largest projected budget for 1986-87, some $58.34 million as compared with $54.18 million this year.

Electric fund revenue estimates include $55.3 million from rates and charges ($50.8 million this year) and $150,000 in fees ($125,000 this year), while proposed expenditures include $5 million for operations ($4.63 million this year), $45.8 million for purchased power, $4.59 million for capital outlay ($4.66 million this year) and $1.59 million in city turnover ($1.54 million this year).

(City turnover — utility "profits" given to the city — is based on 6 percent of the "citizens' equity" in both the electric and gas systems. The city also receives franchise taxes paid by GUC electric and gas customers to the state of North Carolina.)

Water fund revenue for the coming fiscal year, which begins July 1, is estimated at $3.61 million ($4.56 million this year), including $3.36 million from rates and charges ($3.25 million this year) and $175,000 in fees ($200,000 this year).

Projected water fund expenditures which total $3.61 million, include $1.53 million for operations ($1.43 million this year) and $567,275 for capital outlay ($540,885 million this year).

The sewer fund, with a proposed budget totaling $2.48 million in the coming year ($3.06 million this year), includes revenue of $2.19 million in rates and charges ($2.10 million this year) and $100,000 from service fees ($80,000 this year) as well as expenditures of $1.48 million for operations ($1.14 million this year) and $680,375 for capital outlay ($476,985 this year).

The tentative gas fund budget of $6.57 million for the coming year ($6.56 million this year) includes revenue of $5.99 million from rates and charges ($5.92 million this year), $30,000 in fees and $35,000 from the sale of compressed natural gas (both the same as this year). (The gas department sells compressed natural gas to itself and other GUC departments for use as a motor vehicle fuel as a replacement for gasoline.)

Projected expenditures for the gas department include $855,334 for operations ($794,803 this year), $4.59 million for the purchase of natural gas ($4.76 million this year), $613,040 for capital outlay ($500,070 this year), and $220,000 for city turnover ($206,122 this year).

BW Employees Had Chances To Buy Stock, Official Says

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

Burroughs Wellcome employees were given the opportunity to buy stock in the pharmaceutical company when it went public with 25 percent of its stock in London earlier this year, according to the company's public affairs director.

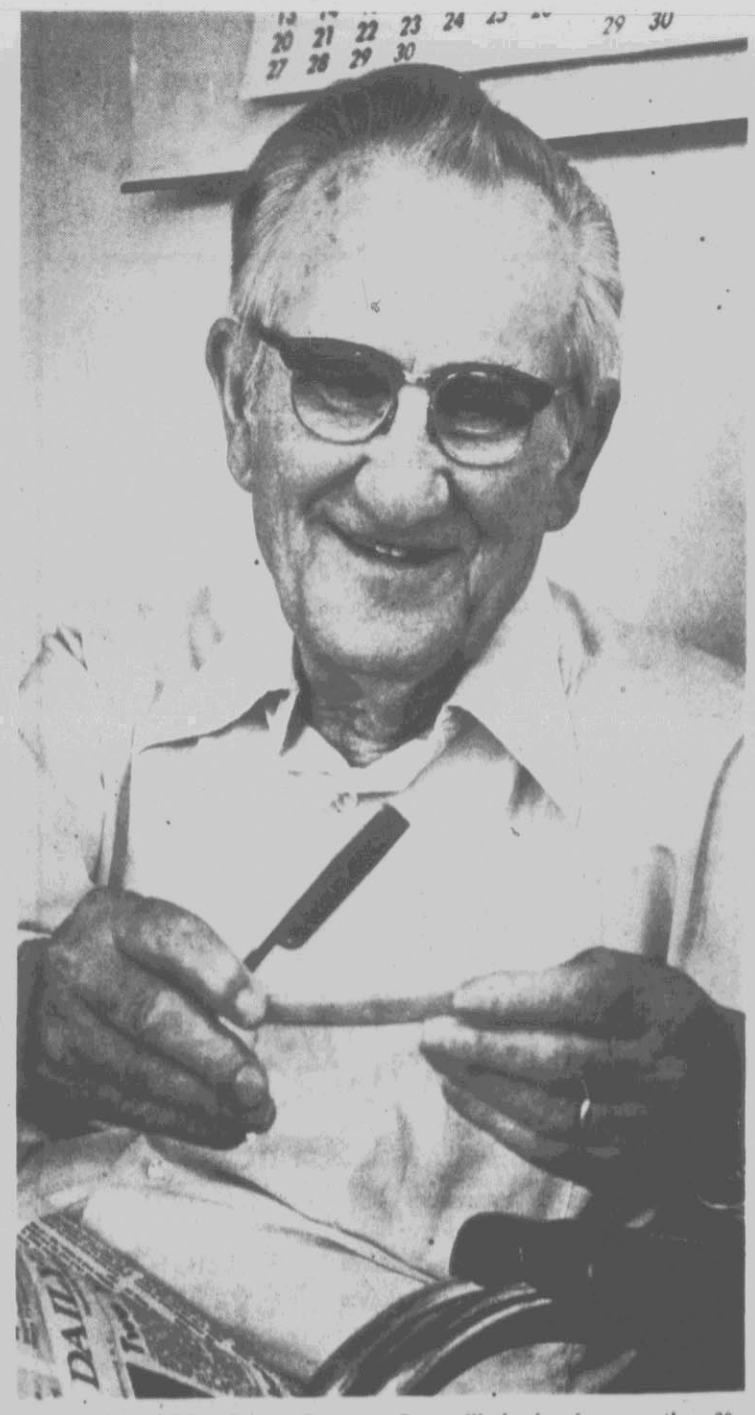

"A portion of the stock was made available to U.S. employees from Jan. 29 to Feb. 5," Thack Brown said. "They were given the opportunity to buy the stock without waiting for the 'quiet period' to end, so that could get it for a lower price."

The stock could only be shown but not promoted for purchase during the "quiet period," which ended March 29, according to officials with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Employees were only given the one-week period to buy stock in the Wellcome Trust, a private group that owns Burroughs Wellcome's parent company, the Wellcome Foundation Ltd., when it offered 25 percent of its stock, according to Brown, who said no information was available on how many made purchases.

Meanwhile, Brown repeated claims the company isn't planning to go public in the United States.

HARD TO QUIT — George Brown, a Greenville barber for more than 60 years, looks at one of the old straight razors he used before retiring. Barber Remembers Busy Times

By HAROLD JOYNER
Reflector Staff Writer

Even though there were no electric hair clippers or hair dryers or electric shavers in 1929, there were still plenty of people who wanted to get a hair cut at the old Proctor Hotel, according to one of Greenville's oldest barbers.

"Traveling men would come down to the barber shop — there might be a half a dozen waiting when I walked in first thing," said George Brown, 85, who recently retired after more than 60 years of barbering.

"It was very hard for a man to keep a straight blade sharp, so it was more convenient for him to let hotel barbers shave him.

"On Saturdays, we'd have them line up to get in the shower-bath. That's how busy it was."

When he was 25, he went to Durham to a barber's college — the only one in the state at that time — and learned his trade.

"I remember an old gentleman in Falkland, where I grew up, that heard I was going to barber's college. He asked me, 'Why you want to do that when you could stay here and farm? You won't be at it (barbering) for more than six months.' I told him I knew I could always quit if I didn't like it."

A few haircuts later, Brown bought the Proctor Hotel Barber Shop — now where First Citizens Bank is in the Minges Building — and stayed there until moving into his present building on Cotanche Street about 10 years ago.

He and his partner, Lee Rowland, had never seen each other until the first day they enrolled in the barber's college. From then on, they never separated.

"In all our years of working together, we never had a cross word," Rowland, 79, said.

"But we did disagree on some things," Brown said.

"We would always try to satisfy our customers," he said. "Of course you can't always do that — you can't even do that with yourself. I believed in being courteous and having feelings for your customers. It makes a person feel good."

Near Collision At O'Hare

By NICHOLAS K. GERANIOS
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Two airliners acclerating for takeoff on intersecting runways nearly collided Saturday at O'Hare International Airport, forcing one of the jets to take off early and roar over the other, federal officials said.

"It must have been ... close," said Mort Edelstein of the Federal Aviation Administration. "It could have turned into a disaster."

However, Edelstein said later that he had no information on how close the planes were, and that it would not be determined whether the situation could have resulted in a crash until the investigation is concluded.

He said the incident was being classified as an operational error.

Spokesmen for both airlines involved, USAir and American, each said their planes had been cleared for takeoff.

No one was injured, and the planes continued safely to their destinations, Edelstein said.

The incident occurred at 10:01 a.m., when USAir Flight 373, a DC-9 en route to Pittsburgh with 110 passengers and five crew members on aboard, and American Airlines Flight 695, a Boeing 727 en route to Oklahoma City with 102 passengers and seven crew members, began their takeoffs on different runways.

As the USAir jet was speeding toward takeoff, its first officer noticed the American airliner on a takeoff roll on a runway that intersected the other about 5,000 feet down, Edelstein said.

"The captain took evasive actions and flew over the top of the 727," Edelstein said. The American jet took off normally.

"He was on his roll and took off earlier than normal," said Edelstein, although he could not estimate how much earlier.

American spokesman Al Becker said the pilot of the American plane would file a report.

"We don't know how close he came or why that occurred," said Becker in a telephone interview from Fort Worth, Texas. "All we know is we were cleared for takeoff and he had started his roll when this plane passed above him."

Dave Shipley, a USAir spokesman in Washington, said the USAir plane was traveling at a speed "well over 100 miles an hour" when it took off.

"Ideally, he (the pilot) would have had a little more speed when he took off," Shipley said. But the pilot did not endanger the flight when he lifted off before attaining higher speed, he said, adding that the flight had been cleared for takeoff.

The air traffic controller in charge of the flights was immediately relieved of duties.

Pitt ...

English. And that does not bode well for the Pitt County schools, which up until recently drew 50 to 60 percent of its teachers from East Carolina University.

Today, Ms. Drye said, the school system gets most of its teachers by "default" — that is, it draws people who want to live in Greenville or Pitt County for whatever reasons, usually family. "The top candidates who are willing to move go elsewhere. They go where the money is," Ms. Drye said.

Those realities — increasing competitiveness between school systems for teachers both in and out of state and the encroaching teacher shortage — have convinced Ms. Drye and other Pitt school officials that something must be done to make the Pitt County system more attractive. That something, they say, is an increase in supplemental pay for teachers.

"We need some additional resources," Ms. Drye said, "to make the system more attractive to new and experienced teachers."

The 10th largest system in the state in terms of students enrolled, Pitt County schools currently rank 80th in amount of supplemental pay — money paid to teachers out of local coffers over and beyond set salaries provided by the state.

Compare to Pitt County standings those of the ninth largest school system, New Hanover, which in terms of supplemental pay is ranked eighth in the state. According to New Hanover payroll supervisor Jeanette King, supplements in the Wilmington area system range from $850 a year for third-year teachers to $1,670 a year for top level master's degree employees.

The supplemental pay sca' in Pitt County now ranges from $196 for first year teachers to $325 for top level teachers with master's degrees. And that range, according to Associate Superintendent Jamie Keeter, has not changed substantially since the supplemental program was first begun for county school teachers in 1976.

The only time the pay rate was changed was in 1985, when county and Greenville school system supplements were adjusted to commensurate levels in preparation for merger of the two systems, scheduled to take place July 1. The change then amounted to approximately $23,000, which brought total city and county allocations for supplements from the Pitt County Board of Commissioners to approximately $236,000, where it stands today.

Pitt County and Greenville supplements are also below those of nearby Carteret County, which on the average pays beginning teachers with bachelor's degrees an additional $525 a year. Pasquotank-Elizabeth City at $300 and Washington city and Perquimans County, at $250 each, also pay more than Pitt.

According to Ms. Drye, the implications of the problem are serious and place Greenville in an unenviable position in terms of keeping up the past level and improving the future quality of education. That is why Pitt system officials have made an increase in supplemental pay a priority for upcoming budget years, she said.

The county school board has asked the Pitt County Board of Commissioners to increase supplemental pay from 1.25 percent to 1.75 percent of total teacher salary in 1986-87. To effect the increase, commissioners would need to allocate approximately $100,000 more for supplemental pay. The board will consider the request in budget sessions prior to June 30.

School officials said they also plan to ask for changes in 1987-88 and 1988-89 to effect an overall 1.25 percent increase, creating a total 2.5 percent supplemental pay rate. Such an increase over three years would bring the supplemental pay for a beginning teacher with a base pay of $15,680 to approximately $392.

If no other North Carolina school system changed its level of supplemental pay during that three-year period, Pitt County would then be ranked 45th in the state in amount of supplemental pay given to teachers.

It is likely, however, officials said, that school systems will continue to seek increases over the next three years. Wake County, the second largest system in the state in terms of student enrollment, is now seeking an increase of several percentage points in supplemental pay. Wake is currently ranked fifth on the state supplemental pay scale. New Hanover also is seeking an increase this year and is asking as well that first- and second-year teachers be allowed to receive supplemental pay.

Getting 40 cents for a haircut and 20 cents for a shave, Brown said he never thought he'd see the day he could get $5 for a haircut.

Before coming to Greenville, Brown worked in New Bern for two years, and in some other smaller shops before coming to one of Greenville's popular hotels.

In summer, Brown said the five barbers worked in the Proctor Hotel with no air conditioning or fans. "The hair would just stick to our skins. It was terrible." Later on, however, Brown said an exhaust fan was installed, offering some relief from Greenville's hot and humid summers.

Conditions in winter were not much better, he said, as the wood stove had to be fed constantly. "Nobody complained though. We didn't know anything better like we do today."

Brown said that while his eye surgery may have been a primary reason for retiring from the business, he still misses the people, and the people have begun missing him. "I had two men at church ask me when I was going back to barbering. I stuck with it this long. I guess that's long enough."

Loner ...

He also served as a law officer in Mountain Home, Idaho, and a small town in Nebraska, said a longtime friend, Arthur Hoyt of Tucson, Ariz.

Elmore County, Idaho, Sheriff Larry Olson told the Boise Statesman that Young had worked for the Mountain Home Police Department for about six months in late 1975 and early 1976. Young was not retained after his six-month probationary period because officers did not beliee he could fulfill the duties, the sheriff said.

Young was a "real quiet person," Olson said. "He didn't associate with anyone."

Olson also said Young was arrested for having a concealed weapon when he visited the department while wearing a gun under his coat.

Hoyt said he had known Young since junior high school in Grinnell, Iowa, Young's hometown. The Youngs had lived in a trailer in Tucson for a year and a half, he said.

"I knew something was going to happen, because he wanted me to be a participant — participate in something — he never explained what," Hoyt said, adding he refused to take part.

Hoyt said Young spoke to him in early 1985 in about "a get-rich-quick scheme or something."

Young had told him, "There'd be enough (money) that you could buy 747s and just fly forever," according to Hoyt.

"I knew something was going on a few weeks ago, and then, they were gone," he said.

He said he had thought the scheme would be illegal, but said it was inconceivable that it involved schoolchildren as hostages.

Hoyt said Young always wore a handgun, but was not a survivalist.

Lincoln County (Wyo.) Lincoln Sheriff Deb Wolfley said at a news conference Saturday that language in Mrs. Young's diary, among a sheaves of papers found in the couple's van, indicated a possible connection with the radical group Posse Comitatus.

Members of the group often are connected with federal income-tax protests and believe that a county sheriff is the highest law-enforcement authority.

Young "talked of plans for some new race of new people" in his diaries, Wolfley said. One of them contained the notation, "1986: The year of the biggie."

Wesley Meyers of Grinnell, who said he is Young's uncle, said the man left town after high school and lived in Nebraska and Albuquerque, N.M., before moving to Wyoming.

"They did live there until three years ago, then they went to Arizona," Meyers said. "At the time his wife was a country singer in bars and places like that, and they moved down there to get a chance at the big time."

The Youngs' trailer was searched Saturday by federal agents and sheriff's deputies who emerged with three metal boxes but declined to say what was inside.

Authorities had thought that the Youngs might have booby-trapped the trailer, so they took a sheriff's department bomb truck and an explosives-sniffing dog to the scene. The boxes were taken away in the bomb truck.

Neighbors and acquaintances said the Youngs had a daughter, Princess, who graduated from high school last year.

Russ Harris, 45, said Princess Young planned to marry his son, John. Miss Young had telephoned, "very distraught," from Cokeville's town hall Friday to tell John that her father had parked his van in front of a school and had begun to unload guns and ammunition, Russ Harris said.

"She began to run and made it to the City Hall, which was a couple of blocks away," he said. "She said her dad and Doris went on to the school."

GUC ...

The Greenville City Council must give its approval to the proposed GUC budget before the figures become final.

In a "budget message" included with the tentative budget figures, GUC General Manager Malcolm Green said "reflected in this budget is the continuing rapid rate of development in and around Greenville," He said the budget contains "capital outlays required to accomplish needed systems' additions and improvements, which are part of the commission's long-range plans."

Green's message noted that the proposed budget takes into account the tracking of an expected 14 percent increase in wholesale electric power costs Jan. 1, 1987, as well as as a "previously adopted sewer rates" increase which calls for a 5 cents per 100 cubic feet sewer rate hike on July 1, of this year.

He said no water rate increase is expected in the coming year and said any gas rate increase during fiscal 1986-87 would only track increases in the wholesale cost of natural gas.

Stock ...

"The stock is not going on any U.S. exchange, and I don't see it happening in the foreseeable future," Brown said.

The public affairs director said he has received 350 calls about rumored stock offering since April.

"That's purely a rumor, but it's one we've heard quite often," Brown said. "Somewhere along the line, brokers started getting the idea that when the quiet period ran out that might somehow translate into a listing on the American Exchange or something."

U.S. investors may purchase stock in the parent company through the foreign investment desks most brokers offer, but only on an unsolicited basis, Brown said.

"Most brokerage houses will have the client give them some form of letter or form stating that, to make sure they don't violate any SEC rules," he said.

Brown said the parent company divested in order to provide a stronger base.

"Basically, the trust operated with one asset. It's a prudent investment not to put all you've got in one basket," he said. "We've started a diversity of holdings to find other sources of income."

Brown said the decision had nothing to do with the financial status of the company and should have little impact on the decison-making process.

"We took the money from the sale and invested it in area totally unrelated to Burroughs Wellcome. It has nothing to do with not having faith in our company, but rather as a wise investment," Brown said. "The majority of the stock is still held by the same people, so we don't foresee any changes in the way we do business."

Brown said the shares, which originally sold for $1.59 apiece, are currently selling for about $3.

Burroughs Wellcome produced the first oral treatment for recurrent genital herpes and is studying an anti-viral drug that early reports found helpful in treating AIDS.

Burroughs Wellcome officials announced last year that the herpes treatment Zovirax, the company's patented form of acyclovir, could bring in $50 million a year once sales are geared up.

In March, the British medical journal, The Lancet, reported that the anti-viral drug azidothymidine, or AZT, reduced fevers, boosted immune systems and eliminated some infections among 15 of 19 patients suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Burroughs Wellcome is using 200 patients at medical centers across the country in more extensive trials of the drug.

CHOOSING A CEMETERY

When is the best time to make cemetery arrangements? Some people do this when they are quite young, others leave it to their survivors. It's primarily a matter of preference and life-style. Naturally, someone who leads a rather transient life, moving every few years, may want to postpone such decisions.

On the other hand, if you're convinced you're in the community where you intend to live and die, the sooner you see to burial arrangements the better. Delay can mean that your survivors will have to pay a higher price for a burial plot if it's needed quickly.

There are a number of important considerations. Some people are limited, for example, to cemeteries devoted exclusively to members of their religious faith. Others will have a strong preference for the cemetery where their family or friends are buried—regardless of cost. If you have a preference, it's in your and your family's best interest to make your decision in advance.

Quake Jolts Aleutians

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A strong earthquake in the Aleutian Island chain triggered a tsunami watch Saturday for the second time in 10 days along coastal Alaska and the Pacific Coast south to California, but no large waves developed.

The quake, which registered 6.5 on the Richter scale, struck about 12:20 p.m. EDT about 85 miles northeast of the Aleutian island of Adak, according to the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo.

The quake was felt strongly at Adak, site of a naval air base, and caused slight damage at Atka, about 100 miles to the east, the survey said.

Some items were jolted from shelves, hot water tanks were overturned and windows broken in the village of Atka, said geophysicist John Sindorf. There were no reports of injuries, he said.

The Alaska Tsunami Warning Center issued a tsunami warning from Attu at the tip of the Aleutian chain to Sand Point at the end of the Alaska Peninsula following the earthquake, and a tsunami watch for the rest of the Alaska coastline and coastal areas of British Columbia, Washington, Oregon and California.

The warning and watch were canceled shortly afterward.

On May 7, a great earthquake, measuring 7.7 on the Richter scale and centered about 100 miles southeast of Adak, triggered a tsunami alert for the North Pacific, but no major waves ever materialized.

Thousands of people evacuated coastal areas, but the largest waves reported were 10 feet high in Hawaii, and about half that at Adak. The waves reaching the Pacific Nothwest generally were only 2-3 feet high.

Tsunamis travel across the sea at speeds of up to 500 mph and gain size rapidly as they approach land. Their height upon striking shore cannot be predicted accurately.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude.

Nine Die In Four Plane Crashes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Four plane crashes in Southern California on Saturday killed nine people, including six people who died when their Cessna crashed near the Van Nuys Airport, officials said.

The Cessna 310 with six people aboard crashed just two hours after a single-engine plane crashed near the aiport, killing the one person on board, said Department spokesman Jim Wells. The names of the victims were not released.

The French-built Trinidad TB20 apparently was on final approach when it crashed about an eighth of a mile off the runway, said an FAA spokesman who asked not to be identified.

Officials did not have any details about the Cessna crash.

Earlier, two people were killed and two seriously injured when a small private plane crashed in a field near Chino Airport, 35 miles east of Los Angeles.

The four-seat plane was apparently on its way to a nearby airshow when the crash occurred, said Capt. Tom Maxhan of the Chino Fire Department. The names of the victims were not released.

In another accident, a Cessna 150 nicked a 60-foot-tall pine tree, then fell to the ground near Lancaster in the desert north of Los Angeles, sheriff's deputies said. No one was injured.

The owner-pilot of the Cessna was identified as Franklin Elliott, 44, of Mojave. His passenger was Paul Holm, 14, of Lancaster, said Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Carlos Valdez.

House Siege

BOW, N.H. (AP) — A 15-year-old boy holed up in his house kept authorities at bay for four hours Saturday, firing hundreds of shots before surrendering following pleas from his parents.

A police officer who apparently responded to a disturbance call at the home was wounded, according to neighbors and an emergency worker.

Police declined to discuss details of the incident immediately, and a spokeswoman at nearby Concord Hospital declined to confirm or deny any injury.

Referendum Sought For Martin Hospital

WILLIAMSTON – Martin County Commissioners have received a request from Martin General Hospital for a $1.5 million referendum to cover the cost of upgrading existing facilities and providing an operational reserve.

Hospital Administrator George Brandt asked that the vote be held in September. County commissioners did not act on the request or indicate when a decision would be made.

"If we were on sound financial footing, we could get a loan of our own, but that's obviously not the case," Brandt said.

If approved, the loan would become the responsibilty of Martin General, with the county backing the refinancing program.

"The financial trend we're experiencing now indicates that we'd definitely be able to repay the loan," said Terry Boardman, group controller for SunHealth, the company which has managed the hospital for one year.

Hospital officials said some of the money from the loan would be used to enlarge the intensive care unit, renovate the emergency room, and to purchase medical equipment, a new computer system and a new telecommunication system.

Glass Found In Relish Jar

The Greenville Police Department received a report Thursday that a sliver of glass had been found in a jar of Duke's Mayonnaise Sandwich Relish purchased locally, police said.

The jar is an 8-ounce container bearing the date Dec. 25, 86E on the front label. The produt was manufactured by the C.F. Sauer Co., Richmond, Va.

Police said the relish was purchased at the Food Lion Store in the South Park Shopping Center on May 9. Food Lion removed the product from its shelves Thursday night.

The C.F. Sauer Co. and the Food and Drug Administration have been contacted and have advised that there has been no other report of glass being found in the product as of Friday, officers said.

The jar will be turned over to the FDA for examination by its laboratory in an attempt to determine the origin of the glass fragment.

Spangler Tours ECU Campus

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

C.D. Spangler, the recently selected president of North Carolina's consolidated university system, took a fast-paced walk through the campus of East Carolina University Friday with ECU Chancellor Dr. John Howell.

It was Spangler's first visit to the local campus since assuming the presidency.

Spangler viewed Joyner Library which the university hopes to expand in the near future, walked inside Wright Auditorium where extensive renovation is near completion, and posed in front of a crane raising steel for a new classroom building.

He said he expects state legislators, meeting in a short session beginning June 6, to be generous with money for the university system, but would offer no answers as to what ECU specifically might receive in an appropriation to the 16-campus system.

Spangler said he does not believe that ECU's enrollment will be hurt by the recent board of governors' mandate that out-of-state students be limited to 18 percent of the freshman class on each campus by 1988.

ECU now has about 18 percent out-of-staters overall, but about 26 percent of its freshman class this past year was from out of state. The entering class percentage will be cut to 23 percent next year, and to 20 percent the following year.

He said he does not believe that enrollment at ECU will suffer, because even though baby boomers are getting past college age, he believes that improvements in the secondary schools' programs will be producing more college-bound students, many of whom will choose ECU and other state-supported schools.

Merger Is Only Equitable Route For Pitt Schools

The facts on the muddled issue of consolidation line up neatly, like building blocks in a kindergarten classroom.

Stacked, they read "Proceed."

Pitt and Greenville schools should merge July 1, despite untimely disapproval of the merger plan from the U.S. Department of Justice. It is the responsibility of school board members and officials to see this deadline is met.

It is also their responsibility to prepare a revised school board election plan that meets the requirements of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The plan should be completed in time to be approved by the N.C. General Assembly in the short session next month, accepted by the Justice Department and in place by the November elections.

That is secondary, however. The important issue is consolidation — and education. Federal bullying, threats of lawsuits and shouts about illegal school board operation have diverted attention away from this overriding priority.

While blacks cry foul play and the federal government argues discrimination, classrooms in Greenville remain racially imbalanced — waiting to be stabilized by consolidation.

Kids in the Winterville and North Pitt districts still attend classes in decades-old mobile units and crumbling buildings — waiting for the promised capital outlay projects that come with merger.

Winterville schools continue to burst at the seams, while facilities in Farmville and Greenville are underutilized — waiting for equalization that a unified system will provide.

They can't wait any longer. Pitt County's classrooms are not the appropriate arena for a power struggle. The quality of education should not be sacrificed for election method reform, especially at the expense of a 10-year project.

Caught in the crossfire of personal agendas are 17,000 school children that must have the best education Pitt County funds can buy — and that means consolidation. Also caught in the crossfire are the county's taxpayers who are paying an extra $3 million per year in taxes to fund consolidation. The children and the taxpayers were told merger would begin July 1, and it should.

The school boards must act without delay to consolidate in July and develop a revised election plan in time for November implementation.

A pause is inexcusable and unaffordable.

College Study Proves Valuable

A study of North Carolina's community college system ... ordered by the Legislature last year ... finds the system is meeting state needs despite budgetary constraints.

The report issued by the Research Triangle Institute concluded a closer federation within the system would be helpful and declared the General Assembly should stop allocating money to community colleges without consulting the state board. In that, it echoed frequent complaints that campuses represented by powerful legislators get more than their share of state money.

The findings were capped by a conclusion that stronger action by the state board in guiding its 58-campus system was necessary.

Other sore points: reduction of overlapping programs at neighboring colleges was raised as a matter for the board to resolve, and whether tuition for college transfer courses should be increased to University of North Carolina system levels was posed.

Those nagging questions yet to be answered are fittingly left to the proposed stronger state board.

Not only did the study propose a solution to strengthening the community college system but assigned key questions for the stronger board to answer. We got our money's worth.

Sunday Morning Notes

Clifton Everette Sr., chairman of the Pitt Community College Board of Trustees, was on the program at activities commemorating the 25th anniversary of the institution on May 10.

"I prepared an address," he said. "When I looked at the program it said 'remarks' and I realized that 'remarks' is all I am to make."

And what's the difference? Our little dictionary says address is a speech. Remarks are brief comments or observations.

It all emphasizes the importance of preciseness in using the language. An address is guaranteed to put an audience to sleep. Remarks by a speaker will endear his audience because they are over quickly.

Chairman Everette noted, too, that a regional learning center is rising on the PCC campus.

Regional learning center?

"It was called a library when I was growing up, but I understand what it means," Everette said.

We understand, too, but in the news business there is a trend to say what we mean without the use of high sounding phrases.

Mike Rouse, executive editor of the Washington (N.C.) Daily News, spoke to our news staff recently. He, too, criticized such high sounding names as learning center and media center.

It's still a library.

Center seems to be a pet word of government, Rouse noted. There are centers for everything.

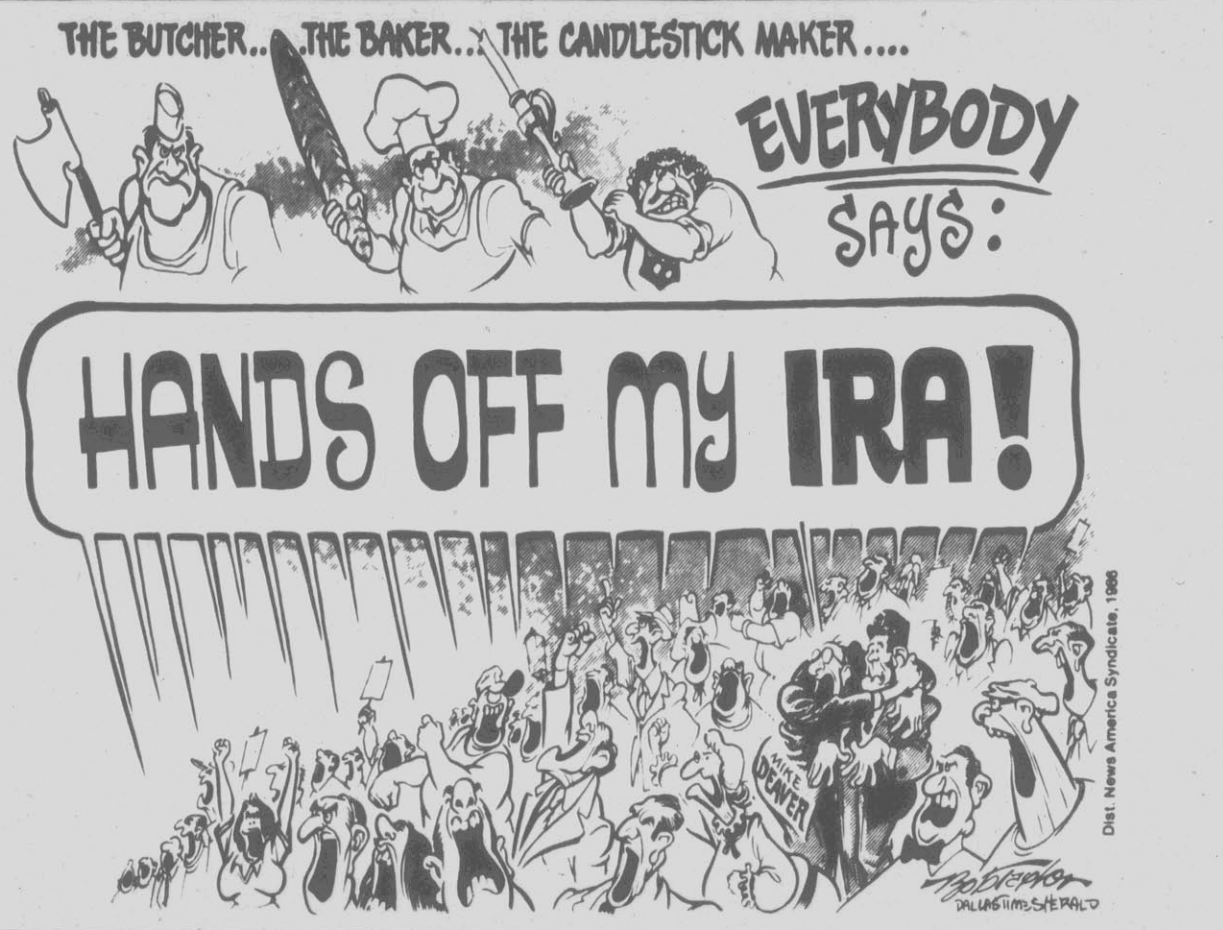

The ultimate was the name change for the Center for Disease Control. It is now the Centers for Disease Control.

Saying what you mean can involve the use of the word "funds." It is a high sounding word that seems remote from real values. Why not simply use money?

Funds are what the government spends. If it comes out of your pocket, it's money.

Some things are still stated simply. Your columnist bought a car recently and the color was listed as simply "brown."

"O" rings, the suspected failed part on recent rocket launches, is a simple description. It is not difficult to call up an image of a circular seal when the term is used.

'Round The Bush Again

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Supreme Court, bless its bold and reckless heart, took on one more religion case the other day. This one promises to be a lulu. The court is headed for a replay, more or less, of the famed Scopes trial of 1925 in Dayton, Tenn.

This is essentially the question the high court agreed to consider: May the state of Louisiana constitutionally direct its public school teachers to give equal time in their classrooms to conflicting theories of evolution and creation?

The case originated in 1981, when the state legislature passed a law titled the "Balanced Treatment for Creation-Science and Evolution-Science Act." The law does not require that teachers deal in any way "with the subject of the origin of man, life, the earth or the universe." However, if the subject is dealt with at all, teachers must gave "balanced treatment" to theories of creation and evolution, and neither theory must be put forward as proven scientific fact.

A group of Louisiana educators, religious leaders and parents of children in the public schools immediately challenged the act. They contended that the law was nothing more than an effort by Christian fundamentalists to write the Book of Genesis into the Code of Louisiana. A federal district court granted them summary judgment. The 5th U.S. Circuit affirmed by an 8-7 vote. From that decision Gov. Edwin Edwards has now appealed. The case will be argued in the October term and decided sometime in 1987.

Sponsors of the Balanced Treatment Act deny that their purpose is a manifestation of religion. They are concerned only with "academic freedom." They contend that theories of spontaneous creation are as scientifically valid as theories of evolution, and they have offered testimony of well-credentialed professors to that effect.

One such affidavit came from Dean H. Kenyon, a professor of biology at San Francisco State University. He earned his doctoral degree at Stanford. He has been teaching biochemistry and human biology for the past 20 years. "It is my professional opinion," he stated, "based on my original research, study and teaching, that creation-science is as scientific as evolution, although it currently does not have the volume of research that has been carried out under evolutionist presuppositions." He finds "substantial reasons" for doubting the truth of the theory of evolution, and he believes that "a scientifically sound creationist view is not only possible, but is to be preferred over the evolutionary view."

Eight judges of the 5th Circuit flatly disagreed. "Irrespective of whether it is fully supported by scientific evidence," said the majority, "the theory of creation is a religious belief." The Constitution forbids the states to promote a religious belief. The act therefore is unconstitutional.

Seven judges dissented. The fact that creationism is a religious belief does not preclude the possibility that the theory may also be scientifically true. The teaching of provisional truths provides a secular reason for the act. It is an abuse of judicial power to nullify a presumptively valid state law because of subjective ideas on "what must have been the true sentiment of the Louisiana legislature."

There the matter stands. In the view of the eight circuit judges, the Louisiana law "continues the battle William Jennings Bryan carried to his grave." In the view of the seven dissenters, the eight have things exactly backward: By forbidding the teaching of creationism, and thus effectively requiring the teaching of evolution only, the eight are stifling intellectual inquiry just as surely as Tennessee's long-ago law stifled inquiry by forbidding the teaching of evolution. John Scopes lives again!

It will be interesting to see what the Supreme Court does with the case. In recent years the high court has treated the establishment clause of the First Amendment as a kind of mulberry bush. The court has gone 'round and 'round, now approving a municipal creche in Pawtucket, now disapproving a "minute of silence" in the classrooms of Alabama. Louisiana's Balanced Treatment Act will take the court around the bush once more.

CIA Wants Leaks Stopped

WASHINGTON — At a very private dinner recently, CIA Director William Casey unlabored himself of his most agonizing concern: the possibility that U.S. leaks of covert CIA operations may have cost the lives of American allies in distant countries.

Casey did not say where, but those present think he meant Egypt. A secret U.S.-Egyptian collaboration was aimed several months ago at Libya's Moammar Khadafy. The day after that private dinner, Casey complained publicly that newspapers should be more careful and even suggested suing the press for covert leaks.

The director of Central Intelligence has no intention of suing. But his lament about leaks from Congress and disgruntled administration officials, putting allied lives at risk, is serious. That has led to tightening security screws throughout the administration and appeals for the same in the leak-prone Congress.

Although President Reagan's personal popularity rating ranges above 70 percent, he returned to Washington for his first closed-door breakfast meeting with Republican congressional leaders since the Tokyo summit to face one of his most negative receptions during five and a half years in office.

The stockpiled complaints by the GOP leaders ranged over many areas, but the general theme was a lack of White House planning on Capitol Hill. Specifically, they complained that the administration was getting into a box certain to lose the vote for Contra aid and had no strategy for dealing with trade legislation.

Many of the complaints concerned the upcoming vote on the president's veto of a bill banning missile sales to Saudi Arabia. Leaders grumbled that the administration had let the issue slip by without ever mounting a campaign for congressional support.

Some of Rep. Jack Kemp's closest Republican backers for the presidency in 1988 have quietly advised him to get a voice coach to improve his style on the political stump. Kemp is listening.

One strong Kemp supporter giving that advice is Rep. Henry Hyde of Illinois, who has the vocal agility of a master rhetorician. When Hyde and others suggested voice coaching, Kemp quickly agreed and actually has talked to one coach.

So far, however, he has not had time to start exercises. They are aimed at magnifying the strength of his vocal cords, lowering his normal pitch and learning to conserve "voice strength" for long days and nights on the stump.

Ambassador Philip Habib, President Reagan's special envoy to Central America now under fire by congressional Republicans, would have remained in retirement if former President Richard M. Nixon had his way.

Nixon quietly slipped word to the White House that his experience with the veteran career diplomat revealed a passion for coming to agreement with adversaries no matter what the cost. Supporters in both the administration and Congress of Contra freedom fighters in Nicaragaua tend to agree the ex-president is right.

In answer to complaints by Republican congressmen, Secretary of State George Shultz has reaffirmed that U.S. policy is to support the Contras to the end. That is nearly the opposite of what had been told them by Habib, who has pledged to disband the anti-communist guerrillas if the Managua regime signs the Contadora agreement.

Edward Rollins, national manager of the 1984 Reagan-Bush re-election campaign, is being wooed by Rep. Jack Kemp's forces but is committed to being on board a run for the 1988 nomination by Sen. Paul Laxalt — an effort Rollins believes will take place.

Rollins was an early backer of George Bush, but has been written out of the vice president's operation by his top political adviser, Lee Atwater (Rollins' deputy in the Reagan-Bush re-election). Rollins has become chummy with Kemp, but Laxalt has first call on him.

A footnote: Lew Lehrman, 1982 Republican nominee for governor of New York, has turned down an offer to become Kemp's full-time chairman but reaffirmed his support for the congressman. Lehrman's concerns of a few months ago that Kemp was not getting his campaign act together have been satisfied. However, he said his national chairmanship of Citzens for America does not permit him to relocate in Washington as Kemp's chief honcho.

Chernobyl Dims Gorbachev's Glow

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mikhail Gorbachev's unusual television report to the Soviet people reinforced his image as a new style leader but can't rekindle the glow lost in his 18 days of silence after the nuclear meltdown at Chernobyl.

The reaction by Gorbachev and his team "destroyed all the illusions of those people who hoped they were genuinely open; they were open until the crunch came," said Donald Shanor, a Soviet specialist at Columbia University.

Other experts disagree on whether Gorbachev's reaction to the crisis confirmed everything they always feared about the Soviet Union but hoped wasn't true.

Certainly it was unprecedented for a Soviet leader to go on television, give the accident's toll, discuss its cause, extend condolences to its victims and call for reforms on the way future accidents are reported.

The most troubling aspect of the way Soviet leaders handled the crisis, in the view of many Western observers, was their apparent disregard for the health of residents near the reactor and in neighboring areas and countries.

The disaster, in the eyes of many Kremlin-watchers, has helped confirm American stereotypes of the Soviet system:

—Low-level bureaucrats are fearful of informing their superiors about trouble;

—Soviet leaders are prone to blame problems on the West;

—The Soviet press is slow and incomplete in reporting bad news;

—Russians are secretive dealing among themselves and with foreigners;

—And the Soviet system is not advanced enough to be trusted with advanced technology, such as nuclear reactors.

Gorbachev swept into office 13 months ago as a fresh force. He launched a campaign to revitalize the country through draconian measures against corruption and drunkenness and coupled the effort with calls for greater candor.

Jerry Hough, a Duke University specialist in Soviet politics, saw the increasing flow of official information about Chernobyl and Gorbachev's television appearance as proof of a new style in the Kremlin.

"Soviet general secretaries do not appear before the people with reports on disasters or reports about anything," said Hough.

"Obviously, from an information point of view, they handled it badly the first two or three days," said Hough. "The question is: Is it simply the birth pangs of a new information policy or does it suggest that they didn't know what was going on for several days?"

Marshall Goldman, a Harvard University specialist on the Soviet economy, said Soviet stonewalling in the first days after the accident may stop Gorbachev's campaign dead in its tracks.

To the editor:

GWEN — Ground Wave Emergency Network — is not a term that most eastern North Carolinians know. Yet, in a matter of weeks, unless concerted action is taken, GWEN will be a reality, a fixture in our landscape.

GWEN is a Defense Department project whose purpose is simple, if sinister: to create a nationwide network of communications towers, each costing the taxpayer about $1.4 million, in order for the military to continue a nuclear war after the first exchange of nuclear weapons has occurred. The total cost for the project is estimated at between $6 billion and $10 billion. Note that this system has nothing to do with the deterrence or prevention of a nuclear war; it only becomes operational after the first strike — and the electro-magnetic pulse that follows it — has knocked out all normal communications channels. And GWEN is not the first such project. The military has at least three such systems in operation or projected. Are there no limits to redundancy, even for the Pentagon.

In short, GWEN makes the Unthinkable (nuclear war) more thinkable. The idea of a "protracted nuclear war" becomes more credible with GWEN, for with it second and third nuclear strikes can be communicated by commanders in airborne command centers or burrowed deep in concrete bunkers. What about the civilian survivors, if any? Well, their "Day After" will hopefully be mercifully short if they have a GWEN tower in their vicinity, for it is certain to be a primary target of any second nuclear strike on the United States.

GWEN, as someone noted, is no lady. There are worthy defense project, but GWEN isn't one.

A GWEN tower is currently sited for construction along Highway 17 between Vanceboro and New Bern, near the Antioch Church community. The land has been surveyed and construction is to begin this month!

Please contact your municipal and county officials. Urge them to schedule a hearing on GWEN as soon as possible.

To the editor:

About the beautiful oak trees that were laid to rest across from the Moose Lodge last week and written about in Tuesday's paper, I, too, was brokenhearted when I noticed what had happened to them when I passed by last Friday.

My family and I lived in the beautiful farm house behind those stately oaks for 10 years. From 1945 to 1955, my three children and the neighborhood children grew up playing ball, etc., under the shade of those trees. My late husband, Floyd Mills, farmed the land that is now under asphalt at West End Circle.

I was hoping those grand old oaks could have survived. What price progress does cost!

Truth

WASHINGTON — For years, official Washington has trodden warily on the issue of high-level Mexican involvement in the international drug trade. Now William Von Raab, the U.S. Customs commissioner, has broken rank, telling Congress in public testimony of the "massive official corruption up and down the ladder in Mexico." The guy has really put the U.S. on the spot.

But Uncle Sam's hands are far from clean when it comes to drugs and Mexico. The truth is that various American agencies have worked at cross purposes there for years.

Former federal officials involved in drug enforcement have confided that the Central Intelligence Agency supports a large number of influential Mexican military and political figures who have knowledge of or an interest in the drug trade. Such clandestine support is generally viewed as a necessary evil in the effort to maintain a stable government south of our border.

Needless to say, this tacit endorsement of the drug trade unavoidably places U.S. Customs and Drug Enforcement Administration officials in a "Catch-22" position.

When we confronted U.S. Ambassador to Mexico John Gavin about the conflict of interest last fall, he initially denied that any American officials were involved in such backdoor dealings. But then he changed his tone, begging to know our sources.

Gavin's successor isn't likely to have an easier time balancing U.S. strategic interests with a domestic American concern about curbing the import of cocaine, heroin and marijuana. With its energy-based economy devastated by the plunge in world oil prices, Mexico may be on the brink of calamity. Washington will be as eager to preserve the status quo in Mexico City as to dry up the seemingly bottomless well of "stuff."

Perhaps the U.S. government sees light at the end of the tunnel. It wants to increase aid to El Salvador by 20 percent, to $461 million, in fiscal 1987.

But El Salvador's U.S.-backed armed forces may be losing their edge in the war against the anti-government guerrilla group, the Frente Farabundo Marti de Liberacion Nacional (FMLN). Since January the Salvadoran army has engaged in two major operations: "Operation Phoenix," in which roughly 2,500 troops have tried to stamp out the FMLN presence on the strategically important Guazapa volcano north of San Salvador; and "Operation Ricardo Chavez Carreno," which has channeled 4,000 soldiers into rebel-controlled territories in Chalatenango Province to the south.

Shultz Drops Diplomatic Manners

WASHINGTON (AP) — Well-bred George Pratt Shultz is cultivating a tough-guy image, but Congress isn't cowering as the secretary of state tries to restore $5 billion in overseas program cuts.

In fact, House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Dante Fascell, D-Fla., is disappointed that Shultz did not enlist Republican support for a legislative maneuver to put $400 million back. Fascell quickly dropped the idea.

And the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Wednesday took $1 billion out of the $2.1 billion requested by the Reagan administration for the diplomatic security program over two years.

At the podium, and aboard his airplane, though, Shultz has been a tiger — the onetime Princeton blocking back and ex-Marine who apparently delights in thumbing his nose at Moammar Khadafy of Libya, denouncing those who find sociological causes for terrorism and in battling with Congress.

Casting aside his country-club manners, Shultz criticized the projected reductions in anti-terrorist and other programs as "a national tragedy" and said if American diplomats were killed in poorly protected embassies he would hold Congress responsible.

"One of these days, there'll be another tragedy at some embassy," Shultz said Sunday on his way home from 17 days in Asia. "Then, they'll come around and say you're derelict in your duty because all these people got killed, and I'm going to say I'm not derelict in my duty. You're derelict in your duty, because you wouldn't appropriate the money to provide for the security of people who are living constantly under threat."

He said he intended to spend a good part of the week trying to get the cuts restored. On Tuesday, Shultz was on Capitol Hill for an hour and a half, spending most of the time with Sen. Pete Domenici, the Republican from New Mexico who is chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

Then, on Wednesday, he took his charts to a reporters' luncheon and lectured Congress not to pinch pennies. After all, Shultz said, the State Department spends only four-tenths of 1 percent of the federal budget. "Are we willing to devote 2 cents of every dollar to our foreign policy goals?" he asked.

Apparently, Congress, operating under Gramm-Rudman strictures, isn't willing. President Reagan sought $22.6 billion for foreign aid, anti-terrorism, the Export-Import bank and dozens of other State Department programs. The Semate approved $14.2 billion in outlays for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

The House was stingier. It came up with $13.8 billion. The battle isn't over though, and Shultz says he is trying to increase the chances of restoring the cuts by "screaming about it."

Shultz knows about budgets, both the corporate variety and the government's. He has taught business to graduate students and run a major multinational construction firm. He was also Treasury secretary and a presidential economic adviser.

But that doesn't mean Shultz and Congress see government spending through the same lenses. The national debt stands at $2 trillion and the budget for this year is projected to exceed $200 billion, so Congress is inclined to be stingy.

Besides, Shultz might have hurt his cause a bit by his weekend of golf, tennis and swimming in Hawaii on his way home from Asia. Even the cheapest room at the luxury hotel where Shultz and his entourage stayed cost $180 a night. A small glass of grapefuit juice in the coffee shop went for $2.75.

Dozens of security men and a supporting staff of executive assistants and secretaries tagged along, at incalculable expense to the government. "I have to have a little rest once in a while," Shultz said. "So I take it."

Then there was the item in the newspaper a couple of weeks ago that the United States would spend $1.8 million this year to rent apartments for 45 members of the U.S. mission. Among the highest rentals is a three-bedroom apartment for Herbert S. Okun, the deputy chief delegate. The cost: $11,961 a month.

Gallup Poll

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — The use of auto seat belts has doubled in the last two years. Currently, a 52 percent majority of adults report having worn a seat belt the last time they rode in a car, twice the 25 percent incidence recorded in Gallup's 1984 audit and higher than last year's figure of 40 percent. As recently as 1982, only 17 percent used their seat belts.

Not coincidentally, 24 states and the District of Columbia now have mandatory seat-belt laws. At this time last year, only New York and New Jersey had compulsory seat-belt laws, while five additional states had enacted legislation that has since gone into effect.

The recent spate of seat-belt legislation doubtless reflects Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole's 1984 order requiring all new automobiles to be equipped with passive restraints, such as air bags or automatic seat belts, by 1989. The requirement would be waived if states with two-thirds of the U.S. population pass mandatory seat-belt laws by then.

Although states with mandatory seat-belt legislation report fewer traffic fatalities since their laws took effect, auto accidents remain the third leading cause of death in the United States, trailing only cancer and heart disease. More than 44,000 people die each year in auto accidents.

The latest Gallup Poll reveals a far higher level of reported seat-belt use by residents of states with compulsory seat-belt laws (58 percent) than by residents of other states (38 percent).

Although dramatic increases in seat-belt use since 1984 are recorded in all major population groups, marked differences remain. Persons who attended college and those from households in which the chief wage earner is employed in a white-collar occupation are considerably more likely than their counterparts to be seat-belt users. Similarly, Southerners (38 percent) continue to lag behind those from other regions (average 57 percent) in seat-belt use.

The latest results are based on in-person interviews with 1,552 adults, 18 and older, conducted in over 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period April 11-14. For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 3 percentage points in either direction.

In addition to sampling error, the reader should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.

Who's Running France?

PARIS — Who runs France these days — President Francois Mitterrand or Prime Minister Jacques Chirac? The French people are obviously not sure. For two months, France has been caught in a new and bizarre, two-headed political system with unclear lines of power. The system has no logic. It could even be dangerous. But if the polls are correct, it is also wildly popular.

For that reason alone, it may last. Neither Socialist Mitterrand nor right-wing Gaullist Chirac, their eyes on the next presidential elections, wants to be branded as the Grinch who brings it down.

The outside world got a glimpse of the confusion in Tokyo at the annual summit conference of industrialized nations. Where the other six nations were represented by one leader, France had two.

"France will speak in Tokyo with one voice as usual," a French government spokesman had said in advance, "even if at times this voice will come from two different mouths."

In Tokyo, outsiders were treated to the subtlety of Mitterrand and Chirac trying to outmaneuver each other even while insisting that the relationship — the French call it cohabitation — works.

