Andrew Heads For Sea

By The Associated Press

Skippers kept their boats ashore but surfers were out in force Saturday as Andrew, the first tropical storm of the 1986 hurricane season, brought wind, waves and rain to North Carolina's coast.

"We've got 12-foot waves. It's rough out there," said Patty Dudley at Dudley's Marina in Swansboro. "We don't have any boats out today."

"This morning we had right many good groundswells, but they've leveled out to about 4 feet," said Jim Ratcliffe, owner of Long Beach Pier in Southport. "I think everybody's kind of scared to go out. But them surfers was having a ball. The waves was big enough you could get in what you call a pipeline."

Andrew, which contributed to 40 flooding deaths in the Caribbean, posed little further threat to land as it moved northeastward at 12 mph, said Joe Pelissier, meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Raleigh.

"It's going to be mainly just some heavy winds, some heavy surf and some showers mainly from Cape Lookout northward," he said.

At 8 p.m. Saturday, Andrew's center was near latitude 34.5 north and longitude 74.5 west, or about 80 miles south of Cape Hatteras.

It was expected to pass out to sea south of the cape, Pelissier said. "This lessens the threat of getting real direct effects of the storm along our coast."

The weather service said maximum sustained winds were 40 mph with little change in strength expected before Sunday.

A heavy surf advisory was issued for the Outer Banks, the chain of coastal islands, with 5 to 6 foot waves reported. Small craft advisories were issued for Albemarle and Pamlico sounds and areas northward through southern Virginia, although little or no damage was expected, Pelissier said.

"People can ride out a 40 or 50 mile-an-hour wind," he said. "There was never any evacuation contemplated at any time with this storm. It's mainly a threat to marine interests, small boats, maybe some beach erosion."

The storm, which passed through the Caribbean last week, was blamed for 26 flooding deaths in Jamaica, 12 in the Dominican Republic and two in Haiti.

Gale warnings that had been issued from Cape Lookout to south of Virginia Beach, Va., were discontinued at noon.

The hurricane season started Sunday and ends Nov. 30. A tropical storm, which has maximum sustained winds of 39 to 73 mph, is upgraded to hurricane status when winds reach 74 mph.

Six hurricanes and two tropical storms lashed the Atlantic coast in 1985, called the worst hurricane season in 69 years.

Dry Conditions Continue To Curb Growth Of Crops In Northern Pitt

By DON REUTER
Reflector Staff Writer

While rainfall from scattered showers have dampened most Pitt County fields, crops in areas north of Greenville are too dry, making them susceptible to diseases and harmful insects, according to Pitt County Agricultural Extension Agent Sam Uzzell.

"In some areas, crops are doing very well," said Uzzell, who specializes in peanuts and horticulture. "But other areas, sometimes rather close to prospering fields, are not doing very well."

Uzzell said the weather has been inconsistent, leaving certain areas short of moisture.

"The rainfall has been very scattered," Uzzell said. "Many places such as Bethel and areas north of Greenville have not received much rainfall at all this spring."

Farmers whose crops haven't received enough water should be wary of bugs and diseases.

"In general, things are going very well despite the continued dry conditions," he said. "However, weather-related insects and disease problems do show up."

He said peanut crops are among the first fields attacked.

"The problem is extremely common with peanut crops. With extended dry weather, there is an increased possibility of little insects called thrips and possibly spider mites," Uzzell said. "They generally go to green and growing tissue."

Thrips and spider mites do not present as big a threat to tobacco and soybeans, according to Uzzell.

Rainfall within the next week is vital for some crops, especially corn, he said.

"It is really important for horticultural crops to receive rainfall in the next few days," he said. "As corn reaches the tasseling stage, it needs rainfall for sure."

Meanwhile, tobacco crop growth has been dictated by the weather.

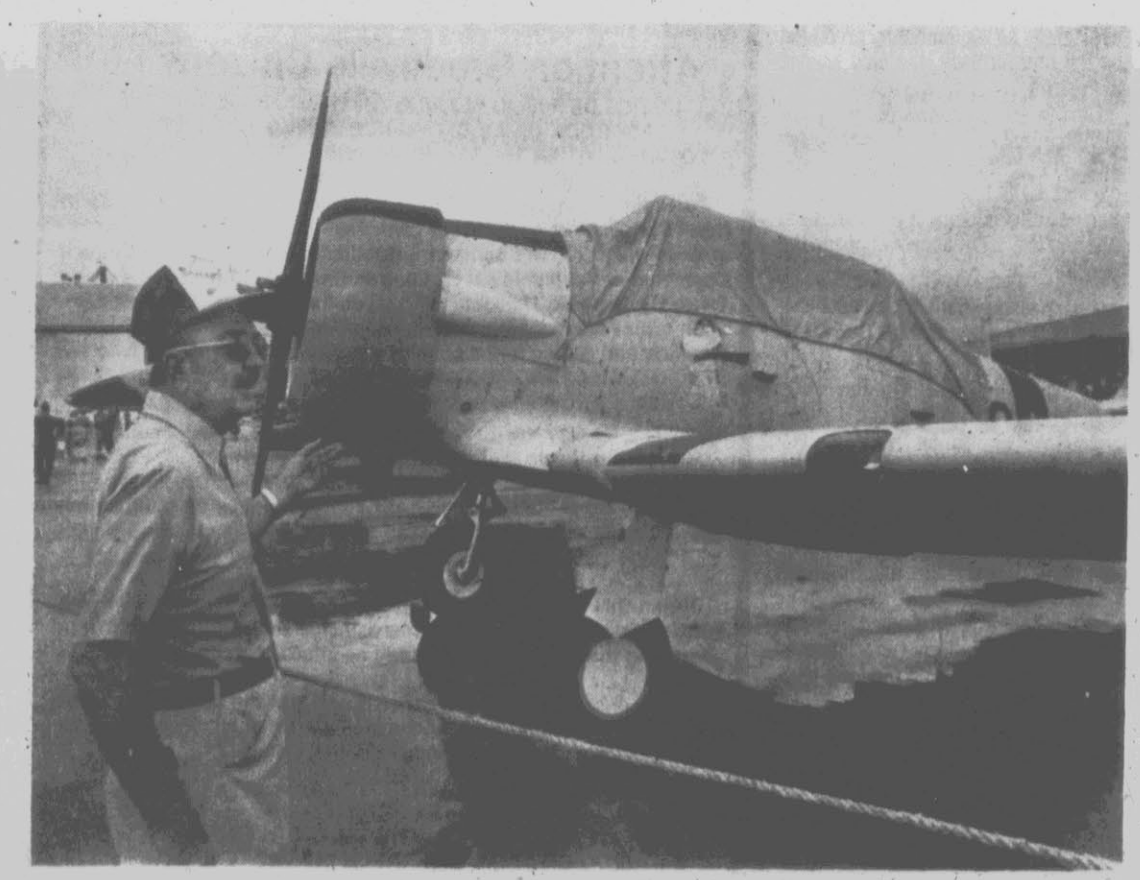

"I've seen some tobacco fields that haven't grown at all, while some are waist-high," he said.

Some crops need rain more than others, depending on when they were planted, Uzzell said.

"In certain areas, it depends on the crop's stage of growth," he said. "And vegetable crops need regular rainfall to produce a decent quality vegetable."

Uzzell said wheat farmers are now preparing to harvest crops.

"The wheat is drying up, and combining has begun," Uzzell said. "There appears to be a good bit of variance in wheat yields this year. Harvesting is proceeding rather well and rather quickly."

Scientists Launching New Look At Causes Of Aging

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists seeking clues to what makes the body age are delving into its tiniest portions, focusing on genes and a garbage-disposal system to clean out cells.

But findings are still sketchy in what scientists call a relatively new phase of aging research.

"We're only now beginning to explore the fundamental biology of aging," said researcher Leonard Hayflick of the University of Florida at Gainesville. "We're in a position now of gathering data and formulating ideas."

Hayflick was among researchers who discussed theories of aging recently at a symposium in New York on Modern Biological Theories of Aging.

Some work focuses on genes, the chemical blueprints within cells. Genes guide the development of an animal from a fertilized egg to adulthood, turning on and off at different times to carry out the genetic "program" for development, and some scientists wonder if the genes later guide the body through aging as well.

Richard Russell of the University of Pittsburgh said studies of a tiny worm have found sizable changes in enzyme levels after its reproductive period is largely over, suggesting that a gene may be turned on during aging. And several human diseases that accelerate some processes seen in normal aging show some genetic involvement, he said.

But the case for a genetic program that controls aging is not proved yet, he said.

Hayflick, for his part, doubts such a program exists. People are genetically programmed to grow old enough to reproduce, he asserts, and "what happens after that is of absolutely no importance to the species." So after age 30, he says, people essentially coast on built-in physical reserves that served to assure they reached reproductive age.

"Humans have spent perhaps 99.9 percent of their time on Earth with a life expectancy of 18 years," he said, and aging, which came along with medical advances, can be considered simply "an aberration of civilization."

Some researchers are taking another tack on the influence of genes, asking if aging involves loss of ability to repair the body's DNA — the threadlike molecules along which genes lie. Studies have suggested, for example, an age-related decrease in the ability of human skin cells to fix DNA, said Richard Setlow of Brookhaven National Laboratory in Upton, N.Y.

Studies have also found that animal species that tend to live longer have more active repair mechanisms, he said. On the other hand, studies of humans with

Oncologist Welcomes OK For Interferon

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Dr. Spencer Raab, chief of the hematology-oncology section of the East Carolina University School of Medicine, says he is pleased that a genetically engineered type of interferon has been given federal Food and Drug Administration approval for treatment of hairy cell leukemia.

While he calls the approval a good thing, he's not as expansive in his comment as Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen, who called federal approval of interferon during his announcement Wednesday "the beginning of a new age in medicine."

Hairy cell leukemia is a chronic cancer of white blood cells that affects between 2,000 and 3,000 Americans, most of them adults. Dr. Raab says he sees about two new cases a year. He says the most effective treatment he's had so far for the disease has been to remove the spleen. This sometimes brought about remissions for several years.

He said he will be looking back at all the cases he's treated and, for any who have not responded well to the present treatment, he will consider using interferon.

Interferon, he said, can be given intravenously, sometimes even on an outpatient basis, though side effects do have to be monitored carefully.

The FDA approval means that interferon is now available for physicians to prescribe, whether the condition is hairy cell leukemia or not. Dr. Raab said he is aware of good results in treating multiple myeloma, a primary malignancy of bone tissue in adults. He said he might try interferon on this condition soon.

"There are ongoing studies in many areas," he said, "More possibilities probably will open up."

Asked if he considers the availability of interferon for use at physicians' discretion a breakthrough, he said, "Yes, it's a breakthrough, but not of the magnitude that a really effective treatment for breast cancer or lung cancer would be. These cancers are so much more plentiful. I'd really get excited about that."

Interferons works, he said, by stimulating a host defense in the body, causing natural killer cells of cancer cells to be stimulated.

Food and Drug Administation Commissioner Frank Young said "revolutionary new" recombinant DNA technology — gene splicing — has enabled scientists to produce large amount of these hormone-like protein molecules for the first time.

He said three major types of interferon are now being tested on several diseases, including chronic myelogenous leukemia, a second kind of adult leukemia; Kaposi's sarcoma, a severe capillary cancer associated with AIDS, and juvenile laryngeal papilloma, a benign tumor of the larynx in children.

Interferons are a family of small hormone-like protein molecules secreted naturally by human cells to fight viral and other infections. There are three types: leukocyte, or alpha, produced by white blood cells; fibroblast, or beta, produced by connective tissue cells, and immune in-

Juvenile Hijacker Captured

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — A youth who commandeered a Nicaraguan Boeing 727 as it prepared for takeoff Saturday from Managua's Sandino International Airport was captured three hours later when police rushed the plane.

Lenin Cerna, head of the state Security Bureau, told reporters that no shots were fired in the police assault and no one was hurt. An official communique said there were 68 passengers on the plane at the time of the takeover.

"The attempt to hijack the plane was made by a boy, whom we are going to present (to the public) later," Cerna said in an interview on the government's Voice of Nicaragua radio station. "Police managed to dominate him in a lightning operation, which makes us very happy."

Cerna called the would-be hijacker a juvenile delinquent and said he was trying to leave Nicaragua for nonpolitical reasons.

Former Moon-Walker James Irwin Unresponsive After Cardiac Arrest

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Former astronaut James B. Irwin, a veteran of walks on the moon and an evangelist who searched for Noah's Ark, was in critical but stable condition Saturday after suffering a cardiac arrest.

Irwin was not conscious but was not in a coma, either, Dr. Richard Moothart said at Penrose Hospital.

The cardiologist said Irwin was unresponsive and added that it could be several days before physicians would be willing to make statements about his chances for recovery after Friday's seizure.

"As best we'll ever be able to determine, he had a cardiac irregularity causing him to lose consciousness," Moothart said.

Irwin did not suffer a heart attack, he said. The difference between the arrythmia suffered by Irwin and a heart attack is that an arrythmia "does not necessarily mean you have damage to the heart," Moothart said.

Irwin, 56, suffered his first heart attack in 1973, at age 43, while playing handball. He underwent cardiac bypass surgery in 1977, but later that year suffered a second heart attack.

Paramedics were summoned after a youngster found Irwin on a curb near his home. Irwin was dressed in jogging shoes and shorts and apparently had collapsed after sitting down, said Fire Lt. Andrew Collins.

Sue McBroom, emergency medical technician dispatcher for the Colorado Springs Fire Department, said rescuers used a defibrillator, which delivers a shock of electricity to the chest, to restore Irwin's heart beat.

"When we first got to him, he had no pulse," said paramedic Richard Burns. "After we defibrillated him, he had a pulse. Initially, it was weak but before we got him to the hospital (a 10-minute drive) it was a good, strong pulse."

Irwin, the eighth of 12 Americans to walk on the moon, was lunar module pilot for the Apollo 15 flight, July 26 to Aug. 7, 1971. He and David R. Scott remained on the lunar surface for 66 hours and 54 minutes.

The mission was the fourth of six lunar landings between July 1969, when Apollo 11 astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin E. "Buzz" Aldrin Jr. landed on the moon, and December 1972, when Eugene Cernan and Harrison Schmitt landed.

Both Irwin and Scott registered cardiac irregularities while working on the moon, a problem that doctors attributed to a deficiency of potassium in their space-food diet. The experience led to changes in astronaut diets.

Several months after returning to Earth, the Apollo 15 crewmen confirmed that they had arranged for the sale of stamped envelopes that they had taken to the moon and back.

The discovery prompted a reprimand for the three astronauts and forced a change in NASA's policy about what astronauts may carry into space. Scott, Irwin and Alfred M. Worden, who had remained in orbit aboard the command module, all left the astronaut corps within a few months.

Irwin, retired from the Air Force with the rank of colonel, became an evangelist and traveled the country to speak before church and revival audiences. He later founded an evangelistic organization and named it "High Flight" after a poem written by a pilot. The former astronaut also worked for the Denver-based Manville Corp.

Irwin also led several expeditions to Turkey to find Noah's Ark, which he believed was somewhere on Mount Ararat. In 1982, his search for the ark ended with a fall that hospitalized him with minor head injuries.

Austrian Voters To Decide Waldheim's Future Today

By LARRY GERBER
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Austrian voters have the final say Sunday in a presidential campaign that touched off an international furor over candidate Kurt Waldheim and allegations that he hid a Nazi past.

The Waldheim affair has tarnished Austria's reputation and raised questions abroad about whether the country has dealt honestly with its past, especially its relationship with Nazi Germany.

The case has also frustrated voters who saw former U.N. Secretary-General Waldheim as a symbol of change after 16 years of Socialist government, but then found themselves accused of harboring Nazi sympathies if they voted for him.

Waldheim, backed by the conservative People's Party, won 49.64 percent of the votes in a four-way election May 4. His Socialist-backed opponent, Kurt Steyrer, had 43.7 percent. Polls taken last week gave Waldheim a slight edge over Steyrer among Austria's 5.4 million eligible voters.

In a final appeal to voters Saturday, Waldheim, 67, referred to the allegations briefly, saying he was convinced Austrians would exercise their democratic rights and would "again tolerate no interference from outside."

Steyrer has refused to discuss the case, but on Saturday asked voters to consider Austria's image abroad.

"International respect is not a luxury item that can be thoughtlessly abandoned," he said. "Neutral Austria, tourist land Austria, which is a state of (international) encounters, needs respect and trust in the world.

"Anyone who has been abroad in the West in recent weeks and months ... anyone who reads Western newspapers and magazines will have realized that Austria's respect in the world has suffered," Steyrer said.

Hubcaps Taken

Greenville police have reported three incidents of larcenies of hubcaps and wheelcovers from area automobile dealerships.

Police reports said 36 wheelcovers, valued at $2,063, were taken from nine cars parked at Joe Cullipher Chrysler-Plymouth, 3401 S. Memorial Drive. Police, who received the report at 9:41 a.m. Friday, said there were no suspects or witnesses to the thefts.

Another Friday incident reported to the department at 9:30 a.m. resulted in the theft of 19 wheel covers, valued at $635, taken from five vechicles parked at Phelps Chevrolet, West End Circle.

Hubcaps also were taken from five vehicles parked at Bill Askew Motors, 3010 Memorial Drive, police said. About $30 in damages resulted from the incident, which was reported at 12:20 p.m. Friday, and officers said the value of the hubcaps were set at $150.

Aging ...

diseases that include elements of premature aging have not found consistent defects in DNA repair mechanisms, he said.

Another possibility for aging research lies in a garbage-disposal system of body cells, suggested J. Fred Dice, associate physiology professor at the Tufts University School of Medicine in Boston.

Studies of human skin cells grown in the laboratory have found age-related declines in activity of tiny features called lysosomes. These structures help in the cell's routine maintenance program of destroying and replacing key substances.

It's not known whether the decline is a cause or effect of aging, Dice said, and other scientists warned that results from laboratory-grown cells may not pertain to what happens in the body.

But Dice suggests that when lysosomes become less active, the cell accumulates abnormal proteins, which may may trigger heightened activity by a second cellular system that attacks abnormal proteins. But that system also destroys normal proteins the cell doesn't need any more, and when it becomes overactive, it may begin destroying needed proteins, harming key operations of the cell, Dice said.

"The most exciting thing about this (theory) is it's specific enough that in two years we'll know if it's right," he said. By then, scientists should be able to fix defective lysosomes and see if it makes any difference, he said.

terferon, or gamma, produced by T-cells, a specific variety of white blood cells that are part of the immune system. The government approval Wednesday applied to alpha interferon.

All were discovered by Alick Isaacs and Jean Lindemann, virologists at London's National Institute for Medical Research, in 1957.

At first, scientists were hopeful they would prove effective against many illnesses, but studies were disappointing, largely because researchers were dependent on the extremely small amounts produced by the human body, the only source at the time.

During the past decade, with the development of gene splicing, larger amounts have been produced to conduct clinical trials. Now drug companies are producing it for treatment use and the FDA approval opens the way for sales.

American Specialist Will Monitor Nuclear Victims

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An American bone marrow specialist who treated victims of the Soviet nuclear power plant disaster at Chernobyl said Saturday that only two or three more deaths due to radiation were expected in the immediate future.

Dr. Robert Gale, who was greeted on his arrival Saturday in Los Angeles by his wife and two of three children, signed a long-term agreement with Soviet health experts Friday to monitor for the rest of their lives some 100,000 people possibly affected by radiation from the fire and explosion April 26.

"We will learn a considerable amount about the pathogenesis of cancer as we did after the atomic bomb blasts" in the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki during World War II," Gale said.

Hundreds of thousands of people were studied in Japan following World War II, but modern, sophisticated equipment will yield more telling data on the long-term effects of exposure to heavy radiation, Gale said.

Gale, of the University of California at Los Angeles, told reporters that 26 people in all had died as a result of the accident, two during the initial blast.

All of those who were seriously exposed were within a 30-kilometer radius of the plant, Gale said.

"I believe the (death toll) figure will remain relatively stable and not change by (more than) 10 percent," Gale said, meaning perhaps two or three more deaths in the near future.

Something To Think About

Donovan Phillips
DIRECTOR

A CHILD'S TEARS

Often, children attend the funeral of a loved one without any obvious demonstration of emotion. The child stands there stiffly, dry-eyed. The child is probably neither being brave nor unfeeling; rather, the child is probably too stunned or uncomprehending to fully express his or her feelings.

Sometimes, the child gets a subtle, or not so subtle message from adults to keep a lid on emotions. Psychologists generally agree that this is wrong, that it is unhealthy for the child to bottle up grief. The youngster who stoically represses his or her feelings may later find a release in an explosion more dangerous to psychological well-being.

Adults are advised by psychologists not to fear the allowing or even causing of tears. There is no reason to steer conversation away from the deceased for fear of starting the tears to flow. Expressing grief through crying is both normal and therapeutic. A child's tears are a fitting and tender tribute that should not be stifled.

Tearful Tutu Pleads For End To Black Deaths

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Tears streaming down his face, Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu appealed to blacks Saturday to stop killing each other as an increasingly bloody spinoff of anti-apartheid violence claimed more lives.

"The world is with us ... why are we killing one another in this way?" Tutu, his voice breaking, said at a funeral in Johannesburg's Soweto township for a slain church worker who tried to mediate between rival black groups.

In Kempton Park, a white town east of Johannesburg, about 100 black youths, one firing a revolver and others hurling gasoline bombs, burst into a clothing shop, then rampaged through the central area as terrified white shoppers fled, witnesses reported.

The blacks set fire to the store during the Saturday morning shopping peak, burning out the building and causing about $250,000 worth of damage.

"They appeared to go berserk," a police spokesman said of the attackers, who escaped as police patrols descended.

Such an assault is almost unprecedented at a white shopping center.

Earlier, police reported five more blacks killed in renewed eruptions of violence, including three men, one a black policeman, who were burned to death.

Two charred bodies were left in a black township, Motherwell, in the eastern Cape, and the policeman's body was found in a white suburb near Pretoria, police said.

Police also said 10 black miners were killed and 115 were wounded in fighting Friday at the Hlobane coal mine in Natal provice between members of rival unions in a dispute over staging a strike. State-run radio had earlier reported a death toll of eight and 95 wounded.

Natal is the stronghold of Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi, the main moderate black leader who recently set up a labor union in competition with the nation's giant labor federation, the Council of South African Trade Unions.

In Soweto, about 2,000 mourners stood silently as Tutu, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, raised his hands in an emotional plea for unity.

"We have such a wonderful, noble cause ... please let us not use methods of which we will be ashamed," the black bishop of Johannesburg said.

Police watched silently as mourners streamed from the church behind the coffin of Diliza Matshoba, a popular field worker for the South African Council of Churches. Matshoba's body was found in a government mortuary in Soweto last month, and his family suspect he was slain by conservative black vigilantes.

The mourners, including anti-apartheid activist Winnie Mandela, rose and gave black power salutes as Tutu said earlier,

"The fact that we are going to be free is no longer a question."

About half the approximately 1,600 blacks killed in 21 months of anti-apartheid unrest were killed by police and troo[illegible]

Government opponents suspect some vigilante groups are armed and encouraged by state agents.

In Cape Town, President P.W. Botha's office reacted coolly to an announcement by the Commonwealth Secretariat in London that a six-month mediation effort to set up talks between the government and black leaders was over.

A spokesman said Botha knew of no deadline and was still studying a communication from the seven-member Commonwealth group.

In a formal statement, Botha's spokesman, who demanded that he not be identified, reiterated that anyone who wanted to negotiate with the government must renounce violence.

Published reports in B[illegible]ain said the initiative foundered on the key question of releasing African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela and lifting a 26-year ban on his outlawed guerrilla movement.

Earlier, the United Democratic Front, the main legal anti-apartheid group in the country, said it would go ahead with rallies scheduled in June to demand the lifting on the ban on the ANC.

There is widespread speculation Botha may reimpose a state of emergency in an effort to suppress demonstrations and new outpourings of black anger.

W. Berlin Blast Kills Tar Heel

BERLIN (AP) — A second American soldier has died of wounds suffered in the April 5 bombing of a West Berlin discotheque, a U.S. military spokesman said Saturday.

Staff Sgt. James E. Goins, 26, of Ellerbee, N.C., died in a West Berlin hospital Saturday afternoon, said the spokesman, Steve Stromvall.

Sgt. Kenneth Terrance Ford, 21, of Detroit, Mich., and Nermine Hanay, 27, a Turkish woman, were killed instantly and 230 other people were injured in the 1:50 a.m. bombing of the La Belle discotheque. The nightspot had been crowded with about 500 people, many of them U.S. soldiers.

Goins had been in critical condition since the bombing and both legs had been amputated, Stromvall reported. He said Goins' wife, Patrocinia, was with him when he died.

Goins also is survived by a 5-year-old son, Carlos. Stromvall said the body will be flown back to the United States for burial but no date had been set.

Sixty-four of those wounded in the blast were Americans, but Stromvall said Goins had been the only one still hospitalized.

Goins belonged to the 4th battalion of the 502nd Infantry Regiment of the Berlin Brigade. Stromvall said he had been stationed with the Army in Korea, Panama and West Berlin, and was awarded the Purple Heart on April 30.

A West German newspaper reported last month that U.S. and West German intelligence officials had linked Libyan officials to the bombing.

U.S. warplanes bombed the Libyan cities of Tripoli and Benghazi on April 15 in retaliation. Libya denied any involvement in the nightclub attack.

West Berlin police arrested a Palestinian living in Berlin, 35-year-old Ahmed Nawaf Mansur Hasi, and questioned him in connection with the La Belle attack, but say they did not believe he planted the bomb. Hasi has denied involvement.

West Berlin officials said Hasi also is a suspect in the March 29 bombing of the German-Arab Friendship Society that caused extensive damage. Security officials have said they believe Syria may have provided the materials for that explosion, but the Syrian Embassy in East Berlin has denied the allegation.

Violence Breaks Out In Nuclear Protests Across W. Germany

BROKDORF, West Germany (AP) — Protesters hurling rocks and gasoline bombs set fire to cars and to a water cannon in clashes with police Saturday as more than 74,000 people demonstrated nationwide against nuclear power.

Police in riot gear fired water cannon and tear gas at violent protesters outside a new nuclear power plant at Brokdorf, in northern West Germany, and at Wackersdorf, in the south, where a nuclear waste reprocessing plant is under construction, a police spokesman said.

Police reported 180 arrests and 29 injuries at those two sites. There were 40,000 demonstrators in Brokdorf and 10,000 in Wackersdorf, where the protest had been forbidden by a Bavarian state court.

The demonstrations were the most violent in West Germany since mid-May, when more than 150 police and dozens of demonstrators were injured at Wackersdorf in three days of anti-nuclear protests.

Ten thousand people demonstrated peacefully Saturday against nuclear power at a meeting of environmentalists in Wuerzburg, and 5,000 took part in a peaceful protest at a nuclear reactor in Hamm, where small amounts of radiation leaked into the air on May 4. The reactor has been temporarily shut down.

Police said 9,300 people, including 4,000 children, took part in a peaceful "children's parade" against nuclear power in Munich Saturday morning.

The worst clashes were reported about six miles from the Brokdorf plant, where demonstrators backed up in traffic in the village of Kleve left their own cars and burned automobiles parked nearby.

Police fought protesters, and nine officers and two demonstrators were hospitalized with serious injuries, according to police spokesman Immanuel Dzatkowski.

One policeman suffered a broken jaw, and another was hit by steel pellets fired by a slingshot, Dzatkowski said. An officer's machine gun was stolen, he said.

Thirty people were arrested in Kleve. Earlier Saturday, police said, they had arrested 20 other people bound for Brokdorf with firearms and clubs in their possession.

Police arrested 100 people during the demonstration at the plant, where militants threw rocks and Molotov cocktails at police and were answered with water cannon and tear gas.

Elections Expected In Haiti

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Justice Minister Francois Latortue said Saturday that an official election announcement was scheduled over the weekend in an attempt to take this troubled Caribbean land a step closer to democracy.

Latortue said in an interview that the interim three-member governing General Council will officially confirm that elections in Haiti, the Western Hemisphere's most impoverished country, will be held before the end of 1987.

The elections would be the first since Francois Duvalier was elected in 1957. Duvalier was named president-for-life in 1964 and his son, Jean-Claude Duvalier, ruled as president-for-life from 1971 until he fled into exile in France on Feb. 7.

Haiti, a nation of 6 million, shares the island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic.

Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, council chairman, was expected to announce officially that an election would be held, and to provide details about a constitutional assembly. The assembly would draft a constitution and fix an election date, Latortue said.

The interim council was formed after Duvalier agreed to end the family rule. From the start, the council made clear it intended to transfer power to an elected government.

Opposition to the council's rule had been mounting.

Political and opposition leaders threatened to call a general strike Tuesday if Namphy did not increase the size of the council to ensure that the decision-making process was more representative.

Among those calling for a council change were Silvio Claude of the Social Democratic Party, Serge Gilles of the Socialist Party, Evans Paul of the Unified Committee for Democracy, and Hubert de Ronceray, an independent.

"The opposition is still small," said one Western diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity. He recalled that opposition leaders had given similar deadlines to the council without success.

Marc Bazin, an economist who worked for the World Bank and a potential presidential candidate in any anticipated election, told a news conference Saturday at his Port-au-Prince home that "it is my understanding, they (the council) will announce an election."

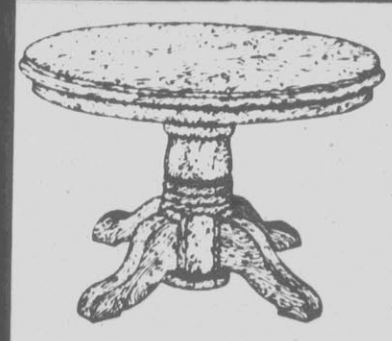

At the same time, Bazin suggested that a "crisis committee" be formed to avoid a political confrontation in Haiti.

Demonstrations had abated by Saturday in Port-au-Prince, the capita of 1 million people.

State Boards

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina General Assembly should abolish more than five dozen state boards, commissions and councils because they duplicate other boards, perform useless work or never meet, the North Carolina Center for Public Policy Research says.

The boards are targeted for elimination in a state Senate bill that is pending before the state House.

School Proposal Will Let Merger Go As Scheduled

The agreement reached between the Concerned Citizens for Justice and local school boards is sound because it allows merger to proceed — presumably on schedule.

It is a good agreement because it gives the interim board the resources to address the need for altering the county's method of election while making progress — consolidating the schools — at the same time.

Interim board members should be careful, however, not to let the political furor of their positions overpower the educational demands of the consolidated school system. Their responsibility is to the schoolchildren of Pitt County and the taxpayers — not just the voters. The ideal of merger was to improve the quality of schools — not to revise the election system.

U.S. Justice Department action has made it obvious that voting methods for the school board must be altered to avoid charges of discrimination against blacks, and consolidation is a perfect opportunity to make this adjustment. But the true purpose of the expensive, time-consuming, critical project of merger shouldn't be abandoned. That purpose is quality education.

The agreement is also sound because it allows the three black appointed members to remain on the interim board of education. Those three have developed expertise on crucial issues in the six months they spent on the board. It would be unwise to waste this experience.

The political job that faces the interim board — selecting a new election method — must be carefully executed. Members should opt for a combination at-large/single-member district plan that keeps the individual vote meaningful. By no means should all board members be elected by single-member districts.

The future of 17,000 students and a $50 million business will rest in the hands of the 15 members of the interim board. These members need to consider this obligation first when making decisions during their 18-month tenure.

Firms Can Help Stop Break-Ins

Some Arlington Boulevard merchants were concerned enough with break-ins that they asked for a meeting with city officials last week. City Manager Gail Meeks termed it a "beneficial meeting."

The problem is obviously one of concern, both in the city and the county.

Mrs. Meeks said the city has spent $19,000 in overtime for 700 manhours staking out the area this year. She said by working together (the merchants and the city) there was hope that the number of break-ins could be reduced.

The burden is heavy on the police and sheriff departments to reduce break-ins and to do all possible to apprehend culprits.

There are things that individuals can do to reduce the threat. Adequate lighting and other security devices can make break-ins more difficult for the perpetrators. City officials say the crime prevention officer will meet with merchants to conduct security audits of buildings. That can help. And of course any citizen can report suspicious activity so that officers can investigate. It will take everyone's efforts to reduce nocturnal break-ins.

Sunday Morning Notes

Among the things that appeared on my desk last week was a bottle.

This was not just any bottle. It was an old bottle of the kind which was used for soft drinks perhaps as far back as the late 19th century.

"This bottle is the property of James M. Hines, Greenville, N.C." the imprint read.

The glass had a slightly bluish tint and had suffered somewhat from its years of burial somewhere. It was chipped and broken in some places.

It is the type bottle that was common here many years ago. The ounces it will hold is not on the bottle, but it is probably the six ounce variety.

And if it indeed once held Coca-Cola one can assume it was the original version.

Old bottles abound in this area. People have been throwing them away as long as there have been bottles. Town dumps have been located in various locations.

There was a bonanza of sorts for bottle collectors in 1968 when the Town Common work was under way at Greene and First streets. As workmen dug near the Greene Street bridge many bottles, as well as other relics of early Greenville, were turned up. Old timers recalled that this was a town dump many years ago. In it went medicine bottles, soft drink bottles and other glass containers designed to bring joy to present day bottle collectors. Many of them took advantage of the opportunity to browse in Greenville's past.

The town dump was later moved north of the river on Greene Street and then to the area behind Greenwood Cemetery off East Fifth Street. The operation was later taken over by the county, assuming the elevated name of sanitary landfill. Then that operation, too, was closed down in favor of the new county landfill west of Greenville.

There were town dumps on the outskirts of other Pitt County municipalities — Farmville, Ayden, Grifton, Bethel. All have now been covered over, with refuse being hauled to the county landfill.

Far in the future, perhaps, archeologists will be digging into some of them, sifting through the garbage of past civilizations by which we can tell so much about a society.

If there are any old bottle collectors among them, they no doubt will be overjoyed.

Threats Have An Impact

WASHINGTON — Frustrated by his poor performance on a tennis court one recent Sunday afternoon, the editor of a prominent national publication provided a highly unusual excuse for his lack of concentration: "Casey won't let me alone."

The "Casey" on his conscience was the director of Central Intelligence, William Casey. The editor later said that Casey's recent threats to prosecute news organizations for reporting classified information had been as persistent as any made during the Nixon era. Indeed, he added that the threats had had a chilling effect on reportage.

Although the Reagan administration has apparently decided against complying with Casey's wishes, at least five major news organizations are holding national security-related stories for fear of potential legal ramifications. An investigative reporter for the New York Times confided to us that, given the current climate, he would hold a "bombshell story" he'd prepared. "Every jury in the country would send me to jail," he declared.

The Big Chill of late may, in fact, date back to the Justice Department's successful prosecution last fall of Samuel Loring Morison, a government contract employee charged with providing three classified satellite photographs to a British defense publication. In Morison's case, the alleged offense was that the mere release of the photographs constituted an unauthorized and potentially damaging disclosure — not that Soviet authorities necessarily had already seen them.

Morison's conviction on such broad grounds represented the government's most sweeping use of the 1917 Espionage Act to prevent leaks to the press. It also sent a signal to the news media: The First Amendment might not be enough to deter a jury from convicting a reporter for the unauthorized possession of classified information.

Not surprisingly, news editors aren't lining up to make themselves, or their reporters, sacrificial lambs on the altar of constitutional law. What they may want to encourage, however, is legislation to reform and restrict the Espionage Act. The law needs to be more specific and narrow in terms of its prohibitions. Otherwise, debate over U.S. foreign and military policies will suffer.

Charitable giving reached almost $80 billion last year, a healthy $6.4 billion more than in 1984. Yet the Urban Institute contends that individuals, corporations and private foundations will have to dig deeper into their pockets to make up for federal budget cuts. In the 1984 fiscal year, the group says, private giving compensated for only 57 percent of the reductions in federal contributions to nonprofit organizations.

While Europe has actively been wooing American tourists, the U.S. government has been selling this country's sights and sounds overseas. The Commerce Department's Travel and Tourism Administration (USTTA) has allocated $3.5 million (about two-thirds coming from private sources) to place ads in publications in nine European countries. The agency predicts that the number of foreign visitors entering the U.S. this year will exceed the 1985 total by at least 4 percent, thanks in part to the weakened dollar and government promotion. That could make for a welcome last hurrah for the USTTA. Under its 1987 budget proposal, the Reagan administration would close the agency.

Who says the Sunbelt receives a disproportionate share of total Pentagon spending? According to the Defense Department's Defense Economic Impact Modeling System, the top 10 recipients of Pentagon dollars (accounting for 57 percent of the department's budget) include six states from the Northeast and Midwest: New York, which placed third, Pennsylvania (4), Ohio (7), Illinois (8), Massachusetts (9) and New Jersey (10).

In fiscal 1985, the military accounted for more than 27 percent of all federal expenditures. That adds up to about $1,100 for every one of the nation's 234 million people. By contrast, the combined spending of non-U.S. NATO countries, with 332 million people, came to roughly $250 per person.

After raising millions of dollars for starving Africans, rock singer Bob Geldof has found himself the victim of his own altruism. Personal financial difficulties have forced the Irish-born musician to plan a return to recording.

Keep The Facts Straight

WASHINGTON — President Reagan recently ridiculed what he termed "absurdly" large jury awards in personal and product liability cases. By way of example, he cited an award to a man "who suffered a heart attack when he tried to start his lawn mower" and another award to a man "who sued the telephone company because he was standing in a phone booth when hit by a car driven by a drunken driver."

The president's examples were illustrative, but they mostly illustrated the difficulty in making heads or tails out of the crisis in liability insurance.

The lawn mower case was a 1977 case in Pennsylvania, Share v. Sears. The plaintiff pulled the starter cord of a Sears lawn mower 15 times. The thing wouldn't start. He suffered a massive heart attack. A jury found the product defective: The cord was in fact excessively hard to pull, and the mower wouldn't start because of a defective valve that did not meet the manufacturer's own specifications. The jury awarded $1.75 million to the plaintiff, a 32-year-old doctor with his whole career imperiled. Sears waived an appeal and settled out of court for something less.

The president's facts were still more askew in the case of the telephone booth. This was a 1974 case in California, Bigbee v. Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. The plaintiff found himself trapped in a phone booth about 15 feet from a major thoroughfare. He saw the drunken driver bearing down on him, but the booth's door was jammed and he could not escape. The case never went to trial at all. In Los Angeles County Superior Court, the telephone company won a summary judgment. Bigbee appealed. The California Supreme Court held that because of the jammed door the case should be heard by a jury. Nine years after the accident, the matter was settled out of court for an undisclosed sum.

My information on the two cases comes from the Association of Trial Lawyers of America, which is doggedly fighting every effort at changes in tort. I believe some changes are sorely needed, but we ought to keep our facts straight — and in this controversy facts are hard to come by.

The trial lawyers have not helped the pursuit of truth by seeking to obscure and to minimize the staggering awards that have in fact been made. They contend, for example, that data on "average jury awards" do not take into account those cases in which a jury made no award. That kind of reasoning tells us something about lawyers and numbers. So many stunning awards have been made in medical malpractice suits that malpractice insurance has become either non-existent or exorbitantly expensive. In Los Angeles premiums for obstetricians last year ranged from $36,000 to $61,000. That amounted to $685 to $1,175 for each baby delivered.

These soaring premiums, affecting hundreds of businesses and professions, reflect such serious underwriting losses that many companies have ceased to write product or professional liability policies at all. It is not that American medicine has suddenly grown irresponsible. More suits per doctor are being filed, and even though doctors win most of them, the legal expenses add significantly to the costs of health care.

What to do? The Reagan administration has introduced a bill on tort reform. The measure deals only with suits against the United States, but its provisions may be cited as models for civil suits everywhere. One section would abolish the rule of "joint and several liability," under which a single defendant, perhaps bearing the least liability, may be required to pay the whole of a jury's award. Another section would reduce awards by the amount a plaintiff received from some other source than the defendant. A third section would put a ceiling of $100,000 on damages for "pain and suffering." Other sections would put a cap on lawyers' contingent fees and would permit periodic payments of large awards.

The proposals make sense to me. State legislatures would want also to consider the business of "punitive damages," which never has made sense to me. After a plaintiff has been awarded compensation for his own demonstrable losses, which is all that justice requires, the plaintiff has no right to some further windfall intended to "punish" the defendant. If a defendant deserves punishment, punitive awards should go to the registry of a court for equitable disbursement.

Congress May Hold Key To SALT II's Fate

WASHINGTON (AP) — If President Reagan decides to save SALT II after all, the credit or blame will belong to Congress and the European allies.

The Soviets also have a chance to rescue the battered weapons-limitation accord, but the conditions set by the president would require a virtual reversal of Kremlin policy.

They would have to halt their military buildup, stop a whole range of activities Reagan says violates the 1979 treaty and other agreements and also present proposals for new accords that the United States deems worthwhile.

The chances of all that are remote since the president is pressing Congress at the same time for his own $300 billion military buildup and a 77 percent increase in "Star Wars" research spending, while the Soviets have denied the cheating charges and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has advanced a number of challenging proposals already.

Besides, even if Gorbachev complied, Reagan has promised only to take it into consideration when the U.S. force of B-52 bombers equipped with air-launched cruise missiles surpasses treaty limits in November or December.

The president emphasized in his decision last week that he will be guided mostly on his assessment of U.S. strategic security needs.

So that leaves Congress and the allies. Neither should be underestimated.

Nearly two decades ago, a handful of Supreme Court justices fretted about the legality of U.S. involvement in the Indochina wars. But it was Congress which finally forced American troops out of Vietnam.

The first phase involved publicity. Largely through Chairman J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee the country was educated about the extent and cost of U.S. intervention.

The second and critical phase involved the purse strings.

It was Bismarck, the 19th century German statesman, who said, "He who has his thumb on the purse has the power."

Congress proved it by depriving President Nixon of the funds needed to keep up the fight. The troops came home in 1973 and the United States pulled out entirely in 1975.

In trying to force Reagan to keep adhering to the SALT II treaty's limits on strategic bombers, submarines and land-based missiles, Congress is just getting started.

The Senate and House already have a majority on record as supporting the treaty. And Republicans as well as Democrats are among the critics of Reagan's decision.

In the House, Rep. Norman Dicks, a Washington Democrat, introduced legislation that would bar any spending on strategic arms that violate the limits of the treaty.

In the Senate, Robert Byrd of West Virginia, the Democratic leader, said he might support legislation to enforce the treaty's provisions as an amendment to military spending bills when they reach the floor.

Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, of the president's own Republican party, said Reagan would find very strong sentiment for a resolution to be offered soon in support of the treaty. Other critical Republicans include Sens. John Chafee of Rhode Island and Robert Stafford of Vermont.

Reagan told Congress that cutting his military request would be "precisely the wrong signal" to send to Moscow. But that is exactly what might happen, and it looks like the SALT II treaty will be drawn into a fight.

The allies, meanwhile, are growing restive about the probable demise of SALT II. Like some critics here at home, many West European diplomats, politicians and commentators are concerned the decision could accelerate a superpower arms race.

Regan Tiring

WASHINGTON — Although Donald T. Regan has achieved rare control at the White House as chief of staff, he is showing signs of fatigue, leading friends to doubt that he will finish President Reagan's second term.

"You've got to remember," one senior staffer told us, "he doesn't work the same schedule as the president." While Reagan at 75 is famous for short hours and afternoon naps, his chief of staff at 68 puts in grueling 12-hour days. His wife, according to fellow aides, is not anxious for him to finish the full Reagan tenure.

That raises the possibility that Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker might outlast Regan. Volcker's second term as head of the central bank expires in July 1987, and it has been made clear that he will not get a third hitch if Regan is still around as chief of staff.

Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole is ready to break his no-amendment pact on the tax reform bill by bowing to pressure from the pro-life lobby and voting for an amendment removing tax exemptions from any organization performing abortions.

The amendment by Sens. Bill Armstrong of Colorado and Gordon Humphrey of New Hampshire posed a dilemma for presidential prospect Dole. The normally pro-life Dole is backing Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood in fighting all tax reform amendments.

But alliance with militantly pro-choice Packwood against the Armstrong-Humphrey amendment would have been difficult for Dole when he addresses the National Right-to-Life Convention which assembles in Denver June 12-14. Told by pro-lifers that he might as well cancel his speech if he does not support the amendment, he let anti-abortion forces in Kansas know he would vote for it.

Sources close to Gov. Mario Cuomo say New York Senate candidate Mark Green bought big trouble during last week's state Democratic convention when he referred to the governor as an organ-grinder.

"Forget what the monkeys say," social activist lawyer Green told a television interviewer, referring to Cuomo's aides. "The organ grinder says he's neutral (in the Senate race)." Green lost the party designation for the Senate to businessman John Dyson, but is given a good shot at beating him in the Sept. 9 primary.

Although a Green spokesman denied any intended ethnic slur, a Cuomo insider asked of us: "Have you ever heard of a Jewish organ grinder? An Irish grinder? This won't be forgotten in Albany." That could be sticky if Green ends up as party nominee against Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato.

When President Reagan blessed Rep. Jim Broyhill at North Carolina's biggest-ever Republican fund-raiser last week, the fly in the ointment was the absence of two staunch allies of conservative Sen. Jesse Helms.

Helms himself was all smiles, making clear he backs Broyhill strongly against Democratic ex-governor Terry Sanford. But his longtime allies, Tom Ellis and Carter Wrenn, stayed away. They are chief operatives of the Congressional Club, a prolific fund-raising organization which has run Helms' campaigns.

Party insiders say the Senate nomination battle won by Broyhill over conservative former ambassador David Funderburk damaged relations between Helms and the Congressional Club. Helms stayed neutral, but Ellis and Wrenn backed loser Funderburk.

The standing of Secretary of State George Shultz's closest Mideast aide, legal adviser Abe Sofaer, has slipped in the past few weeks because of his inability to settle the bitter Taba dispute between Israel and Egypt, and the latest results of the Pollard spy case.

Shultz surprised aides by sending Sofaer, a former U.S. district judge in New York, to mediate the Taba dispute. Sofaer returned without a settlement, as have many other mediators.

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — Despite President Reagan's contention that U.S. underground nuclear testing is vital to the nation's security, a majority of Americans favor a ban on further U.S. tests if the Soviet Union continues its test moratorium, which began last August.

In the latest Gallup Poll, 56 percent feel the U.S. should go along with the Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing, while 35 percent disagree and 9 percent are undecided. Americans of all political persuasions support a bilateral agreement, though Republicans' views are more evenly divided than are those of Democrats and independents.

Other factors also influence public opinion on the issue. College graduates, for example, support the proposed halt to further U.S. weapons tests by a 2-to-1 ratio, 65 percent to 31 percent. Southerners are closely divided, with 44 percent in favor and 42 percent opposed, while persons living ouside the South strongly favor the proposal, 61 percent to 32 percent.

The survey, however, found no evidence that Americans are ready to abandon the strong military posture fostered by the Reagan Administration since its inception. As in previous surveys, a plurality currently believes the U.S. falling behind the Soviet Union in nuclear weaponry would increase the chances of nuclear war more than would continuation of the arms race between the superpowers.

Somewhat greater political polarization is found on this question than on the proposal for a bilateral test ban, with substantially more Republicans than either Democrats or independents citing U.S. nuclear inferiority as a potentially greater threat to world peace.

The latest results are based on in-person interviews with 1,552 adults, 18 and older, conducted in over 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation during the period April 11-14. For results based on samples of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be 3 percentage points in either direction.

Contraceptives

RALEIGH — A Department of Human Resources decision to ban the distribution and prescription of contraceptives in school-based pregnancy prevention programs may be on the brink of being overturned by the General Assembly.

Last year, the Legislature budgeted $960,000 for pilot teen-age pregnancy and premature birth prevention programs that, if successful, could be copied around the state. North Carolina has long had a serious problem with teen-age pregnancy. Teens were the mothers of 17 percent of the children born in the state in 1984, and they had 31 percent of the abortions performed in the state that year.