Polls reveal the confusion: Asked recently who they believed was now the chief executive of France, 41 percent replied Chirac, 40 percent replied Mitterrand, and 19 percent said that they did not know. But, whoever is in charge, most French have good feelings about cohabitation — popularity ratings of both Mitterrand and Chirac have soared.

"The French like the situation," wrote journalist Noel-Jean Bergeroux in the weekly news magazine L'Express, "because it responds to the old dream of a reconciled country."

Confusion began in March when a conservative coalition wrested control of the National Assembly from the Socialists. For the first time, under the constitution written in 1958 to suit the late President Charles de Gaulle, France had a president and a premier of different ideologies.

Until then, the French president was looked on as an all-powerful figure who pulled a compliant prime minister around by the nose. A close reader of the constitution might have discovered that the prime minister was supposed to run the government. But de Gaulle never looked on his prime ministers as chiefs of government. No matter what the constitution said in small print, de Gaulle regarded himself as both chief of state and chief of government.

Until the March elections, no prime minister ever dared to run the government on his own. All previous prime ministers, including Chirac when he served under President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, knew that their party's parliamentary deputies would surely support the president in any confrontation.

But now the president no longer controls the parliament. Instead, a prime minister with a different political philosophy does. With this authority, Chirac is determined to run the government and France. He has worked hard to project the image of a man in charge.

There is little doubt that Mitterand's power has been shorn. Some of his aides at Elysee Palace report that their phones hardly ring any more. On most issues, Mitterrand's powers are largely negative: He can delay legislation, veto decrees, and, if he wants to use his ultimate weapon, dissolve the parliament.

On domestic issues, Mitterrand can thus butcher policy but not set it. Many French political scientists believe, however, that the constitution does grant the president considerable powers in the fields of foreign policy and defense.

Chirac does not agree entirely, and the first tensions of cohabitation have come in these fields. Both leaders, for example, have tried to claim responsibility for the French decision to bar American F-111 fighter-bombers from flying over France on their way to bomb Libya.

Chirac almost certainly hurt his image by overreaching at Tokyo.

Although most real power is obviously in the hands of Chirac these days, Mitterrand could in the long run win the battle of image during cohabitation. And image may count as much or more than real power in campaigns for the presidential election that must take place by 1988.

The tall, energetic, 53-year-old Chirac clearly wants to win the presidency and erase all doubt about who is the master of France. Mitterrand, who will be 71 in 1988, may not run for a second term but the chances of a Socialist candidate in the election depend on what happens during cohabitation.

All this makes for fascinating political times; the only problem is that it may be more interesting than logical. It also may harbor a potential for danger.

On defense matters, the constitution is ambiguous; the president commands the armed forces but the prime minister is responsible for national defense.

Many French analysts believe there would be quick consensus on defense in an emergency. Yet no one would have been astounded if Chirac and Mitterrand had disagreed on the request to allow U.S. planes over France. Who would have prevailed if they had disagreed? No one here seems to know.

TO THE CITIZENS OF PITT COUNTY:

I wish to thank all of the citizens of Pitt County who have supported me over the past fourteen years and especially those who have encouraged me to call for a run off election in the second primary for County Commissioner. However, after much though and deliberation, I have decided not to call for a second primary which places considerable cost on the taxpayers of Pitt County.

I have and will continue to try to do those things which will benefit the majority of the citizens of Pitt County during the balance of my term, and I wish my successor the best in making Pitt County an even greater place in which to live.

Sincerely,

Broyhill Attacks Are Defended By Congressional Club Official

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Major newspapers unfairly characterized the National Congressional Club's tactics as negative in the Republican U.S. Senate primary, a club official said Friday.

Carter Wrenn, executive director of the right-wing political action committee, said in an interview he had no regrets about the club's decision to make attacks on Rep. Jim Broyhill the focus of David Funderburk's campaign for the GOP nomination.

"I don't think the ads that were run were the problem," Wrenn said. "They were pretty truthful, issue-oriented ads. It was the way the newspapers kept calling them negative and untruthful, and ... we didn't have the time or money to prove (the newspaper accounts) wrong."

Wrenn said some the state's larger newspapers had a double standard in their editorial stands on campaign negativism.

After Broyhill defeated Funderburk and Terry Sanford won the Democratic nomination, "Broyhill said Sanford was a liberal, and Sanford attacked Broyhill a little, and the newspapers stood up and applauded," Wrenn said.

Broyhill, a 24-year congressional veteran, overwhelmingly won the GOP nomination in the May 6 primary, receiving 67 percent of the vote to 30 percent for Funderburk, former U.S. ambassador to Romania.

After the primary, Broyhill said his margin of victory was, in part, a repudiation of the Congressional Club's tactics. The club recruited Funderburk for the race and engineered his campaign.

Political observers predicted the defeat would lessen the club's influence in North Carolina politics and its in-state fund-raising prowess. They also said the loss would force club leaders to reassess their trademark strategy of basing campaigns more on attacking the opponent than building up the club-backed candidate.

But in interviews this week, few said they expected the club to alter its style significantly, noting that it had been successful in electing Sen. John East in 1980 and re-electing Sen. Jesse Helms in 1984.

"The club's got to have devils out there to attack so they can grab people's interest, make them emotional and persuade them to give money," said Ed Turlington, executive director of the state Democratic Party.

Merle Black, political science professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, said negative campaigning of one variety or another has always existed in democratic systems.

"In its proper perspective, it has its place," Black said. "What people object to in the club is that it tends to be too personal, too warped. They ...take issues out of context, in effect misrepresenting the way a person votes or acts."

Jack Hawke, director of planning in the state Department of Administration and manager of Gov. Jim Martin's 1984 campaign, said Wrenn had a point in his complaint about the press.

"Most media, state and nationally, tend to be much less than conservative and look more seriously at infractions by conservative organizations than liberal organizations," Hawke said. "It (negative campaigning) goes on on both sides."

Hawke said he prefers using negativism early in a campaign, but discarding it for a positive approach later. "Once you tell people why they shouldn't vote for your opponent, you have to come on strong telling them why they should vote for your man," he said. "I never saw the positive" in Funderburk's campaign.

Wrenn said he did not think voters who elected Broyhill were trying to punish the club or express disapproval with its tactics. "I don't think people get tired of hearing about issues and people's stands," he said.

But he said some voters might have been influenced by newspapers' criticisms of the club and Funderburk, and that in the future, the club may respond directly to press reports and expose what he called their bias and inaccuracy.

"It's just a variation of the big lie, the big smear technique," Wrenn said. "You know, who's not against negative campaigning? Everybody is. But newspapers never pointed out that there's nothing negative about (discussing) someone's stands on the issues. I don't think there was anything negative about (the Funderburk campaign)."

The Congressional Club, in a settlement announced Thursday, admitted it had violated election law in operating the club and Jefferson Marketing Inc., a club-connected advertising agency, as a single entity. The club agreed to pay a $10,000 fine and make changes in its organizational structure.

While the club apparently will have little or no role in Broyhill's campaign against Sanford, it will help raise money and support get-out-the-vote efforts this fall for Sens. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., and Steven Symms, R-Idaho, Wrenn said.

It also will begin gearing up for the 1988 presidential race, and will try to play a role in the nomination of a conservative Republican, he said, adding that the club had not decided whom to support.

Bush Addresses Warren Seniors

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

SWANNANOA, N.C. (AP) — Vice President George Bush congratulated America on its faith and free thinking Saturday and received in turn several letters from Warren Wilson College students written in lieu of demonstrations.

"I think they're honored to have the vice president here, but they don't want anyone to take it as an overwhelming endorsement of Republican Party politics," said Kern Geer, a spokeswoman for the liberal arts college where Bush gave a commencement address. She added that if commencement had been scheduled before most of the school's 500 students went home for the summer, "there might have been more of a demonstration."

Ms. Geer said students submitted eight letters expressing opinions on such topics as a nuclear weapons freeze, nuclear waste handling and policies in Central America and the Middle East. Bush said after the ceremony that he would read the letters.

Reuben Holden, college president, said seniors were told the letters would be more effective than protests.

"I said it would be a wonderful opportunity to get your opinions to the highest level of government," said Holden, whose wife, Elizabeth, is Bush's cousin.

Bush, at barbecue lunch for the 99 graduates, said he had been warned the campus had "a lot of independent thinkers."

"Nobody likes uniformity," he added. "Nobody expects, especially on a liberal arts campus, to find everybody thinks the way he does."

In his commencement address, Bush told graduates of the Presbyterian college that freedom hinges on the political participation of Americans of every faith.

"We are one nation under God," Bush said. "Americans of every communion should actively participate in the political process. The genius of diversity, of non-conformity, of personal commitment is part of our heritage."

Bush recalled his own graduation from Yale in 1948 and how he and his wife, Barbara, headed to west Texas in a red Studebaker.

"It was a different world than the one we live in now, but in a way it wasn't," Bush said. "Because we found in the years that followed that qualities like devotion to hard work, to our community, to our friends, to each other and faith in God — these were the qualities that you had to have if you were to take the good times and the bad times and build for your family and for the future."

It is faith that is missing amid all the pomp and power of the Soviet Union, Bush said, recalling recent funerals of Soviet leaders.

"At each one of these, the ceremony was absolutely magnificent," he said. "But ... there was no prayer, no tears, no faith and no appeal to God."

Bush said that while freedom is built on faith, church and state "must always be kept apart in the formal sense."

However, he said it is the diversity of faiths "that ultimately unites us in tolerance and respect for one another."

Bush, who last visited North Carolina two years ago, also was campaigning for the re-election of U.S. Rep. Bill Hendon, R-N.C., who will face Democratic challenger James McClure Clarke in November.

Singer Goes Home

RALEIGH (AP) — Singer Kate Smith has been released from Raleigh Community Hospital, where she had undergone surgery for breast cancer, according to a hospital spokesman.

Miss Smith was released at 3:10 p.m. Friday, a hospital spokesman said. Doctors had performed a mastectomy and removed a tumor from Miss Smith's left breast May 9.

Miss Smith, best known for her rendition of "God Bless America," has had a series of illnesses since 1976, when she lapsed into a four-month coma. She moved to Raleigh in 1979 to be near family members.

Baby's Condition Good As She Waits For Donor Heart

ASHEVILLE (AP) — A 3-week-old Yancey County infant awaiting a replacement for her damaged heart is in unusually good condition, considering the severity of her illness, officials at Memorial Mission Hospital say.

"Babies with this condition do dismally as a rule," Dr. Stan Dalton, an Asheville neonatologist, said of Jenna Hughes. "It's quite surprising that she's still alive — it says a lot for her spunk. Our goal at this time is to keep her in as good a condition as possible until a heart is found."

Officials said Saturday that Jenna, daughter of Randy and Carole Hughes of Green Mountain, was in critical but stable condition and was "holding her own" as the search for a potential donor continued.

Jenna was born April 26 with a heart defect that prevents the pumping of blood to her body through the left ventricle, but because she appeared normal at birth, the defect was not diagnosed until she was 4 days old.

Doctors immediately decided a transplant was necessary, and little more than a week later, she was accepted as a candidate for the procedure by Loma Linda University Medical Center in Loma Linda, Calif.

"We're still getting telephone calls from individuals and organizations across the country wanting to help," said Dalton. "We've just had no word on a donor heart."

The infant, who weighed slightly less than six pounds at birth, has lost about half a pound. But Dalton said he is not really disturbed by that because all babies tend to lose a few ounces during the first weeks of life.

"We've not been able to give her as much nutrition as we would like," he said. "Too much fluid taxes her lungs, and because her little heart is working really hard, she is burning calories."

He said Jenna is frequently sedated to keep her calm and to prevent further strain on her heart.

"When she's awake, she's very alert," Dalton said. "And she's still feisty. She's getting a lot of attention and I think it would be safe to say that everyone who has come in contact with her has just really grown to love her."

When a compatible donor is found, Loma Linda will send a transplant team to Asheville to transport Jenna to the California hospital.

Parachute Group Plans To Honor Village Citizens

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Residents of a small Normandy village who fought side-by-side with outnumbered Americans in World War II and later suffered heavy German reprisals will be honored in July for their efforts.

In early June 1944, about 170 American paratroopers from the 82nd Airborne Division's 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment landed in a swamp near Graignes. Villagers helped the soldiers retrieve weapons and ammunition from the swamp, protected them, fed them and tended the wounded while a German force estimated at 10 times that of the Americans amassed nearby.

After five days, the Germans attacked. American soldiers, with logistical assistance from the townspeople, repelled the Germans most of the day, but American ammunition ran out by nightfall, and the Germans moved in. French sources estimated they killed 500 to 1,000 Germans. Americans evacuated, with assistance from nearby families, in boats through the swamp.

Forty-four villagers were imprisoned by the Germans for collaborating with Americans, according to retired Lt. Col. E.R. "Pip" Reed, who uncovered details of the battle in 1984 during an observance of the 40th anniversary of D-Day. Sixty-six homes were destroyed and 139 damaged.

"We had no knowledge of the atrocities ... We didn't know the extent of the sacrifice of the inhabitants of that small village," said retired Col. Francis Naughton, of Norcross, Ga., who accompanied Reed in both the battle and the return to Normandy. "We did know — we had rumors — that some of our men had been murdered, those men that Pip and I had sent to the aid station during the fighting. All of this came out in stark simplicity ... two years ago."

Americans who returned in 1984 found a memorial had been dedicated in 1948. The shrine, made of remnants of the village's 12th century Roman Church, is dedicated to the memory of 32 Graignes citizens who died during and after the battle.

"It was quite a shock to us. We thought, 'Look what these people did for us, and we haven't said a thing to them in 40 years,' " Naughton said. "We just didn't realize the extent to which they sacrificed. That was just one battle in Normandy. We still had to fight the war. ... At the end of the war, it was blurred like a lot of other things that had taken place.

"We got back there and said, 'OK. This is what happened, and this is how they paid for it. Let's do something.' "

Reed, Naughton and other members of the 507th Parachute Infantry Association Graignes Memorial Committee circulated a stack of papers through command and diplomatic channels to gain recognition of the contributions of villagers.

The committee plans to return to Graignes on July 5 to present awards from the Department of Defense, the Department of the Army and the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment to survivors of the battle or their survivors.

Reed said the ceremony will include presentation of posthumous awards to family members of 32 Graignes citizens. The Department of the Army Certificates of Appreciation were presented to Reed at a Fort Bragg ceremony by Maj. Gen. John Foss, 82nd Airborne Division commander.

In addition, there will be two Department of Defense and nine Department of the Army medals presented, six posthumously. Also, there will be 40 certificates of appreciation from the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment — one for recognition of valor and courage, 10 or 12 for people who were at risk through recovering wounded and carrying ammunition and the rest to interpreters and people who were interviewed last year, Reed said.

Naughton describes what happened in Graignes as unique in U.S. involvement in World War II.

"To our knowledge, this is the first and only instance where French and Americans were ... acting side-by-side. They died together, and they were murdered together," he said. "Both sides had some of their numbers murdered."

"It is for this price paid and in gratitude for their unselfish and unwavering support" that the 507th wishes to honor the townspeople of Graignes, he said.

Leaders Give Thumbs Up To Pay Hikes Proposed By Gov. Martin

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin's proposal to give Council of State members a 20.4 percent pay raise had drawn approval from the high-ranking government officials, many of whom were making less than their employees.

Secretary of State Thad Eure said "it's ridiculous" that some employees who work for such people as the state treasurer and superintendent of public instruction get bigger paychecks than their bosses.

"I have in my office 15 members of my staff who are making more money than I am," Attorney General Lacy Thornburg said. "I think I certainly should be making as much as the people that are working for me."

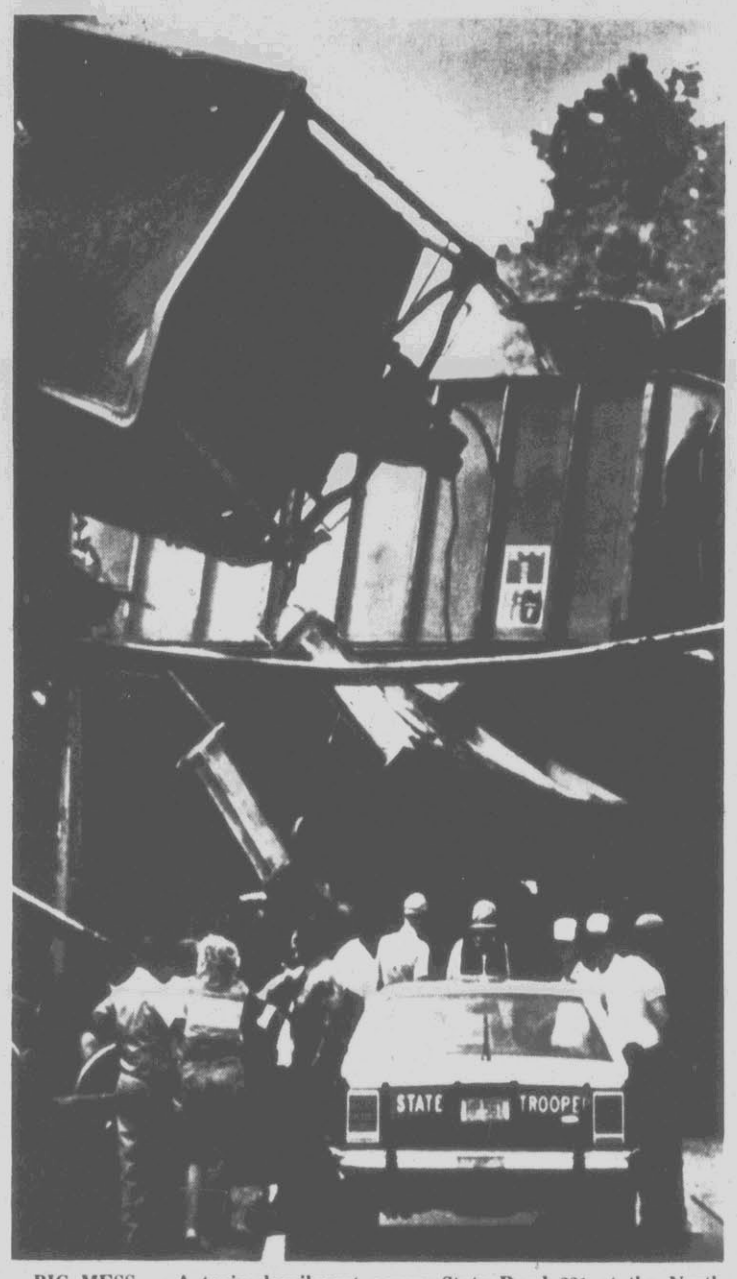

Martin last week proposed that the salaries for nine council members and his nine cabinet secretaries be raised from $58,140 to $70,000, while he recommended that rank-and-file state employees get a 3.2 percent raise.

"The members of the Council of State and the cabinet secretaries have responsibility for very large departments," Martin said in an interview. "The rate at which they are paid — and even with the raise that I've proposed — is far below what people are paid to run major operations like that.

"In fact, the level that I have proposed for them will be lower than 470 other state employees who don't have near the responsibility," he added.

Some state officials pointed out that Council of State members and cabinet secretaries aren't eligible for such benefits as longevity and merit pay or vacaction and sick leaves.

Insurance Commissioner Jim Long said he doesn't object to the raise, but added, "If I was a member of the General Assembly, I would be voting for a much higher pay raise for teachers and rank-and-file employees."

Hunt Supports Teacher Certification Plan

RALEIGH (AP) — A proposal for a nationwide system of certifying public school teachers has been endorsed in principle by former Gov. Jim Hunt, but some North Carolina educators say such a plan would face difficulties.

"For a national system to work would require at least one of two things," said Carl J. Dolce, dean of the School of Education at North Carolina State University, after the proposal was released by the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy. "One, the states would have to delegate their authority to such a certification process. That could be done by adopting the same standards (as the national board).

"Two, local school systems which do the hiring could give priority to those who are certified nationally. Unless one of those two conditions is present, it won't work."

In addition to the call for national certification, the proposal calls for sweeping changes in the way teachers are educated and the ways schools are structured. The report, "A Nation Prepared: Teachers for the 21st Century," also calls for teachers to be given much more authority in determining how schools are run.

Hunt, a member of the task force that prepared the report, argued that national certification was needed to ensure the public that only highly qualified individuals were being allowed to teach.

"Educators, county commissioners and citizens will then be able to have a high degree of confidence about who's in the classroom," Hunt said in an interview Wednesday. "With that confidence, the public will be willing to support considerably higher salaries for public school teachers."

Dolce also said many states possibly would not take part if standards were set so high that teachers had a difficult time qualifying. Others questioned whether national standards would be an improvement on state-based certification.

"I'm wondering what kind of improvement that would be over the current method we use to license teachers," said Eugene Causby, executive director of the North Carolina School Boards Association.

"Certification and performance ought to be closely linked, and performance would be hard to measure at the national level," he said. "And it could lead to a rigid, narrow national curriculum for all teachers. That may or may not be in the best interest of the profession."

"In general, we support the proposals," said Lee Monroe, senior education adviser to Gov. Jim Martin. But he said certification should remain a responsibility of individual states.

"Our position has been and will always continue to be that that's the state's role and the state's right," Monroe said. "In principle, we think it's up to the states to do that."

Barbara Tapscott of Burlington, vice chairman of the State Board of Education, said a national pay scale should accompany a national certification process for it to be successful. Without a national pay scale, she said she did not know whether she would favor the state participating in a national certification process.

"I am certainly for high standards, but we would need to look at it before we react," Ms. Tapscott said.

Fire Mop-Up Work Begins

HAMPSTEAD, N.C. (AP) — Scaled-down firefighting crews raked smoldering soil and kept an eye on weather forecasts Saturday, hoping rain would finally bank the embers of a forest fire that consumed 73,000 acres of woodland since May 5.

"It's very quiet today," said John Shepherd of the state Division of Forest Resources. "We're looking at another week to 10 days of maintaining the containment on the Pender County fire and continuing our mop-up work."

The southeastern North Carolina blaze was declared contained on Friday, but officials compared the blackened, organic soil with a charcoal in a backyard grill, waiting for a fresh breeze to blaze it to life.

Shepherd said the National Weather Service was calling for scattered showers in the area through Wednednesday.

"Maybe we'll get some long needed precip," he said.

Meanwhile, firefighting crews that once numbered more than 500 had dwindled to fewer than 200 and replacements were scheduled on Sunday for many of the planning and support personnel who kept pace with unpredictable winds last week.

The cause of the fire is still under investigation but arson is suspected, said Rebecca Richards, a division spokeswoman.

Despite the huge acreage burned, firefighters limited damage from the fire to two unoccupied buildings and there were few injuries beyond scratches and bruises suffered by workers at the scene.

Short Circuit Eyed In Ala. Nuke Fire

ATHENS, Ala. (AP) — A fire that destroyed one of six cooling towers at Tennessee Valley Authority's Browns Ferry Nuclear Plant most likely was caused by a short circuit in an electrical cable, a TVA official said Saturday.

Steven A. White, TVA's manager of nuclear power, said the federal utility plans a comprehensive technical investigation into the May 10 fire.

"Based on interviews with 20-25 people and on the data provided us by the (Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms) national response team, we have ruled out arson and any human action as causes of the fire," White said in a statement.

White said he asked that the ATF's national response team be sent to Browns Ferry to provide additional expertise to the six-member TVA team probing the fire. The ATF team is trained in arson and explosion investigations. "I am very impressed with the professional performance of the national response team of the ATF," White said. "They knew exactly what to do and they did it very effectively."

The 16-member ATF team gathered information from interviews, photographs and evidence collected from the fire scene and furnished its findings to the TVA investigation team, he said.

Astronaut McNair Buried With Full Military Honors

By BRUCE SMITH
Associated Press Writer

LAKE CITY, S.C. (AP) — As the mournful strains of "Taps" sounded and jets flew overhead, Challenger astronaut Ronald E. McNair was buried Saturday amid the fertile cotton and tobacco fields he worked as a youth.

About 200 people gathered under a hot midday sun at the Rest Lawn Cemetery as McNair, the nation's second black astronaut, was buried with full military honors.

McNair, a 35-year-old physicist, was one of seven astronauts who died when the space shuttle Challenger exploded shortly after liftoff from Cape Canaveral Jan. 28.

McNair was buried in a half-acre plot at one end of the cemetery, which is set among wide fields broken by stands of pine. A 21-gun salute sounded, a bugler played "Taps" and the American flag on the silver casket was folded and presented to McNair's widow, Cheryl, who was comforted by actress Cicely Tyson.

Overhead, four Air Force jets flew by in the missing man formation. The planes, only several hundred feet off the ground, flew in formation until they reached the gravesite, when one broke formation and flew skyward until it was lost in the clouds.

The gravesite was lined with the American flag, the South Carolina flag and a Christian Church flag. Members of McNair's Omega Psi Phi fraternity at North Carolina A&T State University sang the fraternity song as they gently swayed back and forth in the sunshine.

Earlier, during a 75-minute service at Wesley United Methodist Church, Ms. Tyson said man is reaching into the heavens in a universal effort to understand himself.

"Ron and his crewmates touched that height. They touched us. They touched the other side of the sky for us," she told about 300 people gathered in the tiny brick church.

Another 100 or so waited outside or watched on a large closed-circuit television in a church activity room.

"To realize how magnificently vast this universe is is to catch a scent of infinity," the actress said.

The Rev. Eliott Mason, who served as pastor of Trinity Baptist Church in Los Angeles when the McNairs lived there in the late 1970s, said, "Since that day, Jan. 28, we as a nation have been reaching out for each other's hands."

Mason also said, "God sent Ron into this world with a primary mission of being a model for youth ... especially for black youth who need such a model."

McNair picked cotton and tobacco as a youth in the fields surrounding Lake City, 50 miles west of Myrtle Beach.

His body was returned to South Carolina on Friday, when a memorial service was held at the Statehouse in Columbia.

Reagan Criticized

SEA ISLAND, Ga. (AP) — The Reagan administration is using the textile industry as a sacrificial lamb for its foreign policy, the president of the American Textile Manufacturers Institute said Friday.

"The U.S. government is using textiles and apparel as another form of foreign aid," said Dewey L. Trogdon, chief executive of Cone Mills in Greensboro, N.C. "This amounts to a subsidy to foreign manufacturers who allow working conditions that would be unlawful in this country."

HIGH POINT (AP) — Betty Grable, Farrah Fawcett, Marilyn Monroe and Jane Russell? Well, not exactly. But four High Point Regional Hospital nurses have something in common with the four Hollywood legends: They are poster girls.

Their faces will probably be plastered across the United States next spring: in theater display windows, in newspaper ads and on video cassette tapes.

"That's the first thing my kids said: 'You're going to be on the VCR cover,'" said Sue Perkins, one of the four nurses pictured in the still shots that will be used to promote "Critical Condition."

The fifth person in the promotional pictures is, of course, Richard Pryor, the star of "Critical Condition." The five posed for poster photos March 13, before movie filming began.

"When we were waiting for him, they told us not to run up and try to get his autograph," said Rita English, day supervisor of nurses. "So when he came in, we pretended he wasn't there," added Lynn Hawk, another emergency room nurse.

Ignoring the star until everything was ready wasn't the hardest thing the nurses had to do, although it wasn't easy. They were a little wide-eyed when Pryor walked over to meet them. Then they were told to hold that expression for the next five hours. That was the hard part.

In most of the pictures, the nurses wore masks and caps and gowns, said Vermell Rice, assistant department manager of the emergency room. So they had to make the most of their wide-eyed looks.

"They kept telling us to be animated, but for 20 minutes you can only hold an expression for so long," Ms. English said. "I'm a happy person, but I got tired of smiling."

The pictures were taken in the operating room of the old High Point Memorial Hospital.

"Lynn and I are suppposed to be acting real shocked because Richard Pryor is getting ready to operate on a patient, and he's holding a wrench in his hand," Mrs. Perkins said.

"I'm supposed to be in a sterile operating room, and I'm listening to a jam box," Ms. Hawk said.

"I'm blowing bubbles and filing my nails," Ms. English said.

"I'm holding a hamburger and french fries, a car-wash sponge and a flyswatter," Mrs. Rice said.

In the background, a fish swims in a bag of IV fluid, they said. Tom Thompson, a High Point sociologist, plays the patient in the promos.

The photography session lasted five hours, and there was so much laughter that crew members came to watch. So did the producer and director.

"When you laugh so much your jaws ache, that's how I felt," Mrs. Rice said.

"These people work hard for their money," Ms. Hawk said. "When we got back at the end of the day, I was wiped out."

Pryor was quiet and reserved "until they put him in front of a camera, and then he starts acting up," Ms. Hawk said.

The nurses were told they would be paid $35 apiece, but they got a bonus because of their performances and endurance. "We didn't get enough to buy a house, but we did get paid," Ms. English said.

Paramount has also promised each nurse one of the large posters. "I'm going to have mine framed and put it in my living room," said Ms. Hawk. "It'll make a nice conversation piece."

State AHA Association Endorses Ban On Smoking

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Cigarette smoking should be banned in North Carolina's public schools and banned or restricted in state buildings, the state chapter of the American Heart Association says.

At the chapter's annual meeting Friday, the board of directors also supported resolutions to promote "no smoking" educational programs in schools, to increase the state excise tax on cigarettes and to form a state health coalition promoting education and legislation to curb smoking.

"The aim of our coalition is to address the health concerns of tobacco use, by whatever means most effective," said Dr. Frederic R. Kahl, president of the state chapter and an associate professor of medicine at Bowman Gray School of Medicine. "Sometimes that means education, sometimes legislation, but often both."

The education programs target teen-agers and try to stop the smoking habit before it's established, he said. "If you can nip the habit in the bud, then you've gone a long way. But getting an adult to stop smoking is a bit more difficult, and there's a lower rate of success."

Kahl said school systems in Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem have instituted "no smoking" policies in the schools, but the punishments vary. In Greensboro, students who are caught smoking must attend a special class at a local hospital on smoking and their hearts, he said.

Smoking was banned in the Winston-Salem and Forsyth County schools in 1984, and other forms of tobacco on campus were banned this year. Punishment for offenders ranges from warnings to suspension.

The chapter sponsors a program called "Save a Sweetheart," in which students counsel other students about smoking and encourage them not to smoke.

Kahl said the effect the program "is pretty sketchy so far. That's obviously the $64,000 question."

The AHA would rather educate people on the hazards of smoking than force people to curtail smoking through legislation, Kahl said.

"We're not terribly familiar with legislative efforts, nor would we want to start a prohibition," he said. "We'd like to see the public recognize the hazards and then come to their own decisions."

Legislative efforts would include supporting bills to ban smoking in public schools and keep smoking in state buildings limited to break rooms, Kahl said.

Phased CP&L Rate Jump Is Favored

RALEIGH (AP) — A rate increase for Carolina Power & Light Co. to recover the costs of its $3.6 billion Shearon Harris Nuclear Plant should be phased in over two or more years rather than in just one step, the public staff of the state Utilities Commission says.

Even so, electric bills would increase by 15 percent to 20 percent in the first year, said Robert P. Gruber, executive director of the public staff, which represents consumers.

Such an increase would generate $180 million to $240 million in revenues for the power company, he said.

It will take years for CP&L to recoup the cost of the nuclear plant, 22 miles southwest of Raleigh, regardless of whether rates are increased in one phase or several. At issue is whether the company should be allowed to build the increase into its rates all at once.

The public staff asked the Utilities Commission to bar CP&L from seeking the entire increase associated with Shearon Harris in any request for a rate hike submitted to the commission before April 15, 1987. The company could seek the remainder of the Harris-related rate increase after that date, the Public Staff proposal said.

Under the public staff proposal, any increase allowed by the commission before next April 15 would be subject to a refund, with interest, pending an audit requested by the commission into how well CP&L managed construction of the plant.

Teamsters Boss Indicted On Racketeering Counts

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Teamsters Union President Jackie Presser was indicted on labor racketeering charges Friday, three days before seeking election to a five-year term as head of the nation's largest labor union. Presser declared that the government's case was constructed of "a house of cards."

A federal grand jury in Cleveland accused Presser of embezzling money from a union local there. It was the latest development in a topsy-turvy legal saga that began to unfold in 1982 when Labor Department strike force attorneys launched an investigation of a so-called "ghost-employee" payroll scheme at Local 507 in Cleveland.

In a related case, the Justice Department announced that an FBI agent was indicted Friday for making false statements that led to the collapse of the government's probe of Presser a year ago.

Chief spokesman Terry Eastland said the Justice Department was continuing an internal probe of any involvement by FBI agents in the Presser case.

From Las Vegas, Nev., where Presser, 59, was preparing for the convening Monday of the 23rd convention of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the president said:

"I welcome our day in court as an opportunity to put an end to what has been a five-year pattern of insinuations and leaks of false information."

"For five years," the statement said, "the federal government has attempted to build a case against me, but has succeeded in building nothing more substantial than a house of cards."

Ray McElhaney, an FBI spokesman, said the bureau would have no comment on the indictment of one of its agents. McElhaney said all inquiries were being handled by the Justice Department.

Presser is the fourth of the past five presidents of the Teamsters Union to be indicted, the most recent being Roy Lee Williams, now serving a prison term on a bribery conspiracy conviction.

Kenneth Paff, national organizer for Teamsters for a Democratic Union, a dissident faction, said the indictment "puts a cloud over the whole Teamsters union. If there is a silver lining in that cloud, it is that a number of local officers at the convention are going to say, 'We've had enough.'"

Among other things, the indictment seeks to force Presser to forfeit all eight of his union positions at the national, state and local level. Besides serving as president of the Teamsters, Presser has continued to serve as secretary-treasurer of the Cleveland local.

Presser was charged with two counts of labor racketeering, one count of embezzlement and two counts of filing false reports with the government.

Presser flew to Cleveland late Friday afternoon from Las Vegas and left the airport in a limousine for Cleveland. He and his Teamster codefendants were to make their initial court appearance Saturday morning before U.S. Magistrate Joseph W. Bartunek.

The Cleveland indictment charged that Presser, 59, paid money to "ghost" employees of Teamster Local 507 in Cleveland — people who actually performed no work for the union.

Presser's indictment came three days before the opening of a convention in Las Vegas, Nev. of the 1.6 million-member International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the nation's largest labor union and the lone major labor organization to endorse President Reagan's re-election candidacy in 1984.

Presser was to stand for the first time for election by Teamster delegates as head of the union; in April 1983, the Teamster's 21-member General Executive Board elected Presser to serve the rest of Williams' term on an interim basis.

Presser had close ties to the Reagan administration; he served as a top-level adviser in late 1980 on a presidential transition team set up in advance of Ronald Reagan's January 1981 inauguration.

In fact, Attorney General Edwin Meese III had disqualified himself from any involvement in the Justice Department's decision-making on whether to prosecute Presser. Meese has said that because he served as a White House counsel to Reagan before moving to the Justice Department, he wanted to avoid any appearance of conflict.

Presser all along had said he is innocent of any wrongdoing, and often had boasted that he'd never been indicted, even though he often had been under investigation by federal authorities.

The indictment returned by the grand jury in Cleveland said that in his role as secretary-treasurer of Cleveland Teamster Local 507, Presser made the payments to his uncle, Allen Friedman; and to John Nardi Jr., the son of a slain reputed Cleveland organized crime leader, and to a third ghost worker, George Argie.

According to the indictment, the defendants embezzled more than $700,000 during a 10-year period starting in 1972. The ghost employees received more than $700,000, which had been disbursed in checks co-signed by Presser, the government alleges.

The grand jury also indicted two Presser associates in the alleged payroll padding scheme. They are Harold Friedman, president of Local 507 and a member of the union's General Executive Board, and Anthony Hughes, recording secretary of the local. According to the indictment, Hughes and Harold Friedman paid $130,000 of the embezzled money to themselves.

Presser, Harold Friedman and Hughes also were charged with racketeering. Harold Friedman and Allen Friedman are not related.

The indictment alleged that from as early as Jan. 1, 1972 until at least Dec. 31, 1981, the three violated the federal anti-racketeering statute — the Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations law — by embezzling money from the local's rank-and-file in the alleged "ghost-worker" scheme.

Embezzlement of union funds carries a maximum sentence of five years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine. The racketeering counts carry a maximum sentence of 20 years imprisonment, a $25,000 fine and forfeiture of ill-gotten gains.

The indicted FBI agent, Robert Friedrick, a 13-year bureau veteran, was accused of falsely telling superiors at the Justice Department that several FBI agents had authorized Presser to make the payments.

Friedrick was accused of covering up the fact he had met in June 1985 with Presser, Presser's attorney, John R. Climaco, and Hughes to find a way to forestall an indictment of Presser.

The agent was accused of falsely telling his superior at the bureau and the parent Justice Department that he had authorized Presser to make the illegal "ghost worker" payments.

Services For Victims Of Climbing Accident In Ore. Began Saturday

By RICHARD GREEN
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — More than 200 friends and relatives jammed a church Saturday for the first of the funerals for nine climbers who died during an annual school outing on Mount Hood.

Erin O'Leary, a 15-year-old student of the Oregon Episcopal School, was remembered in the service at a small Roman Catholic church in a hilly, wooded section near downtown Portland.

The Rev. Joseph Hoffman told the mourners, including a schoolmate who safely made it off the mountain, to let their emotions go, rather than keep them bottled up.

Miss O'Leary had just performed the female lead in the school play and was preparing to go to Washington, D.C., for a national debating competition. She and another victim, Richard Haeder, had been running against each other for student body president.

A memorial was to be held later Saturday for Alison Litzenberger, 15, whose body was found with Miss O'Leary's at the foot of a cliff Wednesday morning, two days afer the mountain was enveloped by a savage snowstorm. The body of a boy was found at the top of the cliff.

Six more bodies and two survivors were found Thursday in a nearby cave, dug into the deep snow as a refuge from the blizzard.

The two teen-agers who lived through three days and three nights of bitter cold remained in critical but stable condition at Portland hospitals Saturday.

The condition of Giles Thompson 16, of Longview, Wash., had stabilized after treatment for bleeding from incisions made as doctors treated him, but he still required blood infusions every couple of hours, said Dr. Duane Bietz of Providence Medical Center.

Thompson will remain on kidney dialysis at least three weeks, Bietz said, and he still required a ventilator. But he said doctors were optimistic the boy would suffer no brain damage.

"He was much more active this morning. In fact, he had to be sedated," Bietz said, since doctors did not want him "to do a lot of thrashing."

Thompson's mother, Ann Holaday, issued a three-word statement: "We are hopeful."

The second survivor, Brinton Clark of Portland, was rescued on her 16th birthday, Emanuel Hospital officials said. She showed no signs of frostbite.

Bietz said the fact that the group did not have access to a stove and candles in their backpacks was a major factor in the deaths. Two members of the group who left Tuesday to seek help told searchers they could not find the packs after digging the snow cave.

"Boy, that would have made a big difference," Bietz said.

The nine deaths were the worst climbing disaster on Mount Hood since the first recorded death on the 11,235-foot mountain 90 years ago.

After a three-hour meeting Friday, Oregon Episcopal's board of trustees issued a statement supporting the school's wilderness program. The program requires sophomores to either climb the mountain 50 miles east of Portland or do 40 hours of community service.

"We are committed to our school and all of its goals, philosophy and curriculum, including our longstanding wilderness program," the board said.

A group of three adults and 15 students left Timberline Lodge at 2:30 a.m. Monday for what was to have been a one-day trip to the summit. Five of the students turned back later, complaining that they weren't feeling well.

Only a few feet from the summit, the group was halted by a blinding snowstorm. The climbers turned back and dug a snow cave to wait out the storm, which pushed temperatures to 50 below zero.

The group's 30-year-old guide, Ralph Summers, and 17-year-old Molly Schula walked through bad weather Tuesday to get help.

Summers said that although the group knew a front was approaching, the severity of the storm was not anticipated. He said the weather was fine when the climb began.

The mother of the Rev. Thomas Goman, the group's 42-year-old leader, said her son had been critical of a decision that had taken the school's climbing program out of his exclusive control.

"You need one person in charge that knows everything," Laverne Goman of Puyallup, Wash., told the Tacoma News-Tribune.

Goman's wife, Mar, told The Oregonian newspaper in Portland that, for some unexplained reason, "This is one of the first school climbs that Tom did not feel excited about."

Eastern Grounds 4 Planes

By JANET BRAUNSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines has voluntarily grounded four wide-body jets whose leased engines were rebuilt with foreign parts and lacked proper documentation, federal officials said Saturday.

Inadequate paperwork for four A-300 "Airbus" engines and one DC-10 engine was discovered during a routine inspection and reported to Eastern on Friday, said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Jack Barker in Atlanta.

The DC-10 engine later was cleared for use, Barker said, but Eastern was forced to delay use of the four other jets, in Miami, San Francisco, Atlanta and New York, until it obtains paperwork tracing the origin of parts and air-worthiness certification.

The jets were grounded as Eastern ignored an FAA deadline Friday for payment of a record $9.5 million fine for more than 78,000 safety violations, many involving record-keeping.

Jerry Cosley, Eastern's chief spokesman, said Saturday the Miami-based carrier is being made a scapegoat for national criticism of FAA performance. Cosley said Eastern prefers to let a civil court decide the dispute over the fine.

The FAA has asked the Justice Department to take Eastern to court and seek the full fine allowed by law of $1,000 per violation, or $78 million.

Saturday, Cosley repeated Eastern's contention that many of the reported violations were non-existent and that FAA inspectors departed from normal procedure for counting violations.

Barker said the discovery of the improperly documented engines was not related to the fine disagreement.

Eastern leased the engines instead of rebuilding and overhauling them in its own shops because recent FAA air-worthiness directives have slowed shop work with heavier-than-usual paperwork, Cosley said.

The spokesman also charged the paperwork provided with the A-300 engines previously was "accepted throughout the industry."

The grounding of the jets forced cancellation of two flights from Miami on Saturday but no further flights were likely to be scratched, Cosley said.

Eastern was returning two of the engines and obtaining further documentation on the other two, Barker said.

Meanwhile, the $676 million purchase of Eastern by Houston-based Texas Air Corp. neared completion.

Anti-competition objections to the merger were silenced by Pan American World Airways' $65 million purchase of airport landing rights and gate slots in the Northeast from Eastern and Texas Air subsidiary, New York Air.

The Justice Department has recommended quick approval of the merger, which will require no U.S. Department of Transportation hearings unless other objections are found to have merit.

TO: THE PEOPLE OF PITT COUNTY

FROM:

JIM YOUNG

Candidate for County Commissioner

Last week I announced my intention to participate in a run-off for Pitt County Commissioner. This was necessary in order to facilitate a thorough and objective assessment of the magnitude of support which could be assembled for this effort. I am gratified that overwhelming numbers of people from all segments of our community came forward to offer their assistance.

However, the decision to extend this election had to be based on many variables. I spent the past week attempting to objectively assess all these factors. It was a complicated and difficult decision. Yet, I elected to withdraw my request for a run-off.

One of the considerations was cost—both to candidates and to the county. It seemed unfair and excessive to put the county to the trouble and expense of holding another county-wide election in which less than 10% of the registered voters were likely to participate.

I wish to thank the people of Pitt County for this opportunity and experience. I especially wish to thank my Campaign Steering Committee for their loyalty and dedication in this endeavor.

I am proud of our initial campaign. It was issue-oriented and positive. Although I ran second, the campaign was successful in many respects. I remain committed to these issues, and will continue to look for opportunities to make positive contributions to the community in the years to come.

Teen Killed As Tornadoes Hit Arkansas, Texas

By The Associated Press

Waves of violent thunderstorms hammered western Arkansas and central Texas Saturday, spinning off tornadoes and killing a 14-year-old girl when a tree toppled by high winds slammed into her home as she slept.

In southeast Missouri, the National Guard patrolled streets in Sikeston and Vanduser as crews cleaned up after tornadoes and flash floods earlier in the week that left four people dead, one woman critically injured and caused millions of dollars in damage.

Tornadoes were spotted Saturday across central Texas, near Sparta, Ohio, and Ann Arbor, Mich.

In Killeen, Texas, a tornado hit the central business district, lifting the roof off a cement mixing company and damaging fire department vehicles across the street, officials said.

No injuries were reported.

A funnel cloud dropped down in front of the fire station shortly before 10:45 a.m., uprooting several trees and pulling down power lines, said fire Capt. Bill Cave.

Workers at the cement mixing company said they were using one of their mixers when they saw the twister and ran.

Four tornadoes were sighted elsewhere in central Texas, but no damage was reported.

In Fort Smith, Ark., rescuers spent more than three hours trying to lift the tree from the house where the girl was trapped inside, said police Sgt. Danny Honeycutt.

The winds knocked out power in Fort Smith, a city of 71,000 on the Oklahoma border, but Oklahoma Gas and Electric Co. crews had restored lights by midmorning, Honeycutt said.

In Hempstead County, in southwest Arkansas, an 87-year-old man was cut by flying glass when a possible tornado lifted his house from its foundation Friday night, state Trooper Tom Morrow said. The man was hospitalized for observation, Morrow said.

Im Missouri, officials from the Federal Emergency Management Agency arrived in Sikeston and Cape Girardeau on Saturday to begin assessing the damage from the tornadoes and flooding, placed by state officials at more than $100 million.

On Friday, Gov. John D. Ashcroft declared Scott and Cape Girardeau counties disaster areas after he visited the ravaged areas. The designation is the first step toward obtaining federal disaster relief funds.

In Cape Girardeau, the largest city in the county of the same name, floodwaters were "light-switch high," Ashcroft said.

At least 400 businesses had been damaged by the floods, said Robert Hendrix, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Nearly 7 inches of rain fell in the city Thursday night and early Friday. Most of the flood water had receded by Friday afternoon.

In Sikeston, about 30 miles south, hundreds of houses, trailers and buildings were damaged or destroyed and tiny communities nearby hit by the tornadoes.

Larry and Pat Carpenter picked through the rubble that had been their new home in Vanduser, a town of 320 people 10 miles north of Sikeston.

"It took a long time to build, but it didn't take long to destroy," Carpenter said.

An 87-year-old woman injured when her Vanduser home was struck by a tornado Thursday night remained in critical but stable condition Saturday in the intensive care unit at St. Francis Medical Center in Cape Girardeau with head injuries and multiple broken bones, officials said.

Three States Tell Firms Not To Solicit Money

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A company linked with political extremist Lyndon H. LaRouche has been barred in three states from fund-raising operations in which it had been persuading people to loan it thousands of dollars on the strength of promissory notes. The practice is under investigation in at least three more states.

Officials in Alaska, Maryland and Indiana have issued administrative cease-and-desist orders against Caucus Distributors Inc. after citizens complained that loans they made to Caucus had not been repaid or that interest was overdue.

Securities officials in three other states — Minnesota, Illinois and Washington — said they are investigating complaints against Caucus. The complaints involve the sale of unregistered promisory notes, often to elderly people.

"They prey on elderly people," said Larry Carroll, senior securities examiner for the Alaska Department of Commerce and Economic Development. "... I think it's pretty clear that the elderly are the target group."

In the three states where cease-and-desist orders have been issued, officials found that the promissory notes issued by the company were considered securities subject to state regulation.

Securities and Exchange Commission spokesman Chiles Larson said he could not comment on whether the SEC was investigating activities by Caucus Distributors.

Christina Huth, a spokeswoman for LaRouche, declined to comment about the state cases. Patrick J. Moran, a lawyer for Caucus Distributors in the cases, said the company contends the promissory notes weren't securities and, therefore, not subject to regulation.

"They are probably more accurately phrased as 'evidence of indebtedness,'" he said. "They don't constitute a security."

Moran, who has offices in Houston and Washington, also said there was "a fairly coordinated effort by state securities administrators to go after people affiliated with Lyndon LaRouche." He said he is asking for hearings in each of the states and will further contest the charges.

Among the complaints:

—A 78-year-old Homer, Alaska man said he made $45,000 in two loans to the company and about $5,000 in other contributions. His request for repayment of one of the notes has been ignored and interest has not been paid in full, he says. Officials learned of the man's situation when he tried to mortgage his house, with the intention of loaning more money to the company.

—A 79-year-old Maryland woman told state officials that she made two loans totaling $100,000 to Caucus and has been unable to get Caucus to release financial statements. She has asked for her money but has not received it.

—An Indiana man complained to state officials that Caucus Distributors did not repay two notes totaling $8,000 when they became due.

Caucus Distributors, a non-profit corporation, is among several LaRouche-related organizations under investigation for possible credit card fraud by a federal grand jury in Boston, according to court documents. In a court brief, federal prosecutors said Caucus "pays the salaries and bills for various LaRouche activities."

In Alaska, securities administrator Willis F. Kirkpatrick last month signed a temporary order to cease and desist, naming Caucus Distributors and three of its agents based in Seattle after investigating $45,000 in loans solicited from Joseph R. Drew, the 78-year-old man from Homer, Alaska.

In an affidavit filed with the state Department of Commerce, Drew said that at the urging of a Caucus Distributors representative he made out two checks for $1,000 each to two sets of initials.

The checks were made out to "TLC" and "IDL", and were endorsed by two of LaRouche's presidential campaign committees: The LaRouche Committee and Independent Democrats for LaRouche. In his affidavit, Drew said, "I do not know what the initials stand for."

Asked in an interview if he had intended to make a political contribution to LaRouche, he said, "No, I don't think so."

Drew, a retired construction worker who said he lives on $471 a month in Social Security and a state pension, said he was offered 10 percent interest, more than he was drawing in bank deposits. He said he is owed $1,800 in unpaid interest.

Carroll said when Drew asked the company to repay one note for $5,000 under a provision in the note providing for repayment in event of an emergency, a Caucus representative urged him to take out a $25,000 loan against his house, keep $5,000 and send the rest to Caucus.

In Maryland, state Securities Commissioner Susan Merrick Rittenhouse signed an order in March after a woman said she wrote three checks totaling $100,000 to Caucus and received two promissory notes at rates of 12 percent and 12.8 percent a year last summer.

News Leak Costs Speech Writer His Job

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz fired a State Department speech writer Friday for leaking to the news media a cable written by the U.S. ambassador to Argentina.

State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman announced the firing but would not disclose the name of the employee, the news agency which received the leak or the nature of the material leaked.

However, administration and congressional sources, speaking on the condition that they not be identified, said the fired speech writer was Spencer C. Warren, who worked in the State Department's office of policy planning.

The incident involved a classified cable sent by ambassador Frank Ortiz to the State Department and leaked to the Washington Post, the sources said.

Warren was described as a conservative political appointee who worked on Capitol Hill before joining the State Department. The 1982 Congressional Staff Directory listed Warren as the legislative counsel to Rep. Matthew Rinaldo, R-N.J.

At the State Department's daily briefing, Redman would only say that the leak involved diplomatic relations and not military secrets and that the official found to be responsible had a personnel classification of GS-15, a ranking that carries an annual salary of between $52,000 and $67,000.

Warren was in the State Department Friday morning. But his secretary, asked about his whereabouts in the afternoon, said he was gone for the day. Calls to Warren's home in Washington went unanswered.

Redman said the incident was referred to the Justice Department, which decided to take no action against the employee. He also said the official apologized to Shultz. The department is authorized by presidential directive to administer a lie detector test, but none was given in this case.

"We regret that because of this transgression the department is losing an otherwise productive and trustworthy employee," Redman said. "But we believe that leaking of classified information is a serious breach of discipline required of all public servants."