When DHR issued the rules that would govern the pilot programs, in-school clinics were told that they would not be allowed to dispense or prescribe contraceptives. That rule did not pertain to other programs which were based outside of schools.

In issuing that rule, DHR may have eliminated the most effective teen-age pregnancy reduction tool available. Programs in other parts of the United States have experienced dramatic drops in pregnancy rates when contraceptives are made available through the schools.

During hearings on the 1987 budget, the Appropriations Committee on Human Resources was told that DHR promulgated that rule on its own. An advisory board of legislators and professionals involved in pregnancy prevention had been established along with the appropriation. That board had not recommended the ban on school contraceptives.

That disclosure set off another clash between the Legislature and the administration of Gov. Jim Martin. But this clash wasn't typical because the complaining legislator was a Republican.

Rep. Charles Cromer, R-Davidson, a member of the advisory board, said local schools should have the right to decide for themselves if a pregnancy prevention program will dispense contracecptives.

Citing the successes of programs in Jackson, Miss., and Cleveland, Ohio, Cromer said, "We need to address the issue and give some direction to (DHR Secretary Phil Kirk) that the wish of the General Assembly is that if the (local) school board wants to give birth control, it is permissible."

Cromer found immediate support among his fellow legislators. Rep. Ann Duncan, R-Forsyth, also a member of the advisory board, nodded her head through his entire presentation, adding details at points.

Rep. Ruth Easterlilng, D-Mecklenburg, said the DHR rule "puts all the burden on that young girl to say no, and there has to be some option if she can't say no."

Readers Oppose Education Deletions

To the editor:

At a time when school systems across North Carolina and the nation have realized the need to budget more money for education, the Pitt County Board of Commissioners has taken an alarming stand. On May 28, the board tentatively cut the Board of Education's requests in several areas.

First, the proposed capital outlay budget for the upcoming year was cut; this decision will adversely affect both teachers and students in the area of supplies and materials.

The money requested to increase teacher supplements from the present 1.25 percent of a teacher's salary to 1.75 percent was also deleted. Ironically, Pitt County and Greenville city teachers presently rank number 80 and 81 out of 97 levels of supplemental pay in the state. This low supplemental rank in one of the largest school systems in North Carolina is disheartening to current teachers and is a tremendous obstacle in recruiting teachers.

Also deleted was the money requested to fund the "extra pay for extra duty" proposal and the arts-physical education-guidance equalization plan. The dedicated professionals who oversee extracurricular activities are grossly underpaid, with most averaging far less than minimum wage for their extra hours. Furthermore, extracurricular activities develop character in students through sports, clubs and other programs.

Teachers, administrators, parents, concerned citizens and students must unite to convince our commissioners that the proposed cuts in the budget for the public schools are detrimental to education in Pitt County. The quality of the educational process and the financial backing for the teachers who instruct our youth deserve the utmost support from the commissioners. Excellence in education is a commitment Pitt County must be willing to make.

Rose Marie Sherman, Heidi Lane and other concerned teachers
D.H. Conley High School

To the editor:

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners, according to your May 29 article, put a "... quick ax to budget proposals." Key among those proposals was a modest increase in Pitt County teacher supplements, an increase that would, at best, do no more than put Pitt County on a par with the systems it is in direct competition with.

I am a parent, a teacher and a life-time resident of Pitt County. From all three of my perspectives, the commissioners' actions worry me. Some would charge my concerns are dollar-motivated, but I assure you my critics would be wrong. The proposed increase in the supplement would average about $125 per year, a sum so miniscule that it would be guaranteed to make no noticeable change in any teacher's lifestyle.

Simply put, the issue is not money — it's the lack of commitment. Our commissioners had a chance to take a stand for quality education in Pitt County. Instead, they decided to sit; to sit on the side of complacency, to sit on the side of apathy, to sit on the side of mediocrity.

Our commissioners can defend themselves to the public with talk of federal cut backs and decreasing property tax revenues. These problems must be faced by all of us, but they must not become an excuse for our local government to skimp on its No. 1 job, educating our children. Now is the time for Pitt County and the commissioners to show their support for education in Pitt County. How much commitment would be shown if the commissioners waited until more prosperous times, which may never come, to increase the supplement? Supporting teachers now will give Pitt County a chance to show where its true priorities are. Please join me in urging our commissioners to make our children their No. 1 priority.

On June 11 the Hazardous Waste Clean Up Bill (HB 795) probably will be considered by the Senate Committee on Human Resources. In 1985, the N.C. House passed it 95-4.

If passed, HB 795 will give the N.C. Solid and Hazardous Waste Management Branch of the Department of Human Resources the power to order the companies that produce hazardous wastes to clean up the dump sites. If they refuse, the state will have the authority to clean up the sites and sue the responsible firms to recover costs. Owners of dump sites will be required to record each one with the county register of deeds as a warning to future owners of the property.

Over 600 inactive and abandoned hazardous waste sites are scattered across North Carolina. Sixteen are in Pitt County. We are fortunate that our own Tom Taft is a member of the Senate Committee on Human Resources, the next hurdle for HB 795.

Representatives of North Carolina's 16 Sierra Club groups will be on hand next week when the committee convenes and will underscore the organization's support for HB 795. Contact Senator Taft now and urge him to vote for this important environmental legislation.

To the editor:

On May 25 I had a letter printed in The Daily Reflector's Public Forum column concerning the Greenville Utilities and their turnover to the city of $1.59 million.

I just thought that the citizens of Pitt County would like to know that, as of June 4, I have failed to hear from the city or the Greenville Utilities on this matter.

Makes one think that once people attain a position in government that they don't really care about the average citizen.

As I stated in my first letter, I would welcome some explanation from someone as to how the city can collect money from people in the county and not have to answer as to how it is spent.

To the editor:

June is Boating Safety Month.

There are more than 16 million pleasure boats in use in the United States. Thousands of boating accidents occur each year and hundreds are killed and thousands are injured.

The most common cause of boating deaths is drowning. Drownings are usually caused when a boat capsizes or the person is boating alone and falls over while not wearing a life preserver. Overcrowding of the boat is the most common reason for a boat to capsize.

Be sure you do not "load" up your boat. The use of alcohol while operating a boat is as dangerous as drinking while operating any other type of motor vehicle.

Life preservers should be worn at all times while boating. The most common type of life preserver is known as Type 3 — or the vest type. Another is Type 1, which will turn an unconscious person over onto his back. The other type is Type 4, the throwable under-the-seat cushion type. This final life preserver, however, should never be used as a seat because sitting on them destroys their buoyancy. Life preservers should fit the person, whether child or adult.

It is important that you check your boat before you go out to make sure that it is in good running order, that you have plenty of fuel, a serviceable fire extinguisher, and emergency equipment.

Boating is fun. The Safety Committee of the Pitt County Association of Insurance Women encourages you to "keep it that way."

To the editor:

I was reading the paper and I ran across a story, "Speed Suspect in Bus Wreck! 18 People Die."

In the month of May, Greenville had many accidents. I think something should be done. There are too many wrecks. I feel this way because I'm a student and I ride a bus. I feel a lot of wrecks are caused by carelessness. I see drivers racing, going over the speed limit, not stopping when they are supposed to. I'm a taxpayer and I feel I should not have to pay my money to someone who may hurt me or kill me because of their careless driving.

To the editor:

Until today I had thought that, since I am "for peace" in Nicaragua, I must simply "be against" U.S. assistance to the Contras. But I have read "Nicaragua: The Sandinistas Have Gagged and Bound Us." The item is written by Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, archbishop of Managua, and is in the May 26 edition of the Washington Post National Weekly.

The archbishop tells of press censorship, confiscation of a church-owned printing press, seizure by state security police of files and baptismal records and seizures of the only Catholic radio station in the country.

However, the archbishop and his colleagues do not call for Congress to support the Contras. Rather, they make this plea: the conference of bishops has stated that it is against any outside interference, whether by the United States or the Soviet Union. "Foreign powers are taking advantage of our situation to promote economic and ideological exploitation ... without respect for our persons, our history and our right to determine our own destiny. ..." To choose annihiliation of the enemy as the only possible way to peace is inevitably to choose war."

While the bishops have tried to communicate these ideas to the people of Nicaragua, the state-controlled media have "suppressed" their statements.

The archbishop makes it clear that he is between a rock and a hard place and not free to say all that is on his mind; for to do so, he would be persecuted as a traitor. He makes it clear that there is no democracy or real freedom in his country.

Reading between the lines, he is asking for withdrawal of all foreign troops, advisers, etc. I believe he is also saying the U.S. can't help by supporting the Contras. Rather, I believe he may be saying "Help us," but through diplomatic means, not by war. If negotiation is the desired route, I believe Nicaragua's neighbors are the logical ones to carry the ball and the U.S. should support, not try to dictate, the content of any negotiations.

Church Honors Erma Carr With Two Scholarships

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Two scholarships were given in honor of a member of the Greenville-Pitt consolidated school board Friday at the Sheraton.

Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church honored school board member Erma Carr by giving two $500 scholarships in her name. "We've been giving the scholarship since 1982," said Rebecca Oates of the church. "This is the first year that we named the scholarship."

The idea originated with the young adult group of the church, she said.

"It's for minority students," Ms. Oates said. "We open it up to every high school senior in Pitt County."

The scholarship is based on the student's need, she said.

Seniors receiving the Erma Staplefoote Carr Scholarship this year were Regina Barrett and Donna Pierce, both of Rose High School. Ms. Barrett will attend North Carolina State University and Ms. Pierce will attend Elizabeth City State College in the fall.

Mrs. Carr's name was chosen for the scholarships because of her community service activities, Ms. Oates said.

Mrs. Carr was a member of the Greenville city school board; she is president of the local chapter of the Retired Teachers' Association, and she served on the basic education program of the Department of Public Instruction.

A member of Cornerstone church, Mrs. Carr is chairwoman of the deaconess board and is the financial secretary. She also is active with the Greenville Industrial-Eppes High School Alumni Association and the North Carolina Central University Alumni Association, Ms. Oates said.

Blue Law Hearing Scheduled Monday

The Greenville City Council has scheduled a public hearing for Monday at 7 p.m. in the third floor council chambers at City Hall to receive comments from citizens on a proposal to revise the city's Blue Law, which went into effect in 1966.

The proposed revision would allow stores that are not permitted to operate on Sundays under the present ordinance to open at 1 p.m. The revision prohibits those stores from "selling, offering or exposing for sale any goods, wares or merchandise" in the city between 1 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Sunday.

City Manager Gail Meeks said a brief introduction and explanation of the proposal Monday will be followed by comments from citizens.

"A public meeting has been declared, and each person who wants to speak will be asked to limit their comments to five minutes," Ms. Meeks said.

Residents who share a common point of view are asked to appoint a spokesperson, according to Ms. Meeks.

"The mayor has requested that groups with the same opinions have a spokesperson speak for them," she said.

Council members have agreed to vote on the issue at the conclusion of the hearing.

Scrap The Sessions?

RALEIGH (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan says the Legislature should consider scrapping its biennial short sessions because they are drifting further away from their original purpose.

"I like the idea, and I think we should look at it," Jordan told reporters Friday after the House and Senate met briefly and adjourned for the second consecutive day without taking substantive action.

Jordan said the Legislature originally began meeting in even-numbered years to adjust the biennial budget, which is enacted during regular sessions in odd-numbered years. But he said short sessions have become abbreviated versions of regular sessions, with virtually any issue eligible for consideration.

Road Funding Bill Ready

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin's $210 million highway funding plan is ready for introduction, and the Legislature's two top Republicans have launched their uphill struggle to sell it to skeptical Democrats.

The 34-page "Future Roads Act" was filed on Friday by Rep. Betsy Cochrane, R-Davie, minority leader of the House, and Senate Minority Leader Bill Redman, R-Iredell. The measure will be introduced Monday night.

Mrs. Cochrane discussed the plan privately with House Speaker Liston Ramsey, while Redman met with Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan. Both GOP leaders said the Democrats promised the program fair consideration.

"I was pleased," Redman said. "I think there may be room for compromise, and ... that's refreshing."

Among the measure's provisions are a $2^3/_4$ cents per gallon increase in the motor fuels tax, creation of a trust fund from which local governments could borrow money to pay for transportation programs, transfer of the highway patrol and driver education programs from the highway fund to the general fund, and measures that would make it easier to obtain rights-of-way for road projects.

Democratic leaders have attacked the proposed funding transfers, saying they would raid the general fund of money needed for education and other programs. Martin says Republican legislators won't go along with the tax increase without the transfers.

BUS WRECK — Rescue workers tend to some of the 35 students injured Friday — the last day of school — when their school bus overturned in Winston-Salem. The Highway Patrol said the driver of the bus had disciplined some of the students moments before the accident and went through the intersection at an unsafe speed. (AP Laserphoto)

Driver Upset Over Rowdy Students Misses Curve; Bus Flips, Hits Tree

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A driver's frustration with noisy elementary school kids might have led to an accident in which 35 students were injured when their school bus rounded a corner too fast, overturned and hit a tree, a Highway Patrolman says.

"It took me a few minutes to get it out of him," Trooper T.E. Carlton said of the driver, 16-year-old James Greg McCormick. "The kids were very rowdy. He told them if they didn't shut up he was gonna put that broom on them. He just took off and never slowed down for the yield sign."

None of the children, all pupils at Old Town Elementary School, was critically hurt in the accident Friday — the last day of school. Two students were admitted to Forsyth Memorial Hospital with fractures and were in stable condition, according to Jo Apple, nursing associate director at the hospital.

Four students were admitted to N.C. Baptist Hospital with fractures and cuts, said a spokeswoman, who wouldn't give her name. The spokeswoman declined to describe the student's conditions but said that the injuries were "nothing serious."

McCormick had been driving a school bus for three days after getting his school bus driver's license on April 14, Carlton said.

The children apparently were rowdy, and McCormick stopped the bus before the accident to try and calm them down. During the drive home, Ernest Frazier, 11, said McCormick stopped the bus about a block from the accident site. Frazier said McCormick brandished a broom and threatened to hit some of the children.

McCormick said he didn't intend to hurt anyone. "I was just picking at them, that's all," he said.

John Q. Brown lives at the corner where McCormick stopped the bus.

"They sat there about 15 minutes while he tried to get them calmed down," Brown said. "When he started off he just tore out and threw gravel all over the place. He was just going too fast."

Leanna Blackburn said she was making her bed in a back bedroom when the bus crashed in her front yard.

"I heard a calamity," Mrs. Blackburn said. "It sounded like a cyclone hit. When I came close to the big room, I saw what it was."

About 25 screaming, crying children came running toward her house.

"There were some of them bleeding terrible," Mrs. Blackburn said, clutching a bloody towel. "They was all screaming, trying to call their momma and dad."

Mrs. Blackburn gave the children towels and ice as they called their parents from her telephone. Her carport and front room were spattered with blood, some of it collecting in pools.

Later, Mrs. Blackburn looked around at the dozens of children lying hurt on her lawn and that of a neighbor's.

"I just praise the Lord I heard it and I could do what I could," she said.

USDA Considers Penny-Per-Pound Fee On Tobacco

CHADBOURN, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. Department of Agriculture is reviewing a proposal to charge flue-cured tobacco farmers a penny-per-pound assessment for their leaf to counter the federal Gramm-Rudman budget reduction law's impact on the tobacco program, federal officials said.

State officials submitted the proposal to the USDA last week on behalf of numerous tobacco organizations, said Dallas R. Smith, director of the U.S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service's tobacco and peanut division, the agency that administers the tobacco program.

Smith said in an interview Friday the idea had merit but that the department's lawyers were reviewing it to see whether the federal government had authority to collect the fee. The fee, which would be paid entirely by farmers, would be in addition to a no-net-cost assessment farmers have paid in recent years to underwrite the program.

The proposed penny fee — about $20 per acre of tobacco for the typical farmer — would make up for the 4.3 percent Gramm-Rudman reduction required in the payments farmers would otherwise receive for their tobacco acquired by the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp.

When a farmer cannot get above price-support levels on the open market, the cooperative acquires the leaf at the price support using government-backed loans and tries to sell the tobacco later.

Although Gramm-Rudman applies only to price supports paid for tobacco going into Stabilization, it would tend to lower prices overall in the market because the support price would be lower. This year's $1.44 average price support would net a grower about $1.38 after the 4.3 percent reduction — a 6-cent reduction.

"You could have a 6-cent drop in the market because of Gramm-Rudman," Fred G. Bond, manager of the Raleigh-based cooperative, told farmers gathered at Southeastern Community College to hear tobacco leaders discuss the program.

"We are looking at (a proposal for) a small assessment, say a penny, to pay for Gramm-Rudman — you'd spend a penny to save six," said Bond, one of the architects of the proposal.

Duke Draws Fire Over Divesture Stance

DURHAM (AP) — A Mobil Oil Corp. executive has resigned his advisory board position at Duke University's business school in protest of a decision by the school's trustees to divest the school of its South African-related holdings.

Also, a black businessman is threatening to resign in opposition of Duke's decision, which called for divestiture if the South African system of apartheid isn't dismantled by Dec. 31.

In a letter dated May 21 to Thomas F. Keller, dean of Duke's Fuqua School of Business, Mobil executive Rex D. Adams called the trustees' decision on May 3 an "exercise in cheap grace."

William J. Kennedy III, president and chief executive officer of N.C. Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Durham, said in a telephone interview that he hasn't talked with any South African blacks who have said U.S. companies should pull out of that country.

Kennedy said if U.S. companies leave South Africa, they immediately will be replaced by European and Japanese companies.

Duke has about $12.5 million invested in 11 companies that do business in South Africa, including Mobil, Texaco Inc. and International Business Machines Corp. The university's total endowment totals about $300 million.

Adams, Mobil's vice president for employee relations and a 1962 Duke graduate, said in a telephone interview Friday from his office in New York that he had resigned because he thought membership on the board represented "a conflict of interest for me as an officer of Mobil."

Mobil has been operating in South Africa since the turn of the century, Adams said, and employs about 3,000 South Africans, most of them black. He said Mobil had taken a stand against apartheid and had been working to improve the lives of South African blacks.

Adams pointed out that Mobil recently created a $20 million foundation to promote educational opportunities for blacks in South Africa.

He said he received a letter shortly after he resigned from Duke President H. Keith H. Brodie asking him to reconsider his decision to leave the board, which serves as the chief link between the Fuqua school and the business community. Adams said he had responded with a letter to Brodie protesting the trustees' implication that companies such as Mobil were supporting apartheid.

Kennedy said he supported Adams' contention that Mobil was helping to improve the plight of South African blacks. He said Mobil has gone beyond adherence to the Sullivan Principles, a set of guidelines that call for black South African workers to be treated the same as their white counterparts.

"They have completely integrated their facilities, they don't have separate rest rooms for blacks and whites, they have a large number of black supervisors," Kennedy said of Mobil. "I think they're taking a leadership role."

Amateur

GREENSBORO (AP) — Charles Bray's courtroom manner was so smooth, his closing arguments so polished and his surprise at being chastized so genuine that the Guilford County district attorney decided not to prosecute him for practicing law without a license.

Bray, a local real estate developer, said he didn't know he was breaking the law when he came to court with his elderly and handicapped stepfather and argued an assault case on his behalf.

"It was just something I got pulled into," he said.

It was only when several Greensboro defense attorneys reported that Bray was a stranger that the prosecutor decided to cross-examine his courtroom rival.

District Attorney Lamar Dowda said he will not prosecute Bray for practicing law without a license. But while Bray won that battle, he lost his case. His stepfather was convicted of misdemeanor assault and was put on probation.

PHYSICIANS WEIGHT LOSS CENTERS EXPANDS TO RALEIGH II

Centers Help Thousands

Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers expansion continues with a second location at the new Crosspointe Office building located near Creedmoor Crossings on highway #50 in northwest Raleigh. The grand opening day is set for May 27. The staff has been selected, trained and will be managed by Stephanie Crutchfield. Prior to coming with Physicians Weight Loss Centers, Ms. Crutchfield was a nurse at Wake County Medical Center in the Intermediate Care Nursery.

Since opening, the centers have helped several thousand N.C. residents. They have successfully lost literally tons of unwanted fat. More importantly, the centers have aided patients in keeping their weight under control.

The centers guarantee a weight loss of three to seven pounds per week if the patient follows the prescribed program. This means a person could lose between 42 and 98 pounds in a 14 week period. "This is a safe and realistic pace", explained Mock.

Anyone who has ever tried to lose weight would be skeptical of such promising figures; however, Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers have the proof to support their claims...their successful, happy patients. Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers are different. "We think we're so unique that we have no competition," related Ron Mock. "Our short term goals are realistic and attainable and more importantly our long term goals can be 'forever'...the rest of their life." We work with men and women, young and old...some with only a few unattractive pounds and others with severe medical problems that can only be cured by a loss of weight.

"Don't let me mislead you," Mock continued, "We're not 100%...but we're working hard to get there. Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers prices are very reasonable and often considered unbelieveable..depending, of course, on a person's disposable income. Once in a great while (maybe three times per year) we offer an unbelieveable discount such as now, during the opening of a new center."

Medical Staff Monitors Progress

"The program employs several diets which are calorie and carbohydrate restricted along with an adequate amount of protein, vegetables, fruits, and starches creating well balanced meals daily. The program teaches natural eating habits such as: eating out, social eating, church covered dish meals, or just eating at home with the family."

"A potential patient usually expects to be constantly hungry, maybe irritable and short of energy while losing their weight but this is not the case with our program," continued Mock.

Anyone considering a weight loss program or a diet of any type should first check out its safety. Medical supervision within the staff is a must and Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers have excellent credentials.

In the six centers, each is staffed with medical doctors, registered and/or licensed practical nurses, staff counselors, and a manager. There is close initial screening before a person is accepted in order to ascertain for sure that the program is correct for him/her.

Counselors Offer Support

Anyone who has ever attempted to lose weight knows what an extremely difficult task it can be. Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers can help make weight loss a more pleasant experience.

Along with medical supervision, the centers staff offers a great amount of support and encouragement to their patients. Staff members work very closely with each patient from the very beginning of the program.

They have a knowledge of the experience of a dieting person and they are able to understand and help their patients.

"If I may brag just a little," said Ron Mock, "our staff is the greatest. They will never give up on anyone. The support, guidance and encouragement is essential for an effective weight loss. There seems to be a mutual admiration between our patients and our staff."

Weight Loss CAN Be Forever

Most people are overweight due to bad eating habits which have become ingrained over the years. Eating to soothe anger or depression, eating at a set time every day or eating just because the food happens to be in sight are all habits which can cause weight problems. Many people may not even realize these habits exist.

For many people losing weight is not the hard part. Keeping those pounds away is where many dieters fail. Anyone can lose weight but unless good eating habits are established during the weight loss, chances are the weight will return. Helping overweight patients eat and think like a slender person is one of the primary goals of the Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers.

Physicians WEIGHT LOSS Centers stress that a person should set short term, reasonable goals for weight loss.

After following their diet plan, a period of calorie adjustment follows which stabilizes the body's weight. In addition, a full one year maintenance schedule is established and encouraged.

In the year that follows, if over three pounds are gained, Physicians WEIGHT LOSS wants to see that patient back, at no additional charge. The counselors will help the patient lose these few pounds before any more weight is gained.

MISSING MAIL — Exterminator Mike Minquez of Raleigh holds letters he found last month in a customer's attic. The letters — 200 or more — were from World War II soldiers bound to Europe aboard an unidentified ship in 1944. The mail was never delivered, but postal officials say they will attempt to do so now. (AP Laserphoto)

Wartime Letters Found In Attic

RALEIGH (AP) — They were World War II soldiers on a ship bound for the theaters of battle in 1944, but no one knew of their hardships because the letters they wrote didn't get delivered back then.

But those letters may be reaching their destination after all because a Raleigh exterminator has found them in the attic of a customer.

"These are not just normal letters," said R. Michael Minguez, who came across the mail bag. "These are almost the last will and testament for some of those guys."

Despite hesitation over reliquishing the letters, Minguez said he was assured by the U.S. Postal Service that the letters would get to their appointed destinations.

"I'd like to see them get where they were going," he said. "There's the potential for something really neat happening here."

Wartime censorship was evident, said Becki Hagood, a co-worker of Minguez who read the opened letters. The ship's name, its destination and any information about its passengers was kept secret.

"'Somewhere in the Atlantic' is all they say," she said. "I assume they were in the Army, because they're on a ship and they're unfamiliar with a ship. They're getting seasick."

The open letters are dated between May 9 and May 21, 1944, just a few weeks before the D-Day invasion of Europe.

Usually, Minguez minds his own business. But he couldn't help but look inside the mail bag when he found it. The letters were V-Mail, or Victory Mail — unstamped letters from U.S. servicemen in World War II.

A young relative of the homeowner apparently was appointed to take the bag to a post office while on shore leave, Minguez said. The details are obscure, but the young man failed to carry out his task and, out of fear of reprisal, the bag collected dust in the attic.

Minguez became self-appointed guardian of the letters, but hesitated to turn them over to postal officials, fearing they would end up in the dead letter office.

While he kept the letters, Minguez fought the urge to break the seals on the envelopes. But a half-dozen that had already been opened were irresistible.

"These guys didn't know where they were going," he said. "The only thing they really knew was everything that was near and dear to them was being left farther and farther and farther behind. All the things they never got to say, all their hopes and desires and dreams, all the things they took for granted — all that came spilling out in the letters."

The letters were addressed to nearly every state, but most were headed for Texas, California and New York.

J.S. Pochis, manager of retail sales for the postal service in Raleigh, said the chances of locating the intended recipients 42 years later are slim. But he said each letter will be sent to the postmaster of the city to which it is addressed. A letter of explanation, a press release and a plea to make extra efforts to find the recipients will accompany each package.

He said the discovery of an entire bag of mail probably sets a record.

"When we move equipment, we might find a stray piece of mail here and there," Pochis said. "But nothing like this."

Post Office Clerks Charged

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Two Laurinburg post office clerks were charged Friday with gambling on federal property after a 16-month undercover operation by the U.S. Postal Service and FBI, officials said.

David Curtis Evans Jr., 34, and James Willie Rush, 44, both of Laurinburg, each were charged with five counts of gambling on federal property, most often placing bets on sports events, especially professional basketball, FBI agent Robert Pence said.

Judicial Elections Challenged

RALEIGH (AP) — A Greensboro attorney has asked a three-judge panel to halt November elections in four judicial districts and to hold Attorney General Lacy Thornburg and Elections Board Chairman Robert Hunter in contempt for trying to hold the races.

C. Allen Foster's request Friday in U.S. District Court was the latest round in a 1984 federal lawsuit challenging the way Superior Court elections are held in North Carolina. The dispute has delayed judicial primaries across much of the state.

"We stand ready to work with the defendants to settle this case," Foster said. "I have consistently offered to sit down with the attorney general and members of the legislative leadership, and they have shown no signs of any willingness to reach a compromise. I can't understand it."

In a lawsuit filed on behalf of Greensboro Republican Terry Haith, numbered or designated seats and staggered terms have been targeted as election methods that dilute minority voting strength, making it nearly impossible to elect a black or a Republican to the Superior Court.

Most recently, the U.S. Justice Department approved special Superior Court elections in several judicial districts but specifically barred such an election in Guilford County.

Foster is arguing that four other judicial districts are no different from the one in Guilford County and that no elections should be allowed for Superior Court seats covering Carteret, Craven, Pamlico, Pitt, Duplin, Jones, Onslow, Sampson, Greene, Lenoir, Wayne, Cumberland and Hoke counties.

Superior Court elections have been delayed indefinitely in Guilford County as a result of the staggered-term issue, which has not been resolved. Three of the four Superior Court seats in the county are on the ballot this year, which the post held by Senior Resident Judge W. Douglas Albright is not on the ballot until 1990. By holding an open primary for three local seats and excluding the fourth, Albright's post would become a designated seat — a problem state election officials have tried to remedy with an open election.

By forcing Albright to run four years before his term expires, state election officials would violate constitutional provisions setting judicial terms.

Foster argues that the four other judicial districts are similar to Guilford County in that one or more seats are up for election in 1986 but another seat in the same district is not open until 1990 or 1992.

Foster also argues that holding elections in districts that have staggered terms perpetuates designated seats and staggered terms.

IN THE STATE

ESC Leave

RALEIGH (AP) — Employment Security Commission employees, who were told in May they might be asked to take leaves without pay to make up for budget shortfalls, will no longer be required to do so, officials say.

ESC Chairman David Flaherty told the staff last week in a memo that funding alternatives and cooperation in cutting costs made it possible to avoid the mandatory leaves. The ESC will receive up to $200,000 from the U.S. Department of Labor before Sept. 30 and has gotten more flexibility in managing cash flow due to changes in department regulations, Flaherty said.

Employees had been told of a potential $700,000 budget deficit by Sept. 30 and were asked to choose between a layoff of up to 255 employees or up to five days of unpaid leave to correct the problem. Of the more than 1,500 employees who responded, 87.6 percent chose leave without pay, 12.3 percent chose a reduction in the work force and 0.1 percent expressed no preference.

Mother

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — A woman who killed her son in April acted in self defense, a Gaston County District Court judge has ruled.

Judge Berlin Carpenter found no probable cause to try Lena May Baker, 40, on charges of second-degree murder. Mrs. Baker's son, Eddie Ray Britt, 20, died at his mother's mobile home April 26 after being shot once in the chest with a small-caliber pistol. He had been living with his grandmother outside Stanley at the time.

Assistant District Attorney George Hill said testimony indicated Britt had slashed at his mother with a knife before the woman shot him.

"It's almost perfect self-defense," Hill said.

Life Sentences

MARION, N.C. (AP) — A Forest City man and his son have each received two life sentences after being convicted of raping a 20-year-old Rutherford County woman in February 1985.

Thomas Odell Carson Sr., 41, and Thomas O. Carson Jr., 23, of Asheville were convicted of first-degree rape and first-degree sexual offense Thursday by a McDowell County jury.

Superior Court Judge Robert Kirby Friday sentenced the elder Carson to two consecutive life sentences, which would make him eligible for parole in about 40 years, said District Attorney Allen Leonard. The younger Carson got two concurrent life sentences, making him eligible for parole in about 20 years.

The victim testified she was hitchhiking from Swannanoa to Rutherford County after her date abandoned her on Interstate 40. She said the Carsons picked her up and then attacked her.

Both men denied seeing her or assaulting her.

Methodists

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. (AP) — Following nearly one hour of debate Saturday, Western North Carolina United Methodists adopted a nine-point resolution that calls for a "comprehensive" nuclear test ban.

The resolution also supports consolidation of existing bilateral treaties, encourages negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union and opposes efforts to achieve nuclear superiority.

The resolution was passed by 2,183 delegates at the conference, which ends Sunday.

The common thread in these examples — the Southern accent.

Maligned by some, adored by others, the familiar drawls and y'alls that befuddle non-Southerners have become a highly visible symbol of the South at a time when things uniquely Southern seem to be disappearing quickly.

But if natives fear the Southern accent is fading, University of South Carolina English Professor Michael Montgomery provides soothing news.

It just ain't so, Bubba.

The television generation has not grown up to sound like the evening newsmen, Barbara Walters or even Captain Kangaroo. Teen-agers "coming up" in the South today are likely to sound like Southerners, not Valley girls and boys, said Montgomery, who's written a chapter on Southern speech for the soon-to-be-published "Encyclopedia of Southern Culture."

"This theory that television will make us all sound the same attributes far more credence to television news readers than I think exists," said Montgomery, a Tennessee native who has studied Southern speech for 12 years.

In fact, rural residents — whom the English professor figures watch more television than the average city dweller because they have fewer entertainment options — have thicker accents than city residents. But Southern cities, which Montgomery says have been "invaded by a professional class," are not the place to hunt down a lilting Southern accent anyway.

Well if television doesn't influence our speech, what does?

At the top of the list are peers, Montgomery said.

Generally, children speak more like their peers than their parents, Montgomery said. Therefore, the kid from Ohio who just moved down the block will likely grow up talking like a native Southerner — rather than like his Cleveland-born parents.

In addition to peer influence, speech is affected by one's degree of education, social pretention and certain psychological factors, most relating to self-image. For example, Montgomery asked, "Whom do you wish to be identified with? Do you have regional pride?"

Regional pride, however, is a funny thing. While most Southerners wince and curse those who portray their speech as slow and therefore stupid, some wish they could erase the "Southern-ness" from their speech.

But erasing your background isn't so easy. Said Montgomery, "Many people mistakenly believe there is an accentless version of American speech that will make them sound as if they're from nowhere." But, he noted with a smile, "Quite frankly, I don't know anyone who wants to be from nowhere."

Southerners, however, have long been able to use two different levels of speech, depending on the audience or the situation. There's the rather tame version used on big-city types and a second, unedited version reserved for the folks down home.

"We use the language of our nurture when we're talking to people from down home," he added. "We definitely use our speech to indicate our allegiances, our attachments.

It's Now 'Miami Nice'

Cabbies Get Mandatory Instruction In Politeness

By SANDRA JARAMILLO
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — For those who think "courteous cabbies" is a contradiction in terms, meet "Miami Nice."

Ten months since courtesy classes became mandatory for all of the city's new taxi drivers and those renewing their licenses, rave reviews are being heard, from the tourists to the drivers, about the campaign to make sure that a visitor's first experience in Miami is riding with a taxi driver who is as warm as the weather.

"It definitely has had an impact on the drivers," said John Jurich, operations manager for Yellow Cab, one of the area's three largest taxi cab companies. "Since the inception of 'Miami Nice,' the commendations I've received have increased by about 500 percent — I'm not joking."

Jurich at first doubted that any classes directed at improving attitudes and appearances would work, but he said the three-hour class has been well-received by most of the drivers.

A key to the program has been persuading cab drivers that they don't have to follow an image of being gruff loners.

"Our image worldwide is a John Wayne-type," said Robert Puente, secretary of the Dade County Taxi Drivers Association. "We need something like that (the program) for people who deal with the public."

"People kind of live up to stereotypes," said Dr. Roy Langer, a communications consultant for St. Thomas University and one of the program's three instructors. "If you call somebody rude, they are going to be rude. What we have to do is break that stereotype wide open."

Puente said there has been "tremendous interest" in the course, which teaches cabbies about courtesy, grooming, defensive driving and protecting themselves from would-be robbers and gives them a short history and geography lesson about the county.

Many cab drivers have voluntarily attended the classes even before they would be required to by the Metro-Dade County Commission rules set out last year.

So far, more than 1,700 cab drivers have been graduated from the officially named Miami Nice Hospitality Service Program based at St. Thomas University of Villanova since classes started in July 1985, said director Jonna Mulvey.

Dade County kicked in $90,000 for the classes and American Express $20,000 while St. Thomas coordinated the program.

The money contributed by the county will take the program through September when more funds will "likely" be set aside for the classes to continue, said J.R. Fernandez, chief of the Metro-Dade Transportation Administration Regulatory Branch.

Since the "Miami Nice" classes started, Fernandez said, there has been a significant drop in customer complaints and citations being given to the drivers.

A county report showed that during the first half of 1985, 150 compliants were filed about driver behavior, including abusiveness and overcharging. This year, there have been 31 complaints, a decline of nearly 80 percent. Also, there has been a 70 percent decline in citations for drivers having a poor appearance, Fernandez said.

According to Ms. Mulvey, instructors attempt to break the cabbies of bad habits and "make them more aware of their performance...as far as doing special little things for people," during the one three-hour session drivers must attend. And, she says the focus is not just on drivers making more money in tips, but TIPS — To Insure Professional Service.

"The enthusiasm for the drivers is really tremendous," Ms. Mulvey said.

"Miami Nice" instructors, including a communications expert who uses a dummy named Mickey Malarkey for role-playing, a Broward County deputy sheriff, and a Florida history expert who teaches in St. Thomas' tourism divison, rely on a lot of humor to get their point across, Ms. Mulvey said.

"Evidently it's been working," said Langer. "We're getting an excellent response from the tourist as well as the native from here in Miami."

Southern Baptists Gather For Showdown

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Embattled Southern Baptists are primed for a key round in their long, factional struggle over control of the nation's largest Protestant denomination.

Some have dubbed their gathering here this week, in their native territory, the "second battle of Atlanta," alluding to that first one in the Civil War when the tide turned and Union forces smashed through Georgia.

This time, the issue was a book, the Bible, with the opposing camps taking different approaches to it, each pressing for supremacy over the denomination's far-flung institutional affairs.

An unprecedented throng of "messengers," as they're called — about 50,000 or more — were expected for their convention here in the Peach State where they first organized 141 years ago.

Back then, the Southern Baptist Convention was a strictly Southern body, but now the 14.4 million members constitute America's largest Protestant denomination. They are second only to the 52 million Roman Catholics.

Numerous preliminary meetings went on this weekend and continue through Monday, including gatherings of pastors, music and campus ministers, educators and women, before convention business sessions start Tuesday.

Behind the anticipated record turnout at the Georgia World Congress Center was the fight over institutional dominance, rumbling for eight years and now at a pivotal stage.

"The interest level in the convention is the highest it has ever been," says the Rev. Fred Wolfe of Mobile, Ala., chairman of the order-of-business committee. "That is good. I just hate it that controversy had to bring us here."

He says "people have strong, strong, strong feelings about what is going on in the convention ... Both sides have strong convictions and both love the convention and want to see it be what God wants it to be."

Locked in conflict were a fundamentalist sector, insisting on a strictly literalistic view of Scripture, and a moderate wing, taking a broader approach, open to varying interpretations.

The political point of contention was election of the convention president, whose vast appointive powers exert ultimately commanding sway over the denomination's 26 national agencies and seminaries.

Fundamentalists have won that top post for seven years in a row, and through it, attained increasing strength among gradually rotated trustees who run the institutions.

A victory by fundamentalists this time was seen as virtually assuring their control of denominational operations in which moderate trustees long have held majorities, now whittled to a narrow edge.

The convention "is the most important ever," says the Rev. Paige Patterson of Dallas, a leader of fundamentalists, saying success of their movement hinges on the outcome.

Another fundamentalist leader, Houston Judge Paul Pressler, says "the cancer" of liberal views of the Bible still is to be eliminated.

However, a moderate leader, the Rev. Roy L. Honeycutt, president of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., says allowing diverse approaches to Scripture is the "Baptist heritage" and adds:

"Only divine omniscience can disclose whether and at what precise time Southern Baptists will reject the heresy of radical fundamentalism ... The fact that the future is still uncertain gives hope."

With the denomination's course hinging on the presidency, fundamentalists are backing a former winner, the Rev. Adrian Rogers of Memphis, Tenn., who previously won the office in 1979 and served one year.

That was the start of the string of fundamentalist victories.

Moderates are backing the Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, Texas, highly conservative in his approach to Scripture but who upholds the right of believers to interpret it as they see it.

That's an old Baptist principle — what's called "soul competency" of individuals in understanding Scripture.

The incumbent president, the Rev. Charles Stanley, a fundamentalist standard-bearer, has served two terms and is ineligible under the constitution for a third.

His rulings and appointments have been a continuing storm center, with current vice presidents charging he ignored their suggestions and made committee appointments "not representative of Southern Baptists."

Denominational bylaws say the president will make appointments "in consultation" with the two vice presidents, but doesn't say he has to abide by their advice.

Stanley's parliamentary tactics last year also triggered a lawsuit charging he violated democratic practice by overruling a majority convention vote. A federal district judge declined to rule on the case, saying it was an internal church matter, not in the government's purview. The case is being appealed.

During the past year, a denominational peace committee has been at work, trying to allay the general infighting, but says it has continued in destructive ways.

It "creates distrust, diminishes our ability to do missions and evangelism, is detrimental to our influence and impedes our ability to serve the Lord," the committee said after a May meeting.

"Some spokesman on both sides of the political spectrum have used intemperate, inflammatory and unguarded language," the committee said, used "prejorative terms" and "attributed improper motives to people with whom they disagree."

The 22-member committee, made up of representatives of both sides in the conflict and headed by the Rev. Charles Fuller of Roanoke, Va., is due to report its recommendations to the convention.

He says "the problems we have confronted as a convention for the past several years are, by and large, still there."

Battle Over Conservatism Spills Into Seminaries

Defending The Faith ... Or Destroying It?

At the heart of the fundamentalist-moderate feud within the Southern Baptist Convention is an argument over who Southern Baptists are and what they believe. The keepers of those definitions, in large part, are the six SBC seminaries, where many of the professors are theologically opposed to the fundamentalists now in control of the denomination's workings. Their position has prompted charges of heresy from fundamentalists, who have sought greater control over what the seminaries teach. In the absence of that control, many fundamentalists have come to rely on an independent string of seminaries to produce their pastors.

By RAAD CAWTHON
Cox News Service

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — In the battle now being waged for the hearts and particularly the souls of America's 14.4 million Southern Baptists, this riverside town, once known for its sassy blues and the fleshpot street named Beale, has moved to the front lines.

Here, out Poplar Avenue a couple of miles east of Memphis' nest of downtown high-rises, sits Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary. At Mid-America, inside the walls of the neat, well-tended campus, young men are being trained as ministers in the Southern Baptist faith, trained in the doctrine that the Bible is the "verbally inspired Word of God, wholly without error as originally given by God."

It is nearly certain, through courses ranging from systematic theology to Christian ethics, that all of Mid-America's student body, which now numbers 373, will leave here with a firm hold on the doctrine of "inerrancy," the cornerstone of the fundamentalist Baptist philosophy.

"We are conservative," says Dr. B. Gray Allison, the founder and president of Mid-America. "We do not hide that fact. As a school we are conservative and personally I am probably even more conservative."

But having said that, Allison takes pains to add that despite any theological differences he might have with some of them, "I have nothing derogatory to say about any other Southern Baptist seminary."

Allison says that, if anything, Mid-America has attempted to "distance" itself from the politics of the Southern Baptist Convention and the moderate-fundamentalist feud that divides it.

The SBC, the governing body of the church, owns and operates six seminaries scattered across the Southeast. Some of those seminaries are considered bastions of the moderate movement.

Outside the SBC, other seminaries, including Mid-America, have been set up privately to train Southern Baptist ministers. Many of these independent seminaries, which are not controlled by the SBC but profess a commitment to Southern Baptist doctrines, are strongholds of the conservative wing.

Some Southern Baptists, most notably Dr. W. A. Criswell, founder of the Criswell Center for Biblical Studies in Dallas, Texas, have vehemently and publicly denounced the moderate wing of the SBC. But Allison and other members of the Mid-America faculty, all of whom are Southern Baptist ministers, make a conscious effort to avoid any criticism of the SBC or to talk about the division in the church.

But as early as 1975, when Mid-America moved from Little Rock to Memphis, the Rev. Clint Oakley, a conservative Baptist minister, said by staying independent Mid-America might force other Southern Baptist seminaries to "shun liberalism."

"I will answer any questions about the seminary," Allison says, "but I don't want to talk about any of that other stuff. Our purpose is not to be involved in controversy. Our purpose is to train men for the ministry."

A visitor is free to talk to any member of the faculty or any student. But there is a general uneasiness when the questions turn to the schism in the convention, questions on that subject are either deflected or left unanswered.

And while a visiting reporter is treated courteously, he is left with the feeling that he is an interloper.

"It has been the Baptist, rather than the secular, press that has had a tendency to distort Mid-America's position," says Dr. John D. Floyd, vice president for development and public affairs.

That Baptist press has occasionally labeled Mid-America as a training ground for conservative warriors who are being sent forth to take over the faith.

There also has been speculation that if fundamentalists increase their control over the convention, institutions such as Mid-America may be brought into the convention. Allison, however, says there is no intention on Mid-America's part to join the SBC.

Floyd says that on three occasions during his 14 years at Mid-America, speakers at the morning chapel service have launched into attacks against the SBC's moderate wing, thinking they were in friendly philosophical territory.

"They thought they might find some rabble-rousers here. But in each instance Dr. Allison has gotten up, put his arm around the speaker's shoulders and said, 'Brother, that's not the way we do things here,' " he says.

The way they do things at Mid-America is to make sure the students who come here understand from the beginning what type of religious education they will receive. The school's catalog clearly states in its admission requirements that all applicants "must have been a professing Christian for a period of at least one year" prior to application and that admission is not granted to anyone who has "been involved in

Yet, the 127-year-old school has been attacked constantly by fundamentalists since they captured the presidency of the 14.4 million-member Southern Baptist Convention in 1979.

As fundamentalists have worked to consolidate their power, they have criticized all six convention-supported seminaries, which are dominated by the so-called moderates.

Fundamentalist leaders have accused some seminary professors of being "heretics" who teach "liberal slop."

Southern Seminary, perhaps the most moderate of the six, has taken most of the heat. It is the denomination's oldest seminary, and, with more than 3,500 students, its second-largest.

"If we were doing what they say we are, I would be as upset as they are," Southern Seminary President Roy Honeycutt says. "But the truth is, we're not."

The seminaries are at the heart of a struggle that has bitterly divided the nation's largest Protestant denomination.

Fundamentalists and moderates agree that the Bible is the authoritative Word of God, and that its message is without error. But fundamentalists also believe the Bible is historically perfect and must be accepted literally word for word.

Moderates, however, believe each person is competent before God to interpret Scripture. They say some biblical pronouncements, such as for the dominance of men over women, must be viewed in the context of the culture and time in which they were written. And many think some details of events described in the Bible were meant to be symbolic or may have been distorted in translation over the centuries.

Fundamentalists say that isn't good enough. "If the Bible's historical accuracy can be questioned, then maybe the message could be, too," says Jim Stroud, a fundamentalist pastor in Knoxville, Tenn.

Each faction claims the majority of Southern Baptists share its views. The faction that controls the seminaries will have an edge in impressing its views on tomorrow's Southern Baptist leaders and scholars.

Since 1979, fundamentalists have set out to change the seminaries by nominating like-minded people to their boards of trustees. Also, several independent fundamentalist seminaries have been started since the 1960s, most notably Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary in Memphis, Tenn., and the Criswell Center for Biblical Studies in Dallas, Texas.

Criswell President Paige Patterson, a prominent fundamentalist leader who believes most Southern Baptists share his views, says church members shouldn't have to pay for seminaries that teach things they don't believe. Southern Seminary has a $34 million endowment, but gets 42 percent of its $12 million annual budget directly from the convention.

"It's the same situation as before World War II when we shipped scrap metal to the Japanese and they shot it back at us," Patterson says.

Fundamentalists complain that Southern Seminary in particular has ignored their point of view. "They accuse us of trying to take over the seminary, but all we want is to have our position represented," says Stroud.

Honeycutt admits there are no true fundamentalists among Southern Seminary's more than 100 professors. But he says the faction

Shuttle Panel Says Rocket Test Needed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential investigators have informed NASA officials they want full-scale versions of a redesigned booster rocket tested in the upright position, a costly and complicated procedure that could delay the resumption of shuttle flights beyond next summer, commission and NASA officials say.

"It didn't go down very well," when members of a presidential commission investigating the Challenger accident recently made their views known to space agency officials in private discussions, one source close to the panel said.

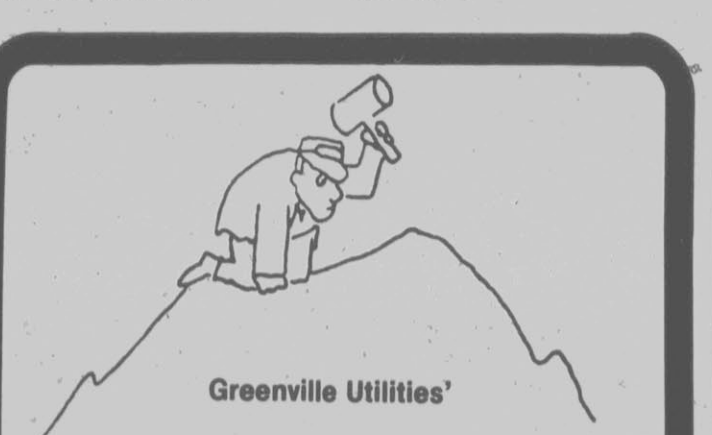

The panel, which is to release its final report Monday, has decided that the cause of the Jan. 28 explosion was a faulty seam in one of the shuttle's booster rockets. Because the report is not yet public, the commissioners who discussed the issue in interviews at week's end would not allow use of their names.

Several commissioners have said publicly the panel wants the agency to stop relying on tests of 10-inch models of the 149-foot-long rockets during this redesign. NASA officials have said previously they expect to conduct any full-scale tests on a booster rocket lying horizontally. That's how full scale tests have been conducted in the past.

But one commission member, speaking on condition he not be identified by name, said, "I would think that, the way most of us feel, it should be vertical," and thus duplicate as nearly as possible the actual stresses of a shuttle's ascent into space.

This source added that "in private conversations we have suggested that, and it doesn't go down very well" with space agency officials.

Rich Get Best Tax Break Under Senate's Bill

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — After-tax income of the richest Americans would rise more than three times as much as that of a $30,000-a-year worker under the tax-overhaul plan that the Senate is preparing to pass.

A person or family earning $200,000 and up would have 1.4 percent more to spend once the bill, written by the Senate Finance Committee, was fully effective, according to new estimates by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. The average taxpayer earning between $30,000 and $40,000 would realize a 0.4-percent increase in after-tax income.

Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, sees the new figures as ammunition for one of the major battles over the tax bill. He is calling on the Senate to create a third tax bracket in the bill for the rich and use the money to increase tax relief for middle-income families.

"The reinstatement of a three-rate structure from the president's initial proposal would make the entire bill more fair and permit real relief to the people who most need it — the middle-income, wage-earning people of this country," Mitchell said.

Mitchell, a member of the Finance Committee, will ask the Senate this week to adopt his amendment in the interest of fairness, even though President Reagan and the Senate leadership are urging that the bill be approved intact. They have expressed fear that if any significant amendment is adopted, that would open the way for other changes, and eventually the measure would fall apart.

But those who are sponsoring amendments disagree.

"It's a phony argument to say an amendment is undercutting the bill," said Sen. William Roth, R-Del., who wants to change the measure to allow tax-deductible Individual Retirement Accounts for all workers. "That's the legislative process."

Mitchell, like Roth, says he will support the bill even if his amendment loses. But changing the measure to shift more of the tax relief away from the rich can only improve it, he said.

"Many middle-class Americans believe that their concerns are not central to either political party, that the Republicans care only about protecting the rich while the Democrats only care about helping the poor," Mitchell explained. "The Finance Committee bill, which helps the poor and the rich but does little or nothing for middle-class taxpayers, tends to confirm this belief.

"Both parties can disprove it by changing the bill to provide more relief to the middle class," Mitchell added.

The House-passed bill also would mean greater percentage increases in after-tax income for high-income people, although the disparity is not as large as in the Senate measure. Under the House plan, after-tax increases of the over-$200,000 group would increase by 1.9 percent; for the $30,000 worker, by 1.0 percent.

The Finance Committee estimates that people with incomes of $200,000 and up, who pay 11.6 percent of the total tax, would get 16.1 percent of the tax cut in its bill. Those with incomes under $20,000, who pay 13.7 percent of the tax under present law, would get 25.9 percent of the tax relief.

In between, people with incomes of $75,000 to $200,000, who carry 13.6 percent of the tax load, would receive 10.4 percent of the tax reduction. That leaves the greatest bloc of taxpayers — those with incomes berween $20,000 and $75,000 — paying 61 percent of the total burden and getting only 47.6 percent of the tax reduction.

The tax relief for the over-$200,000 group is disproportionate to that granted other taxpayers because the bill would reduce the 50-percent maximum individual tax rate to 27 percent. Under present law, that top rate is paid only by couples with taxable incomes (after deductions and exemptions) above $175,250 and by single people above $88,270.

Mitchell wants to add a third rate of 33 percent.

About 80 percent of taxpayers would pay at the only other rate in the bill, 15 percent. Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., chairman of the Finance Committee says the bill has a considerable amount of momentum only because of that rate structure, more easily understood than the 14 and 15 rates in present law, and the fact the top rate would drop to the lowest point in a half century.

Reagan's original tax plan had three rates, with a top of 35 percent. The House approved a four-rate system with a maximum of 38 percent.

Private Individuals, Corporations

By GARY KLOTT
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senate Finance Committee's tax-revision bill, intended to create a more uniform tax system for businesses and individuals, contains dozens of special exceptions granted to particular individuals and corporations, ranging from Phillips Petroleum, Unocal and Walt Disney to a private estate that has been fighting the Internal Revenue Service in court for nine years.

Embedded in the 1,489-page bill now before the Senate are more than $5 billion of special favors that senators have been able to insert for their constituents. Many would protect existing tax benefits for public or semipublic projects now being planned or under construction.

In New York alone, these include the renovation of Carnegie Hall, a sports stadium in Buffalo and the purchase of subway cars for the Metropolitan Transportation Authority. They also affect the Astrodome in Houston and dozens of solid waste disposal projects across the country.

But, as in past tax bills, private companies and individuals will also benefit from the special provisions. Among them are General Mills, General Motors, Pan Am, Chrysler, Northwest Airlines, Control Data and major steel companies.

In addition to obtaining a number of special exceptions for public projects in New York, Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., obtained special exceptions for a brokerage firm in New York and a group of five doctors in Rochester.

All 20 members of the Senate Finance Committee were able to obtain such favors. But about half of the exceptions were granted to senators outside the committee. A committee staff member said the requests of senators who strongly supported the bill were looked on more favorably than others.

Moynihan, one of the leading supporters of the tax-revision effort in the committee, requested and received more exceptions than any other senator, according to one staff member.

These special exceptions are hidden in legislative language that masks the identity of the company or community involved. For example, the only clue to most companies accorded special favors is their dates of incorporation.

Even senators have been unable to learn all of the special provisions, although Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., and chairman of the Finance Committee, said he would give senators a detailed list in a few days.

Such special provisions, known as "transition rules," have traditionally been part of tax bills and have been used by committee chairmen to help win support for the legislation.

The tax-revision bill passed by the House of Representatives last December contained even more transition rules, which would cost some $26 billion. These favors also were masked in statutory language.

Some senators are angry that so many special favors are being granted for specific interests. Others complain that they were not given the opportunity for special exceptions themselves. Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., raised the objection on Wednesday that the special provisions were not identified clearly in the bill for their perusal. "We would like, a number of us, a list of the transitions so that we can see what are the standards which have been used, so that we can see what situations in our states might fit those standards," he said.

While some of the transition rules appear to be political favors, many are intended to keep the new legislation from having an adverse impact on certain communities or projects that have long been under way or on the drawing board.

Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., asked for a $7 million exception for the Walt Disney Co. to protect existing tax benefits for films that were already in production. He also obtained another exception that would protect all other entertainment companies that had films or television shows in production.

The costliest exception is a provision that would give steel companies a $500 million refund of unused investment tax credits, which would be repealed by the bill. Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., who is a member of the Finance Committee, was a chief sponsor of the provision.

The Unocal Corp., a major oil company, was accorded special tax treatment on $4.4 billion in debt incurred in fighting off a hostile takeover attempt by the Mesa Petroleum Co. According to a preliminary committee draft of the transition rules obtained by The New York Times, Unocal would save $50 million in taxes as a result of the exception, sponsored by Sen. Stephen Symms, R-Idaho, who is on the Finance Committee.

Sen. David L. Boren, D-Okla., obtained two special exceptions for the Phillips Petroleum Co., a corporation that also incurred a huge debt in resisting a takeover attempt by Mesa Petroleum. One provision would allow Phillips to avoid a new 10 percent excise tax on surplus funds withdrawn from the company pension plan, a decision being studied by the company.

In the Senate bill, Phillips was identified only as a "corporation incorporated on June 13, 1917, which has its principal place of business in Bartlesville, Okla."

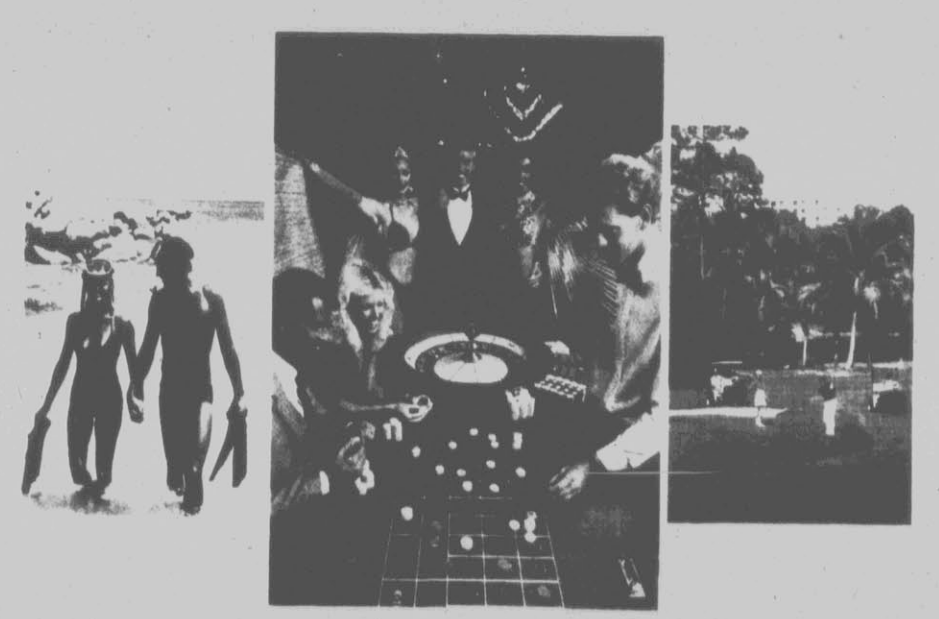

A committee staff member said the exceptions involving steel, Unocal and Phillips were the costliest of the transition rules.

PEKING (AP) — China will increase the number of its postgraduate programs by 50 percent and include new areas including environmental chemistry and biomechanics, the government's English-language Chila Daily reported.

It said an advisory group to the State Council's Academic Degree Committee recommended that authorization be given to 2,045 deparments to confer master's degrees and 671 for doctorate degrees.

The newspaper said 739 new subjects had been added to the postgraduate programs.

China began giving postgraduate degrees in 1981. The report said that by September the nation will have 120,000 graduate students, up from about 80,000 in 1984.

Farm Bankruptcy May Be Higher

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tens of thousands of America's farmers probably fell by the wayside this spring in the economic war of attrition that has gone on in agriculture since 1981, government and private analysts say.

Coming on the heels of similar failure rates in past years, the numbers reflect a gradual but important restructuring of the economic sector that accounts for one-fifth of U.S. gross national product.

Several economists put the failure rate during this spring's lending and planting season at 5 percent or slightly higher. It is difficult to translate that into absolute numbers because of different ways of defining a commercial farm and because not all farmers borrow money.

But some in the credit field put the figure in the tens of thousands, and Marlyn Aycock, a spokesman for the Farmers Home Administration, said the best data point to a failure number of roughly 50,000.

Many had to give up because burdened by heavy existing debt and low commodity prices, they were unable to qualify for new loans to buy the seed, fertilizer and fuel to put in a 1986 crop.

One reason exact figures are impossible to come by is that there is no requirement that farmers or their lenders report business failures. The estimates are drawn from bank and academic surveys, statistics on loan volume and loan denials and anecdotal evidence.

The failures don't mean the fields of Iowa won't be green with corn this summer. Some better-off farmers are taking advantage of low prices to buy up and farm new land. Some producers who do go bankrupt are turning around and re-entering the business, often with rented land and equipment.

And at the same time some producers are being forced out by the relentless farm depression, far more farmers are finding ways to stay in business.

"You hear a lot of cries of distress, but at the same time a lot of the financial indicators are saying ... there are a lot of farmers out there who are doing very well," says Ronald Meekhof, an Agriculture Department farm finance economist.

Heavy government subsidies justified as help for the financially ailing are also going to those who don't need them, with the result, analysts say, that there is a growing split between the agricultural haves and have-nots.

"We're driving wedges into the farm population," said Robert Jolly, an Iowa State University agricultural economist who keeps tabs on farm financial conditions in that hard-hit state.

"It seems to me that the haves are those that carry an appropriate amount of debt and are reasonably skillful managers," he said, noting that a northwest Iowa survey showed the top one-third of farms had 15 percent returns on investment.

Women Posting Gains In State Governments

By TOM SEERY
Associated Press Writer

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Primary election victories by women in several Midwestern states this year are proof that state government is no longer a male bastion, says a female political organizer.

"We're certainly seeing that this is the year that women are being perceived as viable political candidates," said Monica McFadden, director of political programs for the National Women's Political Caucus in Washington, D.C.

Art Davis, chairman of the Democratic Party in Iowa, said the Midwest's battered farm-based economy has made conditions ripe for a political surge by women to the top echelons of state government.

"The Midwest has seen the results of 'politics as usual,'" Davis said after Tuesday's Iowa primaries, which included victories by women in both parties' races for lieutenant governor. That ensures the first female holder of that office since it was created in 1857.

Two women also will square off in the Iowa secretary of state election in November. Earlier this year, women swept the Republican and Democratic primaries for governor in Nebraska, which has never had a woman in that office.

Women also have fared well in other Midwest primaries this year.

In May, Jill L. Long won the Democratic nomination to run for U.S. Senate in Indiana against Republican incumbent Dan Quayle.

Janice Hart, a follower of extremist Lyndon LaRouche, won the Democratic nomination for secretary of state in Illinois in March by besting another woman, Aurelia Pucinski, who had the support of the state Democratic Party. State Rep. Judy Koehler won the Illinois Republican primary to run against Democratic incumbent U.S. Sen. Alan Dixon.

A key test awaits in Missouri in August, when Lt. Gov. Harriett Woods takes on a crowded field in the Democratic primary for the right to run for U.S. Senate.

Iowa's female winners were elated after Tuesday's victories.

"I think it's great," said Jo Ann Zimmerman, a state representative from Waukee who captured 44 percent of the Democratic vote to beat two male lieutenant governor candidates.

"I think it pretty well says what Nebraska has already said — that is, that women are viable candidates," added Joan Lipsky, a Cedar Rapids attorney who will face Mrs. Zimmerman after getting 41 percent of the Republican vote to beat two male opponents.

Davis said he is not surprised by the increasing political success of women, who in the past have been primarily behind-the-scenes campaign workers and holders of local offices in Iowa. He said women often feel the brunt of economic hard times, so it is only natural they became more politically active as the farm economy soured.

"I think the barriers to women are rapidly disappearing, and the Midwest is a big part of that turnaround," Davis said.

"I think it means the voters of Iowa have accepted the idea of voting for women," said Elaine Baxter, a state representative from Burlington who got 47 percent of the vote to top two men for the Democratic secretary of state nomination. She will face GOP nominee Dawn Roberts, who ran unopposed in her party's primary.

Ms. McFadden agreed that female candidates gain voter support during times of social stress.

"Women are perceived as being especially good at dealing with things like the stress of the farm economy," she said. "It's much more likely they (voters) are going to turn to us."

PAC Receptions Can Lead To Political Connections

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's the singles' bar of politics: Hopeful candidates cruise the room, eyeball eligible suitors and zero in on prospective mates, then try to impress them and get picked up.

A successful hustle leads not to a date, but a campaign contribution.

The game is played all the time in Washington at "meet and greet" receptions. Candidates for Congress get to meet the officials of political action committees, which have money to give away. The PACs get to size up the candidates, to see if they're worth an investment and if they are likely to take the PACs' view of things if elected to office.

Bob Weiner, who would like to be in Congress, calls the process a "meat market;" to Mary Louise Westmoreland, who represents the Handgun Control PAC, it is "more like a fraternity mixer."

But they agreed the giant PAC receptions the Democrat and Republican parties hold for their congressional contenders are, at least, an efficient way for candidates to connect with special-interest groups.

Big money is at stake. In 1984, PACs gave $105.3 million to candidates for Congress, or 26.5 percent of all the money raisaed in congressional races.

"It's an opportunity for them to pick out the candidates they are most interested in," said Chris Bowman, deputy director of the National Republican Congressional Committee. "The candidate is the best salesman for himself and his campaign."

"The PACs have said to us 'we want to meet your candidates,'" said Mark Johnson, Bowman's Democratic counterpart. "We don't have time to take every one of our candidates to every one of the PACs in town. We provide a couple of big forums."

"It could take days to make the contacts I was able to make in just a couple of hours," Rich Thornton, a long-shot challenger to Rep. William Goodling, R-Pa., said after one recent such event.

The party was hosted by the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. To candidate Weiner, who is trying to take away the congressional seat in Massachusetts that Republican Silvio Conte has held since 1959, the reception "was like a convention of fish going after a slew of bait that was dangled in front of them."

Weiner joined dozens of Democratic challengers aggressively working the room in search of money from PACs that included labor, farming, business, environmental and women's interests.

Florida Reduces Insurance Rates

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — State lawmakers Saturday approved a bill revamping insurance regulations that provides for rate rollbacks of at least 40 percent on liability premiums and greater supervision of the industry.

The bill, passed just before the Legislature adjourned its 1986 session at 3 a.m., also includes a $450,000 limit on damages for pain and suffering in some lawsuits against businessmen and doctors.

Unless Gov. Bob Graham vetoes the bill, its provisions will begin to take effect July 1. He has reserved comment on the bill but has generally supported efforts to hold down insurance premiums that have doubled or tripled for some businesses.

Insurance is big business in Florida, where agents estimate $1 billion in liability insurance premiums are paid each year. The bill was the subject of intensive lobbying and a $500,000 advertising battle among various interest groups.

Liability insurance rates would be frozen July 1 under the bill. Rates would then be rolled back by 40 percent on Oct. 1 and new rates would not take effect until Jan. 1, 1987. Next year's rate would be based on rates in effect Jan. 1, 1984.

Florida is ranked third in the nation in the total number of multimillion-dollar awards, according to statistics compiled by Jury Verdict Research Inc. in Ohio.

To address that problem, the bill limits damages to $450,000 for pain and suffering in personal injury and wrongful death cases.

Fundamentalists recently raised formal concerns about the writings of Honeycutt and a dozen professors at Southern. An 11-member committee of the seminary's board of trustees studied those concerns, and reported unanimously in April that neither Honeycutt nor any of the professors had violated the school's 128-year-old Abstract of Principles, a set of 20 basic beliefs that all faculty members must affirm as a condition of employment. The full board of trustees approved the committee's finding by a 39-12 vote.

Not a single professor has left Southern Seminary because of the controversy. "Morale is probably better than it has been in a long time," Honeycutt says. "Buf that is not to say people are not weary of criticism."

Southern Seminary has been put in the position of having to convince average Southern Baptists that its professors aren't heretics. The May issue of the school's newsletter includes a four-page supplement that repeatedly stresses Southern Seminary's commitment to biblical authority.

Despite the controversy — or, perhaps, because of it — enrollment is up 20 percent over last year among master's degree candidates, who make up the bulk of Southern Seminary's students. Over-all enrollment is up 7 percent.

Gifts to the school also have increased, with many coming from states where the fundamentalists are strong, says Wesley Pattiolo, the seminary's vice president for development. More than $3 million has been received since January.

Honeycutt says Southern Seminary's board of trustees has shifted some to the right in the wake of recent appointments. But he predicts the fundamentalist movement will collapse before it takes over the seminary.

"We think we're more Southern Baptist than these newcomers," Honeycutt says of the fundamentalists. "The longer they are abusive of power ... the better acquainted Southern Baptists will become with that and the quicker they will turn in another direction."

Distributed by The New York Times News Service

Honeycutt claims few fundamentalists have the advanced academic degrees that would qualify them to teach at Southern Seminary. "We (seminaries) in the aggregate just do not produce narrow-minded fundamentalists," he says.

Fundamentalist beliefs are often inconsistent and represent "more of a psychology than a theology," says Honeycutt, who also is critical of their intolerance and thinks their attacks are politically motivated.

Most of all, he says, fundamentalist beliefs "represent a very narrow and restrictive view of the Scripture, which has never been characteristic of Southern Baptists. Eliminate the present personalities and go back two generations; you couldn't divorce or who has married a divorced person."

And while women may attend Mid-America to prepare for work in Christian education or counseling, they may not take degrees that would lead to becoming ordained ministers.

"We believe that God has singly blessed women, and has given them a position of honor and opportunities for service. However, we believe that Scripture prohibits a woman serving as pastor of a church," states a resolution adopted by the school's trustees, all of whom are Southern Baptists.

The stringent requirements are not only for the student body.

Mid-America faculty members, most of whom have pastored churches, are required to sign "Articles of Religious Belief" before they are hired. The articles state that the person will not teach anything that would contradict the principles of inerrancy.

One of the reasons Mid-America is looked upon as a bastion of the conservative wing is because just across the street from it stands the sprawling edifice of Bellevue Baptist Church.

Bellevue, which weighs in with almost 20,000 members, is the largest Southern Baptist church in Tennessee. The church complex covers more than two city blocks and even that is not enough room; a larger complex is being built in the Memphis suburbs.

Bellevue's pastor is Adrian Rogers, a past president of the SBC who is seeking that office again this year. Rogers is considered one of the primary players in the 7-year-old move to propel the SBC toward a more fundamentalist doctrine.

"There have been some attempts to link us with Dr. Rogers," Allison says. "But he has never even been on our board of directors."

A reporter asks if Mid-America has made any conscious effort to distance itself from Rogers and the position he represents.

Lloyd Rallies Past Martina

PARIS (AP) — Chris Evert Lloyd, playing nearly flawlessly in the final two sets, came from behind to defeat longtime rival Martina Navratilova 2-6, 6-3, 6-3, and captured the French Open women's title for a record seventh time Saturday.

"On a scale of 1 to 10, I played about an 8," said Navratilova, who lost the women's final to Lloyd on the red clay court at Roland Garros stadium for the second straight year. "She played a 10 the last two sets."

The victory lifted Lloyd past Bjorn Borg of Sweden and France's Suzanne Lenglen, a star of the 1920s, both of whom won the French title six times.

"It's certainly one of my favorite tournaments," the 31-year-old from Boca Raton, Fla., told the crowd after walking off the court as champion once again. "Hopefully one of these days I can win this event again."

The men's singles title will be decided Sunday when top-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia meets Sweden's surprising Mikael Pernfors. Lendl is seeking his second French crown, having won in 1984, while Pernfors is attempting to match what Boris Becker did last year, when, as an unseeded player, the West German won the Wimbledon title.

The women's final was the 69th career meeting — the longest rivalry in tennis history — between Lloyd and Navratilova, and the 33rd time that Lloyd has emerged the winner. She had to earn it.

After overcoming her own nervousness and Navratilova's brilliant shot-making in the first set, Lloyd got in the groove and began finding the lines with her accurate groundstrokes and occasionally sneaking to the net for put-away volleys.

It wasn't until the seventh game of the match that Lloyd finally was able to hold her own service, although she broke her opponent in the fourth game.

Then, in the second set, the defending women's champion broke Navratilova at 15 in the fourth game — the only service break of the set. In the ninth game, serving to tie the match, Lloyd fell behind love-40, triple break point.

But she saved them all, one coming on her only ace of the match, then closed it out on her second set point when Navratilova's backhand slice approach shot sailed long.

Lloyd had ridden out the storm and, appropriately, the sun burst through the clouds that had hung heavy over the stadium.

Navratilova opened the third set by holding at 30, then breaking Lloyd at 15 to go up 2-0. It was her last gasp as she found herself once again losing a major title after rampaging through the opening set.

It had happened in the 1981 U.S. Open when she crushed Tracy Austin 6-1 in the first set, only to lose in three.

And the hurt was deep.

"I am disappointed," Navratilova admitted. "But at least I am not saying, 'Oh, God, why did I play so badly.' I played better than I did against Hana (Mandlikova) at the U.S. Open,' " where Mandlikova won in the final.

"Had I played like this last year, I would have won that match."

Bodine's Record Run Captures Pocono Pole

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Geoff Bodine smashed the Pocono International Raceway stock car qualifying record Saturday, turning a lap of 153.652 mph in winning the pole for Sunday's Miller High Life 500.

Bodine, who earlier this year won the Daytona 500, is seeking his first NASCAR victory at Pocono.

"It's a good way to start a race and we hope to be back in Victory Circle when the race ends," said Bodine, who has two victories this season. "We've led races here and somehow something always has gone wrong.

"But, today we could have lost this lap (because of rain), and it held off long enough for us to get everyone qualified. Maybe that means our luck has changed," Bodine added.

Benny Parsons, in an Oldsmobile Delta 88, earned the outside front row starting spot with a lap of 153.246. Parsons apparently had an even faster lap going his second time around, but he slid up into the wall coming out of the second turn and came back to the pits with some damage to the right rear of the car.

The other drivers bettering the previous track record were Neil Bonnett at 152.711 in a Monte Carlo, Terry Labonte at 152.607 in a Delta 88 and Rusty Wallace at 152.573 in a Pontiac Grand Prix 2+2.

Elliott, who started from the pole in the last three stock car events here, was well behind Bodine in his Ford Thunderbird at 152.042, while current Winston Cup point leader, Dale Earnhardt, put his Chevrolet in the top 10 at 152.382.

The lineup for Sunday's Miller High Life 500 NAS-CAR stock car race, with type of car and qualifying speed in mph:

McNeill 3rd In 100-M.

Lee McRae of Pittsburgh, another North Carolinian, won the event with a time of 10.11, while Chidi Imoh of Missouri nosed out McNeill for second. Both were timed at 10.14 in the event.

McNeill qualified second in his heat in the trials in 10.24, and had the fifth fastest qualifying time in the final field of nine.

By finishing third, McNeill earns all-American honors for the second straight year. Last season, he finished fourth in the 100-meter finals.

Danzig Connection Gives Trainer 5th Belmont Win

NEW YORK (AP) — Danzig Connection took the lead on the turn and splashed home first Saturday to give trainer Woody Stephens an astounding fifth straight victory in the Belmont Stakes.

Danzig Connection, ridden by Chris McCarron, who never before had ridden for Stephens, got home in front of lightly raced Johns Treasure in a time of 2:29 4-5 on a sloppy track.

In the days leading up to the race, the 72-year-old Stephens said, "I don't have as good a chance this year."

Nobody told Danzig Connection, however.

It was a wet, foggy day, but a crowd of 43,137 fans turned out to watch another Stephens 3-year-old shine in the final leg of the Triple Crown.

Stephens had won the four previous Belmonts with Conquistador Cielo, Caveat, Swale and Creme Fraiche. Danzig Connection's second straight stakes victory, in only his fourth start this year, was worth $338,640 from a purse of $564,400.

Danzig Connection missed the Kentucky Derby and Preakness because of a bone chip in his right knee, which he suffered late in his 2-year-old campaign.

The victory by the Kentucky-bred son of Danzig split the Triple Crown three ways. Missing from the Belmont was Snow Chief, the beaten Derby favorite, who won the Preakness by four lengths over Ferdinand.

Danzig Connection paid $18, $8.20 and $5.40. Johns Treasure, owned by John Murrell and trained by 79-year-old Walter Kelley, returned $6.40 and $4.60, while Mrs. Howard B. Keck's Ferdinand, trained by 73-year-old Charlie Whittingham and ridden by 54-year-old Bill Shoemaker, was $3.80 to show.

Mogambo, ridden by Jose Santos, broke on top, was followed by Imperious Spirit and Danzig Connection.

Mogambo led the 10-horse field around the turn and down the backstretch to the half-mile pole. Danzig Connection followed him to the half-mile pole and then made a serious challenge on the turn, taking the lead before they reached the quarter pole.

Then, with the crowd cheering, Danzig Connection splashed down the stretch, holding off Johns Treasure, ridden by Laffit Pincay, and Ferdinand, who had moved into third position midway down the backstretch.

Completing the order of finish after Personal Flag was Fobby Forbes, Mogambo, Rampage, Bordeaux Bob, Parade Marshal and Imperious Spirit. Each starter carried 126 pounds.

Rampage, who was fourth in the Kentucky Derby, went off the 5-2 favorite despite not having raced in five weeks.

The fifth straight Belmont victory for Stephens, a Hall of Fame trainer, moved him into fourth place behind James Rowe, who trained eight Belmont winners, Sam Hildreth with seven, and Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons with six. The Belmont victory was the first for the 31-year-old McCarron, who in his only previous Belmont finished fourth with Fast Account last year.

It rained Friday and much of Saturday, although it was not raining at post time, and there was speculation that Ferdinand would be scratched. Whittingham, also a Hall of Fame trainer, said he would not make up his mind until the last moment — horses can be scratched up to 45 minutes before the race. The colt had raced only on fast tracks in his 11 previous starts.

Parrott, Tripp Top Prep Athletes

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

A four-sport all-stater and a three-sport star have been named as the Daily Reflector's Male and Female High School Athletes of the Year.

Farmville Central's Dennis Tripp has been named the winner of the male award while Rose High School's Vicki Parrott has been selected as the female winner.

The selection this year was perhaps the closest ever for the honors, with tough competition in each of the divisions.

Tripp is the first male athlete to be selected for the award from Farmville Central. Rose Lang earlier won the women's award in the first year of its presentation, in 1981-82. D.H. Conley athletes have won the award three times in the previous four years of presentation.

Parrott is the first-ever Rose High School athlete to win the award, snapping a three-year string held by Conley athletes.

Tripp has been called the "finest student athlete ever to participate at Farmville Central High School," by football coach Dixon Sauls.

"His unselfish attitude, his desite to excell, and his leadership make him a truly special person. He has the unique ability to transfer a winning spirit to his fellow students and athletes on and off the field," Sauls continued. "Most of all, Dennis is a remarkable young man and spirited competitor who makes all who come into contact with him better people. This is a rarity in modern-day athletics with his superb all-around athletic ability and his wholesome attitude."

Tripp was an all-State selection in football, where he played offensive guard and linebacker for the Jaguars, 10-2 Eastern Plains Conference championship team. The Jaguars went 9-1 in the regular season and won their first round game in the playoffs before bowing to then unbeaten Fuquay-Varina in a close contest.

Tripp was a three-year starter for the varsity squad.

In addition to being an all-conference selection, he was also named All-Area by both the Daily Reflector and the Wilson Daily Times, all-East by the Raleigh News & Observer; and all-state by the Greensboro Daily News and the Associated Press.

Tripp played in the annual Shrine Bowl in Charlotte, going both ways and being selected as one of the North Carolina co-captains. He has also been named to the East team for the annual All-Star game in Greensboro this summer.

His play led to his being awarded the Most Valuable Player trophy for the Jaguars, and he has signed a grant-in-aid to attend the University of North Carolina.

Not that football is all Tripp does. He also played basketball, baseball and performed for the Jaguar track team.

In basketball, he was a two-year starter at center, being selected as a tri-captain of the team. He averaged 8.9 points a game and 8.2 rebounds. He was selected to the all-tournament teams in the Pitt County Holiday Tournament and in the Eastern Plains Conference Tournament.

"He has shown a great attitude, motivation and determination on the basketball court," cage coach Mike Terrell said.

In baseball, Tripp played varsity ball for four years, starting for three of those years. He played both centerfield and pitched. This year, he served as one of the team's tri-captains. He had a batting average of .301, hitting one homer, driving in 11 runs and scoring 13. He was named to the Pitt County Holiday Tournament's all-tournament team.

Tripp ran track only his senior year, participating in the shot, discus, the 300-meter intermediate hurdles and running a leg in the 800-meter relay team, helping the Jaguars to conference and sectional championships.

Tripp tossed the shot 48 feet, 11 inches, the discus 132 feet, three-quarter inch; and ran the hurdles in 46.51 seconds in his best efforts. He took second place in the conference in the discus, second in the sectionals in the shot, third in the sectionals in the discus and fifth in the regionals in the shot.

He earned all-conference honors in the shot and 800-meter relays, winning both events.

He also wrestled briefly as a freshman, winning 10 and losing 11 matches.

This year, he captained a total of five teams — football, basketball, baseball, track and the N.C. Shire Bowl team.

A B+ student, he was also named as the Wilson Daily Times' Athlete of the Year, the first non-Wilson County resident to win that award.

Athletics has not overshadowed the academic world for Vicki Parrott either. The Rose High School senior carried a 3.61 average into the finals semester of her prep career. She is an N.C. Scholar and has been nominated for the Governor's School.

But she's also made a name for herself on the athletic fields.

Parrott first became known locally in sports when she became one of the first female stars of the Greenville Little Leagues.

Then, at E.B. Aycock Junior High School, she began to move to the fore in girls' sports. She played softball, hitting .325, and won the most improved player trophy is basketball. She also competed on the tennis team, winning the school's Most Outstanding Female Award and the Academic Athlete Award.

From there, it was on to Rose, where she became a star in three sports.

Parrott competed in tennis in the fall, basketball in the winter and softball in the spring.

In her three years on the tennis team, she was named all-conference twice, advancing to the state tournament in Chapel Hill this year.

In basketball, she was an important part of the team, playing the point guard position and running the offense. She was named to the All-Tournament team at the Conley Girls' Tournament this past December.

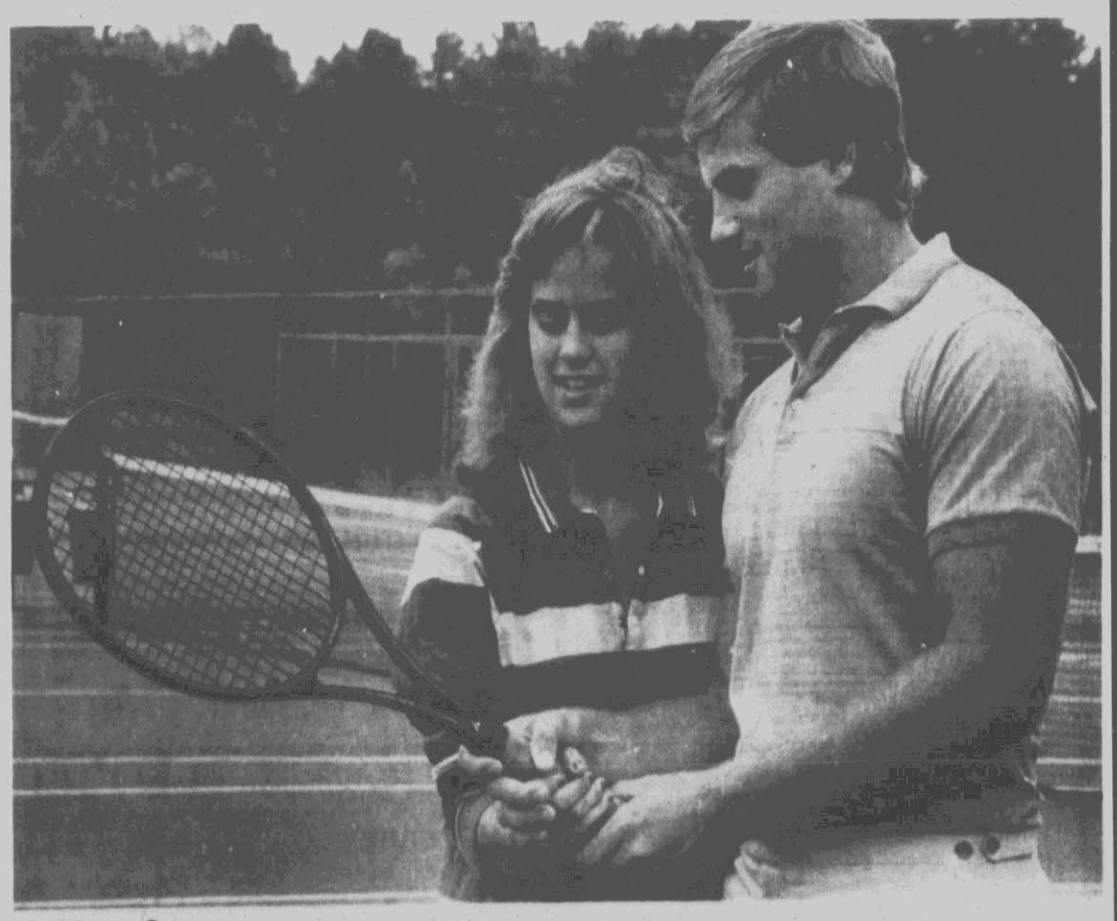

In softball, she made all-conference three times. She hit .400 as a sophomore and .500 her junior and senior years. She was named as the co-MVP in the sport this year.

"Vicki really is an outstanding athlete," Coach Bill Kuykendall said. "She works hard. She likes to win and wants to win. She is very, very intense and that gives her the edge she needs to be a quality athlete."

Kuykendall coached her in both softball and basketball.

Like Tripp, she has been accepted at North Carolina and may participate in softball as a walk-on.

A New Sport

Dennis Tripp of Farmville Central, who excelled in football, basketball, baseball and track gets a tip from Rose High School's Vicki Parrott on the basics of tennis. Parrott starred in tennis, basketball and softball for the Rampettes. The two are named today as the Daily Reflector's Male and Female High School Athletes of the Year. Overton Aims For World Title

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

There are certain unalienable rites of season in Greenville.

There's ECU football in the fall, the Pigskin Pig Out in the spring and Kristi Overton bringing home water skiing trophies all summer long.

Overton won the Masters' Trick Competition two weeks ago in Calloway Gardens, Georgia, and leaves Tuesday to compete in the World Cup Waterskiing Championships in England, yet there are few raised eyebrows in Greenville.

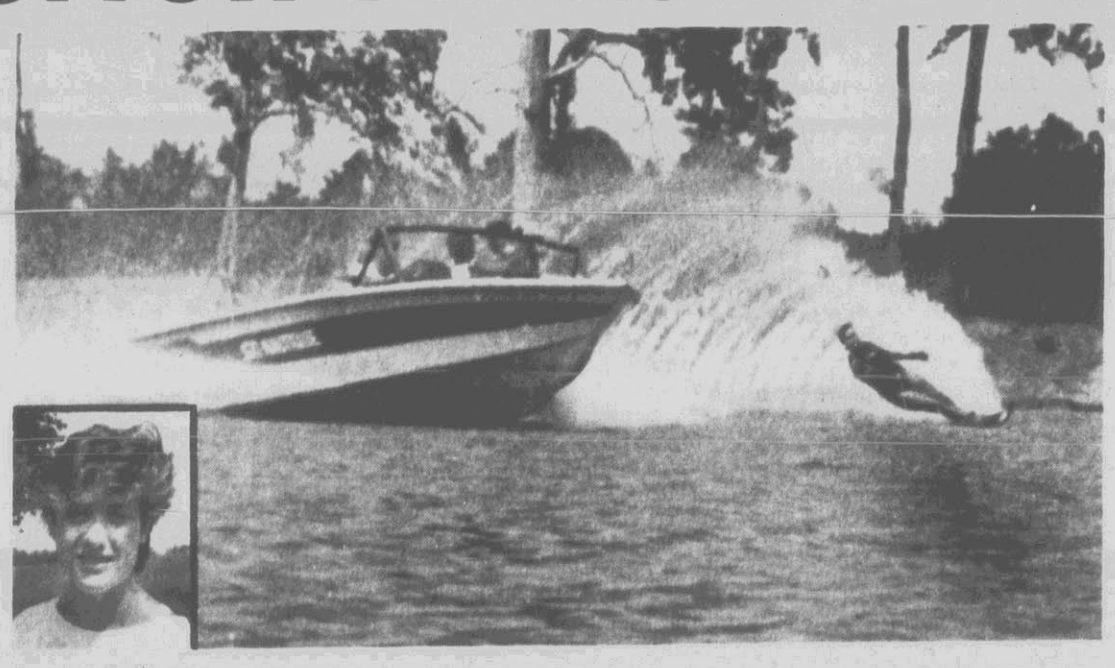

Overton has been winning big on the waterskiing circuit since she was 10 years old. It's almost expected.

She has been competing in the Open Division, the most competitive division, on and off since then. Overton also holds three Junior National records in the slalom, trick and jump.

Kristi first strapped on a pair of skis at the age of four. She learned to slalom when she was five. When she was six she learned her first ski trick. Yet it was her second consecutive first place finish in the trick competition of the recent Masters Water Ski Tournament that confirmed Overton's talent.

It all began at the Pamlico River 12 years ago when her father, Parker Overton, rigged up a pair of skis so that a four year old could ski. "My Dad had always been interested in the sport and we had a place down at the Pamlico River, and he just wanted to share his love for the sport with me," Overton said in an interview last week before her afternoon training session.

Practice Run

Kristi Overton (inset) makes a turn during a practice run in the slalom on Lake Kristi near Grimesland. The 16-year-old Greenville girl is among the top skiiers in the world and will be competing in the World Championships in England next week. She recently won the trick competition in the Masters' event in Georgia.

"As I started tricking, my parents started bribing me for every trick I learned. As I made more money the more I got excited. I picked up on the sport real easy and they saw that I had potential in it."

After entering her first competition at the age of five, Overton began to excel and draw a good deal of local attention. "It got to the point where I couldn't practice at the Pamlico River because too many people were watching me and people were driving up behind me (in boats) while I was trying to ski," Overton said.

As a solution, the Overtons built a house and a private lake in Grimesland specifically for Kristi's training. During the school year she is on the water by 3 o'clock each afternoon. In the summer, she is on the water at 11 a.m., takes a break for lunch and gets in about three or four more 20-minute training cycles in the afternoon. Her brother Mike or Jackie Rollins, another area skier who competes nationally, usually drives the boat for Kristi. She trains from March through the end of the summer.

"When September comes around, I'm ready to hang it up because school is in and it's hard to come home and ski and keep up your grades," Overton said. "I'm ready to quit; my body's just tired. But when spring comes around I'm ready to get back in the water.

"I don't see anybody during the summertime except my family. All we do is just ski. I miss out on going out with my friends but it's worth it."

Indeed it is. Overton is currently under contract to Connelly Skis, Ski Warm Wet Suits and Correct Craft Boats. In addition, skiing competitions have taken the Rose High School sophomore to Australia, England, France and Italy.

The Masters' Tournament attracted the top 11 men and women from all over the world. Most of the other girls were in their 20s according to Overton, but that's a situation which she prefers.

"I would rather ski against the big girls than people my own age because when I ski against people my own age I am expected to win and there is much more pressure, whereas when I ski against Camille Duvall and the veterans, the pressure is on them because they don't want a 16-year-old beating them," Overton said.

In the Masters' Trick Competition, Overton took a big lead in the preliminaries but was only 30 points ahead after the semifinals. She came back to win going away in the finals.

In England, Kristi will be one of three skiers who were chosen to represent the United States in a team competition. Other teams competing in the tournament include Sweden, France, England and Australia. The men and women will ski against each other, but will be graded against a best possible score for males and females.

While trick competition remains her strong point, Overton is also a strong overall performer. In the Masters' Overall, a competition which combines slalom, trick and jump, she finished second overall.

"It (trick skiing) was always my strong point, and in the past three or four years my slalom has picked up a lot," Overton said. "Last year my jump improved by 20 feet which brought me to the overall race."

Overton said skiing has taught her a number of lessons, the foremost of these being discipline.

"In skiing, I have to devote my time to skiing and give up the social things which may seem important now but won't be as important later," Overton said. "If you know that God gave you the talent and you know that you have the potential to be the best than I think you should use that talent and get the most out of it.

"It (skiing) teaches you that you can't let success go to your head, that you're a normal person. I had been in the spotlight (at the Masters) on Saturday and Sunday, but Monday, I looked around the classroom and I was just sitting there taking notes in biology and it felt weird."

Boone, Partner Lead In Crosby

ADVANCE (AP) — Singer Pat Boone and partner Harry Oranges got in 18 holes and took the lead before heavy rain and lightning suspended second-round play Saturday in the Crosby golf tournament at Bermuda Run Golf and Country Club.

An estimated crowd of 20,000 watched as Boone and Oranges finished off two days of play at 26-under-par on the course, located just outside Winston-Salem. Played was stopped about 7 p.m. with six teams still on the course. They will be allowed to finish before tee time in Sunday's final round, in which entertainer Bob Hope is expected to play.

Clark Triple Lifts Cards To Win

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Jack Clark tripled and scored the tie-breaking run on Tommy Herr's single, and John Tudor pitched a two-hitter as the St. Louis Cardinals edged the Chicago Cubs 3-2 Saturday.

Clark began the seventh with a drive off the center field wall, 414 feet away. Herr, batting just .174 at the time, singled up the middle to snap a 2-2 tie.

Tudor, 6-3, struck out five and walked three. Rick Sutcliffe, 4-7, took the loss.

The Cardinals took a 1-0 lead in the third. Terry Pendleton singled sharply to right, went to second on Tudor's sacrifice bunt and Vince Coleman slashed his league-leading sixth triple into the right field corner.

The Cardinals tied the score in the sixth as Willie McGee, who had struck out twice before against Sutcliffe, homered over the right field wall, his third of the year.

Los Angeles.....5

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Phil Garner hit a two-run double with the bases loaded in the eighth inning Saturday, erasing a 5-4 Los Angeles lead and lifting the Houston Astros to a 7-5 victory over the Dodgers.

The Astros had led 4-2 before Len Matuszek's three-run pinch homer in the seventh inning off Charlie Kerfeld gave the Dodgers a 5-4 lead.

Releiver Ken Howell, 2-3, entered the game for Los Angeles in the eighth inning and was greeted by Billy Hatcher's leadoff single. Howell walked Glenn Davis and pinch-hitter Dennis Walling, loading the bases.

Garner then lined a shot off the left-center field fence, giving the Astros a 6-5 lead and making a winner of Aurelio Lopez, 1-0. It was the first National League victory for Lopez, released by Detroit after last season.

Doran tripled and Hatcher doubled to give Houston an insurance run in the ninth.

Matuszek, batting for reliever Alejandro Pena, sent a 1-1 pitch to right field. It hit the top of the fence and bounced into the visiting bullpen for his first homer of the season and the second by a Dodger pinch hitter. The home run scored Mike Scioscia, who led off the seventh with a double, and Greg Brock, who singled.

Los Angeles left 15 men on base and 10 in scoring position.

The Astros staked starter Mike Madden to a 4-1 lead, but the lefthander was removed in the fifth after yielding a leadoff double to Bill Madlock and a walk to Marshall. Reliever Larry Andersen got Scioscia to hit into a double play, but Brock singled to bring Los Angeles within 4-2.

Glenn Davis opened the scoring against Jerry Reuss with his 11th home run, a two-run drive in the first inning. Madlock cut the margin to 2-1 in the bottom of the first with an RBI single.

Houston added a pair of runs in the fifth on RBI singles by Craig Renolds and Bill Doran.

San Francisco.....6
Cincinnati 2

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Bob Brenly's first home run in six weeks, a tie-breaking, three-run drive in the fourth inning, powered the San Francisco Giants to a 6-2 victory over the Cincinnati Reds Saturday.