For several weeks, Reagan administration leaders have been making tough statements about people who disclose secret information. Shultz, for example, said in a speech to the Overseas Writer's Club earlier this week that leaks have become "a gusher."

"It's disgusting the way stuff leaks out, and we've got to find the people who are doing it and fire them," he said.

The leak in question centers on a cable Ortiz sent to the State Department which was leaked to the Washington Post.

Redman said State Department employees had left the agency before because of unauthorized disclosures, but he could not recall the last time there had been a public announcement of someone being fired.

In April, the Defense Department reportedly dismissed a senior official on after the Washington Post printed an article about covert U.S. action in Angola and Afghanistan.

Pentagon officials were quoted as saying Michael E. Pillsbury, Assistant Under Secretary for policy planning, failed to pass a lie-detector test about Post stories on Stinger anti-aircraft missiles being provided to rebels supported by the United States.

Since then, William J. Casey, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, has said he has discussed with Justice Department staff members the possibility of prosecuting news organizations that publish secret intelligence information.

In his speech to the Overseas Writers Club on Wednesday, Shultz said "we've lost all sense of discipline. It didn't used to be this way, whether you're talking about people in the government or people outside the government. There used to be a lot more restraint on the part of the press on what they would run and print or publish, and when they would do it."

Skin Cancer Taken Off Bush's Face

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The most common and easily curable form of skin cancer was removed from Vice President George Bush's left cheek Thursday, his office announced on Saturday.

"The vice president is in excellent health and there was nothing remarkable about the procedure," Bush spokesman Marlin Fitzwater in a statement.

President Reagan and his wife Nancy have had similar skin cancers removed from their faces.

Fitzwater said the basal cell carcinoma was discovered during a routine physical examination several weeks ago and was removed Thursday afternoon by doctors at the Bethesda Naval Hospital in suburban Maryland.

"This most common form of skin cancer was removed in total under local anesthestic," Fitzwater said.

A statement issued by Bush's office did not specify the location of the basal cell carcinoma. But Fitzwater said the cancer was removed from Bush's lower left cheek, pointing to a spot about an inch from his mouth.

The spokesman said the vice president, an avid boater, fisherman, tennis player and golfer, has been warned by his doctors to stay out of the sun.

"The sun was judged to be the reason," for the skin cancer, Fitzwater said.

The vice president delivered a commencement address Saturday at Warren-Wilson College near Asheville, N.C., and was not wearing a bandage on his face. Fitzwater had explained that an announcement about Bush's procedure was made to reporters because the vice president would be wearing a bandage in public.

Last August, Reagan had a basal cell carcinoma removed from the right side of his nose. Another skin cancer was removed from the same area in October. In January, a sample of skin was taken from a bump on his nose and subsequently pronounced non-cancerous.

In July 1985, Reagan underwent successful colon cancer surgery, but there was no relation between the skin cancer and colon cancer.

Mrs. Reagan had a skin cancer removed from her lip in December 1982.

Reagan, sharing lunch with members of the military in honor of Armed Forces Day, indicated Saturday that he wasn't worried about such irritants.

"That's the same little thing they picked off my nose ... and I'm just fine," Reagan told reporters.

Reagan Upset With House For OK'ing 'Inadequate' Military Budget Package

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

ARLINGTON, Va. (AP) — President Reagan accused the House on Saturday of trifling with national security by approving a "wholly inadequate" military budget that will send a signal of weakness to the Soviet Union.

Reagan, celebrating Armed Forces Day by sharing a chow line with enlisted men and women, delivered his weekly radio address before the meal at the Fort Myer garrison near Arlington National Cemetery.

"The House of Representatives recently passed a military budget that is wholly inadequate, a throwback to the '70s, a budget that is a breach of faith with our armed forces and our allies, and would send exactly the wrong signal to the Soviets and their satellites," Reagan said.

Brushing aside Reagan's repeated warnings that it was taking unacceptable risks with the nation's security, the House voted 245-179 on Thursday to approve a 1987 fiscal year budget that would cut $35 billion from his Pentagon spending request.

Reagan predicted that those who supported the House plan to slash his $320 billion military spending request to $285 billion will feel the voters' wrath in November.

"Time after time in the post-war era the American people have made it clear that those who trifle with our national security and oppose adequate military budgets will be held responsible on Election Day," he said.

Those who are committed to a strong national defense will not put the lives of U.S. military men and women in danger, Reagan said.

Lauding the sacrifices made by the nation's military, Reagan also praised the two pilots who were downed during the recent bombing of Libya.

"We owe a great debt to those on freedom's first line of defense, men like Capt. (Paul) Lorence and Capt. (Fernando) Ribas-Dominicci, Air Force pilots who recently lost their lives in the raid on Libyan terrorists. We honor them today and all the members of freedom's honor guard," Reagan said.

Fort Myer is the home of the 3rd U.S. Infantry. It is the garrison for the Old Guard, the military unit that acts as the president's honor guard and participates in the colorful White House military reviews during the visits of foreign leaders.

After his five-minute address, Reagan told the crowd, "I'm hungry too," and entered a chow line at one side of the Tri-Service dining room at the military garrison.

As Reagan emerged from the chow line, he was asked how he was going to push his defense budget through a recalcitrant Congress.

"I have not yet begun to fight," quipped Reagan.

Reagan chose a lunch of roast beef, baked potato, green salad with Italian dressing, apple pie and iced tea, and then headed towards a seat in the middle of one of the long tables in the dining hall.

As soon as he sat down among the enlisted personnel, Reagan began talking and gesturing, evoking laughs and smiles from the group of young men and women. Reagan spent just a little over an hour at the garrison.

According to Courtenay Welton, a public affairs specialist for the military district of Washington, the president sat between Airman 1st Class Sheri L. Heck, of Boulder, Colo., and Sgt. Leighton T. Henderson, of Long Beach, Calif.

Seated across from the president were: Navy Seaman Stanley R. Thompson, of Riverside, Calif., Coast Guard Seaman Andreas B. Weiger, of St. Augustine, Fla., Spec. 4th Class Evelyn E. Hoke, of Brandon, Fla., and Marine Lance Cpl. David S. Lis, of Chicago, Welton said.

Housing Starts Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing construction shot up 4.1 percent in April as the lowest mortgage rates of this decade kept the building boom going, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that new homes and apartments were started at an annual rate of 2.01 million units last month.

It marked the fourth consecutive month that starts have been above the 1.9-million mark, the longest stretch of such high activity since 1978.

The new report provided further evidence of the housing boom.

Sales of new single-family homes had soared 27.4 percent in March to the highest level ever recorded at the same time sales of existing homes have broken through the 3-million-mark.

The strong activity has been a result of big declines in mortgage interest rates, which have pushed fixed-rate loans below 10 percent for the first time this decade.

The 4.1 percent rise in home building in April followed a revised 3.5 percent decline in March.

The strength came in construction of both single-family homes and multi-family units. Single-family construction climbed to 1.26 million units, a gain of 4.1 percent over March.

Construction of duplexes and apartments rose to an annual rate of 753,000 units, up 4.1 percent from March when this segment had suffered a 9.5 percent decline.

Costly Flying Reptile Model Soars, Then Flops

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. (AP) — The giant pterodactyl, a flying reptile, died with the dinosaurs 65 million years ago. It didn't fare so well Saturday either, trying to make a comeback in a year of space failures.

A one-of-a-kind, 44-pound, radio controlled, motorized, fur-covered replica with 18-foot-long fierce flapping wings, a heart of nickel cadmium batteries and a pricetag of $700,000 was making its public debut.

It was towed swiftly down a flight line often used by President Reagan, rose dramatically 600 feet into the morning sky and, when left to solo, did a couple of agonized turns and headed straight for the ground. A blue parachute popped out, alas too late.

There was not even an awk.

"Now we know what happened to the dinosaur," said an Air Force colonel who didn't stay around long enough for his name to go into books of great quotations.

Like the failures of the space shuttle, and the Titan and Delta rockets earlier in the year, the event took place in front of news cameras. They had been poised to record the modern-day gliding and soaring of quetzalcoatlus northropi, one of a group of flying reptiles termed pterosaurs.

The pterosaurs were distantly related to the dinosaurs and the group to which quetzalcoatlus belonged are known as pterodactyls. The fossilized bones of quetzalcoatlus were found in the Big Bend National Park in west Texas in 1972.

For the first public demonstration, there was a successful dress rehearsal with a dummy pterodactyl earlier Saturday. Then the Air Force decided the 100 or more photographers were too close and moved them back 500 feet. And only then did the reptile begin to move.

Its free flight was to have lasted two or three minutes. It was about that many seconds. From rollout to crash, only 45 seconds expired. A crowd, expected to number up to three quarter of a million later in the day, was at Andrews for an air show to mark Armed Services Day but probably could see little of the dinaflop which was at least a half mile away.

Paul MacCready, who built the "Gossamer Condor," — the first sustained, controlled flight by a heavier-than aircraft powered solely by its pilot's muscles, was commissioned by the Smithsonian Institution to recreate the pterodactyl for a large screen film, "On the Wing," that opens June 20.

It did its thing earlier this year successfully filling MacCready's instructions that the creature fly realistically, propelling itself by wing flapping; that it be fully controllable in normal flying conditions and that it use an electric power system that would allow a few minutes of powered flight.

The reptile, loaded with sensors and 13 "muscles" connected to a computer, is "sophisticated by airplane standards, crude by nature's standards," he said before the flight. "It's a temperamental, overweight adolescent actor, with draggy hair."

Like the original, the replica has no tail — but to get it into the air, a drop-off rudder had to be affixed. When the rudder and the tow line were let go, the pterodactyl did its swan dive.

"The head, which controls the yaw, seemed to deflect in the right turn so it acted like a speed brake slowing it down," said Steve Fitch, technical manager for the Air and Space Museum.

On the ground, the replica looked like a headless turkey. The head was severed from the neck. MacCready and his crew said they could put it together again and the Smithsonian said it would have an honored place in the museum.

It was the 32nd flight for the strange creature, which has three claws on each wing. It had crashed before only to rise again.

Except for embarrassment, no harm was done.

"Our sole focus was to make it suitable for the film," said Professor Wann Langston of the University of Texas, who was the project's paleontological adviser.

FLIGHT AFTERMATH — A headless model of a giant pterodactyl is surrounded on the ground at Andrews Air Force Base Saturday. The model, built for a movie for the Smithsonian Institution's Air and Space Museum, dropped from the sky during its maiden public flight and lost its head on impact with the ground. (AP Laserphoto)

Marcos Followers Insist Pro Aquino U.S. Forced Leader To Give Up Power

By HENRY GOTTLIEB
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the history of Ferdinand E. Marcos' 20 years of rule in the Philippines is written, the climactic chapter could be the story of his flight from the besieged presidential palace on the night of Feb. 25, 1986.

In the past few weeks, Marcos supporters in the Philippines have suggested that he was spirited from power against his will by an American government eager to get him out of the country so it could pass the reins of power to Corazon Aquino.

Demonstrators camped on the lawn of the U.S. embassy in Manilla for two weeks in April, accusing the United States of having kidnapped the former president.

Marcos, who continues to call himself the legitimate president of the Philippines, has expressed bitterness about the way he was treated when he departed.

In an interview on ABC's "Nightline" last month, Marcos said of the Americans who escorted him from Manila: "They never told me that they would take me out of the country."

What happened that night at the Malacanang Palace and later at Clark Air Force Base, before Marcos flew to Guam and exile in the United States?

By all accounts, Marcos had made up his mind to leave the palace by midday on Feb. 25. Opposition to his presidency, growing since a disputed election earlier that month, had blossomed into a revolt by military leaders. Mass demonstrations threatened to overrun Marcos' residence.

According to the official U.S. account, given to reporters a few days after Marcos' downfall, his first request was to return to his home in Laoag Ilocos Norte.

That request, however, was rejected by Mrs. Aquino, who had been recognized as president by the military leaders.

A Reagan administration official said the intermediary in discussions with Marcos was Air Force Brig. Gen. Theodore Allen, chief of the joint U.S.-Philippine military assistance group.

Allen and Marcos worked out a plan under which the departing president would go to his home province "for a day or two to show his supporters he was not deserting them," and then depart the country, said the official, speaking on condition he not be identified.

At about 9:30 p.m., Marcos was lifted by helicopter to Clark Air Base on the outskirts of Manila. The former president was suffering from a fever and went immediately to bed in quarters established for him at the base, the official said.

Meanwhile, news of Marcos' departure from the palace had become widespread and it became known he had been taken to Clark.

The official said that later that night Allen received two important messages. One was from security officials at the base who expressed concern about demonstrations against Marcos getting out of hand.

The other was from Mrs. Aquino, demanding to know why Marcos was still in the country, the official said.

Mrs. Aquino was told about the plan to take Marcos to Laoug. She vetoed the idea, the official said. Now, Allen had to go to Marcos' top aides to tell them about the change of itinerary.

They went into the bedroom where Marcos had been sleeping and came out a half-hour later and said, "OK," according to the official. At dawn, Marcos and an entourage of some 80 followers left for Guam.

In his interview, with ABC's Ted Koppel, Marcos gave a similar account, though it portrays him as a victim of U.S. might.

He said of the general, "He came to me and said he would like to see to it that I am secure, and I told him I'll be secure if you bring me to Laoug. And there was no other comment except that early in the morning of the 26th he woke us up and said the order is for you to go to Guam.

"And I said, 'But how about Laoug? That's where we are supposed to go.'

"The situation was that there was no way of arguing our way out of the situation." Marcos added.

He also said that a .357-caliber Magnum pistol and another small-caliber revolver had been taken away from him.

If Marcos was forced to come to the United States, he certainly made no complaint about it when he first arrived.

When he landed in Hawaii on Feb. 26 he met for an hour with the state's governor, George R. Ariyoshi. Then Ariyoshi gave a news conference.

Panic By Chernobyl Workers Acknowledged; Reactor Cools

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet media reported for the first time Saturday that some workers at the Chernobyl nuclear reactor panicked and deserted during the accident. A deputy premier, meanwhile, said the reactor temperature was cooling rapidly.

"We are calm today, and confident there will be no relapse, or any increase in temperature," Deputy Premier Ivan Silaev said in a television interview.

Silaev said the reactor was 392 degrees Fahrenheit. It was reported at 572 degrees eight days ago.

He also said he had just come from the Chernobyl plant and that he saw miners tunneling under it to make a shaft that will be filled with concrete to prevent radiation from seeping into the ground.

Silaev emphasized "the heroism of our Soviet man" toiling to clean up after the April 26 explosion and fire in the reactor, 80 miles north of Kiev in the Ukraine.

By contrast, the weekly magazine Ogonyek quoted Grigory Revenko, head of the Communist Party in the Kiev region, as saying that "there were cases of people deserting, panicking and trying to pin the blame on others" after the accident.

"A sharp examination of each individual is being carried out," he said. "We have already got rid of a few people, including people in leadership positions. They have parted with their party (membership) tickets, these people got into the party by chance, and they couldn't even withstand the first test."

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda reported Monday that three party members were punished for underestimating the scope of the accident and bungling the subsequent evacuation of nearby residents. However, it did not accuse the men of deserting their posts.

The youth newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda said Saturday that Yuri Zagalsky, a construction worker at the reactor and a leader of the Communist Party's youth branch, Komsomol, disappeared on the night of the accident and did not appear for days afterwards.

"He didn't help at the work camp (set up for evacuees)," it said. "He was busy with personal matters."

Zagalsky was dismissed from his post in the Komsomol and probably will be expelled, the paper said. Komsomol membership is a vital stepping stone to membership in the regular party, which in turn can bring career promotion and perks, such as the right to shop in special stores.

The paper said Galina Lupiy, a Komsomol member in charge of the plant's food department, panicked and went to stay with relatives. It said she had to be summoned back by telegram nine days later, but did not say if she was being punished.

Of the three party members Pravda earlier said were punished, one was expelled from the party and the two others were given official reprimands. The paper said they may face criminal prosecution.

Also Saturday, Lev P. Feoktistov, a scientist and deputy director of the State Committee on the Use of Atomic Energy, appeared on a current affairs television program, "Studio Nine," and gave Soviet viewers their first detailed report on radiation released by the accident.

Feoktistov said the accident's effects could not be compared to those of a nuclear bomb, and insisted that radiation levels were not dangerous in Kiev, the Soviet Union's third largest city with 2.4 million residents.

An American doctor who was treating victims of the accident indicated Friday that 13 people had died, including two killed in the initial explosion and 11 who later died of radiation exposure. He said that altogether 299 people were hospitalized with injuries.

Dr. Robert Gale of the University of California at Los Angeles returned home late Friday but said he planned to return soon to the Soviet Union. He refused to elaborate on his plans.

"We believe we can rescue a substantial number (of victims)," Gale told reporters at the Los Angeles airport.

Feoktistov's appearance on Soviet television, in which he discussed nuclear power technology and the accident's effects, seemed intended to calm Soviet citizens, who generally are less aware than Westerners of the dangers of low-level radiation and are not accustomed to public discussion of domestic accidents.

Feoktistov conveyed how surprised top Soviet scientists were by the accident and its aftermath.

Asked by commentator Alexander Bovin what he would have thought before the accident if someone had described such a series of events, Feoktistov replied, "I would have thought it was completely incredible."

A completely incredible event."

He said it may take a long time to determine the exact cause.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said Wednesday night in a television speech that the accident began with a power surge and a sudden buildup of hydrogen as the No. 4 reactor was being shut down for routine maintenance.

Hans Blix, director of the U.N.-affiliated International Atomic Energy Agency, was quoted Saturday by the Czechoslovak Communist Party as saying his organization would analyze the disaster, as it did with the accident at the Three Mile Island reactor in Pennsylvania in 1979.

Blix said the Soviets have agreed to cooperate in the agency's investigation.

Soviet Media Emphasizes Heroism At Nuke Disaster

By ANDREW ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet reporting of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster carries echoes of World War II, with tales of men sticking to their posts despite great danger, and farmers and factory workers pledging to increase productivity to meet a crisis.

The enemy this time is radiation, not Germans. But the coverage reflects the Soviets' traditional worship of heroes and the government's penchant for turning bad news into good by emphasizing the self-sacrificing nature of the citizenry.

Disasters anywhere usually produce tales of bravery. But the stories of Chernobyl bear the unique stamp of the Soviet state, with its hero workers, hero mothers, hero soldiers, hero cosmonauts and, above all, hero Communists.

Painful scenes of weeping widows, body bags, careening ambulances or hospital vigils are avoided by the media.

News accounts have glorified firefighters who stood on the roof of the burning reactor building after the April 26 explosion at the power plant and one by one collapsed from radiation sickness.

One firefighter, Viktor Kibenko, was only 23 and had just learned two days earlier that his wife was pregnant, wrote the official youth newspaper, Komsomolskaya Pravda. It said he fought the fire directly over the reactor for hours, averting a catastrophic spread of the fire but also ingesting deadly amounts of radiation.

Kibenko died 15 days later in a hospital, it said.

The media also glorified two men who dived into radioactive water that had collected under the reactor. They released a valve and drained the water, heading off a possible steam explosion.

There have been few reports of human failure during the crisis. Komsomolskaya Pravda said Saturday that one youth league leader at the Chernobyl plant was dismissed from his league post and might be expelled for an unspecified failure of duty. It said a woman in charge of the plant's food department panicked and fled the area after the accident.

The Communist Party daily Pravda said one party member was expelled and two others were reprimanded for underestimating the scope of the accident and bungling the evacuation of nearby residents.

The heroic tradition is an old one in the Soviet Union. Some of the most popular Russian legends are about powerful warriors — "bogatyri" — who, coincidentally, lived in the city of Kiev, 80 miles south of Chernobyl.

The Soviet Union's greatest hero is its founder, Lenin. There's also Yuri Gagarin, the first man in space, and a string of World War II heroes. Many still worship the late dictator Josef Stalin.

Women with many children are given medals and workers who overfulfill the economic plan are named "heroes of socialist labor."

Perhaps the most famous labor hero was Alexei Stakhanov, who sped up production in his coal mine in the 1930s and spawned a movement of zealous overproducers that still exists.

At first, the Soviet media said little about the Chernobyl accident, a secrecy reflex ingrained in a system that jealously guards information.

But in recent days, the official media has provided extensive and almost entirely postive coverage.

Television shows farmhands picking onions supervised by a specialist with a geiger counter, and potato farmers pledging to make up for any shortages.

One television report showed a factory team leader in Kiev hammering his fist in the air and urging his men to weld more pipes for use at Chernobyl.

Coal miners were reported to be donating their free time to help make up for Chernobyl's lost share of the national energy supply. There have been tales of helicopter pilots making hazardous flights to dump sand, lead and other material on the reactor.

Most of the heroes are members of the Communist Party or its youth branch, Komsomol.

"It's always that way, when times are hard Communists and Komsomolists set the example," wrote the military daily Krasnaya Zvezda.

There probably were non-party members who gave their lives or performed feats of daring, but they're not getting much media attention. The Tass news agency mentioned a radiation-stricken worker who was not in the party, but only to say that he had sent a telegram from his hospital bed asking to be made a member.

Two themes keep recurring.

One is World War II, with its powerful memories of hard-fought victory and huge sacrifice.

Tass reported that two men, one evacuated from the Chernobyl area and one who gave him a bed, fell into each other's arms weeping when they discovered they'd served in the same wartime unit.

Pavlo Zagrebelny, head of the Ukrainian Writer's Union, evoked the war in complaining about Western media coverage:

"They say .... everyone is running away. The people don't run from their land. They fight for it. When the fascists attacked the Soviet Union 45 years ago, the Ukraine sent 5 million of its sons to the front."

The other recurring theme is that the Soviet people stand united and alone against a common enemy — in this case, radiation and a hostile West.

"We are the first to face such a horrible force as that created by even the peaceful atom which has exploded out of control," Tass quoted one plant worker as saying.

Bentsen Says Active Trade Role Needed By Officials

By KATHRYN BAKER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is fueling the "protectionist fever" it decries by not taking an active role in reducing the trade deficit, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen said Saturday.

Bentsen, D-Texas, delivering the Democrats' weekly radio address, said the administration "denounces 'protectionist fever' in this country while withholding the medicine needed to bring that fever down."

Bentsen is head of the Democrats' trade task force and is ranking minority member on the Senate Finance subcommittee on international trade.

"Republicans and Democrats alike are frustrated because the administration doesn't have a coordinated trade policy and doesn't show any interest in developing one," Bentsen said.

He said the trade deficit is becoming as big as the budget deficit and is "just as serious a problem."

"Last year we became a debtor nation," Bentsen said. "For the first time since 1914, we owe more to foreigners than they owe to us. This year, we will become the world's largest debtor nation, exceeding even Brazil."

The lack of competition is draining the U.S. economy, Bentsen said, and threatens to lower the U.S. standard of living.

The administration should insist that other nations open their markets to U.S. goods, Bentsen said. He complained that other world leaders took their trade ministers to the economic summit in Tokyo, but the U.S. trade representative did not attend.

There was, however, an agreement out of Tokyo to intervene in currency markets, which Democrats have long sought, he said.

"A year ago, the administration told Congress there was no need to reduce the value of the dollar, that it was a sign of this country's economic strength," Bentsen said. "Today, they tell us that is all we need to do. They are wrong on both counts."

He said the declining dollar will reduce the $150 billion trade deficit, but will not eliminate it.

"We need an effective, coordinated trade policy for that," Bentsen said.

Dear Abby — By Abigail Van Buren

Bridal Gift Has Family In A Stir

DEAR ABBY: My brother's daughter (I'll call her Melanie) sent us an invitation to her wedding, which was to take place last June (1985). We were unable to attend, but my husband and I sent her an expensive gift.

Around the middle of May (of last year) my brother called to tell us the wedding had been called off, and he asked if we wanted our wedding gift back. I said yes we did, and he promised to pass the information on to Melanie. Well, it's been nearly a year and we still don't have that gift.

Here's the big problem: Last winter Melanie's sister, Judy, sent us an announcement of her marriage, which took place in Las Vegas. We immediately sent word to Melanie asking her to send the wedding gift she received from us to her sister who was really married. Then we wrote a letter of congratulations to Judy telling her to expect our gift soon.

As of today we have not heard a word from either Melanie or Judy.

Should we write to Judy and ask her if she ever received our wedding gift? If she says no, should we contact Melanie and remind her again to send Judy the gift? Or should we contact my brother and ask him to handle it?

DISGUSTED AUNT

DEAR AUNT: Melanie should have returned your gift as soon as the wedding was called off. Failing to do so showed very poor taste. But your asking her to hand over the gift to her more deserving sister showed equally poor taste.

If you want to give Judy a wedding gift, forget the one you gave Melanie, and buy one for Judy. Don't ask your brother to run interference for you. He must have enough headaches.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Can you advise me as to the difference between borrowing and begging?

We have a good neighbor who has "borrowed" everything from the proverbial cup of sugar to kindling. Among things borrowed from us are garbage bags, hair combs, six eggs, a quart of milk, bread, garden tools, a tire pump and shampoo. Nothing was returned except the garden tools, and we had to go and get them ourselves.

I have always thought that when people borrowed things they returned them. Since we are senior citizens and these neighbors are young, I'm wondering if the younger generation may not know the difference between begging and borrowing.

My question: What can I say that will not hurt the feelings of the children who are always sent to do the borrowing?

BORED WITH BORROWERS

DEAR BORED: The next time a child is sent to "borrow" something, don't be sharp, simply say, "Not right now, but please have your mother call me." And when she calls, tell her that when one borrows something there is an expressed or implied intention of returning the same or the equivalent. Some good people need to be reminded.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I can't resist adding my two cents in answer to "Wedding Ruined," because a child's voice could be heard throughout the ceremony, and God forbid, was "forever recorded on the video."

Abby, since when is a child's voice an irritant? Couples today make such a production of their weddings, they lose sight of what it's all about.

My husband's brother and his fiance planned one such "production." On the eve of their wedding, the bride-to-be announced that our 3-week-old son would not be welcome at the wedding. The ensuing controversy led to the cancellation of the wedding.

JOAN S.

DEAR JOAN: Some people welcome children everywhere and some do not. It's neither right nor wrong; it's a matter of personal preference.

Calling a wedding off on the eve before is costly, inconvenient and embarrassing, but if this could occur because the groom's brother and his wife were asked not to bring their 3-week-old child to the wedding, then perhaps it's just as well that the wedding was canceled.

Pirates Slam Spiders, 12-8; Force Final Game For Title

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Mark Cockrell climaxed an eight-run fourth inning for East Carolina with a three-run homer and the Pirates went on to top previously unbeaten Richmond, 12-8, in the Colonial Athletic Association baseball tournament Saturday night.

The Pirate victory forces the tournament to a final game today at 1 p.m., with the winner advancing into the NCAA Regionals.

East Carolina, which lost to Richmond, 4-0, in the opening game of the double elimination tournament, had to fight back through the losers' bracket, defeating top-seeded James Madison on Friday, and then taking UNC-Wilmington in a game Saturday afternoon prior to the game with the Spiders Saturday night.

And even though the Pirates stormed out to a 12-1 lead, the Spiders kept the pressure on them, coming back from 11 down to within four.

"We didn't get conservative," Coach Gary Overton said. "Their third pitcher, Jim Merritt, really shut us down."

Overton had been concerned whether the Pirates could bounce back from the 11-inning come-from-behind win over the Seahawks and still have some emotion left, but the team proved they still had the juices flowing.

"They came back from the afternoon with the same intensity and not only swung the bats well, but manufactured some runs too," Overton said. "But I've got to give Richmond credit for not giving up, either. They kept swinging the bats.

"I thought Jake (Jacobs) did a fine job for us. And Craig Van Deventer came back from pitching nearly eight innings this afternoon to get the save. He was just superb," Overton continued.

"Now we have to keep trying to manufacture runs. We can't get conservative."

Who's he got left to pitch? "The staff. That's all I can say. We'll just try to put together enough to win."

East Carolina's victory overshadowed an outstanding performance by Richmond's Greg Harding, who hit three home runs and drove in five of their eight runs.

East Carolina took the lead in the bottom of the first, driving in two runs. David Ritchie led off with a double to center and Greg Hardison's sacrifice bunt was errored, putting men on first and third. Chris Bradberry grounded into a double play, with Ritchie scooting home on the play.

Winfred Johnson got the second run with his 19th homer of the year — and the 70th of his career — for a 2-0 lead.

East Carolina added two more in the second. Steve Sides walked and stole second. With two away, Ritchie beat out a drag bunt, moving Sides to third. A passed ball let Sides score and moved Ritchie up a base. He then scored on Hardison's single to center.

The Spiders came back with their first run in the third, that coming on a solo homer by Harding to dead center.

The Pirates broke it open in the fourth, scoring eight times, however, for a 12-1 lead. Mark Cockrell got it all started with an infield single. He was sacrificed up and Ritchie walked. Hardison singled in Cockrell, but went down at second on Bradberry's grounder. Johnson was intentionally walked and Mike Sullivan drew an unintentional walk, loading the bases. Jay McGraw reached on an error, scoring Bradberry and Sides singled to right, driving in both Johnson and Sullivan.

Cockrell then finished it off with a home run to left, giving the Pirates their 12-1 lead.

Merritt, who came in to close out the inning, then handcuffed the Pirates the rest of the way, setting down 12 in a row before Johnson doubled in the eighth to break the string.

Richmond, meanwhile, struggled back to try to make a game of it.

The Spiders scored four times in the fifth, cutting the lead to 12-5. Brian Jordan led off with a double and Reid singled him in. Harding then followed with his second homer of the night, scoring Reid ahead of himself. Andy Malloy kept it going by reaching on an infield hit. He was sacrificed up and moved to third on an out before scoring on a passed ball.

One more scored in the sixth. Jordan hit a solo homer to center to account for it, making it 12-6.

The final two came in the eighth off still another Harding homer. Reid had walked just before the blast.

Van Deventer then struck out the final batter in the eighth and the first two in the ninth before a grounder to third ended the contest.

East Carolina's hitting was led by Ritchie, Hardison and Cockrell, each with three. In addition to Harding's three, Jordan also contributed a trio while Malloy had two.

The Pirates climb to 40-9 with the win while Richmond dips to 23-29.

Conley Mauls Cougars, 21-3

HOLLYWOOD — Bronswell Patrick won his 13th game of the season and picked up four hits in leading D.H. Conley's Vikings to a 21-3 bombardment of SouthWest Edgecombe Saturday night in the first round of the 3-A State Baseball playoffs.

Conley got all the scoring it was to need in the first inning of the contest, pushing over four runs.

Jody Vines led off with a single to left and moved up on Shane Adams' ground out. Vines stole third and scored when Fred Bryant popped a two-run homer.

Lee Hardee walked to start it going again and took second on a passed ball. Patrick then doubled him home. Sherwood Wilder followed with a single that scored Patrick with the fourth run.

Conley went on to add three in the second inning, one of them a solo homer by Adams. Four more scored in the third and another four in the fourth. Three crossed in the fifth and another three in the sixth. Michael Elks provided three of those last runs with a third homer for the Vikings.

SouthWest Edgecombe scored two in the fourth and one in the seventh.

Patrick, in his four hits, collected two doubles and a triple. Wilder and Bryant each collected three hits while Vines had a pair.

Snow Chief Wins Preakness

BALTIMORE (AP) — Snow Chief's trainer, Mel Stute, was right when he said to throw out his colt's performance in the Kentucky Derby.

A flop in the Derby two weeks ago when he finished 11th, Snow Chief redeemed himself Saturday with a strong stretch run for a four-length victory in the $534,400 Preakness Stakes at Pimlico.

Ferdinand, the 17-1 Derby winner, made a late move in the stretch, but he was no match for Snow Chief and finished second, ending 54-year-old jockey Bill Shoemaker's quest for his first Triple Crown.

"Everyone gave up on him after one race," Stute said. "The experts didn't pick him, but the betting public stuck with him. I'm no genius, but this is a good horse."

Snow Chief, ridden by 22-year-old Panamanian Alex Solis, was second to the front-running Groovy for most of the race and made his move on the far turn, putting away Groovy entering the stretch and finishing the 1 3-16 miles in 1:54 4-5.

"At the quarter pole, he was asking me to go," Solis said of Snow Chief. "At the 3-16th pole, I hit him a couple of times. He took off and kept running."

Solis added that Groovy's jockey, Craig Parret, told him at the quarter pole, "You got it Alex, go get it."

There was no more question about the outcome, with Ferdinand the only challenger in the stretch drive, but he failed to make up ground inside the one-eighth pole.

Wins Preakness

Broad Brush was third in the field of seven 3-year-olds, a sharp contrast to the 16 who raced in the Derby where Snow Chief folded on the last turn after Groovy's blistering pace. On Saturday, Broad Brush finished 6½ lengths behind Ferdinand and a nose in front of Badger Land.

Badger Land, sent off as the 9-5 favorite as part of a D. Wayne Lukas-trained entry with Clear Choice, went sideways leaving the gate and never threatened the leaders. Miracle Wood, Groovy and Clear Choice completed the order of finish. Snow Chief was the second choice in the betting and Ferdinand third.

Shoemaker said he had no excuses for Ferdinand.

"He ran a good race but wasn't good enough to beat the winner," Shoemaker said. "I saved ground. I don't think they slowed the pace. The first half-mile they race in 47 and change (:47 2-5), and that is good for this track."

It was the first Preakness for Stute, Solis and the California-bred colt's owners — Carl Grinstead and Ben Rochelle, known as the "Sunshine Boys" since both are in their 70s. The owners saw Snow Chief's earnings pass the $2 million mark with the $411,900 winner's share of the purse.

Stute said the only excuses he could find for Snow Chief's performance in the Derby was that he didn't like the Churchill Downs track and the fast pace of the race. Snow Chief was the Derby favorite and the winner of five straight races, including the Florida and Santa Anita derbies.

"I feel wonderful," Stute said. "The other day (Derby day) was kind of hard on me. But I don't have to make any excuses tonight."

Both Grinstead and Stute said they were leaning toward the $1 million Jersey Derby on Memorial Day at Garden State Park instead of the $350,000-added, 1½-mile Belmont Stakes, the third leg of the Triple Crown, on June 7.

"We can't win the Triple Crown," Stute said, "so I think we'll go for the money."

"I don't think a mile and a half is as important as a mile and a quarter and a mile and an eighth," Grinstead said. "It's more important overseas."

He added that Snow Chief's immediate future was indefinite. "It depends on how I influence Mel or how he influences me."

Groovy, who had set the early pace in the Derby before folding and finishing last, again had the lead going into the final turn with Snow Chief stalking him most of the way.

Celts Down Bucks, 111-107

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Boston's Kevin McHale didn't want to sound like a know-it-all, but the Celtic center says it wasn't a big deal to come back from a 13-point deficit in the third quarter to defeat the Milwaukee Bucks and take a commanding 3-0 lead in an NBA semifinal playoff series.

"It takes a lot to rattle us, to shake us," McHale said after scoring 29 points and grabbing 11 rebounds in Boston's 111-107 victory Sautrday. "We just go in there and grind out those wins. We don't play with a lot of emotion.

"We've seen it all before, it's not like we haven't been (down) before," he added. "It takes a lot to surprise us."

The Celtics, down by seven points at halftime and 13 points in the third quarter, didn't take their first lead until the fourth quarter when Larry Bird's jumper made it 94-92 with 7:48 remaining. Bird finished with 19 points, 16 rebounds and 13 assists.

"We executed very well" in the second half, Bird said. "Our defense was excellent. We were getting easy baskets. We made the extra pass."

Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson, a former Celtic, had seen it before.

"Boston is a great passing team," he said. "They put on a clinic."

Boston Coach K.C. Jones said it was a matter of sticking with the game plan and adjusting to the Bucks' switching, trapping defense.

"The Celtics were very lucky," Jones said. "The Bucks played a very good game. They had us down ... in the third quarter and we could have died. But we didn't give up."

Boston's other big man, Robert Parish, had the hot hand in the fourth quarter, scoring 10 of his 28 points in the final period. Parish also had 12 rebounds as the Celtics wore the Bucks down inside and moved in position to sweep the Bucks and advance to the NBA finals in Sunday's Game 4 in Milwaukee.

"I knew that if we didn't win today, we would be in a deep hole that would be very difficult to climb out of," Nelson said.

The Celtics said they would like to wrap it up Sunday.

"If you don't think (sweep), you might as well go home," Bird said.

"We can't let down," added reserve center Bill Walton. "It's going to be another battle."

A victory by the Celtics would send them against the winner of the Houston-Los Angeles Lakers Western Conference finals, which the Rockets lead 2-1.

Scott Wedman, a reserve forward for Boston, left the game in the third period after collapsing to the floor. He was taken to a local hospital, and X-rays found two cracked ribs on the left side.

The Celtics, trailing by 13 points midway through the third quarter, closed the gap to five entering the fourth quarter as McHale and Parish wore down the Bucks inside.

The Celtics built a 107-97 lead with 2:12 left on a three-point goal by Bird. The Bucks pulled to within 108-105 with 42 seconds left on a basket by Craig Hodges, but two free throws by Danny Ainge and another by McHale sewed up the victory

The Celtics, down 60-53 at halftime, made the first four points of the third period to narrow the gap to 60-57. But Terry Cummings, who finished with 18 rebounds, scored nine points in a 15-5 streak as the Bucks took a 75-62 lead with 6:39 remaining in the third period, their largest lead of the game.

The Celtics rallied, but the Bucks held an 87-82 edge entering the fourth period.

Boston began the period with an 8-3 spurt to tie the game 90-90 with 8:47 left. Cummings and reserve guard Jerry Sichting were involved in a scuffle at 10:17, but they were quickly separated and Cummings was called for an offensive foul.

The Celtics took their first lead of the game, 94-92, on a jump shot by Bird with 7:48 remaining, then built the 107-97 margin as the Bucks went four minutes without a point.

Three foul shots by Alton Lister and a three-point goal by Paul Pressey narrowed the deficit to 107-103 with 1:06 remaining.

Sidney Moncrief, who missed Game 1 of the series with an injured left heel, played his second consecutive game, scoring 15 of his 19 first-half points in the first quarter as Milwaukee took a 35-32 lead.

Moncrief finished with 24 points and Cummings led the Bucks with 27.

Thompson Named Olympic Coach

WASHINGTON (AP) — Georgetown Coach John Thompson, who has spent his career chasing championships and not necessarily friends, says being named by his peers to coach the 1988 men's Olympic basketball team is one of his greatest honors.

"I don't win many popularity contests with some positions and stands that I take. And that's one of the many reasons I'm very flattered that so many people said I should be the next Olympic coach," said Thompson.

"The judgment and respect that others have for you is very flattering," he said.

Thompson, 44, was picked Friday by a selection committee of 15 voters who met in Colorado Springs, Colo., as successor to Indiana Coach Bob Knight, whose team won the gold medal in 1984 in Los Angeles. He will lead the team that goes to Seoul, South Korea.

"I usually think it's odious in comparing honors. But to have the opportunity to coach the Olympic team, to represent one's country in this way, is ver exciting, a hgh, high honor," he said. "My goal is to work as hard as I can and bring back the gold."

He was chosen over such contenders as Larry Brown of Kansas, Denny Crum of NCAA champion Louisville, Lute Olson of Arizona and Eddie Sutton of Kentucky. "I'm honored I was even considered, when you consider all the guys who are out there," said Brown.

Thompson has compiled a 321-115 record at Georgetown, winning one championship and going to the NCAA tournament in eight of his 14 seasons.

An assistant coach with the 1976 Olympic team coached by North Carolina's Dean Smith, Thompson recalled the flush of pride when he walked into Montreal's Olympic Stadium.

"We had heard and we had talked about how about how we, as Americans, would feel when they played the national anthem. But when we actually stepped onto that track, well, it's a feeling I can't describe," he said.

Thompson was on the player selection committee in 1984 and called the process of whittling down the final roster "very challening."

Among those expected to have a shot at the 1988 team are David Robinson of Navy, Louisville's Purvis Ellison and Tony Kimbro, Gary Grant of Michigan, Danny Manning of Kansas and Charles Shackleford of North Carolina State.

Tide Baseball Coach Quits

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — University of Alabama at Birmingham baseball coach Harry "The Hat" Walker, who took over the Blazers' new program in 1978 after a 42-year career in baseball, announced his resignation at the age of 68, saying the job was no longer fun.

Walker's assistant, Pete Rancont, was named the Blazers' new head baseball coach.

Rancont, 38, played at Auburn and worked as an assistant at several Birmingham-area high schools and at Birmingham-Southern College.

Walker started the program at Alabama-Birmingham and posted a 211-171 record in eight seasons. The Blazers compiled a 40-17 mark in the Sun Belt Conference.

Skiles Finishes Jail Sentence

PLYMOUTH, Ind. (AP) — Michigan State basketball star Scott Skiles was released from jail today after serving 15 days for violating probation on a drug conviction.

"It wasn't fun, that's for sure, but then it wasn't supposed to be fun. It was the end of a tough season," Skiles said after he walked out of the Marshall County jail.

Skiles was met by family members and friends upon his release.

He entered jail May 2 to serve a term ordered by Marshall Circuit Court Judge Michael Cook after Skiles admitted using alcohol in violation of probation terms imposed on an April 1985 misdemeanor conviction for possession of marijuana.

Skiles, a senior, left school early to serve the jail sentence. He has said he plans to attend summer school to finish his degree.

The Marshall County prosecutor's office moved to revoke Skiles' probation on a one-year suspended sentence after he was arrested for drunken driving in Michigan. Skiles has pleaded innocent to the charge.

Skiles, a top prospect in June 17 NBA draft, said he hopes to put his troubles behind him and return to playing basketball.

'It was good for me. I never want to spend time in jail again," he said. "I'm happy to be out."

Skiles said he still thinks of Plymouth as his hometown and apologized for disappointing his supporters.

"I think the people here think I let them down. I think I let them down."

Skiles led the Plymouth high school basketball team to the 1982 Indiana boys basketball championship.

Pirates Beat UNC-W To Stay Alive

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
(See Related Stories, Pages B-6, B-8)

Opponents of East Carolina must think of the Pirates as the baseball incarnation of Dracula.

Just about the time you think the Pirates are dead and buried, they arrive from the dead and go straight for the jugular vein.

Saturday afternoon, in the losers' bracket finals of the Colonial Athletic Association Tournament, the Pirates were down 8-5 with but an inning to go and arose to rally and down UNC-Wilmington, 9-8.

It took a two-run homer by Greg Hardison in the ninth, followed by a solo smash by Chris Bradberry to get the Pirates back in the game, and Bradberry's infield hopper brought David Ritchie safely across in the 11th to win it.

The victory served to oust the Seahawks, who end the year at 29-28, from the double elimination tournament. East Carolina, meanwhile, went on to take a 12-8 win over Richmond in the Saturday night game and force a final game for the championship. That game will be be played today at 1 p.m. (See story on Page B-1.)

Winfred Johnson got the victory, coming on in relief for the Pirates. The win moved him to 11-4 on the year.

"This was just about as exciting a game as you could want to see," a much relieved coach Gary Overton said afterward. "Neither team wanted to lose and both played hard. Both teams were a little shaky early (eight errors in the first three frames), but they played well when the game was in doubt."

Overton said he was unsure how the Pirates would rebound after the game, played on a very hot afteroon, and taking a big emotional drain. "We'll find that out tonight, I guess. Right now, we're playing just as hard as we can to keep playing. If we get by tonight, it's anybody's tournament, obviously."

Hardison said it was just another case of the way the Pirates have played all year, coming back as they did. "That's two straight days for us now, and I'm proud of them. It speaks a lot for them."

Pirate Celebration

Pirate teammates gather around East Carolina's Winfred Johnson, 25, following Saturday afternoon's come-from-behind victory over UNC-Wilmington. Johnson, who pitched 3 1/3 innings in relief, was credited with the win. The final score was 9-8. (Reflector Photo by Cliff Hollis)

Bradberry echoed Overton's thoughts as to the Pirates being able to come back, but didn't think the long, hot, emotional game would affect his team. "When the adrenalin starts flowing, you don't feel tired."

For Bradberry, the game represented a comeback of sorts. He was held hitless in the first two game, banging out three in this, including a double, homer and single, driving in the tying and winning runs.

"I've been struggling," he admitted. "But they gave me my pitch (in the ninth) and I drove it. In the 11th, the ball was down and I got a piece of it. I just wanted to make contact."

That contact was enough.

East Carolina took the lead in the first with a run. Mont Carter singled and Hardison beat out an infield roller. Carter took third on a double play and scored when Johnson's grounder was errored.

But the Seahawks took advantage of three ECU errors in the bottom of the frame to score three times and move ahead. With two away, Bobby Reynolds reached on a two base error. Mark Maultsby singled him in and moved to second on an error. Chuck Jones singled to drive in Maultsby and moved up on a wild pitch. Eric Hall reached on an infield hit and an error on the play allowed Jones to score the third run.

ECU closed it to 3-2 with a run in the second. Jay McGraw reached on a two-base error and was wild pitched to third. He scored when Mark Cockrell grounded out.

Wilmington got that one back in the bottom of the third, the run coming on a solo homer by Jones for a 4-2 lead.

East Carolina closed within one again in the fourth. Cockrell reached on a fielder's choice that left two down. Jim Riley beat out an infield hit and Carter singled to center to score Cockrell.

The tying run crossed int he fifth. Bradberry broke his slump with a double to open the inning. Johnson reached on an error, moving Bradberry to third. He then scored when Mike Sullivan grounded into a double play.

East Carolina took the lead in the eight. That came when Johnson opened the inning with his 18th homer of the season, pushing the ball out in left center for a 5-4 lead.

Then, it seemed that the Pirates suddenly fell apart as the Seahawks rallied for four runs in the eighth to take an 8-5 advantage.

The Pirates got a double play to put down the first Seahawk baserunner of the inning. But then Eric Hall walked and John Catalano lofted what appeared to be an early fly ball to left center, ending the inning.

However, Carter never picked up the ball in flight and Bradberry couldn't get to it as it finally fell within easy reach of Carter, going for a run-scoring double. That tied it up, 5-5.

Johnson came on in relief of Craig Van Deventer and gave up a single to right to Mike Meadows, bringing in Catalano with the go-ahead run. Meadows advanced to second on the relay home, then dashed all the way from second to score when Tim Langmeyer beat out a slow roller to first. Mitch Wells reached on an error that moved Langmeyer to third and a wild pitch plated him for the three-run Seahawk lead.

But the Seahawks forgot the wooden stake and the Pirates rose up from the grave in the ninth, scoring three breathtaking runs to get back.

With one down, pinchhitter Dean Ehehalt walked and David Ritchie went in to run for him. After a second out, Hardison cracked a home run to right, pulling the Pirates back within one.

Bradberry then mashed a 3-2 pitch out of the park in left, tying it up.

ECU threatened in the 10th, putting a runner on second. Wilmington moved one all the way to third, but he died there.

Ritchie led off the 11th with a double to left center and Carter sacrificed him to third. Hardison grounded out, unable to advance the runner. But Bradberry's two-out chopper to third was enough as no play could be made at either base, Ritchie scoring easily.

Then, it became a question of stopping the Seahawks in the bottom of the inning, and Hardison, after allowing a two-out error to put a runner on, snagged a line drive to end it.

"This guy (Hardison) deserves a lot of credit today too," Bradberry said. "He put us in position for me to tie it up."

Bradberry led the Pirate hitting with three while Carter, Hardison, Johnson and Sides each had two.

Maultsby, Jones and Catalano each had two for UNC-W

Pack, Jackets Advance

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Shortstop Alex Wallace cracked solo home runs in the first and third innings and Scott Davis hit a two-run shot in the seventh as North Carolina State slipped by Clemson 6-4 in the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball tournament Saturday.

The victory sends the Wolfpack, 35-12, into Saturday's night title game against Georgia Tech, which downed North Carolina 9-7 earlier in the day. If the Wolfpack wins, a second game will be played on Sunday to determine the champion.

N.C. State, the ACC-regular season champ, led 6-1 going into the eighth when solo homers by Ray Williams and Jerry Brooks chased winner Robert Toth, 6-3, and cut the lead to 6-3.

Clemson, 42-21, threatened again in the ninth with a run as Burk Fairey walked with one out, moved to third on Tommy Thompson's double and scored on Bert Heffernan's sacrifice fly. Williams was then thrown out trying to bunt, ending the game.

N.C. State scored one run in each of the first three innings and ran its lead to 4-1 in the sixth inning when Andrew Fava tripled and scored on Brian Bushwell's double. Davis' two-run homer upped the lead to 6-1 before Clemson rallied.

Wallace was three for four and Davis was two for four to lead N.C. State. Clemson was led by Williams, who was two for five, and Heffernan and Steve Baucom, both of whom had two hits in four at bats.

In the early game, Jeff Distasio hit a three-run home run, one of four homers by Georgia Tech, to lead the defending champion Yellow Jackets over North Carolina.

North Carolina, which had won three of the previous four tournaments, ended its season at 33-22.

Ty Griffin's solo home run, his first of the season, got the Yellow Jackets off in the first inning. Distasio's three-run shot came with one out in the fifth and Mike Fowler stroked the next pitch over the left field wall to chase North Carolina reliever Todd Koczynski. Georgia Tech's other home run was Frank Bolick's lead-off shot to left in the seventh inning.

Yankees Rout Mariners, 11-6

Out At Home

By The Associated Press

Dave Winfield hit a grand-slam homer and drove in six runs, and the New York Yankees got consecutive home runs in the second and eighth innings to end a three-game losing streak with an 11-6 victory Saturday over the Seattle Mariners.

Don Mattingly, Ken Griffey and Gary Roenicke also homered for the Yankees. Roenicke's first homer followed Winfield's in the Yankees' six-run secondinning, and Griffey and Mattingly hit successive homers with two out in the eighth.

In other American League games, Boston beat Texas 8-2, Detroit ripped California 10-4, Toronto shelled Cleveland 11-5, Chicago nipped Kansas City 7-6 and Milwaukee downed Minnesota 4-1 in a game shortened to seven innings by rain. Oakland was at Baltimore in a night game.

In the National League, San Francisco outslugged Philadelphia 12-7 and Los Angeles defeated New York 6-2. In night games, it was Pittsburgh at Cincinnati, St. Louis at Atlanta, Chicago at Houston and Montreal at San Diego.

Winfield tied a career high with his six RBI. The grand slam was the sixth of his career and only his fourth homer of the season. Mattingly had four hits, including two doubles and the homer.

Winfield, with only five hits in his previous 41 at-bats, also had a double and single.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Tigers 10, Angels 4

Left-hander Dave LaPoint, 1-2, won his first game with Detroit, getting home run support from Lou Whitaker, Larry Herndon and Darrell Evans at Tiger Stadium. LaPoint, who came to the Tigers last Oct. 7 from San Francisco, worked seven innings, giving up three runs on six hits.

Doug DeCinces hit a three-run homer for California in the first inning.

Blue Jays 11, Indians 5

Jesse Barfield drove in six runs with three hits, including a three-run homer, and Cliff Johnson also hit a three-run shot for the host Blue Jays. Left-hander Jimmy Key allowed five Cleveland hits over seven innings.

Barfield's homer came in the sixth inning and gave the Blue Jays an 8-1 lead. Barfield also had a two-run double and a sacrifice fly.