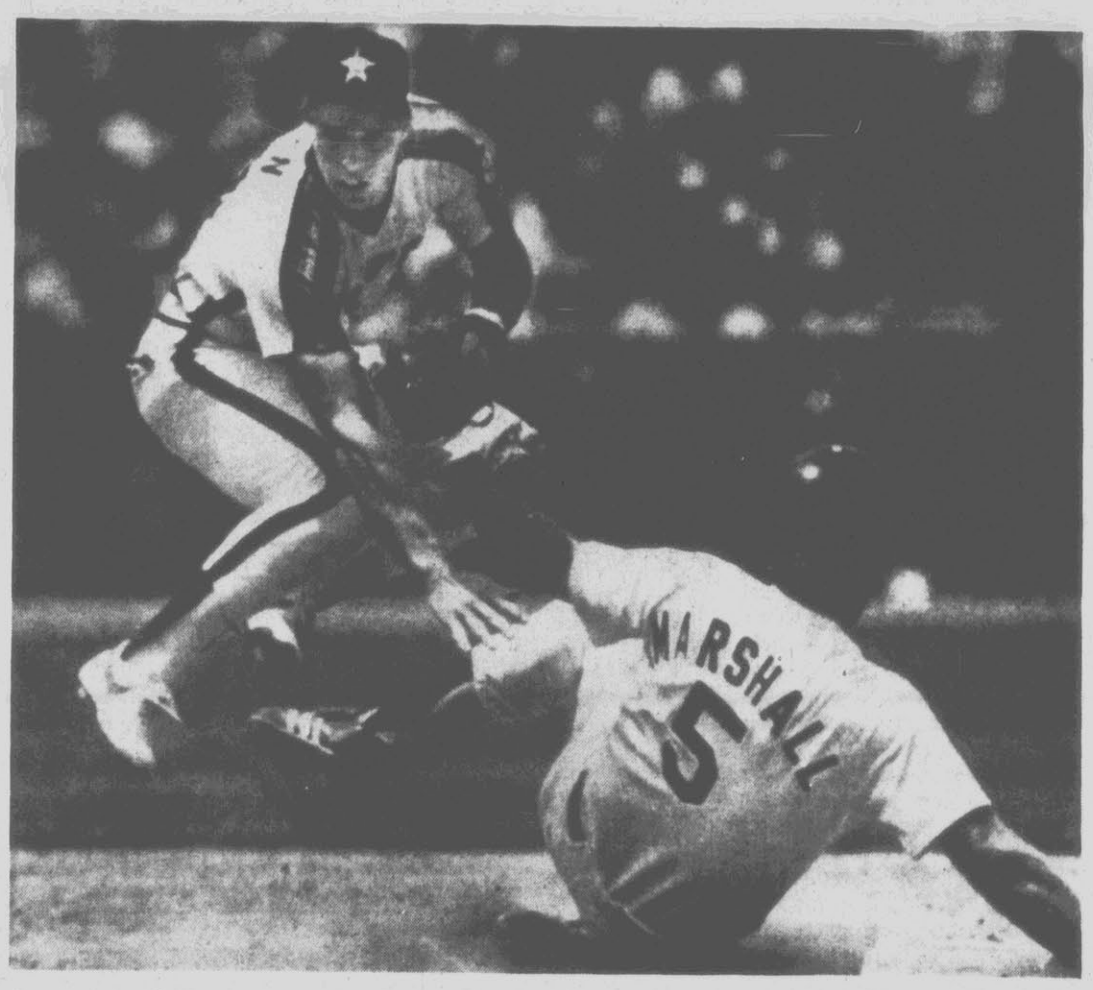

Mike Krukow, 8-3, won his fourth straight decision with an eight-hitter, striking out eight Reds and walking none. The eight victories equals Krukow's total of last season.

Eddie Milner hit a homer, his third, with two out in the third to give the Reds and pitcher Bill Gullickson a 1-0 lead.

Gullickson, 4-6, walked the Giants' first batter in the fourth, Mike Aldrete, then retired Chris Brown on a fly to right. Aldrete went to third on Jeffrey Leonard's single and scored the tying run on a single by Chili Davis.

Brenly lined the next pitch from Gullickson over the left field fence for his fourth homer of the season. In the fifth, Brown made the score 5-1 with his fourth homer, and Davis singled home a run in the seventh off reliever Ted Power.

Three Deadlocked At Westchester

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — While Ray Floyd likes the sun, Mike Reid prefers swinging in the rain.

"Nobody likes it. Everybody would rather be playing in warm, sunny weather the veteran Floyd said Saturday after his 18th hole birdie had provided him with a spot in a three-way tie for the lead going in to the final round of the $600,000 Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic.

But Reid disagreed.

"I'm almost more comfortable under these conditions," the soft-spoken, slender Reid said after he, too, had birdied the 18th and tied Floyd and Bob Tway for the 54-hole lead at 205, eight under par on the rain-drenched Westchester Country Club course.

"I was out there making friends with the day, really glad to be playing, not looking around for an official to stop play, happy with a piece of the lead, glad we were able to play.

"It's the kind of day you know you're not going to hit every fairway and every green. You have to be creative, resourceful.

"I hope it rains again tomorrow, because that demands patience and that's my strong suit," said Reid, who is closing in on $1 million in career earnings but has yet to take a title in a 10-year PGA Tour career.

Reid, who had a 3-under-par 68 in the difficult conditions, now faces a stern test in this latest attempt to break through: the veteran Floyd, toughened and tested by more than two decades of competition and 19 times a tournament winner, and the unawed Tway, a winner earlier this year in San Diego.

"I've been there many times before. I know what it is to win, what you have to do to win," Floyd said after a round of 70.

"I don't care how many times he's been there, I've got as good chance to win as anybody," retorted Tway after a solid 69.

"It's been frustrating, disappointing," Reid said of his career-long non-winning string. "Playing for 10 years, an average of 30 tournaments a year, in every tournament thinking you have a chance to win ....

"Sooner or later, it's going to happen: I'm going to win a tournament."

Willie Wood, the 5-foot-7, 135-pounder called "Wee Willie" by his fellow pros, salvaged a 73 and was two shots off the pace going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $108,000 first prize.

Brett Upper, Gil Morgan and Scott Simpson were another stroke back at 208. Simpson and Morgan had third round 70s, while Upper birdied the 18th for a 74.

Tom Watson shot a 70 and was seven shots back at 212. Also at that figure, one under par, was former Westchester champion Andy North, who will defend his U.S. Open title next week on Long Island. North had a 72.

Floyd, who won two PGA national championships and the 1976 Masters, was one under par for the day and tied for the lead going to the 17th hole.

But he put his approach in a bunker and found there was a small rock immediately behind his ball.

He sent the sand shot across the green into rough, then chipped back and made a 10-12 foot par-putt.

"That was a critical hole, a big putt. I could have made a double (bogey). Then to follow it up with the shot on the 18th (a pitch that hung on the lip of the cup) where I almost made eagle, that made it a very nice finish for me," he said.

"If I'm going to beat Martina, this is my best shot — on clay," said Lloyd, who once captured a record 125 consecutive matches on the slow surface. "Her game is more effective on grass and faster surfaces."

This one was played on red clay, the perfect surface for a baseliner like Lloyd who likes to thread passing shots up the line or whip one cross-court when the opponent isn't expecting it. On this day, she did it to perfection in the final two sets.

She broke Navratilova in the third game of the final set, beginning a string that would carry her to victory. Lloyd won the final four games of the match and six of the last seven.

"At 3-1 in the second set, I started cruising," Lloyd said. "I started attacking from the baseline. I served better. I played the big points better.

"I played great the last two sets."

Ranked second in the world behind Navratilova, this was Lloyd's 18th Grand Slam singles title, the most among active players. Even more remarkable, it is the 13th consecutive year Lloyd has won at least one Grand Slam singles crown, a streak that began at the French Open in 1974.

"I am happy," Lloyd said. "Last year, I hadn't beaten her in ages. I finally broke through. This year, it wasn't a fluke.

"I don't think many people gave me a chance to win this tournament. They thought more of Steffi (Graf of West Germany), Hana, Martina and Helena (Sukova of Czechoslovakia).

"I didn't think I would win either."

Navratilova was impressed with Lloyd's play.

"I played well," she said. "I have nothing to hang my head about.

"She passed better today than I think she has ever done against me. This is probably the best I've ever played and lost a Grand Slam final.

"I'm disappointed, but I'm not going to hide."

Thurston and Carawan each added two hits for H&D while Ledowich Johnson had three and Robin Joyner had two for Garris-Evans.

Little League

Jarman's Auto 7
Wellcome 5

Nicky Phillips' RBI single knocked in Omar Jordan after wild pitches had broken a 4-4 tie in the seventh inning as Jarman's Auto took a 7-5 Tar Heel Little League victory over Wellcome Saturday.

Wellcome had gone ahead 4-2 in the second inning before Jarman came back with two runs in the top of the third to tie it at 4-4. The score remained tied until the seventh inning when Jarman's outscored Wellcome 3-1.

Luke Wendling opened the top of the seventh with a walk. Russell Williamson then reached on a fielder's choice that forced out Wendling. Dru Lewis then reached on an error by the right fielder. Jordan singled to load the bases and wild pitches enabled Williamson and Lewis to score. Mitchell Brown reached on an error by the third baseman and stole second. Phillips followed with his RBI single to score Jordan.

Wellcome came up with only run in the bottom of the inning when Tucker Moore doubled, went to second on a passed ball and came home on a sacrifice by Will Pleasants. After a single by Josh Potter, Wellcome hit into two consecutive putouts from the second baseman to the first baseman to end the game.

Williamson and Jordan had two hits apiece to lead Jarman's. Moore and Potter each had two hits to lead Wellcome.

1st Federal 2

Al DeBiase had two home runs, a double and seven RBI as Moose defeated First Federal 31-2 in a Tar Heel Little League Baseball game Saturday.

Moose scored all the runs it would need in the first inning. DeBiase was the first to reach when he walked. Montez Barrett followed with another walk. Jason Krause then notched a home run to bring in three runs.

Moose added seven runs in the second, five in the third, four in the fourth, one in the fifth and 11 in the sixth to complete the scoring.

First Federal scored its two runs in the fifth inning following consecutive singles by Chris Gyves and Kevin Corbett. Gyves scored on a fielder's choice and Corbett scored on a RBI single by Macco Wilkins.

DeBiase went 4-6 to lead Moose, Jason Krause added three more hits.

Optimists 11

Brandon Moore's RBI single in the bottom of the eighth scored Robbie Burlington and gave the Jaycees a 12-11 come-from-behind victory over Optimists in a North State League baseball game Saturday.

Optimist had broken a 6-6 tie in the top of the seventh with five runs to take an 11-6 lead. The Jaycees came back to score six runs in the bottom of the extra inning and win the game.

Neal Eley started things off when he reached on an error by the center fielder. Andre Eley followed with a walk and Bryan Hill was hit by a pitch. Ben Edwards reached on an error, allowing Neal Elby to score. Walks to Ethan Brinn and Robbie Burlington brought in two more. Brandon Moore singled in Edwards and Brinn. Kory Welch reached on an error, scoring Burlington with the final run.

Andre Eley led the Jaycee's attack with three hits, Neal Eley and Burlington added two hits apiece. The Optimists was led by Brian Gooding, Mitch Jones and Steve Nobles who collected three hits apiece.

Lions 3

Jay Kuykendall pitched a one-hitter and struck out three of four batters in the top of the sixth inning to end the Lion's late threat as Sportsworld defeated the Lions 4-3 in a North State League baseball game Saturday.

With a 4-3 lead in the top of the sixth, Kuykendall opened the inning by striking out the first two batters. Then, after a walk, he came back with another strikeout to end the game.

The Lions scored three runs in the top of the fifth to go up 3-1 but Sportsworld came back to score three runs in the bottom of the fifth to take a 4-3 lead.

Parham Stanley started things off with a single. Kuykendall followed with a double. Aldrich Sharpe drove in Stanley and Shea Harper walked. Steven Anthony wacked a double to score Kuykendall and Harper.

Kuykendall and Harper both went 2-3 to lead Sportsworld.

Orioles Yip, Er, Nip Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — Baltimore Orioles Manager Earl Weaver compares defensive lapses in baseball with the putting yips in golf.

"A yip is what you get when you miss a two-foot putt," Weaver said after the Orioles defeated the New York Yankees 7-5 Saturday with the benefit of four unearned runs.

"The putts start getting harder and harder after you miss the first few," Weaver said. "It's the same with fielding. Meacham (Yankees shortstop, Bobby) is going through what our third basemen went through. You miss the first grounder and the next one gets tougher. Then the one after that gets even tougher."

Meacham's two errors Saturday, his 10th and 11th of the year, gave the New York Yankees 56 for the season, worst in the American League.

With the Orioles leading 1-0 in the top of the third, Floyd Rayford lined a one-out single to left. Alan Wiggins then hit what appeared to be a perfect double play ball to Meacham. Meacham booted it and both runners were safe. Lee Lacy followed with a grounder to third baseman Mike Pagliarulo, whose throw to second baseman Willie Randolph forced Wiggins, but Randolph's throw to first pulled Don Mattingly off the bag. Fred Lynn followed immediatley with a three-run homer and the Orioles had a 4-0 lead.

"It makes it tough to win, it really does," said Yankees Manager Lou Piniella. "We really anticipated having a good defense in spring training, but it hasn't developed. I talked to him, tried to put his mind at ease and get him to relax when I benched him for three games. But we certainly have to shore our defense up. It's tough to win up here when you give up a few more outs for the other team."

Meacham's fifth inning error did not do any damage, but the Yankees' shortstop is aware of the pressure he faces.

"I knew when I was out of the line-up," Meacham said, "that all eyes would be on me when I came back. There is pressure on me and I have to deal with it so there's no sense worrying about it."

Boddicker, 7-1, lost his shutout bid with two out in the eighth when Mattingly hit a two-run homer, his eighth, then he lost his complete game in the ninth when Pagliarulo hit a one-out, three-run homer, his 13th. Boddicker gave up nine hits — including ninth-inning singles to Mike Easler and Dan Pasqua before the Pagliarulo homer.

Aase logged his American League-leading 16th save by striking out Willie Randolph and pinch-hitter Ken Griffey, and he now has 12 saves and a victory in his last 15 outings.

Boddicker gave up a leadoff double to Rickey Henderson in the first inning, but Lacy made a running catch of Mattingly's fly to right and threw out Henderson at third. Boddicker then held the Yankees hitless until Meacham singled with one out in the sixth inning.

The Orioles scored in the first inning when Alan Wiggins singled, stole second, moved to third on Lacy's flyball and came home on Lynn's grounder. In the fourth, Shelby hit his fifth homer of the year after Mike Young drew a one-out walk. It was Shelby's second homer in two days.

Baltimore added a run in the sixth inning off reliever Bob Tewksbury on singles by Cal Ripken and Young and Ron Hassey's passed ball.

Meacham committed a second error in the fifth inning, giving the Yankees 56 for the season, leading the American League.

California 8
Cleveland 2

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rookie star Wally Joyner gives credit to the Califoronia veterans for helping him endure his first major league slump.

"Nobody likes to be in a slump, but the guys have been great to me," Joyner said after snapping a personal 0-for-17 skid with a double and his 18th homer in the Angels 8-2 rout of the Cleveland Indians Saturday.

"Reggie Jackson was saying to me 'You're all right, you're all right, just have good at-bats.'

"Last night, George Hendrick was saying to me, 'You're a threat, you're going to start hitting again,'" Joyner said.

Joyner's average had slipped from .308 to .284. The hits in his third and fourth at-bats against Cleveland left his mark at .290. The left-hander's 18 home runs topped the major leagues, and he has 44 RBI.

"I finally got a couple of hits back-to-back and it looks like my swing is back," Joyner said.

Jackson's two-run double keyed a five-run third inning that sparked Mike Witt to his sixth victory in 10 decisions.

Jackson said everyone was asking Joyner when he would hit his next home run. "My job as a 19-year veteran is to let him know that if he keeps handling the good with the bad and the bad with the good, he's going to be all right," Jackson said.

The right-hander Witt surrendered eight hits, walked two and struck out five before he was relieved with none out in the ninth by Doug Corbett. Andre Thornton and Mel Hall hit fourth inning solo homers off Witt.

California took a 1-0 lead in the second inning against Tom Candiotti, 3-6. Hendrick singled, stole second and scored on Dick Schofield's double.

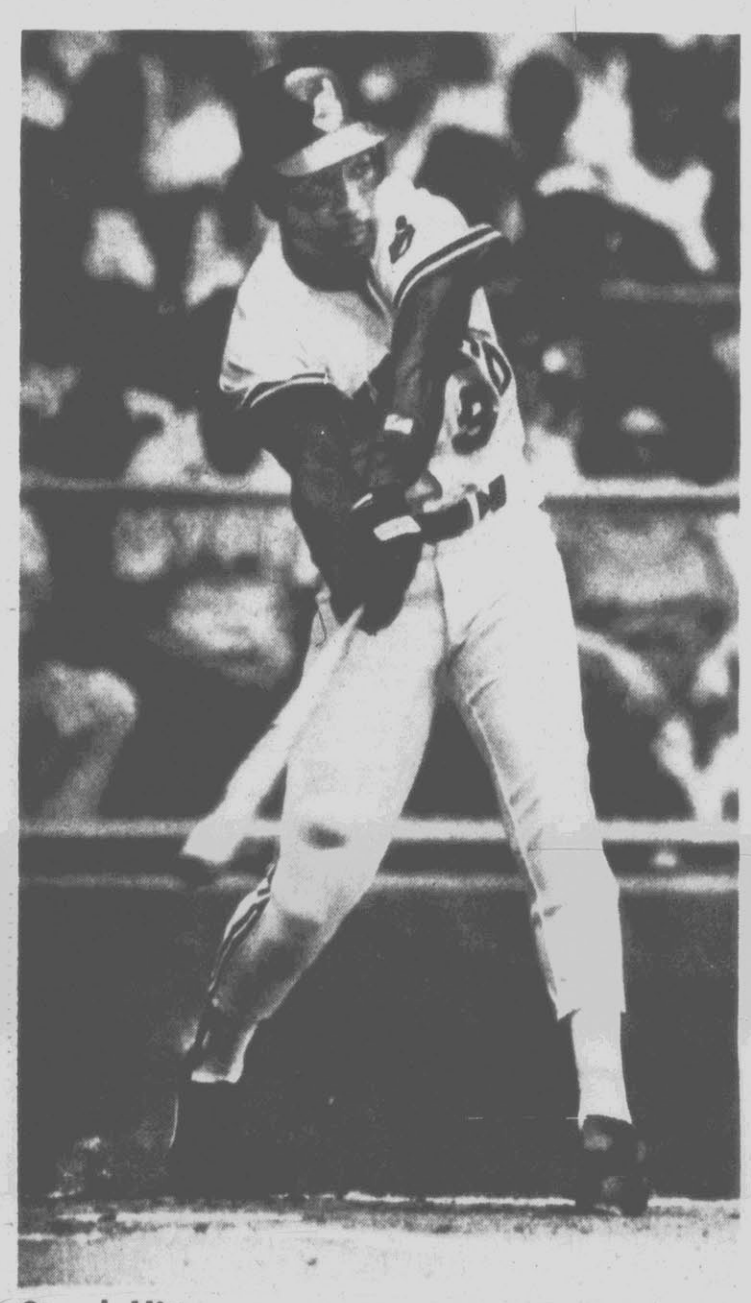

Bob Boone opened the Angels third with a single, and one out later, Gary Pettis walked. Jackson lined his two-run double, and Doug DeCinces, who had three hits, followed with a run-scoring double to chase Candiotti in favor of Rich Yett.

Hendrick singled DeCinces to third, and DeCinces scored and Hendrick moved to second as left fielder Otis Nixon made a throwing error on the play. Hendrick went to third when Joyner grounded out and scored on Yett's wild pitch.

Thornton's ninth homer and Hall's seventh cut the Angel lead to 6-2 in the fourth.

Joyner scored in the sixth when he doubled off Bryan Oelkers, breaking an 0-for-17 skid, and later came home as Boone grounded into a double play. Joyner homered to right in his next at-bat, in the eighth inning, giving him at least one homer against all 10 American League teams he has faced this season.

Cleveland's Joe Carter blooped a single to center field in the first inning to extend his hitting streak to 20 games, longest in the major leagues this season.

Homers Rally Pitt To 12-10 Win

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

Axel Smith and Fred Bryant each knocked two-run homers to key a nine-run sixth inning as Pitt County American Legion Post 39 rallied past Snow Hill Post 94 in baseball action Friday night, 12-10.

Heading into the bottom of the sixth, Pitt County trailed 7-1, due mostly to an abundance of errors. Post 39 committed 12 errors, scattered between the beginning of the game and the end. Snow Hill committed eight errors of their own, three of them coming in the decisive sixth inning.

Shane Adams opened the bottom of the sixth with a triple. Smith then came on to hit his two-run dinger. Lee Hardee reached on an error by the third baseman. Starting pitcher Chris Hooker was then replaced by Eddie Honrine who came in to face Bryant whose shot over the centerfield fence made it 7-5.

Bronswell Patrick then came up and reached on another error by the third baseman. David Daniels notched a single and was able to stretch it to second after a wild throw by the catcher sailed into center field. Another throw to third was wild, allowing Patrick to score and Daniels to reach third. Shea Beamon replaced Honrine and got the first out of the inning on Ty Little's grounder to third.

Steve Mills followed with a sacrifice fly to score Daniels and tie the game a 7-7. Eric Jarman was then walked. Adams reached on an error by the second baseman and Smith was walked. Hardee then came up and smashed a three-run double that gave Post 39 their first lead of the game 10-7. Bryant's fly out to center ended the inning.

Bronswell Patrick went the distance to pick up his third win against no losses. He gave up nine hits and 10 runs, only one of which was earned, struck out four and walked four.

Pitt County scored two runs in the bottom of the seventh to stretch their lead to 12-8.

With two outs in the bottom of the seventh, Little reached on a walk. Mills followed with a triple to score Little and Mills came home on an error by the shortstop.

However, Pitt County had a hard time closing the door in the ninth. Andy Varnell reached on an error by the shortstop which allowed him to go to second. He moved to third on a wild pitch. Scott Jones, who had entered the game in the sixth as a replacement for Hooker, rapped a single to centerfield to score Varnell.

Jones went to second on Ervin Collins' ground out to first and Gary Ginn followed with a double. Beamon struck out. Jones scored on error by the third baseman that allowed Ginn ot move to third. Ginn came home on an error by the second baseman that narrowed the score to 12-10.

Honrine then reached on an error by the first baseman to bring the tying run up to the plate. Jamie Lang hit a short hopper to the shortstop who fielded it cleanly and threw to first to end the game.

Pitt County Coach Toby Holliday said he was happy with the win but didn't like to rely on home runs to win ballgames. "We're still making way too many mistakes physically and mentally," Hollieday said. "More or less we have to keep our mental intensity up for nine innings. I am not looking to make great plays. I'm just looking to make the plays you are supposed to make."

The two teams traded runs in the first two innings. Snow Hill got on the board first when Shea Beamon scored on a double steal. Pitt County came back to score in the bottom of the second when Fred Bryant scored on an error by the shortstop.

Snow Hill added three runs in the fourth. Hooker rapped an RBI single in the fourth to bring home Anthony Jones. An error on the catcher scored Andy Varnell and Hooker.

In the fifth, Snow Hill's Tony Nichols' RBI single scored Honrine and Jones scored on a fielder's choice. In the sixth, Post 94 added another run when Ervin Collins scored on Gary Ginn's grounder.

Bryant and Adams led the attack for Post 39 with two hits and two RBI apiece. Hardee added three RBI. Jones led Snow Hill with three hits, two of which were doubles, and two runs.

Pitt County, now 3-2, plays Edenton on Tuesday in Edenton. Snow Hill, 1-3, was to play at Kinston Saturday night, then travels to Rocky Mounton Tuesday.

Greene Central Captures State's Softball Crown

SNOW HILL — Greene Central shook off visions of last year and rallied to take a 4-3 victory over Newton-Conover Friday night to win the State 1A/2A Softball Championship.

The Lady Rams, who advanced to the finals of the State 3A/4A championship last year, only to bow in two straight after winning the first game of the best-of-three series.

Friday night, Newton-Conover pushed out into a 3-1 lead in the fifth inning, and Coach Tim Corbett admitted he was feeling a sense of deja vu.

"All I could think of was last year when we won the first game, then lost the next two," he said.

But Corbett said he didn't have to do anything to pick the Lady Rams up. "We had a controversial play at home plate that put them up 3-1, and I think that got the girls going," Corbett said.

The play came when the Lady Red Devils had a runner on third come home hard standing up, colliding with the waiting catcher who had the ball in plenty of time for the tag. The collision knocked the ball loose. "The rule book says you've got to come in sliding in that situation," Corbett said. "But they let the run stand."

Greene Central pushed into the lead in the second inning scoring a single run. Sherri Williams singled and moved up on an error. She scored on Jenny Hardison's single.

But Newton-Conover rallied for two runs in the fourth and added the controversial run in the fifth for the 3-1 lead.

The Lady Rams came back with two in the sixth to tie it up. Denise Warren reached on an error and Stephanie Streeter slapped a two-run homer.

Then, in the seventh, the Rams pushed over the winning run. With one out, Hardison tripled, scoring on Dalen Herring's sacrifice fly.

Laticia Warren, Streeter and Hardison each had two hits to lead Greene Central.

Corbett said that he will lose five girls to graduation and another is transferring out of the district.

"They did a great job for the school these past two years," the coach said. "This is the first time that any girls' team from Greene Central has won a state championship."

Arizona Rallies, Stays Unbeaten

Heredia gave up a second-inning grand slam to fall behind top-ranked Florida State 5-0 Friday. The junior right-hander said he kept throwing hard because he remembered that Arizona had rallied to beat Maine earlier in the tournament.

"I really wanted to keep my team in the game, because I've seen our team come back from a 7-0 deficit," Heredia said.

The Wildcats rallied again and beat Florida State 9-5. Heredia went the distance for his 16th victory in 19 decisions, a school record.

"You just have to give most of the credit to Heredia," Florida State Coach Mike Martin said. "We got off to a great start, and then the last seven innings we didn't get a sniff."

Fifth-ranked Arizona was to play defending champion Miami at Saturday night in the double-elimination Series. Florida State was to play Oklahoma State earlier.

The big hit in Arizona's rally was Mike Senne's three-run homer, which put the Wildcats ahead 7-5 in the sixth inning. Heredia then took command and retired the last 11 batters he faced.

"I got inspired when we went ahead, and then I was mentally tough," Heredia said.

Senne's homer knocked out Florida State ace Mike Loynd, 20-2. Loynd had won 17 straight games and was trying to set an NCAA Division I record for victories in a season.

Changes Face Opposition

Attendance at college baseball games has doubled since 1979 and the quality of play has never been better. But a plan to change the format of the sport's showcase event has upset a lot of people.

In an effort to obtain a $1 million television contract, the NCAA is planning to change the College World Series from an eight-team, double-elimination tournament to a single-elimination Final Four in 1988.

That has angered many coaches and two of college baseball's biggest boosters — Omaha and the ESPN cable network.

The College World Series has prospered during its 37 years in Omaha, but the demands of a major network contract could force the NCAA to leave the city for a larger stadium that could produce more revenue.

A megabuck TV deal could also squeeze out ESPN, which has televised the College World Series for the past seven years. Officials at the all-sports network say they might abandon their coverage of the tournament's early rounds if they lose the rights to the championship game.

"I think it's a crime to alter an event that has been so successful ... and which has meant so much to college baseball," said Maine coach John Winkin, whose team played in this year's series.

Mississippi State coach Ron Polk, president of the American Baseball Coaches Association, said members of the organization are overwhelmingly opposed to the Final Four plan.

"We're concerned about the loss of public awareness for college baseball that could result from this format," he said. "We don't want to lose ESPN (and) we're concerned for Omaha and the great people there."

Mayor Mike Boyle said more than 500,000 people have signed petitions to keep the series in Omaha, which has a population of 345,000.

"That's incredible," he said. "We're overwhelmed by the response. We've got more signatures than there are people in Omaha."

Boyle said the city would consider expanding and renovating 15,300-seat Rosenblatt Stadium if the NCAA agrees to keep the championship in Omaha.

Jerry Miles, director of men's championships for the NCAA, said he hopes an agreement can be reached.

"We would like to see the series stay in Omaha, but really it's up to Omaha," he said. "It depends on what they're willing to do and what they want in return."

Miles said a network contract would give college baseball wider exposure.

"It's a great event as it is, but if we're going to make it the premier event we think it can be, we need coverage on a national over-the-air network," he said.

ESPN, which paid $175,000 to televise the 1986 series, doesn't have the financial clout to outbid the major networks for the title game.

"We're in approximately 44 percent of the homes the networks are in, so it would be hard to go one-on-one with them," said Steve Bornstein, an ESPN programming executive.

Spokesmen at ABC, NBC and CBS said their networks would consider televising the championship game after ESPN's contract expires next year.

"We definitely want to look at it," said Donn Bernstein, director of college sports at ABC. "But we have to answer a lot of questions first. Is it sellable? What kind of ratings would we get? How many homes could we reach?"

Network officials expect the baseball championship to be included in a package deal when the NCAA negotiates its next basketball tournament contract. If that happens, the network that gets the lucrative basketball contract would also be required to televise the baseball finals.

Bernstein said the value of the baseball event will be determined by sponsor interest.

"Who knows what it's worth?," he said. "'Ask Chevrolet. Do they think it's worth $1 million? Does Coca-Cola? Does Datsun?'"

At Collegiate Baseball, the sport's leading publication, the debate over the championship format is a family affair. Editor and publisher Lou Pavlovich Sr. supports the Final Four plan. His son, managing editor Lou Jr., is against it.

"I think it's a dangerous type of format because it's changing a good thing," Lou Jr. said. "I don't think it's right to crucify the people of Omaha and ESPN after all they've done for college baseball."

His father thinks Miles and the NCAA "deserve a medal" for taking a bold step.

"The game is larger than any one town or any one network," Lou Sr. said. "What's good for the game is what's important and I think this will be good for the game."

Unknown Pernfors Makes It To Finals

PARIS (AP) — Mikael Pernfors looks as if he belongs on the set of "Rock 'n' Roll High School," not in the finals of the French Open tennis championships.

With his crewcut hair, black knit shirt and constantly moving feet, it is easy to envision Pernfors hopping in his '62 Corvette for a trip to the drive-in and a quick burger and fries.

At 5-foot-8, with brown hair and a bit of a Georgia drawl, he's hardly the image of a Swedish tennis star.

Yet he is the one who made it to the finals, keeping alive a tradition of begun by Bjorn Borg and continued by Mats Wilander.

Unseeded and virtually unknown before the tournament began two weeks ago, Pernfors beat eighth-seeded Henri Leconte 2-6, 7-5, 7-6, 6-3 on Friday to reach the championship match.

His opponent will be top-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia, who had an easy time against disheartened 13th seed Johan Kriek 6-2, 6-1, 6-0.

Pernfors is the first unseeded player in the men's final since Wilander in 1982, the year he first won the championship.

The Pernfors-Lendl meeting Sunday will be their first.

Navratilova won her semifinal Thursday over Czechoslovakia's Helena Sukova. Lloyd also beat a Czechoslovak, Hana Mandlikova, in the semis.

Before Paris, Pernfors' claim to fame was a pair of NCAA singles championships won at the University of Georgia.

He surprised fifth-seeded Stefan Edberg of Sweden in the second round, 11th-seeded Martin Jaite in the fourth and third-seeded Boris Becker in the quarterfinals, and added Leconte with a game highlighted by speed and great groundstrokes.

"He's making passing shots that are unbelievable," Leconte said. "And he's very, very fast, like a rabbit."

Pernfors said he is playing the best tennis of his life.

"I feel like I can't miss a tenmis ball," he said. "I feel like whatever an opponent does, I can counter it.

"I've always felt good about my tennis, but I've never felt this good."

Kriek could not say the same.

"I was disgusted with myself," he said. "Today is the day I shouldn't have even woken up. It was bad out there. I have never played so badly in my life."

The lone American among the men's seeds, Kriek was bothered by the chill rain and wind that enveloped center court for most of the day and was never able to display the kind of power tennis that allowed him to beat clay-court specialist Guillermo Vilas in the quarterfinals.

Kriek committed four double-faults, lost eight of 11 serves, held break point only once and, after holding serve to start the second set, dropped 12 consecutive games.

The crowd whistled and booed him and Kriek said he deservd it.

"If you don't give your 100 percent, what do you expect?" he said. "I was so upset. I fell apart. ... Disaster. I beat myself. The guy didn't have an opponent."

Games Scheduled, But Fights Key Friday Night's NL Action

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Baseball games were scheduled, but the Friday Night Fights were the main event in Pittsburgh, St. Louis and San Diego.

At Three Rivers Stadium, benches cleared and fists flew during the first game of the New York Mets-Pittsburgh doubleheader. Play was further delayed when the Mets refused to take the field after the brawl.

"It was just a typical baseball fight," said Pirates' Manager Jim Leyland after the teams split, with Pittsburgh winning the opener 7-1 and New York taking the nightcap 10-4.

The benches also emptied in Busch Stadium after Shawon Dunston of the Chicago Cubs charged the mound after getting hit with a pitch from St. Louis reliever Greg Bargar following Chris Speier's home run. No blows were struck and order was quickly restored in a game Chicago won 9-3.

In San Diego, the battles were verbal.

Padres' Manager Steve Boros was ejected during the pre-game lineup presentations when he give umpire Charlie Williams a videotape on a controversial call Thursday night that resulted in Steve Garvey's first-ever ejection.

"I'm not proud about this, but it's something I had to do," Boros said. "The knot in my stomach is gone."

Later Friday night, Williams ejected third baseman Graig Nettles in a game San Diego beat Atlanta 3-2 in 11 innings.

In other National League games, Montreal downed Philadelphia 10-9 in 10 innings, Los Angeles edged Houston 3-2 and Cincinnati defeated San Francisco 5-3.

The Mets-Pirates trouble started in the fifth inning of the first game. Gary Carter of the Mets was batting when he asked home plate umpire Billy Williams to look at the ball pitcher Rick Rhoden was using.

Williams checked Rhoden's glove, talked briefly with Mets' Manager Dave Johnson and gave Rhoden a verbal warning. Rhoden then struck out Carter.

As he was walking off the field, Rhoden exchanged words with Mets' first base coach Bill Robinson. Then, Robinson pushed Rhoden in the chest with both hands, triggering the fight.

"Bill Robinson was the one in their dugout always checking the ball. I was coming off the field and he called me a cheater," Rhoden said. "Hey, I didn't want to fight Bill Robinson. I just want to forget it."

Said Johnson: "(Rhoden) was upset by Bill asking the umpires to check the ball. Bill said you don't have to cheat and Rhoden said some words to Bill. I don't blame Bill."

"If it was me, I wouldn't have pushed him, I would have hit him. Rhoden's the reason it was all happening to begin with. He flaunts it, what he does on the mound. We had a couple of balls on the bench and they were all scuffed on the same spot."

Rhoden scattered four hits over 7 2-3 innings for the first-game victory and rookie Barry Bonds hit his second major-league homer.

Cubs 9, Cardinals 3

Speier hit two home runs and Gary Matthews and Leon Durham also homered, powering Chicago over St. Louis.

Speier entered the game with only one home run this season, but connected for the first two-homer game of his 16-year career. Speier hit a solo home run in the second inning and a three-run shot in the eighth.

One batter after Speier's second homer, Dunston was hit by a pitch from Bargar and started toward the mound as both benches emptied. Dunston was restrained by home plate umpire Gary Darling, who was working his second major-league game.

The incident was kept under control and Dunston was ejected.

Padres 3, Braves 2

Marvell Wynne drove in three runs with three hits, including an RBI single with two outs in the 11th inning that led San Diego over Atlanta.

After Jeff Dedmon, 2-2, retired the first two Padres in the 11th, Leon Roberts singled and took second on a single by Tony Gwynn. Wynne then grounded a single into left and Roberts scored his third run of the game.

Roberts reached in the first inning on an error by Atlanta first baseman Bob Horner and later scored on Wynne's groundout.

Expos 10, Phillies 9

Wallach connected for his ninth homer of the season against Dave Rucker, 0-2. The Phillies lost for the second time in 11 games.

Mike Schmidt homered and drove in three runs for visiting Philadelphia, which led 8-1 after 2½ innings.

Dodgers 3, Astros 2

Mariano Duncan led off the eighth with a single off Bob Knepper, 9-3, and took second when catcher Mark Bailey made a wild throw on Steve Sax' bunt. The runners advanced on a grounder and Bill Madlock was intentionally walked, setting up Marshall's sacrifice fly.

Ken Howell, 2-2, got the victory. Howell relieved with runners on second and third and one out in the top of the eighth and struck out Alan Ashby and Bailey.

Reds 5, Giants 3

Kurt Stillwell and Ron Oester hit RBI singles, highlighting a four-run second inning that led Cincinnati over San Francisco.

The Reds scored four times off Scott Garrelts, 5-6, and added an insurance run in the eighth on an RBI single by Buddy Bell.

Pittsburgh Will Hold Tryouts

The Pittsburgh Pirates will hold a tryout camp on Saturday at 10 a.m. at East Carolina's Harrington Field.

The tryout is open to young men ages 16-22. American Legion players must have and present written permission from their coach or post commander to participate in the tryout camp.

Fisheries Regulations

Coastal fishermen will have new regulations for gill net and crab pot buoys, bay scallops, scrap fish and nursery areas, according to John Costlow, chairman of the N.C. Marine Fisheries Commission.

Commissioners decided at their meeting May 29 in Beaufort not to take action on the 3 percent tolerance of undersized clams or enforcement of the flounder trawl net minimum mesh size. The commissioners concluded that both situtations need additional study.

Effective March 1, 1987, two solid yellow buoys, no less than 5 inches in diameter and length, will be required at each end of a gill net and the buoys will have engraved identification or attached metal or plastic identification tags. If there is a long line of attached gill nets, a single legal buoy must be attached to each end of the single nets, in addition to the two buoys at the far ends of the set.

Eel, crab, fish and shrimp pots must have single legal buoys of any color except yellow. Seines pulled by one or two boats must have a legal international orange buoy attached at a minimum of every 100 yards along the corkline, and a minimum of 24 by 24 inches international orange flag flying in the rigging of each boat.

The bay scallop season, effective Aug. 1, will have an open season from the second Monday in January through the last Friday in May, a possible hand-equipment harvest Aug. 1-Sept. 15, and a possible four-day season in December. The commercial limit is 20 bushels a day, not to exceed 40 bushels a day in any combined fishing operation (10 and 20 bushels for the summer season).

A limit of 10,000 pounds, or 50 percent of the total catch (whichever is greater), will be the new limit beginning Aug. 1 on finfish taken in legitimate commercial fishing operations.

From Sept. 1 through May 14, shrimp or crap trawling can be opened in select secondary nursery areas; some secondary areas will be closed permanently to trawling.

The commission also passed resolutions requesting adequate stormwater runoff controls as soon as possible to adequately safeguard the quality of water in the coastal area.

Big Rock Blue Marlin Tournament

The 28th annual Big Rock Blue Marlin Tournament begins today in Morehead City and will run through June 14. Proceeds from the event go to four Ronald McDonald houses in North Carolina and the Newport Developmental Center.

"When it comes to boat entries (140), there isn't a marlin tournament in the world that equals the size of the Big Rock Blue Marlin," said Mark Russell, tournament president.

Participants in the tournament will be required to fish four of the six tournament days and release any fish that weigh less than 150 pounds. Last year's winning marlin weighed 534½ pounds.

Russell said the tournament this year is dedicated to the memory of Captain Michael J. Smith, a Beaufort native who was the pilot of the space shuttle Challenger.

Canoe Outing

Kelly Davis, a biological technician at Mattamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge in Hyde County, will lead a four-mile canoe outing June 21 on Lake Mattamuskeet. Anyone interested in canoeing and observation of osprey banding is invited.

Mrs. Davis said a limited number of canoes are available and interested persons should register early by calling 926-4021. Non-refuge canoes are permitted. Canoeists will meet at O.A. Peay School in Swan Quarter at 8:30 a.m. and return around noon.

Clemens Shackles Brewers On 4 Hits

AP Baseball Writer

The undefeated Red Sox's pitcher won his 10th straight decision Friday night, pitching a four-hitter to beat the Milwaukee Brewers 3-0.

His 10-0 record is best in the major leagues, and his eight strikeouts gave him an American League-leading 98. Wade Boggs drove in all three of Boston's runs as the Red Sox won for the sixth time in seven games.

"He struggled early, but he pitched himself out of tough situations," Red Sox Manager John McNamara said. "He wasn't overpowering."

Still, the Brewers had him clocked at 93 mph with his fastball, and 0-for-4 Ernest Riles said, "He was as strong in the ninth as he was in the first. The scary thing about it is, he could get even better."

Milwaukee stranded seven runners, and the Red Sox committed three errors.

In the rest of the American League, Texas defeated Seattle 6-5 in 10 innings, Baltimore defeated New York 5-2, Toronto clobbered Detroit 12-2, Cleveland shut out California 3-0, Chicago defeated Oakland 6-4 and Kansas City beat Minnesota 6-1.

Boggs drove in one run with a single in the third inning, and he gave Clemens some room to work with a two-run double in the eighth. Milwaukee starter Danny Darwin gave up only six hits.

Rangers 6, Mariners 5

Oddibe McDowell, who tripled in a run earlier in the game, hit an RBI double in the 10th inning to lift Texas over visiting Seattle after the Mariners had erased a 3-0 Rangers lead.

Seattle, held hitless for 4 1-3 innings by Mike Mason, scored four runs in the fifth, two on Dave Henderson's homer, and another in the seventh to take a 5-3 lead. Texas rookies Pete Incaviglia and Ruben Sierra each hit solo homers in the ninth to send the game into extra innings.

Incaviglia's was his 11th, while Sierra hit his third in only 16 major league at-bats.

Reliever Mitch Williams went 4-0 with the victory.

Orioles 5, Yankees 2

Scott McGregor defeated Ron Guidry for the first time in six career decisions, and Don Aase earned his major league-leading 15th save as Baltimore won at Yankee Stadium for the first time in nearly two years. The Yankees had beaten the Orioles 10 straight times at home since June 17, 1984.

McGregor, 5-4, allowed six hits over seven innings, and Cal Ripken and John Shelby homered for the Orioles. Dale Berra hit a home run for New York.

Guidry, 4-5, lost his fourth straight decision for the first time in his career.

Blue Jays 12, Tigers 2

Jesse Barfield drove in four runs, three with his 13th homer, and Doyle Alexander pitched the Toronto Blue Jays past the Tigers. Alexnader surrendered five hits in seven innings, getting an inning of relief help apiece from John Cerutti and Dennis Lamp.

Alexander held the Tigers scoreless until the sixth when Darrell Evans hit a sacrifice fly.

Indians 3, Angels 0

Ken Schrom threw a two-hitter to outduel Kirk McCaskill, and the Indians ended a three-game losing streak by beating California. The Angels have only three hits in their last two games. They were one-hit by the Yankees on Wednesday.

Joe Carter hit a two-run homer, his eighth, to give Schrom a three-run cushion in the eighth. Carter already had extended the major league's longest hitting streak to 19 games with a single in the first inning.

White Sox 6, A's 4

Rich Dotson worked 8 1-3 innings in his longest outing since 1984, and Ozzie Guillen and Julio Cruz each drove in two runs for the White Sox, who have beaten the A's two straight. Dotson had not pitched into the ninth inning since working a complete game on Sept. 26, 1984 against Minnesota. He yielded eight hits.

The White Sox scored three runs in the fourth inning to break a 1-1 tie. Guillen drove in the go-ahead run. Guillen had a double and two singles, and Cruz singled twice.

Royals 6, Twins 1

Charlie Leibrandt pitched a six-hitter, and George Brett went 4-for-4 with two RBI to pace host Kansas City over Minnesota. The Royals have won eight of their last nine.

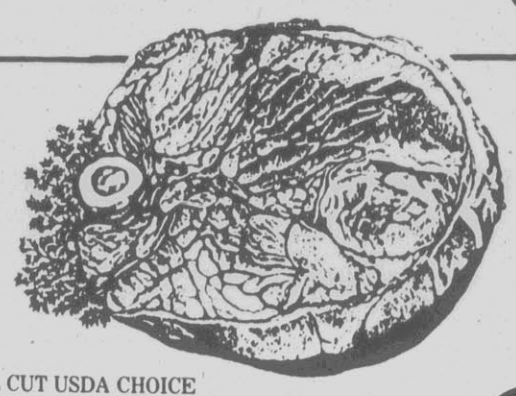

Leibrandt retired 12 in a row to start the game until Tom Brunansky led off the fifth with a single. Kent Hrbek later singled home Brunansky with the Twins' only run.

By ISADORE BARMASH
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — James Wood, the chairman and chief executive at A&P, recalls the time only a few years ago when his company was forced to buy other store chains to expand, because shopping-center developers would not accept stores with A&P's own name: they did too poorly.

The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. is still on the acquisition path — last week it agreed to buy Shopwell Inc. for $64 million in cash, its fourth acquisition in three years. But Wood says the latest takeovers are a sign not of weakness, but of the company's new strength.

"Our balance sheet is good," Wood said in an interview shortly before the Shopwell acquisition was announced. "We probably have too much cash. We're ready for anything."

That bullish perspective is not just the view of those within the company; it is shared by many outsiders, too. Edward F. Comeau, institutional analyst for the Wood Gundy Corp., for example, called the restructuring of A&P "a stellar success," and said he expects "continued margin expansion to fuel superior earnings growth."

The company is on "a good track" noted Robert Gintel, an investment adviser, and operator of the Gintel Fund and two other mutual funds, which together hold about 1.5 million shares of A&P common.

Gintel said that the transformation of A&P had been all the more interesting because it had occurred under the stewardship of a family, the Tengelmanns of West Germany, who now hold 52 percent of the stock. A&P's golden era during the 1950s, he pointed out, came when it was owned by the Hartford family.

"The new family ownership," Gintel said, "has responded to changing times, restored it to financial health and helped bring it into the modern age."

Long the food industry's largest supermarket chain — in 1929 it had 15,000 stores — A&P was tripped up, analysts say, by its out-of-date marketing and expense-control methods, an excess of company brands, conservative policies and high labor rates. While A&P seemed to sit still, other grocery chains were introducing bigger stores, more service departments and efficiencies aimed at cutting wasted expense, said Wood, who was recruited from the Grand Union Co. in 1980.

But since 1982, A&P has instituted drastic changes of its own, including the closing of small, unprofitable stores, in favor of opening larger, higher-margin stores; asking for, and receiving, labor concessions, and divesting itself of other unprofitable assets.

Including some closed in the 1970s, 2,600 stores have been shuttered. A&P withdrew to the Eastern Seaboard, leaving some of its most important markets, including Chicago, Pittsburgh and Kansas City, Mo. It slashed its staff by many thousands. And it dropped most of its private brands.

Now trim and lean, it has only 1,000 stores and is the nation's sixth-largest supermarket chain.

A&P has also virtually pulled out of the manufacturing business, a sizable operation that once produced some 100 different items for its own stores and others — and was a main contributor to the huge losses in the 1970s and early 1980s. Now, the only products that A&P still manufactures are some dairy and bakery goods, and coffee.

"Our 8 O'Clock brand, is the fourth-best-selling coffee brand in America, and it is a brand no one else has," Wood said. "Moreover, it produces a $12 million profit for us, pre-tax."

These moves have resulted in a much-improved bottom line. The company's most recent financial results, released last month, showed a 13.8 percent sales gain in 1985, to $6.6 billion from $5.8 billion in 1984, and 37.3 percent higher operating income, to $119.9 million from $87.3 million.

And with its renewed financial strength, A&P is now aiming for greater growth, both through internal expansion and additional takeovers.

Brokers Expected To Increase Rates

By H.J. MAIDENBERG
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Discount brokers and analysts say they expect most major brokers to emulate a move by Merrill Lynch & Co. to raise its retail commission rates. Merrill Lynch announced that it would increase its rates by an average of 5 percent on stocks and stock options trades involving less than $10,000 starting June 20.

Other full-service brokerage houses reached Friday said only that they were studying Merrill Lynch's action. But Wall Street analysts, while surprised that Merrill's increase was limited to smaller transactions, said that pressure on profits would cause other brokers to follow suit.

If rates are increased, the discounters expect their share of the retail stock trading volume to climb, even if they should raise their own rates. Currently, the discount brokers have a 20 percent share of the retail stock and stock options business.

"Aside from the fact that Merrill Lynch, the industry's leader, usually sets the pace for full-service houses, we expect the others will follow suit because many of them are under intense pressure from their account executives to restore earnings lost by recent cuts in producer payouts," said Leslie C. Quick, chairman of the Quick & Reilly Group, a major discount broker.