White Sox 7, Royals 6

Carlton Fisk and Greg Walker each drove in runs with ninth-inning singles to complete Chicago's second rally of the game and give the host White Sox their fourth straight victory.

Fisk, Harold Baines and Ron Kittle each drove in runs against Dan Quisenberry in Chicago's three-run seventh for a 5-4 lead. The Royals came back with two in the top of the ninth on an RBI triple by Rudy Law and George Brett's run-scoring double for a 6-5 lead.

Red Sox 8, Rangers 2

Rey Quinones hit two RBI doubles, including one that keyed Boston's six-run second inning, to make his major league debut a successful one as Boston defeated visiting Texas. Quinones, a shortstop, was called up earlier in the day from the AAA International League.

Don Slaught of the Rangers was hit in the face by a pitch from Dennis Boyd in the fourth inning. He suffered a broken nose and a broken bone in his cheek, but was released from a hospital after treatment.

Brewers 4, Twins 1

Robin Yount homered and singled as Milwaukee sent Minnesota to its seventh straight loss in a rain-shortened game.

The game, delayed by rain for 15 minutes in the first inning, was called following a delay of 1 hour and 15 minutes after the seventh inning.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Dodgers 6, Mets 2

Bill Madlock's RBI single keyed a four-run eighth inning and Los Angeles turned back visiting New York.

The Dodgers, held to three hits through the first seven innings, broke loose against starter Sid Fernandez, 4-1, and reliever Roger McDowell. Mariano Duncan opened the eighth with a bunt single, took second on a groundout and scored on Madlock's second hit of the game.

Giants 12, Phillies 7

Jose Uribe singled and hit a two-run double and Will Clark also had a two-run double during an eight-run explosion in the fifth inning that carried San Francisco past visiting Philadelphia.

King Leads Chrysler-Plymouth

CHATHAM TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — First-round leader Betsy King shot a 1-under-par 72 and grabbed a one-stroke lead over Canadian Dawn Coe on Saturday after two rounds of the $200,000 Chrysler-Plymouth Classic.

King, who shot an opening round 67, had two birdies and a bogey in finishing at 7-under-par 139 after her second tour of the par-73, 6,265 yard Fairmount Country Club.

A five-time winner on the LPGA tour, King bogeyed the par-5 18th hole after hitting her drive behind a tree and having to pitch out into the fairway.

"With experience, I know going into the final round I don't have to hit every shot perfectly to win," she said. "Before I won, I always thought you had to hit every shot perfect or not get a bad break to win. Once you've won a tournament, you know you can make mistakes and win."

Coe, a non-winner since joining the tour in 1983, posted her second straight 70 and was at 6-under-par 140. The 25-year-old native of British Columbia had two bogeys on the front nine, but rammed home five birdies on the backside.

"It was a good day, it just started on the back nine," said Coe, whose best previous finish in a tournament was ninth place. "If I can get my putter working tomorrow, I'll have a chance."

Becky Pearson, another non-winner in seven years on the tour, was alone in third place, two shots behind the leader after a second-round 70. She held a one-shot lead over rookie Deb Richard and former U.S. Women's Open champion Janet Anderson.

Richard had a 4-under-par 69, while Anderson matched par with a 73.

Pat Bradley improved her chances of becoming the first $2 million winner on the LPGA tour with a round of 71 for a 145 total, 1-under par. She was tied for 13th place and would pass the $2 million mark by maintaining that position through the final round.

"I feel wonderful," said Bradley. "My goal at the start of the day was to get in the red (under par) and I accomplished it. It's going to take a miracle for me to win though."

Jane Blalock, who shared the first-round lead with King, fell out of contention after a round of 85 that included nine bogeys, one triple bogey and eight pars.

"It was just one mistake after another," said Blalock. "It was a major disaster. I wasn't hitting my drives well. I tried everything mentally to break out of it, but nothing worked."

Blalock never lost her sense of humor though. She found $5 on a golf cart path and told her caddie to give it to someone.

"I didn't have the heart to keep it the way I was playing," said Blalock, who just made the 152 cut for the final round of the 54 hole tournament. The low 70 players and ties made the cut.

Rain Reduces Colonial To 54 Holes

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) - Heavy, steady rains Saturday washed out play in the Colonial National Invitation Tournament and reduced the tournament format to 54 holes.

The tournament now is scheduled to conclude with a single round of 18 holes on Sunday.

"We considered all the factors, and this seems to be the best approach for everyone," tournament chairman Dr. Wallace Schmuck said Saturday.

The full purse of $600,000, including $108,000 to the winner, will be paid, he said. In the event of a reduced format, sponsors have the option of reducing the purse.

The reduction to a three-round format marked the first time in its 40-year history Colonial has been played at less than 72 holes.

"We'd like to play 72 holes, but the weather isn't going to let us do it," Dr. Schmuck said.

An early finish for television purposes (3:30 p.m. EDT) made it impossible to play two rounds on Sunday and "there's a kind of unwritten rule you don't play on Monday," Dr. Schmuck said.

The steady rains were preceeded by severe thunderstorms, and the Fort Worth area was under a tornado watch most of the day.

The rains flooded the Colonial Country Club course — with a deep, swift stream running across the 17th and 18th fairways — and made the course unplayable.

Howard Twitty and David Edwards remained in a tie for the lead at 136, 4-under par par after 36 holes.

They were followed by Bob Tway and Dan Pohl at 137.

Another shot back at 138 were defending champion Corey Pavin, Bill Rogers, D.A. Weibring, Bob Gilder, Bob Lohr and Gene Sauers.

Lee Trevino was at 141, Fuzzy Zoeller at 142 and Tom Watson at 143 going into Sunday's final round.

"As far as I'm concerned it (the rainout and reduced format) doesn't change anything," Twitty said.

"The only thing is, it makes it harder for a guy a few shots back to try to catch up," said Edwards.

Beck, Andrade Advance In North-South Tourney

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina senior Kurt Beck of Pittsburgh and Billy Andrade of Winston-Salem captured their semifinal matches Saturday to advance into the finals of the 86th annual Men's North and South Amateur golf tournament.

Beck, 22, defeated Paul Simson, 35, an account executive with a Raleigh insurance firm, 4 and 3, while Andrade, 22, downed Tim Straub, a teammate on Wake Forest's golf team, 2 and 1.

Beck and Andrade will square off Sunday in a 36-hole match on the par-72, 7,206-yard No. 2 course at Pinehurst.

Beck, a member of the World Junior Cup team, won holes 3, 5, 6, 14 and 15 to advance to the finals, but afterward he talked as much about Simson's game as his own.

"He sure hit some unbelievable golf shots," Beck said. Simson one-putted on nine of the 15 holes.

Andrade, a Wake Forest senior, won holes 3, 5, 9, 13 and 15 before taking the match on the 17th hole.

"This was a really tough match to get up for. It was a kind of weird feeling," Andrade said of playing against his Wake Forest teammate. Andrade made it to the semifinals of the tournament a year ago.

Japanese Baseball

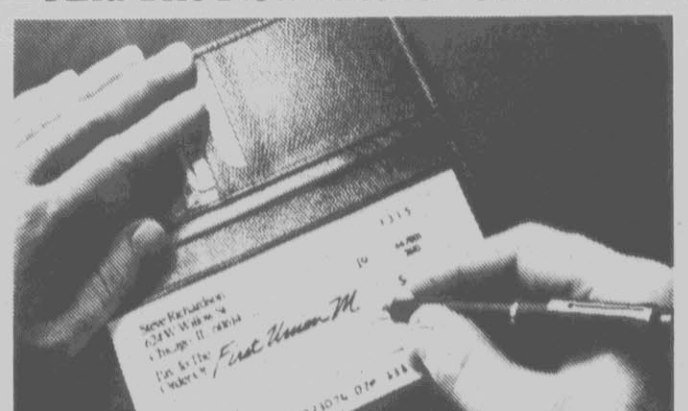

TOKYO (AP) — The Yomiuri Giants posted a 5-2 victory over the Yakult Swallows in Japanese League baseball Saturday as pitcher Luis Sanchez, formerly with the Montreal Expos, was the winner in relief.

The Venezuelan relieved Mitsuo Sumi in the eighth and got the last six outs for his second victory against one loss. Sanchez also has eight saves in 14 games.

Parsons, Vogler, Simon Earn Indy Spots

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Johnny Parsons, Rich Vogler and a nervous Dick Simon earned tentative spots in the Indianapolis 500 lineup Saturday as qualifications, threatened by approaching rain, continued for the May 25 race.

That left just two positions open in the 33-car starting field, but a weather forecast called for rain later Saturday and again on Sunday, the final scheduled day of time trials.

A rainstorm could work to the benefit of Simon, 52, trying to become the oldest driver ever to start the 500. Unless rain shortened qualifications, his speed of 204.978 appeared likely to be bumped from the lineup.

If rain washes out qualifying after the field is full, those already qualified would start the race, but if positions remained open at the official close of time trials — 7 p.m. EDT Sunday — another round of qualifying would be held on the next clear day.

Among the drivers trying to build enough speed to make it into the lineup were veterans Jim Crawford of Scotland, Gary Bettenhausen, Derek Daly of Ireland, Spike Gehlhausen and George Snider, along with Indy rookies Mike Nish, Rupert Keegan of England, Jan Lammers of Holland and Rick Maskiewicz.

Once the field is full, the bumping process will start, with faster qualifiers replacing slower cars already in the tentative lineup. Simon would be the first to go.

Parsons, driving a car bought for him from the elite Penske Racing team this week by his Machinists Union team, moved into the field with a four-lap average of 207.894 mph on the 2½-mile oval.

Parsons, who did not practice in the car until Friday, was the first qualifier on the third of the four days of time trials. He followed an unsuccesful attempt by Crawford, who made one lap at 213.129 before the car's turbocharger blew.

Parsons, 41, was unable to get up to speed in his original entry, and on Wednesday, his team completed a deal with car owner Roger Penske to buy the car that was to have gone to former winner Gordon Johncock.

The deal with Johncock, who said last weekend he intended to come out of a year's retirement, fell through, freeing the car for Parsons. Rick Mears, one of the three Penske drivers and the pole-winner here with a four-lap record of 216.828, tested the car at more than 211 mph before Parsons took over.

"I'm elated," said Parsons, whose father, Johnnie, won the 500 in 1950. "It looked kind of grim. We had hopes for the Eagle (his original entry), but it still needs development. It's a good car but it needs to go back to the drawing board."

Parsons' first lap was his quickest at 209.327 mph. He dropped to 207.182 by the fourth lap.

He was fifth last year, matching his best finish in nine previous starts at Indianapolis.

Vogler turned a four-lap average of 208.089. His car, too, was tested earlier in the week by a former winner, three-time Indy champ Johnny Rutherford.

Simon, in his last opportunity to make the field with his own March, became the slowest among the first 31 to qualify.

Simon, the oldest Indy starter for the past two years, qualified at nearly 209 mph last week, but the run was disallowed by the U.S. Auto Club because of an illegal gasket in the car's turbocharger.

Saturday, he had his hands full, tapping the fourth-turn wall twice on the final two laps.

"The car was ill-handling, and I was breathing hard," Simon said. "We couldn't get the push out of the car. It felt so perfect in the warm-up, but something happened to it, the tires, when I got started."

Simon, who had another unsuccessful qualification attempt last week, was forced to take today's attempt — the third and final one allowed for that entry.

Rudd Takes Bud 500 Pole

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Ricky Rudd edged Dale Earnhardt by a fraction of a second to post the top speed and take the pole Saturday for NASCAR's Budweiser 500.

Rudd took the pole in 0:26.046 seconds at 138.217 mph, which qualifies him for the Busch Clash set for February in Daytona Beach, Fla.

Rudd's last pole was in 1984 when he set the record for the Bud 500 at 140.807 mph in 0:25.567 seconds.

"This feels real good. We didn't win one at all in '85, but we won three in '84, so this is some kind of satisfaction for last year," Rudd said.

"Of course, getting into the prestigious Busch Clash is something else," he said.

The race is set for Sunday on the "Monster Mile" at Dover Downs International Speedway and Dale Earnhardt will be in the No. 2 slot.

Earnhardt had a qualifying speed of 0:26.057 second at 138.158 mph.

Geoff Bodine at 137.777 mph, Richard Petty at 137.598 mph and last year's pole winner Terry Labonte at 137.441 mph, rounded out the top five starters.

Thirty-four cars qualified during the first round and the others were set to qualify later Saturday, following the running of the Budweiser 200.

Bill Elliott, last year's winner, was expected to be in the second round of qualifying, after blowing his engine during morning practice runs.

Rudd, who said he ran "pretty good in practice" and was "one of the fastest cars" on the track didn't know if his Ford would hold up to take the pole.

A new tire compound, used for the first time on the Dover track, and the track sealant, combined to cause a slippery track and a tire that's too hard, Rudd said.

"It's a little safer, but it's slowing the speeds down" by about one second, he said. "But everyone has to deal with the same problem.

"Everybody's had to change their chassis combinations," he said.

Darrell Waltrip, who qualified for the sixth position, said, "It's like you're caught between a rock and a crack."

"It's breathtaking out there," Waltrip said, referring to the slick track and the hard tires.

"You do something to get through the cracks in the track and then you have to do soemthing to adjust for the tires," Waltrip said.

Earnhardt, the only driver on the Winston Cup Grand National circuit to capture two wins this year, said the tires are "making it slower, but it's safer too. I'd rather be slower and safer."

Waltrips Wins Budweiser 200

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip led the last 100 miles to take the checkered flag while Brett Bodine and Jack Ingram battled for second in the Budweiser 200 NASCAR stock car race Saturday.

Waltrip, who started in second position on the "Monster Mile" at Dover Downs International Speedway, had an average speed of 107.930 mph and a two-second margin of victory.

The victory was Waltrip's second straight in the Bud 200.

Waltrip, in second place in the points race this year, took home $9,100 for the Junior Johnson Budweiser racing team before an estimated crowd of 21,000.

"It was a hot day, but this car just ran so good," Waltrip said.

"It's a phenomenal race car. We had made a little change in one of the pit stops, and that helped," he said, adding that the battle for second between Bodine and Ingram "helped me a lot."

Bodine, who had the pole and finished third behind Ingram, led for 70 laps, losing the lead three times to Waltrip and once to Ingram.

Thirteen cars dropped out of the 30-car field, and seven finished on the lead lap.

Davey Allison, who started third, sparked the first of six caution flags when he hit the outside wall in the second turn, did a complete spin and kept on driving.

Most of the cautions were for spin-outs and blown engines, except one three-car crash involving Kenny Burks, Jimmy Lawson and Robert L. Ingram Jr. There were no serious injuries.

Pirates Rally, Top Dukes 7-6

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

The poet might have gotten inspiration from the situation East Carolina University's Pirates faced Friday afternoon in the losers' bracket game of the Colonial Athletic Association's baseball tournament.

The score was 6-5 and the Pirates were down to their last out and not a sign of a hit was in place. Sure, "Casey" Johnson was there in the lineup — the ever-present hope of Pirate fans for the big hit — but there were three batters ahead of him.

But lo, Mont Carter banged a single through the gap into right and Greg Hardison followed with a heart-stopping looper that just nicked the glove of the leaping shortstop for a base hit. And Chris Bradberry was hit by a pitch, loading the bases.

And in stepped "Casey," East Carolina's all-time hit, home run and runs batting in leader, Winfred Johnson.

There would be no repeat of that famous poem, however, for Johnson performed just as the fans expected, unloading the two-run double to right center, giving the Pirates a 7-6 lead that they held onto to claim the victory.

The loss sent James Madison, the top seed of the tournament, headed home — the first casualty of the four-team double-elimination event. The Dukes finish the season with a 35-14 record, their hopes for at least an at-large bid to the the NCAA tournament considered nothing more than a vanished dream now.

For the Pirates, it gave them new life, but a hard road ahead. They were in a position of having to beat UNC-Wilmington, a 3-2 loser to Richmond in the Friday nightcap, in the Saturday afternoon game, and then topping Richmond in the Saturday night affair, forcing a final game on Sunday.

For Johnson, the double was the end of a frustration start to the tournament. He was 0-3 against Richmond on Thursday night and had been 0-4 against the Dukes going into the ninth inning. That had come on the heels of a 15-for-25 performance that ended the regular season.

"They'd been pitching me mostly inside and I'd been swinging at them and missing. This time, I got further off the plate and waiting for an outside pitch and just took it. I wasn't nervous, I just wanted a good swing," Johnson said.

"And you've got to give credit to Mont, Greg and Sarge (Bradberry) for getting on base to give me the opportunity, too."

Johnson, named the CAA's Player of the Year this season, performed in that role with the hit. "He's a good hitter and a clutch player," Coach Gary Overton said. "He came through when we needed it the most."

Jim Peterson went the distance for the Pirates, picking up his 12th win of the year, extending his new single season record. He gave up ten hits, but Overton was generally pleased with his performance. Only three of the runs he allowed were earned.

"Peterson threw very well today. He made only one mistake, the pitch he gave to (Rod) Boddie in the fifth inning." Boddie took that to left for a two-run homer. "We were trying to pitch around him, and that pitch was just a little too much into the strike zone."

Overton lauded Peterson for the performance in the seventh inning when an infield hit, a mental error on a sacrifice and a walk loaded the bases with just one out. But the junior righthander struck out the next two batters to end the threat.

Another mental mistake, in the eighth inning, nearly cost the Pirates too. With one away, Mike Sullivan walked but was then picked off first. Jay McGraw followed with a homer.

"It's always bad to be picked off base, even in hindsight of the homer. It just shows poor baserunning," Overton said.

"Also, I'm not pleased with our defense (three Pirate errors). We haven't played good defense and the errors today were costly. Defense is going to play a bigger role from here on in because teams are getting down in their staffs."

The game was scoreless until the fourth inning although both teams had opportunities to push men over in the first three frames.

Madison finally got a run in the fourth to take the initial lead. Glen Deren led off with a single to right and he moved up on a sacrifice. Deren moved to third on a ground out, scoring when Bobby Ivanicki reached on an error.

East Carolina came back to tie it up with a run in the top of the fifth. Sullivan was hit by a pitch and was sacrificed to second. He dashed home on Steve Sides' single to center, leaping over the catcher and back-handing the plate for the run.

Madison then pushed back into the lead with two in the bottom of the frame, 3-1. With two away, Mike Mathews singled and Boddie followed with his homer to left.

East Carolina struck for three runs in the sixth. Carter beat out an infield hit and Hardison followed with what appeared to be just a pop-up to deep right. But the ball kept drifting, finally dropping over the fence for a two-run homer that tied it at 3-3.

Two outs later, Sullivan singled and McGraw drew a walk. Sides again delivered to center, driving in Sullivan with the go-ahead run for the Pirates, 4-3.

East Carolina added a fifth run in the eighth on McGraw's solo homer.

But in the bottom of the eighth, the Dukes came back to score three and take a 6-5 lead. With one away, Ivanicki singled and pinchhitter Nick DeVincentis reached on a two-base error. Scott Mackie followed with a single to center, scoring both runners to tie it up. With two away, Mathews singled to right, scoring Mackie with the go-ahead run.

Then, in the top of the ninth, when it looked the darkest for the Pirates, the light suddenly burst through as Carter, Hardison, Bradberry and Johnson all delivered to give East Carolina the lead again.

Madison put a man on in the bottom of the ninth on an error, but a fly ball ended the game, sending the Pirates on in the tournament and the Dukes home.

Carter and Hardison led the Pirate hitting with three each while Sides added two. Mathews had three for Madison while Mackie had a pair.

East Carolina went into Saturday's game with a 38-9 record.

Leaping Score

East Carolina's Mark Sullivan (7) leaps high over the attempted tag of James Madison catcher Robert Trumbo in the fifth inning of Friday's CAA tournament game. Sullivan scored the run and East Carolina went on to take a 7-6 win in the losers' bracket contest. (Reflector Photo by Cliff Hollis)

The winner of that game will advance to the second round, to be played by May 23. The opponent will be the survivor of the contest between the Triangle Conference's winner and the Tar-Roanoke Conference runner-up.

On the 4-A scene, Rose, which shared the Big East Conference title with Rocky Mount, drew the number two seed and will play host to Wilmington Hoggard on Tuesday at 8 p.m. at Guy Smith Stadium.

Admission for the game will be $3.

Second round games in the softball tournament must be played by Wednesday.

Williamston Wins Crown

ROANOKE RAPIDS — Williamston High School rallied for five runs in the seventh inning and gained an 8-3 softball victory over Roanoke Rapids Friday.

The win clinched the Northeastern Conference title for the Lady Tigers, who finished the year with a 10-2 record both overall and in the league.

Williamston now moves into the State 1A/2A playoffs, hosting Currituck in the first round Monday at 7:30 p.m.

Williamston scored first, getting a run in the top of the first. Two more crossed in the third. Roanoke Rapids, however, rallied for two in the bottom of the third to close to within 3-2.

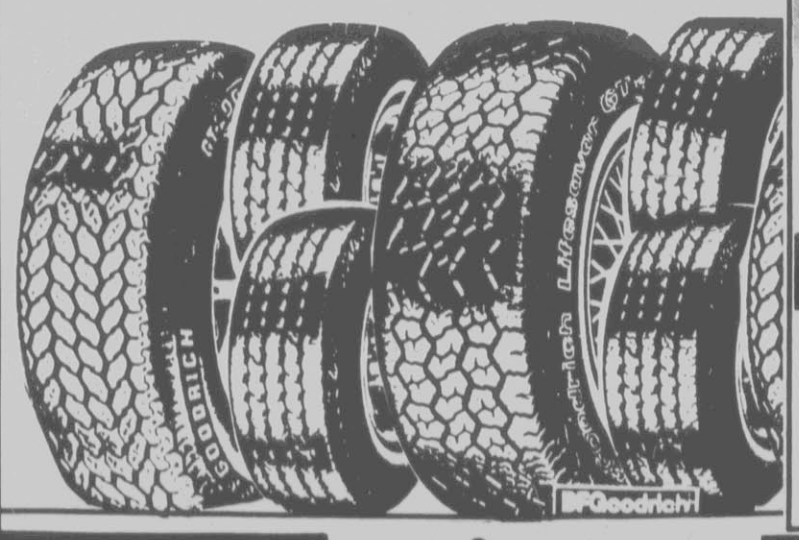

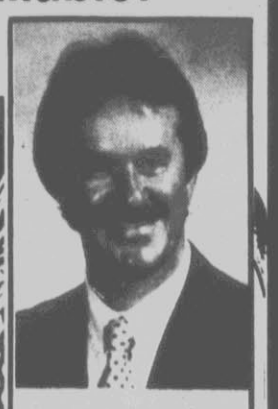

Williamston put the game away, however, scoring five times in the seventh. Keisha Moore and Chan Miller led off the seventh with singles. Moore then scored when Sharon Whitfield reached on an error. Shelly Harrington singled in Miller. Jan Mills reached on an error, scoring Whitfield, and a second error on the play let Harrington score. Mills ended up on third and scored when Shirley Godard's grounder was errored.

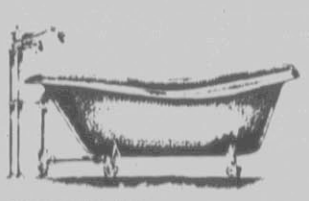

Roanoke Rapids came back with one in the bottom of the inning.

Harrington led the Williamston hitting with three while Mills had two. Mills had a solo homer in the first. No one had more than one hit for the Lady Yellow Jackets, but Leighann Byrd had a two-run homer in the third.

Richmond Nips Seahawks, 3-2

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Staff Writer

Richmond pitcher C.P. Richardson survived the ninth inning just as he had the previous eight by getting the outs just when he appeared on the verge of collapse. Richardson held on and gave the Spiders a 3-2 victory over UNC-Wilmington in the Colonial Athletic Association's baseball tournament Friday night.

With two outs in the top of the ninth and the tying run on third, Richardson walked right fielder Mark Maultsby to bring up first baseman Chuck Jones, who already had three hits and had scored both of the Seahawks runs.

It looked like panic time for Richardson, but he got Jones to hit a routine hopper to shortstop Mike Zambo, whose throw to first baseman Andy Malloy ended the game.

It was a pattern Richardson followed throughout the night. The freshman righthander put himself in dangerous positions by letting runners get on base in every inning but the first and fifth. Richardson went the distance, giving up two runs on seven hits with eight walks and four strikeouts.

"That's been his pattern," said Ronnie Atkins, Richmond head coach. Atkins said that Richardson tends to get a little wild but then he usually settles down.

"He pitched well, we just didn't support him," Atkins said. The Spiders got six hits, with no one batter picking up more than one hit.

Richmond scored all its runs in the first inning. With two outs, left fielder Greg Harding got things started when he was walked by Seahawks pitcher Curtis Hopper. Malloy followed with a single to right field. Second baseman Bubba Paris got on with a single to center field that loaded the bases.

Shortstop Mike Zambo's single to center field scored Harding. Designated hitter Kevin Sickinger knocked in Malloy and Paris, but Sickinger was thrown out trying to stretch his hit into a double.

For the remainder of the game the Spiders were shackled by Hopper who limited them to only two more hits. Hopper struck out six and walked only one in eight innings. "After that first inning, he (Hopper) pitched a heckuva ball game," Atkins said.

Jones scored both of UNCW's runs. The first run came in the second inning when third baseman Tom Heitler's sacrifice fly brought him home from third. The second came in the sixth when he was knocked in by center fielder John Catalano's sacrifice fly. Jones went 3-5 for the game with two doubles.

The Seahawks as a team collected seven hits but left 12 men on base. "We hit the ball hard," said UNCW coach Bobby Guthrie. "They have (just) been in the right place. Things are working well for them."

The Seahawks lost to the Spiders in a game in early April by the same score in which they also left a lot of men on base, Guthrie said.

Richardson improved to 6-5 on the season with the win, while the Spiders moved to 23-28. The Seahawks dropped to 29-27 while Hopper dropped to 7-6.

The Spiders came into the tournament on a three-game losing streak but have now won two straight. Atkins said his teams record is not really indicative of their play because the Spiders took an early season road trip and lost four to Florida State and two to Auburn, two perennial powers and midway through March had a 2-11 record.

"My philosophy is if you play good competition, you will be ready at tournament time," Atkins said.

Phillips' Cycle Paces Oakland

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Oakland's Tony Phillips and California's Wally Joyner are wielding torrid bats, which is only natural since they are natives of Hot-lanta, Georgia.

Phillips, a career .257 hitter in three previous seasons, became the first player in Oakland's 19-year major-league history to hit for the cycle. He opened the game with a home run, then added a triple, double and two singles as the A's defeated Baltimore 8-4 Friday night and snapped the Orioles' six-game winning streak.

"It was a great night, a real thrill," said the second baseman. "I never hit for the cycle before, not at any level of ball. It was just one of those nights when everything falls in."

Two of the balls Joyner hit fell into the seats at Tiger Stadium. The sensational rookie leads the majors with 15 homers and 37 RBI and Gary Pettis and Dick Schofield also homered as the Angels pounded the struggling Detroit Tigers 11-1.

"It stuns me. I've hit 15 home runs. I've never hit 15 homers in my life," said Joyner, who hit 27 in three minor-league seasons. "It doesn't even feel like I've got a home run. I can't explain that. I'm swinging hard and the ball's just going over the fence, that's all."

In other American League games, it was Texas 4, Boston 1; Seattle 7, New York 3; Chicago 4, Kansas City 2; Toronto 7, Cleveland 6, and Milwaukee 7, Minnesota 6.

Phillips, who raised his batting average 25 points to .326, opened the game against Storm Davis with his second homer of the season. He singled two runs home in the A's three-run second, doubled and scored in their two-run fourth, singled in the fifth and tripled home a run in the eighth.

"I just went up there trying to make contact," Phillips said of his eighth-inning at-bat. "I was trying to drive in a run. I've always wanted to be a .300 hitter; that's my main goal."

Moore said the A's needed a leadoff hitter and he talked to Phillips about it over the winter.

"He was very excited about it and we couldn't ask for him to do any more than he's done for us," Moore said.

Moose Haas, 7-1, allowed eight hits in six innings-plus, including a two-run homer by Larry Sheets, to become the AL's first seven-game winner.

Angels 11, Tigers 1

The four homers made it easy for Mike Witt, who scattered seven hits. Loser Dan Petry lasted only 1 2-3 innings, giving up five runs on three hits.

Joyner, who has homered in six of his last eight games, crushed a drive off the facing of the third deck in right field in the first inning. In the seventh, he blasted a Bill Campbell delivery into the second deck, another solo shot.

"That's got to be the best part of this whole thing, just to see Wally," Witt said. "I'd come to the park just to watch Wally hit. In fact, I do when I'm not pitching."

"I'm new to the surroundings," Joyner said. "Nobody knows me yet. I'm sure the next time around they're going to pitch me a little better. That's not to say they're not pitching me good now."

Manager Gene Mauch said he's never seen a rookie "contact the ball as solidly as Wally has. It really is something to see. It's a pleasure. He just refuses to let people take his good swing away from him. Campbell got him out on his front foot, then he came back and got his good swing on the next pitch."

Rangers 4, Red Sox 1

Oddibe McDowell, rookie Pete Incaviglia and Steve Buechele backed Jose Guzman's seven-hit pitching with leadoff home runs in the first, sixth and seventh innings, negating a career-high 14 strikeouts by Boston's Bruce Hurst. Guzman lost his shutout bid on Steve Lyons' pinch homer in the ninth. McDowell's leadoff homer was the first off Hurst since Opening Day. The left-hander leads the majors with 71 strikeouts, two ahead of teammate Roger Clemens.

Mariners 7, Yankees 3

Hot-hitting Jim Presley drove in four runs and Mark Langston held New York scoreless until the eighth inning. Seattle has won five of seven games since Dick Williams replaced Chuck Cottier as manager, while New York has lost three straight, five of seven overall and six of its last seven games.

Presley's two-run single highlighted a three-run third inning against Joe Niekro that gave Seattle a 4-0 lead. He delivered another two-run single in the Mariners' three-run seventh and has hit in eight straight games, going 14-for-32.

White Sox 4, Royals 2

Reid Nichols' three-run double in the fifth inning and four hits by Harold Baines led Chicago to its third straight triumph and sixth in eight games since Manager Tony LaRussa was given a vote of confidence last week. It also ended their six-game losing streak at home and snapped the Royals' four-game winning streak.

Blue Jays 7, Indians 6

Jesse Barfield hit a three-run double to highlight a five-run sixth-inning rally. Barfield also had an RBI single in the fifth.

The Blue Jays entered the sixth trailing 4-2 but tied the game on an RBI double by Rance Mulliniks and a run-scoring single by George Bell. With the bases loaded, Barfield hit a pitch from loser Tom Candiotti into the gap in left-center for a 7-4 lead. Julio Franco and Andre Thornton homered for Cleveland, which has dropped three straight and six of its last seven games.

Brewers 7, Twins 6

Cecil Cooper opened the ninth inning with a triple and Bill Schroeder singled over a drawn-in outfield as Milwaukee overcame a club record 19 runners left on base. After Cooper tripled off reliever Ron Davis, Ben Oglivie was walked intentionally. Juan Castillo ran for Cooper and scored when Schroeder singled to the right-field wall. The victory went to Mark Clear, who struck out four and did not allow a hit over the final two innings.

The Twins led 6-3 but a sacrifice fly by Cerone and Yount's RBI single in the fifth made it 6-5. Milwaukee tied it in the sixth when Schroeder singled, was sacrificed to second and scored on Dale Sveum's double.

Tech Hands 1st Loss To State

DURHAM (AP) — North Carolina was to take on Georgia Tech and top-seeded North Carolina State met Clemson in the fourth round of the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball tournament Saturday at Durham Athletic Park.

The winners were play in Saturday's nightcap, with the championship game, if necessary, Sunday.

The Tar Heels jumped out to a 5-0 first-inning lead Friday behind Scott Johnson's 10th homer of the season and Mike Jedziniak's seventh homer. The Tar Heels then held off a Virginia comeback to down the Cavaliers 9-7.

"Virginia really battled," said North Carolina coach Mike Roberts. "I felt it was going to be close. We made the guys try to jerk the ball out of the park because we needed to get out in front early, and we couldn't do that with singles. Our goal was to try to get two or three runs in the first" inning.

Virginia, which lost to the Tar Heels 5-4 in 11 innings in Wednesday's first round, became the second team to be eliminated from the tournament. Wake Forest exited after losing to Maryland Thursday.

In the second contest Friday, Clemson shortstop Bill Spiers smashed two homers, including a three-run shot in the 10th inning, to lead the Tigers past Maryland 7-2.

"We had our chances to win the ballgame. We didn't do what we had to do," said Maryland coach Jack Jackson.

"We had a lot of young players. I thought we'd get some help from our older players this year, but it didn't work out," Jackson said. "We had to push some of the younger guys who had no business being in there, but it's going to help us in the long run. It gives us something to build on for next year."

Maryland ends the season at 18-29.

In the third contest Friday, Riccardo Ingram hit a three-run homer in the second inning to key Georgia Tech to a 7-3 victory over North Carolina State.

Rockets Take Lead On Lakers

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets have beaten the Los Angeles Lakers two straight games to take a 2-1 lead in their NBA playoff series, but they're not pounding their chests and proclaiming themselves Western Conference champions.

"Right now, in my mind, it is still 1-0 at home and the monkey is still on our backs," Rockets guard Robert Reid said after Friday night's 117-109 victory. "They can win here Sunday and still go back to Los Angeles with momentum."

The Rockets actually lead the best-of-7 series 2-1 following Friday's victory behind a 40-point performance by Akeem Olajuwon.

But the Rockets know the defending NBA champions will be well-prepared for Sunday's fourth game, also in The Summit.

"There was no quit in them tonight and there won't be any Sunday," Olajuwon said. "The pressure is still on us because we can't afford to lose a game at home."

Olajuwon's dominating performance helped the Rockets overcome 33 points by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and 29 by James Worthy.

The Rockets battled for a 60-59 lead at the half and fought back from a one-point third-quarter deficit when Lewis Lloyd hit the first two baskets of the fourth period.

The Lakers tied the game four more times, but they never got the lead. Ralph Sampson's basket with 4:15 to play broke the final tie and gave the Rockets a 107-105 lead.

"We couldn't get away from them and they couldn't get away from us," Abdul-Jabbar said. "We need a win in here. We just have to go back to the drawing board and see what happens Sunday."

The fifth game in the series is scheduled Wednesday in Los Angeles.

Worthy's performance was an encouraging sign for the Lakers — he averaged only 13.6 points in the first two games of the seriesre just falling."

Houston's victory prevented the Lakers from repeating last year's feat, when they split their first two games against Denver, then won three straight to eliminate the Nuggets for the conference title.

The Lakers then beat Boston for the NBA title.

"Jabbar is still one of the greatest, but when it came down to the end, our big guys came out and took it to them," Reid said. "It just went back and forth until we got the edge."

The Lakers had won 14 of their last 15 games in The Summit.

"The 14 losses weren't involved with everyone on this team, only two or three were involved," Houston center Ralph Sampson said. "This is the team of the future."

The Rockets' and Lakers' big men finished the game in foul trouble. Sampson, Olajuwon and Abdul-Jabbar all had five personal fouls.

"We couldn't be as aggressive, but at least we could show that we were still around," Sampson said.

Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley said Olajuwon's sterling effort was a key to the victory.

"The effort plays he made to go into the gut to pick up loose balls and put them in was a big factor," Riley said. "We've got to come back strong Sunday and try to even this thing up."

Ruling Could Affect Many

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A federal judge's ruling that records of the Southwest Conference and the NCAA are subject to public disclosure under the Texas Open Records Act could reach to other states with similar laws, according to an attorney in the case.

Acting on a suit filed by The Dallas Morning News, the Dallas Times Herald and Belo Broadcasting, U.S. District Judge James Nowlin ruled on Friday that the NCAA and SWC must turn over informaton obtained in investigations of SWC football programs.

George Gangwere, chief attorney for the NCAA, said he was "disappointed" by the ruling and fears it will hinder future investigations by the association. Gangwere said he believes the NCAA will appeal the order "if we can find some reason for doing so, because this is a significant issue."

"I think on the surface it will remove all confidentiality, and that could be harmful," SWC Commissioner Fred Jacoby said. "The NCAA system is based on voluntary cooperation. And that's the very problem. These matters are very confidential."

"This could have a chilling effect on the process," said David Berst, the NCAA's enforcement director. "This could have a far-reaching negative impact on our ability to process infractions cases."

But Dr. Frank Remington, a University of Wisconsin law professor who chairs the NCAA Committee on Infractions, said that in states that have open records laws, the NCAA still has been able to conduct investigations. Those states includes Florida and Arizona, in which there have been several major cases in the past five years.

"I don't think it interferes with effective investigation or enforcement," Remington said. "There are times when the premature release of information would hurt, but I think it's been good."

The NCAA and athletic conferences normally consider information uncovered in investigations to be confidential. Currently, three SWC schools — Southern Methodist, Baylor and Texas Christian — are on probation for violating NCAA rules.

Since its 1953 reorganization, the NCAA has lost only two of more than 100 court cases, according to Gangwere.

One case involved a suit brought by the University of Georgia and Oklahoma University, which challenged NCAA control of television football rights. The Supreme Court ruled against the NCAA in 1984.

In the other case, involving the NCAA's suspension of Nevada-Las Vegas basketball Coach Jerry Tarkanian, the NCAA lost in a state court but has appealed the case to the Nevada Supreme Court.

Attorney Robert Middleton of Dallas, who represents the SWC, said he had not seen the ruling and didn't know whether it would be appealed.

Spokesman David Cawood, reached at the NCAA's Mission, Kan., headquarters, said he was aware of the ruling, but that the organization "wouldn't have any comment until we saw the order from the court."

The SWC and NCAA maintained that they are private associations and, as such, their proceedings and official acts are not subject to public scrutiny.

But Nowlin rejected that argument, saying the athletic associations not only receive state funds but provide no "specific measurable service" in return, thus putting them under the Open Records Act.

"No matter how the NCAA has obtained its ownership interest in the funds, it has received public funds," Nowlin said. "The NCAA gives nothing in exchange for these particular public funds." Nowlin gave the SWC and the NCAA 20 days to turn over to his office the information sought by the news organizations. He will then review the documents in private and decide what is specifically exempt from public disclosure by the state law.

William D. Sims Jr. of Dallas, an attorney representing The News, said he was pleased with the ruling and noted that it was the first time a federal judge has interpreted the state's Open Records Act, which was passed in 1973.

"I think that for the very first time you have a U.S. district judge telling the NCAA that its practice of hiding behind the privacy argument while receiving thousands and thousands of dollars from state schools is not going to work anymore," Sims said.

The Open Records Act specifically prohibits the release of information about police investigations, pending litigation and anything from personnel files that "would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

In his ruling, Nowlin said the associations receive public funds through the member state institutions. Those funds, he said, come in the form of dues paid by state schools, assessments against their proceeds from television broadcast rights and the use of state facilities and employees.

He also rejected the NCAA's claim that it is exempt from the Texas act because it is headquartered in Kansas.

Spawning Tips

Spring is the time of peak fishing fever. To take full advantage of the spring season, it pays to understand how bass behave in three distinct spring periods: pre-spawn, spawn and post-spawn.

Generally speaking, the most important factors in reading these periods are water temperature, weed growth and the developing food chain.

Warming water temperatures sets off the spawning instinct. Once the bass is done with the spawn, it wants to have a source of cover available where it can recuperate from its spawning frenzy and can exert little effort in catching prey. That's where weed growth comes in.

The penetration of sunlight is a key factor in the pre-spawn period. Some pros have dubbed this early cycle the "pre-spawn picnic" because of the ravenous feeding frenzy bass have at times. During this period bass school up, so the smart angler can also have a "picnic."

Where does a bass fisherman start fishing in spring?

Most pros suggest the northwest side of a body of water or coves that run northwest. They are protected more from the north wind so anglers won't have to worry about the wind blowing on them. Because the sun shines on these waters longer, they should be the first pockets of warmth on a body of water. This is where the fish generally spawn first.

On the northwest side, key in on rocks, rock piles, overhanging trees and other structures that absorb sunlight and, in turn, radiate heat into the surrounding water. You can usually bet that bass will be snuggled up close to these "heaters."

As a general rule of thumb, the pre-spawn period comes when the water temperature is 48 to 58 degrees Fahrenheit. If there is a temperature drop, bass move out from the shallow bedding area (usually on the north or northwest side of the body of water), but will come back when there is a corresponding temperature rise. This is the best time to take a lot of bass with crank baits and rapellas.

When the water temperature reaches 58 degrees, and until it exceeds 65 degrees, there will be spawning. However, other factors affecting spawning include bottom conditions and hormone levels. So, contrary to what some anglers think, all bass in a certain area don't spawn at the same time. Some spawn earlier, others later. At any given time in this temperature frame, you may have bass that are in the pre-spaw, spawn and post-spawn cycles, depending on their own biological clock.

Finally, the post-spawn period has a water temperature range of 65 degrees to 68 degrees, which is a very narrow range. For the most part, bass are just "dead" during this period; they don't bite and the big females are off in the depths recuperating.

When fishing during the spawing period, be sure to cast beyond your target. Bring the lure back toward the spawning bed, where you should let it agitate the bass guarding the bed. No harm generally comes to fish caught during this period if the bass is released so that it can renew its watch on the bed and safeguard the hatch from predators.

Didn't Know About Memo

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle says he knew nothing about a a memo from his league's Management Council that called for a "closet" meeting to "scare" the league's owners about the USFL.

And an NFL spokesman says no such meeting ever took place.

The memo was introduced Friday by USFL counsel Harvey Myerson during Rozelle's second day of testimony in the USFL's antitrust suit against the NFL in an effort to prove that the NFL intended to stifle competition between the two leagues.

It was was written to the staff of the Management Council, which handles labor matters for the owners, by Jack Donlan, its executive director. It was dated Feb. 21, 1984 and was introduced by the USFL, which is attempting to prove the NFL's anti-competitive intent.

"There is going to be a 'closet' meeting of all the owners before the league meeting at a place and time yet to be decided," the memo read in part. "My function is to scare all of them about the USFL, e.g. economics, draft, undergraduates ..."

Rozelle, however, said the first he had ever heard of the memo was when Myerson brought it up at a pretrial hearing concerning the suit, in which the USFL is seeking $1.32 billion in damages and asks that the NFL be barred from one of the major television networks. Joe Browne, the league's spokesman, said after the sesion that the "closet" meeting never took place.

Myerson spent much of the day questioning Rozelle, who will return to the witness stand on Monday.

Russell's Bunt Gives L.A. Win

By JOHN KREISER
AP Sports Writer

Bill Russell didn't need to hit the ball very far when Los Angeles Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda sent him up as a pinch-hitter in the 11th inning with runners on first and third and one out.

"All you want to do is put the ball in play," said Russell, whose perfect squeeze bunt scored Mike Marshall and gave the Dodgers a 4-3 victory over the New York Mets Friday night.

"I was going to do everything I possibly could to squeeze with Russell," Lasorda said.

Dave Anderson led off the 11th with an infield single off Jesse Orosco, 0-1, who had not given up a run in 12 appearances this season. Marshall forced Anderson at second, then dashed to third on a hit-and-run single by Mike Scioscia.

Russell watched a ball, then laid down a perfect bunt up the third base line. Mets third baseman Ray Knight had no choice but to see if the ball would roll foul, but it died on the grass in fair territory as the winning run crossed the plate.

"He threw it in a good spot," Russell said. "I was fortunate to get a bat on it and for the ball to stay fair. I watched it all the way and was hoping it would slow down. The guys told me it was fair by inches."

Ken Howell, 1-2, got the win with two scoreless innings in relief of Orel Hershiser, who struck out 10 and allowed six hits in nine innings. Two of the three Mets' runs were unearned.

Dwight Gooden pitched the first eight innings for the Mets, allowing seven hits and three unearned runs while striking out seven.

In other National League games, Atlanta beat St. Louis 6-2, Cincinnati downed Pittsburgh 7-2, Houston rallied to beat Chicago 9-6, Montreal nipped San Diego 3-2 and Philadelphia beat San Francisco 3-0.

Braves 6, Cardinals 2

Atlanta's Bob Horner isn't entirely disappointed with his .231 batting average.

"I'm hitting fourth and I'm supposed to drive in runs," Horner said after driving in two with a single and a sacrifice fly to help Atlanta turn back visiting St. Louis.

Horner's sacrifice fly off Bob Forsch, 2-2, broke a 2-2 tie in the sixth and Ozzie Virgil added a pair of run-scoring singles to back Rick Mahler, 3-4, who allowed four hits but walked seven.

Reds 7, Pirates 2

Buddy Bell, who had just two RBI entering the game, drove in three runs with a double and a triple to lead Cincinnati past Pittsburgh for the Reds' third victory in 15 home games. Bell is hitting .414 over his last 10 games after beginning the season in a deep slump.

Bell's two-run double helped pin the loss on Rick Rhoden, 2-3. John Denny, 2-4, got the win with relief help from John Franco.

"I knew it was eventually going to come around. It just took longer than I would have liked it to," Bell said. "Everybody needs a confidence boost. I'll take this."

Astros 9, Cubs 6

Glenn Davis had three RBI and Houston rallied for six runs in the sixth inning to overtake visiting Chicago. Davis singled in two runs in the first, then capped a run of six straight base hits in the sixth with an RBI single. Julio Solano, 3-0, got the win. Jay Baller, 1-2, was the loser. Jody Davis had a pair of solo homers for Chicago.

Expos 3, Padres 2

Homers by Mitch Webster, Mike Fitzgerald and Hubie Brooks lifted visiting Montreal over San Diego in a game where all the runs were all scored on home runs. Webster hit his third in the seventh to tie the game 1-1, Fitzgerald untied it with his fourth, off Andy Hawkins, 2-3, leading off the eighth, and Brooks hit his eighth of the season in the ninth.

Steve Garvey hit his seventh homer in the fourth off Joe Hesketh, 2-3, and Graig Nettles had his fourth homer in the ninth off Jeff Reardon, who posted his seventh save.

Phillies 3, Giants 0

Steve Carlton teamed with Kent Tekulve for a five-hit shutout and picked up his 316th career win as the Phillies opened a West Coast trip by blanking San Francisco for their first shutout this season. Carlton, 2-5, had a three-hitter entering the eighth, but gave way to Tekulve after allowing a pair of one-out singles. Tekulve got the last five outs for his first save.

"The best explanation I can give you is that he's Steve Carlton. If anyone is capable of coming back, he is," Phillies' Manager John Felske said of the veteran pitcher, who entered the game with a 5.88 earned run average.

Two of the three Philadelphia runs off loser Roger Mason, 2-3, were unearned.

Flames Win 1st Match

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Whether playing shorthanded or at even strength, the Calgary Flames were simply too much for the Montreal Canadiens to handle in the opening game of the Stanley Cup finals.

"The biggest thing was that we only allowed them two goals," Calgary's Dan Quinn said after Friday night's 5-2 victory put the Flames one-up on the Canadiens in this best-of-7 NHL title series. "We stressed defense and we waited to create our offensive opportunities."

For the first time in this year's playoffs, a team scored more than five goals against the defense-minded Canadiens. But it was the Flames' defense — specifically the penalty-killing units — that shut down Montreal and opened some eyes at the Olympic Saddledome.

After giving up Mats Naslund's first-period goal on a power play, the Flames stopped five straight manpower advantages by the Canadiens, one of the NHL's top power-play teams this year. During one of Montreal's power plays, Quinn scored a shorthanded goal for the Campbell Conference champions.

"I guess my goal was pretty timely," said Quinn, whose score at 2:14 of the third period provided the Flames with a 3-1 lead.

Just 79 seconds later, Lanny McDonald knocked in the clincher for Calgary.

"The shorthanded goal (by Quinn) was the crucial goal of the game, I think," McDonald said. "The shorthanded goal gave us momentum."

It also gave the Flames some more breathing room. They had been clinging to a tenuous one-goal lead for the better part of the game before Quinn scored a goal that he essentially manufactured himself.

Stealing the puck from Montreal's Chris Chelios at mid-ice, Quinn skated into the lower left faceoff circle and whistled his shot past Montreal goaltender Patrick Roy on the far side.

"All I did was try to shoot there," Quinn said, "and I found enough of an opening. It sure helps to score early in the third period."

McDonald then made it 4-1 in Calgary's favor when he fired a searing 20-foot shot from the slot after the puck glanced off the stick of teammate Nick Fotiu.

"The puck just got on my stick and I managed to get it over on Lanny's stick," said Fotiu, who was in the right faceoff circle after a faceoff. "I didn't have to do too much work."

At first, the Canadiens seemed to be outworking the Flames, who were making their debut in the NHL finals; Montreal has been this far 26 previous times. Montreal scored on Naslund's goal and then held off the Flames for six more minutes.

Finally, Tonelli tied it when he skated across the crease and banged in the rebound of a slapshot by Al MacInnis at 12:08.

"I just tapped it in," Tonelli said. "I went to the net and tonight it paid off."

Jim Peplinski put the Flames up 2-1 with a goal at 19:11 and Calgary led the rest of the way, thanks to the third-period goals by Quinn and McDonald and Doug Risebrough's empty-netter at the end.

Group Wants To Convince Public That Purchasing Furniture Is Fun

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

American furniture makers took a survey and found to their chagrin that consumers are nervous about buying furniture.

"They say they don't know how to recognize quality, don't know how to judge between two pieces which look the same but have different prices and don't feel furniture floor salesmen are doing a good job," according to Doug Brackett, executive vice president of the American Furniture Manufacturers Association.

Brackett says the results of three focus group panels conducted in California, Texas and the Baltimore-Washington area indicate the industry needs to make friends and influence people in order to regain what it regards as its lost market share.

"Ten to 15 years ago, the industry took from 1.1 to 1.2 percent of disposable income; today we take .92 percent. If we could get back to 1 percent it would represent a gain of $2 billion," he added.

Nowadays, people are doing what they want to do and spending money on things that give them personal pleasure. And that includes buying sailboats, videocassette players, vacations and even health club memberships instead of furniture.

The AFMA is planning to spend $1 million over the next three years to convince people that buying furniture is fun. But it remains to be seen if that money will do any good. The plans for booklets and advertising campaigns seem to miss the point which an executive put in a few words that didn't cost anything.

"People don't like to be abused," says Patrick Norton, a longtime industry executive. "Just treat people decently and service the furniture and you can get virtually any price." In other words, it's not what you say that counts, but what you do.

His and Hers:

Take an easy-chair frame and cover it in the same fabric but make one to fit a big person, with a seat that is 17½ inches off the floor and make another 15½ inches off the floor. Give the larger chair about three inches more back. The result is "his and hers chairs," which look like a pair but offer greater seating comfort to a wider variety of people.

Drexel-Heritage introduced the chairs at the High Point, N.C., Furniture market, but the idea for the product came from the field when a furniture retailer requested it, said a company spokesman.

What really appeals to people?

O. B. Solie, a veteran furniture designer, says it's natural materials, especially those which are known to be long-lasting, hard-wearing and heavy.

"A permanent consumer appeal appears to be the basic strength of a material. Consumers value materials such as stone, solid wood, leather and glass."

Perhaps that's why some people are still suspicious of veneers and prefer solid wood. A veneer is a "face," but solid wood is the real thing. This idea seems as good as any to help explain a phenomenon noticed at the market: the widespread use of stone and faux stone in furniture.

Solie himself designed a glass buffet and then pierced it with a piece of travertine marble for decoration. A small company capitalizing on the interest in stone has taken the name AKA Stone. Lana Schervone, owner of the Los Angeles-based firm serving mainly decorators, says that faux stone has been doing well for at least 10 years in her area and is currently spreading out beyond California's borders.

At the opposite end of the spectrum from stone is the tricky cabinetry conceived by Paul Evans for DIA. Mirror-fronted cabinet door fronts lift open through the magic of a hand-held remote control device. The interiors can be organized in many configurations to accommodate a home computer, audio and video equipment, record storage, clothes.

Figure an all-inclusive $20,000 to pay for the floor-to-ceiling cabinetry and that includes installation.

Evans said that despite his reputation for intricate and expensive furniture, his own favorite designs were cardboard furniture he'd created back in the '60s. It was clever and good looking, but it didn't sell. This furniture has not suffered the same fate. After all, doctors have to put something in their houses, Evans joked.

Garden Clinic

Q. Please give me some information on Lenten roses.

A. Lenten roses (Helleborus orientalis) are not true roses. They are evergreen perennials that bloom in midwinter with flowers of white to purple. The actual flowers do not last long, but the bracts remain giving the appearance of flowers for months. They are easy to grow but often slow to establish. Plant them in the shade and give them ample quantities of bone meal or dolomitic limestone for their high calcium needs.

Q. How much sunlight do geraniums need?

A. Most varieties of geraniums grow and flower best in full sunlight, but six to eight hours of sunlight per day are usually sufficient. When planted in light to moderate shade flowering will be reduced.

Q. Are yellow tomatoes less acidic than red tomatoes?

A. Actually, some yellow tomatoes are more acidic than red varieties. Often when seed catalogues describe a tomato as a "low acid" variety, they mean that the variety has a higher sugar content and therefore tastes less acid or acidic. Also, tomato acidity can vary with the amount of sunlight the plant receives, the location of the fruit on the plant and the degree of ripeness. However, all tomato varieties grown in North Carolina are acidic enough for canning. There is no significant nutritional difference between ripe tomatoes of either yellow or red varieties. Though the nutritional value of the tomato is not particularly high, tomatoes rank first in total contribution of 10 vitamins and minerals to the American diet because they are so heavily consumed.

Q. — Is it true that pouring coffee grounds down the sink drain every week or so will help to keep the drain from clogging? A friend of mine says this is true, but I seem to have some recollection of reading that it isn't. What's the real story?

A. — The real story is that, no matter how many times we say it isn't so, somebody writes in to ask about it. Once and for all, it's a story that has been making the rounds for many years and is completely false. Put coffee grounds or anything similar down the drain and it won't do anything except clog it. If there is the least accumulation of grease in the pipes, the coffee grounds will catch on it and cause a stoppage.

Q. — Our basement walls have never been painted, but I would like to do so now. They are made of concrete or what I have been told is poured cement. Is there any special paint I should use to get the best results?

A. — Ordinary oil paint is not compatible with the alkali in cement. Your best bet is probably a latex paint made especially for such walls. You can also use a portland cement paint, which can be used only on unpainted surfaces.

Q. — I will be doing some interior painting soon. Most of it will be done with a roller, but in some places I will be using one or more brushes. I have just disposed of all the old paint brushes in my house and plan on buying some new ones. I saw a magazine article recently about preparing a new brush for use, but it gave no details. What is the procedure?

A. — Most people use a new brush without any advance preparation. A professional painter usually takes a brush and twirls the handle between his hands briskly for several minutes. One hand is then rubbed back and forth across the bristles a few times. The idea is to get rid of all loose bristles, but that is not always necessary with some kinds of synthetic bristles. An especially particular painter will often wrap the bristles in a heavy paper (not a newspaper or anything with print on it) and suspend it in linseed oil for about 24 hours, but here again this is not required with a synthetic, such as nylon. More important than the preuse preparation is the care you take of the brush after it has been used. It should be cleaned immediately with the proper solvent — turpentine or mineral spirits for oil paints, enamel and varnish; water for latexes; lacquer thinner for lacquers, and denatured alcohol for shellac. To make sure you are using the right solvent, read the label on the container and see whether anything special is recommended.

Power Tools Go Cordless

By BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Anyone who's ever tried to untangle a 50-foot extension cord, looked high and low for a three-prong plug adapter, or come up a foot or two short when running a power line to do a job can imagine the potential of cordless power tools.

But just how well do these new tools work? Here's a report from the June issue of Better Homes and Gardens:

Cordless tools won't replace their tethered cousins, but they're so handy that once you've tried them you'll wonder how you ever got along without them. Irritating little jobs that keep you moving — putting up curtain rods, for example — become almost fun. Also, work in awkward places, such as repairing a rotted section of fascia, becomes much simpler without cords.

Cordless power tools have impressive stamina. In a simple, one-time test of each tool, we found the following. (A) The Hitachi 6½-inch circular saw ($200) crosscut 67 pieces of 2x4-inch lumber before slowing. (B) Black and Decker's jigsaw (148) eased through the turns on about 20 linear feet of ½-inch plywood. (C) The Sears cordless electric screwdriver ($40) doggedly inserted and removed fifty 2¼-inch self-tapping wood screws. (D) Porter-Cable's hammer drill ($195) drilled 120 holes in light-gauge metal and concrete. (E) The Skil power drill ($125 with case and extra battery) did better at drilling holes of ¼ inch or less, but steadily took on ½-inch holes as well.

The battery packs on these tools typically remove for recharge in an hour, but recharging time varies from one to three hours. Recharging procedures vary, too. Some tools aren't supposed to be charged for more than their alloted time. Others are more conveniently designed — they can be left plugged in after the main charge is complete.

But remember, charges won't last indefinitely. Some units lose 1 percent of charge for every day they're left idle.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Theatrical lighting can be used in your home for the specific purpose of flattering your appearance.

Take it from Dr. Robin Huber, a lecturer at California State University in the city of Carson, the way in which light is directed can enhance or detract from your looks. That means you should know about not only the kind of lighting that helps to soften and flatten out the lines in your face, but also the kind that makes every indentation stand out and creates shadows on every wrinkle.

There are three aspects of lighting you can control — color, direction or angle, and intensity. Huber puts it this way:

"As far as color is concerned, in the theater we use a lot of very strong colors, such as deep blues, dark reds, ambers and greens. We do that because we're lighting for the human eye, which is a very, very flexible camera. In film and photography, lighting must be tailored for the narrow range of the material you are working with. Lighting for the home is more like theatrical lighting, in that you can do whatever you want. The problem is that in a home, it's real life and not make believe."

On stage, you can use a deep blue light to create a mood, but at home you can't use lights to that extent. But, says Huber, don't be afraid to use pink bulbs, because pink makes the skin look warmer and gives the illusion of a glow. You can also paint your wall a warm tone and bounce light off that to keep your skin looking summery. On the other hand, if you have a cool-colored wall, in blue or green, for instance, avoid bouncing light off that surface because it might not be flattering. On that kind of wall, light pictures, don't bounce the light off it.

Fluorescent lighting may be all right in the garage and perhaps some other places, says Huber, but living spaces should not use it, since it gives skin a greyish or bluish cast and makes skin tones "look artificial and dead."

How light is directed is the key to the result it produces. Strong directional lighting is the most interesting, but the least flattering. If you take a spotlight and aim it straight down on a person, you get the identations and shadowed wrinkles. Multi-directional and diffused lighting — that is, lighting from many different angles — flatters the face. One type of fixture that helps create complimentary lighting is the wall sconce, mounted above eye level, which washes the wall with light. Says Huber:

"It creates a glowing wall. It is indirect lighting. You come into a room with the walls lit. It creates back lighting and silhouette lighting. The light that does come into the living space is omni-directional and very soft. The end result is very flattering."

He advises investing in good indirect lighting sources, such as sconces, spotlights that can be directed against walls, and torchieres, the standing lamps in which the light sources are aimed upward. How intense the light is in your house will depend on whether you are trying to see or be seen. If you're doing paper work or reading, you need a high light level. But if it's a quiet romantic evening at home, you want a moodier effect that is flattering to everyone in the room.

When you have a background of diffuse walls, you need dimmers. Huber says it is worth the money to get fixtures that either have internal dimmers or to buy dimmers for them. "That's the only way," he adds," you can select the right intensity for all times with diffused light."

Power Yielded By Stockholders In A Move To Fight Takeovers

By MICHAEL A. HILTZIK
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK – On April 15, the stockholders of Chase Manhattan Corp. elected a board of 24 directors. Then they gave them the company.

After approving rules that make it almost impossible to replace a director for any reason, the bank company's stockholders gave the board virtually unassailable authority to accept or reject any takeover bid.

The stockholders nearly eliminated their own power to overrule the board. From now on, overriding a board decision or repealing any of the April 15 rules will require a vote of 75 percent of all shares.

That's a greater margin than Congress needs to override a presidential veto. The changes themselves only passed by majorities as slim as 52.4 percent.

Like Chase's stockholders, investors in about 40 other companies have voted this year to relinquish some of their most important rights. Stockholders in another 387 major corporations did the same thing in 1985.

Such extensive restrictions on shareholder rights – aggressively sought by corporate executives fearful of hostile takeovers – have set in motion perhaps the biggest shift in control of American business since the Great Depression, evoking the atmosphere of the 1920s when huge corporations were dominated by the owners of minuscule portions of their stock. The change could have major ramifications for the U.S. economy and for the political environment in which American business operates.

Critics say the latest crop of restrictions, often known as "shark-repellents" for their anti-takeover design, allow even ineffective executives to fend off responsible challenges from those who advocate changes in corporate direction or management. Over time, that could make American industry less efficient.

Concentrating power in the hands of executives with limited stock holdings also could destroy the corporation's best insulator from government interference – the perception that it is the public, through ownership of shares, that is really at the heart of the economic system.

"This might be one way business would lose its legitimacy as the private controller of the means of production," says former Securities and Exchange Commissioner Bevis Longstreth, now a corporate lawyer in Manhattan. "And that could lead to more government intervention."

The shift in power from stockholders to management arises out a historic fissure between executives and the corporations' nominal owners. Executives fear the power of institutional investors, who now own more than half the stock of companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange, to determine the fate of their companies and the future of their careers.

Institutions – insurance companies, mutual funds, banks and pension funds – do not demonstrate the same corporate loyalty that managements are accustomed to receiving from individual shareholders. Institutions trade stock more vigorously – they account for 75 percent of all transactions on the New York Stock Exchange – and are much more likely to react to short-term fluctuations in company earnings.

Executives hold institutional investors largely responsible for the wave of hostile takeovers, contending that they sell companies to the highest bidder solely for the sake of a quick profit and without regard to long-term company prospects and the impact on employees and communities.

"We better start looking at ways of protecting the American economic system from its shareholders," says Andrew Sigler, chairman of Champion International Corp. and head of a task force on merger issues for the Conference Board, a management lobbying group. Three-fourths of Champion's stock is owned by institutions.

Professional investors, who believe that shareownership should carry the right to a voice in corporate governance, regard such views with scorn.

"I call it management by Bohemian Grove," says Robert Kirby, chairman of the Los Angeles investment management company Capital Group, referring to the exclusive corporate retreat outside San Francisco. "Their argument is that shareholders aren't investors in these companies, just guys who trade securities."

Whatever the arguments, the trend is unmistakable: Ownership of a share of common stock no longer gives investors a predictable say in the affairs of a corporation.

At hundreds of companies shareholders no longer have the right to replace a majority of the board at a single election.

At such companies as Gannett, the publisher of scores of newspapers, and Procter & Gamble, the consumer-goods concern, shareholders have lost the traditional privilege of calling their own shareholders' meeting.

Many companies no longer allow each share an equal vote in corporate affairs.

Shareholder restrictions are in force at many of America's biggest and most powerful corporations, including Mobil, Coca-Cola and Gulf & Western.

Even corporate raiders are sensitive to the usefulness of such restrictions. T. Boone Pickens, whose hostile takeover campaigns against big oil companies under the banner of "shareholders' rights" made him Shark No. 1 in the eyes of many oil executives, installed his own shark repellents at Mesa Petroleum, the Amarillo, Tex., company he chairs. Mesa's rules, which date back as far as 1982, include staggered board terms and 75 percent majority-vote requirements for hostile takeovers.

Since the effect of these proposals is to magnify the relative power of inside stockholders or of executives who themselves own little stock, they disenfranchise outside stockholders.

"A dominant minority amending bylaws to prevent anyone else from having any influence is well beyond the tolerable limits of what a public company ought to be doing," says Robert A.G. Monks, formerly the government's chief pension-fund regulator and now an independent activist on stockholder rights.

Associated as they may be with the takeover vogue, most stockholder restrictions are now so hard to repeal and deeply embedded in corporate bylaws they will live on long after the merger wave – and today's frightened executives – are long gone.

Because shifts in corporate governance move not by a seamless evolution but in fits and starts, hundreds of companies have managed to implement stockholder restrictions before the emergence of any effective counterforce. Only lately have companies found them harder to pass, as sophisticated institutional investors became wise to their negative impact on stock prices and on stockholders' authority over corporate affairs.

Large shareholders have begun to band together in efforts to give each other moral support in disputes with managements. The Council of Institutional Investors, an alliance of public pension funds, was founded by California State Treasurer Jesse Unruh last year after Phillips Petroleum contemplated some harsh defensive moves against corporate raider Pickens. In March, the council proposed a "shareholder bill of rights" in opposition to many restrictive defensive maneuvers.

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY, MAY 18, 1986

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A day when you want to make radical changes in what you are doing and the manner in which you perform. You can make this a constructive day by better organizing your activities.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) If you get advice from an expert, you can then handle your duties in a more efficient and profitable manner.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Get your recreational activities so organized that they are not too expensive, yet give maximum pleasure.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Don't permit a quarrelsome person to enter your home, and then you can make your abode run properly.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Forget dull chores and plan how to have enjoyable time at recreations you like today.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Join with family ties in whatever they like to do, and forget going out with others for fun.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You can ferret out information you need, especially outside of your home, even if it is a bit difficult to do now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Study those practical affairs you have in mind so that you can handle them well during the week ahead.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Your judgment is good and you can gain the cooperation of friends for a plan that interests you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) You can discuss matters concerning your progress with a bigwig privately today.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Going on a little trip with a good friend is just what the doctor ordered today and avoid something you can do little about.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Study just where you are headed in material matters and then hit on the correct outlet for gaining your purposes.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Change your attitude toward a difficult association and come to a better understanding now. Show you are openminded.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will have every ability at handling work efficiently and skillfully, but is apt to want to make changes frequently, and should be taught how important it is to be persevering, otherwise much of the fine promise here would be lost for the lack of guidance.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY, MAY 19, 1986

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The daytime is good for winding up responsibilities that you have left undone. Later find a cooperative person to work with on something mutually satisfying.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) If you do the things at which you are very efficient, you can accomplish a great deal with the cooperation of partners now.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Make plans for handling outside matters, be they of a business or recreational nature. Use tact and diplomacy today.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You made promises to family last weekend, so get busy at keeping them now. Later, have a delightful time with them.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Get at those activities you have planned for the week ahead and accomplish a great deal. Use tact at home.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) Carry through with the decisions you have made during the past two days, but have all your facts straight before contacting others.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You can get your intimate plans nicely worked out during the daytime, but don't overspend for anything.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Analyze exactly what you want to do and then follow the right direction to get good results. Plan to get into needed repairs at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Be more willing to accept help from friends who truly like you, and you will soon get rid of your problems.

Wreck Changes Attitude

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Entertainer Barbara Mandrell says she feels safer in the air than on the road after a 1984 traffic accident that left her seriously injured.

"It bothers me," she said in an interview Thursday. "I don't mind flying, but being in a car is different."

The country music star suffered a concussion and leg and ankle injuries in the two-car head-on accident north of Nashville. The driver of the other car was killed.

She said she will probably have an operation this year to remove a rod that was placed in her right leg after the accident.

Miss Mandrell, 37, is known for hits such as "I Was Country When Country Wasn't Cool," "Sleeping Single in a Double Bed" and "Married, But Not to Each Other."

Loose Ends Knotted Through Her Visit

Ann Vanandel has returned to her native country, The Netherlands, with a feeling of having knotted a lot of loose ends left hanging when she was a Rotary exchange student at East Carolina College 32 years ago.

"When I went home, I always had this urge to come back once to a place where I was so happy. I had made a lot of people contacts in Greenville and I wanted to check on them and find out how they were doing," she said.

"I also wanted to visit my sister and could connect the two aims. Tetley (my sister, who lives in Maryland), told me they would have a week of golf in New Bern and that I could come then — they could drop me in Greenville and pick me up again en route home," she said.

"I have talked to a lot of former classmates — now mothers and grandmothers. Over the years, I have kept in close contact with Ruth Garner of Greenville," she said.

Mrs. Vanandel visited a classroom building, Joyner Library and Wright Auditorium on the university campus. "I also talked to at least three of my former teachers. I am at peace now. I have knotted the ends and know they are well," she said.

She visited Laura Farley, a friend from college, and with Mr. and Mrs. R.B. Lee. "I visited them during my weekends when I was a student. ECC was a suitcase college because everybody went home on weekends," she said.

"You pick up again, the friendship where you left it. That is why I am so happy. You fill in the gap and show pictures of each others' lifestyles," she said. She has visited seven friends and also telephoned several.

Mrs. Vanandel is an occupational therapist and works in a nursing home and home for the retired in Holland. While in Greenville, she visited similar facilities and talked to an occupational therapist.

"My impression of the nursing home is, that the people should go to Holland and see what we are doing. We do so much more. Our facility is lighter and brighter. As an occupational therapist, we are able to do so much more in our area. For women patients, we have handwork and have all the material around to tempt them. For the men, we have carpentry and painting, which they can leave and then come back to it the next day," Mrs. Vanandel said.

"We also have the technical equipment to help paralized people to do the work they once loved to do. They may have it in Greenville, but I didn't have the opportunity to see it," she said.

"I was very happily impressed with the work the church is doing and the way people take part and respond to it. At home we go to service once a week for an hour. The church elders do a lot of work for the church. The Dutch people in the towns are not in the habit of attending more that just the church service on Sunday. In the villages the attendance is better; but after the service, you say hello and goodbye and go home. This is something we should learn from you, but I don't think we will," she said.

Mrs. Vanandel's children include a son, Pieter Paul, 21, who is studying architectural engineering, majoring in restoration and building techniques at the University of Delft; a daughter, Marieke, 20, a student at Nymegen studying musical therapy, and another son, Jan Heim, 14, who attends a preparatory school.

"My life is so full, I hardly have any idle time. Life is so interesting and I like my life," she said. Mrs. Vanandel enjoys folk painting (which she teaches), playing the piano, gardening and "loves to organize things." She quilts, knits and teaches calligraphy.

"Most of all I like painting. I enjoy doing things with my children such as bicycle trips and camping out. We like the outdoor life," she said.

Mrs. Vanandel spent a little time shopping for presents to take home to her family. " I got notepaper and records for my daughter — and also ECU tee shirts. I found a flashlight with a siren for my mother, who at 77, feels unsafe when she takes her dog out at night," she said.

"The ECU Alumni Office personnel were so kind to me. They went out of their way — I was given several ECU objects and a mug. Ruth Garner had done so much to make my visit the perfect one — she organized it all and did a wonderful job — she contacted everyone," said Mrs. Vardall.

"Ruth did a good job of cooking for me. I have liked all the food I was served and especially the sweet potatoes. I have learned what duplex and condos are and have learned my Southern drawl again. I am very sorry about the downtown shops — that they are closing up and moving into the malls," she said.

"I was pleased with the way the university campus has grown and its friendliness. A girl walked up to me and said 'hello,'" she said.

Mrs. Vanandel returned home April 16 after spending some time with her sister Tetley, brother-in-law John and their daughter Minka.

"This was an unfinished chapter of my youth, and now I have closed it through this visit," she said.

ENROUTE TO MARYLAND...Ann Vanandel, left, was accompanied by her sister, Emily, right, brother-in-law, John, and their daughter, Minka Tetley. The family was returning from Fairfield Harbor in New Bern where they spent a week vacationing and playing golf.

GREENVILLE VISITOR...Ann Vanandel of The Netherlands was a guest of Ruth Garner, right.

Specialists Announce Aerobics Guidelines For Women

By ALLAN PARACHINI

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Services

Concerned that millions of American women and their aerobics instructors may be sustaining unnecessary injuries in exercise routines, the nation's largest group of specialists in women's health care has introduced safety guidelines to try to stem the toll.

The new guidelines were announced in New Orleans on Monday by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists at its annual convention.

The guidelines are a response to growing criticism that some aerobics instructors may be perpetuating a sort of aerobics-macho mind-set that drives women to attempt useless and dangerous routines.

Some of the safety concerns extend equally to men participating in aerobics, the physician group said, but the focus of the new safety drive is on women because they account for at least 90 percent of the estimated 24 million to 25 million people who participate in aerobics programs of all types today. Industry groups estimate there are between 100,000 and 250,000 instructors in the aerobics business.

Countless numbers of women exercise in their homes to aerobics videocassettes, sales of which have been consistently strong. In listings published by Billboard magazine, four of the nation's 40 top-selling videocassettes last week were aerobics tapes, including two of the top 10.

One concern about aerobic instruction is that women in some classes are advised to continue an uncomfortable maneuver so they can "go for the burn" — a burning sensation in the muscle tissue — in the mistaken belief the pain is a sign they are eliminating excess fat from their bodies. Actually, this practice may cause muscle tissue to break down, experts interviewed by the Los Angeles Times agreed.

"The burn," in fact, is a sensation caused by a buildup of lactic acid — a symptom, in turn, of the breakdown of the normal chemical balance in the muscle fibers.

Other women who keep up any of a variety of exercises in which they jump repeatedly from the floor may be risking stress fractures of any of the bones of their legs and even their pelvises, as well as permanent damage to ligaments, cartilages and tendons in the knees and ankles, said several experts who participated in drawing up the new guidelines.

Also seen as particularly hazardous is a common maneuver in which aerobics participants bend at the waist and then twist their upper bodies from side to side. This can set the stage for breakdown of discs between the vertebrae, several experts noted.

The introduction of the safety guidelines by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists has a commercial tie of its own. ACOG later this month will begin selling a videocassette illustrating safe exercise routines. The cassette was produced by Dr. Art Ulene, the Los Angeles television commentator who is also a board-certified obstetrician-gynecologist.

The tape, called "Balanced Fitness Workout," will be sold through doctors' offices and video stores. Ulene and the college collaborated last year on two videocassettes on safe exercise for pregnant women and those who have just had babies.

The college found that women and instructors who overindulge in aerobics often do so in the mistaken belief that the more vigorous and taxing a workout, the better. This sets the stage for a serious incidence of what are called "overuse" injuries in which joints and muscles that can tolerate — and profit from — a few repetitions of certain maneuvers break down when too many are done.

Peter and Lorna Francis, a married couple from San Diego State, were consultants to the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists in the aerobics study. She is a physical education and telecommuncations expert and he is a biomechanics researcher. Instructors often find, the Francises agreed, that women clients at aerobics studios expect workouts to be exhausting and painful in the belief, Lorna Francis said, "that if a little (pain) is good, a lot is better."

To try to eliminate the many misimpressions that have led to what amounts to aerobics folklore — or even folk medicine — the new guidelines suggest that:

In aerobics classes utilizing so-called "impact" exercises — any maneuver in which participants jump from the floor — maximum intensity levels should not raise the heartbeat above 75 percent of its calculated maximum rate. The heart rate should be measured at peak output periods during an exercise routine.

Exercises involving jumping should be limited to not more than four consecutive landings on either foot. The figure is significantly below the number commonly done in many aerobics classes or demonstrated on videocassettes.

Duration of impact workouts should never exceed 30 minutes, and such routines should not be done on consecutive days. The day of rest between vigorous impact workouts is necessary to avoid the risk of muscle, joint and bone damage from overuse.

Contrary to what aerobics participants may believe, as the intensity of exercise increases, the proportion of body fat used up as an energy source actually goes down — meaning that if aerobics is intended to trim fat from the body, increasing intensity has the opposite effect from what is intended.

Special care should be taken in selection of a floor surface on which to exercise. Unpadded concrete surfaces are the worst since they offer no shock-absorption capabilities at all.

Close attention should be paid to wearing well-designed shoes. Acceptable shoes must have a sole that slides readily on the floor. For that reason, shoes designed for running, basketball and court sports are generally not safe for aerobic dance. Running shoes are worst of all. Exercising in bare feet is exceptionally dangerous since is robs the participant of the impact-absorbing capabilities of well-designed shoes.

Care should be taken in exercising muscles on all sides of joints, avoiding a situation in which the hamstrings (in the buttocks and rear of the thighs), for instance, are developed but the quadriceps (the muscle group in the front of the thigh) is not. Such muscle imbalance can result in serious muscle pulls as one set of muscles literally tears the other apart.

Extreme flexing of the joints, like deep-knee bends and sudden hyperextension of the knee, should be avoided since such exaggerated flexion and extension can result in several injuries.

Ulene and the Francises agreed that a major problem in the aerobics and fitness industry is that many classes and virtually all videocassettes take either no or too little note of physiological differences between individuals. "The interesting thing is that the exercise gurus have treated all exercises as if they are alike," Ulene said.

Dr. Robert Kerlan, the prominent Los Angeles orthopedic surgeon, agreed that there are significant disparities in the quality and resilience of connective tissues among people. These innate, genetically predetermined differences cannot be changed by exercise, he said. The Francises agreed that, while there has been some progress in the quality of instructors in the last two or three years, far too many exercise studios still employ instructors, as Lorna Francis put it, "because they are young and enthusiastic and look good in a leotard."

The Francises did some of the first research on aerobics injury rates and last year published a study in the journal Physician and Sports Medicine reporting that, in a survey of 135 instructors, 76.3 percent had sustained or aggravated one or more injuries during aerobic dancing. More than a quarter of the instructors could not give an estimate of injury rates among their students.

Two commercial groups representing instructors — the San Diego-based International Dance Exercise Association and the Los Angeles-based Aerobics and Fitness Association of America — contend that injury rates have slowed since the exercise industry began trying to implement voluntary instructor training standards. The first written certification examination for instructors will be given later this month.

The Aerobics and Fitness Association of America recently published a report of a study it helped sponsor that found that, of 141 instructors surveyed last year at a certification training seminar, only 36.9 percent had experienced injuries — though, of that group, the average injury was severe enough to cause the instructor to miss work for 14 days.

Plan For Air Conditioner Purchase

If a new air conditioner is on this summer's shopping list, don't wait for that first hot day to dash to the store and pick up a unit. Before making such an important purchase, plan for it by checking out your home and its cooling needs.

Sizing a unit to the area to be colled is very important. Remember that an air conditioner not only cools the air but dehumidifies it as well. A unit that is too large will cool a room quickly and shut off before it can dehumidify adequately. One that is too small can not cool or dehumidify satisfactorily.

Before going to the store, make an information list with the following items:

•Size of each room and connecting hall to be cooled.

•Note whether rooms are shaded, sunny or insulated.

•Have the size, type and number of rooms to be cooled

•Note the number of electric outlets and its voltage (120 volts or 240 volts)

The information will help a sales person determine the capacity, in BTU's, of the air conditioner needed to cool a specific area.

After determining the correct capacity, check energy efficiency rating (EER) for each unit in the selected size range. EER's are displayed on a yellow and black "Energy Guide" lable attached to the appliance.

Air conditioners are available in high efficiency (7.5 or higher) or standard efficiency (below 7.5) models. High efficiency models generally cost less to operate, but have slightly higher purchase prices to cover increased manufacturing costs. If lower operting costs, however, will pay back the difference within five years, consider purchasing a high efficiency model.

Also, depending on a family's needs, consider and compare these room air conditioner features before buying: intermittent fan operation; air direction controls; two or three fan speeds; ease of installation; adjustable thermostat and warranty coverage.

★ "...the kinds of frozen desserts that people brave blizzards for",....Carol Robbins and Herbert Wolff, Authors of "The Very Best Ice Cream"
Patricia "Hank" Steele, the founder of Hank's Homemade Ice Cream is bringing her nationally acclaimed flavors to Greenville.
★ Old fashioned hard ice cream made right in the store.
★ The very best ice cream, using the very best ingregients.
In 1984 and 1985, Hank's participated in the National Ice Cream contest sponsored by the National Ice Cream Retailers Association. Both years Hank's was selected as one of the top five ice creams in the U.S.
Hank's uses a custom built ice cream machine to make its delicious desserts. Modern ice cream machines turn the dasher too quickly which puts a lot of air in the ice cream. Many of the ice creams you buy are half air. We had our ice cream freezer specially built to turn the dasher at the speed of the old fashioned hand-cranked freezers so we can get the same rich pure flavors.
A specialty at Hank's is the BLEND-IN. You pick your favorite ice cream flavor, and your favorite fruit or candy and then we put them in our special blend-in machine and combine them into your own personal flavor. The blend-in machine breaks up the candy or fruit into small pieces and mixes it into the ice cream. It tastes great because the candy or fruit doesn't get frozen so it still has its full flavor while the ice cream stays frozen, so you get the best of both.
Hank's will be open from 11:00 a.m. until 11:00 p.m., Monday through Saturday, and 12 noon to 11:00 p.m. on Sundays.

The bride was given in marriage by her family and was escorted by her brother, Cecil B. Adams Jr. Her formal gown of white satin, handmade by her grandmother, Mrs. Irene Meeks of Ayden, was fashioned with a dropped waist and a low scooped back trimmed with alencon lace. The bodice was accented with alencon lace and seed pearls, and the gown buttoned up the back with satin covered buttons. The gown featured long puffed sleeves and a flared skirt accented with lace and seed pearl appliques. She wore as a headpiece a wreath of silk flowers with pearl sprays and an attached veil accented with seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of white and red roses and ivy.

Matron of honor was Denyse Fornes Bolyard of Greenville. She wore a tea length gown of royal blue taffeta designed with a bateau neckline, puffed elbow length sleeves, a drop waist and a low V back. The gown tied with a sash in the back. She carried red roses acceted with baby's breath and greenery.

Bridesmaids were Karen Adams and Elaine Adams, both sisters of the bride, Juli Adams, sister-in-law of the bride, and Kim Respass, all of Greenville; Denise Swain of Siler City; Connie Muhle Reagan of Raleigh, and Connie Rose Andersen of Greensboro. Junior bridesmaid was Tanya Buck of Greenville. Each bridesmaid wore a gown and carried a bouquet like that of the honor attendant.

Best man was the father of the bridegroom. FOCUS On...

J.H. Rose High School

By GITA GULATI

Young people today are often accused of being apathetic towards the issues of our society. But many students in our area are proving this stereotype to be inaccurate. Recently, several Rose High School students formed the Greenville Youth Council to meet the needs of modern youth in our area.

The main objectives of the Council are to provide an organization of young people which can carry on projects for the benefit of the entire community; to provide an opportunity for young people to share in local government matters and to learn to be responsible citizens; to initiate projects and programs that are beneficial to the youth and to the community, and to encourage city planning agencies to invite young people to serve on city committees and contribute to community planning.

The outstanding feature about Youth Council is that all projects are initiated and led by young people. Thus, the success or failure of each project depends on the responsibility of the young people involved. This gives them the chance to be useful and devote their intelligence, talent, ability, and energy to worthwile efforts.

Some prospective projects that Greenville Youth Council is considering for the future include organizing a beach or river retreat for young people, helping with Special Olympics, writing reply letters from Santa at Christmastime, organizing a "Safe Halloween" to distribute candy to children who live in unsafe neighborhoods, and doing any other community volunteer work. To raise money for these and other projects, the Council will be sponsoring a tennis tournament that will be open to the public.

Greenville Youth Council was started by Rose Junior Traci Irwin, who also serves as its president. Other officers are Eugene Lao, vice president; Wandria Hines, secretary; Richie Murphy, treasurer, and Drew Rhodes, parliamentarian. Their advisor is Sylvia Briley.

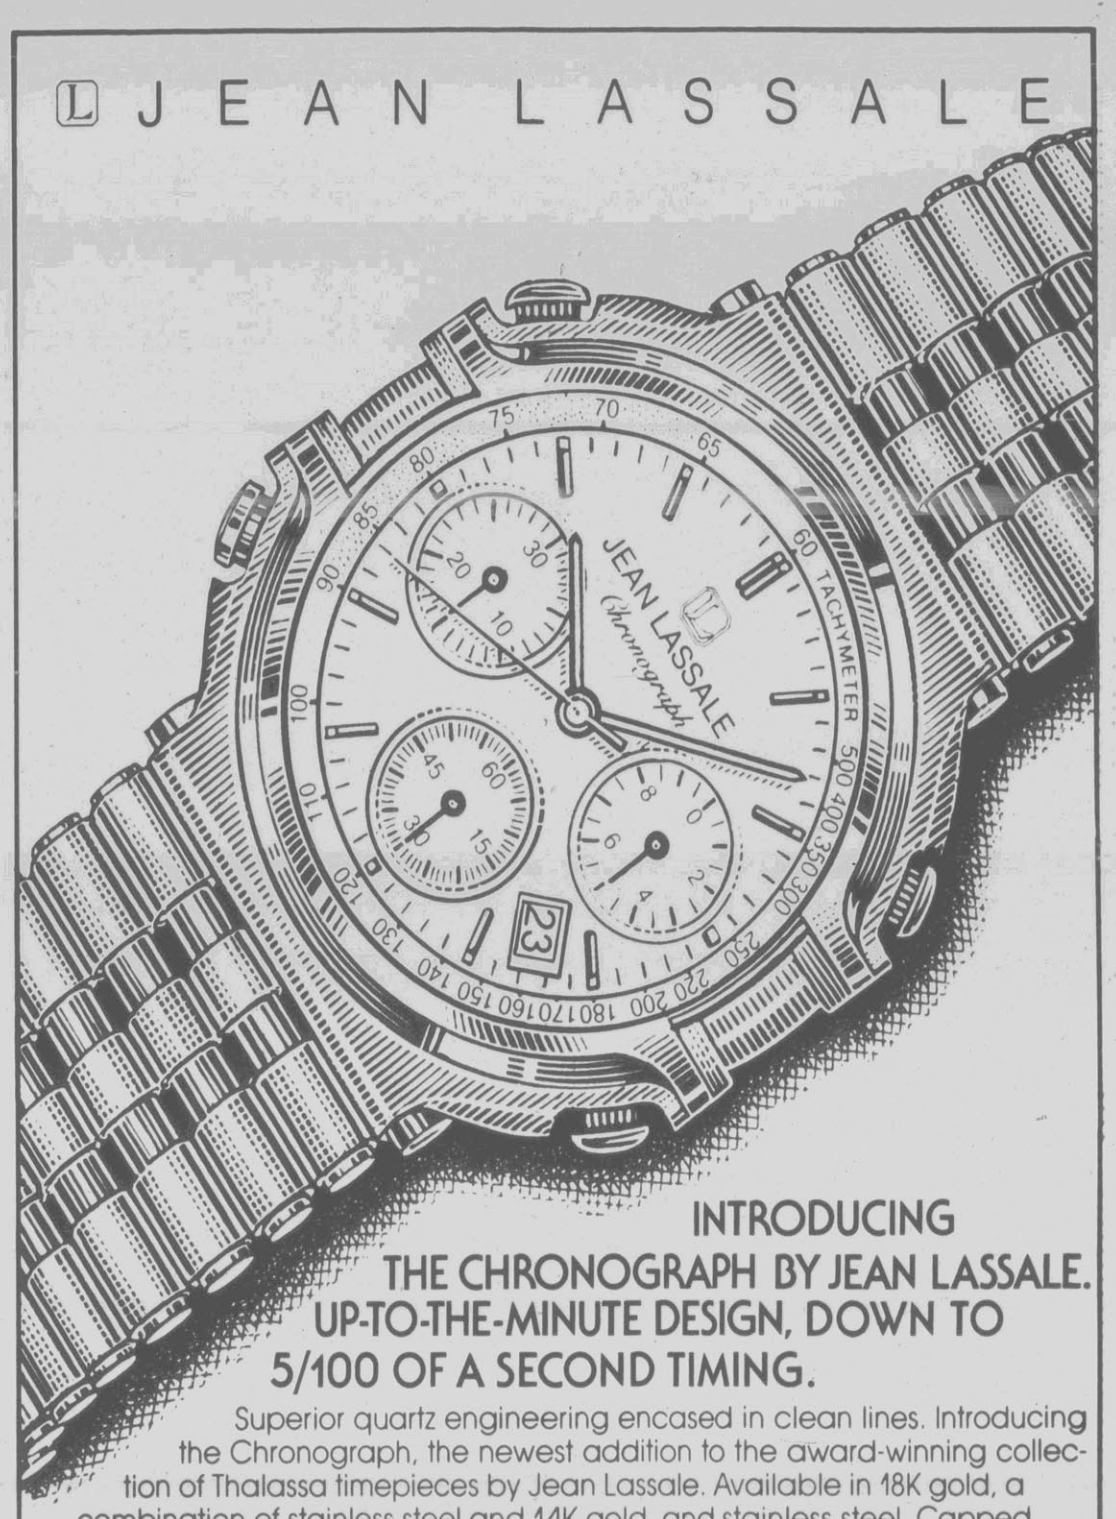

Although the Council was founded by Rose students, it is open to all Pitt County high school students. On the agenda for future meetings are a forum on the school merger and a workshop on parliamentary procedure. Meetings are the first and third Tuesday of every month at 7:30 p.m. in the Rose High School library. There is no membership fee, but donations will be accepted and appreciated.

At Wits End

By Erma Bombeck

Maybe you've been there. Sitting across the desk from a man in a swivel chair who is looking at your resume and chewing pensively on his glass frames. Then he speaks, "Your credentials and background are good, but what have you done in the six years since you last were employed?"

It happened to Dorothy Peterson of Akron, Ohio, who filled in the "gap" with the following.

"I have been wet on, sneezed at, thrown up on, and sassed at. I have been surprised, hugged and praised by these same offenders who did the above.

"I have planted, hoed and weeded a garden only to later pick, can and freeze the same stuff I planted, hoed and weeded.

"I have spent the pre-dawn hours in a steam-filled bathroom with a crooping child. I have applied soda paste to chicken pox marks and admonished, 'Please, don't scratch.'

"I have coped with more month ... than money, but fed my family without their awareness of my scrimping. I have never had a microwave, garbage disposal, dishwasher or clothes dryer.

"I have welcomed stray dogs and cats of uncertain origins, taught them civilized demeanor and bought 2,600 pounds of dog food and 3,120 cans of cat food.

"I have hosted birthday parties for over 20 pre-schoolers, with the culmination of no damage and a good time was had by all.

"I have gone to 50 percent off clearance sales with the skill of a combat officer and fitness of a bouncer, but always got my sought-after bargain.

"I have driven a husband to the airport, a teen-ager to band practice and a 6-year-old to gymnastics ... all within the same hour.

"I have played pata-a-cake, peek-a-boo and hide-n-go-seek. I have run alongside a two-wheeler, bandaged skinned knees and monitored homework.

"I have prepared agendas, chaired meetings and written reports. I have been on working committees, study committees and rubber stamp committees. I have taught classes, directed activities and volunteered when no one else would.

"I have dealt with overflowing septic tanks one year and dry well the next.

"It was my conscious choice to fill the role of full-time care giver during this six-year span. I have given my children attention, time, involvement and a positive set of values. Now I would like to help provide the added financial means that allow for their enrichment and my personal fulfillment."

I don't know what Dorothy was applying for or if she got the job, but whatever it is, she sounds overqualified to me.

—Book News—

From Sheppard Memorial Library

By SUZANNE LONG

The Children's Room at Sheppard Memorial Library is benefiting from a trend toward problem-solving through the use of books. Among the new arrivals is a book especially suited to help parents deal with a problem common to many young children.

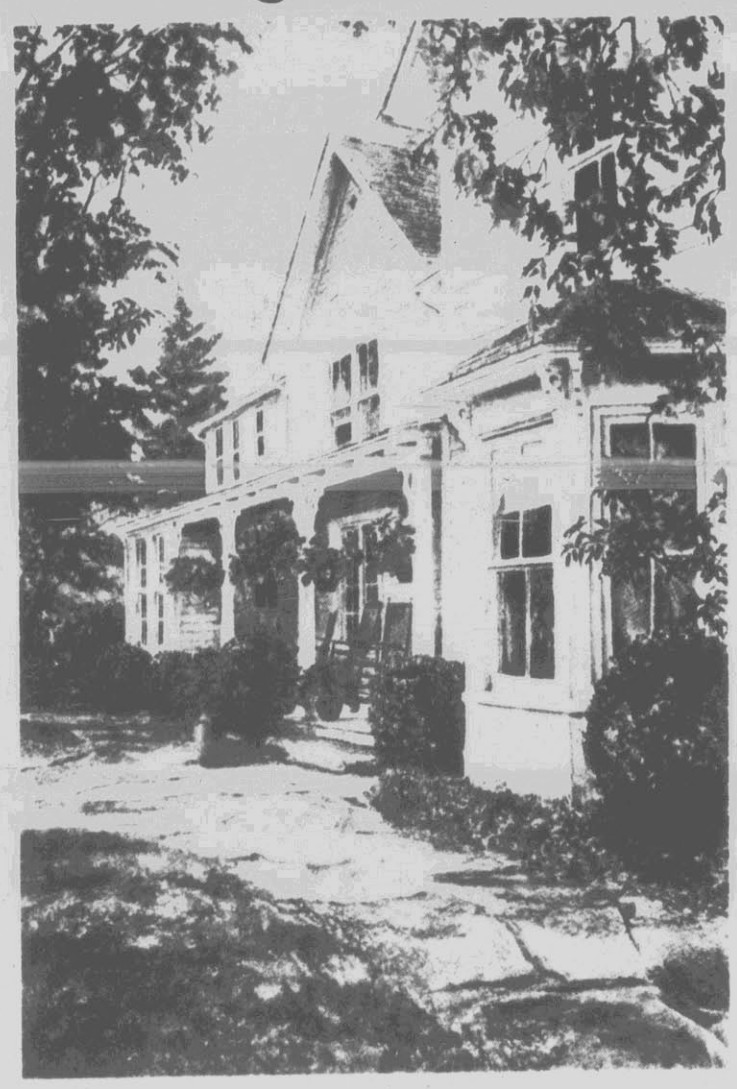

Physicians, psychologists, teachers and dentists receive questions from parents about thum and fingersucking. "David Decides About Thumbsucking" by Susan Heitler, Ph.D., is a book written to share research findings in a form useful both for parents and health care professionals. The book is divided in halves, one a dialogue by and for a child; the other an informative parent guide.

David's story about his dawning awareness that he is not happy with thumbsucking and the ensuing struggle to stop is accompanied by bright photographs. The friendly, helpful dialogue reaches out to other children, describing David's anxieties, his sources of support, and his gradual move to success.

The "Guide for Parent's" is organized in sections according to children's ages. There are knowledgable tips for use with infants and toddlers as well as suggestions for dealing with preschoolers, school-age children and those six years and older. Heitler provides ideas for "Helping Children Break Sucking Habits" and addresses the general concerns of parents.

Changing a habit begins with new information and proceeds with a change of mind. Reading "David Decides" to a child provides a relaxed and effective way to launch the information and motivation process — and begins a move toward overcoming the habit of thumbsucking.

Mangum Watercolors At East Gallery

A WATERCOLOR . . . by William Mangum shows a typical subject the artist like to paint — orchitecture. A show of recent watercolors by Mangum is going on view today at East Gallery, with a reception for the artist, free and open to the public, to be held from 3 to 6 p.m.

"New Watercolors by William Mangum" will be on view at East Gallery, 646 Arlington Blvd. through June 21. A reception, free and open to the public, will be held from 3 to 6 p.m. today.

A native of North Carolina, Mangum holds both the BFA and MFA degrees from UNC-Chapel Hill. His recent exhibitions have included ones at the National Arts Club, Society of Illustrators, Allied Artists of America, Salmagundi Club, and Knickerbocker Artist, all in New York City. He has also had works in shows in Louisville, Chicago, Youngstown, Ohio and London, England.

Mangum's art has been featured in numerous periodicals, including G, The Golden Triad, Pace, Tar Heel Magazine and American Artist. He was featured as the Southern artist in the July/August 1985 issue of Southern Accents.

One of his favorite subjects different architectural styles. These paintings have earnd him the reputation of being one of the foremost watercolorists in the South today. His work is primarily realistic expressionism, and he strives for an effect which in his words, "has a contrast of vivid details and a soft abstract quality." He believes in a translucent look, and relies of the white of the paper to enhance this desired quality.

The Mangum exhibition is being held in conjunction with a "Gallery Walk" sponsored jointly by East Gallery and the Greenville Museum of Art. At the museum, a reception for sculptor artist Tim Rider is being held from 2 to 4 p.m. today. Museum Day Being Observed At GMA

The Greenville Museum of Art has announced it will join museums around the world in observing International Museum Day, today. Special activities planned by GMA to celebrate the day include:

"A Gallery Walk," co-sponsored with East Gallery today, reception 2-5 p.m.

International Museum Day is an annual event sponsored by the International Council of Museums (ICOM), the world organization for the museum profession. The purpose of the celebration is to remind governments and the general public that "museums are an important means of cultural exchange, enrichment of culture and development of mutual understanding, cooperation and peace among people."

Lawrence L. Reger, director of the American Association of Museums, and executive secretary of AAM/ICOM, the international arm of the AAM, stated that "The annual observance of International Museum Day provides a mechanism to lift the public's awareness of the very special role all museums play in preserving our natural and cultural heritage and in instilling pride in human achievement.

"In addition," he said, "museums are a means of education, teaching valuable skills and heightening perception even as they offer us immeasurable hours of enjoyment. The American Association of Museums is proud to join the International Council of Museums in paying tribute to all the museums of the world."

Mary Anne Pennington, GMA director, said "GMA is one of our significant cultural assets. We should all join in paying tribute to the institutions that preserve our heritage."

ARCHIVES ACQUIRED

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles County Museum of Art says it has acquired the archives of Cirrus Editions, a printmaking workshop and art publisher.

Founded here in 1970, Cirrus has published the work of artists such as Peter Alexander, Craig Kauffman, Edward Moses and Edward Ruscha.

The museum says the archive acquistion, together with its near complete collection of over 2,000 prints produced at the Tamarind Lithography Workshop from 1960-70, and over 450 Gemini G.E.L. prints on loan to the museum, establishes it as "the primary center for the study of contemporary prints produced in Los Angeles."

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

Another common color mistake is thinking white or light colors are too pallid: white-on-white, if used properly, can be as bold as red. One of the most dramatic rooms I have ever seen had a white sofa on white carpet with peach accent pillows on the sofa. A coramantel screen was in the corner and the cocktail table was garden seats covered with a glass top. The drapery was even white with a peach border.

Neutrals such as black, white and gray can be really dramatic if used properly. Black and white was all the go at the recent market, especially in contemporary settings. For example, white sectionals with a colorful art deco painting of black, white and red can be new and refreshing.

French Green, which is a blue green, was very big and all the ice cream colors are very stylish.

At Betsy Drake Interiors we have all the newest looks in home furnishings, lamps, accessories, oriental rugs, wall coverings and window treatments. Come in and see our new collection of original oil paintings from galleries in New York and New Orleans in a very reasonable price range. As always we will be happy to schedule an appointment in your home or office to assist you in making your selections.

New Views On N.C. History

By PEGGY HOWE
N.C. Department
Of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — North Carolinians have long been fascinated by their state's role in the Civil War and by the attempts of Sir Walter Raleigh to plant colonies on the N.C. coast.

The April 1986 issue of the "North Carolina Historical Review" contains three articles that give new insights on these two important periods in North Carolina history.

During the Civil War North Carolina was a pre-eminent concern of President Abraham Lincoln. In 1862, Federal forces, under the command of Gen. Ambrose E. Burnside, captured a portion of eastern North Carolina and established a headquarters at New Bern. Lincoln then attempted to create within the state a government once again loyal to the United States.

In "Lincoln and Wartime Reconstruction in North Carolina, 1861-1863," William C. Harris, professor of history at N.C. State Unversity at Raleigh, examines in detail Lincoln's efforts to bring North Carolina back into the Union. Harris analyzes the motives and actions of Lincoln and other national and state leaders. He concludes that the failure of Lincoln's wartime reconstruction program led the president to reconsider his ideas on southern strength and early restoration of civic rule in the rebel states.

Another important but neglected aspect of North Carolina during the Civil War is the history of textbook publishing. When secession isolated the state from northern publishers, educational materials written and printed by North Carolinians became necessary. Textbooks also were a means by which state leaders instilled in the civilian populace a southern nationalism.

In "Sterling, Campbell and Albright: Textbook Publishers, 1861-1863)," Karen C. Carroll, a Guilford County schoolteacher, investigates the operation of the Tar Heel's state's major Civil War textbook publisher — Sterling, Campbell and Albright of Greensboro. She reveals much about how school books were written and published as well as to what extent they were used as propaganda to shape public opinion in support of the war and a separate Confederate nation.

In 1588, Spanish seas captain Vicente Gonzalez accidently found evidence of an English colony on North Carolina's Roanoke Island. The discovery ended Spanish uncertainty about the location of the first English settlement in North America. "New Light on Vicente Gonzalez's 1588 Voyage in Search of Raleigh's Colonies," by Paul E. Hoffman, associate professor of history at Louisiana State University, is an account of the events surrounding Gonzalez's discovery. The article unravels for the first the mystery of the framed undated Gonzalez memorandum that has confused historians for so many years. This issue's reproduction of the controversial document as well as a number of 16th-century engravings, drawings and paintings will excite particularly those readers fascinated by Sir Walter Raleigh's colonies in the New World.

The magazine also includes "North Carolina Bibliography, 1984-1985," compiled by H.G. Jones, curator of the N.C. Collection, UNC-Chapel Hill library. The list includes books dealing with North Carolina subject or by a North Carolinian (regardless of subject) published between July 1, 1984 and June 30, 1985.

The "North Carolina Historical Review" is published quarterly by the Historical Publications Section of the N.C. Division of Archives and History, department of Cultural Resources. An annual subscription is $15 and includes six issues to "Carolina Comments," a bimonthly commentary about historical activities throughout the state and the programs of the Division of Archives and History.

Send subscription orders to: Department of Cultural Resources, Historical Publications Section (N), Division of Archives and History, 109 E. Jones St., Raleigh, 27611.

RiverSpree Opens Saturday

ELIZABETH CITY — During the coming weekend, Friday through Sunday, is the time of the annual RiverSpree '86 at Elizabeth City, a northeastern North Carolina town on the banks of the wide Pasquotank River that flows into the Albemarle Sound.

Last year, more than 30,000 people attended the three-day series of activities scheduled for the yearly spring event, with even more expected this year.

Among varied activities slated for the 1986 calendar are four stages of entertainment with Grand Ole Opry and local talent on hand; nearly 150 booths displaying a multitude of arts, crafts, general items, and food, and water-related events.

Water events are traditionally the main attraction of RiverSpree and will encompass things such as the RiverSpree Regatta, a canoe race, and the fun event, the "Anything That'll Float But a Boat Race."