Robert J. Sherman, president of the retail group at Prudential-Bache Securities, a leading full-service house, said he was perplexed by Merrill Lynch's move "because its higher rates will impact mainly on the small trader and drive more business to the discounters."

Sherman said his house had no plan to raise rates, "although Pru-Bache is always reviewing its pricing structure." He added that his house raised rates "slightly" last fall on all transactions.

A spokesman for Dean Witter Reynolds, Paul R. Marrone, said his house was also watching the rate situation, but was more concerned with "the competitive factor." Dean Witter last raised rates in early 1984, Marrone noted, but added, "The recent trend among full-service houses to reduce payouts to account executives and other factors has changed the situation since then."

A spokesman for Merrill Lynch, James M. Flynn, said his house had last raised commissions on stock trades two years ago and those on stock options in 1981. "We haven't abandoned the small trader by any means," Flynn declared. "Our Sharebuilder program, which has a million accounts, was specifically set up for small traders who invest small sums. These clients will continue to pay low rates because the rates on these accounts are not based on how many shares they trade."

Perrin H. Long Jr., a leading industry analyst who is with the Lipper Analytical Securities Corp., said: "The fact is that most full-services are focusing more on clients with high net worth because they find the small trader increasingly costly to service in these days of rising overhead. Besides, what better time is there to raise commissions than when the market is booming."

Departing Official Says Consumer Agency 'Lapdog'

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Consumer Product Safety Commission is no longer committed to protecting the public, charges departing Commissioner Stuart M. Statler, who says the agency has changed from a watchdog of industry into a lapdog.

Before long — whether it takes a tragedy or the public just becoming fed up — the result will be Americans demanding more government focus on safety, Statler predicted.

In an interview, Statler said the Reagan administration's dedication to removing government regulations has resulted in a serious reduction in health and safety activities,

"In too many ways the watchdog has become a lapdog," said Statler, who left the safety commission for private business on June 1, after seven years in office. A New York Republican and a lawyer, he was appointed to the commission by President Jimmy Carter.

His contention that safety has been compromised was challenged by Commissioner Terence M. Scanlon, who has been nominated by Reagan to head the agency.

"Commissioner Statler always pursued a confrontational approach, whereas the majority of commission today tries to seek out an amicable settlement of safety issues first, thereby avoiding expensive litigation," Scanlon said, "but in all cases the public is protected, probably more quickly today."

Statler's departure leaves the five-member commission with one vacancy. The remaining four members were all appointed by President Reagan, who has stressed reduction or elimination of government regulations.

That philosophy has become prevalent on the agency. Its former stress on bans and recalls of dangerous products has been succeeded by a growing emphasis on ways to educate the public to use products safely. The agency's activity has also been curtailed over the last few years by sharp budget and staff cuts.

Statler said he believes that "over time, if not already, the American public, the Congress and the media is wising up to the fact that the watchdog role of the CPSC is not being satisfactorily carried out ... and there is going to be a backlash."

Scanlon, though, contended that the agency is fully engaged in improving public safety, but is merely doing it in a cooperative manner with industry rather than through mandatory regulations and lawsuits.

For example, Scanlon said the agency is working on 46 voluntary standards, in which an industry adopts its own safety program. These can be put into effect in 18 months or less, Scanlon said, while mandatory rules take an average of more than four years and usually lead to lawsuits.

"What we have now is effective compliance, along with a good voluntary approach ... all at less cost to the taxpayer," Scanlon said.

Before leaving the commission Statler proposed a safety agenda for the country's state attorneys general, urging them to take up the safety crusade he believes the federal agency has dropped. That agenda includes:

—Banning or strictly regulating all-terrain vehicles.

—Requiring age labeling on toys which describes the reasons an item is recommended for a particular age group and its dangers.

—Lawsuits to compel manufacturers and retailers of paint strippers and aerosol spray paints to cease production and distribution of products that emit cancer-causing methylene chloride at unnecessarily high levels.

—Instituting or improving regulations enforcing safety on amusement rides.

—Initiating suits to eliminate from sale childrens' products containing the cancer-causing chemical DEHP, sometimes used to soften plastics.

—Prohibiting sale or distribution of residential water heaters which permit temperatures of 130 degrees or over.

—Prohibiting sale of automatic garage-door openers which do not contain safety devices to prevent them from trapping children by closing upon them.

—Bringing suits to prevent sale of wood products which emit excessive amounts of formaldehyde, which causes health problems and may also cause cancer.

Most troublesome to him, Statler said, "is the apparent unwillingness of the majority of the current commission to rigorously enforce the laws that they are entrusted with."

The sense of commitment to the mandate of the commission to protect the public from unreasonable risk of injury is lacking, Statler said.

"I don't think it's a philosophy of being business-oriented, so to speak, as much as it is a commitment to deregulation across the board."

He added: "The commission doesn't push, which basically is our role."

In the past, Statler explained, the commission has often been able to encourage improved safety by providing impetus to businesses, not just by regulations.

Kerosene heaters are an example, Statler said, where danger continues despite the safety efforts of a commited industry.

The problem with those heaters is that many consumers try to use gasoline in them, resulting in explosions and fires.

The solution, Statler said, would be to equip the heaters with a gasoline sensing device that would prevent them from working if gasoline were used.

"But short of the commission pushing them (industry) to do it, it won't get done. And that's one of the big differences between the commission today and the commission years ago," he said.

"If this commission had more spine, had more guts, in identifying that there was a need for a gasoline detection sensor, that industry would do it," he said. "They happen to have the leadership and the sense of commitment. But they need to be energized, there needs to be a catalyst, and that catalyst no longer exists."

Bank Loans Cheaper For 1986

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Consumers are finding that bank loans are cheaper today than at any time in the last eight years.

That is, unless they borrow on their credit cards. Holders of bank credit cards, with a few exceptions, are paying the same stratospheric rates they were paying five years ago — when banks were paying twice as much interest on deposits as they are today.

Bankers say credit card lending is different than most other types of loans and the high rates are justified. But critics contend that rates are higher than they should be and that if consumers resisted the rates, banks would lower them.

Banks are making a handsome profit on their credit card operations, although they lost money on the business early in the decade

Last year, the banking industry earned a healthy 5.37 percent profit on its outstanding credit card loans, according to an analysis by Spencer Nilson, publisher of an industry newsletter.

On all their lending, banks made about 1 percent, according to a study recently released by Rep. Charles E. Schumer, D-N.Y.

The aggressive desire to garner consumer business can be seen in various banks' "loan sales" or "rate wars" in many parts of the country.

Car loans for less than 10 percent are being offered by banks, in part in response to the cut-rate financing automobile companies are providing to stimulate lagging car sales. Home improvement loans have dropped to the 11 percent to 14 percent range. Loans backed by the equity in a borrower's home often carry interest charges at, or a point or two above, the 8.5 percent prime rate.

But the interest rate on bank credit cards — most of them Visa and MasterCard — is 19.8 percent at most of the biggest national issuers, although Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. lowered its rate to 17.8 percent late last year.

Q. When should a French hydrangea be pruned?

A. Keep the plant four to six feet tall by pruning stems and faded flower heads immediately after blooming. Since the flower heads develop on the previous year's growth, late fall pruning is not recommended.

Q. What is the name of the variety of periwinkle (Vinca minor) that has deep purple flowers?

A. Vinca minor "atropurpurea" has deep purple flowers. Like the other periwinkles it is easily propagated by division or cuttings.

Q. What type of soil do azaleas like best?

A. Azaleas grow best when planted in acidic, well-drained soils with a pH near 5.5. A soil rich in organic matter is ideal for azaleas.

Q. When should I renovate a strawberry bed?

A. The best time to renovate a strawberry planting is immediately after the last harvest. Remember that strawberries need abundant water to fully recover after renovating or replanting.

q. How should I control crown gall of roses?

A. Crown gall is a bacterial disease that causes large galls or swellings one to two inches in diameter on roots or lower parts of the main stem. Affected plants are stunted, weak and lack their normal green color. Crown gall can be avoided by purchasing healthy plants. Do not plant roses in areas where this diease has been a problem. If swellings do occur, prune them out promptly. Also, avoid wounding roots, the lower stem and graft area of rose plants. Mulching to control weeds will reduce the chance of wounding.

Q. Please tell me how to use beer as a trap for slugs.

A. You can partially control slugs if you place shallow dishes of beer in the vincinity of infested plants. Some species will crawl into the beer and drown. Adding flour will make the beer a stickier, more effective trap.

Supplied by the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service.

What is modern and what is not depends on whether you are looking at it from the standpoint of history or merely of the 1980s.

When we think of a portable electric drill, we think of it as a modern power tool. Actually, the first commercial portable electric drill appeared on the market in 1914. The drill was really a combination of the then new electric motor and a drill chuck. This early version looked remarkably like a present-day electric drill with a pistol grip and a trigger drill. It wasn't until 1946 that the introducer of the commercial drill, Black and Decker, came out with a model specifically designed for general home workshop use. This scaled-down, streamlined replica of the commercial model has been gaining in popularity ever since.

In shopping for a portable electric drill, many factors must be considered, among them size. The drills come in several sizes, the most common being the quarter-inch, three-eighths, and half-inch. The size of the drill does not refer to a maximum hole that can be drilled, but to the size of the bit that is inserted in the chuck. Thus, a quarter-inch drill can be used to drill a hole an inch in diameter if necessary.

For occasional use, the quarter-inch size is adequate. For regular use in the home workshop, the three-eighths size is better. When a shop has several sizes and needs at least one for heavy-duty work, the half-inch should be the choice.

Dr. Jim Scarborough, a University of Delaware extension agricultural engineer, says the speed of the drill is also an important consideration. The drills may be single, variable or adjustable speed and also may be reversing. A single speed drill runs at the same no-load speed — about 2,250 rotations per minute for a quarter-inch drill, 1,000 to 1,259 rpm for a three-eighths size and about 600 rpms for a half-incher. With a variable speed drill, the speed of rotation can be adjusted depending on the job requirements. Some drills have a mechanism that reverses the direction in which the bit rotates, a feature that is handy for removing a jammed bit or, if the screwdriver attachment is connected, for unscrewing screws.

Before buying a drill, Scarborough recommends reading the name plate information. This states the number of amps the drill will pull during operation. The higher the amperage, the greater the power in most cases. A recently introduced new generation of advanced technology electric motors offers more power from a smaller package with less weight than in the past.

Electric drills may be made of metal or plastic, although metal is being phased out, since plastic is tougher, more comfortable to handle and is safer. Plastic drills are double insulated or shockproofed for protection. A drill with this feature has two layers of insulation between the user's hand and the electrical circuit within the drill. They come with both two-pronged and three-pronged plugs.

Another option is battery-operated drills, which permit hand drilling far from an electric power source. Cordless drills operate with nickel cadium batteries which be changed almost indefinitely. Cordless drills for heavy-duty use usually have replaceable battery packs, so that if one discharges it can be replaced promptly with no loss of working time. The discharged pack can then be recharged. One point to remember is that cordless electric drills operate at a slower rpm than standard portable electric models.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Recently a large truck used our blacktop driveway to make a delivery. When it left, there were several deep dents and a few cracks where the wheels had been. I used patching material to repair everything, but wonder whether I also should use a blacktop sealer.

A. — Yes. Even if the driveway had a sealer on it before the truck did its damage, it would be a good idea to apply a new coat. It has many benefits, not the least of which is protection from spilled automobile oil and grease.

Q. — Our house is in a cold area where there are three or four heavy snowstorms a year. Last year, I noticed the snow on our roof melted long before the other houses in the vicinity. A neighbor tells me this means we don't have enough insulation in the roof. Is this true?

A. — Yes. When there is insufficient insulation, heat escapes through the roof and quickly melts the snow.

Q. — Doing a lot of concrete work at the back of our house and intend to build some steps from the garden to the back door. I have been measuring steps lately and find they all aren't the same. Is there is a certain width or height they should be?

A. — The width will depend solely on the kind of steps they are, but about 10 inches wide is fairly standard. If you make the steps very wide, then the height of the risers should be about an inch lower than the standard height of 7½ inches.

Q. — I used lacquer a few years ago and did a fairly good job with the kind that comes in a spray gun. I now would like to apply lacquer with a brush. Is there anything special I should know?

A. — Yes. Be sure you buy what is called brushing lacquer. Dilute it with at least two parts of lacquer thinner. Apply several thin coats rather than one thick one. Work rapidly when putting on the lacquer, and don't go back to patch up a spot you may have skipped. Take care of it with the next coat.

Union Protests Workfare Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirty-eight states require at least some welfare recipients to work for at least part of their benefits, a public employees union said Saturday, deploring the requirement as a throwback to the workhouses of Elizabethan England.

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees released a list of state "workfare" requirements that shows a majority of the states impose at least some minimum work standards.

Workfare requirements generally require able-bodied welfare recipients to participate in some job-related function, such as community service, public works projects or job training.

Gerald W. McEntee, AFSCME president, said the prevalance of workfare "deeply disturbs me, as it should the nation. This is 1986, not 1586 when in Elizabethan England paupers were sentenced to earn their subsistence keep in workhouses.

"Welfare recipients need real jobs," McEntee said. "They need support services and bona fide training to qualify for these jobs. But workfare provides neither."

Sears Fights Back To Recover Retail Edge

A Financial News Analysis

By STEVEN GREENHOUSE
N.Y. Times News Service

CHICAGO — Sears, Roebuck & Co., the nation's largest retailer, has pushed hard in recent years to persuade its huge customer base to use its new brokerage and real estate businesses. But in seeking to diversify beyond shirts, stoves and stereos, many analysts say, Sears has paid too little attention to its roots and left the retailing foundation of its empire vulnerable.

Lower-price chains like Wal-Mart and such regional discounters as Crazy Eddie and Highland Superstores have wooed customers away from Sears. Product loyalty has eroded, with many shoppers now shunning the Sears and Kenmore house brands in favor of sexier names, like Sony or Esprit, that are not sold at the company's 800 department stores. And Sears's cumbersome distribution system has become an expensive drag on operations.

The result has been six consecutive quarters of flat retail sales and a steep drop in operating income in the company's merchandising division — it fell to $447 million last year, from $656 million in 1984. Sears's troubles have been dramatic enough to prompt talk that the K Mart Corp., the nation's No. 2 retailer, might soon take over the top spot.

"Sears is a continuous market-share loser," said Monroe H. Greenstein, an analyst with Bear, Stearns & Co., adding, "They can't afford to let merchandising get away from them — that's the source of a good deal of the other things."

"Sears has traditionally served the blue-collar customer, but there aren't enough of them left," added Allan G. Bortel, an analyst with Shearson Lehman Brothers. "And white-collar shoppers want to go to a white-collar store. Sears is trying to figure out its niche."

Now celebrating its centennial year, Sears is fighting back on a number of fronts, although analysts question whether the moves will be enough to turn things around. The company is spending $1.2 billion to remodel its department stores into brighter, fancier Stores of the Future that carry more stylish apparel and home furnishings. It has restructured its retailing staff to cut costs and to be more responsive to fashion trends. And it is pricing more aggressively to meet the discounters head-on.

"Neither our direction nor our strategy was expansion to any degree," William I. Bass, the 60-year-old chairman and chief executive of the retailing division, said in a recent interview. "We're in a position now," thanks to the reorganization, Bass added, "where we can and should concentrate more on revenue growth."

The company as a whole had revenues last year of $40.72 billion, up 4.9 percent from 1984. But most of that gain came from the financial sector, which includes such newer units as Dean Witter and Coldwell Banker Real Estate as well as its older Allstate Insurance.

The retail division was up less than 0.2 percent for the year, to $26.55 billion, and 5.8 percent since 1983. That compares with K Mart's recent surge, to $22.42 billion in sales last year, a 20.6 percent gain over the two-year period.

The key problem, said Greenstein of Bear, Stearns, is that Sears "is a very high-cost distributor of merchandise; their prices are less competitive than those of other retailers."

"They have to get sales volume increasing like Wal-Mart has," added John S. Landschulz, an analyst with Mesirow & Co. in Chicago. "Once you spread your costs out, you have retail economics in your favor, and your overall margins improve."

Bass, a careful, thoughtful man who speaks in dry, understated sentences, says Sears is moving to cut costs. It has consolidated its 50 regional operating groups into 28. In April, the company said it would eliminate its four regional merchandising offices and consolidate them in Chicago, thus removing a management level and producing savings of $60 million a year. Also in April, Sears announced a sweeping effort to streamline its distribution network by, for example, often shipping directly from the manufacturer to the store, thus skipping the company's own distribution centers.

Sears is also flexing its muscle in new areas. In small towns, the company plans to open 60 small department stores this year that will be dominated by its hard-goods lines. Bass also talks about making acquisitions in unspecified areas.

To capitalize on its reputation as the place where Americans shop to repair a broken light switch or repaint the garage door, Sears plans to open 50 or more Sears Paint and Hardware Stores in each of the next five years. This year, these stores will open in Boston, Washington, Chicago, Atlanta, Denver and San Francisco. The outlets answer the criticisms of some analysts that Sears, which often has just one or two stores in large metropolitan areas, has to fill out its presence.

But some analysts say that when Sears emphasizes hardware and hard goods, it sends out mixed messages to the fashion-conscious soft-goods consumer it is trying to attract. "There's a very strange dichotomy at Sears," said Walter F. Loeb, an analyst with Morgan Stanley & Co. "The durable customer is not necessarily the Sears fashion customer."

But Sears officials say the reconfigured Stores of the Future aim to please both clienteles. Largely the concept of the company's new chairman, Edward A. Brennan, they have a more fashionable layout, better lighting and more brand names than the older outlets.

The new stores, which dropped the lowest-priced products in some lines, were designed to entice a slightly more affluent customer, including more women. "Now they're veering away from the philosophy of the Store of the Future," Loeb of Morgan Stanley said, "by offering lower price points since it has not attracted enough fashion customers."

But Bass says the stores are successful, noting that they average 4 percent higher sales and 0.4 percent higher gross margins than before they were modernized. He added that they were doing especially well in home furnishings, with furniture sales up more than 10 percent.

In hard goods, however, there is a battle royal going on with regional discounters like Crazy Eddie and Newmark & Lewis in the East and Highland in the Middle West.

"There is a consumer out there who doesn't want chain-store labels on things they buy," Greenstein said. "Kenmore is a good name but not a yuppie name. When they have friends over, these people do not want those friends to see names like Sears or Kenmore. They want people to see names like Sony or Kitchen Aid."

In response, Sears has slowly added names like RCA, Adidas and Levi's. "We are not reluctant to carry national brands," Bass said, adding that Sears was considering more brands in apparel, "where we feel we have a void in our assortment."

On the computer front, Sears may close up to 10 of its 105 Business Systems Centers. Fewer stores are needed, Bass said, because Sears is trying to increase its computer sales by knocking on more doors at small and medium-sized businesses. He denies rumors that Sears will sell its Business Systems division.

Although first-quarter retail sales were down 0.6 percent from the period a year earlier, Bass is optimistic.

"The economic situation right now is going to be very positive for general merchandise stores," he said. "Housing starts are almost two million and sales of existing homes are running at three million a year. That's certainly going to be a plus for Sears."

Garment Workers To Fight Imports

By JANET BRAUNSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — The newly elected president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union is vowing to save the jobs of the union's dwindling membership from ballooning textile imports.

"We will not allow our jobs to be destroyed. They are our life," Jay Mazur, 54, promised the 1,200 convention delegates who elected him president Friday to succeed 68-year-old Sol Chaikin, who held the post for 11 years.

"This is not a trade union problem. It is a problem for America," said Mazur, who has worked for the once-powerful union for 36 years and is taking over at a time when its membership is shrinking as fast as the U.S. textile and apparel industry.

While the industry remains the nation's single largest manufacturing employer, it has declined from 2.5 million jobs 12 years ago to today's low of barely 1.65 million jobs, 95 percent of which are non-union.

At the same time, the ILGWU's membership has slipped from a peak of nearly 458,000 in 1968 to 219,000 in 1985.

"We've lost more than half our members in the past 15 years," said Chaikin, who throughout the weeklong 39th triennial convention worked to unite the rank-and-file to stand up to an unsympathetic public and a hostile administration.

Union leaders blame the U.S. industry's accelerating decline on imports, which commanded a 54 percent share of the domestic market in 1985. The import share of the market grew 26 percent during the first four months of 1986 compared with the first third of last year.

Last year, Congress passed a union-supported bill to limit the total share of the domestic market available to exporting nations, as the European Common Market countries have done, but President Reagan vetoed it.

The bill, the Trade and Apparel Agreement Enforcement Act, comes up for an override vote on Aug. 6. Chaikin and Mazur say it is the only fair way to stabilize the U.S. textile industry and save American jobs while allowing foreign nations a piece of the U.S. market.

"There is no free trade. We live in a world of economic anarchy. Every country has always operated in its own self-interest. We have an obligation to protect our own Third World," Mazur said.

The trade act would roll back the total import share to about 47 or 48 percent for eight to 10 years. Without it, union leaders say, American garment workers will continue to lose jobs to foreign workers who are paid as little as 18 cents an hour.

The ILGWU members, mostly women, earn an average of around $5.50 an hour — little more than $10,000 a year.

The ILGWU, which introduced the "Look for the Union Label" campaign 11 years ago when it became the first labor union to advertise on television, plans to exert steady pressure up to the Aug. 6 vote.

Congress Approves Money For FHA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress moved toward restoring operating authority to the Federal Housing Administration by approving a $3.9 billion spending bill that contains money for the government lending agency.

The Senate voted 71-8 Friday to approve legislation that, among other things, would restore the FHA's spending authority.

But the Senate bill is sharply at odds with a House version and has been threatened with a veto.

The FHA halted its widely used mortgage insurance program Thursday. It was the sixth time the FHA had to halt its lending since last October.

Even a week's delay could disrupt $3 billion in mortgage insurance.

A PAPER PULP...is obtained by stripping paper into hot water and pureeing the mixture in a blender.

Paper Reprocessing Proves Intriguing

Text By Rosalie Trotman

When Patsy Garzik reprocesses paper, she sets up her kitchen counter with small pieces of toweling and sheeting, an iron, blender and small plastic dish pan.

"I found out about the paper recyling process while living in Cary. My son was in kindergarten and the idea was shared by a fiber artist from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill," she said.

"I was intrigued — it's different from most other art processes and very inexpensive. You can create something very attractive from scrap materials. It can be put to a practical use for gifts and decorative items. It was also an easy, simple way to teach children about various forms of plant life and use of natural resources," said Mrs. Garzik.

Mrs. Garzik likes things with texture. "You can create an endless range of colors, textures and fragarances such as writing paper, note cards and stationary, backgrounds for pressed flowers suitable for framing, printing, silhouettes, and German paper cutting.

She uses scenting spices and herbs, either dry or fresh, to create materials for fragrances. To create color, she uses flowers, leaves and stems, such as roses and miniature carnations (any scented flowers), coffee and tea, food coloring and for stronger colors, colored ink.

In describing her reprocessing, she said, "Start out by pureeing paper in hot water in a blender and then add the basic pulp to water in a dish pan. Place the scenting and color materials in the blender, pulverize them and add to the dish pan. You put a deckle on top of a mold, stir the pulp and submerge the two under the pulp and lift up, leaving a layer on the screen. Take the deckle off and turn the screen with pulp onto an absorbent surface, pressing out the excess water. Peel the pulp away from the screen, cover with several layers of old sheeting and towling and iron with a hot dry iron. Remove the damp sheeting and continue the process until the paper is dry."

As a hobby, she grows herbs including sage, chives, garlic chives, chamomile, burnet lemon balm, lemon thyme, catnip, peppermint, tanse, yarrow and French taragon. She also likes unusual plants.

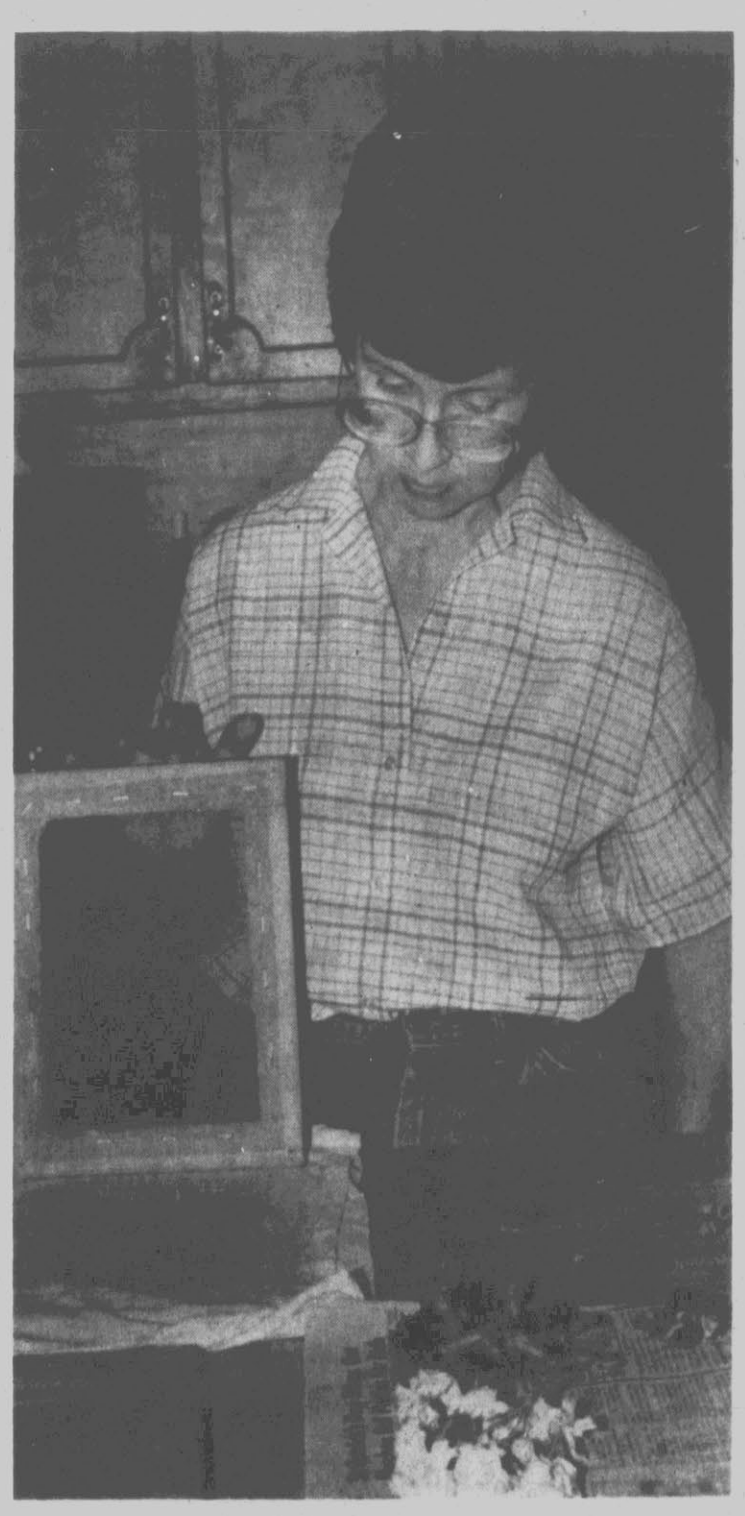

"I am somewhat of a dabbler. I enjoy baking bread, gardening, designing and making clothes, ceramics, water colors and reading, mostly non-fiction," she said.

Mrs. Garzik's husband, Joe, is in data processing at Burroughs Wellcome and they have an 11-year-old son, Jeff, a student at A.G. Cox School. The couple has lived in Greenville since 1980.

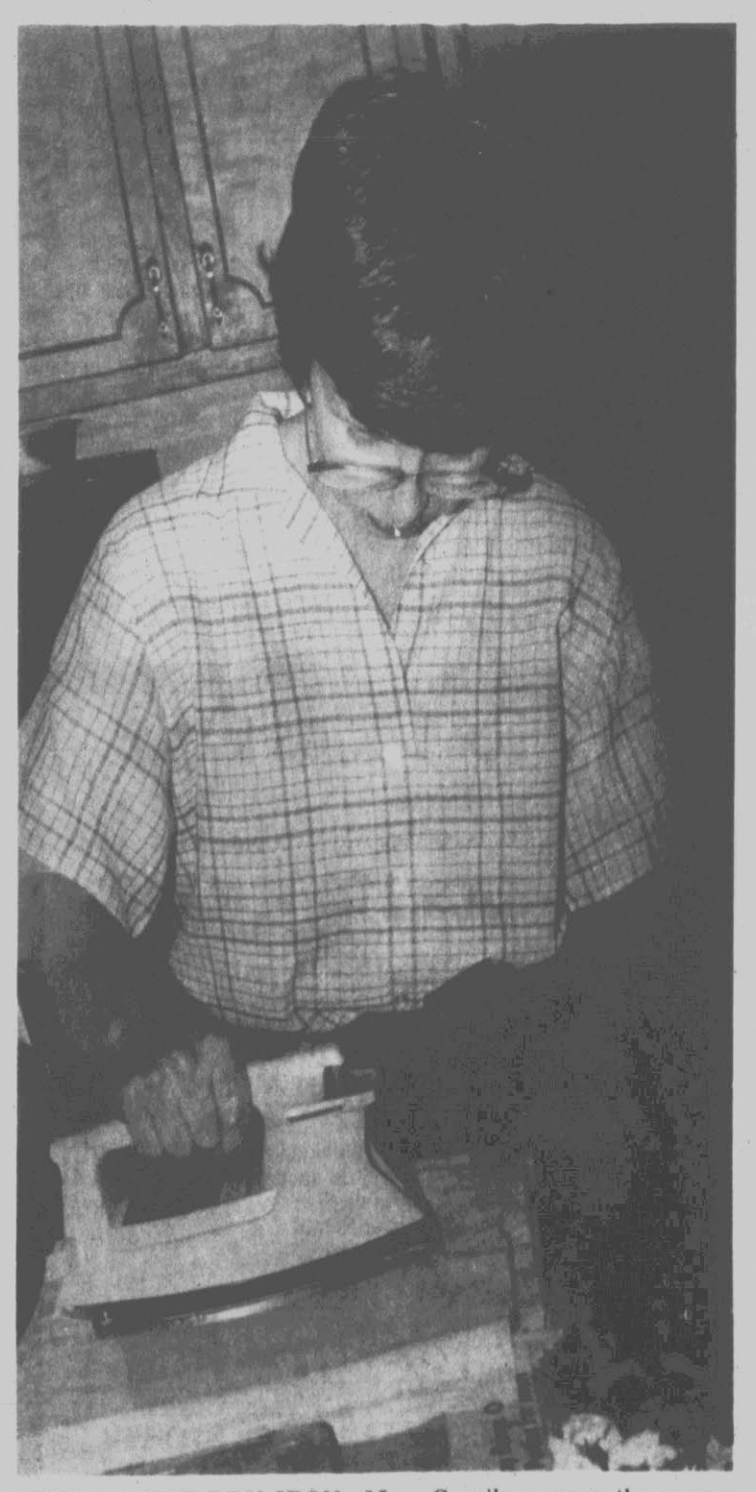

Mrs. Garzik received her B.A. in art education from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. She works part time as an art teacher in the Pitt County schools and has been a color analyst for the past four and a half years.

Air Conditioning Systems

When you're smothering from summer heat and humidity and just can't get cool fast enough, simply jam that thermostat level way down to make your air conditioner give you colder air faster. Right?

Wrong. Air conditioners don't provide cool air faster by turning the thermostat down. Consumers' money levels, though, are lowered by forcing the thermostat to lower temperatures.

Avoiding such pitfalls in keeping cool this summer can be easier and cheaper by following energy-conserving, money-saving tips from the Air-Conditioning and Refrigeration Institute — the trade association representing manufacturers of central air conditioning and heat pump equipment.

The mechanics of an air conditioner involves transfering heat from the inside of the building to the outside. Refrigerant in the system absorbs the excess heat and is pumped through a closed system of piping to an outside coil. A fan blows outside air over the hot coil, transferring heat from the refrigerant to the outdoor air. Because the heat is removed from indoor air, indoor air is cooled.

To make an air conditioner work more efficiently this summer, make sure the unit is checked throughly by a qualified contractor or service technician before peak cooling season begins. Air filters should also be kept clean.

The average life of a central air conditioning system varies, depending on how much the system is used and how regularly it is maintained. Usually, though, a system made in the 1960s or '70s may last about 15 years. Heat pump life is about the same, according the the Institute's survey which showed heat pump life to be about 14 years when recommended maintenance procedures were followed. Newer units are expected to last even longer.

If a house is going to be empty for more than four hours, it's a good idea to turn the thermostat up to about 82 degrees instead of the recommended 78. Keep the house closed to minimize heat build-up. When arriving home, don't set the thermostat any lower than the temperature you actually want — your air conditioning system wouldn't cool any faster, and might easily waste money by cooling your home more than needed.

The air filters should be checked each month during peak use, and replaced when it looks dirty enough to significantly impair air flow. Some filters, such as media or electronic cleaners, are washable; other are disposable and must be replaced.

If a working air conditioner stops working, check the fuses or circuit breaker. Look at the thermostat to make sure it is set properly. If an electrical problem isn't the cause, the refrigerant may be low if the system still runs, but doesn't cool enough. Most likely if the problem involves a major part, such as the compressor, you would hear strange noises similar to those of any mechanical equipment running incorrectly, or the unit may not run at all.

Whatever the cause, the solution is to call a certified air conditioning contractor and have the problem taken cared of as soon as possible. Consumers should not try to work on units because they are so complex.

A system should be replaced when it starts to cause more problems that are not cost-effective to fix.

PASTA TRENDS

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans are eating pasta hot, cold and often, according to a Better Homes and Gardens survey.

In the year prior to the survey, 91.7 percent of those who responded said they had served hot pasta while 57 percent had served cold pasta salad.

Nearly half of the pasta-eaters surveyed were satisfied with their current brand of dry pasta. About 20 percent found their pasta broken in the package when they bought it, while fewer than 20 percent said their brand was too starchy or sticky.

Couple Speaks Vows In Ceremony Performed Saturday Evening

Susan Leigh Tucker, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Donald Hugh Tucker of Greenville, became the bride of Robert Brown Weaver, son of Mr and Mrs. Robert Hamilton Weaver of Jackson, Miss., Saturday evening at 7 o'clock.

MRS. WEAVER

The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Revs. Rufus Stark and Malloy Owen in Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

Presenting a program of wedding music was organist Mark Gansor and vocalist the Rev. Jerry Jolley. Joanne and Andrea Bath were violinists.

The honor attendant was Lynn Tucker Grogan of Dallas, sister of the bride. Bridesmaids included Julia Hamilton Weaver of Jackson, Miss., sister of the bride, Mary McManaway Tucker of Raleigh, sister-in-law of the bride, Hannah Finch Taft of Atlanta, Jean Cecile Donath of Chicago, Rebecca Ann Dixon of Charlotte, and Ruth Ann Sally of Stamford, Conn.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers included Donald Hugh Tucker Jr. of Raleigh and Michael Arden Tucker of Boston, Mass., brothers of the bride, John Allen Weaver, brother of the bridegroom, and Thomas Richmond Lewis, both of Jackson, Miss., Eliot Frederick Smith of Columbia, Md., and Reber Mitchell Boult of New Orleans, La.

The bride wore a formal ivory satin gown. The bodice was covered with imported re-embroidered alencon lace accented with seed pearls and iridescents. The long sleeves and bateau neckline with V-back closing at the waist extended into a chapel length train with scattered alencon lace applique. She wore a Juliet cap covered with Brussels rosepoint lace which belonged to her great-great grandmother. Matching lace edged her blusher and the chapel length veil of sheer illusion was trimmed with seed pearls. She carried a flowing cascade bouquet of lilac, freesia and white roses.

The honor attendant wore a wisteria ballet length skirt of moire taffeta with matching wisteria top featuring a straight neckline and bows over elasticized shoulders. A wisteria cummerbund with seed pearl closures accented the dress. Bridesmaids were dressed identically and each carried a cascade bouquet of sterling roses and white lilac accented with yellow freesia and baby's breath.

The mother of the bride wore a formal tea length dress of champagne French lace over silk with long sleeves. The mother of the bridegroom wore a dress of mauve rose silk with jewel neckline.

A reception was held after the ceremony at the Sheraton-Greenville. Music for dancing was provided by Joe Distefano. "The Best Looking Place In Town"

Gandalf's

CAROLINA EAST MALL

At Wit's End — By Erma Bombeck

Right off, the book is a grabber.

There on the cover in bold letters it says, "As a do-it-yourselfer, you can do things about your house with your own hands and capture the independence, the self-reliance that our grandparents took for granted but that we were afraid had vanished forever."

Just below that teaser are beautiful glossy pictures showing a woman painting a stairway right out of "Gone With the Wind," a man putting together a root cellar with his bare hands and the whole family dancing around a summer cabin in the mountains. (Inside, more than hundreds of illustrations and thousands of step-by-step photos and diagrams are promised.)

Who do they think they're talking to? "The Money Pit" wasn't a comedy film. It was a chilling documentary of every couple who decided to save a few bucks by doing home improvements themselves.

The all-purpose, every-occasion, step-by-step illustrations home-improvement book is the catalyst for it all. It has you believing there is nothing you cannot do. And in a way, they're right.

It has you returning from the lumberyard, with a piece of plywood on the roof of your car that is two feet wider than a traffic lane and four feet longer than the length of your car. It is held on only by the left arm of the driver and the right arm of the passenger (who at one time were happily married to one another).

It has a woman who can't open a package of bacon without falling apart, operating a rented chain saw on the dining room table.

It has you mixing paint in your blender, wallpaper paste in your bathtub, and transporting caulking for the windows in an old bra slung around [illegible] waist.

I don't know what happens to people when they trade an apartment for a home of their own. But they become very possessive. This rusted old washer in the faucet is mine! This one-inch clogged pipe connected to the toilet is mine! All that frayed wiring belongs to me!

And without any reason, they get choked up hot-mopping their driveway and spray-painting their very own refrigerator.

The home-improvement trend usually skips a generation. There is a reason for this. Children who have grown up with crazed parents who knock out walls in the winter and store saw horses in their bedrooms are usually turned off by the trend. With most of them, their first spoken word is "contractor."

This is the generation for the return of do-it-yourselfers. With mortgage rates the lowest in seven years, 77 million baby boomers are sitting out there thumbing through home-improvement manuals that promise, "You can do things about your house with your own hands and capture the independence, the self-reliance that our grandparents took for granted but that we were afraid had vanished forever."

Are they serious? My grandparents never changed a light bulb, and their idea of independence was feeding themselves.

North Pitt High School

By CISSE DAVENPORT

As summer approaches and the school year begins to draw to a close, many one-time events have been taking place at North Pitt. Students have been involved with the junior-senior prom, athletic banquet, awards day, choral and band concerts.

One of the special events occurred on April 24 — the North Pitt High School National Honor Society Spring Inductions.

The National Honor Society (NHS) at North Pitt is sponsored by Ms. Barbara Garrenton and Mrs. Elizabeth Morris. The chapter is made up of 34 members, 16 of whom were inducted this spring. In order for students to be considered for this honor, they must have had a 3.5 average at the end of the first semester of the current school year.

Students were then asked to fill out a form and, if their grades were sufficient, their names were presented to a faculty council. The teachers then voted on whether or not the students were worthy of this honor. If only two of the teachers disagreed on the student's capability and thought that one shouldn't be able to join, then that student was no longer considered. The requirements are tough, but the students had worked to gain the standards so that they would be accepted.

At the induction ceremony, each present NHS member chose a name of one of the new inductees. That member was in charge of notifying the parents of the inductee's selection. The students that were considered for NHS did not know of the outcome until the induction ceremony took place.

The gym was the location of the ceremony. Flowers and candles decorated the center court. After the student body had assembled in the gym and everyone was quiet, the lights were turned off. The members then marched into the gym single file, each member carrying a candle.

Speeches were then presented, each on one branch of NHS — scholarship, service, leadership, and character. After each speech, the member speaking lit one candle with the center candle. As soon as the speeches were finished and the speakers were seated, each member, with candle lit, wandered into the crowd to bring their inductee down onto center court.

The members stood in front of the inductees in a line on center court. As the induction ceremony began, the names of the new inductees were called out. As their name was stated, the inductee came forward and received a certificate, walked back to their spot, took the candle from the NHS member and stood in front of that person. When all the new members had been inducted, the oath was read and repeated by the inductees. Toward the end of the ceremony, a speech was given in recognition of the new inductees' parents. The recessional ended the ceremony and all members and parents went to the cafeteria for a reception.

Much emphasis is put on the significance and importance of the National Honor Society. Being a member has been, and always will be, a great honor.

BABY BOOMERS AREN'T PICKY

VARNVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Americans are eating out in restaurants more often these days, but more of them also are passing up the toothpick as a post-dessert end to their meal.

Restaurant diners, particularly those in their 20s and 30s, are causing a drop in toothpick production in the United States, says Georgia-Pacific Corp., a wood products firm.

In fact, its says, toothpicks have been dropping in popularity since the end of World War II.

Students Test Rate Products

By KATHA SCHWEITZER
Rock Island Argus

ROCK ISLAND, Ill. (AP) — What cereal stays crunchier in milk? And which dog food tastes best to dogs? Students at Ridgewood School investigated those and other consumer questions at a version of the elementary school science fair.

The consumer fair was developed by science teacher Don Nelson as an alternative to the traditional science fair. Ribbons are awarded deserving projects, he said, but the emphasis is on an enjoyable learning experience.

"We talk about what consumers would be interested in finding out, like what ice cream tastes best, cost and quality," Nelson said of the preliminary project work. Then students "select one aspect — for instance, what cereal stays crunchier in milk or what hair spray holds the longest time — and then design an experiment to test that question."

At the consumer fair, students' projects detail the procedure used in the experiment, the data collected and their conclusions, Nelson said.

He said the fair was a way to reinforce learning about the scientific method, while using everyday items.

The question of which dog food dogs prefer was researched with the help of family pets that served as testers, he said. Students placed several dog foods in front of the canines and recorded which one the dog went for first. Pictures of the pets were included in the project display.

Random sampling and "blind" taste tests were popular consumer fair projects, said Nelson.

"We had a taste test of lemon-lime sodas," he said, "and a very popular project was the 'which chewing gum holds flavor for the longest time?'"

One group of students tested which toothpaste cleaned the best, with the help of an unusual prop. Nelson said "Uncle Harry's choppers," a family heirloom, served as the experimental vehicle for testing the toothpastes.

Another group of students tested which facial tissue was the strongest by devising a "sneeze machine," Nelson said. A piece of piping was used, and students imitated sneezing through the tube.

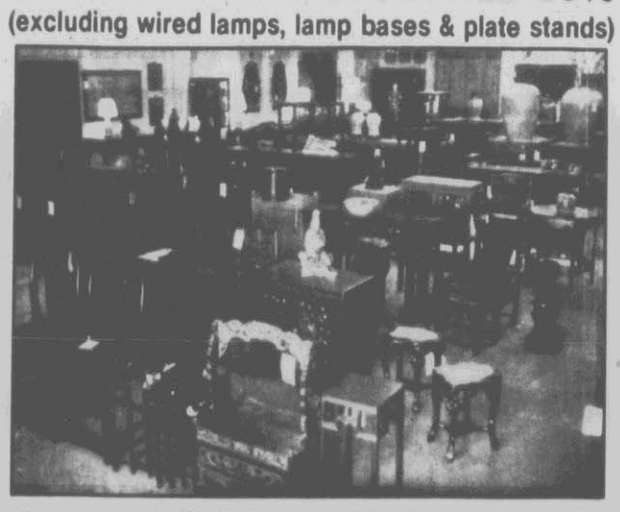

There were about 26 questions researched at this year's consumer fair, including which orange juice has the most pulp and which toilet paper is most absorbent.

The consumer fair idea has many educational benefits, Nelson said.

"We talk about the appeals used by advertisers ... It's important that we as adults give them (students) an idea about how to spend money wisely. The point is that products can be compared and consumers can make their own decisions."

ICE CUBES GIVE CLUES

WATERLOO, Ontario (AP) — You can tell if your water is hard or soft by looking at your ice cubes.

"Hard water cubes have a white spot in the center where minerals congregate, while soft water cubes are uniformly cloudy," says Lou J. Smith, executive director of the Canadian Water Quality Association.

Smith says most people will see white spots in their cubes as some 85 percent of the water in the United States and Canada is at least moderately hard.

Dad Thinks Less Is Enough For A Memorable Wedding

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our family is approaching a time of dissension concerning the upcoming wedding of our eldest daughter. Recent weddings of friends and family have been real "blowouts," each trying to outdo the last.

My wife and daughters keep talking about the reception, dresses, flowers and tuxedos as if we had a mature money tree. They justify a "nice" wedding for the "memories" it will make.

I believe that a "nice" wedding can consist of a bride's gown, and simple dresses for the ladies that won't cost them a fortune — and ones they can wear again. And what's wrong with dark blue suits for the guys, a few simple bouquets, and cake and punch for the reception?

We aren't rich, but we meet our needs and have no bad debt problems — yet! My wife uses coupons to shop at the grocery store and she manages our daily money matters very well, but no amount of coupons will be able to cover the disaster they are planning.

What do you say? — HAS THE LADDER SET UP

DEAR HAS: Take the ladder down. I'm on your side, Dad. A wedding need not be an extravaganza to be memorable, nor does it have to top a previous one. Hold that line, and don't let your family talk you into going into debt to put on a show you can't afford.

DEAR ABBY: I am married to a German, and lately our breakfast conversation has gone to the dogs. Please settle this dispute. We have been watching reruns of the old "Lassie" shows. My husband says that Lassie was not a collie; she was a mixed-breed dog with a collie "costume" attached.

I say the original Lassie was a pedigreed collie. Also, there were several look-alikes who played "Lassie" in the movies.

Was our beloved Lassie a mixed-breed imposter or not? Please settle this argument for us. — PHYLLIS FEUCHT, PARIS, TEXAS

DEAR PHYLLIS: According to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the tale about Lassie wearing a costume must have been a put-on. While the original Lassie was not a purebred collie, she certainly looked like one. There were six look-alikes who later portrayed Lassie. All of them were purebred collies who so closely resembled Lassie that when it came to telling Lassie from her imposters, only her hairdresser knew for sure.

DEAR ABBY: "Bill" and I have been married for seven months and we can't come to terms on our husband-and-wife roles. Bill thinks we should share our household expenses 50-50, but when it comes to dividing up the household chores 50-50, I seem to get all the responsibility.

He shows little gratitude for what I do, and complains because I refuse to iron his shirts. Because I refuse to iron his shirts, he refuses to help me with the maintenance on my car. I feel that I am doing more than my fair share, and if he expects me to iron his shirts, then he should pay all the bills and let me stay home and do all the household chores.

I would appreciate your opinion about this — and also the opinion of your readers. — DON'T DO SHIRTS IN FLORIDA

DEAR DON'T: The solution as I see it is for you to learn how to maintain your own car and for Bill to learn to iron his own shirts, then neither of you would be at the mercy of the other.

Muharraqan Pearl Divers Hope To Resume Their Old Art

By NABILA MEGALLI
Associated Press Writer

MUHARRAQ, Bahrain (AP) — If Bahrain's oil income drops off too much, will it mean a comeback for pearl divers, the men who gave this Arab island the name "Pearl of the Gulf?"

That possibility excited a group of old pearl divers sipping tea with a reporter recently in a small wooden shack, Muharraq's equivalent of a cafe. The oldest was 90-year-old Ahmed bin Jassem and the youngest had just turned 60.

The men had heard that Bahrain's crown prince, Sheik Hamad, had sent out a small group to check for pearls in the Persian Gulf off Al-Hidd, a fishing village east of Muharraq.

"He says if oil ceases, we want the pearl industry again," said 65-year-old Ghanem Hamed. "Diving is in my blood, and if they give me the chance, I yearn to go back.

"I want to dive and I do not want the oil, and anyway pearls are more valuable than oil."