Additionally, Sinbad the Pirate will arrive on the scene aboard the Meka II, and new this year will be the Fantasy Water Ski Show. The Elizabethtown-based performs their intricate water maneuvers choreographed to music in water ski segments involving barefoot, ballet and trick skiing, ramp jumping and hang gliding.

Elizabeth City, on U.S., 17 between Norfolk, Va. and Williamston, is about 95 miles from Greenville.

All entertainment and water events are free and open to the public. It is sponsored by the Elizabeth City Area Chamber of Commerce.

Persons wanting more information on the festival can call 335-4365.

Wachovia Cup Race

WINSTON-SALEM — The Wrightsville Beach Ocean Racing Association and Wachovia Bank and Trust Company will sponsor the 18th annual Wachovia Cup Yacht Race from Wrightsville Beach to Beaufort Inlet on May 22.

The race, to begin at 1 p.m., will cover an 87-nautical-mile course to be completed Friday, May 23.

Persons interested in taking part are to write to: P.O. Box 757, Wilmington, N.C., 28402, requesting entry forms.

New Trail At Mountain Site

GRANDFATHER MOUNTAIN — Grandfather Mountain, a natural heritage preserve with views from the highest peaks in the Blue Ridge Mountains, is now well underway in its 1986 season.

Billed as North Carolina's "Top Scenic Attraction," the site is expecting a larger than usual number of visitors due to lower gasoline prices and the reluctantance of some to travel to foreign places because of terrorist threats.

Attractions in the area include spectacular scenery, the excitement of crossing the Mile High Swinging Bridge, a 210-foot suspension bridge spanning two peaks, and hang gliding exhibitions four time daily May through October, weather permitting.

Spacious enclosures are home to black bears, bear cubs, white-tail deer, cougars, bald eagles and golden eagels.

More than 25 miles of hiking trails wind through virgin forest, with a new trail due to open up a new section of the mountain's 4,500 acre backcountry preserve by July 4.

MORGAN SHOWS

NEW YORK (AP) — The two centuries of British rule in India are a complex story of two disparate cultures in confrontation.

During this period, artists from Britain traveled across the subcontinent, creating a visual record of their compatriots' life in a foreign land.

More than 150 of these drawings, watercolors, prints and photographs are included in the exhibition, "From Merchants to Emperors: British Artists in India, 1757-1930," at the Pierpont Morgan Library through July 31.

Another Morgan exhibition, also through July 31, features some 30 autograph scores and letters of composers Gustav Mahler and Franz Liszt. The exhibition marks the 75th anniversary of Mahler's death and the 100th anniversary of the death of Liszt.

Some $7.5 million was stolen from a mail train in Buckinghamshire, England, in 1963 in what was dubbed "The Great Train Robbery."

May 31 Tour Of Bertie Scheduled

RALEIGH — The Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina and Historic Hope Foundation are joining forces to sponsor a special day of touring through Bertie County.

Tar Heel Traces, a tour of history series sponsored by the preservation foundation, will take people on a tour that reveal a variety of architectural styles In Bertie, from the smallest brick dwelling of 1714 to sophisticated early 19th century Hope mansion.

The bus will leave Raleigh at 8 a.m. Saturday, May 31 and pick up at the Holiday Inn in Williamston at 10 a.m. where the tour will begin with refreshments.

Bertie buildings to be seen in the tour include:

• Jordan House, the earliest house in the county, about 1713, a house typical of the size of most homes in the early colonial days.

• Scotch Hall, circa 1835, is a recently-renovated plantation house at the mouth of the Roanoke River that features double chimneys at each end. The home is owned by Mr. and Mrs. George W. Capehart, Jr.

• Holy Innocents, built in the late 19th century, is the Capehart family chapel situated at the front of the Avoca plantation.

RALEIGH — Awards, a folk festival, entertainment and renewing acquiantances will be highlights of the annual Tar Heel Junior Historian Awards Day at Peace College in Raleigh on Thursday and Friday.

Approximately 600 junior historian members from all parts of the state will gather for the event, the 24th annual awards day, where they will receive recognition for individual and group history projects conducted throughout the year.

Students and their advisers will arrive Thursday for outdoor activities and tours of Raleigh, a cookout, presentation of special awards and original student entertainment in the evening.

Friday's schedule calls for a morning folk music festival featuring several North Carolina folk groups. This festival is made possible by a grant from the N.C. Arts Council and the Natioinal Endowment for the Arts.

The afternoon session will feature John Ellington, history museum administrator, who will open the ceremonies. Cultural Resources secretary Patric Dorsey will welcome students, and Dr. William S. Price, Jr., director of the division of Archives and History, will present awards.

Peggy Lowe of Riverview School, Murfreesboro, will present the award to the Adviser of the Year.

The Tar Heel Junior Historian Association sponsors 215 history clubs from the Outer Banks to the Great Smokies with almost 10,000 student members.

Students focus on local history throughout the school term and bring their year-long projects to the annual judging. Projects are entered in literary, media and arts categories. 1986 marks the 33rd year of the association.

Action Taken To Preserve Prehistoric Indian Mounds

EDITOR'S NOTE — Some of the mysteries of the Cahokia Mounds may never be solved. But thanks to new restoration efforts by the state, the ancient earthen mounds built by prehistoric Indians will be preserved for a new generation of archaeologists and history buffs to ponder.

By ED SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

COLLINSVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Not long ago you could stand atop giant earthen mounds built by prehistoric Indians and see the silver screen of an adult drive-in, ramshackle houses and a discount shoe store.

But attitudes are changing, and so is the landscape around the Cahokia Mounds, one of the richest archaeological sites in the world.

The Mounds Drive-In has been cleared away. The run-down subdivision and shoe outlet are soon to go. The property has been purchased by the state to reclaim and restore as much as possible of the 1,000-year-old city.

The Cahokia Mounds World Heritage Site is the largest prehistoric site on the continent north of the Mexican border, says Bill Iseminger, curator of the museum there. Monks Mound, which stands 100 feet and covers 14 acres, is the largest prehistoric earthwork in the New World, he says.

Mississippian Culture Indians built the mounds between 900 and 1200 A.D. For reasons still unknown, the Indians disappeared before the first visit by European explorers, who believed the mounds to be natural formations.

Most archaeologists conclude that there was a major city at the site, but they disagree on its size.

The majority believe 20,000 to 40,000 Indians lived there at the peak of the settlement's history, but others say it was more of a trading center with a permanent population of 10,000 or less. The higher figure would make the city larger than London was at that time.

One of the arguments against the large city is put forth by archaeologist James Porter of the University of Illinois, who believes there could not have been a major city there because so few burial sites have been found.

Most of the mounds contain no graves and were found to be platforms for ceremonial buildings and homes for the ruling class.

But Iseminger disputes Porter's argument.

"Only 1 percent of the site has been excavated," Iseminger says. "The burial mounds we have explored were reserved for the elite. The common people would have been buried in cemeteries and we just haven't found them yet."

Iseminger also says the work force needed to construct the mounds and a 1½-mile-long wooden stockade around the "downtown" area required a large labor pool and a political structure that could only be found in a large concentration of people.

"You're talking in terms of huge amounts of earth to be moved and, in the case of the stockade, the cutting of 15,000 logs the size of telephone poles and moving them to the site," he says. "There must have been a complex social system that gave one man power enough to order the work to be done."

Early farming and later construction of homes, highways and businesses along U.S. Highway 40 a few miles east of St. Louis destroyed much of the city.

Parts of the site are beyond reclamation, but new programs and fresh money are enabling the Illinois Historic Preservation Agency to save what is left and reclaim much that had earlier been feared lost. And construction is due to begin this year on a new museum.

Iseminger says the state bought 144 acres for the park in 1925, but recent buyouts of private property have boosted the size of the site to 2,300 acres.

Even that is not all of the ancient Indian city that once stretched for more than 1½ miles in all directions from Monks Mound.

Aside from the mounds themselves, one of the most striking features of the site is a circle of logs set upright with an observation post near the center that permitted the city's priest-astronomer to announce the vernal and autumnal equinoxes and the summer and winter solstices.

Called "Woodhenge" after similar structures made of slabs of stone in Great Britain, the 410-foot-diameter circle tells scientists that the mound people belonged to an agrarian society that needed to know the growing cycle.

Even with the limited digging that has been done, Iseminger says, enough material has been unearthed to give scientists a good idea of how and why the city existed.

The Indians of Cahokia Mounds were apparently at the center of a vast trading network that linked the Gulf Coast area with northern Minnesota and stretched from the Rocky Mountains eastward to the Appalachians.

Excavation of the burial mounds of chieftains has turned up marine shells from the Gulf of Mexico, mica from the mountains of North Carolina and West Virginia, copper from Lake Superior, lead and other goods not naturally found here.

The mounds are located on two creeks that formed a link with the Mississippi River near the confluences of the Missouri and Illinois rivers. The Indians used the rivers as their highways.

Iseminger says there are no plans to excavate the entire site.

"Work is being done nearby where the new highways are going in," he says, "and the site of the new museum will be dug. But most of the digging from now on will be limited to 'problem solving' digs" — attempts to prove or disprove theories about the city and its structures.

What is not known is why the Indians deserted the city or where they went.

"There is some evidence of a climate change about the time the civilization disappeared," Iseminger says. "That could have affected the growing of corn, one of the staples of their diet. But the need for the stockade also suggests that there may have been some social unrest or attacks from outsiders. It's all still very unclear."

Writer Roasted By Club Members

In lieu of the regular schedule of reading manuscripts at the May meeting of the Greenville Writers Club on May 13, members of the club held a surprise roasting of one of its long-time members, Jerry Raynor.

The event was hosted by Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Steele. About two dozen veteran members of the club took part. Each member contributed a poem or brief article pinpointing their association with Raynor over past years.

These, along with other items, were assembled into a momento book presented to Raynor. Tony Rumple of the East Carolina University News Bureau bound the contributions into book form. Raynor was also given an oil painting of a landscape by an Italian artist.

The event honored Raynor for his role as moderator of meetings of the Greenville Writers Club over the past 16 years.

In addition to Dr. and Mrs. Steele, writer members in charge of the program were LaRona Murray, Helen Parks, Ida Wooten Tripp, Cindy Rumple and Bill Hadden.

Two Presentations For 1951 Claude West Play

In this spring month of May, the Playwrights Fund of North Carolina is bringing to the fore a play by one of Greenville's own — playwright Claude "Kip" West.

Two staged readings of "Graduation Dress" will be presented Wedensday — first at noon at the Best Lunch Theater at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street; and again at 8 p.m. in the Downtown Downstairs site at the Humber House, 117 West Fifth Street.

Both staged readings are free and open to the public. Those attending the museum noon performance can bring bag lunches, with liquid refreshments to be served by the museum staff.

Arch E. Manning will direct. The cast for "Graduation Dress" is: Ma, Kathee Brown Staton; Pa, Bob Maple; Ona, Heide Anderson Lane; Jr., Greg Ange; Bud, Eric Manning; Nancy, Linda M. Woolard; Warren, Jason Lee, and the narrator, Anita Brehm.

Dr. William A. Bloodworth, chairman, English Department, East Carolina Universtiy, will be moderator of a discussion to follow both performances.

West, a native of Durham has recently retired has lived in Greenville since 1947 and calls this his home. He taught English, speech, drama and industrial cooperative training at J.H. Rose High School for 18 years. Before that, he taught in Asheville, Wilmington and Williamston. He says he enjoys writing plays, homorous or satric essays and poetry. For several years, he was an active member of the Greenville Writers Club.

"Graduation Dress" was written in 1951 when a classmate suggested the idea. The setting is the home of an illiterate mill family during the 1930's. Nancy is graduating from high school, and her graduation dress becomes symbolic not only to her, but to her older sister Ona who dreams of graduating into a better life.

Some years ago the play was given a full production by the drama class of Rose High School.

Plays, mostly new in-progress ones along with an occasional older play, are presented in reading versions the third Wednesday of each month, at both the art musuem and at the Humber House.

The Playwrights Fund of North Carolina is a non-profit corporation supported by the North Carolina Humanities Committee, the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, a creative projects grant from the North Carolina Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts, plus corporate and individual memberships.

GREENVILLE PLAYWRIGHT . . . Claude (Kip) West will have his 1951 play, "Graduation Gown" presented in two readings Wednesday, at noon at the Greenville Museum of Art, and at 8 p.m. in the Humber House. Admission is free. (Reflector Staff Photo by Cliff Hollis)

On March 22, 1756, the British Parliament passed the Stamp Act to raise revenue in the North American colonies without consulting the colonists. The measure taxed all legal documents and contracts. Orator James Otis coined the phrase "taxation without representation is tyranny," and the stage was set for the American Declaration of Independence.

The City has revised its noise control laws. For details on noise regulations and permits, call the Police Department at 752-3342.

Theater Revives Noted Old Musicals

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The New Amsterdam Theater Company specializes in the past, loving recreations of old Broadway musicals.

Since 1981, the enterprising New York troupe has presented concert versions of classic but often forgotten musicals such as "Roberta," "Music in the Air," "Sweet Adeline," "The Firefly" and "Sweethearts." It uses a full orchestra, a large chorus and carefully researched or reconstructed orchestrations to approximate the original sound of these shows.

This season, the company's two offerings include Cole Porter's "Jubilee" and "I Married an Angel," by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart.

"Jubilee," a 1935 Porter show, introduced such standards as "Begin the Beguine" and "Just One of Those Things." It was done for three performances by New Amsterdam in March at Town Hall, the company's regular New York home.

Now the troupe has turned its attention to the 1938 "I Married an Angel," one of Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart's biggest hits. It will be performed May 17, 18 and 19 with a company of Broadway veterans that includes Phyllis Newman, Kurt Peterson and Virginia Seidel.

In the early 1930s, Rodgers and Hart, along with another newcomer named Moss Hart, wrote a version of "I Married an Angel" for the movies. It was rejected by MGM but the songwriting team reworked it several years later into a Broadway musical.

The story, set in Budapest, revolves around a banker who really does marry an angel. She always tells the truth, a quality which nearly ruins their marriage until her worldly wise sister-in-law sets her straight. Rodgers, in his autobiography, "Musical Stages," says the theme of the musical was "that it's possible for someone to be too good."

The show opened originally in May 1938 and ran for 338 performances. Its cast included Dennis King as the husband, Vivienne Segal as his sister and Vera Zorina, in her Broadway debut, as Angel. Its director was a newcomer named Joshua Logan who also had a hand in the book's extensive revisions.

"Spring Is Here" was the show's big musical hit, although the score also includes "Did You Ever Get Stung?," "I'll Tell the Man in the Street" and "At the Roxy Music Hall," a funny take-off on the lavish production numbers at the recently opened Radio City Music Hall.

"I Married an Angel" was chosen, says Bill Tynes, the company's artistic director, because he wanted a recognizable title. He also got a charming, funny book and lovely score in the bargain.

The New Amsterdam was started in 1981 by Tynes, a would-be actor and musical comedy buff. With $5,000 raised at a benefit cocktail party, the group presented Sigmund Romberg's "The New Moon."

Since then, the New Amsterdam has tried to balance its shows between musicals that everybody knows and more specialized material, says Sally Hassenfelt, the company's producing director.

'The biggest research is the music because the most of the scores are lost," Hassenfelt said.

"For 'I Married an Angel,' the orchestra parts are reconstructions from the originals," she said. "The company strives to do the original orchestrations which in those days were much larger because the expense of using a 25-piece orchestra was affordable then. Now some of the orchestras in the Broadway pits are a little smaller. But you'll hear what it really did sound like."

Next season, the New Amsterdam, named after a theater on 42nd Street which was home to some of the biggest musical comedy hits of the 1920s, plans fall and spring seasons. Among the possibilities: a production of Arthur Schwartz and Howard Dietz's "Revenge With Music," a rarely heard musical that had such hits as "You and the Night and the Music" and "If There Is Someone Lovelier Than You."

INDIANAPOLIS — Over 15,000 Kiwanians in over 100 metropolitan areas throughout North America will be on hand the weekend of May 31-June 1 to help in the fund drive for the Children's Hospital Telethon. The campaign is the fourth annual Osmond Foundation effort to raise funds for children's hospitals.

In North Carolina, funds will be used by Duke University Medical Center.

New Transportation Stamp

The 5.7-cent Transportation Series stamp featuring an antique star-route truck is ready for issuance. The 5.7-cent denomination represents the rate for non-profit and other preferred-rate mailers. It became effective March 9. The term "star route" originated in 1845 under President John Tyler. Contracts awarded to private firms to transport the mail were designated in postal records by an asterisk and thus "star routes."

Also in the Transportation Series is the release of a 7.2-cent coil stamp depicting an Alaskan dog sled. The 7.2-cent rate is for third-class non-profit mail presorted to the five-digit ZIP code. The dog sled shown on the stamp is of a type common in the early 20th century and continues in use today.

Although the snowmobile has supplanted the sled in many areas, in more remote regions the dog sled remains the most dependable. When pulled by a team of Alaskan huskies, dog sleds can transport up to 1,000 pounds across hundreds of miles of glacial terrain.

Whether by truck or by dog, the mail must go through.

Jubilee Singers Preserve America's Black Music Heritage

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — At historic Fisk University, in this capital city, the school's heroes for more than a century have not been football or basketball players, rather the members of a musical group.

In fact, Fisk — one of the nation's most prestigious predominantly black universities — would not exist today were it not for the Jubilee Singers.

A LIFE OF HARDSHIP — Christian Pierre (top) and Albert Loussaint, two Haitain carpenters in the village of Lully, saw boards by hand from the trunk of a large tree. Life in Haitian villages such as Lully is still a hardship as the people, accustomed to living without electricity, sanitation or medical care, wait for change to come after the overthrow of the Duvalier dictatorship in February. (AP Laserphoto by Carole Devillers)

Until the Jubilee Singers came along, the rich musical treasures of Southern plantation life had not been heard outside the black communities.

Performing songs like "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," "Little David, Play on Your Harp" "Go Down Moses" "Steal Away to Jesus" and "Deep River," the Jubilee Singers introduced the world to the Negro spiritual and black music as an American art form.

The American Missionary Association of New York City and the Western Freedman's Aid Commission of Cincinnati launched Fisk University in 1866 for those freed from slavery after the Civil War. The first classes were held in abandoned Union Army barracks in Nashville.

Lacking financial support, the school closed six years later. George L. White, Fisk's treasurer and professor of music, thought of taking his choral group on a fund-raising tour, but the school's board of directors turned him down. Undeterred, White borrowed money for the tour and set out Oct. 6, 1871.

"It took great courage. They faced real dangers traveling at the time of Reconstruction when racial hatred was intense," said Henry Ponder, 58, Fisk's current president. Accommodations were not easy to find. All but two of the original nine singers had been in bondage until the end of the Civil War.

Ponder said the group initially sang classical music for its audiences, but at night, back in their rooms, they would sing songs that gave themselves comfort, the old Negro spirituals."

Ponder said that White, noting the deep emotional feeling and great fervor displayed when singing those songs, decided to include a spiritual in the Jubilee Singers' performance before a convention of the National Council of Churches in Oberlin, Ohio, Nov. 15, 1871.

"They sang 'Steal Away to Jesus' that night," Ponder said. "The rest is history. The song sprang from the heart and soul of an oppressed people and conveyed the message of human emotion."

Abolitionist Henry Ward Beecher became the choral group's patron, and under his auspices the Jubilee Singers continued their tour that first year to New York and New England. They sang in the White House before President Ulysses S. Grant.

Proceeds from the concerts were used to purchase 45 acres of land, now the site of Fisk University.

In 1873 the Jubilee Singers, numbering seven women and four men, embarked on a European tour. White and his choral group electrified audiences, including heads of state, in England, France, Germany, Russia and other countries.

Queen Victoria was so moved by the group that she commissioned court artist Edmund Havel to paint a life-size portrait of the singers.

The $150,000 raised on the European tour that year as used to build stately Victorian red brick Jubilee Hall, the first permanent building erected for educating black students in America.

Beth Howse, 42, Fisk University's special collections librarian, looked admiringly at the painting of her great-grandmother, Ella Sheppard Moore. Moore, who lived from 1851 to 1914, was one of the original Jubilee Singers. She sang with the group until 1878.

"Everytime I come into the auditorium in Jubilee Hall I spend a few moments with this painting Queen Victoria had Edmund Havel do," said Howse. "I'm so proud to be Ella Sheppard Moore's great granddaughter."

The 10 other Jubilee Singers portrayed in the painting are Benjamin Holmes, Isaac Dickerson, Thomas Rutling, Edmund Watkins, Mabel Lewis, Minnie Tate, Jennie Jackson, Julia Jackson, Maggie Porter and Georgia Gordon.

Jubilee Hall, named after the Jubilee Singers, is the pride and joy of Fisk University. The buildding was dedicated Jan. 1, 1876, and the Havel painting has been hanging in the auditorium since. Today, Jubilee Hall, a national historic landmark, houses two reception rooms and the auditorium and serves as a freshman women's dormitory.

Most universities celebrate Founders Day. Here at Fisk an equivalent celebration is Jubilee Day each Oct. 6, marking the day in 1871 when White and the Jubilee Singers launched their first tour.

The musical group for the last 23 years has been directed by Matthew Kennedy, 65, who earned his master's degree from the Juilliard School of Music and made his debut as a concert pianist at Carnegie Hall. Kennedy was a Jubilee Singer when he attended Fisk as an undergraduate.

His wife, Ann Gamble Kennedy, is the group's pianist. Their daughter, Nina, a concert pianist, is currently pursuing her doctorate at the Manhattan School of Music in New York.

"The repertoire of the Jubilee Singers today, as throughout history, is primarly Negro spirituals," said Matthew Kennedy.

Competition to become a Jubilee Singer is keen. High school students from throughout the nation audition for the group, which currently numbers seven men and eight women.

One member of the choral group, freshman Derrick Wilson of Cleveland, said he came to Fisk because he "heard so much about Fisk's high academic standards and success in turning out good leaders.

"I did not know about the Jubilee Singers until I came here," added Wilson, 19. "I enjoy singing with the group, learning about my heritage, singing songs blacks sang during slavery times."

Brigitte Newell, 19, a sophomore from Laurelton, N.Y., said she came to Fisk on a visit, learned about the Jubilee Singers "and knew then and there I wanted to become a member of the group. The history behind the Jubilee Singers goes on and on year after year. It never dies. Students here respect us for everything we stand for."

ELLINGTON OPERA

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — "Queenie Pie," an opera by Duke Ellington, will have its first performances here during the American Music Theater Festival's Sept. 11-Oct. 12 season.

Ellington composed all the music for "Queenie Pie," which he had started as an opera for TV. His son, Mercer Ellington, completed music for Ellington's tone poem, "The Three Kings," after his father's death in 1974.

The story, with book and lyrics by Duke Ellington and George David Weiss, tells of a flamboyant Harlem beauty queen and her journey to an exotic island in search of ultimate happiness. The Ellington Band will be in the pit.

It will run Sept. 18-28 at the Zellerbach Theater and be presented in association with the Annenberg Center of the University of Pennsylvania.

1986 American Dance Festival Summer Events Announced

DURHAM — The 1986 American Dance Festival will celebrate its 52nd anniversary and ninth year in Durham with six weeks of performances by 15 American and foreign dance companies, plus 40 daily classes and 13 professional workshops, June 7-July 19. In August, for the second time in three years, the festival will travel to Japan to present performances by American dance companies and to conduct special classes and workshops by ADF faculty.

The festival will open its 1986 performing season June 11 with the presentation of the Samuel H. Scripps American Dance Festival Award to Katherine Dunham. The presentation of the $25,000 annual award will take place at page Auditorium at Duke University during an evening-long celebration of Miss Dunham's 47-year career.

Debuts, premiers and return engagements are among the highlights of the 1986 season. A three-day engagement by the Merce Cunningham Dance Company (June 12-14) will be followed by a series of performances by Chuck Davis' African American Dance Ensemble (June 16-18, 21). The Paul Taylor Dance Company will return to the ADF (June 19-21). On June 22, the San Francisco-based choreographer Anna Halprin will make her Durham debut with the presentation of "Circle the Earth," a work which incorporates between 100 and 200 dancers.

The ADF will continue its tradition of introducing important foreign dance companies to American audiences when it presents Dance From Korea, June 23-24, featuring Han Young Suk. Among her many awards, Madam Han has been honored as a Living National Treasure by the South Korean government.

American Ballroom Theater, which will make its Durham debut, June 26-28, will be followed by the return engagement of Pooh Kaye's "Eccentric Motions," June 30 and July 1. Marking its 14th summer at the ADF, Pilobolus Dance Theater will perform July 3-5. Eiko and Koma will perform July 7-8. Laura Dean Dancers and Muscians will present the world premier of an ADF/Samuel H. Scripps commissioned work during its three-day festival engagement, July 10-12.

On July 14 and 15, participants in the Young Choreographers and Composers in Residence Program, supported by the Jerome Foundation, will present a series of ADF commissioned premieres, and the next evening, July 16, the ADF faculty will present an evening of its work. The 1986 Festival will conclude its season in Durham with the return engagement of Dance Indonesia, July 17-19.

Besides its six weeks of public performances by major and emerging modern dance companies, the ADF has a professional training school for 250 dancers (June 7-July 18); Jazz Workshop (June 7-20); Young Dancers Workshop (June 21-July 18); Dance Update (June 15-22); Body Therapy Workshop (June 23-26); Dance Medicine Seminar (June 26-29); Choreography Workshop (June 30-July 3); Dance Critics Conference (June 21-July 12); Young Choreographers and Composers Program (June 18-July 16); International Choreographers Workshop (June 7-July 18); N.C. Choreographers-in-Residence Project (June 7-July 18).

The festival will play host to the American Dance Guild Conference, June 12-15. June 15 and 16, the Festival's Humanities Project will sponsor dance demonstrations, discussions and seminars on "The Black Tradition in Modern American Dance."

During its 52 year history, the festival has been the scene of almost 300 premieres by major American and foreign modern dance choreographers including Martha Graham, Merce Cunningham, Paul Taylor, Twyla Tharp, Jose Limon, Doris Humphrey, among others. Through its Emerging Generation Program, it has commissined dances from Pilobolus, Laura Dean, Meredith Monk, Bill T. Jones and Mark Morris.

The festival began at Bennington College in Bennington, Vt., in 1934. In 1948 it reopened on the Connecticut College campus, where it remained until 1978 when it moved to its present location on the Duke University campus in Durham.

The festival has played an important role in introducing many foreign modern dance companies to the United States including the London Contemporary Dance Theater in 1977. In 1982, the ADF was the scene of the debut of four Japanese modern dance companies including Dai Rakuda Kan, the first Butoh group to be seen in the United States; the following year it introduced five leading French companies to America including Groupe Emile du Bois and Compagnie Maguy Marin. For its 50th anniversary celebration in 1984 the ADF held the First International Modern Dance Festival. Last summer the Festival offered it first American performances to an experimental group for the Paris Opera Ballet.

Supoort for the 1986 American Dance Festival season comes from a large number of state and national cultural agencies and foundations, from dance companies, North Carolina newspapers and state and national firms and businesses.

New Palau Stamps

The Republic of Palau, a U.S.-administered Trust Territory in the Western Pacific, has issued a $10 definitive, a high-value stamp which is the fifth in its current marine life series. Palau obtained its postal independence from the USPS in 1983.

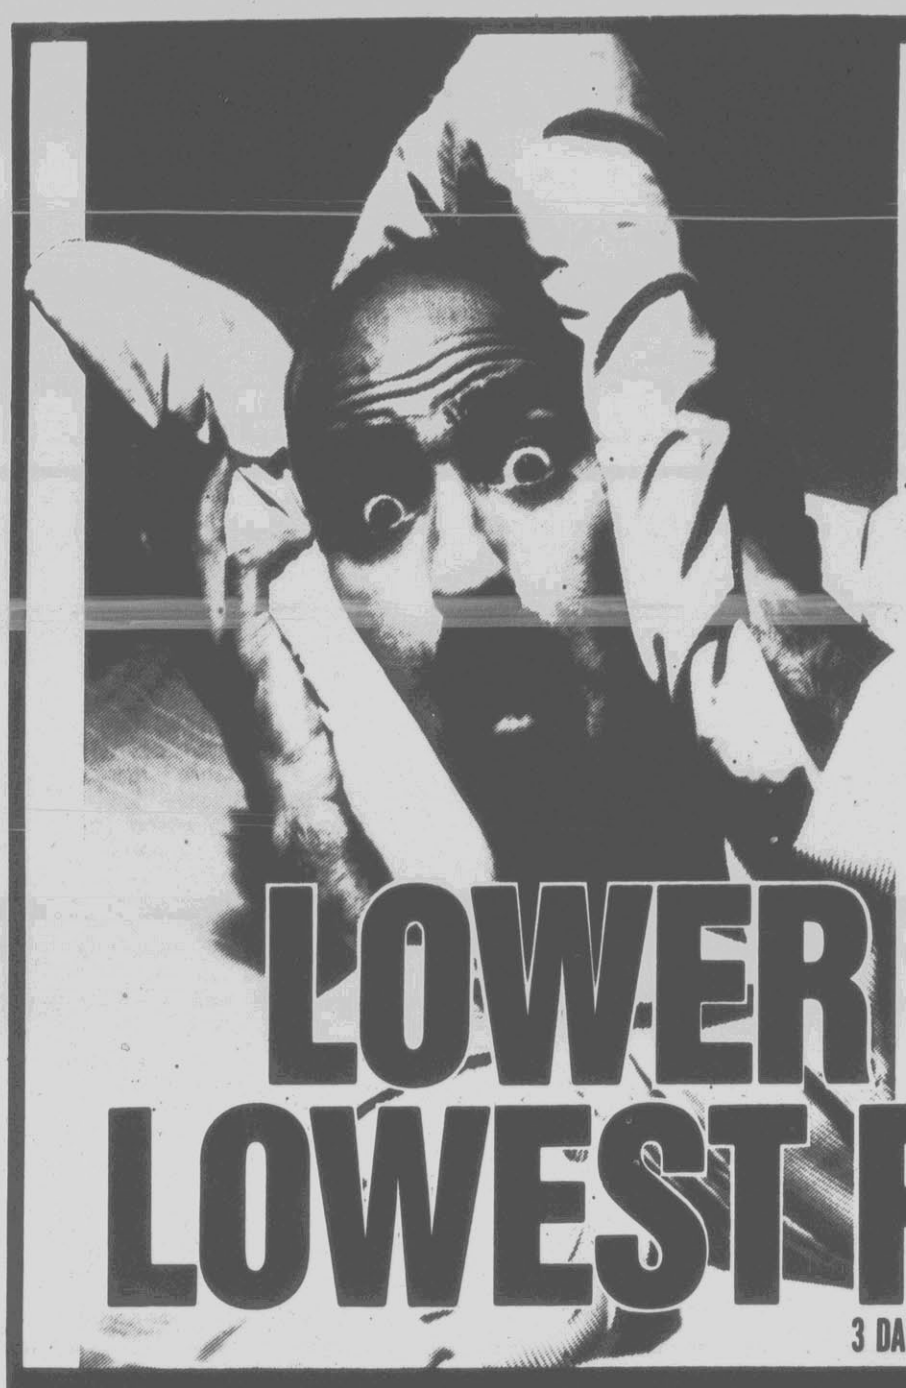

Depicted on the new stamp is the spinner dolphin often found in Pacific waters. This dolphin species is smaller than the Atlantic type seen in films and on TV programs. Spinner dolphins are shy, easily frightened and difficult to train but they are noted for spinning in the air and slapping the water with their fins.

Merrimon And South River, Peaceful Settlements In Carteret County

On The Scene In Rural Coastal Carolina

Long roadside stretches of forest, water-laced areas of marsh grasses in tan and silver, small streams and rows of dark cedars mark the highway approach to the waterfront settlements

Little Known To Most Travelers, These Quiet Places Are Rich In Early Carolina History

The villages of Merrimon and South River, the latter on a short, broad river of that name, are peaceful places less than 20 miles north of Beaufort. In spirit, they are long years behind the mainstream of contemporary Tar Heel bustle.

Old timers there, who admittedly are biased toward the slow tenor of the past, fear that the area is on the threshold of rapid change. They point to the ten-mile modern paved road that leads north from N.C. 101; to the growing number of boat vacationers discovering new, uncrowded water places, and the search for waterfront summer home sites everywhere.

In contrast, they recall their own early years when travel was seldom by the often impassable dirt road, but was mostly by boat up the Neuse River to Oriental or New Bern. For years, local waterways provided a goodly portion of the people's livelihood through the logging industry.

All that is changed now, just as the area's early history changed across two centuries in time. The earliest known white setters arrived at the beginning of the 1700s, living, at first in harmony, alongside the Neusiok Indians. But the peaceful co-existence ended dramatically with the bloody Tuscarora War of 1711. Soon afterwards, the Indians were removed from their ancient homegrounds.

Today, fishing and farming are the economic mainstays. From all indications, however, 1986's serenity may soon give way to a more progressive, active way of life that will forever alter the rustic appeal of Merrimon and South River.

AN AT-HOME ATMOSPHERE . . . Many of North Carolina's innumerable docking sites have a comfortable, informal look about them. A small docking site in South River has a strip of tree-filled land and a rustic tin shed located at the end of a small walkway-type pier.

Two Basic Routes To Follow

From Greenville, there are two basic routes to Merrimon and South River. One route is New Bern to Beaufort, then north for six miles on U.S. 70 to the state road north to Merrimon. Distance, about 110 miles. The second, more scenic route is N.C. 33 to three miles past Edward, then N.C. 306 to Minnesott Beach for the free ferry across the Neuse River. Five miles south of the ferry turn left on N.C. 101, travel through Harlowe and North Harlowe, and beyond the Intercoastal Waterway Bridge take the road marked Cedar Island Ferry to the paved road north to Merrimon. Distance, about 95 miles.

A LOVELY ANCHORAGE . . . A live oak tree draped with Spanish moss forms a picturesque frame for the anchorage place of the fishing boat, "Jeremy." The white boat is docked in the village of South River, alongside a typical arrangement of several small piers of weathered wood that provide a home haven for several boats of varying sizes.

A MOMENT OF REST . . . A young worker, Russell Lewis, takes a moment's rest while painting a fishing boat belonging to a friend, Rick Harvell. Engine and equipment maintenance and periodic re-painting of fishing boats is a necessary, often expensive part of life for fishermen.

New Fish Display Auction Is Tried

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Fisherman James Odlin hopes the long-awaited opening of a fish display auction on the Portland waterfront may mark the day his investments in quality finally pay off.

"I've spent a fortune on refrigeration, better fish holds, handling systems. Hopefully, this will give us some rewards," says Odlin, owner of four 85- to 95-foot draggers with a 130-footer on the way.

On Sunday, the Portland Fish Exchange inaugurates the display auction, an innovative process hailed as a way to deliver fresher, more attractive fish to consumers.

Common in Europe but untried in the United States, the display auction permits buyers to inspect the catch rather than being forced to purchase it off the boat sight unseen.

Exchange organizers claim the new auction method will place a premium on quality and offer higher prices to fishermen like Odlin who make sure they deliver a catch that's fresh, clean and unbruised.

Odlin, one of the nine directors of the quasi-public fish exchange, views the auction as the key to rejuvenating the city's stagnant fishing industry. About $20 million already has been invested in the Portland Fish Pier to revitalize the waterfront, much of it in the form of federal, state and local development funds and loan guarantees.

Some $17 million worth of groundfish was landed in Portland last year, according to the National Marine Fisheries Service. By contrast, New Bedford, Mass., netted $103 million and Boston $12 million.

Purchasing methods vary from port to port and auction to auction. In New Bedford, buyers must purchase an entire boatload and then resell whatever fish they don't want. Boston sells its fish according to species, but bids are made before the catch is seen.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: L equals B

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—Now that you have adopted (at long last) a five-card-major bidding system, there arises a small but controversial problem about how to open a hand with five clubs and five spades. The bidding authorities seem to differ on this subject. The good players at my local insist that you should always bid the five-card major first.

What is your sage advice? Would the strength of each suit matter, or would point count decide your choice? Would vulnerability and position at the table influence you? — S.H., South Windsor, Conn.

A.—There are almost as many opinions on this point as there are experts. One group firmly believes that you should open one club. Another, including such internationalists as Edgar Kaplan, editor of "The Bridge World," always opens one spade.

We fall somewhere between the two. With minimum opening bids or very strong hands, we believe in opening one club. With a minimum opening bid, that is to allow us to show both suits and our distribution while keeping the bidding as low as possible. With very strong hands, we open one club to make it as easy as possible for partner to enter the auction; he might be able to scrape up a response over one club, but not over one spade.

That leaves the in-between hands. Those we elect to open one spade so we can make a high reverse of three clubs should partner make a two-over-one response. That gives partner a pretty accurate picture of our strength, and we might be able to complete the description of the distribution with our next bid.

What are the advantages of this method over any other? I really don't believe it makes much difference which way you play. What is important is that you and your partner agree on which method you are going to adopt, so you do not have any partnership misunderstanding.

Q.—(This letter was addressed to Omar Sharif). Please give me information about Charles Goren. I was informed that he was deceased, but I cannot believe that if that were the case the column would appear as by "Goren on Bridge, by Charles H. Goren and Omar Sharif." — B.L. Gering, Neb.

A.—Like Mark Twain, I am delighted to be able to reply that the reports of my demise have been greatly exaggerated. This despite the efforts of some of my partners over the years to do me in. In any event, old bridge players never die; they simply pass away.

College Research Is Urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — A White House panel has called for a major increase in federal spending for research at American universities, saying the United States cannot afford to lose international leadership in science and technology.

Federal support for such research has lagged in the 1980s, says a report presented to Congress by the White House Science Council's Panel on the Health of U.S. Colleges and Universities.

The nation's health, the panel says, is closely linked to universities that now "find themselves with obsolete equipment, aging facilities and growing shortages of both faculty members and students in many important fields."

While federal spending for university research increased, after adjustment for inflation, from $2.26 billion in 1980 to $2.43 billion in 1984, the total as a percentage of national economic output has declined, the panel says. It argues that the trend must be reversed.

Despite Reagan administration emphasis on transferring federal programs to private industry, the panel said: "We must be realistic about the very real limitations on the extent to which industrial support of basic research, important as it is, can replace that from the federal government."

'Stagecoach' Revival Offers Smooth Ride

By Robert DiMatteo

As if to prove that a venerable old story only gets better with each new telling, CBS offers the third film version of Stagecoach (May 18). Originally a short story, "Stage to Lordsburg," by western writer Ernest Haycox, "Stagecoach" became perhaps the greatest western of all in the 1939 version, starring John Wayne and directed by John Ford. A 1966 remake featuring Bing Crosby and Ann-Margret added nothing. The CBS version fares slightly better, though it still pales in comparison to the original.

A "Grand Hotel" on the range, "Stagecoach" juggles a passel of juicy characters, providing parts for the always popular all-star cast. This time, many of the key roles are filled by down-home country music types like Willie Nelson, Kris Kristofferson, Waylon Jennings, Johnny Cash, June Carter Cash, and Jesse Colter — a surprising number of whom are effective and natural presences on screen.

Along for the ride (and the inevitable trouble from the Indians) are Elizabeth Ashley in the patented prostitute-with-a-heart-of-gold role, Anthony Newley as a liquor salesman, and Anthony Franciosa as a banker. Don't expect to have much feeling for Apache chief Geronimo and his warriors: They're strictly the bad guys here. Some tuneful country music accompanies the perilous journey.

One's social conscience is easily awakened by Samaritan (CBS, May 19), the inspirational study of real-life activist Mitch Snyder, who strives to combat the problems facing the homeless who live on the streets of Washington, D.C. Martin Sheen stars as Snyder, giving one of his skillful, conscience-stricken performances.

Would-be Rambos will thrill to NBC's two-part "On Wings of Eagles" (May 18 and 19), an adaptation of Ken Follett's best-seller about the rescue of two American businessmen imprisoned in Iran during the Ayatollah Khomeini's takeover in 1979. It stars Burt Lancaster, Richard Crenna and Paul LeMat.

Clockwise from top left: Johnny Cash, Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, John Schneider and Kris Kristofferson star in "Stagecoach," a made-for-TV remake of John Ford's classic 1939 western. The film airs Sunday, May 18 on CBS.

Cats and Dogs

Cartoon lovers will get animated over next week's CBS specials. "It's a Flashbeagle, Charlie Brown," with Snoopy as the "Peanuts" version of Irene Cara, will be rebroadcast May 27. Tune in just to see Peppermint Patty lead an aerobics class. That notorious fat cat of lasagna fame has no interest in keeping in shape; in fact, he's turned his vacation tropical isle into a yowling beach party in the all-new "Garfield in Paradise." Heaven can wait, though, once Garfield finds Odie stashed in his luggage and a ominous rumbling volcano smoking nearby.

Stylish Sleuth

CBS's "Murder, She Wrote," starring Angela Lansbury as mystery-maven Jessica Fletcher, has been named one of the "best-dressed television series" for the 1985-86 television season by the California Mart, Los Angeles' major fashion-resource center. There's gotta be something better than this. That's what Steff (Tom Cruise) and Lisa (Lea Thompson) decide after they make "All the Right Moves." The 1983 film airs Friday, May 23 on CBS.

"Remington Steele"

By Toni Reinhold

NBC's "Remington Steele" has made Stephanie Zimbalist a household name.

But unlike her character, Laura Holt, who plunges head on into cases, Zimbalist turned down the project initially.

"I read the treatment and thought it was absolutely delightful," says the 30-year-old actress. But she told her agent that she would not do the series.

"I had been adamant because I thought the grind of a series would wear down on the quality of the performance," she explains.

"It's difficult to invest a lot of time and work on a script when you only have one night to read it and seven days to shoot it. I worked very hard on the movies of the week that I did and I didn't think I or anybody could keep up the quality on a series."

Despite her position, the pilot script was delivered to her. "I let it sit for a while," says the actress. "Then I woke up one morning and thought, 'I'm really an idiot. This is wonderful and I may be hoping to get work in a commercial one day and I'll remember turning this down and I'll shoot myself. So I decided to do it."

But Zimbalist adds: "I look very different from Laura Holt.

"I'm hopeless with my hair and I can't put on makeup, so I walk around in a ponytail and baggy clothes all the time in real life."

Zimbalist has proved, however, through TV movies, guest appearances and her current series that she has plenty of what it takes to succeed.

She was raised on a ranch in the San Fernando Valley and today lives in a cottage-type home in the same area. A polite, sensitive woman with an easy laugh, she speaks readily about other talented family members: her grandparents, opera singer Alma Gluck and concert violinist Efrem Zimbalist Sr., and her father, veteran actor Efrem Zimbalist Jr.

"My grandmother passed away in 1938 so I never knew her, but she was a great singer. I've always liked to sing, even before I knew who she was."

Stephanie studied voice on the West Coast before her teacher moved to New York and plans to resume her studies in the East while the series is on hiatus.

And she says she would like to star in a movie based on her grandmother's life. The actress credits her grandfather with instilling in her a love of music.

"I love him greatly," she says. "The magic he passed on is an appreciation for music, but he was also a great person and it was a pleasure to know him."

Zimbalist also speaks well of series co-star Pierce Brosnan.

"He's really delightful. Pierce is one of those fellows who is very cheery. If people are down or gloomy or tired, he picks everybody up. We work very well together."

TV Chatter

Nearly 50 years after "Stagecoach" catapulted John Wayne to stardom, the journey continues. This week, country crooners Willie Nelson, Kris Kristofferson and Johnny Cash star in a CBS remake of the classic John Ford western. Mary Crosby, who plays pregnant wife Lucy Mallory, will also be along for the ride. And though "Stagecoach" is sentimentally significant to the actress — her father, Bing, starred in a 1966 remake — don't expect her to follow the road her half-brother, Gary, did by writing a tale of life with daddy dearest, who had a reputation for being nasty. "I am grateful I had 18 years with daddy," Mary, 27, says, "and I don't support cashing in on a parent who is a celebrity. It's the lowest form of humanity. As my mother once told me, 'It's a dirty bird that befouls its own nest.' "

Al Waxman feels he gives an arresting performance every week as Bert Samuels, the gruff police lieutenant who supervises Christine Cagney and Mary Beth Lacey's police activities on "Cagney & Lacey." Now, the 50-year-old actor has just had his beliefs confirmed: The New York City Police Department has named Waxman an honorary police lieutenant. He is the second actor in the NYPD's history to be so honored — 10 years ago, Telly Savalas received the same award. "I am pleased and proud that these guys consider my portrayal a realistic one," says Waxman. "It's meaningful to a point. If I parked illegally, I'd still get a ticket!" Waxman also confided that this week's series cliffhanger, "Parting Shots," will feature a shootout between — well, we're not telling. But we will tell you that according to Waxman, "J.R. is not involved in the shooting!"

Roger Vadim may be best known for the 1956 film "And God Created Woman," starring Brigitte Bardot, but the French film director is also credited with creating the careers of three of the world's most glamorous actresses: Bardot, Catherine Deneuve and Jane Fonda. Vadim, who was also married to Bardot and Fonda, has chronicled his amorous adventures in "Bardot Deneuve Fonda," a memoir he calls "not very serious." But not everyone agrees: Bardot and Deneuve are suing their former lover for $27,000 each for invasion of privacy. Fonda is not suing because, according to Vadim, he showed her the manuscript before it was published, and made two cuts she requested. "I did not want to embarass Jane because she is an actress with an image," says Vadim, 58. "I can carry on a conversation with her; she's not as childish as Brigitte and Catherine."

After nearly two decades, Grace Slick and the rest of the Starship (originally the Jefferson Airplane with a wholly different crew except for Slick) still haven't landed. The group's new single, "Tomorrow Doesn't Matter Tonight," is flyin' high, and next month, the Starship begins a nationwide tour, complete with a $25,000 stage set designed as a surrealistic cityscape. But that's a small price to pay: The band's 82-year-old Fulton Street house in San Francisco — bought as living and rehearsal space in 1968 for $70,000 — has just gone on the market for $795,000. ... Tom Cottle's TV series was recently named Best Talk Show by American Women in Radio and Television, but when the small-screen psychologist went to pick up his award, he was more infatuated with one of the guests, newlywed Maria Shriver Schwarzenegger. "I used to write material for her father's campaign speeches," Cottle recalls, "and when I saw Maria, I felt like a teen again. Be still my heart."

ROCK VIEW

'Absolute Beginners': colorful, musical fun

By Marianne Meyer

Although many critics have dismissed "Absolute Beginners" as little more than a two-hour music video, Julien Temple's attempt at a new synthesis of music and film, based on his years as a video-clip director, is a noble and occasionally brilliant film effort. Like a music video, "Absolute Beginners" uses imagery and music as a kind of narrative shorthand, but, unlike most clips, this sensory bombardment has a story and a purpose.

Eddie O'Connell and Patsy Kensit

The romance of a young photographer named Colin and his fickle girlfriend Suzette (played by Patsy Kensit) is set in late 50s London, the "dawn" of the teenage subculture. Boy gets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl back — it's a '40s-type musical with an '80s twist, excellent sound-track music and top pop-star cameos.

But the real star of the film — despite Eddie O'Connell's engaging debut as Colin — is style. Working with splashy color, light and movement effects on super-realistic sets, Temple may have finally revived the movie musical by freeing it from the constraints of naturalistic action. (Its obvious debt is to Francis Ford Coppola's disastrous attempt at the same style in "One from the Heart.") The film's failing is in trying to impart a serious message with this glitzy style. Scenes of racial bigotry, climaxing with a "West Side Story" choreographed race riot, threaten to topple the film's delicate balance. But any film that fails for trying too hard is worth supporting.

While "Beginners" takes a mainstream form — the music video — and recasts it for innovative effect, Laurie Anderson's "Home of the Brave" takes an eclectic and unusual genre — performance art — and makes it more accessible to the wider film audience.

Combining music, slides, film, dance and a touch of stand-up comedy, Anderson's "Mister Heartbreak" tour was a dizzying, delightful theatrical effort, captured here in a concert film of extraordinarily sharp digital sound and photography. Anderson's work is near impossible to describe, but if you ever wished that Bugs Bunny, Philip Glass and William S. Burroughs would collaborate on a project, Anderson is a dream come true.

Barbear Animates Stories From The Bible

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — No one who has watched "The Flintstones" any time in the last quarter century is in any doubt that Joe Barbera knows how to tell a story.

The stone-age family he created with his partner Bill Hanna and the team that helped Hanna-Barbera Productions overtake Disney in the animated business has earned its place in cartoon history.

The Hanna-Barbera duo started out at MGM, producing a string of award-winning "Tom and Jerry" shorts, which have also withstood the test of time.

They have progressed with "The Flintstones," "Huckleberry Hound," "The Jetsons" and other animated antics to a new slate of feature films termed "live action" to distinguish them from the pen-and-ink creations.

Through it all, Barbera was nursing a scheme to take a selection of stories from the Bible and turn them into animated segments every bit as exciting to children as the latest adventures of Fred, Huck, Yogi or George.

He's a persistent man, and again and again, he'd go to the networks, assuring them that entertainment with educational and religious overtones did not necessarily mean a mass exodus of viewers heading for another channel.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: I think Linda Gray is an excellent actress. How did she get started on "Dallas"? — KRISTIN GOLD, SANTA ROSA, CALIF.

Linda Gray, 45, was born in Santa Monica, Calif. on Sept. 12, 1940. She is the daughter of a Culver City watchmaker. Linda was 18 and a model when she met Capitol Records art director Ed Thrasher while posing for an album cover he designed. They were married in 1962. As a comfortable suburban housewife, she bore Thrasher two children: son Jeff, now 21, and daughter Kelly, now 19. At age 32, she became restless and decided to take acting lessons. A chance meeting in a health food store led to a part on the "McCloud" series. Her shopping friend turned out to be Mrs. Dennis Weaver, wife of the "McCloud" star. Small parts followed in "Marcus Welby, M.D." and "Switch." It was her role as model Linda Murkland in Norman Lear's short-lived syndicated series "All That Glitters," however, that led to stardom. At age 36, Gray was hardly a budding young starlet when she tested for "Dallas." Ruth Conforte had just been hired to find a cast for the new show. The basic requirement for the part of Sue Ellen Ewing was that the actress look like she could have been a former Miss Texas. (Gray, in fact, had lost a Miss Rheingold competition in 1965). Conforte liked Gray, and the casting directors said "Who?" Comforte showed the directors Gray's photographs, and the rest is history. At first, Sue Ellen's part was quite small, but the meshing of Hagman and Gray created sparks — and a hit TV series.

Dear Michele: I say that Vincent Damon Furnier, alias rock singer Alice Cooper, never portrayed Eddie Haskell on TV's "Leave It To Beaver." My friend insists he played the role for a short period. — JERRY AUGUSTEIN, MALVERN, OHIO

Rumors still circulate that Alice Cooper portrayed Haskell on "Leave It To Beaver." This is nonsense! The role of unctuous Eddie Haskell belongs solely to actor Ken Osmond. In addition to his bizarre concert tours, Cooper has appeared in such feature films as "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" (1978), "Sextette" (1978) and "Roadie" (1980).

(23) Light And Lively

Juniors and Seniors

June is quite a month for the ladies on CBN Cable. On June 21, CBN will air the finals of the 1986 "America's Junior Miss Pageant," live from Mobile, Ala. The 29th annual contest offers a $25,000 first prize to one of the 52 finalists from the 50 states, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia. June is also "Leading Lady Month" on CBN with a collection of top films. Hollywood movie queen Carole Lombard stars in the screwball comedy "My Man Godfrey" and Janet Gaynor glitters in a pre-Streisand "A Star is Born." Barbara Stanwyck, Jane Powell, Claudette Colbert, Delores de Rio and Vivien Leigh round out the summer-month roster.

John Schneider takes a 'Stagecoach' ride

By Marc Minnelli

Most actors would have sold their souls to have worked — even doing the tiniest role — in "Stagecoach," the small-screen remake of John Ford's classic 1939 western. And with good reason: The film, which airs Sunday, May 18 on CBS, boasts a stellar cast: Kris Kristofferson, Johnny Cash, Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Elizabeth Ashley, Anthony Newley and Mary Crosby.

John Schneider

But John Schneider didn't accept the role of burly stagecoach driver Buck just to work with such favorite, famous country crooners. "I get to spit, chew tobacco and drool," says Schneider, best known for his role of good ole boy Bo Duke in the long-running (1979-85) CBS rural sitcom "The Dukes of Hazzard."

The 32-year-old actor may laugh when he drawls on the word "drool," but he's serious.

"'Stagecoach' was a neat experience because it was the first time I was ever offered a role as a character actor," says the actor, who grew a scraggy beard for the role. "Many people think of me as someone with a clean-cut, all-American image, and I guess that comes from all those years as Bo. So 'Stagecoach' was a test. I wanted to prove I could really act."

According to the actor, he received his biggest compliment from CBS, which told the actor "that nowhere during 'Stagecoach' was John Schneider noticeable."

The actor smiles. "That," he says simply, "was great to hear."

Fans will be hearing more of Schneider now that his third MCA album, "A Memory Like You," has been released. His previous albums spawned several hits — "I've Been Around Enough to Know," "Country Girls," "It's a Short Walk from Heaven to Hell" — and "What's a Memory Like You (Doing in a Love Like This)," his latest single, is zooming up the country charts.

"For a long time, people thought my singing was just a hobby," Schneider says. "But singing has always meant a lot to me. Now that I've signed with MCA, my records work. They're not just there."

CINDY SAYS

Johnson fans will get new look at their vice

By Cindy Adams

Don Johnson will shortly be found in your neighborhood theater. Not that the "Miami Vice" star's movie career is going forward — it's going backward. In 1970, before Don was TV's hottest star, there was a film called "The Magic Garden of Stanley Sweetheart." Martin Poll, whose credits include "The Lion in Winter" and "Nighthawks," produced the flick. Robert Westbrook, whose new novel is "The Lefthanded Policeman," wrote the book on which the film is based. And Johnson — a young stud minus the stubble, stylish clothes and charisma — was in it. MGM owns the movie, and before you can say "Miami Vice," they'll re-release it. Like magic.

Don Johnson

Funny man Dick Shawn is joining the parade of one-man Broadway shows. He comes to the Great White Way next season. "I tested my show in California," Dick says, "and won the Los Angeles Drama Award. The show's about comedians, what goes on in a comic's head. I conceived and wrote it." And the title? "Either 'The Second Greatest Entertainer in the Whole World,' which I've been calling it, or 'The Comic,' which is what I want to call it," says Dick. And where's he bringing it? "I'd like a small intimate house with 50 seats," he adds. "So it can be a hard ticket to get."

Dick Shawn

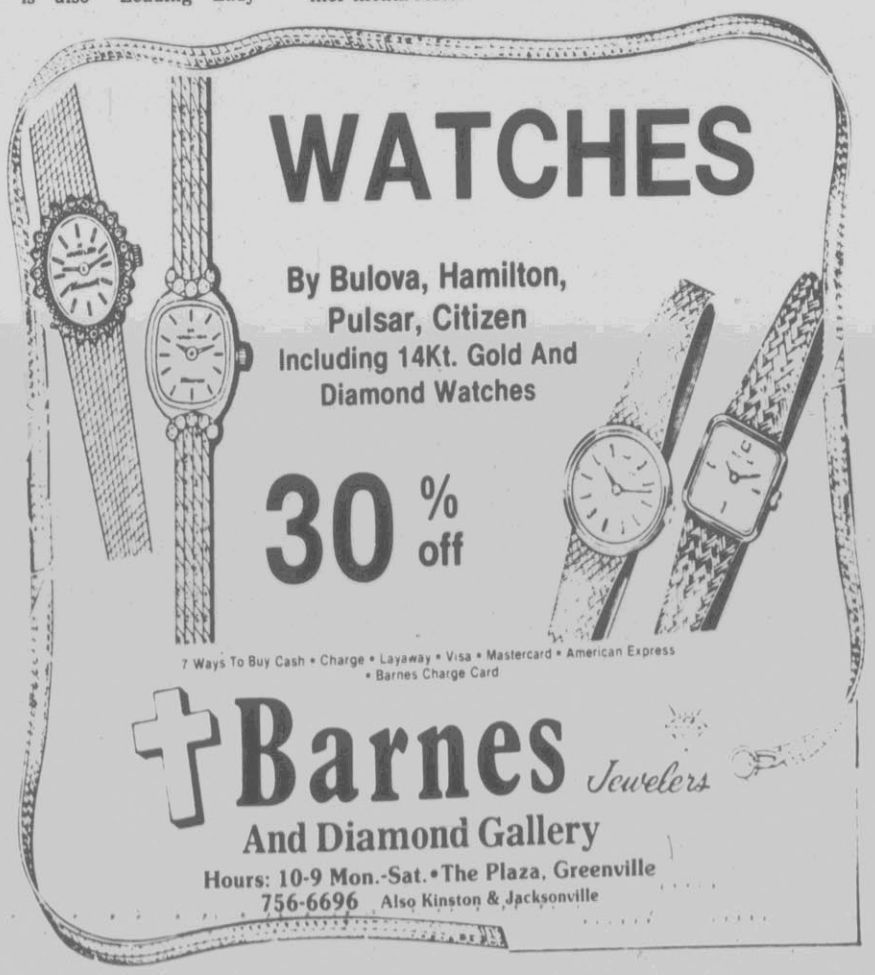

Mel Gibson has a yen for money. He's agreed to do a Japanese beer commercial. Michael J. Fox is now into earrings. The "Family Ties" star had his ears pierced. "Dallas" producers are looking for David Lee Roth to guest on the series and boost the ratings.

Will NBA Conference Finals Take A Toll?

By Adam Beckerman

Pete Rose once said, "Pressure? It ain't hitting in forty-four straight games, 'cause I done that and it was fun. The playoffs are pressure."

To endure six weeks of grapefruit-league ball, a 162-game schedule, a week's worth of league championship tension, only to fall one or two runs short of the World Series must, indeed, be hard on the heart. What's more, to make the World Series and then to fail — to get swept, no less — is no great disgrace; the ache of defeat is diffused over time. To be in the Super Bowl and not win in front of millions, however, can be shattering. To be mauled there — just ask the New England Patriots. Indeed, the Miami Dolphins were probably thanking their lucky stars that the Pats had beaten them in the AFC final, saving them the trouble of dealing with the Bears in New Orleans.

What has this to do with basketball? Well, it's NBA conference finals time. Game 4 of either the Eastern or Western final can be seen on CBS on Sunday, May 18. A Game 5, if needed, will air on May 21.

It's well known that no team since the 1969 Boston Celtics has successfully defended its world championship. But to just reach the finals for a shot at repeating is a tough act. Only four times since 1969 has the champ made it to the finals, where they were knocked off. The most recent team to flop are last year's Celtics.

"I think it's the most difficult sport to win a championship," says Tommy Heinsohn, former Celtic player, coach and now a CBS analyst. "It goes from the middle of April to the middle of June. That's a long period to have your stomach knotted. In football, it's a couple of games. In baseball, the league championships only last a few days. But in the NBA, the playoffs just go on forever."

One of the most memorable semifinals occurred in 1982, with the Celtics trying to get into position to defend their title. A year earlier, they had recovered from a 3-1 deficit to beat the Sixers before beating the Houston Rockets in the finals. In '82, they had again erased a 3-1 Philadelphia advantage. But on this afternoon in the Boston Garden, the Sixers held them off. As the game wound down, the Celtic fans began chanting to their team's vanquishers, "Beat L.A., Beat L.A."

"The fans there have seen more championship ball than any other city," says Heinsohn. "They appreciate the toll the gauntlet takes on players and coaches. They've seen Elgin Baylor's 61 and Michael Jordan's 63. They've seen enough to understand that when a team gets beat, it just gets beat."

Add 'Rocky IV' To Your Sly Collection

By Frank Lovece

The most popular cartoon of 1985 comes to video this month, and we're not talking about Bugs Bunny: CBS/Fox is releasing "Rocky IV" (list price, $80).

Director-writer-star Sylvester Stallone's latest good-guy/bad-guy extravaganza won't be his first video hit. All the other "Rocky" movies, as well as Stallone's two "Rambo" revenge fantasies, are on tape and disc — as are earlier films featuring Stallone in less auspicious roles.

The earliest and most infamous of these videos is the 1970 soft-core porn movie "Italian Stallion" (aka "Party at Kitty and Studs"). Hard to find, it was released for $70 by Wonderful World of Video.

Stallone also had a small bit in 1971's "Bananas" (CBS/Fox; $60), Woody Allen's comedy about a New York nebbish who inadvertently leads a Latin American coup attempt. Sly played a leather-jacketed thug who mugged an old lady on the subway while a trembling Woody hid behind his newspaper.

Why You Need The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan

If you were just returning home from the hospital, would you be able to write a check for your share of the bill? If not, would you have to take money out of your savings? Or worse yet, would you have to look for help?

That's why most of us depend on health insurance —whether it be a group plan, major medical or Medicare—to share in the cost of hospital care. But have you stopped to consider that as hospital charges go up, so does your share of the bill?

And hospital costs are continuing to rise at an alarming rate. The American Hospital Association reports that the average hospital bill is now over $2,400.00—DOUBLE what it was just five years ago.

Yet most health insurance continues to pay only 80% of your hospital bill. In years past that may have been enough. But today, your share could be difficult to handle.

That's why more and more people are turning to the Protection Plus Hospital Plan. It pays cash benefits directly to you, or anyone you choose. You can use them to help pay the growing amount of hospital costs other health plans don't cover. Or you can use them to help pay your regular household expenses while you're in the hospital or recuperating at home.

The cash benefits you collect could mean the difference between getting through a financial crisis and having to look to your savings or elsewhere for help.

And that's why we say:

We're here when you need us

"I don't know how anyone could ask for anything better."

That's what one policyowner said after our protection helped him through a financial crisis. Here's his letter:

I wish to truly thank you and your company for the excellent manner in which my recent claims were handled. I don't know how anyone could ask for anything better.

Until a person is faced with a serious medical problem, we tend to forget about all the related medical expenses. We only face reality during a time when we have so many other concerns, financial expenses being one of the big concerns.

The payments received from you assisted so very much in the areas not covered by my basic insurance. The excellent way my claims were handled assisted greatly in seeing that my numerous bills were paid on time.

Your concern made my full recovery much easier and with many less worries. I can only say many thanks to each and every one of you. I can only refer to your company and employees with the most highest recommendations.

Thank you all very much.

Sincerely,
Charles F. Elser
Arizona

Here's How The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan Helps You Beat The Rising Cost Of Hospital Care

These Cash Benefits Will Be Paid Directly To You

$2,250.00 A Month
$75.00 A Day
For Any Covered Sickness Or Injury

You'll collect these cash benefits whenever you are hospitalized for any reason—even a simple checkup.

$3,375.00 A Month
$112.50 A Day
For Cancer Or A Heart Attack

Your cash benefits will increase by 50% when you are hospitalized for cancer (including leukemia and Hodgkin's disease) or a heart attack (acute myocardial infarction).

$9,000.00 A Month
$300.00 A Day
Double Benefits For You And Your Spouse

Protection Plus pays you and your insured spouse DOUBLE BENEFITS when you both are in the hospital due to the same, or different accidents.

Benefits For People 65 & Over
Pays Benefits In Addition To Medicare

Protection Plus provides important extra help for people with Medicare.

During the first 60 days, Medicare pays all but the first $492.00 of hospital costs. That's why Protection Plus pays half benefits during this time. After 60 days—when Medicare coverage reduces—you'll begin receiving full cash benefits for as long as you stay—even for life!

With Protection Plus, you don't have to pay for protection you don't really need. And you don't have to join an association or pay membership dues to get it. Your acceptance is guaranteed regardless of age.

You'll receive copies of the North Carolina Buyer's Guides with your policy. If you wish to have the Guides before you enroll, you may request them from the company.

You Also Get All These Special Features

- Protection From The Very First Day
  Your cash benefits are paid from the VERY FIRST DAY of any covered hospital stay. No deductible. No waiting period.
- Benefits For A Lifetime
  Your cash benefits are paid for EVERY DAY of covered hospitalization. No matter how many days you're hospitalized, or how many times. Even for life!
- You'll Collect Cash Benefits On Top Of Any Insurance
  That includes group insurance, major medical coverage, worker's compensation, prepaid health plans—even Medicare. And your benefits are not subject to state or Federal income tax.
- Money To Spend As You Choose
  Your checks will come directly to you, unless you tell us otherwise. These cash benefits are yours to use in any way you wish.
- Full Benefits For The Whole Family
  Your insured spouse and children will receive the very same protection you have. One rate provides full coverage for all—regardless of your family size.
- Pays Maternity Benefits, Too
  You'll collect full benefits for normal childbirth when pregnancy occurs anytime after your policy is issued. And at no extra cost.
- Freedom Of Choice
  Your Protection Plus coverage is good at any hospital, anywhere in the world—even federal and VA hospitals. The only exceptions are nursing homes, convalescent, extended care or self-care units of hospitals.
- Quick, Convenient Cash Payments
  Your claims will be settled promptly—and your benefit checks will be sent to you by first class mail.
- Please Note These Limitations
  Old health problems (those that became evident or were treated before the effective date of your policy) are not covered for the first year of your policy. But once that year is up, even a health problem you've had for years is covered!

  If you are 65 or over you will be covered for cancer, heart attack, stroke, hernia, disease or disorder of the prostate, tuberculosis, cataracts, emphysema, cirrhosis or diabetes if your hospital confinement commences more than six months after the effective date of your policy.

  For confinement due to mental illness, half benefits are paid for up to 30 days.
- No Salesman Will Call
  We believe the Protection Plus Hospital Plan is good enough to sell itself. That's why you won't have to deal with a salesman to enroll. Everything is handled directly between you and Physicians Mutual.
- Enroll Today For Just $1.00! Your Acceptance Is Guaranteed
  Simply fill out the brief enrollment form and mail it back to Physicians Mutual along with $1.00 for your first month's coverage. There is no medical exam required, or health questions to answer. Your acceptance is guaranteed!

  If you are already a Physicians Mutual policyowner and would like information about additional coverage available, please call or write for details.

Money-Back Guarantee

Your easy-to-read policy (P500 Series) will come to you by first class mail. When it arrives, take a few moments to look it over.

Then, if you feel your Protection Plus Hospital Plan isn't every bit as good as we've said, simply mail it back within 30 days. We will promptly refund your money —no questions asked.

Physicians Mutual Rated A+ (Excellent)

Physicians Mutual has been awarded the highest rating—A+ (Excellent)—from A.M. Best Company, independent insurance analysts, recognizing our financial stability and sound operating performance.

As the company began in 1902, we specialized in health insurance for the medical professions only. Later, we saw the public's growing need for extra protection against rising hospital costs and began offering insurance to all Americans.

Headquartered in Omaha, licensed in all 50 states and the District of Columbia, we are proud of our service record. We currently pay claims totalling over $10,000,000.00 a month on all policies!

No matter how large or how small your claim, you can depend on us ...

"Thank you so much for your prompt claim action on my hospital confinement. The money kept me going during my convalescent period and took care of some additional bills, including special medications, during that period.

"More importantly, easing my financial worries at that time was responsible for a calmer, more relaxed frame of mind so vital to my well being . . ."

Ruth B. Holmquist, Arizona

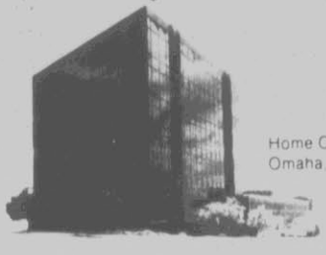

... to back your policy with fast claims service.

"Just a short note to thank you for your promptness in handling my claim.

"I have other policies with other companies, but none of them were as prompt as yours. In less than 10 days I had my money—that is remarkable quick action. I have had other claims with you in the past, and they were always the first to be settled each time. This proves your slogan 'We're Here When You Need Us' . . ."

Q Why is Lucille Ball, at 74, with all her money and awards, returning to TV next season in a new sitcom, "Lucy"?—Marilyn Gold, Corvallis, Ore.

Cutler/Globe

Lucy: She'd rather work

A The success of "Golden Girls," a sitcom dealing with the lives of four elderly women, indicates a ready audience for that type of TV show. Lucille Ball needs neither money nor honors, but she obviously prefers work to retirement.

A Princess Margaret's house, "Les Jolies Eaux" (The Pretty Waters), is on the island of Mustique in the British West Indies, where it is available for rental at $3800 to $5500 a week. To reserve, write: Mustique Co. Ltd., Box 349, Kingstown, St. Vincent and the Grenadines; or call 809-458-4621.

Where was he raised? Any other information about him would be profoundly appreciated.—Kim Hayes, St. Louis, Mo.*

A Carl Icahn, 50, was reared in Queens, N.Y., by his mother, a schoolteacher, and his father, a lawyer who on occasion served as the cantor in a synagogue. Icahn, the first graduate of Far Rockaway High School to enter Princeton on a scholarship, was graduated from that university in the Class of 1957. He was next accepted at New York University Medical School but left after two years to join the Army, from which he resigned in 1961. That same year he became a stockbroker trainee with Dreyfus & Co. and has been involved in various Wall Street deals and corporate takeovers ever since. Icahn is 6 feet 3, runs his own brokerage with a staff of 50, has a wife and two children, homes in New York and Florida, and is known for his raids on American Can, Gulf + Western, Saxon Industries, Phillips Petroleum, Uniroyal Inc. and for his takeover of ACF Industries and TWA. Icahn is one of the most controversial, scorned, envied, intelligent and respected investors Wall Street has produced in decades.

Q How come Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos never appeared on lists of the world's richest people? Isn't it possible that, with a fortune estimated at $5 billion to $10 billion, they are in fact the world's richest couple?—Lois Gottlieb, Honolulu, Hawaii

A For years the Marcos' lifestyle was recognized as lavish and extravagant. Until Imelda and Ferdinand Marcos were forced out of the Philippines, however, the source and size of their wealth had never been officially investigated. Now that the process is under way, it will come as no shock if they turn out to have been worth billions in real estate, jewelry, stocks and bonds—making them, at least for a time, the world's wealthiest couple.

Lily Tomlin and Jane Wagner held on to see their dreams come true

The Brightest

BY DAVID HALBERSTAM

Deborah Feingold

THEY HAD BOTH come to New York with precious little but their dreams. One was from Detroit, confident, or at least with a veneer of confidence, voted most popular in her high school class, funny, irreverent, street smart. Everyone had always told her how talented she was; even in college she had done a parody of a Grosse Pointe matron which had been so successful that she had made the rounds of Detroit's talk shows.

She had seen Audrey Hepburn in Truman Capote's Breakfast at Tiffany's and had decided instantly that she was both Hepburn and Holly Golightly. She started working on Hepburn's moves, putting her hair up on top of her head and wearing nothing but a trench coat, and mimicking Hepburn's deft eye-language. She decided to go to New York and live in a beautiful brownstone worthy of Holly, study to become a brilliant mime, and live a life filled with rewards and prayers answered. So she went to New York, where in the beginning she stayed in a tiny railroad flat and, in lieu of a bed, slept on a footlocker, with chairs brought up for additional support. She worked as a bookkeeper at $90 a week. Six weeks later, knowing she was not quite ready for New York, she was back in Detroit.

The other dreamer was shyer, and there had been fewer early victories for her, less social acclaim, more sense early on that she was the outsider. She had grown up in a small town in Tennessee during the '50s, feeling painfully shy and loving Morristown, with the odd saddened love of the outcast, aware of the kindness and humanity there but knowing it was not her place and wondering where her place was. Her family was different and eccentric.

But there were two great uncles who had once been to New York, and they knew the theater. One had danced briefly with the Earl Carroll Vanities and one had known Cesar Romero, who had even left an umbrella in his apartment. The umbrella had been saved and lovingly transported back to Tennessee, where it was memorialized as a symbol of the larger world beyond. Her great uncles directed high school plays and ran a regional theater in East Tennessee. By chance one day there had been a reading at their house and she had read for a part, and it was the most natural and satisfying thing she had ever done. She immediately began to think about being an actress. She started subscribing on her own to the Sunday edition of The New York Times so that she could read the Arts and Leisure section, which was about the magic world of New York theater. Eventually at the age of 18, with $300 which she had earned as a traveling actress in Virginia, she set out for New York. She found a room in the YWCA for which she paid $10 a week, and she stayed there for three years. For more than 10 years she endured an endless series of defeats.

Theirs is a world with the trappings, sweetness and problems of success

New York is still a city of dreams. The city itself may be tarnished now, imbalanced between the very rich and the very poor, the subway monstrous and filthy, and Broadway itself is perhaps the most loathsome of its great avenues, as much a center of pornography as of theater. Yet Broadway is still Broadway, a magnet of its own, and the two of them—Lily Tomlin, the would-be mime from Detroit, and Jane Wagner, the would-be actress from Tennessee—are the stars of Broadway this year, the actress and the writer of what is far and away the season's best show, The Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe. The show is a reflection of the rare coming together of two different but compatible people, friends and collaborators, talent enhancing talent. It is filled with characters from the darker regions of their and our lives. The narrator is Trudy, a bag-lady; there are other wonderful small players, including a rich woman who laments that she is "tired of being the victim of trends that I reflect but don't even understand." At the heart of it is a prolonged, funny and haunting look at the feminism of the '70s, based on three Tomlin characters. It is theater of the highest order.

This, then, is the season in which their dreams are realized, particularly for Miss Wagner, who has never had the acclaim that came somewhat more readily to Miss Tomlin. There was on opening night, when the show had ended, a rising chorus of applause for Miss Tomlin. Miss Wagner, still modest and almost unbearably private, suddenly realized that the audience was no longer just cheering for Miss Tomlin, it was shouting, as if described in all those old Sunday Times sections she had read 30 years ago, "Author! Author!" Author, she thought, that's me, how nice, and then she was shoved onstage by Lily's hairdresser, and suddenly she found herself savoring it: She was a writer, this was an opening night, she had a hit, and everyone knew it.

Not surprisingly for two stars in the season of their fame, the phone now rings off the hook. There have been in the last few weeks some 30 requests for them to be the stars of various benefits. A vast array of publishers are in hot pursuit of the book based on the Tomlin-Wagner characters. There is talk of a Tony or two Tonys for the show. The request for interviews is endless, more often than not by people who have seen the show and become interested in the two women who did it. All the other interviews were rescheduled recently because Tom Brokaw of NBC went to the show and liked it so much that he wanted a piece on it for the Nightly News. Theirs had become a world with all the trappings, all the sweetness and all the problems of success.

Lily Tomlin was, one senses, always Lily Tomlin, a great and shrewd absorber of life around her, with the ability to take the basis for what might have been a potentially very painful life and turn it into comic material. The Tomlins came originally from Paducah, Ky., and moved during the worst of the Depression from jobless Kentucky to Detroit, where Guy Tomlin found work in a brass factory. Lily was always aware of how hard her father's life was but that her mother's life was somehow harder. Her father, even on the bad days, she decided, was the charming beloved street dude. On days he was flush, he would not necessarily deposit his earnings in a bank, but instead, since he did not drive, he was likely to pay one of his buddies $100 to take him to the track.

Her mother's job was to deal with so charming a man on the days when the charm was no longer there. He was not educated, but he was skilled and proud, and he manifested that pride by always wearing a white shirt and Florsheim shoes to work. He would on occasion bring home some brass part which he had made at work to show her, with self-evident pleasure, what he had accomplished. In addition he liked to take her to neighborhood pubs, prop her on the bar and tell her to sing; she was not adverse to doing it. He was also a serious drinker. He was, and this was a gift which Lily cherished, someone who lived outside the culture; if her mother craved respectability, her father had forsworn it. Conventions did not matter to him: sometimes this was painful, as when he might stumble downstairs in his underwear to a Tupperware party. His tendency to violate local standards of behavior bothered her mother, but it was something Lily Tomlin came to appreciate. "Babe," he would say, "pay no attention to what other people think. Just be yourself." It was his most enduring gift to a daughter, the gift of inner freedom. Out of that she grew funny, original and fiercely independent.

She found, not surprisingly, her freedom and her capacity to survive in a fantasy world. Her mother, who was quite beautiful, became in her mind Norma Shearer, the famed actress. Her father became Jack Teagarden, the wonderful jazz trombonist, a charming rogue of a man, always, in her mind, wearing a red carnation. She herself became Natalie Wood. She was determined to become successful; when she did, she vowed, the first thing she would do was give her father the white Cadillac convertible he deserved. She became an usher at a local movie house, a woman who, underwhelmed by the truths around her in daily life, found more interesting truths upon the screen. The money, $11 a week, was almost incidental. It was the world up on the screen which mattered. Her favorite was Wicked Woman, a quintessential "B" movie. She memorized every line in it. She found her first great role model in Beverly Michaels, who played the heavy in it—tall, blond, tough, a woman who had known what it was all about. Lily was, by her own description, a stringy 14-year-old, but she started walking slower than ever in the approved sultry Beverly Michaels manner and smoked a cigarette in the same seductive way. She hoped the people in the movie house would notice. None did.

Tomlin had gone from Cass Technical, where she was, in her own words, "lightly hoody," to Wayne State, the local college. There she became something of a star. The basic lesson of her life, passed on from her father, was that she should not only accept adversity, she should mock it. At Wayne State she appeared in variety shows, drawing on her family for material. In 1962 she decided to go to New York and become famous. Neither she nor New York was ready for one another; the people where she was staying in the East Village were artists and sculptors who looked down on someone as prosaic as an actress-comedienne. It was not a happy time, and she soon returned to Detroit, where she worked on her routines. Soon there was the beginning of a Tomlin style: Where others turned away from that part of their life which was painful, Lily Tomin learned how to turn it into material. It meant her work always had both an edge and a certain eccentric humanity to it.

The city may be tarnished, yet Broadway is still a magnet of its own

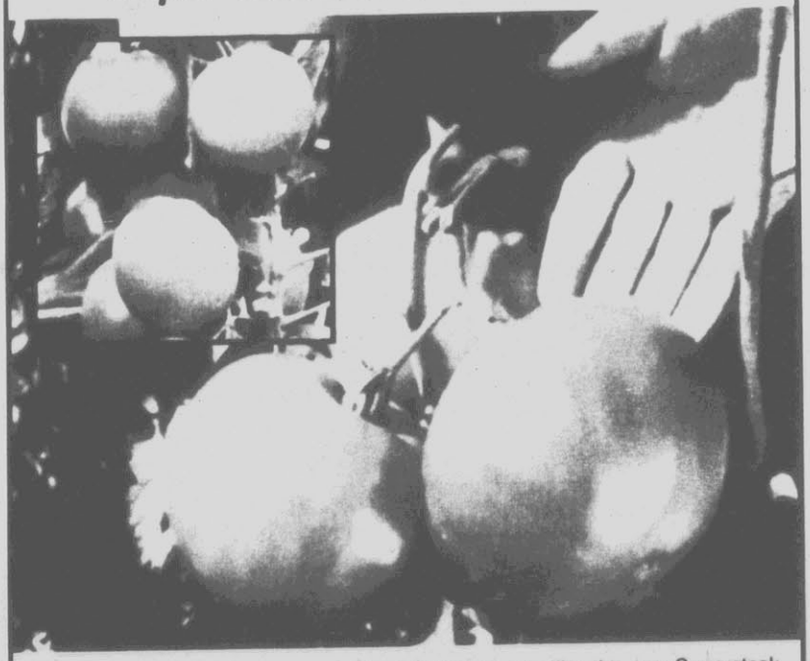

In 1965, more sure of her work, she returned to New York, determined eventually to be an actress but to start out as a comedienne, since it was hardly an overcrowded field. She was fearless and outrageous; she tried cabarets, held jobs as waitresses. At a Howard Johnson's near the theater district, she would on occasion grab the loudspeaker system and announce, "Attention, diners. Lily Tomlin, your Howard Johnson's waitress of the week, is about to make her appearance on our own floor. Let's give her a big hand." They did, and doubled her tips as well. Was it true that she was fired for this? "No, I was fired or quit because I got in constant fights with the cook, who had all the soft butter back in the kitchen but wouldn't allow us to use it to butter the breakfast toast, so we had to serve cold toast with hard butter. We used to argue, and I threw my apron at him one day. That was the end of the job."

Eventually she began to get work, went on Laugh-In in 1969 and created her own characters, including Ernestine, her own version of the telephone operator as an American nightmare. ("Have I reached the party to whom I am speaking?") When the Bell telephone company wanted to pay $500,000 to use her in its commercials, she turned down the proposal, afraid she would lose control of her own character. A hard-edged integrity was already there. Lily Tomlin's career, nonetheless, was launched. Soon specials and awards and movies followed.

Jane Wagner never went to college, because there were no role models to point her in that direction. Her father was a linotype operator on the Knoxville Journal. When she was young, she had taken great pleasure in watching him work, as if he were playing some wondrous organ. When modern technology replaced him and he became a proofreader, she felt on his part an immense sense of loss. The family, she thought, was pure Southern Gothic; no one in it was like those people who were in the sitcoms on television or in the Norman Rockwell covers of The Saturday Evening Post. Life in that town seemed less than real, almost distant. The exception to that was an occasional glimpse of reality on a movie screen or on TV. When she was about 13, she saw Jane Wyman playing Laura in a televised version of The Glass Menagerie. The character in that play—so cut off from everyone around her, even the people who loved her—seemed to be as real to Jane Wagner as her own face in the mirror. But from the time she did the reading, she was hooked on the theater. Buying the Times on Sunday allowed her to savor that distant world of the New York theater. She did not think of being a writer, because the reading she had done, of Carson McCullers and Tennessee Williams, convinced her that everything she knew had already been written.

She spent several years working as an actress at the Barter Theatre in Abingdon, Va., overcoming her shyness enough to think that she could try New York. So in 1958, absolutely alone and with no connections, she arrived in the city, determined to make her way as an actress. A room at the Y might have seemed like a spare existence for some, but to her, in the beginning at least, it was the college dormitory she had never stayed in.

She felt a sense of liberation in everything she did: New York was a place of absolute spiritual freedom. Her early readings went well enough, but she got no work and she was far too shy a person for the brutal meat market of theatrical tryouts; that which made her want to be an actress made the very act of reading almost intolerable. She had no agent to represent her. Every tryout began to turn into a humiliation. Slowly, gradually, like so many young hopefuls in the worlds of the arts, she edged closer to defeat. The exhilaration of being in the city turned to anxiety. New York, she began to realize, was, to a large degree, about presenting oneself—and, because of her shyness, she did this poorly. After she became successful, she could look back and see herself with an odd clarity of vision: a painfully awkward and lonely young woman in a cheap

There never has been a motion picture like Gone with the Wind. Or a heroine like Scarlett O'Hara, who so completely captured the hearts of millions of movie-goers around the world. Her upper body is formed of fine bisque porcelain in one delicately sculptured piece, and her porcelain feet and legs are sculptured with the same meticulous care. Her unforgettable heart-shaped face is lovingly painted by hand.

Her dress is a thoroughly romantic creation of green crepe de chine, its voluminous skirt and fitted bodice setting off to perfection Scarlett's southern beauty.

The result is enchanting. A work to delight the most discerning collector . . . to cherish, to lovingly hand down from mother to daughter through the years to come.

cloth coat, signaling to all around her intention to fail. Even the coat, she later decided, was wrong: It had no lining, and she was always cold in the winter.

Fortunately she had other talents—albeit, she suspected, small ones. She could play the piano fairly well by ear, and she made some money that way. Soon she tried writing songs. She also had skill as a designer, though this was not a field that interested her. But an idea of hers, children's stories on bedsheets, used as a promotional gimmick by a fabric company, brought her $15,000, enough to live on for two years in the mid-'60s; and another idea, to use Kleenex in different-size dispensers, brought her a consulting fee of about $25,000 for several years. She felt rich. Her songwriting career seemed to be floundering. Her songs were always just out of fashion. One, about a young Southern black boy in Harlem called J.T., drew praise from record producers who also said it was too long. Annoyed, she went back and tried to turn it into a television play about the boy's self-discovery in the city.

In truth, it was about a young white girl from Tennessee coming to terms with the city. She gave it to a friend who had just become an agent. CBS bought it immediately. In 1969 J.T. won a Peabody Award and was seen by an established star named Lily Tomlin, who was touched by it and asked Miss Wagner to write for her. Out of that has come a prolonged collaboration and friendship which has raised the talents of both, given confidence and immediacy to Miss Wagner's work, and depth and continuity to the sketches of Miss Tomlin.

On the marquee now on Broadway are both their names, LILY TOMLIN and JANE WAGNER. A ticket to the show is the hardest one to get in the city. There is talk of more movie work for the two women. There is a table at the Russian Tea Room whenever they want, a limo to take them around the city. Sometimes, though, when Jane Wagner is moving around the city by herself, she sees them, the would-be actresses, getting on a bus or walking briskly on the street on their way to some important meeting. They are, of course, young and pretty, and that catches her eye, but it is more than that—it is the look, the mixture of optimism and anxiety so obvious in their faces. They always carry their leather folders. In the folders, she knows, are the 8-by-10 glossies, and probably some Xeroxed reviews from small-town papers. It is for her a moment of recognition, for she sees not just them but herself as well, the young Jane Wagner in her cheap coat, without connections, doing everything wrong, and she marvels at their courage as she marvels now at her own. And, of course, she wishes them well.

BOOKS

GAIL SHEEHY MOVINGLY DESCRIBED HER adoption of Cambodian war refugee Mohm Pat Sheehy for PARADE readers in September 1983. Now she has written an entire book about her relationship with the 12-year-old Mohm, the developing love and understanding between a mother and a daughter, each in a new and trying situation, and the growing and sometimes painful adjustment of a lonely girl to a new country and culture.

Sheehy begins Spirit of Survival with the child's struggles during the civil war in Cambodia, where her family is wiped out by the genocidal Khmer Rouge. As a journalist, Sheehy asks—and tries to answer—our natural question: Why was this frail girl able to survive when millions died?

How did she overcome sad memories and demons, and the burden of coping with an alien language and surroundings?

Skillfully using historical, political and psychological research to deepen Mohm's story, Sheehy also employs an extremely effective yet simple device: She counterpoints her own thoughts during the period of adjustment with those of her new daughter at the same moment. (This, and much of the rest of the book, was achieved with the help of Mohm herself, many months later.)

Sheehy, the best-selling author of Passages and a contributing editor of PARADE, is at pains to head off a perception of herself as Ms. Good Person-Superwoman, revealing herself as an emotionally needy woman whose own yearnings to regain a sense of family meshed with Mohm's need for love—and for a mother. The book makes clear that they were both very lucky.

A moving excerpt from Spirit of Survival appears inside the June issue of New Woman magazine.

FOCUS ON FITNESS

BY STUART M. BERGER, M.D., AND MICHAEL O'SHEA, PH.D.

Do you have a question about exercise or diet? Send it to: Focus on Fitness, PARADE, Box 5276, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163.

Q. Though I have been exercising regularly and have lost some weight, I can't seem to lose the bulge on my sides (sometimes called "spare tires" or "love handles"). Is there an exercise that will reduce my sides?

A. The bulge on your sides is primarily stored fat. For many of us, it is the first place our bodies put unused fat and the last place from which it is removed. There is no exercise that will by itself take the fat off your sides, but you can tighten or tone the muscles of the side. Here are two exercises:

1. THE SIDE BEND

Rich Kinmonth

Stand straight with your legs apart about shoulder width. Hold a dumbbell or other weighted object in one hand. Slowly lean to the side with the weight—feel the stretch on the other side—then straighten up. Switch the weight to the other hand and slowly stretch the other side. Do 15 stretches for each side, switching the weight from one hand to the other. Do this three times a day, if possible.

2. THE TWIST

Rich Kinmonth

Place a broom handle behind your neck, held in place with your arms, as shown. Stand up with your legs slightly wider apart than your shoulders. Slowly twist to one side, keeping your hips and legs still—the twist should come from the waist and chest only. Your head also should remain still. Twist slowly 15 times from one side to the other. Try to do this three times a day.

As you continue to exercise regularly and lose weight, eventually the body will use the fat at your sides for energy, and you'll see that area start to disappear.

Q. What are the risks of obesity?

A. Anybody who is 20% or more overweight is at special risk. The death rate of people 45-50 years old increases 1% for every extra pound of overweight—10 extra pounds could mean a 10% greater risk of early death than if you were the proper weight. If you are between ages 20 and 44, obesity makes you five times as likely to have high blood pressure, three times as likely to have diabetes and twice as likely to have dangerously high cholesterol levels.

Ted Kennedy tells why the Peace Corps meant so much to his brother

'Jack Would Be Proud'

It has been 25 years since John F. Kennedy recommended to the Congress the establishment of a permanent Peace Corps to be "a pool of trained American men and women sent overseas by the U.S. government . . . to help foreign countries meet their urgent needs for skilled manpower." Since that time, thousands of men and women of all ages have served throughout the world, leaving an extraordinary mark and an extraordinary legacy. With JFK's 69th birthday coming up on May 29, we asked his brother, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, to reflect on how the Peace Corps began. Here is his story:

Eigeland/Black Star

A Peace Corps volunteer with people of North Borneo in May 1964.

BY SEN. EDWARD M. KENNEDY

I STILL REMEMBER the glow of anticipation on that March 1 25 years ago. Barely a month had passed since Jack had taken the oath of office as President, and my brother was about to sign the Executive Order launching the Peace Corps, the first major initiative of his New Frontier.

The possibility of harnessing the idealism, energy and talent of American youth as a force for progress in the Third World had emerged as one of the most promising ideas of the 1960 Presidential campaign, and Jack was determined to make the Peace Corps a reality as quickly as he could.

The spontaneous response by a large student crowd at an impromptu late-night rally at the University of Michigan in the last month of the campaign was all Jack needed to be convinced of the idea's appeal. On Oct. 13, 1960, he had flown to Ann Arbor from New York City after his third televised debate with Vice President Nixon. I called from a campaign stop in Texas to congratulate him on the debate, and he mentioned Richard Nixon's charge that Democrats were the "war party." He only had time for a few words, but he told me to tear up my campaign schedule and spend all my time in Texas and California. "The race is really tightening up," he said, "and those two states can clinch it."

UPI/Bettmann

He arrived on the Michigan campus at 2 the next morning, and 5000 students had been waiting six hours to greet him. In a brief give-and-take from the steps of the Student Union, he asked the crowd whether those who wanted to be doctors, technicians or engineers were willing to serve America by helping people in other lands. With the students roaring their approval, Jack told them, "On your willingness not merely to serve one year or two years in the service, but on your willingness to contribute part of your life to this country, I think will depend the answer to whether a free society can compete. I think it can, and I think Americans are willing to contribute. But the effort must be far greater than we have ever made in the past." After the rally, my brother told his aide, David Powers, that he thought he had "hit a winning number."

Jack had been working for several months on the idea of a Peace Corps, a concept long endorsed by Rep. Henry Reuss of Wisconsin and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota but regarded coolly by the State Department. Jack floated it for the first time that night to test its appeal with the students and to rebut Richard Nixon's charge. Because of the late hour, his remarks went unnoticed. Three weeks later, in a speech at the Cow Palace in San Francisco just before the election, Jack spelled out the proposal in more detail, and it became front-page news; but, as he told me that Thanksgiving, he always thought of the Ann Arbor rally as the night the Peace Corps was born.

After the election, Jack was eager to advance the idea, and he was even more insistent after his inaugural address, urging Americans, "Ask not what your country can do for you—ask what you can do for your country."

Jack knew instinctively that people would respond, and he wanted the Peace Corps ready in time to receive volunteers from that spring's graduating classes. As one of the first volunteers said, "I'd never done anything political, patriotic or unselfish, because nobody ever asked me to. Kennedy asked."

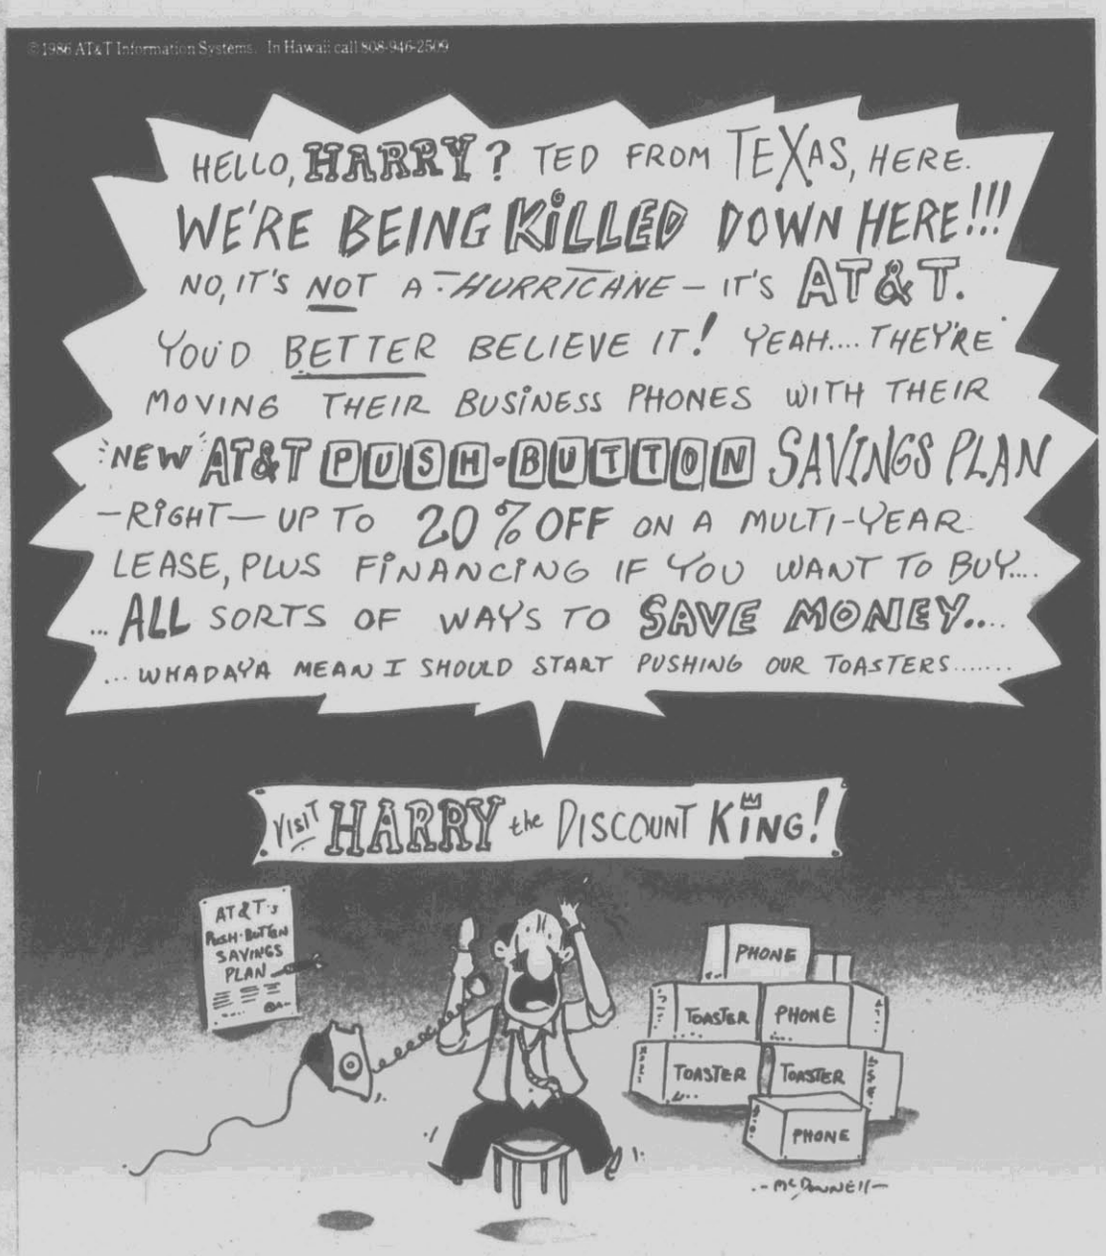

After the inauguration, Jack gave our brother-in-law, Sargent Shriver, the task of implementing the idea and a few weeks later appointed him the first director. The Peace Corps' popularity today makes it difficult to recall the doubts and objections raised against it at the start. On weekend after weekend at Hyannis Port, Jack pressed Sarge for progress; Sarge joked that my brother put a relative in charge because he would be easier to fire when the idea failed. But, as Jackie later wrote on a framed memento she gave Sarge, "Jack always said that no one but you could have made the Peace Corps possible."

There were other achievements of Jack's New Frontier—the Alliance for Progress, the nuclear test ban, the beginnings of Medicare and civil rights, the mission to the moon, and the new economics that ushered in the longest period of economic growth and price stability in our history. But the Peace Corps was always closest to Jack's heart. To him, it was proof that the cynics were wrong and that America's idealism could be translated into practical measures for progress and peace. "I might have to send in the Marine Corps," he told me, "but I'd rather send the Peace Corps."

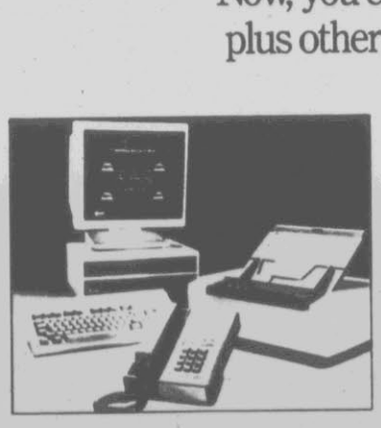

In the quarter century since 1961, 120,000 volunteers have served in 92 countries, from Afghanistan to Zaire. The Peace Corps has brought greater hope and a better life for millions less fortunate than ourselves; it has taught others about America and helped teach America more about the humanity beyond our borders. On this silver anniversary, it is still an enduring symbol of Jack's faith that individuals can make a difference and that each of us must try.

They were called "Kennedy's Kids" at the beginning. Today they have come of age; they are still "America's Promise," as new generations of volunteers put America's best foot forward in other lands. Jack would be proud of the Peace Corps at 25; he was a volunteer at heart, and it is one of his most inspiring memorials.

Mirror, Mirror...

Ron Marsh

YOU CAN USE A MIRROR to help prevent lines on your face. According to Dr. Samuel J. Stegman, a San Francisco dermatologist, looking in a mirror while you're talking on the telephone will help you see the facial movements you make while speaking, so you can teach yourself to avoid the frowning or puckering gestures that create wrinkles.