Bahrain's pearl diving industry came to a standstill about 30 years ago with the exploitation of oil and competition from Japanese cultured pearls. Although oil reserves are down, the island looks ahead to many more years of exploiting it, but income is falling. Saeed Alloush, a Bahrain researcher, has said the government is considering pearls as a new source of income.

This conjured up the old days for Bin Jassem, the group elder. He recalled spending two months at a time on a wooden dhow under a traditional lateen sail out in the gulf.

"The Arabs were then friendly," he said. "They helped each other. It was lovely."

He played a tape recording of the equivalent of a pearl divers' chantey and the men listened to the booming voice of a "naham" — the highest paid crew member because it was he who kept the oarsmen and the diver pullers going with his chants.

The recording ended, and the nostalgic mood of the group changed.

"We sleep in air-conditioned homes now brought to us by the wealth of oil," one of the men said.

"We are not exploited anymore by the dhow master who used to pay us miserably, always keep us in his debt," said another.

"We are not eaten up by sharks or bitten by the sea creatures."

They also realized that being older, they could do no more than teach the young — "if we can now pull the boys away from videos and football (soccer)," said Isa Abdallah Tamhize.

—The pay would be much higher: If they averaged 30 dinars (about $80) in a summer, a diver now would get at least 10 times as much.

—Divers today would be given oranges to combat beriberi, a vitamin-deficiency disease. In the old days, they had only cheap oasis dates and water during the day, and rice and perhaps bread and fish at night.

—In place of tortoise-shell clamps to put on their noses for a five-minute dive, divers today would have oxygen tanks.

—Modern divers would not be forced to dive again if they were injured, and if they drowned their families would get good insurance money.

—Scuba diving flippers would replace the stones they used to attach to their feet to keep them down, and motor boats would be used instead of dhows.

But gone would be the fun of trying to become the "Hero," the diver who could stay down the longest, or win the "Prize" if they turned up with the most pearl-bearing oysters — a pat on the head from the master, a special cheer and a roasted fish.

"The master might give me five rupees (about $1.30) secretly," Hamed said, "but he was ready to tell me off if I complained about debts, and that was the only work we knew for a living in those days."

When the pearl industry died, the old divers went to work ashore for five dinars ($13) a month, about three times what they made on the water.

They didn't like it.

"It was the worst work, having to unload heavy sacks of cement from trucks, and how I hungered for the days in the open sea with the coffee and the cigarette in between diving; the skies and water, our group, and above all the peace of mind," Hamed said.

Abdullah Ibrahim Boudahi brightened at the prospect of it all starting up again.

"Oh, there's bound to be plenty, plenty of pearls in the waters," he said.

Rivera Show In Philadelphia

By DON BEMAN
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dolores Olmedo posed in front of the six-foot oil that Mexican artist Diego Rivera had once painted of her. Not an eyelash twitched as the camera flashed, capturing the twin images remarkably alike after 30 years.

"That was the magic of Diego," she said about the startling resemblance. "Portrait of Dolores" is one of the 200 works in "Diego Rivera: A Retrospective," an exhibit that opens Sunday at the Philadelphia Museum of Art for the only East Coast showing of an artist whose last major exhibition in the United States was in 1931-32.

The earlier exhibition, however, missed the greater part of the works done in the earth-tone, pre-Columbian style of realism for which he became known.

Ms. Olmedo stepped down from the bench the photographer used so she could be on the same level as the painting, which is part of her own personal collection of her late lover's works. She turned and studied the painting for a moment in the quiet of the museum hall and shook her head.

"What is so remarkable to me is that after all this time, the colors in my dress are still so fresh, so alive," she said.

Rivera was always conscious of the idea that a good painting had to last and he went so far as to sprinkle marble dust on his murals before the plaster and paint dried so they would continue to sparkle for years to come.

The retrospective was put together in part as tribute to the artist on what would have been his 100th anniversary year. He died of cancer on Nov. 24, 1957, in his studio. Ms. Olmedo was his constant companion during his last two years.

He left behind a stormy life as a sometimes Communist and an artist fascinated with the common man. He once had one of his finest frescoes destroyed and removed from Rockefeller Center because he refused to eliminate a figure of Lenin in the composition.

The retrospective appeared at the Detroit Institute of Arts from February through April. It stays in Philadelphia through August and then moves on to Mexico City, Madrid, Spain, and ends in August 1987 in Berlin.

In his lifetime, Diego created more than 3,000 known paintings and 25,000 drawings as well as the numerous and massive murals which cannot be moved for exhibit purposes. Philadelphia curator Darrell Sewell said the retrospective was difficult to assemble because Rivera was so prolific and also because some of his greatest works are the murals. The final catalog was put together only with the cooperation of governments as well as collectors, he said.

The works on show trace Rivera's career from the soft, yet exacting, styles of the European masters with whom he studied in the early 1900s in France and Spain, the later cubism of Picasso and Juan Gris, the subtle colors of Cezanne and finally his own style.

That style consisted of more than just color and form. It also can be identified by subject matter: the working classes of the world with emphasis on his own heritage.

Recalling his return to Mexico in 1922, Rivera once wrote: "My homecoming produced an aesthetic exhilaration which is impossible to describe. In everything I saw a potential masterpiece — the crowds, the markets, the festivals, the marching battalions, the workingmen in the shops and in the fields — in every glowing face, in every luminous child."

The forcefulness that shows in his works, as well as his political beliefs, was but an indication of the fervor with which he attacked the task of capturing as much as he could, Ms. Olmedo said.

"He would go to his studio at 8 o'clock in the morning and would work until 2 in the afternoon. Then he would stop and demand lunch. After an hour, he would return to his work and at the end of a day one had to pull him away," she said.

Even when a doctor showed up at his studio in 1955 to tell him he had cancer, Rivera stopped only long enough to say, "Oh, what a damn bother."

Yet, Ms. Olmedo recalled as she wondered among the paintings and drawings so familiar to her, "He loved to talk to people. He had them come in as he worked if he had no other time."

Ms. Olmedo first met the artist when she was about 10 or 11 when Rivera came to her village. She said he returned later and painted 12 nudes of her. Even then, however, his concentration was unshakable.

"I never said so much as a word to him," she said. "He was as imposing personally as his work was."

Rivera, a veteran of three marriages and uncounted other alliances, favored Ms. Olmedo as a model. She pointed to work after work, saying, "That's me."

Her admiration for the artist and the man prompted her to inspect the mechanics of the exhibit as much as the works themselves.

Sewell said it was appropriate that the only two U.S. showings were in Detroit and Philadelphia. Rivera did 27 fresco panels at the Detroit Institute in 1932. Located in the institute's central court, the panels depicted Ford Motor's Rouge complex at Dearborn.

Two watercolor-on-plaster frescoes are permanently installed on either side of the Philadelphia museum's grand staircase.

Cuba Makes Bid For Tourist Dollars

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

HAVANA (AP) — With 289 beaches along its 4,000-mile coast, Cuba has obvious potential as a tourist haven and Fidel Castro's government is making a big pitch for visitors from the West and the dollars they bring.

The prices for tourist attractions are reasonable, the streets are safe, the people are friendly and, for the visitor looking for a sun spa with a difference, communist Cuba certainly offers that: It boasts Latin America's best known head of government and a certain mystique after an extended period in which few Western tourists came.

Tourism earnings are only a fraction of what they were during the pre-revolutionary period but they have moved steadily upward since the start of the decade.

But Cuba is still in the process of relearning the fine points of catering to the whims of visitors. For now, at least, foreigners accustomed to hassle-free vacations can find a stay here to be frustrating.

At the 25-story Havana Libre Hotel, which opened a few months before the revolution as one of the Hilton chain's star attractions and has long since been nationalized, the wait for an elevator can take 20 minutes. Getting through to the switchboard to make an outside call can take equally as long. In some rooms, the toilet seat is missing or the radio is out of order.

Still, foreigners are coming in increasing numbers. According to official statistics, almost 100,000 visitors from the West came to Cuba in 1984 compared with 48,000 in 1980. Westerners are courted by Cuba more than other foreigners, including this country's socialist brethren, because they bring the dollars Cuba so badly needs.

Only 2,000 visitors came from the United States in 1984, excluding Cuban exiles. The Reagan administration has actively discouraged U.S. tourism in Cuba in order to keep American dollars out of communist hands.

The administration cannot legally forbid Americans from traveling to Cuba but U.S. citizens who spend money here are subject to prosecution under the Trading with the Enemy Act. Exceptions are journalists and others with a professional interest in Cuba.

Canada and Mexico send by far the most tourists, accounting for almost half of all visitors from the West in 1984, with 24,000 and 23,000 respectively, according to government statistics. They are followed by Spain (13,000), and Italy and West Germany (11,000 each).

In February, Castro said Cuba's tourism earnings jumped from $39 million in 1981 to $87 million last year.

Before the revolution, Cuba was earning around $400 million a year from tourism, according to published reports at the time. But that was a period when Cuba was rent by vice and corruption, with millions spent, mostly by Americans, on prostitution and gambling.

In the new, puritanical Cuba, visitors have to content themselves with more conservative pursuits, such as beaches and museums.

The new emphasis on tourism reflects the government's difficulty in accumulating foreign exchange from traditional exports such as sugar, the price of which has been at low levels for years.

The government, in an indication of dissatisfaction with the pace of progress, recently fired the director of international tourism.

The Soviet Union helps offset the low sugar income through a variety of measures. It sends Cuba more oil than the island needs and over the past three years, Cuba has sold its surplus oil for dollars to third countries, earning a reported $1.5 billion.

But Castro said earlier this month the sharp drop in the price of oil is expected to cost Cuba several hundred million dollars this year.

For visitors, simple tasks such as buying a newspaper can be an onerous challenge. Inquiries at newsstands about the availabilty of newspapers usually elicit one of two responses: "It hasn't arrived yet" or "All sold out."

A foreigner felt a sense of exhileration the other day when after a 30-minute search for a newspaper in the downtown area, he finally found one which had been abandoned on a sidewalk.

Still, foreigners with dollars have a privileged status here. At crowded restaurants, vacant tables suddenly appear when the head waiter is informed that the customers who have just arrived have dollars.

Castro has told his people that because of Cuba's acute need for hard currency, the most prized beaches will be open only to foreigners during certain periods.

Eight new resort hotels are being built and construction crews are at work on a new airport at Varadero Beach, a two-hour drive from Havana. Spanish and West German firms will provide advice on managing tourism facilities.

Cuba is trying to attract cruise ships to its shores. At local hotels, foreigners are entertained by a tourist channel that shows American movies in English with Spanish subtitles. In many places, American credit cards are accepted.

A visitor finds that, contrary to the impression of some Americans, Cuba does not have a police state atmosphere.

Nonetheless, the authorities are on the lookout for suspicious activity. The other day, an American photojournalist sitting in the passenger seat of a car traveling down a main thoroughfare took a picture of a billboard of Castro that loomed high over a military base.

The military police stopped the car and the officer's interest peaked when he learned that two of the passengers were Americans.

"No country in the world allows picture taking at military bases," the officer said. The incident ended amicably when the officer was told that the photographer's target was Castro and not military hardware. But the photographer was required to leave behind his roll of film.

That was not the first surprise of the day for the Cubans and their American companions. Earlier, at a downtown tourism office, they had made reservations for a yacht tour that afternoon along Havana's coast.

The $10-price per person seemed reasonable but the four fun-seekers learned on their arrival at dockside that the yacht excursion service had been suspended. No one had ever informed the tourism office that handled the reservation.

Renovations Scheduled For St. John's Museum

WILMINGTON — St. John's Museum of Art has announced the start of a $500,000 funding campaign to complete renovation of the former Masonic Lodge that served as the first museum building. The renovation work will create a sculpture garden and courtyard. The campaign will also be for funds to establishment an endowment fund.

At a gathering of members and campaign volunteers, museum president Dr. John Myers told the group that advance gift commitments, including two major challenge grants, totaled $207,000. One grant provides $20,000 for every $100,000 of commitments paid by January 5, 1987, up to the $500,000 campaign goal. The second challenge grant matches dollor for dollar up to $50,000 every commitment made from the May 28 launch date until the fourth of July.

The lodge will provide space for galleries for the permanent collection that includes the series of prints by Mary Cassatt kwown as "The Ten," plus space for a library, gift shop and offices.

The grounds of the museum will be converted into a walled courtyard with walkways, planting and terraces areas for exhibitions, art classes, lectures and performances.

Income from the endowment will augment membership dues, gift and grants to provide essential operating funds for the growth of St. John's. Architect for the project, Ligon Flynn, says work is tentatively scheduled to begin after Labor Day and is due to be completed by Memorial Day 1987.

St. John's Museum of Art is located at 114 Orange Street in the historic waterfront district of Wilmington. Founded in 1962, the museum complex now consists of three distinctive buildings, dominated by the former Greek Orthodox Church and flanked by the Cowan House Studios and St. John's Lodge. The buildings are linked in the rear by a common courtyard.

Iowa Writers' Workshop To Celebrate 50th Year

By DAVID SPEER
Associated Press Writer

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — The Iowa Writers' Workshop, the Parris Island for purveyors of poetry and prose, is calling in the troops for a 50th birthday bash.

The guest list is long and includes some of the names the workshop has attracted since it first went into the University of Iowa's course descriptions in 1936: John Irving, Gail Godwin, Kurt Vonnegut, Robert Penn Warren.

John Leggett, director of the workshop for 17 years, is often asked who the workshop's famous writers have been. "One gets through the list pretty rapidly, and they're always the same names: Flannery O'Connor, John Irving, Gail Godwin and the instructors, Philip Roth and Kurt Vonnegut, and the poets are even more profuse," he said in an interview.

"But, in fact, that's the part of the thing that interests me the least, particularly at this juncture. If we are only turning out a few household-word writers, I would say the whole program would be useless and a great waste of the university's time and money."

Still the workshop has attracted such luminaries as Robert Frost, Nelson Algren, Robert Penn Warren, Stephen Vincent Benet and John Cheever, who were all teachers.

However, the aim of the program is turning out individuals who have a conviction that fine writing matters, Leggett said. "They may be 20, 30 years out, and they may not be writing novels or poetry, but their lives are somehow centered upon it," he said.

The celebration from May 23-25 will honor Paul Engle, the Iowa-born poet who shepherded the program through its formative years. Engle stepped down as director in 1967, a post he had held since 1941.

There will be panel discussions as well as sporting and social events. "In general, the background for nostalgia and renewal of old friendships," said Leggett, who is not sure who will be attending. But regardless of who comes or who stays away, the celebration will be a success, he added.

"I'm quite sure it's going to achieve its ends, which is to draw attention to us," he said. "Nobody in the world argues that there's a better writing program anyplace.

"The idea is to call attention to the fact that we've been doing this and doing it successfully for 50 years now, which makes us the great-great-grandpa of all the other writing programs that are ... basically imitative of what was begun here in 1936 and earlier," Leggett said.

The foundation for the workshop and its Master of Fine Arts degree in creative writing was set down in 1922 when Carl Seashore, dean of the graduate college, announced that a creative work would be acceptable as a thesis for advanced degrees.

The workshop has had little trouble attracting attention to itself in the past, with writers such as John Cheever writing fond reminiscences of Iowa City. Cheever's essay, describing the glories of Iowa City porches, walks by the river and a touch football game, presents an idyllic picture of the college town.

"There's a kind of Left Bank quality about life in Iowa City where you can find people of all sorts," Leggett said. "If you like the society of painters, you can find them. Or lawyers or doctors."

The workshop gives students the community of other writers and time to write, Leggett said. "I like the concept of a place where young writers come to see if they have got the talent and the intelligence and the perseverance to build their lives around it," he said.

Others have written of the workshop's boot-camp toughness — of stories or poems castigated by classmates.

"In fact it used to be more hostile, I believe, than it is now," Leggett said. "I can remember really hostile audiences so that the author ... could be reduced to tears. ... But there's very little of that."

The severest, and most quoted, criticism of the program came from Nelson Algren in a Chicago Tribune Magazine article 15 years ago. "Why has the Iowa Writers Workshop, in its 35 years of existence, not produced a single novel, poem or short story worth rereading?" Algren asked.

"I don't think he had read Flannery O'Connor," said Leggett, who recounted a story which explained Algren's bitterness.

From Sheppard Memorial Library

By DIANE TAYLOR

The author of the best-selling book "Light a Penny Candle" has written another novel which will surely be just as popular. "Echoes," by Maeve Binchy, is the story of two young people who grow up under very different cicumstances in a small beach resort town in Ireland in the 1950s and 60s.

Clare O'Brien is the poor daughter of the village shopkeeper. She is unlike the other young girls in town who hate school and long to marry as soon as they can. Instead, she wants a college eduction which she sees as the way to leave Castlebay. Through her own hard work, with no encouragement or understanding from her family, she earns a scholarship to the university in Dublin.

David Power is the son of the village doctor who leads a pampered life under the watchful eyes of his materialistic mother who schemes for him to marry into the society that she did not. David, however, wants to become a doctor, and, like Clare, want to leave Castleby as soon as possible.

It is in Dublin, away from the social confines of their hometown, that Clare and David fall in love and marry. Through unfortunate circumstances they find themselves back in Castlebay with all their dreams behind them.

Though the plot may seem simplistic, the characters add the real interest to the story. Chriss, Clare's bitter, older sister, is jealous of Clare. Angela O'Hara, the teacher who was determined to help Clare obtain the scholarship, is fearful that her well-guarded secret will shatter her life in this small town where gossip is a way of life.

Mrs. Power, who considers Clare beneath her, makes Clare feel unwelcome. And throughout the book is Gerry Doyle, the handsome girl-chasing young man whose obsession with Clare comes to a disastrous conclusion in this story that definitely does not have a "happily-ever-after" ending.

Benefit Casts Of Korczak Bronzes

CRAZY HORSE, S.D. — A long range program to create bronze casts of the works of sculptor Korczak Ziolowski to help generate benefit funds for the Crazy Horse Memorial on a South Dakota mountaintop has been announced by the late sculptor's wife, Ruth.

Her announcement came at Crazy Horse recently at the unveilings of the first bronze casts of three of Korczak's major works, "Chief Henry Standing Bear," "Gutzon Borglum" and "Wild Bill Hickok."

At the invitation of Sioux Indian chiefs, Korczak arrived in the Black Hills of South Dakota in May, 1947 to begin measurements for the mountain carving, and his wife and family are dedicated to carrying on his work according to Korczak's detailed plans.

At the unveiling of the first three castings, Mrs. Korczak said: "We plan to cast two or more works a year with the dual goal of providing much-needed additional funding for our work on the mountain carving and on the educational and cultural aspects of Crazy Horse while, at the same time, making people more aware of Korczak as a studio sculptor. He was much more than a mountain carver, creating well over 200 works before he came to Crazy Horse when he was nearly 40."

After this initial trio in this program, the next piece of sculpture to be cast will be Korczak's "Paderewski: Study of an Immortal." That is the Italian marble work for which Korczak won first prize for sculpture, by popular vote, at the 1939 New York World's Fair.

CHIEF HENRY STANDING BEAR . . . is one of three bronze casts of the work of sculptor Korczak Ziolowski to be created in bronze casts. Several of the sculptures of the late creator of Crazy Horse will be issued for sale in limited editions as a benefit project to raise funds for the continuation of the mammoth Crazy Horse sculpture on a mountaintop in South Dakota.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

Another Common Decorating Mistake Is Relying On Color To Do The Whole Job. It Must Work With The Other Elements Of Decoration. No Matter How Beautifully Decorated Or How Well Fabrics Coordinate, Other Factors Such As Scale, Emphasis, Rhythm And Balance All Interrelate To Project The Finish Product Or Room.

For Example, In Choosing A Fabric For A Bedspread, The Quilting Style (Sometimes Called The Calm Style) Can Really Make Or Break The Appearance Of The Spread. If The Spread Is A Large Design Floral Fabric An Outline Quilting Style Would Best Flatter The Pattern Rather Than A Small Channel Or Two Parallel Lines Which Would Take Away From The Design Of The Fabric Rather Than Enhance It.

If A Room Has Three Picture Groupings On Four Different Walls, One Would Lose The Major Focal Point. It Is Much More Effective To Have One Major Picture Grouping On The Major Focal Point Wall Of A Room.

Also, If One Has A Small Room And It Has Furniture That Is Massive For Its Size, No Matter How Beautifully The Colors Coordinate The Overall Appearance Of The Room Can Be Ruined.

Noted Shell Collection On View At Maritime

BEAUFORT — The North Carolina Museum in Beaufort has on exhibit, through July, the Brantley and Maxine Watson Worldwide Shell Collection, being shown for the first time in its entirety.

Donated to the museum in 1982 by the Duke University Museum of Art, the collections contains nearly 5,000 shell specimens from over 100 countries.

The new, larger facilities of the year-old N.C. Maritime Musuum make it possible to present this vast display for the serious collector or the casual beachcomber.

The collection encompasses a specialization of shells from the coastal areas of the southern United States, the West Indies and South America.

The collectors, Brantley and Maxine Watson, Durham natives, moved to Baltimore in 1946, where he served as vice president and director of McCormick Company. They began their shell collection as interested amateurs. Later, they joined several shelling expeditions to seek out specimens in their natural habitats.

Eventually, the collection became one of the largest and most unusual private collections in the United States.

In 1976, the Watsons donated the collection to Duke University museum of Art where it was on dispay until 1982. In negotiations between Duke and the N.C. Maritime Museum, it was felt that a coastal museum would be a more approprite setting for a collection of this magnitude. Dr. and Mrs. Watson and the heirs of their estate approved the idea of moving the collection to the Maritime, and in August 1982, the Maritime Museum became the recipient of the valuable collection.

The N.C. Maritime Museum is located at 315 Front Street, Beaufort. Admission and parking are free. Museum hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays, 2 to 5 p.m. Sundays. It is open the year round.

Concoctions For Arthritis

By ROGERS WHITENER
Folklore Writer

No ailment has plagued mountain folk more severely than arthritis and rheumatism.

Thus numerous folk remedies have been concocted for these ailments, varying from assorted tonics used internally to all manner of poultices and oils applied to the afflicted joints. In addition, certain amulets or good luck charms may be worn or carried to ward off this painful affliction.

In 1954, for instance, the following notation and recommended treatment for arthritis and rheumatism appeared in an edition of "Health From Herbs":

"Arthritis. This widespread octopus requires little introduction as its stranglehold is only too painfully apparent today.

"In this era martyrs do not die at the stake, but suffer from what is sometimes ten times worse. If those disturbing twinges have not yet tightened into the vise—like grip of this scathe, the following may prove to be just what you need to avoid its clutches."

A recipe for "nature's medicine" is then given, involving the boiling of sassafras bark, prickly ash bark, and wood betony herb. Directions recommend taking the tonic nightly and being very patient about achieving relief.

This remedy is widely known in Appalachia, but probably has not been employed as frequently as pokeberry tea, made by simply boiling the berries in water until a proper consistency is reached. In the past some advocates of this remedy added white whiskey for special curative effects. They usually took it nightly.

Another favorite rheumatism and arthritis remedy still used in the mountains is a tonic made from boiled cherry bark and corn whiskey. Like pokeberry tea it is taken regularly.

Other liquid remedies include boneset tea, alfalfa tea, plain sassafras tea, sarsaparilla, and lion's tonque tea.

Remedies employing salves and ointments tend to outnumber tonics and teas.

An ointment frequently employed in the Appalachians is made of St. John's root and calves' feet oil. Another is prepared by boiling catnip, tansy, and sage, and adding turpentine to the mixture.

Still another favorite — undoubtedly gained from the Cherokees — is bear grease, liberally applied. Groundhog oil was also frequently used. Even more unusual is a rubbing oil concocted by soaking in corn whiskey.

The power of the buckeye to ward off rheumatism is widely recognized in the mountains. Normally the procedure is to carry a single buckeye in a pocket, but in times past bags of buckeyes were worn around the neck.

Irish potatoes were also carried on a person as insurance against rheumatism. And there were those who believed that a potato carried thus until it hardened could also effect a cure if the ailment were already present.

Many mountain dwellers also believed that a rattlesnake skin would ward off rheumatism if it were carried or worn. Thus rattlesnake belts were common items of dress.

Preceding the modern fad of or belief in copper bracelets, the early mountain settler might wear a ten—penny nail made into a ring or suspended a coin or other piece of metal by a string around his neck to prevent rheumatism.

Undoubtedly some of the remedies actually worked to a degree, their success probably measured according to the belief of the user.

Readers are invited to send folk materials to Folk-ways and Folk-Speech, Department of English, Appalachian State University, Boone, N.C. 28608.

Joint Liberty Stamps Issues Scheduled By U.S., France

WASHINGTON (AP) — French stamps honoring the centennial of the Statue of Liberty will be sold in New York City post offices, the U.S. Postal Service said today.

The French stamp will carry the same drawing of the left profile of the head of the Statue of Liberty as its companion 22-cent U.S. stamp.

Both stamps will go on sale July 4, during the Liberty Weekend program of special events honoring the statue's 100th anniversary.

French officials will be in New York to provide French postal cancellations as souvenirs of the event. Similar envelopes and postal cards will be sold by mail by the U.S. Postal Service's philatelic sales unit.

The U.S. stamp, printed in red and blue on a white background, will be available at post offices nationwide on the next business day after the Independence Day holiday.

Arab Families Live In Caves

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

MOUNT SCOPUS, Jerusalem (AP) — Not far from Jerusalem's ancient walled city and its holy sites, a few impoverished Arab families live in caves. Except for a television picture flickering in the dim light, life in the caves has changed little in 2,000 years.

The mountains on which Jerusalem is built are riddled with natural caverns and man-made burial chambers hewn from the chalky limestone. Fire-blackened ceilings testify to centuries of occupancy.

Mahmoud Al-Salaime, a Moslem clergyman, said caves like the one he lives in have been inhabited since Roman times or before. "They were used by Christians to pray secretly when the Romans persecuted them."

Israel, which has controlled the Arab sector of Jerusalem since 1967, has been trying without success to move the cave people out in its effort to raise living standards of Palestinians.

Amir Cheshen, an Israeli city official, said the municipality has offered to move the cave people to apartments on condition that the caves be sealed to keep others from moving in. But the owners of the land collect rent from the cave dwellers and have no interest in sealing them up.

No one knows for sure how many people live in the scattered caves today, but probably not more than a few dozen, said Cheshen, the city's adviser on Arab affairs.

Refusing to leave property is also fundamental to the psychology of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

"We have seen the Turks, the British, the Jordanians and the Israelis here. No one stays forever," said the 62-year-old Al-Salaime.

So home for one particular family is a cave at the foot of Mount Scopus in the biblical Kidron Valley about a half mile from the walls of Jerusalem's Old City.

"If you have 10 children and earn 10 shekels ($6.50) a day, you can't afford to move to an apartment," said the woman in her 30s who lives there. She said her husband's wages are supplemented by Israeli welfare payments of 200 shekels ($130) a month.

The woman allowed a reporter into her cave but refused to give her name or allow photographs to be taken inside. She said she had been shamed by an article about her home in the local Arabic press.

The cave is runs about 60 feet deep into Mount Scopus and is about 150 feet wide, but the family of 12 lives in only a small part of it, surrounded by a wall of stone, mud and straw.

The room has no electricity or running water; a car battery powers a portable television set. The bluish light from the TV screen and kerosene lamps provide the only illumination at night.

The woman said she brings water in jugs on her head from a neighboring house.

Asked why her family was squeezed into one small area, the woman shrugged and said the landlord refused to let them expand and build more rooms.

"This is how it was when we came," she said.

Sitting crosslegged on a piece of cardboard on the stone floor, the woman, wearing a traditional embroidered Arab dress and a white headscarf, deftly wrapped boiled cabbage leaves around a filling of sticky rice. She said meat is a luxury twice a month.

"In the winter (the cave) gets full of water and we are dying from the cold," she said. Although Jerusalem's winter temperatures rarely fall below freezing, the cold in the caves in bone-chilling.

In contrast, Al-Salaime has modernized his cave. He has a kitchen, storeroom and bedroom. Just outside he has built a one-room house with a tiled floor

Britain Honors Famed Domesday Book

MEDIEVAL LIFE
17th June 1986

MEDIEVAL LIFE . . . in England is pictured on four stamps to be issued June 17. The quartet commemorates the 900th anniversary of the completion of the Domesday book, a survey of England carried out by order of William the Conqueror. The medieval life of the times on the stamps shows people from different sectors of a rigid class system in England existing then. (Photo courtesy British Post Office)

An intricate and detailed picture of English life 900 years ago is painted with delicate brushstrokes and vivid colors in the Domesday Book — a phoenomenal administrative achievement and an incomparable record of medieval society.

The rigid class structure of feudal society is reflected in a set of four stamps being issued by the British Post Office on June 17 to mark the 900th anniversary of the Domesday Book's completion. The stamps show a peasant, a freeman, a knight and a lord in surroundings appropriate to their status, in denominations of 17, 22, 31 and 34 pence respectively.

Two decades after his invasion victory at the Battle of Hastings in 1066, William the Conqueror found himself ruling a land without knowing the details and extent of his possessions. He decided to launch a survey of the whole of England and the complex process of inquiry and valuation that produced the Domesday book in only ten months also recorded important changes since the conquest.

It was largely to establish facts about England's mainly agricultural economy that William order the survey, a work so comprehensive that for centuries afterwards it was consulted by his successors.

The book show that more than 90 percent of the population worked on the land. In that feudal society, a powerful monarch like William could make grants of lands to his barons in return for their sworn allegiance.

The barons could then divide these holdings among the lower orders in return for money, dues and compulsory labor. At the bottom of the social scale was the peasant who was granted the means of making a living, but existed in utter subjection.

By contrast, it might have taken the labor and rents of 20 peasant families to maintain the household of a knight who would have to commit 40 days' service a year to his overlord.

The Domesday book records every manor in the land in 1086. These land-holdings were the units of taxation upon which the survey was based. Each manor had a lord upon whose protection most of the inhabitants depended and over whom the lord had powers bestowed by the king. Thus, William held sway over his subjects by granting most of the land.

There were few towns and cities and these were mainly where freeman lived. They could own land and they gained their status by birth, purchase or apprenticeship. They were granted special privileges in cities and boroughs to practice the skills that led England towards commercial and industrial power.

Cloth manufacture and dyeing were important sectors of a world of skilled manual trades capable of tackling anything from producing a bobbin to building a cathedral.

The advent of mircrochip technology has made it possible to analyze the books's details to the full. Nine centuries on, it is at last possible to match the achievement of William's hard-pressed clerks and fully appreciate the extent of their effort.

Drake's Landing At Hatteras Commemoration Scheduled

By JOANNE VENTRELLA
N.C. Department of Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — English explorer Sir Francis Drake anchored off the coast of North Carolina 400 years ago, returning from a trading and raiding voyage to the West Indies. On June 10, 1586, he spied a signal fire on the coastal barrier islands and found a weary, hungry group of English colonists seeking passage back to England.

The ragged men were led by Ralph Lane and were the first men sent by Sir Walter Raleigh to establish a colony at Roanoke Island.

In connection with the celebration of America's 400th Anniversary, the June, 1586 events will be commemorated at noon Tuesday in Hatteras with a reenactment of the signal fire and the landing of Drake's men. There will also be a dedication of a permanent marker recognizing this historic event.

The Elizabeth II, North Carolina's representative 16th century ship, will sail from its berth at Manteo to Hatteras to take part in the event.

Participants in the ceremony will include Dr. William C. Friday, president emeritus, University of North Carolina; the Honorable Barry T. Holmes, British Consul General for the southeastern states, stationed in Atlanta; Patric Dorsey, secretary of the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources; Charlie Gaddy of television station WRAL, and the 2nd Marine Division from Camp Lejeune.

Costumed interpreters will portray the colonists and the men that Drake sent ashore to greet them. Gaddy will narrate this live "Quadricentennial Minute."

Nick Hodsdon and Doug Barger, who form "Historically Speaking," are choreographing the reenactment of Drake's arrival. Nick is "The Troubadour," performing Elizabethan music. Barger, in charge of wardrobe for the 400th Minutes productions, designed the costumes to be used in the Drake reenactments.

Dale Burras, president of the Hatteras Island Civic Association and the man who raises the Outer Banker ponies on the island, is among local officials who will be present for the ceremony.

A permanent wayside marker, titled "One Speciall Great Fire," designed by Phil Evans of the National Park Service, will be dedicated.

The 2nd Marine Division Band from Camp Lejeune will provide ceremonial music, including the playing of the American and British national anthems. The benediction will be given by the Rev. Carl M. Eller, Hatteras United Methodist Church.

After the formal ceremonies, which should conclude at about 1 p.m., festivities will move to the Elizabeth II for refreshments and Elizabethan entertainment.

The Raleigh Amateur Radio Club will have a special events station set up by the ship, and the Royal Signals of Great Britain will also set up a special events station in England. That group has designated HIR — for Hatteras Island Rescue — as the official call sign of the day.

The Elizabeth II will be open to the public during her stay at Hatteras.

'Lost Colony' Crews Busy Preparing For Opening

MANTEO — Actors and technicians totaling 128 in number arrived at Waterside Theater on Roanoke Island May 26 to begin a hectic three-week rehearsal period leading to opening night June 13.

The show that goes on behind the scenes of "The Lost Colony" is a fascinating world of activity in itself.

The task of unpacking the show from year to year is monumental and requires orchestrated movement to keep the situation from becoming a Keystone cops episode.

Ladders, scaffolding, tons of sand, props, scenery, costumes, lighting instruments and giant speakers form a stately parade as they are unpacked and moved to their proper places.

There are approximately 1,000 pieces of costumes that add up to some 400 costumes; some 400 major props; two 63-foot light towers, 165 lights, 72 dimmers providing 100 light cues in the show; six speakers, two tape decks, 8 power amps that make up the sound system.

Everything somehow magically comes together by opening night.

Over the last 50 years, about two and one-half million people have sat in the summer twilight watching the outdoor drama, unaware of the hundreds pf unseen operations backstage that contribute so much to the performance they are witnessing.

"The Lost Colony" plays nightly, except Sundays, from June 13 through August 30 in the Waterside Theater on Roanoke Island.

For tickets and more information, write "The Lost Colony," P. O. Box 40, Manteo, N.C., 27954, or call the box office at 473-3414 or the business office, 473-2127.

New Orleans Renovation Stirs Controversy

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — There hasn't been so much controversy around the old French Quarter buildings since 1850 when the Baroness Micaela Pontalba put on her pantaloons and went out on the ladders to inspect the construction of her brick buildings that frame Jackson Square.

The buildings, said to be the oldest apartment houses in the United States, are at the heart of the most-photographed section of this tourist-oriented town. They've been occupied without interruption for 136 years.

Now one of the twin red brick Pontalba Buildings that flank St. Louis Cathedral, the Cabildo and the Presbytere is scheduled for renovation. Tenants and other interested parties are up in arms.

The $9 million restoration of the Upper Pontalba Building on the upriver side of the square will be the building's first major interior renovation since the Works Progress Administration's in 1939-40.

The project is being planned by the city-appointed Upper Pontalba Building Commission which oversees the building. The Upper Pontalba belongs to the city, the Lower Pontalba to the state. Both are National Historical Landmarks.

Tenants and members of the recently formed Friends of Jackson Square have questioned the need for what they consider mostly unnecessary, expensive renovations which may drive many of them out because of higher rents.

James Derbes, attorney for the group, said, "The organization was formed to look into, evaluate and decide if the project is desirable. If not to bring political or legal pressure on it — to change it, to slow it down or to stop it."

The commission estimates that the tenants, who will have the right of first refusal, will be displaced for not more than one year. Rents, which now range between $250-$700, will go up to $400-$1,500. There are 37 apartments in the building on the second and third floors and 15 commercial units on the ground floor. There is a waiting list of 50 to get in.

Over the years, tenants have installed indoor bathrooms, kitchen plumbing and electricity without coordination, drilling or chopping through firewalls to complete their personal modernizations.

The plans are to repair the numerous penetrations to the firewalls, line up the bathrooms and kitchens vertically, rewire and replumb the entire building, put in elevators and open up the courtyards, restoring them to the original 1850 plans.

This work will bring the building in line with fire and safety codes while respecting historical integrity, said commission chairman E. Ralph Lupin.

The architect for the renovations will be Henry Krotzer, of the firm of Koch and Wilson. Lupin said their credentials are unimpeachable.

The project is to be financed through a bond issue, with a private investor covering $1.75 million. Bonds are expected to be sold next month.

"It is a public building used by private tenants," said Lupin. "Our concept is to restore the building and ask the people who live in it to pay for it. It is one of the most spectacular and beautiful spots to live in the world. These people (the tenants) will be asked to pay a fair price for living in the quarter."

Derbes points out inconsistencies in the price tag. The original cost was $14 million, then it was $11.5 and now is $9 million.

"He (Lupin) said they scaled it down," said Derbes. "But there is nothing here for maintenance, repairs and other things. The average rent is $400 to $1,500. In my opinion $1,500 will be the average rent, they can go as high as $2,500 to $3,000.

"Living on Jackson Square has it problems. It is noisy and there is no parking. It is convenient for eating out, going to bars and worshipping at the Cathederal. Who is going to pay these rents? If they don't the lease can be foreclosed by the private investor and the city can lose control of the building."

The role of the as-yet unnamed private investor is a sore point. At a recent meeting Lupin would not disclose who he had talked to.

"The purpose of the private investor is to use private funds so we can afford it. The investor (one or two) in return would receive Historic Perservation tax credits and a percentage of the profits."

When Lupin said the the Upper Pontalba Commission was not subject to the public bid laws he was booed. He then pointed out that because of this they could negoiate each price.

"These are two of the most important architectural gems in the United States," said Lupin. "Our goal is to preserve them for the city of New Orleans, our children yet unborn and for the next 100 years."

The restoration project has been approved by the State Historical Preservation Office and the Department of the Interior.

The Pontalba buildings were constructed in 1849-50 by the Baroness Micaela Almonaster de Pontalba for $156,000. She was the daughter of Don Andres Almonaster Y Roxas, who built the St. Louis Cathederal which overlooks Jackson Square after the fire of 1788 destroyed the first church. At his own expense he built the Cabildo and started the Presbytere.

The firey Baroness, who survived being shot four times by her father-in-law while living in France, inherited the land around the square from her father. She hired the best architects in the city to build her buildings, James Gallier Sr., and Henry Howard. Gallier drew the first plans and designed the cast-iron galleries that bear the baroness's initials.

Chinese Acrobats Create Movements Of Human Sculpture

By JOHN POMFRET
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Like a stationary breakdancer moving to his own beat, Chinese acrobat Zhang Lianhui snaps his neck, bends his waist and stuffs his 5-foot-8 body into a barrel less than half his size.

The circus crowd goes wild.

In the center ring, another acrobat, Li Yueyun, floats on the hands of her teacher and partner, Jiang Zhengping. Balancing a pile of rice bowls on her head and feet, she brings her legs around her back, parallel to her ears.

In the third ring, Liu Peili and Xin Xiaoping form human sculptures with their bodies. In one instant, the two women depict a flower, their legs and arms entwined like the petals of a chrysanthemum. In the next, they form a multilimbed goddess, evoking Buddhist wall paintings in the ancient caves of northwestern China.

After 15 years of negotiations, the Shanghai Acrobatic Troupe has sent 12 performers to Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus. Three other companies will follow, each spending six months with "The Greatest Show on Earth."

The first troupe, all of whom hail from Shanghai, arrived in February and played in seven other cities before coming to New York. They will stay with the circus until June 15 when another group of acrobats will replace them in Philadelphia.

"The acrobats celebrated weddings, births, good harvests, even deaths," said Xu. "They didn't have much so they used basic farm utensils — balancing plows on their noses and rice bowls on their feet."

Chinese emperors learned of the talented contortionists from local officials residing at the village level. The most skillful were invited to display their art in court, performing a role similar to the court jester in the West.

After the Chinese civil war ended in 1949, the communist government encouraged the proliferation of acrobatic troupes. However, the artists and their livelihood were criticized in the middle '60s, when the country's obsession with politics endangered anyone and anything that wasn't consciously political.

Like most art in China, acrobatics and acrobats suffered much during the Cultural Revolution, which lasted from 1966 to the mid-'70s.

"The Red Guard came after us because we are apolitical. What we do is simply beautiful and that wasn't enough for them," said Jiang.

The troupe and its school were closed in 1966, re-opening six years later. The young women currently performing in the circus represent the first class graduated from the Shanghai Acrobatic Troupe Academy since its new beginning. The school trains people in acrobatics from the ages of 10-16.

"We hope to have many more like them," said Xu Zhi Yuan, the 56-year-old deputy director of the company. "Many, many more."

Of all the countries he's visited with the troupe, the United States is the favorite of Xu. "People are upfront here," he said. "You know where you stand and even if you can't speak English, you can get your meaning across."

"People are always smiling," said Zhang. "It leaves me feeling very comfortable."

Of the six states they visited, the acrobats said they favored Florida.

"It's a state filled with flowers," said Liu Peili. "And the weather's so fine."

New York, though amazing, is too crowded, noisy and smelly.

"You've got amazing buildings, and the architecture, it's so varied. But the dirt and the smells break your concentration," said Xu, as he relaxed outside his troupe's dressing room at Madison Square Garden.

Xu said the lack of public restrooms contributed to much of the noxious odors that assault the senses. His solution: "Add more bathrooms. It'd be simple."

The acrobats live on a train, parked for their New York stay in the freight yards of Long Island City.

"It's a comfortable place," the 43-year-old Zhang said in Chinese. "We have showers, dining rooms, everything you could ask for."

None of the acrobats admits to getting homesick; life is too busy on the road, they say.

"But if things get really bad, we go to Chinatown and have a meal," said Jiang, who also acknowledged a fledging fondness for fast-food hamburgers.

In the beginning, the acrobats had difficulty getting used to American food. "Now," Zhang said, "toast and butter, milk, I eat it all."

On Saturday, "Pictures" will again be danced, along with "Native Green," from the 1985 season and "Channels-Inserts," of 1981.

Cunningham has choreographed over 100 dances, both for his own compoany and for other dance troupes including the New York City Ballet and the Paris Opera Ballet.

In creating his ballets, he has worked with visual artists such as Robert Rauschenberg, Jasper Johns, Frank Stella and Andy Warhol.

Performances on each of the three evenings begin at 8 p.m. Tickets are priced at $10, $13 and $16 and are now on sale the Page Auditorium Box office. For reservations and for more informatin, call 684-4059. Season subscriptions are still available by calling 684-6402.

Season Dedicated To Three

DURHAM — The American Dance Festival will dedicate its 52nd season to three people whose contributions have helped propel the dance group to the forefront of North Carolina's — and the world's — cultural institutions.

The dedication honoring the late Ben Sommers and William and Ida Friday will take place in Page Auditorium on the Duke University campus just before the 8 p.m. curtain of the season's first performance by the Merce Cunningham Dance Company.

Sommers, who died in 1985, was president of the Capezio Ballet Makers, Inc. for 40 years, was instrumental in getting the government to establish National Dance Week and in getting the U.S. Postal Service to issue a commemorative dance stamp.

He also established the Capezio Foundation which supports dance and dance-related activities. He was a man dedicated to his visionary and passionate love for dance.

The Fridays are being honored for nurturing the American Dance Festival since it moved to Durham nine years ago after being based in New England for nearly half a century. William Friday, retiring president of the University of North Carolina, is credited with creating a cultural and intellectural atmosphere in which the ADF now flourishes.

Ida Friday has given generously in time, energy and determination to make the dance festival an integral part of the artistic life of North Carolina.

Awards Ceremony For ATW

A first-time annual award, in recognition of outstanding service to the theater workshop by a member of the community, was presented to Mitchell Oakley by ATW president Don Watson.

Oakley is editor of the Ayden News Leader and Grifton Times. He was singled out for his unfailing coverage of ATW productions during the two to three week period prior to each opening.

After a banquet and brief business session, those attending witnessed entertainment in the auditorium at the school. Organized by Doug Mitchell and Betty Dixon, the entertainment was emceed by Don Watson and Dee Braxton.

DIXON DRAWINGS

The center says Dixon (1875-1946) was "among the finest artists of the American West." He worked as a painter, illustrator and muralist and was best known for his monumental images of Native Americans silhouetted against the Western landscape.

BAINBRIDGE EXHIBITION

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Walker Art Center says it will premiere the first American solo museum exhibition of British sculptor Eric Bainbridge from Aug. 10-Oct. 26.

The museum says, "Bainbridge creates highly inidividualistic sculpture with surrealistic overtones. His work, made from chicken wire and plaster and covered with fake fur, combines shapes suggestive of body parts with other less readily identifiable objects into complex forms. The serious intention of the artist to attempt a definition of reality is leavened by the humorous connotation and somewhat outrageous character of the materials."

Argentine Filmmaking Booms Following Ease Of Censorship

By BRADLEY GRAHAM
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Shortly after democracy was restored here two years ago, a school for young film directors set up shop in the eight-story, baroque stone building where the censor's bureau had been under military rule.

Though the school stayed in those gray, government-issue offices only a few months before shifting into more modern downtown quarters, it accomplished its task. "It was a symbolic act to burn the witches," explained Manuel Antin, director of Argentina's National Institute for Cinematography, who ordered the move.

The lifting of censorship and the recent international success of such post-junta films as "The Official Story" and "Camila" have triggered a filmmaking boom here that its practitioners are likening to the golden era a half-century ago when Argentina dominated Latin American moviemaking.

"It's like after a wholesome rain, when the mushrooms come up," says Maria Luisa Bemberg, among the most prominent of the new Argentine directors. "There's a great necessity now to tell all the stories we're capable of."

Having fallen close to dormant during the bleak military period, Argentine film laboratories are now jammed with activity. Movie proposals are piling up at the National Institute for Cinematography, a major source of funding. Foreign producers have come to discuss joint production possibilities, and foreign distributors are phoning for rights to the latest Argentine films.

In fact, Argentina's film industry is just the most dramatic part of a cultural resurgence that has touched all the arts. Hundreds of writers, dramatists and musicians who were banned, exiled, jailed or censored by the successive military juntas that governed from 1976 to 1983 have returned or re-emerged under democracy.

Many of their latest works are directed toward exposing past horrors or confronting surviving nightmares. Drawn from the dark years of repression and imposed silence are themes of departure and exile, of torture, murder and kidnapping.

On the screen, this has resulted in such productions as "The Official Story," about a woman who discovers that her adopted child belonged to a leftist activist murdered by the military; "The Exile of Gardel," about Argentine artists living in Paris as political exiles during the military regime; "Night of the Pencils" (currently in production), about a true incident in which 14 teen-agers were tortured to death; and "Kiss of the Spider Woman" (made in Brazil but written and directed by native Argentines), about political struggle, psychological defenses and friendship, set in a jail cell.

The trauma of military rule has given Argentine moviemakers a wealth of material and the authority of firsthand experience to treat issues of resistance, collaboration and conscience. But the movie industry here does not want to be typecast as the maker simply of political films.

Argentine productions are already addressing other issues, drawing on this country's rich immigrant history, for instance, or exploring religious and social dilemmas in such films as "Camila," about a forbidden love betweeen a young girl and a priest; "Overdose" (now in production), about drug use; "Poor Butterfly" (in production), about Nazis in Argentina in the 1940s; and "Miss Mary" (in production), about English colonialism, centered on the story of an English governess who comes to Argentina to care for a family.

"I don't think the film industry here is obsessed with conscience films," says film institute chief Antin. "The idea is to develop an industry that will reflect itself and the country."

Back in the 1930s and 1940s, then-prosperous Buenos Aires was a kind of Hollywood South, churning out 40 to 50 films a year, which were featured throughout Latin America. Then came Juan Peron, the populist military leader who imposed his stamp on motion pictures as he did on everything else in Argentina. His domineering influence and that of his wife Evita robbed filmmaking here of much of its freedom and creativity, resulting in the blacklisting of some artists and a drop in the quality of movies.

A new generation of filmmakers in the 1960s led to a flicker of a renaissance. But state financial assistance in those days was largely reserved for those productions that pleased a board of military appointees, and without government funds, other film ideas rarely got past the scriptwriting stage. "It was a corrupt process," says Alejandro Sessa, an Argentine producer. "It was easier to make a film that the jury would vote for rather than one people would see."

Military censorship had been institutionalized with the creation in 1968 of an office that avoided the word "censor" in its name. It was called Ente de Calificacion, meaning Board of Classification.

"With censorship our themes were absurd and were of no interest to other countries," says Sessa, whose grandfather founded Argentina's first film laboratory. "Because of a total lack of freedom, it was impossible not to shoot scripts that were escapist. No one got divorced, everyone lived happily with their families.

"When there was a political statement, it was all in symbols and parables in films like 'Time for Revenge,' about a worker who feigned muteness to avoid testifying against his company, or 'The Grandmother,' about a woman who ate and ate until her poor family decided to kill her. Even with these films, we couldn't get into the best-known international festivals, because no one believed that with military rule we could make anything creative."

Prohibited were not just certain political references but anything that violated the military's sensibilities. In the movie "Nobody's Wife," for instance, director Bemberg had to cut a scene of a nude male. "They got upset," she says of the censors. "Nude women were okay but not nude men. It was a very macho thing. They were adamant about it.

"Had I not had a censor looking over my shoulder," she adds, "my first two films ("Moments," "Nobody's Wife") would have been different, they would have been much freer."

Bemberg began making "Camila" on Dec. 12, 1983, the Monday after Raul Alfonsin was sworn in as Argentina's first civilian president in nearly eight years. During the shooting of the film, after a particularly explicit love scene, Bemberg recalls instructing an assistant to record a milder version of the same episode for a separate copy of the movie, which, she was thinking, would have to be made for screening in Argentina.

Then Bemberg remembered. The censor was gone. And she broke into laughter.

The international acclaim lavished on "The Official Story" — it won an Oscar for Best Foreign Film in April, capping a string of other awards in Cannes, Toronto, New York, Chicago, Havana and Quito — has given Argentine filmmakers an important psychological boost and new marketing possibilities. "It has been a big key to opening the way for Argentine film in the world, for recognition of the recovery of the industry here," says Antin, himself a movie director.

Antin's appointment as head of the national film institute was made by Alfonsin. The director is the first movie industry member to lead the institute since 1976. As such, he is symptomatic of an important change in the management of Argentine arts generally — namely, the return of the administration of art to artists. Today, nearly all the officials who oversee the government's burgeoning arts program are artists who were themselves victims of the military regime.

Though fearful that Argentine filmmakers may now become obsessed with winning more prizes, Antin himself has been especially active in promoting Argentine films abroad. He has had the institute open a branch called Argencine in Madrid to assist in European distribution.

"There is a danger that the patriotic rejoicing about the award of the Oscar will overshadow the implications of this film for Argentina as a society, which still has some way to go before it exorcizes its old demons," fretted the Buenos Aires Herald in a recent editorial. " 'The Official Story' is significant not just because it has won several major film awards, but because it represents one of the few serious artistic attempts to confront Argentina with the 'process' and describe why so many 'ordinary' people took the attitudes they did."

As this comment suggests, a reinvigorated film industry is important to Argentina not just as a source of national pride but also as a vehicle

June Allyson, Remembered As The Tomboy Next Door Type

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — June Allyson, the husky-voiced gamin who could be a tomboy or a tease, still gets offers to star in movies but she turns them down.

Why? "Because they're June Allyson parts," she says.

Though she made her last movie in 1972, "They Only Kill Their Masters," she sometimes appears on TV series. "I think I'm on tonight, on 'Airwolf.' I play an unhinged lady; I really love that. I don't want anything with a message but I want to play totally different kinds of roles," the 68-year-old actress said in an interview.

She was pert and pretty in her roles and always ready with a golden smile. Sometimes, though, there were tears. Those brimming eyes became such a trademark in her movies that even today friends and fans allude to her tearfulness.

When Bill Cosby recently spotted Miss Allyson and her husband, David Ashrow, as they were dining in the same Manhattan restaurant, he said: "I can't talk too loud. I don't want June to cry."

The actress was in New York to publicize the release of MGM's movie musicals as home videos and she's in many of them, including "Song and Dance," "Best Foot Forward" and "Good News."

"Can you imagine having videos at home of all these musicals, like they're never going to make again?" she said. "People can pass them on to their children and they'll see things that are totally new to them."

Miss Allyson, who doesn't like to watch her own movies at home, saw some of the videos. "I wasn't really as bad as I thought I was," she said. "My voice doesn't sound as funny as I thought it did."

Born Ella Geisman in suburban Westchester County, she started in Hollywood in 1937 doing two-reelers and then did stage work for five years before returning to movies in "Best Foot Forward," a fluffy musical centered around a military college ball.

Miss Allyson was under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and loyal to the studio and to Louis B. Mayer. "Papa Mayer," as she called him, gave her away in 1945 when she married actor Dick Powell. Powell died of cancer in 1963.

"I thank Papa Mayer for the kind of person I am today," she said. "He made you so aware you had to have self-discipline in order to survive in this world." She gave up smoking two years ago before the birth of her grandchild, Rickie, whose parents are son Richard Jr. and his wife, Benita. There were problems with the pregnancy and the baby's life was threatened.

"I got very, very worried," she said. "I went to church and prayed. I said, 'I know you don't make deals but the hardest thing for me to do in the world would be to stop smoking. I will stop smoking if you make the baby healthy.'

"I used to be the biggest smoker. I enjoyed it. It was my only vice. I don't drink and party. I'm a do-gooder. When he was born, I looked at this healthy baby and I never picked up another cigarette."

She has a deep interest in people beyond her family. When she visits her mother, who suffered a stroke, in a nursing home in Ventura, Calif., she usually spends a little time with other patients.

"There's a woman there who was a beautiful artist," she said. "She's left handed and had a stroke on her left side. She had a painting on the wall, a snow scene. I wanted to buy it. She wanted to give it to me. I said, only if she would try using her right hand. She is trying."

Miss Allyson met her second husband in 1975. A retired children's dentist, Ashrow has two daughters and two grandchildren. He's a skier and survivalist, digging snow caves and igloos. Miss Allyson doesn't accompany him into the mountains but they do cross-country skiing and fishing together. Their home is on a hill near the edge of a national forest.

She likes to sit in bed in the evenings, watch TV and eat candy, which doesn't add to the 98 pounds on her 5-foot-2 frame. "I never did gain. Papa Mayer used to have me eat in the executive dining room, steak, potatoes, ice cream. I lost 10, 15 pounds on a film."

Her movies have included "Two Girls and a Sailor," "Little Women" and "The Glenn Miller Story." She did "Forty Carats" and "No, No, Nanette" on the stage. She was terrified. "It was a bad time in my life, after I lost Richard," she said. "People were trying to make me do something. Why I chose stage things I don't know."

for self-reflection and understanding. But this is a delicate matter in a country where many are still wrestling with the past.

Release of "The Official Story," for instance, was delayed five months from its initial opening date of October 1984 because Luis Puenzo, the movie's co-writer and director, had doubts about how it would be received here. "I felt many were not ready to accept our point of view," explains Puenzo. "People were very saturated with information in the press about this theme."

After watching "The Official Story" play several weeks to medium-sized crowds, its Argentine distributor was ready to shelve it. But Puenzo persuaded him to wait two more weeks until the Cannes festival last May. There, Norma Aleandro won Best Actress for her starring role as the mother, and the movie went on to complete a 19-week first run in Argentina last year, attracting more than 1 million people. The film reopened in Buenos Aires this March and has been playing to packed houses.

The main damper now on development of Argentine movies is a shortage of funds. The National Institute for Cinematography, the major source of financial credit for most local productions, gets its money largely from its 10 percent share of movie ticket sales.

"A local producer has little access to loans," says producer Sessa. "It's not like in the United States where you can go to a bank, show a script and get a completion bond. If you go to a bank here with a movie script, they'll laugh at you."

The institute turns down many more requests for funding than it approves. It helped finance 31 films in 1984 and 48 last year, but rejected more than 250 other scripts. Even so, some critics say the institute is spreading its limited budget too thin and should lend more money to a smaller pool of productions.

OLD EVANS — A sunny summer 1930s morning on old Evans Street was a peaceful time. People parked their cars and walked to do their business, leaving the street free and safe for barefooted children to cross on their way to the drug store to buy an orange smash, fountain drink or milk shake. This section of old Evans looking toward Five Points was closed in the 1970s and made into a brick walkway when the area was converted to what is now known as the Evans Mall. The Way Greenville Was

Part I: Introduction

The following is the first in a series of 10 articles written by local author Patricia M. Moore for The Daily Reflector. The articles, which tell of historical events that helped to shape Greenville into the city it is today, will be published on a regular basis.

By PATRICIA M. MOORE

The way Greenville was between 1886 and 1907 determined its present-day status as a tobacco and university town.

Consequently, in a historical sense, seeds of the past clearly determined the present. Looking at the past, however, one finds that the city's progress has been eclectic, varying from a dull and inconsequential community to a lively and progressive one.

The town's origin goes back to 1771 when residents of Pitt County asked the royal governor for permission to establish a town as a center for trade. Landowner Richard Evans designated 100 acres of his property to be sold for this purpose, but he died before signifying his consent in court as required by law.

Three years passed before Evans' widow Susanna succeeded in carrying out his wishes, and the town of Martinborough was created in 1774 by act of royal Gov. Josiah Martin, his council and the North Carolina Assembly. Named for Martin, last British governor of the North Carolina colony, the town was located on the south side of the Tar River between Skinner Branch and Town Branch.

The 1771 act for establishing Martinborough provided for "lots of Half an Acre each, with convenient Streets, and a Place for a Church and a Market." In addition, provision was made in the 1774 act "to remove the Court House, Prison and Stocks from where they now stand into the said Town of Martinborough on such parts of the lots set apart by the (Town) Commissioners for that purpose."

At times, spelling of the original name appears as Martinsborough with an "s," although the "State Records of North Carolina" designate the name as Martinborough without an "s."

In 1786, residents requested and received permission from the state assembly to change the town's name to Greenesville in honor of Revolutionary War hero Nathanael Greene. At times, spelling of this name appears as Greensville. However, over a period of years, spelling and pronunciation of the name evolved to what it is today.

At the same time that the town's name was changed from Martinborough to Greenesville, the N.C. Assembly also granted permission for establishment of Pitt Academy, a "seminary of learning," an indication that 18th century residents were interested in education.

His diary entry for Tuesday, April 19, states: "At 6 o'clock I left Tarborough, accompanied by some of the most respectable people of the place for a few miles — dined at a trifling place called Greenville, 25 miles distant — and lodged at one — Allan's, 14 miles further, a very indifferent house without stabling (for his animals) which for the first time since I commenced my Journey were obliged to stand without a cover."

Washington continued, "Greenville is on Tar River and the exports (are) the same as Tarborough with a greater proportion of Tar."

Although Washington was unimpressed with Greenville, his observations were complimentary when compared to those recorded by Methodist minister L.L. Nash, who was appointed to St. Paul's Church (now Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church) in 1877.

In his book, "Recollections and Observations," published in 1916, Nash says: "Greenville is the county seat of Pitt County, and when I went to that charge, religion at Greenville, and the surrounding county, was at a low ebb. There was not a prominent business man in Greenville who was a member of any church. The town was full of bar rooms, and the most of the people patronized them liberally. Profanity and gambling, and all other forms of vice were the order of the day. The town presented a dilapidated appearance; and the only Christian force in evidence was an organization of good women, who labored to keep the church alive and meet the expenses of religious work by festivals, charades, oyster suppers, etc."

As for barrooms, according to local folklore, one citizen occasionally rode his horse through the front doors of a downtown saloon, continued on horseback up to the bar and ordered drinks for everyone in the house. Barrooms continued to be a part of town life until 1904, when citizens voted to establish a municipal dispensary and a distillary.

Saloons weren't the only part of the town's rambunctious past, however. In the early 1900s, "houses of ill fame" existed within a legally designated area between the Tar River and First Street from Cotanche to Greene Street. During state and national Prohibition, these houses were singled out by Greenville's righteous citizens as places where liquor flowed freely and both morals and health were corrupted.

In 1944, the town Board of Aldermen went on record as opposing the return to Greenville of its last well-known madam, who was ordered by a Superior Court judge "to move out and stay out of Pitt County."

Paralleling the existence of these earthy aspects of the town's past were seeds of a serious-minded nature, planted and nurtured by citizens determined to shape Greenville into a town they could be proud of.

Except for stagecoaches and riverboats plying the Tar, Greenville remained an isolated village until 1889 when initiation of train service not only provided a new link to the outside world but also instilled community pride.

Sensing that the town was ripe for growth, its leaders in 1889 formed a "Business Association" chaired by ex-Gov. Thomas J. Jarvis with newspaper editor David Jordan Whichard as secretary. This group urged the citizenry to develop industry, build a bank, cotton seed oil mill, cotton factory and hotel, as well as work for increased railroad service.

Meanwhile, re-introduction of tobacco as a money crop by a group of local farm leaders in 1886 led to diversification of agriculture, which for years had been dominated by cotton.

Further evidence of the town's growth was the founding of its first daily newspaper, The Daily Reflector, by Whichard in 1894.

By 1903, citizens had approved bonds establishing water, sewer and electric service as well as its first public school system. These progressive steps in water and sewer service represented more than convenience for citizens, however, because they also reduced the threat of disease such as malaria and typhoid fever, which had been stimulated by open water ditches and backyard sewer pits.

In 1907, the town and county joined forces to secure location of East Carolina Teachers Training School, possibly the most significant event in the town's history.

Along with triumphs were disastrous fires from the mid 1800s through 1910 that destroyed major portions of the wooden two-block Evans Street business district as well as the courthouse at the corner of Third and Evans streets. The courthouse had burned so many times that a standing joke — not funny to a person looking for old records — is that if you can't find something, it probably burned in one of the early courthouse fires.

Along with these unique aspects of its history, Greenville has shared memorable times in the state's and the nation's history since the late 1800s, including the world wars, the series of depressions climaxed by the Great Depression of 1929 and Prohibition.

When the United States entered the second World War, the town was the scene of a battle of its own that coincided roughly with dates of the war. That was when the longest criminal trial in state history up to that time took place at the Pitt County Courthouse, with ex-East Carolina Teachers College President Leon Meadows being found guilty of fraud and mismanagement of student funds.

Although loyalties were divided and individuals suffered as the result of the Meadows case, the college subsequently entered a period of unprecedented growth that included university status in 1967 and creation of a medical school in 1974.

These selected memories aren't all of Greenville's important steps up the historical ladder, but they are part of a past that spawned the present. And woven together, they reflect the way Greenville was.

About The Author

Scholar, journalist, short story writer, teacher and — most recently — historian are just a few of the professional hats Patricia M. Moore has donned over the years. And as the variety of her undertakings might suggest, her appetite for challenge is rather large.

Take, for instance, her most recent project — the 10-part series begun above telling of Greenville's colorful past.

According to Mrs. Moore, the series on "The Way Greenville Was" took shape over a period of about three years and is the outgrowth of interviews and research she conducted while completing thesis requirements for her master's degree in English at East Carolina University.

While researching her thesis topic, "Big Dave Remembers: The Daily Reflector," Mrs. Moore said she became aware of a number of "holes" in local history, Greenville's history, and "wanted people to know what happened during those blanks."

Taking information gathered in interviews with "Big Dave," David Julian Whichard, Daily Reflector chairman of the board and son of Reflector founder David Jordan Whichard, Mrs. Moore proceeded to substantitate and add to her knowledge of the "Golden City's" past with the help of numerous Greenville residents, both old and young.

Sources for Mrs. Moore's Reflector series include conversations with former city employees such as retired Greenville Utilities Commission Manager Charles Horne and current GUC employee Billy Weston, local residents including F. Harding Sugg, Janice Buck and John M. Bryan, and staff and management at The Daily Reflector and ECU News Bureau.

ECU faculty members who helped with the project include Dr. Mary Jo Bratton, Dr. Henry Ferrell and Dr. John Ellen. Former Associated Press writer Noel Yancey, City Clerk Lois Worthington, librarians at Sheppard, Joyner and Jarvis United Methodist Church libraries, and locals familiar with the origin and history of the Greenville tobacco market also provided information.

Extensive interviewing — as well as hours spent pouring over historical documents and microfilm of early Daily Reflector, Eastern Reflector and area city and county newspapers — was necessary, Mrs. Moore said, because she did not want her series to be based on recollection alone. Each fact presented in the series has been substantiated by one or more source.

A longtime resident of Greenville, Mrs. Moore is married to Dr. Charles Moore and is the mother of two sons, Charles H. Moore and Jeff Moore.

Drug For Acne May Harm Eyes

CHICAGO (AP) — A drug used to treat an estimated 700,000 severe acne sufferers may have side effects hampering the ability of some patients to see at night, says a medical report released today.

"Night vision problems have been reported before and are in our packet" of information about the drug Accutane, said Carolyn Glynn, spokeswoman for manufacturer Hoffmann-LaRoche Inc. of Nutley, N.J.

The report, published in the June issue of Archives of Ophthalmology, cites potential problems with Accutane, which is used to treat an estimated 700,000 people with disfiguring cystic acne.

"I don't think this is reason for alarm, but it's certainly cause for healthy concern," said Dr. Richard G. Weleber, an Oregon ophthalmologist who worked on the report. There are "an awful lot of people taking this medication and if there is a problem with it, we need to know about it."

Weleber said he and colleagues at Oregon Health Sciences University in Portland discovered the potential side effects while studying 50 patients using Accutane to see if the drug caused muscle or skeleton problems. Three people in the study also complained that they couldn't see at night and that their eyes were sensitive to glare, Weleber said in a telephone interview.

Hoffman-LaRoche funded a second study of whether Accutane could cause retina problems in some users, Weleber said.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN:

Q.—There's something I don't understand about the mathematics of bridge. Suppose that you hold the following card combination:

DUMMY
YOU
♠ A K 10 4

You need four tricks from the suit. The odds favor a 4-2 break, so it would seem that, after cashing the king and queen, you should finesse the 10 on the third round. However, the "Official Encyclopedia of Bridge" says that if both opponents follow, you should play the ace next. Why is that?—N.P., West Hartford, Conn.

A.—You are correct in your assertion that, a priori, the odds favor a 4-2 split. However, the Encyclopedia is correct when it says that, once both opponents have followed to the second round of the suit, it is correct to play for the drop rather than the finesse.

The reason therefor is that, when you lead the third round from dummy, you have already eliminated a number of holdings from those originally possible. In addition, when your right-hand opponent follows to the third round of the suit, your left-hand opponent now has one more unknown card than does his partner; therefore, he has a greater chance to have the missing card in the suit. And a 3-3 split is more likely than finding your left-hand opponent specifically with a doubleton.

All in all, there is not that much difference between the two lines. The drop is about a 2 percent better play than the finesse.

Q.—My partner wants to use the Gerber Convention in all circumstances as our ace-asking convention. Is that wise?—A. R., Ft. Worth, Texas

A.—For those readers who do not know the convention, Gerber uses four clubs to ask for aces instead of four no trump. Most experts use it only as a jump bid over one no trump or two no trump. That allows them to keep four no trump as a natural bid, inviting partner to bid slam if he is at the top of his range for his no trump bid, or to pass if he is minimum.

We strongly suggest that you confine your use of Gerber to these cases. In too many auctions you need four clubs as a natural bid to help describe your hand. And then there are the cases where the bid is more useful as Stayman; for example, in the auction:

South	West	North	East
2 ♠	Pass	2 ♢	Pass
3 NT	Pass	4 ♠

If North has an unbalanced hand with a major suit, perhaps with slam interest, he needs to be able to find out if there is a 4-4 fit before he gets too high.

Prayers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — High school seniors will be allowed an invocation or statement of thanksgiving at graduation, but cannot refer to God under terms of an agreement between school officials and an atheist who sued the district.

James Brodhead, who filed the suit on behalf of his son Dan, a student at Van Nuys High School, expressed pleasure at the decision by Los Angeles Unified School District directors, and said he would drop the lawsuit.

Commencement invocations will not be allowed to refer to God, according to Bill Rivera, assistant to the superintendent. Officials initially believed that guidelines banning references to religion at holiday events should not apply to graduations, because they are planned by the students, Rivera said.

"I think the district has been fairly reasonable," said American Civil Liberties Union attorney Carol Sobel, who represented Brodhead.

Economy

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — The International Monetary Fund has reached an agreement to provide Tanzania with standby credit of $133 million over two years, diplomats said.

The diplomats said the government determined Tanzania's difficult economic conditions left it no alternative but to agree to stringent IMF loan conditions it opposed for years.

Tanzania has been negotiating with the IMF over the last six years for a $333 million loan. Talks stalled over IMF demands that the government devalue its currency to make exports more attractive, pay higher prices to farmers to encourage bigger food and cash crops, and end food subsidies.

Mysterious Celestial Form May Be Black Hole

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A super-dense black hole or an object formed within a microsecond of the universe are among explanations for a mysterious celestial form believed responsible for a cosmic optical illusion about 5 billion light-years from Earth.

"Whatever it is, it has to be pretty exotic," said J. Richard Gott, associate professor of astrophysics at Princeton University.

The object apparently contains about a thousand trillion times the mass of the sun, or 1,000 to 10,000 times the mass of the Milky Way galaxy, said Edwin L. Turner, professor of astrophysical sciences at Princeton.

Turner and colleagues reported evidence for the object's presence in a recent issue of the British journal Nature.

The object itself was not seen, but its presence is suggested by astronomical observations, Turner said. If it exists, it would be the most massive object known in the universe, he said in an interview.

The object would be unprecedented in terms of the amount of mass concentrated in a relatively small area, said J. Craig Wheeler, astronomy professor at the University of Texas at Austin.

The mass would be similar to that contained in clusters of galaxies, "and yet we don't see any stars in this thing," Wheeler said.

"It would have to be an immensely more massive black hole than any other astronomy would have led us to consider up to this point," Wheeler said. "I have a feeling you'd have trouble understanding how a black hole could form and be that massive."

Another possibility is that it's a cosmic string, which has never been observed, said Gott.

Strings are postulated to have appeared in an early fraction of a second after the "big bang" birth of the universe. They are thought to be thinner than an atom but possibly long enough to stretch across the known universe.

"We certainly have no definite evidence that that's what this is," said Turner. "It will take up, I suspect, at least a year or more to try to get a firm answer to the question of what it is.

"There's no guarantee we'll ever get it."

The tipoff to the object's presence came in studies of an apparent pair of quasars, star-like objects that can produce massive amounts of light and other radiation, about 5 billion light-years away.

A light-year is the distance light can travel in a year.

Star light is a mix of various wavelengths of light, and can be split into wavelengths to get a distinctive profile, sort of a celestial fingerprint for various stars. But when that was done for the light from the two quasars, the profiles were astonishingly similar, Turner said.

The quasars may be twins, but their similarity suggests they are instead a single quasar, he said. A quasar could appear as two if gravity from a massive object between it and Earth is acting like a lens, bending the quasar's light so that duplicate images arrive at Earth.

A half-dozen so-called gravitational lenses have already been reported, but the effect of this one is far more than that of the strongest lens known, suggesting the object is probably more than 400 times as massive, Turner said.

Sophisticated Study Seeks Signals From Outer Space

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The most ambitious and sophisticated effort ever is being planned to scan the heavens for signals from outer space, but one expert doubts humans will be smart enough to understand the messages even if they hear them.

The project, when finished, will search for alien signals through the end of the century, Jill Tarter of the University of California, Berkeley, said at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"These are the first inital steps of what will be a grand exploration of the microwave system, looking for evidence of an artificially generated signal. Our civilization, for the very first time, can contemplate undertaking, out of pure curiosity, a search that may not bear fruitful results for many generations," she said.

However, Robert Jastrow of Dartmouth College doubts earthlings will get any message, and calculates that other civilizations — if they exist — may have been evolving for 1 billion years longer than humans.

"If you ask what life would be like on those planets that are a billion years or more beyond us in their evolutionary development," he said, "for a clue to the answer, one could look at the fossil record on the Earth."

A billion years ago, the highest life form on this planet was a worm-like creature, he said. So humans stand in relation to the aliens as worms do to humans.

"We communicate poorly with earthworms, which are not aware of our existence unless we step on them," he said. "I'm not sure how we'll be able to detect the presence of life, if it's there, and if we'll be able to communicate at all."

Tarter said the extraterrestrial search is in the third year of a five-year research and development program. Such searches have occurred, off and on, since Frank Drake of Cornell University conducted one 25 years ago.

"People try to use this 25 years of failure to detect a signal as some sort of statistical evidence that there are no signals to be detected from other intelligent civilations," she said. "It's completely fallacious. The amount of searching that's been done to date is trivially small, compared to the amount that we might have to do to cover the microwave spectrum."

The program, financed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, will eavesdrop on microwave radiation that reaches earth from space.

Machines and computers will listen for microwave patterns that nature never produces but that humans, with their crude technology, often do. The program will break the microwave spectrum into 10 million or 100 million channels and search them systematically.

"They will cover a volume of space that's 10 million times greater than everything that's been done over the past 25 years," Tarter said.

But even if microwaves are the right place to look for alien codes, no one can guarantee that the search will succeed, she said. "We hope that what we plan to do will be enough, but we realize that, in fact, there may be more to be done in the future."

Prehistoric Fossils Found In Australia

By RICHARD BILL
Associated Press Writer

RIVERSLEIGH, Australia (AP) — Scientists say they have found the remains of meat-eating kangaroos, giant snakes, horned turtles and other creatures that lived 15 million years ago.

They fear, however, its only a matter of time before tourists vandalize the site for souvenirs.

Other finds include miniscule possums, rabbit-sized marsupials that lived exclusively on eggs and a prehistoric platypus. Many remains are a mystery.

"Riversleigh is unique because it unfolds the history of native Australian animals over 20 periods in time," said Dr. Michael Archer, an associate professor of zoology at the University of New South Wales. "There's nowhere else in the world we can do that."

"It's a gold mine," he added in an interview. "Riversleigh is the palaentological equivalent of the Rosetta Stone."

The Rosetta Stone, an inscribed basalt slab now in the British Museum, was found in 1799 and provided scholars with the key to translating Egyptian hieroglyphic.

Archer said his team has found more than 100 new species or subspecies of animals.

"We've doubled our knowledge of Australian prehistory," he said. "That has tremendous implications for the history of evolution as we knew it."

Much of the area, limestone rocks dotted with termite mounds and gum trees, remains unsurveyed, but Archer, 41, said he thinks it extends at least 60 square miles.

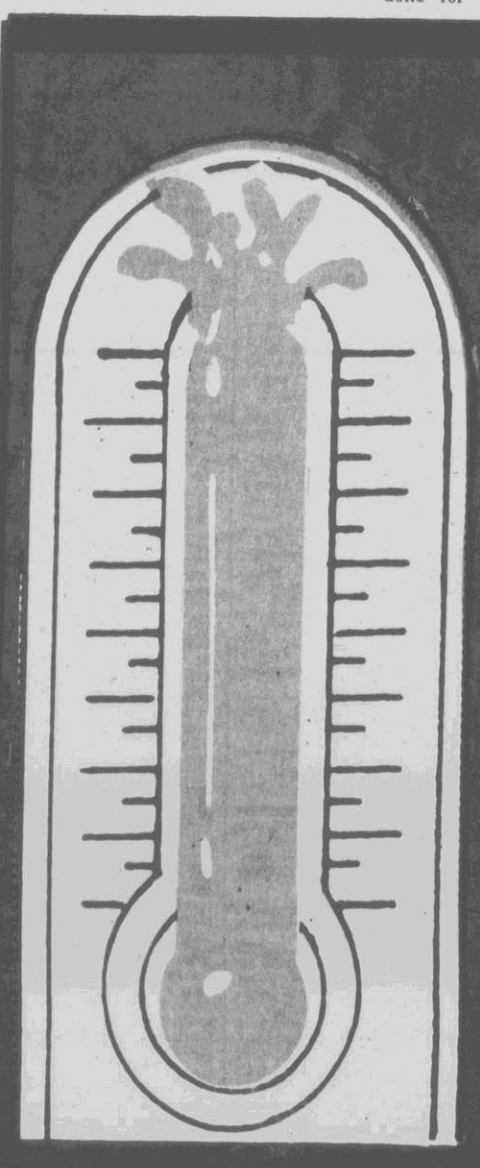

He is concerned, however, about what will happen now that news of the find has spread.

"What worries me is the bush beaters, men who go out with the boys for the weekend in four-wheel drives, guzzling beer and shooting everything in sight," he said. "There are times you come across a water hole filled with dead wallabies, 200 at a time. You know someone has just sat in his jeep and blasted away. If they find this place they'll strip it."

Tony Winners Are Available On Video

By Frank Lovece

It's likely we'll see some of last week's Tony Awards winners on video eventually, though not immediately. At least that's been the pattern with "Sweeney Todd," "The Gin Game," "Purlie" and "Master Harold ... and the Boys," past Tony winners released on video two-to-four years after walking away with the prize.

The videos in question are specially videotaped stage productions, usually shot for "Broadway on Showtime" and other cable, syndication and PBS outlets.

The most-honored Tony winner to make it to video so far is the musical "Sweeney Todd — The Demon Barber of Fleet Street." A 1979 winner for best musical, musical actress (Angela Lansbury), actor (Len Cariou), director (Harold Prince), score (Stephen Sondheim) and book, among other awards, it also won George Hearn a 1985 Best Actor Emmy when it came to TV. Now on RKO Home Video, this TV version — with the national touring company and starring Lansbury and Hearn — lists for $60.

Another multiple-award winner — and one of the most stunning videotaped productions ever televised — is the Royal Shakespeare Company's now-legendary "The Life and Adventures of Nicholas Nickleby." The eight-and-half-hour, four-cassette set costs $200, and has to be ordered by mail from the CBS Video Library (PO Box 1111, Terre Haute, IN 47811; toll-free phone, 800-457-0866). "Nickleby"won for best dramatic play, actor (Roger Rees), director (Trevor Nunn and John Caird) and scenic design.

"The Gin Game," starring Hume Cronyn and 1978 dramatic-play best-actress Jessica Tandy, is also on video (RKO; $40). You can also find the darkly whimsical "Pippin," starring William Katt, Martha Raye and Tony winner Ben Vereen (USA Home Video; $40). Athol Fugard's powerful "Master Harold ... and the Boys," about apartheid and racism in a South African family's diner, is on Karl/Lorimar Video for $60, list. It stars Matthew Broderick, John Kani and 1982 dramatic-play best-actor Zakes Mokae.

Knowing video's voracious appetite, off-Broadway Obie Award contenders may be the next bit of theater to come to video — something that might turn an increasingly conventional bastion of theatrical daring into just more showbiz.

First there was "Dynasty." Now there's "The Colbys," another Aaron Spelling saga based on yet another prime-time dynasty. Tracy Scoggins stars as lawyer Monica Colby in the series, airing Thursday, June 12 on ABC.

THE Rook Look AT GARMENT CARE

DICKIE ROOK
Spring Closet Maintenance
Don't put it off any longer—it's time to clean out your closet! Here are some sound suggestions for cleaning your closet to make room for your spring and summer wardrobe:
•Leave space between clothes in your closet so they can air, and so they will avoid creasing one another.
•Separate light from dark clothing.
•Remember that knit garments do not belong hung in your closet. They should be folded and stored in lined, dust-tight drawers.
•Finally, avoid cluttering your closet with out-of-season clothes.
Bring your winter clothes to us before you store them. We'll clean and press everything and return it all to you ready for safe storage. Proper care prolongs clothing life.

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Mighty Oaks continue to branch out vocally

By Marc Minnelli

They truly are oaks: sturdy, mighty, deeply-rooted and thriving in the country music spotlight. And like their namesake, the Oaks — also referred to as the Oak Ridge Boys — continually branch out. Two singles, "Juliet" and "When You Get to the Heart" (recorded with Barbara Mandrell) are shooting up the charts, their latest MCA album "Seasons" has just been released, and this week, the quartet hosts "The 20th Annual Music City New Country Awards." In the syndicated musical jubilee, airing live from Nashville Monday, June 9, the Oaks will share their on-stage chores with country crooners Reba McEntire, Mel Tillis and Roy Clark.

Duane Allen

"There's no reason we can't be excellent in everything we do," says Oak Duane Allen, who prior to joining the Oaks, worked as a shoe salesman and Texan radio station ad salesman.

"We're not successful simply because we sell records. Every night, in every town, every performance means something special. We have the support of our fans," Allen adds, "and we are expected to give them what they pay for. Leave an audience unsatisifed, and you're dead."

The Oaks have been satisfying audiences since 1942, when they were called the Country Cut-ups, a group known for its southern-fried gospel sound. After the war, the band disbanded, regrouped and adopted the name Oak Ridge Quartet. In 1952, they officially dubbed themselves the Oak Ridge Boys. The current Oaks joined at various times: William Lee Golden in 1964; Allen in 1966; Richard Sterban in 1972; Joe Bonsall in 1973.

But it wasn't until 1977, when they traded gospel for a more pop-country sound, that the Oaks really took root. Since then, they have reaped innumerable awards and accolades, including a Grammy Award for "Elvira."

"The Oaks were innovative with gospel music," says Allen. "Now, we've just gotten progressive. Music is the bottom line, and we feel like we're doing the right thing. If we keep singing the best sounds, then we'll always grow — and have a place in history."

TV Chatter

He's tough. He's rough. And now, Mike Hammer, prime time's favorite hard-boiled softy, is back. Stacy Keach reprises his role as "Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer" this fall on CBS. And though the 45-year-old actor is happy to be returning to the small-screen — Keach's 1984 drug arrest and subsequent nine-month jailing resulted in the original cancellation of the series — he doesn't cop out when it comes to the real source of his happiness: his fiancee, actress Malgosia Tomassi. The couple plan to wed this summer. "We've been officially engaged for four months," Keach told TV UPDATE, "but have been together almost three years. She was right there and very supportive when I was in jail." Keach also admits Malgosia has changed his familial attitudes. "I want to have children, and that's something I never thought of before. I'd like a large family, but for now, I'll start with one child!"

A friend in need is not, Joan Rivers has learned, always a friend indeed. During her reign as permanent guest host for "The Tonight Show," Joan repeatedly asked Barbra Streisand to make guest appearances on the late-night NBC show. But the singer repeatedly refused. According to Joan — who played Streisand's lesbian lover in the 1959 play "Seawood" — she nixed the request because of the superstar's fear. "Barbra claims she's a bad ad-libber. I could do nothing but abide by her wishes." In Rivers' recently published autobiography "Enter Talking," the author details her days as Babs' buddy — and Rivers says she'd love to hear from the singer. "Barbra pretends 'Seawood' never happened," says Rivers, "but I'd love her to call me and say 'Weren't they good times? Weren't they fun?' But at least we acknowledge each other. When she sees me, she says, 'Hello, Joan Molinsky!' And I say, 'Hello, Barbara with all the A's.'"

Alan Alda's latest big-screen effort, "Sweet Liberty," may have gotten mixed reviews, but the 50-year-old actor refuses to take other liberties with his career. Alda, who starred as Army surgeon Capt. Benjamin Franklin "Hawkeye" Pierce on "M*A*S*H" (1972-83), has nixed all offers to reunite the members of the 4077th Mobile Army Surgical Hospital. "'M*A*S*H' was not a show filled with interesting characters, but a show about characters in an interesting place," says Alda. "Anyhow, we're too old to do the show again. What do I say, 'Meet me in the nurses' tent. I'll be the one with the walker'?"

Oscar winner Angelica Huston ("Prizzi's Honor") has made an honorable decision: She has decided to make her New York City stage debut next fall, playing real-life '20s Polish painter Tamara DeLempicka in the critically acclaimed Los Angeles play "Tamara." But good things sometimes come in expensive packages. Tickets will cost $100 each, but that includes a champagne dinner and pre-performance reception with Huston. ... When noted caricaturist Al Hirschfeld was drawing his portrait of Oak Ridge Boy William Lee Golden for the group's recent concert tour, he noted that the singer resembled Methuselah, the Biblical patriarch who lived for 969 years. When Golden —who joins the rest of the Oaks to host this week's "20th Annual Music City News Country Awards" — heard the news, he offered an age-old compliment in return. "Hirschfeld," Golden says, "seems to draw better caricatures than Aristotle could draw conclusions."

Tip On Buying Country Curtains

• You should always be hesitant of buying any curtain that has a colored ruffle because of fading. The average life of a colored fabric that is exposed to sunlight is only 6 months. If you want color, be sure to have a natural colored ruffle under the color. This is called a double ruffle.

A Head Above

The public-TV network that gave us "The Brain" in 1984 will be heading our way in 1988 with "The Mind." PBS's new nine-part prime-time series, brainchild of the same team that produced the first cerebral series, will be hosted by "Brain" on-screen reporter George Page. Mind-boggling territory to be covered in the fall of '88 includes sanity (and lack thereof), depression, addiction and language and communication.

Kudos for Katy

You can hear that distinctive twang in the air — this is Katharine Hepburn Week on the USA Network. The four-time Academy Award-winning actress is saluted on USA Network's movie theme week for June in classic films alongside a bevy of big names: Cary Grant, Robert Young, Ralph Bellamy and Edmund Gwenn. Monday, June 9, sets the African Queen asail with "Christopher Strong," followed by "Quality Street," "Spitfire," "A Woman Rebels" and "Sylvia Scarlett."

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Who starred in her own true story, the TV-movie "Victims for Victims"? Was it Sandra Santiago, the woman who plays Det. Gina Calabrese on "Miami Vice"? — TRACY FEES, SNOHOMISH, WASH.

The 1984 NBC movie "Victims for Victims: The Theresa Saldana Story," was a rare case in which an actress portrayed herself. But Saldana insisted upon being cast in the title role. "I don't think there's anything wrong with playing myself," she said at the time. The 29-year-old Saldana, who was nearly knifed to death in 1982, is the founder of Victims for Victims, an outgrowth of her emotional healing process. The organization offers support groups, legal, medical and psychological referrals and court accompaniment. By the way, Arthur Jackson, the man who attacked her, will be eligible for parole in 1988.

Dear Michele: There used to be an actress named Bess Armstrong with short blond hair who had her own comedy show. Is the same person now starring on "All is Forgiven"? — MRS. JOHN VANDETTI, LA JUNTA, COLO.

A rose is a rose — or in this case, a Bess! Short hair grew long, and the former star of CBS's "On Our Own" is back in the sitcom business with NBC's "All is Forgiven." Besides the change in coiffure, Armstrong has another addition: A baby is on the way. Armstrong is married to Columbia Pictures executive John Fielder.

Dear Michele: Whatever happened to Jennifer Beals, the energetic star of "Flashdance"? Is she still acting? — MICHAEL ADAMS, CITRONELLE, ALA.

"Flashdance" may have been a flash in the pan for 22-year-old Yale student Jennifer Beals. She co-starred last summer in "The Bride," a remake of the Frankenstein thriller. The horror film was indeed a horror; in fact, it was a grotesque flop at the box office. The actress returned to her studies at Yale, but a whirlwind courtship with independent filmmaker Alexandre Rockwell ended with Beals a bride again. The couple married in upstate New York last February.

'Mechanical' movies prove Badham's forte

By Frank Lovece

John Badham

It's not that Badham prefers being known as the man who almost blew up the world in "WarGames"; who demolished large chunks of real estate in "Blue Thunder," and who brings a robot, No. 5, to life in the recently released "Short Circuit."

"I've tried for years to avoid being typed as a certain kind of director," says Badham. "I didn't want to get locked into doing teen dance movies after directing 'Saturday Night Fever,' so I sort of unwittingly or unwisely found myself doing big technological monsters. So now there's something I can be pigeonholed into! Hooray! I'll have to find a movie to get away from that," he adds with a smile.

Badham does have his druthers. The Yale drama school graduate and former top TV director has made several popular movies, including "Dracula" (1979). But, he says, "After 'WarGames,' I'd done three pictures not only back to back, but overlapping. (My fiancee) Jan and I had the audacity to take time off to get married and see a little of the world."

One result of that well-deserved break was that Badham directed "American Flyers," the 1985 film about another type of technological monsters — bicycles — and "Short Circuit." Since directors like to direct, and residuals aren't everything, the high-tech pigeon-hole would just have to be dealt with.

"If I could have gone to the library and checked out my next movie," the 45-year-old Badham says, "I would have done another type. But good scripts are so hard to find that when you have something as delightful as 'Short Circuit,' you tend to want to do it. Jan and I will read and read and read scripts that people want to make, that they're willing to commit millions of dollars to, and they're just junk, junk, junk. So when something comes along that makes you jump up and down and act silly, you say to yourself, 'I know I shouldn't be doing this, but if I'm just gonna sit here and wait until the perfect non-technological picture comes along, I could really miss it.'"

Samuels Finds His Niche As Producer

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — Producer Ron Samuels wishes he'd guaranteed himself a healthy slice of royalties from a current pop hit by registering his ownership to the title "What have you done for me lately?"

Those were the exact words he planned to put on the front cover of his upcoming autobiography, to illustrate the hard fact that Hollywood is a town where yesterday's good deeds are routinely trampled to death in the stampede to stay ahead of the game.

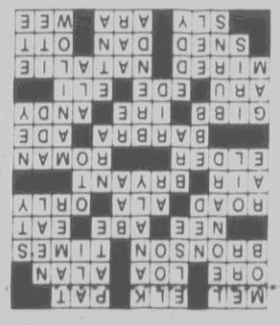

Now, Samuels, whose principal distinctions were that he was married to Lynda Carter and, as a manager, made superstars of Jaclyn Smith and Lindsay Wagner, has shelved his unwritten book.

His Hollywood peers would applaud him: Suddenly, he's too busy to dwell on the past. Samuels is on the rise again thanks to "Iron Eagle," his first feature film in a multi-picture deal with a mysterious Texan who won't allow his name spoken in Hollywood but has $100 million to invest in the movies.

"Iron Eagle," released earlier this year, unintentionally capitalized on a growing national paranoia aimed at unstable Arab despots who promote terrorist attacks on Americans. Samuels' timing was both good and bad: The film, which had Louis Gossett Jr. as its only celebrated actor, made an extra few million thanks to its unplanned relevance — but if it had been released after rather than before April's Libyan air strike, it would have done better yet.

Never mind: Samuels now has another project — and in time-honored Hollywood tradition, the profits "Iron Eagle" brought in for its faceless Texan backer have already been forgotten.

His new venture is a CBS hour-long crime series already confirmed for the fall lineup. "Downtown" stars Michael Nouri ("Flashdance") in what some people are calling "a light-hearted 'Hill Street Blues' " — an interesting development, since "Hill Street" was born out of an order from NBC for "a 'Barney Miller' without the jokes."

HOLLYWOOD REPORT

Will Tilton finally do a Southfork shuffle?

By Ian Harmer

HOLLYWOOD — Patrick Duffy's return to "Dallas" last month has helped bring Charlene Tilton's name back into the public mind. What is making her name pop up even more is an extraordinary campaign she has mounted to win the lead role in a TV miniseries which may never be made.

Charlene Tilton

The actress is the first one to point out that Duffy quit the CBS series voluntarily, whereas her character, Lucy Ewing, was written out by the producers. Thus, she doesn't have a grave from which to dramatically rise.

But there is talk that Lucy may return to Southfork to help reinforce the show's old family flavor after a season in which, like a certain soft drink, "Dallas" strayed from its original formula.

There's also speculation that Lucy and her doctor-husband Mitch Cooper (who was played by Leigh McCloskey) will turn up in "Knots Landing," the prime-time soap that was a spin-off of "Dallas" and which now threatens to overtake the show in TV popularity polls.

Tilton recently decided to return to acting after 12 months of being a full-time mother to daughter Cherish. 3. "I've been taking drama classes every week since I left 'Dallas,' because I always intended to get back to work after a year. I want to be the best actress I can be.

"Everything that could possibly happen to a person happened to Lucy Ewing, and that gave me plenty of opportunity to learn new things but," she adds, "you don't have enough time to study your craft when you are in a weekly series."

The actress's most ambitious project has been circulating photos of herself in '40s movie-queen costumes, a subtle hint that she's been picked to play the lead in a TV miniseries based on Lana Turner's autobiography.

CBS had planned to turn Turner's 1982 memoir into a four-hour miniseries, but the project was abandoned because its period setting made it too expensive to shoot.

Warner Bros. hopes to revive the project, having spent time and money optioning the Turner book and developing a script, but insists that Tilton was never even considered for the role. The "stills" were shot at her expense, and the studio knows nothing about them.

Still, acting's a competitive business — so maybe a girl can't be blamed for trying ex-[illegible]rd

Americans Try To Beat French Open Jinx

By Adam Beckerman

It's 31 years and counting since an American male has won the French Open singles title at Roland Garros Stadium in Paris. Tony Trabert was the fella, back in 1955, the year the Brooklyn Dodgers won their only World Series. During the drought, if it hasn't been the heat undoing the Yanks – that's what happened to Harold Solomon in 1976 – it has been the red clay. It gets everywhere – into the socks, the eyebrows, the underarms.

And of course, balls leave their mark on it; the trouble is differentiating between which ball and what mark. Remember John McEnroe breaking his own concentration to gripe about a line call while leading Ivan Lendl two sets to none in 1984? In addition, the grind-it-out style needed to win at Roland Garros simply is not conducive to American male victories. So long as college kids train on the hard surfaces, the unending string of failures will probably continue. So be it. NBC airs live coverage starting at 9 a.m. (ET) on Sunday, June 8.

Following tennis, it's more World Cup Soccer, as Scotland and West Germany meet in a first-round match at La Corregidora Stadium in Queretaro, Mexico. An intriguing technical solution will not be employed by NBC when it's time for commercials, and for that you can thank the sponsors. Since the action in soccer is continuous, sharing the screen would have been the best way for commercial messages and live action to peacefully co-exist. The first time ABC broadcast a North American Soccer League game in 1979, a goal was scored, but viewers, starved for offense, missed it because of a commercial. NBC's idea – borrowed from the past – was to include a small window in the corner of the screen for commercials to occupy. However, the advertisers weren't thrilled with the idea of sharing the attention of the viewers, so the concept was scrapped. But why? Zapping occurs during commercials and modern TV-sports viewers can handle watching two things at once.

If the NBA is still playing ball this far into June, CBS will air the final games of the NBA finals on Sunday, June 8, Wednesday, June 11 and Friday, June 13. Should the seventh game be necessary, it will be the second time the Celtics have been involved in such a winner-take-all situation in three years. In 1984 they used the heat and humidity in the Boston Garden to run down the Los Angeles Lakers.

Duke and Duchess in 1960s: Beauty lies in the eyes...

Q. Ever since Edward VIII abdicated his British throne in 1936 for the love of Mrs. Wallis Simpson, it has been rumored that she had some sort of mysterious sexual hold on him which was so pleasurable to him that he could not or would not give her up. Now that she has passed on, was the rumor true?—A.K., Henderson, Nev.

A. For the last 50 years, that particular rumor has been widely circulated in Europe. No evidence is available, however, to substantiate or deny its truth, and none is likely to appear. Although beauty lies in the eyes of the beholder, the late Duchess of Windsor was not an especially seductive-looking or alluring woman, which is probably why her detractors ascribed to her a potent bedroom technique. To many of them, that seemed the sole reason for which a king would sacrifice his crown.

Q. President Reagan and his wife, Nancy, have two children, Patti and Ron. Patti has had her first novel, "Home Front," published, and her kid brother is a contributing editor to "Playboy" magazine. Do you think either of these two kids could have made it as writers if their surname was Smith or Schwartz and their old man was a dress salesman? —D.G., Charleston, S.C.