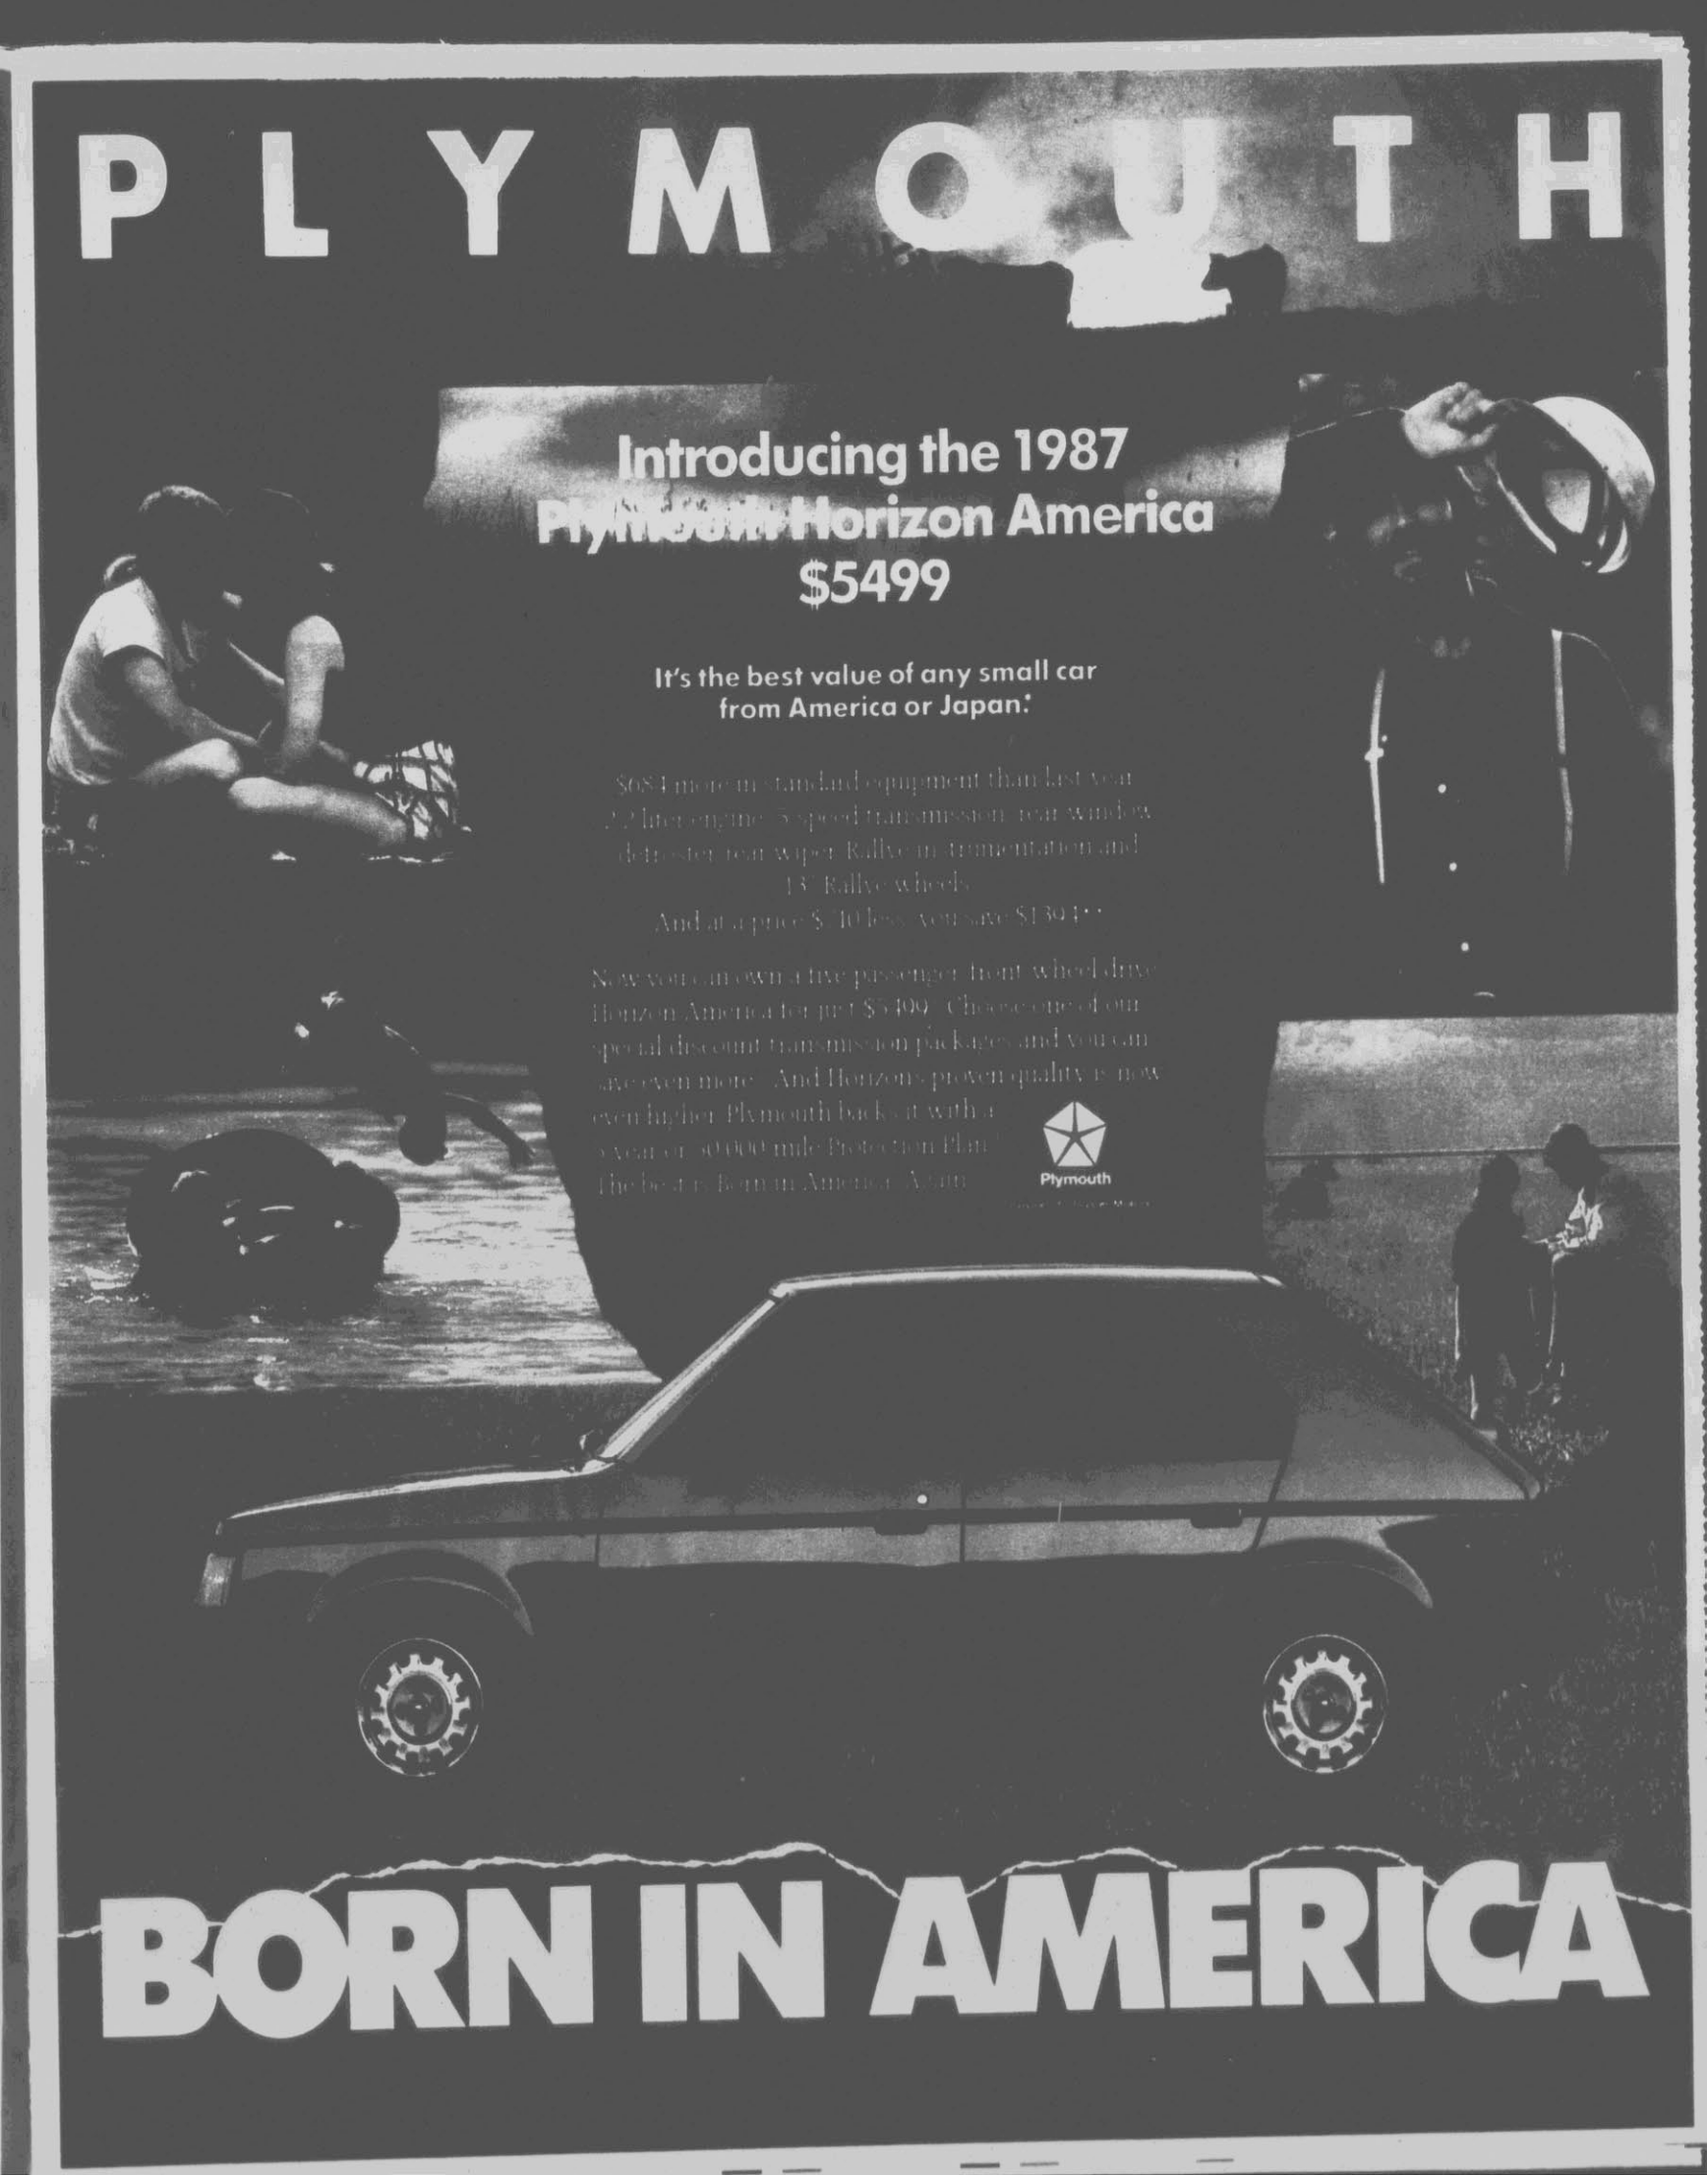

You can also use the mirror to show you how your habitual sleeping position might be causing lines in your face. Get into bed with the mirror and see how you can alter the position to keep from creating wrinkles.

KEEP CUT FLOWERS FRESH LONGER

TRY THIS florist's trick: Put small vases of flowers in the refrigerator overnight. Recut stems and change the water in the morning. For camellia branches, rhododendrons peonies, orchids and roses, suggests the new Mädderlake book Flowers Rediscovered (Stewart, Tabori & Chang), try immersing in cool water for several hours to freshen.

New light is being shed on an old darkness of the mind

WE CAN COPE WITH SCHIZOPHRENIA

AT FIRST YOU DON'T PAY attention. You may hear it as a voice through a closed door of another room, and it sounds real. A single word: "Run!" or "Speak!" or "Quiet!" But soon you hear many words—commands: "Jump in front of the car." You think you are hearing real voices, but they're only in your mind.

If these are your symptoms, you have schizophrenia—a disease of the mind. A disease that confuses you. You cannot distinguish real voices—perhaps that of your mother calling you—from the imagined voices of your mind. You cannot plan or decide; you cannot change your thoughts. Your thoughts have captured you.

Schizophrenia. It's not a split personality—a mistake many make—but a disease, probably due to a biological dysfunction affecting the development of the brain or, as some theorize, due to a chemical reaction in the brain that destroys rational thought.

Erhun Hoffman/Archive

Home-therapy visits aid a young schizophrenic couple in Madison, Wis.

One percent of the population—approximately 3 million Americans—will develop the disease in their lifetimes, estimates the National Institute of Mental Health; each year brings 300,000 new cases. It disables more people for a longer time than cancer. On any day, schizophrenia confines 100,000 Americans to hospitals. The illness hits young people, usually from the ages of 15 to 25, lasting 30 to 40 years. And it costs taxpayers about $30 billion a year in medical treatment, disability payments, police and welfare work and lost productivity. As the population increases—especially among the young—schizophrenia cases also increase.

At last, researchers are making progress in understanding its causes, treatment and prevention. But, says Dr. Samuel J. Keith, chief of the Schizophrenia Research Branch at the National Institute of Mental Health in Rockville, Md., "I would predict that the future will be a slow chipping away at this disease."

Some of the researchers' discoveries may help schizophrenics like U.S. Air Force veteran Jim Dollard, 39, of Albany, N.Y. The eldest of six children, Jim has been hospitalized 17 times. Since its onset 17 years ago, the disease has twisted Jim's brain and tortured his parents.

In many ways, Jim's symptoms are typical: He hears voices, has hallucinations. The voices might tell him to do such strange things as jump in front of a speeding automobile. He sees imaginary spirits—black and white, angels and devils.

Jim also has delusions: He believes that there are people watching him, that psychiatry has taken over his mind. Other schizophrenics believe that their thoughts are broadcast for all to hear, or that computers or radios are inserting ideas into their minds.

The illness hits the young—usually ages 15 to 25—lasts 30 to 40 years and costs taxpayers about $30 billion annually

Jim's thoughts won't let him work. They barely allow him to exist in his own room. He shows other symptoms: He cannot easily solve the problems of ordinary living. Many schizophrenics can't even shop for groceries. Sometimes, when a schizophrenic is in a period of recovery, and life deals him a bad turn—say, the loss of a job—the stress may lead to all his symptoms returning in full force. He then suffers a schizophrenic episode. He may not keep himself clean; he may wander the streets, talking to himself, shouting at others. Researchers estimate that schizophrenia afflicts half of all the homeless living in the streets.

For 100 years, scientists have searched vainly for schizophrenia's cause. Today, some contend that it results from a chemical imbalance in the brain. But they have yet to identify a specific chemical mistake. Scientists have, however, pinpointed one chemical defect in the brain that does not cause schizophrenia but might cause some of its symptoms. The problem lies in a faulty dopamine system. Dopamine is one of numerous chemicals in the brain that pass between the ends of nerves, allowing them to signal one another.

Dr. Arnold J. Friedhoff, director of the Millhauser Laboratories at New York University Medical School in Manhattan, has concluded that a healthy dopamine system allows us to manage mental stress. If we face severe stress—entering a new job, a new school—the brain lowers the dopamine signals to help us cope. But, when stressed, most schizophrenics' nerves are not quieted by their dopamine systems. Their brains go into overdrive; thoughts rush in and out from all directions; the sick voices are heard.

Sarah and Harold Edwards of Syracuse, N.Y., have a son, Ben, who has been sick for 11 years. Ben, now 29, believes there is something like a computer in his head that tells him what to do. "All his past thoughts and present experience merge in a mental logjam," says Mrs. Edwards. "He's bored, scared and angry. And he can't work or think."

Around the mid-1950s, doctors discovered drugs that control the dopamine system and lower its activity. The best known of these is chlorpromazine (trade name: Thorazine). It doesn't cure schizophrenia, but it lessens the hallucinations and delusions. However, chlorpromazine slows the patient down, sometimes creating a slow-moving, slow-talking zombie effect. In a few patients, the drug produces involuntary movements of the lip, tongue and limbs. Usually, the movements stop if medication is reduced or stopped, but in a few patients this doesn't help.

(Recent studies show that in some types of schizophrenia, lithium salts can quiet the manic or excited phases. The studies are just now defining exactly who is helped by this drug.)

These drugs are the only real treatments doctors have. In the 1920s, they tried tooth removal to treat schizophrenia; in the '30s, injections of horse serum; in the '40s, enemas. All failed. In the 1950s, big doses of vitamins were tried, and the megavitamin trend persists, even though the American Psychiatric Association declared in 1971 that there was no evidence from studies that vitamin therapy did any good. Dr. Morris Lipton of the University of North Carolina Medical School at Chapel Hill headed the original studies and says nothing since has changed this.

For about 40 percent of schizophrenics, the brain drugs don't work. Dr. Friedhoff says that, although the drugs lower the dopamine levels as far as possible, the brain can't function properly.

All this has led psychiatrists to identify two kinds of schizophrenia patients; those who respond to the drugs, with dopamine-system control, and those who don't. Responsive patients show the outward signs of the disease—hallucinations, delusions and strange behavior; the nonresponders are withdrawn, unemotional and appear to be devoid of feelings of pleasure.

For decades, psychiatrists have held that there are many types of schizophrenia and that it may be the result of many different, separate diseases. Dr. Richard J. Wyatt, chief of the Neuropsychiatry Branch of the National Institute of Mental Health, at St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, D.C., draws this parallel with mental retardation: "A hundred years ago, we said that low IQ meant mental retardation. Since then, we've found a whole series of diseases that cause brain damage leading to a low IQ and retardation. Identifying the symptoms of schizophrenia is like having the results of an IQ test. I suspect that we'll find a number of diseases that make up the schizophrenia syndrome."

Scientists have discovered certain kinds of brain damage in some schizophrenics but not others and have found a low blood flow in the thinking part of the brain in some schizophrenics. A doctor in England found evidence of a viruslike particle. A U.S. physician found strange antibodies in the spinal fluid.

During the 1940s and 1950s, many psychiatrists believed the interactions between members of certain families caused schizophrenia in their children. As a result, many parents were tortured by guilt. Most experts now reject that theory as unproved. Once again, however, evidence reveals that, even though it does not cause schizophrenia, the way families behave toward their sick family members can prevent or trigger a relapse. In London, Dr. Julian Leff and his colleagues have identified family characteristics that affect schizophrenic patients. If a family's responses are warm and loving, for example, this tends to prevent relapse; but if they are hostile, critical or overinvolved, the patient suffers more frequent episodes.

These findings set off a series of studies to learn if doctors and social workers can train families to change behavior and ease sick family members. Nina Schooler, Ph.D., assistant chief of the Schizophrenia Research Branch at the National Institute of Mental Health, heads its multi-city project. "People with schizophrenia are sensitive to stress—particularly interpersonal stress," she says. "We are working to educate the family to protect the patient against it."

Researchers also are trying to learn if a patient can manage on less medication: The daily dose is reduced, or drugs are given to a patient only when the family detects the signs of odd behavior that warn of an oncoming episode.

Sarah Edwards estimates that, for the first six years of Ben's illness, the family spent $250,000 on his medical treatment. Ben now lives alone; his disease is stabilized. At his sister's wedding, says his mother, "it was hard to believe he was not okay." She adds, "He is not so frightened as he once was and can control his own life."

Out of the need for family support has grown The National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, a group of parents and other relatives who teach themselves the facts of schizophrenia and where to find help. They learn that:

- Schizophrenia may be a brain disorder.
- Drugs don't always quiet symptoms.
- Most victims have their first episode in their late teens or early 20s.
- It attacks boys more than girls.
- There is no cure—yet.

The family sessions help. Says Sarah Edwards: "I get understanding from people who know what I am talking about. I ache so. I share my problems with people who are worse off."

For schizophrenics who have no families or whose families have abandoned them, there are a few community programs that offer help. One of the best, in Madison, Wis., is the Program of Assertive Community Treatment (PACT), for young schizophrenics.

Dr. William H. Knoedler, who heads the program, says, "We don't wait for people to come to us; we go to them." The PACT doctors, nurses and social workers reach out to teach the sick young people—on the streets or in their homes—how to cope with life. They also prescribe drugs to control symptoms.

"We don't discharge people for not coming to their treatment," says Dr. Knoedler. "We're available for them every day, 24 hours a day, and we're prepared to do this for life."

Knoedler tells of John R., 30, who first experienced the disease at the age of 21. John believed that people on the street were causing him to be homosexual. He lived in the streets. By 1980, PACT got him to take medicine; he formed ties with the staff and has been working as a computer keypuncher.

Studies of PACT show that, in its first two years, the treatment program actually costs a little less than the usual method of hospitalizing schizophrenic patients every time they get sick. It is also more humane.

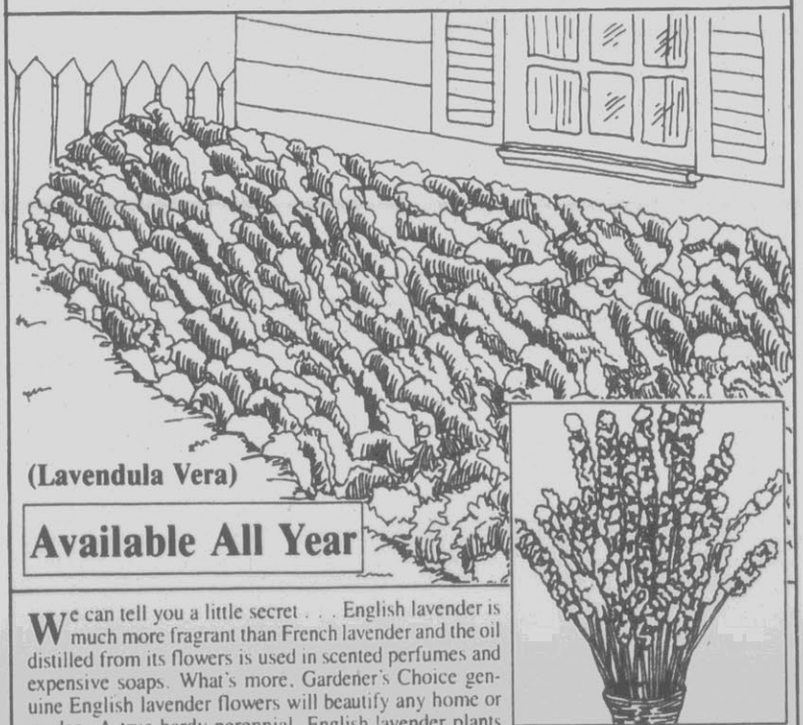

There are very few such community treatment programs. In most states, the money saved doesn't go back to the local government setting up the project but to the state. With so little incentive, local governments do little.

Until science understands schizophrenia's cause and then finds a cure or a means to prevent it, more and more troubled souls will be roaming our streets in need of help.

For more information about schizophrenia, write to The National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, Dept. P, 1901 N. Fort Myer Dr., Suite 500, Arlington, Va. 22209.

Wonderful Old-Fashioned Fragrance, Summer-long Flowers Year after Year!

Old English Lavender

(Lavendula Vera)

Available All Year

We can tell you a little secret . . . English lavender is much more fragrant than French lavender and the oil distilled from its flowers is used in scented perfumes and expensive soaps. What's more, Gardener's Choice genuine English lavender flowers will beautify any home or garden. A true hardy perennial, English lavender plants bloom each summer, year after year and even when the plant takes a well-deserved rest from all that spectacular perpetual flowering, the silvery leaves are decorative right into winter months.

Cut-And-Come-Again Flowers

Cut a few sprigs of lavender, drop them into a teacup and steep for a few minutes in boiling water to make one of the most delicious and refreshing herbal teas imaginable. A few sprigs of lavender in a hot bath can also have a wonderful soothing effect at the end of a tiring day. AND it is an effective natural insect repellent against pesky midges and mosquito bites, if rubbed on your skin.

No matter how much you cut the violet-blue flowers, more new flowers are stimulated into blooming. Use them fresh to create instant floral arrangements for the house, or air-dry some stems to make herbal sachets and potpourris that will add an enchanting summer-time freshness to linens and clothes.

Plants grow 1-3 feet high and these hearty perennials actually prefer dry soils.

GREAT IDEAS FROM THE CREATORS OF THE SILVER PALATE COOKBOOKS

SIMPLY DELICIOUS

Hands-On Beef: Savory shredded beef goes in center of lettuce head (here it's topped with diced tomatoes); garnishes—yellow peppers, peanuts, raisins, olives, onions—go on surrounding leaves.

Hands-On Add-Ons

- Finger bowls
- Lemon wedges
- Napkins or paper towels (plenty)
- Hot towels
- Lap trays
- Change of clothes

HANDS ON

Great finger food for just about any informal occasion

"Seeing is deceiving. It's eating that's believing."
—James Thurber

SOME OF OUR BEST MEMORIES OF REALLY good times seem to revolve around foods traditionally eaten with our hands. Corn on the cob, fried chicken, tacos, hot dogs, french fries, ribs—think about it. Eating with your hands couldn't be more natural, and many cultures have continued this tradition. It makes sense. Eating with your hands provides mobility, creates a gracefulness that's lacking when you're juggling a lot of equipment, it's a "natural" way to dine, lets you lick your fingers and often just makes food taste better.

We've created several new finger foods to greet the more casual entertainings of summertime. Hands-On Beef—a savory mix of beef, onions, garlic and wine with an assortment of garnishes—makes a dramatic centerpiece as a first course, and it gives guests a chance to compose their own special treat neatly wrapped in green leaves of fresh lettuce. Pick-Up Potatoes—hollowed-out, with a filling of potato, peas, bacon and mustard—are small bites of goodness. Our Mediterranean Hero is a sandwich with more than enough flavor to be the main event. And Lemon Cream Cones offer the childlike fun of a cone with some pretty fancy flavors.

Pick your time, place and friends and have a Hands-On party. It's an easy way to have a great time—anytime this summer.

2. In an ovenproof casserole over high heat, brown short ribs in oil. Remove ribs, drain off oil and return ribs to casserole. Sprinkle with pepper.
3. Add onions, chopped garlic and wine. Bake covered for 2½ hours.
4. While ribs are baking, in a small saucepan cover the 8 unpeeled cloves of garlic with water and bring to a boil. Boil for 1 minute. Drain, cool and slip off skins. Mash garlic and reserve.
5. After 2½ hours, remove cover from ribs, stir mashed garlic into surrounding sauce and bake uncovered for another 35 minutes.
6. With a large slotted spoon, remove ribs and onions to a bowl. Cool slightly. Shred the meat from the bones and discard bones.
7. Boil remaining sauce in casserole for 3 minutes on top of stove and add to beef and onions. Serve warm.

TO SERVE

1. Place the largest head of lettuce (or cabbage) whole on a large serving platter. Spread out the leaves. Create a hollow in the center of lettuce and fill with shredded beef. Tuck the garnishes in clusters inside outer leaves (see inset photo, preceding page).
2. Separate the leaves from 2 remaining heads of lettuce, discarding any tough outer leaves. Place the leaves all around the outer edge of whole lettuce or cabbage.
3. Spoon a rounded tablespoon of beef in the center of a single lettuce leaf. Sprinkle with your favorite garnishes (be creative) and roll lettuce around meat or fold into a little package to eat.

Mediterranean Hero

TOMATO SAUCE

1/2 cup olive oil
1 can (2-ounce) anchovy fillets, undrained
4 large cloves of garlic, peeled and crushed
1 can (35-ounce) plum tomatoes, drained
1 jar (2½-ounce) capers, drained
1½ cups coarsely chopped pitted black olives (imported are tastier)
Freshly ground black pepper to taste

1. Place oil, anchovies and garlic in a bowl. Mash into a paste. Transfer to a heavy saucepan.
2. Add remaining ingredients to saucepan and stir well. Bring to a simmer over medium heat, reduce to low and cook uncovered for 1 hour, stirring frequently. Reserve sauce.
Yield: approximately 2 cups

TO MAKE HERO

2 medium-size French breads cut in half lengthwise (make bottom halves larger)
2 tablespoons olive oil
4 ripe plum tomatoes
1/2 medium-size purple onion, cut into 1/4-inch dice
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1 can (6½-ounce) white-meat tuna fish
2 cups Mediterranean Tomato Sauce
3 hard-boiled eggs
4 medium-size leaves romaine lettuce, washed
2 tablespoons chopped Italian parsley

1. Hollow out French breads with your hands or melon baller and discard insides. Place tops of breads aside.
2. In bottom halves, drizzle 1 tablespoon oil along each. Layer tomatoes and onion evenly on the bread. Grind pepper over all.

3. Divide tuna evenly over onion and press down lightly. Spread 1/3 cup tomato sauce over each half.
4. Slice 2 eggs and divide slices evenly. Cut lettuce leaves crosswise and cover eggs. Divide remaining sauce and spread over lettuce.
5. Grate remaining egg over 2 halves and sprinkle with parsley. Replace tops of bread and press down lightly.
6. To serve, slice in 3 or 4 manageable sandwiches or cut thinner for hors d'oeuvres.
Serves 6 to 8

Pick-Up Potatoes

A fresh, minty pea and potato salad can be a most natural movable feast.

12 very small red-skin new potatoes
3 slices extra-thick bacon, cut into 1/4-inch dice
1/2 cup fresh or frozen sweet peas, blanched in boiling water until just tender (about 1 minute)
4 tablespoons red wine vinegar
2 teaspoons Dijon-style mustard
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1/3 cup light olive oil
1/4 cup finely chopped Italian parsley
1/4 cup finely chopped fresh mint

1. In a medium-size saucepan, bring 2 quarts of water to a boil. Add potatoes and cook for 15 minutes, until tender but not mushy. Drain and cool.
2. In a heavy skillet, fry bacon until crisp. Drain on a paper towel.
3. Drain peas and combine with bacon in a medium-size bowl.
4. Cut a sliver off one end of each potato so it stands flat. Slice the top (other end) off of each potato. With a small melon baller, scoop the center out of each potato and cut into 1/4-inch dice. Add to bacon and peas.
5. In a medium bowl, whisk together vinegar, mustard and pepper. Slowly whisk in oil until mixture has thickened. Stir in parsley and mint. Pour over potato salad and toss well. Let rest for 1 hour before stuffing potatoes.
6. Carefully mound salad into hollowed-out potatoes. Arrange attractively on serving platter. Pick 'em up and eat 'em! Any extra salad is great the next day.
Yield: 12 potatoes

Raspberry Dip

A surprisingly wonderful combination of colors and flavors. This blushing dip isn't shy. Don't you be.

3/4 cup fresh or frozen raspberries (drain if frozen)
1/4 cup balsamic vinegar
3/4 cup sour cream

1. Place raspberries and vinegar in small bowl and stir. Let sit for 1/2 hour.
2. Pour the raspberry mixture into bowl of food processor fitted with steel blade, or into blender. Process until smooth.
3. Place sour cream in medium-size bowl. Gently fold raspberry mixture into sour cream. Refrigerate until serving time.
4. To serve: Place bowl on table and let everyone dip asparagus spears, carrot sticks and other vegetable favorites. Try dipping shrimp or broiled chicken chunks, or drizzling dip lightly over a berry or melon salad.
Yield: 1 2/3 cups

VINEGAR NOTES

Balsamic vinegar is an exceptional Italian vinegar which we urge you to try. A treasured classic of Modena, Italy, it begins with red wine. Through an aging process in a series of wooden casks—mulberry, juniper, oak—a rich, full-bodied vinegar develops. It has an extraordinarily robust yet sweetly mellowed flavor that enhances salad dressings, sauces and fresh fruits.

Lemon Cream Cones

Creamy lemon tartness heightens the chocolatey layers. This is a real walking-around treat.

LEMON CREAM

8 to 10 lemons
4 tablespoons unsalted butter, softened
1 package (8-ounce) cream cheese, softened
1 package unflavored gelatin
1 cup granulated sugar
1 cup heavy cream

1. Grate zest (yellow outer peel) of lemons; reserve. Squeeze lemons to get 1 cup juice.
2. In a bowl, cream butter and cream cheese together with electric hand mixer. Add 1/2 cup lemon juice and blend.
3. In a small saucepan, heat remaining lemon juice over low flame. Add gelatin and whisk until dissolved.
4. Add gelatin mixture to cream cheese mixture, beating on low speed. Gradually add sugar and heavy cream until well blended. Fold in lemon zest. Cover bowl and refrigerate for 4 hours, or until set.
Yield: 4 cups—enough for 12 cones

CHOCOLATE FUDGE SAUCE

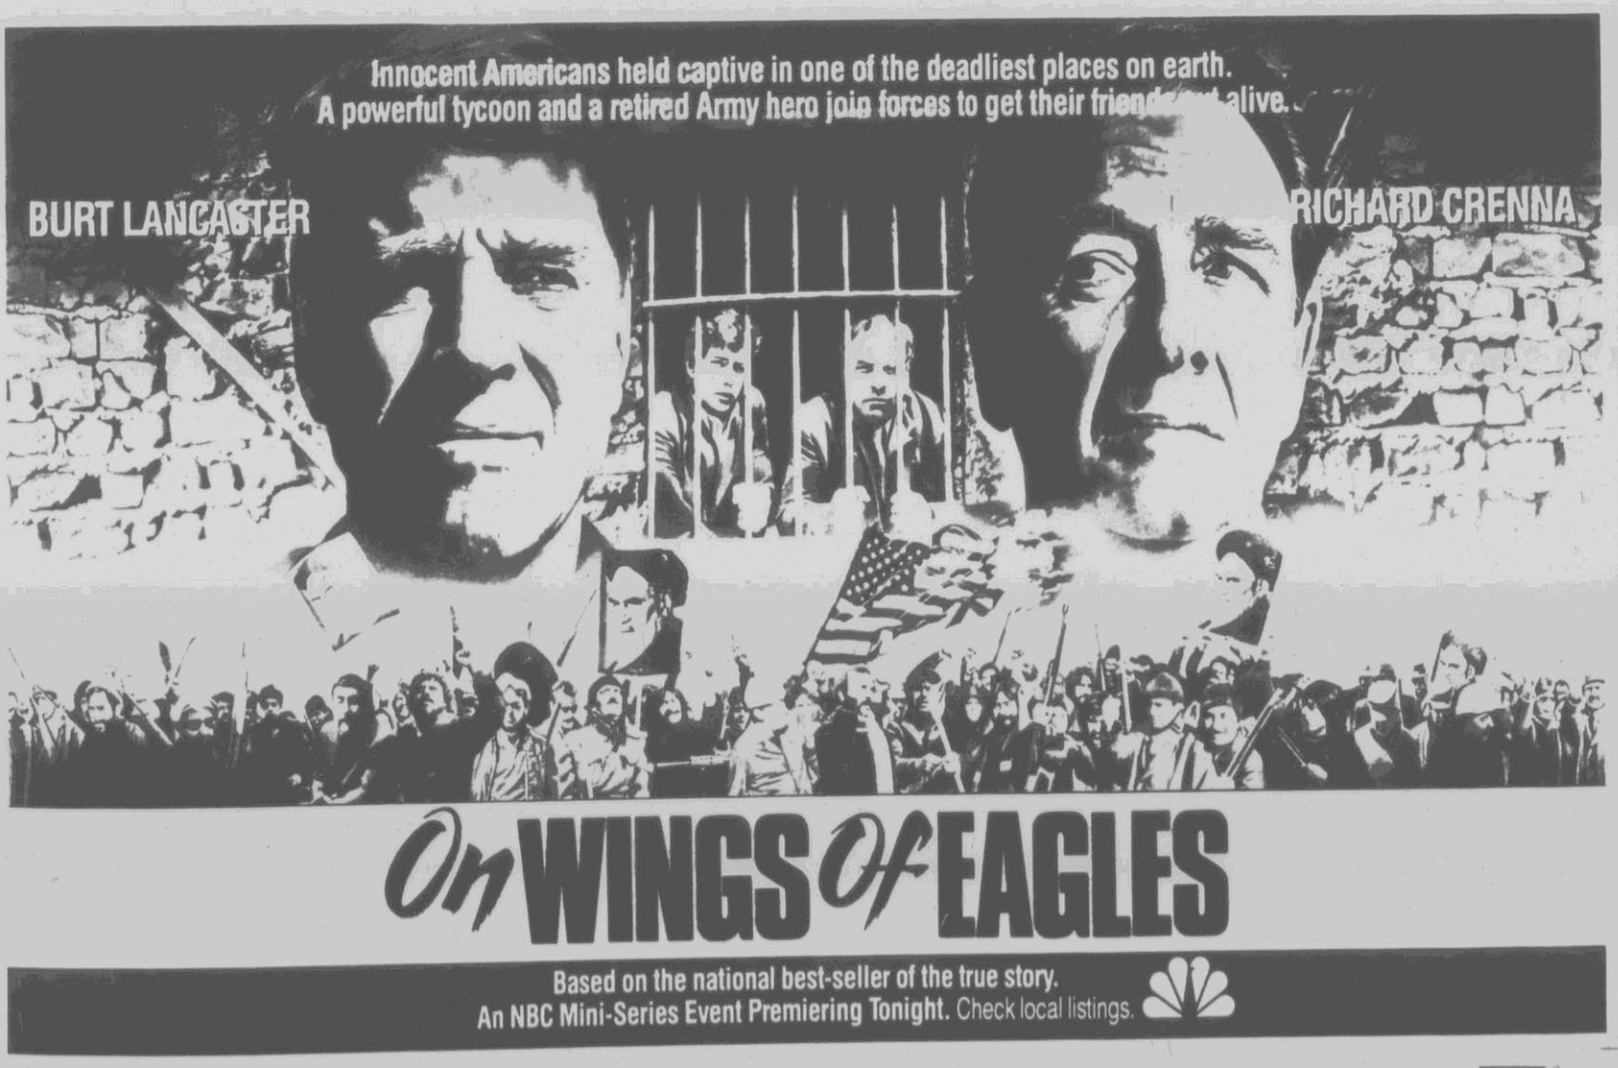

2 cups semi-sweet chocolate morsels
2 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
1/2 cup heavy cream

1. In top of double boiler, melt chocolate morsels.
2. As chocolate melts, whisk in butter and vanilla. Slowly whisk in cream.
3. Cook over medium heat until smooth —5 minutes. Let cool and thicken.
Yield: About 2 cups

TO ASSEMBLE CONES

12 waffle or sugar cones
Lemon Cream
Chocolate Fudge Sauce
1 pint fresh raspberries

Layer cones with Lemon Cream and Chocolate Fudge Sauce. Place raspberries between layers, and save one for the top of each cone.

Iacocca Gives

Jerry Bernat

Lee Iacocca and daughter Kathryn at Harvard for recent dedication

The Iacocca Foundation, which provides college scholarships for the children of Chrysler Corp. employees and money for diabetes research, recently pledged $1.5 million to endow a professorship at the Harvard Medical School. The chair will be named after the late Mary K. Iacocca, first wife of Chrysler's chief executive, feisty Lee A. Iacocca.

Mrs. Iacocca died of diabetes in 1983. Her daughter, Kathryn, is president of the Iacocca Foundation, and it is financed mostly with royalties from her husband's best-selling autobiography. The first professor to occupy the Mary K. Iacocca chair at Harvard will be Dr. C. Ronald Kahn, internationally recognized for his pioneering research on Type II diabetes, which afflicts most diabetics.

Last year, incidentally, Lee Iacocca earned more than $1.6 million in salary and bonuses. He has made an additional $15.5 million during the last five years under Chrysler's executive stock plan. Iacocca frequently is mentioned as a Democratic Party Presidential possibility in 1988.

Loretta Young—A Lady Who's Lived

Loretta with hubbies Grant (l) and Tom: Between marriages came friendship with Gable and Tracy

The word in publishing circles is that, of all the stars in Hollywood, Loretta Young is one of the few who can command $1 million and up as an advance payment on her autobiography—provided, of course, that she writes truthfully of the men in her life and colorfully of the big-name characters she has known and worked with for nearly 60 years.

That's not to say that the veteran actress is even considering such a project: She already has put her name on one autobiography, The Things I Had To Learn, published 25 years ago. It's merely to point out that an updated version of her life story is in constant demand—and with good reason. Loretta Young, born Gretchen Young in Salt Lake City in 1912, has lived in Hollywood since 1918, when her mother opened a boarding house in tinseltown. From 1927 to 1953, she acted in more than 90 films under such directors as Frank Capra, Orson Welles, William Wellman and John Ford and co-starred with almost all the leading men of Hollywood's golden era. From 1953 to 1961, she headed The Loretta Young Show on TV.

Young married actor Grant Withers in 1930, had the marriage annulled the following year, and a decade later tried matrimony with Tom Lewis, a former Young & Rubicam advertising executive. In between those marriages, she was deeply involved with Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy. Were she disposed to turn the pockets of her past inside out in print, Loretta Young undoubtedly could pen one of the most passionate, revealing, tempestuous and dramatic Hollywood autobiographies of the century—a book radically unlike the smooth, serene, religious, unruffled personality she reflects.

IN STEP WITH: Mariel Hemingway

I THINK IT'S RATHER A SHAME ERNEST Hemingway never saw his granddaughter Mariel.

Our greatest novelist killed himself 25 years ago this summer, a couple of months before Mariel was born, and I asked her about this the other day: Would the family be getting together for some sort of memorial to Papa? Well, she said, maybe they would, since it was 25 years. But what the Hemingways had always done before wasn't to mourn the day of his death as much as celebrate the day he was born.

That seems to be the way Mariel and her family look at life—a nice, solid American notion that tomorrow is going to be better than yesterday and that while you don't bury the past, you don't brood about it either.

Mariel doesn't strike you as a brooder. She is the youngest of three daughters of Jack Hemingway, Papa's first son, a big, tall (5 feet 10½), rangy girl with a face that doesn't need makeup, wide-set blue eyes, blond hair and those thick, dark, trademark eyebrows. She was reared up in the mountains near Sun Valley, Idaho, where she raced on the ski team and rode horses and did all those healthy things. For nearly 10 years now, she has been making movies.

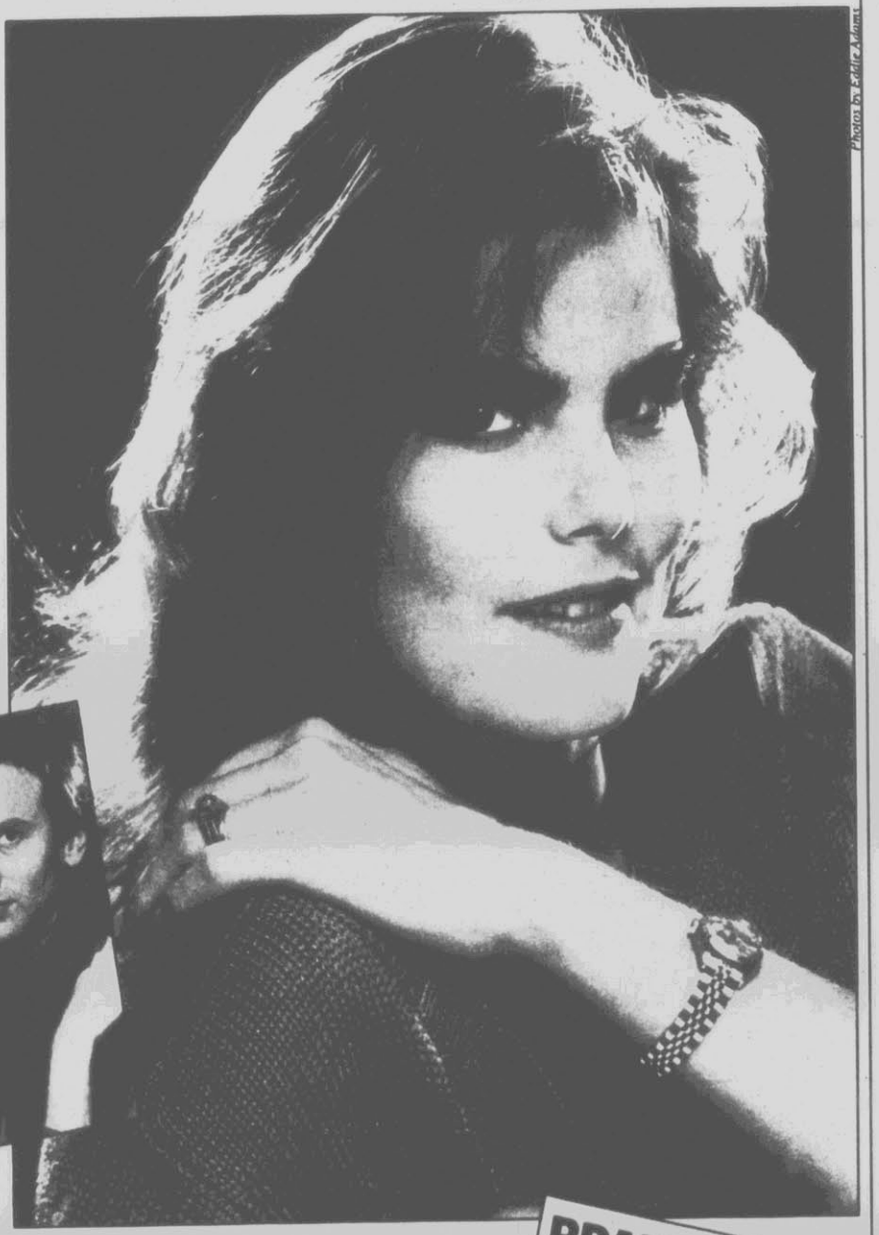

It began when she played a child rape victim in a B movie called Lipstick that starred her older sister Margaux. Margaux's career has gone absolutely nowhere since then; Mariel's has. Woody Allen saw her in Lipstick and cast her as his teenage girlfriend in Manhattan, winning her an Oscar nomination. I would have given her an award just for the scene where, breaking up with her dirty-old-man lover, she presents him with a harmonica.

In Personal Best, she played an athlete drawn into a lesbian relationship, and in Star 80 she portrayed the butchered Playboy bunny Dorothy Stratten. She has co-starred with Peter O'Toole and Eric Roberts and Kurt Russell and been directed by Bob Fosse and Robert Towne.

She is only 24 and still learning, and right now she is between movies ("I'm reading scripts, but they're all pretty lousy"). She and her husband, Steve Crisman (in photo), have opened a classy new restaurant in Manhattan called Sam's Cafe—"Sam" being Steve's nickname for her. She won't eat red meat herself, sticking with chicken and fish, but if you want a steak, she'll sell you a steak, she'll sell you french fries, you name it.

What she won't compromise on is her own sense of who she is. A gossip column had just reported that when producer Charles Evans (he did Tootsie) said he was looking for a "new" Grace Kelly, Mariel bounced on his knee and informed him that the search was over. "It offends me to read that," Mariel told me. "I've always tried to avoid that Hollywood stuff, and I think I have. Successfully."

BORN: Nov. 22, 1961, in Ketchum, Idaho.
PERSONAL: Married Steve Crisman on Dec. 9, 1984.
FILMS: Lipstick, 1976; Manhattan, 1979 (Academy Award nomination); Personal Best, 1982; Star 80, 1983; Mean Season, 1985; Creator, 1985.
TELEVISION: Starred in the TV movie I Want to Keep My Baby (1976).
THEATER: Off-Broadway play California Dog Fight, 1985.

Mariel's been married 17 months. What about children? "Absolutely," says Mariel. "Steve wants to start with a fleet. I'll settle for one at a time."

BRADY'S BITS

Someone reported that, in order to keep in shape, Mariel and husband Steve actually pull on old boxing gloves and spar. I asked if this were so. "Yes," said Steve, pointing to the left side of his face, "and I had the black eye to prove it."

The Official National Historic Mint

Elvis Presley "Double Eagle" Commemorative

50th Birthday Issue, Layered in both Genuine .999 Silver and 24 Karat Gold

Honoring the 50th Birthday of "The King of Rock and Roll"

Official Elvis Presley "Double Eagle"

You may now acquire direct from the National Historic Mint a first-edition Elvis Presley Commemorative—the official "Double Eagle" Series "G"—honoring the 50th birthday of this legendary "King".

Layered in Both Genuine .999 Silver and 24 Karat Gold

Each specimen is mint-state quality, layered in both genuine .999 silver and 24 karat gold and will be accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity to that effect from the National Historic Mint.

Limited Series, Rare Mint Quality

Minted in fewer numbers than the 1886 "O" Morgan or Liberty Head Silver Dollar, the Elvis Presley Commemorative is uncirculated and of mint-state quality. Not more than 1,000,000 will be minted in the "G" Series. Thereafter, the dies will be destroyed thus assuring permanent rarity.

A Unique Historic Event

This Elvis Presley issue was commissioned and struck by the National Historic Mint as a unique commemorative medallion and has never been intended, designated or circulated as currency. We therefore recommend storage in its protective sleeve to protect against mishandling.

Price Honored Only Until June 25, 1986

We cannot guarantee to honor requests at the original issue price after June 25, 1986. Your uncashed check will be returned if postmarked later than midnight of that date.

© 1985 Elvis Presley Enterprises, Inc

"Double Eagle"—Extra Collectors Bonus

Note that this Commemorative also memorializes the bi-centennial (200 years) of the bald eagle as America's national symbol—represented by double eagles, one for each century.

50-Year Guarantee for Your Protection

Should you ever wish to sell or redeem your Elvis Presley Commemorative, the National Historic Mint pledges to repurchase it from you upon demand, any time within the next fifty years, for the full cash price you paid.

Lower Serial Number

Many collectors desire a low Certificate of Authenticity serial number. Therefore please order your Commemorative promptly. There is a limit of two (2) Commemoratives per address at this price, but if your request is mailed early enough (before June 17) you may order up to 5.

Send $15 for each Commemorative together with your name and address. Add only $3 shipping and handling no matter how many you order. (New York residents add sales tax.) Allow up to 6-8 weeks for shipment. Mail to: National Historic Mint, Elvis Presley "Double Eagle" Commemorative, Dept. 931-142, Box 1784, Hicksville, New York 11802. (E41610)

FREE BONUS GIFT

Collector's item—first-edition American Eagle "Double Eagle" Series "BB"—celebrating the 200th anniversary of the American Eagle—FREE with each Elvis Presley Commemorative ordered within 7 days (Mint issue price, $15)

HOCUS-FOCUS

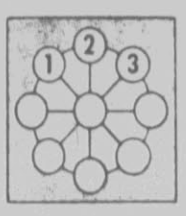

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Junior Whirl

by Hal Kaufman

• ROUND FIGURES! Challenge: Place the remaining digits 1-9 in the blank circles at right so that each three digits in a straight line total 15.

As you can see, the first three numbers are already in place.

Hint: Find the center digit by a process of elimination.

Place five at center clockwise 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9.

• PLANT STAND! Find a flower in each sentence: 1. This soda is yummy. 2. He purchased a stereo. 3. The fir is a conifer. 4. I ordered the pans you requested. 5. Igor chided his friends.

1 Daisy 2 Aster 3 Iris 4 Pansy 5 Orchid

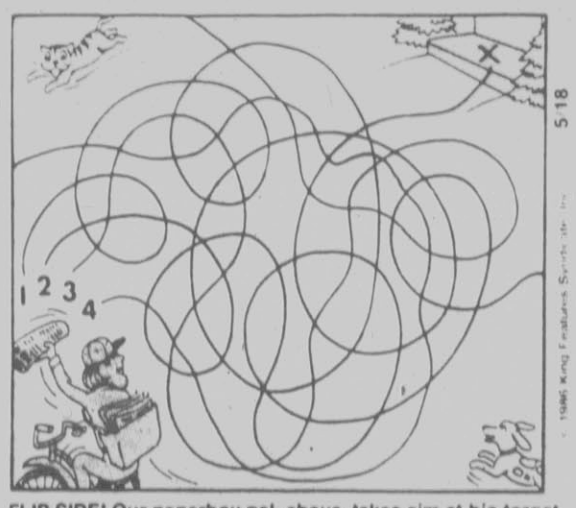

BEPUZZLED ANIMALS

Names of four four-footed animals may be puzzled out above. Here's how: Identify each of the subjects pictured, juggle letters of respective names and fit them in the blank squares to form four five-letter animal names.

In No. 1, for instance, rearrange letters of the word BEAR. In No. 2, rearrange letters of SHOE. And so on...

How quickly can you identify all four?

1 Zebra 2 Horse 3 Tiger 4 Sheep

FLIP SIDE! Our paperboy pal, above, takes aim at his target. Will or won't his eye prove accurate?

WINNING KICK! Hail to the conquering tortoise. Apply colors above as follows: 1—Red. 2—Pink. 3—Yellow. 4—Lt. brown. 5—Lt. purple. 6—Green. 7—Dk. brown. 8—Gray.

SPELLBINDER

SCORE 10 points for using all the letters in the word below to form two complete words:

CARDINAL

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters.

Try to score at least 50 points.

Possible anagram: Card, nail.

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: FOR KING ARTHUR'S ARMY NOTHING HAS GONE AS PLANNED. ONLY THE MEN OF THULE, ON THE RIGHT FLANK, HAVE YET TO BE THROWN INTO BATTLE. THE OLD KING RIDES ANGRILY TO ARN, "WHY DO YOU JUST STAND THERE? HERE!" HE THRUSTS THE ANCIENT BATTLE HORN UNDER ARN'S NOSE.

ARN RAISES IT TO HIS LIPS. BUT INSTEAD OF SOUNDING THE SINGLE BLAST FOR "ADVANCE," HE SOUNDS TWO MOURNFUL ONES FOR "RETREAT."

VAL AND HIS SAXONS, LIKE GAWAIN AND HIS KNIGHTS, SCRAMBLE BACK TO ARTHUR'S LINES AS BEST THEY CAN.

©1986 King Features Syndicate, Inc. World rights reserved

ARTHUR IS ENRAGED BY ARN'S IMPUDENCE. "COWARD!" HE CRIES WITH EVERY BLOW. "BEGONE FROM MY SIGHT!" ARN ENDURES THE PUNISHMENT MUTELY, AND ONLY THE INTERVENTION OF KING AGUAR PREVENTS A MORE SAVAGE BEATING.

THERE IS GLOOM THAT NIGHT AROUND THE CAMPFIRES OF ARTHUR'S INVASION FORCE. CASUALTIES HAVE BEEN HEAVY. BUT RETREAT WAS CALLED IN TIME. THE KING STILL HAS AN ARMY. "YOU ACTED WISELY," PRINCE VALIANT TELLS HIS SON. "FOR THAT, I HAVE BEEN RELIEVED OF COMMAND," ARN REPLIES BITTERLY.

"THE KING CANNOT RELIEVE ME OF BEING YOUR FATHER," SAYS VAL. "AND YOUR FATHER NEEDS YOUR HELP."

NEXT WEEK: Father and Son