A. There is little doubt but what both Reagan offspring have capitalized on their family name or relationship.

Q. I recently read about Edwin Wilson, a former CIA agent originally from Nampa, Idaho. He helped supply Libya with plastic explosives and other munitions. I'd like to find out where Wilson is in jail and for how long. —P.B., Portland, Ore.

Connolly Gamma-Liaison

Edwin Wilson

A. Wilson was convicted of smuggling weapons and of conspiracy to commit murder, and he received sentences totaling 52 years. At this writing, he is confined in the federal penitentiary at Marion, Ill. He may be eligible for parole consideration around the year 2002.

Q. Do you know of one leading actor or actress in motion pictures, television or on the stage who is willing to come out of the closet and admit to being a gay?—Clive B., Reno, Nev.

A. Not at this time.

Q. Is it true that Ginger Rogers, 74, and Rita Hayworth, 67—Fred Astaire's former dancing partners—are cousins?—Joy Louras, Greenwich, Conn.

A. Yes. Ginger's aunt married Rita's uncle, making the two screen stars cousins by marriage.

Q. Where does Danny Glover come from, Atlanta or New York? He is the hottest black actor of the hour, having worked in "The Color Purple," "Silverado," "Witness" and "Places in the Heart." —Wade Bennett, Bronx, N.Y.

A. Glover, 38, is a modest, talented, native San Franciscan who lives in the Haight-Ashbury district of that city with his longtime wife, Asake, a jazz vocalist, and their daughter, Mandisa, 10. Glover attended San Francisco State University, where he graduated from student activism to stage-acting and later to TV and film work.

Q. Which universities have provided this country with the most Presidents? Am I correct in assuming that they are Yale, Harvard and Princeton? —William R., Macon, Ga.

A. Harvard was the undergraduate alma mater of five U.S. Presidents: John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Theodore Roosevelt, Franklin D. Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy. The College of William and Mary was the alma mater of three Presidents: Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe and John Tyler. Two, James Madison and Woodrow Wilson, were graduated from Princeton when it was still known as the College of New Jersey. And two, Ulysses S. Grant and Dwight D. Eisenhower, were graduates of the U.S. Military Academy. To date, Yale has been the undergraduate alma mater of only one President, William Howard Taft.

THE PASSAGE OF CORAZON AQUINO

BY GAIL SHEEHY

SHE WAS NO SIMPLE housewife—of that much I was certain before I ever set out to meet the lady who had overthrown the brazen dictator of the Philippines. Despite the characterization by the Western press of Corazon Aquino as a frail vessel for her people's aspirations, thrown into a role for which she was totally unprepared, I had a hunch that her transformation had begun many years ago and that she might be a true pathfinder.

President Aquino had more important things on her mind than granting personal interviews, and so for two weeks I talked to many members of her large family about the woman everyone calls, simply, "Cory." Our meeting was finally set for a time when she could relax, at the end of her official day. But there is no end for Cory Aquino. She is riding a speeding train, set in motion the day last November when President Ferdinand E. Marcos called the snap elections and accelerated by the people's four-day revolution that swept her into power without a single day of transition. Yet in her first month in office, she had yet to fall more than 15 minutes behind schedule.

She did not make a grand entrance. She slipped into the grand reception salon next to her office almost unnoticed. Small in stature, as unadorned as a Catholic schoolgirl in her yellow cotton dress and white stockings, President Aquino held out her ringless fingers and gave a tea-party handshake. Her unconcern with the artifice of a "star" was apparent in the little smudges of shadow over her eyes, a recent concession to makeup. Superficially, she did not appear strong.

Shortly into our two-hour interview, however, it became apparent that her surface is meant to be disarming—53 years of conditioning in a macho society have made it that way. But beneath that surface, the lady has an inner strength already tested and proved indomitable.

Beneath the surface, the lady has an inner strength already tested and proved strong

"I've reached a point in life where it's no longer necessary to try to impress," she said. "If they like me the way I am, thank you. If they don't, that's too bad."

Cory Aquino's conversation glowed with the unabashed zest of self-discovery. She also found it easy to laugh at herself. Seventy-five days after she had first emerged on the world stage as Marcos' opponent, the new head of state seemed eager to meet another woman with whom she could let down her hair—probably the only person among hundreds who had paraded through her office who didn't want to tell her how to run her government.

Her own family, the Cojuangcos—a patrician, part-Chinese political dynasty dating back to her grandfather, who fought with the Americans to oust the Spanish—provided Cory a sheltered life. Her father, she said, was a saint, her mother the disciplinarian. Surrounded by servants and sent to the finest girls' school in Manila, she was imbued with the Latin motto Ora et labora—pray and work—and finished at the top of her class. At 13, Cory was sent to the U.S., where she spent the next seven years at small convent schools, Notre Dame in New York and The College of Mount St. Vincent in Riverdale, N.Y., majoring in math and French.

She was in law school back in Manila when a boy wonder named Benigno Aquino, the youngest war correspondent for the Manila Times, put pressure on her to marry him. "I had to concede that he was the most articulate guy I had met," she recalled, but she liked the discipline of law and preferred to wait. Never brilliant but always brash, "Ninoy" Aquino was nothing if not a persuasive man. "If you're such a brain," he'd taunt her, "why couldn't you have gone to better schools in the U.S.?" She countered: "Maybe they weren't such classy schools, but the underlying values those nuns give you can really help you in life."

Ninoy's mother promoted the match when she heard, from the reluctant bride's father, "You'll have to be patient with our Cory—she has a mind of her own." Cory's cool good sense might rein in her son's impetuousness.

No sooner were they married than Ninoy uprooted the couple from Manila to live on a piece of Communist-infested jungle he had bought in Tarlac, the native province of both families' plantations. Before Cory could catch her breath from the birth of their first child, she was campaigning for her husband in his first political race. It was a crash course for the urban couple. Ninoy's opponents all had private armies and made a show of force by shrieking through the barrios in bullcarts. For Cory to get up onstage and give a speech in those days would have been unthinkable.

"My husband, well, he was a male chauvinist," she told me. "He never wanted it said that I was influencing him in anything. I didn't mind, really, because mine was a very private role. And I figured, 'Look, you can do your thing in public life; I'm going to make sure that these children of ours will turn out to be good and responsible citizens.' And so we managed very well." Cory believed then, as now: "If you think your husband is really worthwhile, then you just have to accept."

She knew Ninoy wanted to make it to the very top, and she kept telling herself: "Someday, it will all be worth it." The auguries pointed that way. In the 1950s, before reaching 25, her husband had an office as executive assistant to President Ramon Magsaysay in Malacanang Palace and was, in his words, "literally running the government." In 1961 he became the country's youngest governor, and in 1967 he won an at-large senate seat—the only Liberal Party winner under the new Marcos regime.

People who regarded her in those years as just "someone who serves coffee" inevitably remark, "Cory has changed 180 degrees—it's breathtaking." Most accounts of her transformation begin with the death of her husband, or at the point when she became the reluctant candidate. But the change had really been going on for years.

"It's simply too much to imagine that in 75 days I suddenly got to be the person I am now," President Aquino agreed. It all started in 1972, when Marcos imposed martial law and incarcerated her husband, who had become the opposition leader and a likely presidential candidate. "It was then that I finally came into my own," she began the story. "I made all the major decisions, it was such a transformation . . ."

Body searches, furtive conversations in a bugged cell, keeping up a brave front for their five children, never knowing when one or both of them would be executed—this was the shadowy netherworld of political imprisonment shared by Cory and Ninoy Aquino for seven years and seven months. Friends turned their backs. People who before would press her hand, purring, 'Cory, don't forget us when your husband is president,' now crossed the street to avoid her. "I'd just smile when I saw them," she recalls, "but they acted as if, 'Look, Cory, please don't remember us.'"

Though she can laugh about it today, then it filled both her and her husband with bitterness. "In the beginning, our common question was, 'Why does it have to be us?' I'd never been mean to anybody. There was so much self-pity in the two of us," she recalled.

Tannenbaum Sygma

Then one day military officers dropped off all of Ninoy's personal effects. They refused to tell her if her husband was still alive. For the next 43 days, Cory went from prison camp to prison camp in search of him. Made to sit outside in the sun and rain like a beggar, with no milk for her infant daughter Kris, she learned that her ability to endure surpassed explanation.

Ninoy had been taken north to Camp Laur and locked away in solitary confinement—a torture designed to break a man who loved more than anything to talk. Stripped of clothes and glasses, he paced his cell reliving every experience of childhood until he thought the moment had come when he would lose his mind. To his astonishment, being a man who always teased his wife about her piety, Ninoy Aquino then saw a vision. He later confided to his best American friend, Robert Trent Jones Jr., that it had been a vision of the Virgin Mary.

Cory found him soon after. She walked the children up to the barbed wire. They wailed at the sight of their father. All of a sudden, he broke down and cried. It was a shattering moment for Cory Aquino: "That was the first time I saw Ninoy no longer the confident man I had always known." She alone remained stolid, because someone had to, and she was never quite the same again.

She was able to obtain her husband's release from solitary to a detention center for political prisoners in Manila. But the old bon vivant, always before on fire with ambition, was not the man she now began to visit at Fort Bonifacio. "I found my faith in solitary confinement," Ninoy would later tell Filipinos in the U.S. Cory rejoiced, and theirs became a shared transformation.

"It wasn't until we got over the self-pity that we were able to accept suffering as part of our life with Christ," Mrs. Aquino told me. "A man or woman reaches this plane only when he or she ceases to be the 'hero' playing to the gallery and becomes the humble Christian praying to God to fix the direction of his or her actions," she prophetically told an audience in 1984. It was upon such men and women "who make themselves that way" that people should rely to bring about the political changes they all desired.

After two years, Cory obtained permission to sleep in the military camp every weekend. For each so-called favor to the family, Cory had to endure another moment of fear, wondering as she waited if Marcos' minister of defense, Ponce Enrile, would see her. The man who today survives as President Aquino's defense minister was the one who personally granted or denied her guest lists. Once a week, the whole Aquino clan would descend and Ninoy would hold forth in a small amphitheater, giving lessons in history and the Bible.

At Christmas and Easter, Cory and Ninoy took special pains to create their own world of normalcy for the children. The stone floor of Ninoy's room would be spread with mattresses where all seven of them would sleep. For Kris, the youngest, her father invented a Christmas dwarf. To this day, Kris remembers with delight the tiny opening in her father's cell door, not as the peephole used by guards to observe him surreptitiously but as the magic door through which the dwarf delivered her gifts.

"My husband and I were rationalizing," Cory said. "Both of us were born privileged. We'd look at our maid or our driver and say that they've never really had anything wonderful happen to them. Maybe this was one way of equalizing things." Yet when Ninoy would sink into despair, he would ask her, "Are there people who still remember?" Cory began to call press conferences, and for the next five years Ninoy coached her whenever she visited.

"Contact with newspaper people made her really sharp," said Cory's mother-in-law, Dona Aurora. But as Ninoy began emerging as a political martyr, Marcos lowered on him a sentence of death. Cory carried secret messages to Ninoy hidden in his thermos and kept him alive with vitamins during his hunger strike of 40 days. That dark passage ended with Ninoy's enforced hospitalization, whereupon Marcos revoked the order of execution. Once again, Marcos had failed to break Cory or Ninoy. Ninoy wrote about his wife from prison as "the hope and light of my life's dark night."

In 1980, released at last from prison, Ninoy Aquino wangled permission for triple-bypass surgery in Texas and got his family to the United States. The next three years in Boston were in many ways Cory's happiest, despite the shock of doing all her own housework. Ninoy was safe but politically irrelevant. He traveled to Nicaragua and Lebanon, saw the ravages of civil war and came back politically transformed. Now his obsession became to lead his country toward a nonviolent revolution.

By December of 1982, he had a plan: He would go back to the Philippines and talk Marcos into going down in history as the greatest of dictators—one who had walked away from his powers and restored democracy. And, in exchange, he would offer what Marcos had always wanted—Ninoy's sanction, thereby ruining the opposition leader's own political future.

"I asked my husband," Cory remembered, "'Are you prepared to accept imprisonment the second time around?' He said, 'Yes.' So I said, 'The matter is settled. We will go back.'" She admitted that she couldn't agree with Ninoy when he said he could persuade Marcos to bring the country back to democracy. "But my husband was so convinced," she added. She and the children were to join him a few weeks later.

But as Senator Aquino stepped out of his plane at Manila Airport on that fateful day in August 1983, a waiting gunman put a bullet through his head. Back in Boston, Cory was on the telephone one moment, shocked and sobbing, and the next moment her face filled the screens of American television—composed, stoic, strong.

"I've never really been able to pour it all out," she confided. At the time, bombarded to give interviews, she had to respond. "I was just telling myself, 'Well, this is the last thing I'm going to do for Ninoy.'" After that, she believed, nobody would bother with the widow of an assassinated opposition leader.

But she returned home to a stupendous outpouring of emotion for the slain leader. Asking for a few moments alone with her husband's body, Cory bent to kiss his lips. "They were as cold as a stone table," she recalls, so she took his hand in hers. She felt some warmth. "Look, children," she said, calling them in, "I think your father is smiling at us." Then she saw the fervent crowd pressing at the windows, and she gave up her husband to the people he had loved.

At the funeral, she addressed 5000 people, and her voice was carried over the Catholic radio station. Something irreversible began in the Philippines. Crowds swarmed around the hearse as Cory led a procession from Tarlac to Manila. Normally a two-hour drive, it took nine. To her amazement, signs everywhere proclaimed, in Tagalog, the native language, "You are not alone."

A year later, meeting with advisers to the opposition party to decide whether to boycott legislative elections, the widow realized she still had an inferiority complex. All the others were men, mostly educated at Harvard. They kept telling her how important she was, but they wouldn't listen to her. She noticed that, at least in certain instances, Cory Aquino knew more than all of these men. Out of the blue, she shouted: "If I'm so important, why can't I do it the way I want to? I'm saying goodbye to all of you!"

She confides with a giggle, "I was amazed at myself." And the men said, "No, no, no, we're sorry we did not see it your way." That was the new Cory.

When Marcos announced the snap elections last November, Cory said time and again, "This comes from the heart: Pick somebody else." She made a seemingly impossible condition—to run, she would only accept a draft—but more than a million petitions were signed. People who brought the petitions to Santo Domingo Church in Manila told of their belief that the cycle was now complete: They had marched with Ninoy's body to that church, and now they were returning his widow in a mass procession to her home—to life, to leadership.

"When I finally decided I would accept the draft to run for president, my children would say, 'Oh, Mom, haven't you done enough?' I told them, 'Apparently in this world you just can't say at a certain point, 'Okay, I've done my quota of suffering and no more.'" Having inspired others to action, Cory Aquino now realized she had to provide it herself.

For the first half of her 45-day campaign, Cory struggled to represent the full spectrum of her coalition. Her campaign was a bore. The speeches written by her advisers—typical political doubletalk—bombed. She became angry, mostly with herself, and began telling her own sad story.

"I know all of us are suffering, but I think I've suffered quite a bit more, from the day Marcos arrested Ninoy under martial law . . ." She ended with a simple appeal: "Let's try a change. I'm not here for revenge. What's important is that what happened to my husband will never happen again."

While male politicians like her running mate, "Doy" Laurel, were exhausting themselves with long, sweaty, bombastic speeches, Cory's stamina seemed superhuman. Never losing her voice, never catching the flu that dogged her family, she even overcame her asthma. Hers were not the shiny words packaged by political consultants to push a product, and the only play she received in the media was masterminded by Marcos, who cast her as a Communist. But it was Cory who drew the crowds.

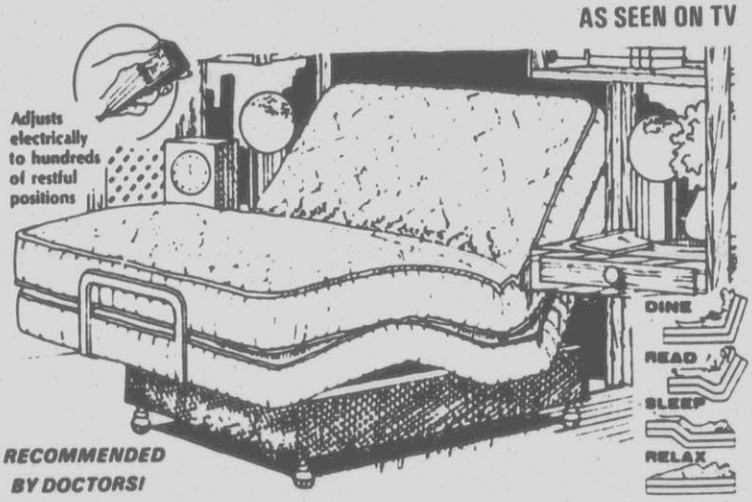

She was talking in parable, the technique of Christ. In 45 minutes she could tell her whole life. The influential Jaime Cardinal Sin made a wry comment: "You know, Cory, you and your mother-in-law have made so many people cry, you've got to win all the votes."

Beyond Marcos' insults—women belong in the bedroom; she's a know-nothing—there was the matter of Imelda, who already had her posters ready and plans laid to seize power when her ailing husband died. Cory slipped out of communication with her advisers and, deep in the south of the far-flung archipelago, went on the counterattack: "Sure, I don't know anything about stealing or cheating, and definitely I don't know anything about killing my opponents." When Marcos threatened to reintroduce martial law, she taunted him, "Let him get a gun and come and shoot me."

The people loved it. Cory was their daring messenger, the one person in the Philippines who had the moral weight to talk back to the devil. The only people trembling in their shoes at such bold statements were her advisers—all lawyers whose primary concern was keeping their practices after the Marcos victory that they took for granted.

Teodoro L. Locsin, today her minister of information, disclosed to me, "When she came back, she was intractable. Her advisers—all of us—had failed her. She became a different person."

She was not a politician, and that was her strength. Putting Marcos "on trial" was a savvy instinct. It pointed the way to the end of the Passion Play—and to the Resurrection.

Belief in miracles and worship of the Virgin Mary are powerful strains within the spiritual life of the Philippines. When I asked Cory's bright, urbane sister-in-law, Popsy Aquino Cruz, 'Why do you think Cory became the candidate?' she answered with the same unashamed fervor I heard from many sophisticated Filipinos: "Because God chose her."

Catholicism links 85 percent of the country, and that cultural root system, weakened by the Communist insurgency, obviously was revitalized by the stunning revolution. Ninoy, having died for his country's sins, preaching nonviolent revolution to his last breath, already had been elevated to the country's symbolic Christ. Now his widow, having surrendered her most beloved, was becoming a symbolic Blessed Mother.

Bold decisions, delivered in a soft voice, marked her initial weeks in office.

"Look," she told her economic ministers, "you just have to reduce the price of fuel oil."

Yes, yes, they said, but it would take time. They had a shortfall of 5 billion...

"I don't care," she cut them off. "This is something I need now."

That week, I read, the International Monetary Fund big shots were in town to see the new president, presumably to put the fear of God in her about defaulting on Marcos' foreign debt—the eighth largest in the world. What I didn't know until she later described it to me was the scene that took place:

"I said to my ministers, 'Look, I'm just going to tell these IMF officials that I expect them to treat us better than they did Marcos.'" No, no, no, she was warned. So she sat demurely while the head of Manufacturers Hanover was ushered in. He began hesitantly, "Madam President, I have an 8-year-old daughter who is such a fan of yours..."

"Anything for your daughter," replied the president, thinking to herself: Why should I be star-struck? They're the ones asking for my autograph."

Emboldened, she gave the speech she wanted to all along: "It was a different government that incurred and mismanaged these loans. It doesn't seem fair. Many of us risked our lives to restore democracy. You tell us that you admire us Filipinos for going through such a peaceful revolution—so give us a break."

Mrs. Aquino knows hers was a religious revolution. But prayer, while enabling people to try a new path, cannot cut the price of gas for one's jitney or tractor. She knows her supporters are the urban middle class. And she is aware that her shelf life as a fresh product in the steamy market of Philippine politics is no more than a year. She's a woman in a hurry to make a difference.

She is also pragmatic, much more so than her idealistic husband. While others believe she has been chosen by God, President Aquino told me she wanted to keep God out of it. She fears Filipinos are too superstitious. Her own faith, although deep, is more detached. "I have great faith that God will show me the way," she said.

Mrs. Aquino was then commuting from a bungalow that barely afforded breathing space between its neighbors in suburban Quezon City, where she was living with four of her five children, to the grounds of Malacanang. Her American-raised daughter Kris begged her to move into the palace's small guest house, "where the bathrooms are like on Dynasty." But Cory, adamant about setting an example, has only recently agreed to move the family to a modest house near the palace. She still shuns the palace to work in the guest house.

Her advisers, jolted by her unanticipated confidence, are beginning to sound like the men around President Reagan, resigned to let Cory be Cory. "I just want to voice the desires and needs of our people," she tells them in no uncertain terms. "Then it's up to you people to take care of all the details."

More important to her than heeding all her Harvard-educated advisers is listening to her cook. Soon after she assumed office, the price of fish increased. Her cook reported that people were grumbling: "We thought things would be better, now that Cory is president." The day we met, the president was feeling much better. Her cook had confirmed that the price of fish was down.

"I know there isn't anything I can do that will please everybody. But if I have done according to my beliefs," said Cory Aquino, in her own voice, "I sleep very very well." ■

The Deaver-Reagan Relationship

Owen D. B./Black Star

First Lady with Mike Deaver, who's under attack for using ties to Reagans

At this writing, there are an estimated 20,000 lobbyists in Washington, D.C. None has generated more envy and recent controversy than Michael K. Deaver, 48, one of President Reagan's old California press-agent buddies, his former deputy chief of staff and the acknowledged engineer of Nancy Reagan's current woman-to-be-admired image.

The jealousy Deaver has spawned is understandable. Since he departed the White House in May 1985, Deaver has put together a fabulously successful public-relations firm that books business of $3 million-plus per year. He is its major owner. The Saatchi brothers, Charles and Maurice, a pair of shrewd Englishmen of Iraqi extraction, reportedly are willing to pay $18 million for it—provided, of course, that Deaver's company is cleared of ethics and conflict-of-interest charges and that Mike remains at its helm.

Owing to his 20-year friendship with the Reagans, Mike Deaver offers extraordinary access to the powers-that-be in this Administration. This precisely is why he signed the following foreign clients at the following annual fees:

Saudi Arabia $500,000
Korea Broadcasting Ad Corp. $475,000
International Cultural Society of Korea....$475,000
CBI Sugar Group (Central American and Caribbean consortium) $300,000
Daewoo of Korea $250,000
Mexico.....$250,000
Canada $105,000

All of these clients seek concessions or considerations from the U.S. government or the American people or both, and Mike Deaver is the man they are willing to pay handsomely for his influence and contacts in obtaining same. For a onetime poor boy from Bakersfield, Calif., whose talent and influence were confined mostly to playing the piano, Deaver has zoomed to astronomical heights in the galaxy of Washington lobbyists. He would be the first to admit that he owes it all to his grateful, well-wishing cronies, Ron and Nancy, who are sure to stand by him in weather fair or foul.

Religion Helps

From Saudi Arabia wafts word that a number of Saudi businessmen are refusing on religious grounds to pay the interest on their debts. A basic tenet of Islamic law (sharia) forbids the charging of interest on loans, a principle that Islamic courts rigorously uphold so foreign banks cannot enforce collection.

The reason some Saudi businessmen are reneging on their deals is that they have been severely hurt by the precipitous drop in the price of oil. In 1979, when their country was earning $150 billion from oil exports, they borrowed large sums from eager-to-loan banks and repaid them with regularity. Last year, when Saudi Arabia's oil revenues plummeted (estimates of earnings range from $28 billion to as low as $11 billion), some businessmen were unable to meet their financial obligations. A few resorted to sharia. This year, others are following suit.

If the price of oil turns upward, it's expected that these Saudi borrowers will become less religious and pay the interest on their loans.

Q. I've heard vitamin A called an "anti-infective vitamin." Why?

A. Vitamin A plays an important part in maintaining the mucous membranes that line the mouth, nose and lungs. These membranes are our respiratory system's first defense against invading particles, and vitamin A, by helping to keep the membranes healthy, helps to prevent infections.

Vitamin A also plays important roles in vision (especially night vision), growth and reproduction. In very high doses, it can be toxic because it is fat-soluble, which means the body stores excesses of it in the liver and other organs (unlike water-soluble vitamins, which are flushed out of the system). Vitamin A supplements should be used with the guidance of a health-care professional. Good natural sources of vitamin A are vegetables and fruits such as carrots, tomatoes, sweet potatoes, spinach, Brussels sprouts and cantaloupe.

Why RALPH MACCHIO Can't Grow Old (Too Fast)

Janet Leibovitz

Schapiro Gamma Liaison

From The Karate Kid II: Macchio, the Kid, with Pat Morita, his mentor.

I MET WITH RALPH MACCHIO during the filming of The Karate Kid Part II, the sequel to the popular 1984 movie about a skinny 16-year-old named Daniel who tires of being pushed around, learns karate under the tutelage of a wise old Japanese mentor and eventually defeats the local bully in hand-to-hand combat. We chatted in Ralph's hotel suite in Los Angeles, in between his karate lessons and some voiceover work for Crossroads, his other spring movie.

Ralph, who is 24, plays a teenager in both films. In fact, ever since Ralph has been in feature films, he has portrayed teenagers. He played a 16-year-old in Francis Ford Coppola's The Outsiders (1983), in The Karate Kid and in Arthur Hiller's Teachers (1984). In The Karate Kid II, he is Daniel again, now 17, and in Crossroads he's all of 18. That's a lot of teenagers, especially when the actor has aged in real life from 21 to 24.

Ralph grew up in Huntington, on the North Shore of Long Island. When not away making a film, he lives in the same house he's lived in since kindergarten. "Why should I move?" he says. "I'm very close to my family. I feel I want to live there until I get married. There's plenty of time to have my own house. When I'm home, it's so normal."

Ralph's career began informally when he started studying tap dance, around age 3. "I saw old movies. Gene Kelly had noise coming out of his feet. Fred Astaire danced on ceilings. Awesome. I wanted to dance. I was the only boy in the dance class. By the time the kids I went to school with were old enough to tease me about it, I was too good."

All this good-natured chat temporarily obscured the fact that I was in a hotel room with an honest-to-goodness TEEN HUNK! The kind who gets hundreds of fan letters every week and is followed down the street.

"I'm still not used to it," he says. "But it's the nature of the business." He shrugs. "If that's what sells tickets..."

"My work is what I take seriously, not celebrity, not fame," he adds with passion and seriousness. So it is surprising to learn that acting had never been his ambition. In fact, Ralph had to be talked into acting. In 1977, Marie Pastor, a theatrical agent on Long Island, was looking for a talented local boy whom she could manage. She heard about a young dance student who, she discovered, "was 16 but looked 13."

"Ralph was magic," she recalls. "I met him and his mother. They were very cautious when I told them my plans. They had heard horror stories about kids and their manipulative managers. But, while he had a young face, he had a 40-year-old brain."

Patiently, Marie coaxed the young dancer to consider acting. "Ralph was so unique," she says, "that situations were rewritten around him. For the TV series Eight Is Enough, he read for the part of Jeremy Harrison, a little WASP boy. By the end of the audition, the producers had renamed his character Jeremy Andretti to accommodate this talented, dark-haired, Italian youngster."

When Ralph talks about his favorite movies—The Godfather I and II—he rhapsodizes. It was therefore the thrill of his life (so far) to work for Francis Coppola, their director, in The Outsiders. "I love Francis," he gushes. "And he liked me. He gave me extra things to do. He called me 'the professional kid.' He had me watch Sal Mineo in Rebel Without a Cause. I was always a loner off the set, anyway."

One of the remarkable facts about

BY LISA BIRNBACH

The Outsiders is that it brought together a slew of unknown young actors who have since become celebrities, or at least the stuff of teen dreams. In addition to Macchio, the film featured C. Thomas Howell, Matt Dillon, Rob Lowe, Emilio Estevez, Tom Cruise and Diane Lane. But while Ralph's compatriots, most notably those who starred in St. Elmo's Fire, appeared to flaunt their success—so much so that they were branded "The Brat Pack"—Macchio seems untouched, oblivious to his power. He is not a brat. He says his former co-stars "used to tease me 'cause they'd get together and have fun, and I would stay in my room and study my lines—they wanted to get me a T-shirt that said 'Do Not Disturb.' "

"I do not hang out at the Hard Rock Cafe [Brat Pack watering hole in New York and Los Angeles] and party during the night," he adds. "Not that there's anything wrong with that—I just have different ways of having fun, and I don't think anyone should be put down for having fun a certain way."

"Ralph is very professional," says John G. Avildsen, director of The Karate Kid I and II. "He always knows his lines. He takes pride in being at work. He was my first choice to play Daniel. He was like the 98-pound weakling in a Charles Atlas ad."

Ralph may very likely get the opportunity to play Daniel a third time. If Karate Kid II does well at the box office, there's reason to believe that Ralph and Pat Morita, who plays Miyagi, Daniel's karate mentor, will return again.

"But I'm kind of tired of the character by now," says Ralph. "They [the producers] don't want Daniel to change and grow. They want him to be dependent on Miyagi. But you don't see walking fortune cookies every day on the street. That's not what life is all about."

In Crossroads, Ralph plays a young classical-guitar student who is infatuated with the blues and in search of a musician who has disappeared. Ralph's character, Eugene Martone, is again paired with a mentor—an old, black harmonica-player, acted by Joe Seneca.

Ralph says he feels a kinship to Eugene. "Of all my roles, he's the closest to me. He's more independent. He's a worrier, a perfectionist, an artist."

"The part gives him more depth," says the director, Walter Hill, "and he's aware of it. Ralph has the problem that a lot of young actors have: He's very young and very pretty, and he wants to be taken seriously."

"After Crossroads, no more mentor movies," says Ralph. Even a smaller part would be acceptable, he adds, "if it means working with a Pacino, a Hoffman or any other actors of their caliber." He has, in fact, accepted a part in a play, Cuba and His Teddy Bear, also starring Robert De Niro, which opens this month at New York City's Public Theater.

"I don't have fear that I won't get work," Ralph Macchio says, levelly, as his karate teacher enters his hotel suite for another workout.

FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH FOR MEN OVER 40

BY A. DUGAN AND THE EDITORS OF CONSUMER GUIDE®

WHAT DIET ALONE WON'T DO, AND SIT-UPS WON'T DO— THIS BOOK CAN DO FOR MEN OVER 40 . . . OR YOUR MONEY BACK!

It's never too late to flatten your stomach and narrow your waistline. But as you have probably noticed, diets alone are not enough.

That is especially true as you get older. Even if you keep your weight down and get some exercise, your stomach may bulge and sag because your abdominal muscles are not properly toned.

Sit-ups alone work on only some of these muscles. But unless you exercise all four major abdominal muscles—your stomach may be hard, but it won't be flat.

This new book shows you how to flatten your stomach by exercising all—and not just some—of your stomach muscles. And it is specially designed to meet the needs of men over 40. Strenuous exercises are avoided . . . so you need not be in shape to get started.* After you get going, you progress at your own speed to intermediate and advanced programs. And each level includes exercises to strengthen your back and give your cardiovascular system vital aerobic conditioning.

Give this NEW QUICK, EASY WAY TO FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH FOR MEN OVER 40 a try. It has easy-to-follow directions. All exercises are fully illustrated in color. Plus it's spiral bound to stay open and lie flat while you exercise. See if you don't feel more fit, energetic and self-confident in just a few short weeks. You must get the results you want or we'll give you your money back. So don't wait any longer. Put your order in the mail today!

*We recommend you check with your doctor before starting this or any other exercise program.

A DAY IN DISNEYLAND

Where No One Grows Old

Switch trains at the station where life and wish converge, and you wind up in a world that is happy, clean, peaceful and perfect.

IN DISNEYLAND, NOT EVEN the light bulbs grow old. At 80 percent of their effective life, they're banished to the real world's refuse and replaced with fiery new ones. The streets are steam-cleaned after the park closes each evening, as if they were nothing more than pairs of lightly soiled pants. Once a year, the park sheds its huge, colorful skin: 20,000 gallons of paint give it a look the Disney people describe as "better than new."

For a child—and for some lucky others—the world is new each day. But better than new is a far-flung kingdom where our shiniest ideals live surrounded by glitter. Switch trains at the station where life and wish converge, and you can wind up in a world that is happy, clean, peaceful and perfect. We're lucky that we can imagine a level of perfection we can't achieve. It keeps us on our toes, always stretching, reaching. With its holograms and glitz, relentless goodwill, "rides" where one is sung to about brotherhood and progress, and wrap-around portraits of a heroic, decent, cleaner-than-thou America, Disneyland reminds us what it is we're reaching for. We come here to dream.

A fairy-tale castle appears like a mirage. A fugue of spires and turrets and tinselly gold crowns, this pink-and-blue confection looks an almost complete idyll, with ivy-clad towers, a moat and black swans. Yet nothing is as it seems. If you peer through the windows and arches, instead of seeing interiors you see only blue sky leading to elsewhere, or elsewhen. The water is drowsy with reflection. Clouds stalk the moat. Overhead, the sun shines as if through gauze, casting lancelike shadows on the water. For a moment, they are sharp and clear, then a black swan glides by and mixes the reflection. Suddenly, the castle reassembles into a heap of jagged edges. The swan passes. The water quiets. The castle floats again in its mirror-image, massive stone floating on water. Its pinnacles fill the sky with javelins and seem to impale the day. So the eye moves in one leap from the earth to the sky, from the steady realm of mortals up to where dreams and gods and wishes live, then back again.

How magical it looks, but then that's what castles are for. Inside, dioramas tell the story of Sleeping Beauty, a pre-adolescent girl on the ledge of adulthood, suspended in time, free from change, politics, heartbreak or misgiving. Small wonder that her castle should be Disneyland's emblem.

Building castles in the air, Walt Disney wanted to make the 6 o'clock news disappear and knew that the ultimate escape wasn't just to fantasy, adventure, a sunny climate with orange groves, but to an upbeat, ideal version of ourselves. His world is a suspension of adult values, sophistication and disappointments—an oasis, which adults flock to like migratory birds. In his vaulted kingdoms, good always prospers, the extraordinary in each person bursts free. Dolls in native costumes sing about world peace. Fireworks splash the summer night with innocent cartoon colors above forests, jungles and deserts bunched close together—a whole world in miniature. A world fresh as a bouquet, vibrant and benign, in which the brass band is led by a Mr. Warble and wild animals stand upright and talk like English eccentrics. An animated Lincoln lectures on liberty, while a choir sings "America, keep your spirit free." Play is sacred. Sulks are taboo. No one ages. Bad guys die melodramatic but clean deaths. And wanting to be happy is deliciously okay.

In Adventureland, there are no terrorists or hijackers. In Fantasyland, there are no nuclear bombs or famines. There are nonstop thrills but no spills; safe "earthquakes" and "avalanches" merely quicken the pulse. Snakes have no venom, pirates no savagery. Visitors sample their keenest longings for adventure in pint-sized, classic trials against Nature and clear-cut, unambiguous villains—after which there is always triumph. Disneyland's design makes everything a form of storytelling, in which the visitor takes part.

A country of immigrants, we brought long-cherished fairy tales with us from the Old World. Most tap the secret fears and confusions a child feels about growing up—coping with brothers and sisters, or losing a parent, or shooting the rapids of adolescence, or banking self-worth. Usually, heroes must leave home for the first time to sharpen themselves on the whetstone of experience and learn life's lessons. What matters is the journey, not the gilt-edged happy ending; invariably, the hero has to make choices between good and bad characters, right and wrong paths, then learn to be brave, act fairly and have common sense. What fairy tales really teach children is that life is tough, complicated, pitted with obstacles and not always much fun. But if they're determined, work hard, stay courageous and aim high, they will prevail—even live like kings and queens, with exhilaration as their treasure.

Although Disney's version of the classic fairy tales is drained of any real horror, its unspoken credo is the same. That, and an exquisite sense of permission, saying: Life is fun. Be happy. It's allowed.

Disneyland, in Anaheim, Calif., is open year-round. For information on hours and attractions, call 714-999-4565.

WHO SAYS IT'S A WOMAN'S JOB TO CLEAN?

Think about the man in your life—the food he spills . . . the crumbs he scatters . . . the dirt he tracks through the house . . . the sweaty socks he tosses on the floor. Does he try to run things around the house—except the vacuum cleaner and washer? Probably 90% of all your housework is caused by the rest of your household . . . and 90%—or more—of all the cleaning-up is done by you. Have you ever faced a stack of food-encrusted dishes, an overflowing laundry basket or a window you can no longer see through and asked yourself WHO SAYS IT'S A WOMAN'S JOB TO CLEAN?

MEN CAN CLEAN

Don Aslett is a man. A man who has washed more windows, mopped more floors and scrubbed more toilets than you'll ever see. A man who has trained hundreds of workers to get the job of cleaning done fast—and right. Now he shares his expertise with you to help "train" your man.

It's a fact—men are taller, stronger and can do many household jobs more easily than women. They can reach high shelves in a single bound and climb the ladder to wash ceilings and walls. They can muscle obstructions out of the way with ease, and they're more adept at manipulating objects like mops and buckets. So why don't they?

NO MORE EXCUSES

Don Aslett talks man-to-man to the husband who has dirtied some 25,000 dishes in the past 15 years but never washed one, and shoots down all those feeble excuses you've been hearing for so long. If he can handle brake fluid, he can handle oven cleaner. If he can polish a hubcap, he can polish a sink. This book shows him that "dreaded" household chores may be far easier—and more painless—than he ever realized . . . ten times easier than camping out and better exercise (and more rewarding) than jogging.

MAKES IT EASY FOR HIM TO SAY "YES"

- Six steps to sparkling windows in just minutes—windows that shine through without drips or streaks
- How to dust furniture so it glistens . . . and special pointers on getting at those hard-to-reach places
- Floor care: professional secrets for men only, from cutting right through grease and grime to stripping the old wax finish
- Washday made simple with basic tips for your novice laundryman
- Wrinkle-free ironing for those crisp sleeves and collars he likes
- How to de-junk your house—and your life—from dresser drawers (and dresser tops) to the garage's "cave of clutter"
- List of professional job cleaning equipment and supplies . . .
- When to call for professional help . . . and what questions to ask
- Preventive cleaning—how to avoid dirtying in the first place

Just think of it—instead of throwing clothes down, he'll hang them up. Instead of cramming, he'll fold. Your man may wonder why he didn't think of helping out sooner. He'll have a clear conscience, you'll have your sanity, and you'll both have more time together. So don't wait for the other sock to drop. Make a difference in your life now. Order your—order his—copy of WHO SAYS IT'S A WOMAN'S JOB TO CLEAN? today!

IN STEP WITH:

Claus von Bulow

BY JAMES BRADY

A year after one of the most headlined, exotic trials in memory, Martha (Sunny) von Bulow lies unknowing in a coma, while her husband has famous folk in for dinner

Von Bulow in Manhattan apartment that belonged to his wife, whose fortune is being fought for in court.

Mario J. Rubio

IF YOU WERE CASTING an elegant if slightly raffish European nobleman as the prime suspect in an Agatha Christie drawing-room murder mystery, you could do worse than to consider Claus von Bulow for the role.

He is a tall, handsome, exquisitely mannered man in well-cut clothes, whose snobbish disdain might remind you of the actor George Sanders and whose accent derives more from his education in Britain at Cambridge University than from the Denmark he fled as a boy in wartime.

A year ago this Tuesday, a jury in Providence, R.I., acquitted von Bulow of attempting, on two consecutive Christmases, to murder his heiress wife, Sunny, with lethal injections of insulin. It was his second trial. An earlier conviction had been overturned on appeal, and the second trial cleared him completely.

Sunny's two children by an earlier marriage have now sued in civil court to keep their mother's fortune—estimated at more than $50 million—out of Claus' hands. He is fighting the case, saying that he does so to see that his and Sunny's beautiful, blond, 19-year-old daughter, Cosima, a college student, gets her "fair share" of the estate. Meanwhile, Sunny lies in an irreversible coma in a New York hospital.

It is a story that von Bulow himself admits has "all the elements of a Dallas or Dynasty." He talks of becoming a "hermit," of going into exile in Europe. Meanwhile, he and his companion of several years, a glamorous Hungarian grandmother named Andrea Reynolds, live grandly in a Fifth Avenue apartment that belonged to Sunny. Not quite yet a "hermit," he lectures at Harvard Law School (he is a member of the English bar), writes reviews of books about his old boss, J. Paul Getty, and appears on the Larry King talk show, while Mrs. Reynolds negotiates a million-dollar book deal with Simon & Schuster to write her own version of what happened.

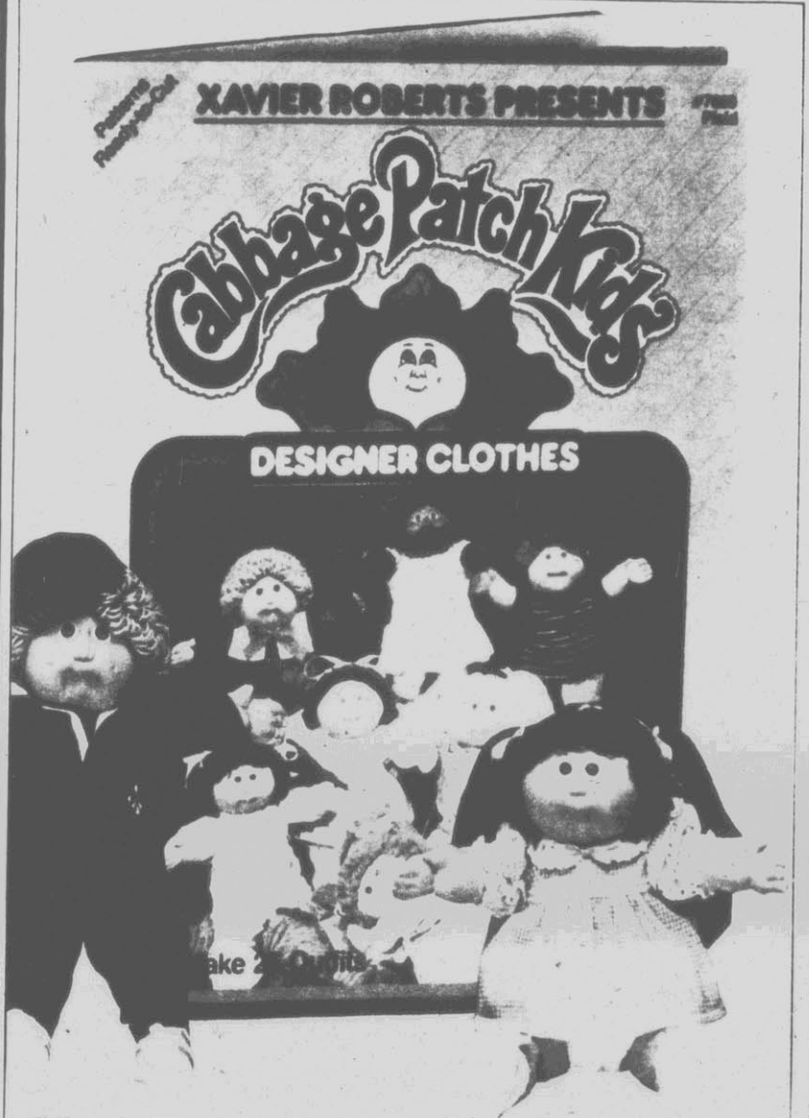

Earlier this year, I dined with them at the apartment. The other guests included the author Norman Mailer, Alan Dershowitz, the Harvard professor who defended von Bulow on appeal, the editors of the New York Post and New York magazine, and other socially acceptable people. There are those who would cross the street rather than be seen with Claus. Over cocktails, he tells ghost stories, pats his yellow dog, Tiger, charms his guests. You think back to that courtroom a year ago when, in his only show of emotion, he put his head into his hands as his innocence was declared.

He is such a calm, assured, competent figure you cannot help thinking that, if he had attempted murder, he would not have botched it. Did he do it? He says no and seems at peace with himself. A year ago in Providence, a jury of his peers rendered the only verdict that counts: not guilty.

BORN: Aug. 11, 1926, in Copenhagen, Denmark.
ORIGINAL NAME: Claus Borberg.
PERSONAL: Married Martha (Sunny) Crawford von Auersperg, daughter of utilities millionaire George Crawford, on June 6, 1966; one daughter, Cosima, 19.
EDUCATION: Received law degree from Trinity College at Cambridge; attended L'Ecole Des Sciences Politique at the Sorbonne in Paris.
OCCUPATIONS: Worked at Hambros Bank in England, 1948; practiced law as English barrister, 1950-59; was business aide to John Paul Getty, 1959-68, stopped working in 1968 shortly after his daughter's birth, though active in efforts to preserve Newport, R.I., mansions.

BRADY'S BITS

He retains a sort of gallows humor about himself. Once I asked if he knew so-and-so, a titled, wealthy Englishman. Yes, replied Claus, and did I know that as a schoolboy so-and-so had pushed an elderly teacher down a flight of stairs to his death? "Oh, yes," added Claus, "it was hushed up, of course, but he killed the man." Pause. "Though I'm hardly the one to talk, am I?"

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Tree limb is missing. 2. Cap is different. 3. Handle is missing. 4. Arm is moved. 5. Hair is different. 6. Sweater is different.

• 23 SKIDDOO! Challenge! Arrange numbers 1 through 9 in the triangle at right so that each of the three sides totals 23. Note numbers 7 through 9 are already in place. Sort through combinations of 1 through 6 to fill the remaining blanks.

Remember, each of the sides is to total 23.

Starting at top clockwise: 7, 3, 4, 9, 5, 1, 8, 6, 2, will do it

PUZZLE OUT ANAGRAMS

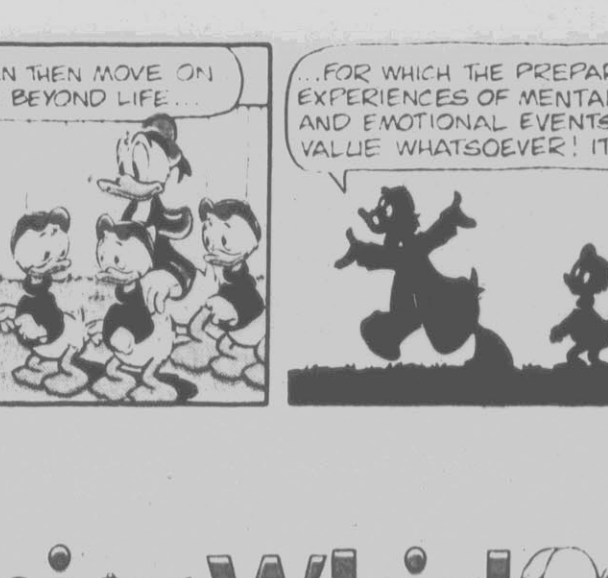

An anagram is a word or phrase formed by rearranging letters of another word or phrase. The word RAIN, for instance, may be anagrammed to form I RAN.

Letters of three eight-letter words have been rearranged to form these anagrams: 1. DATE TIME. 2. HEAT SITE. 3. CITE GOAT. You are asked to restore the three original words.

Clue: All three share the same last three letters.

Cogitate

1. Medicate 2. Hesitate 3.

SPELLBINDER

SCORE 10 points for using all the letters in the word below to form two complete words

PARTICLE

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters

Possible anagram: Pan, Ice

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: ARN IS SEIZED BY THE URGENCY OF WHAT HE MUST DO. AS KING ARTHUR AND HIS COMMANDERS CONSIDER A NEW PLAN OF ATTACK, ARN SETS FORTH ALONE. WOULD THE WOODSMAN'S HOUSE STILL BE THERE? WOULD THE PASSAGEWAY BE CLEAR AFTER ALL THESE YEARS? THE HOUSE, WHEN HE FINDS IT, IS IN RUINS.

NO MATTER, THE CELLAR IS STILL THERE. ARN CLEARS AWAY SOME RUBBLE. A PULL ON THE IRON RING AND THE TRAPDOOR COMES FREE.

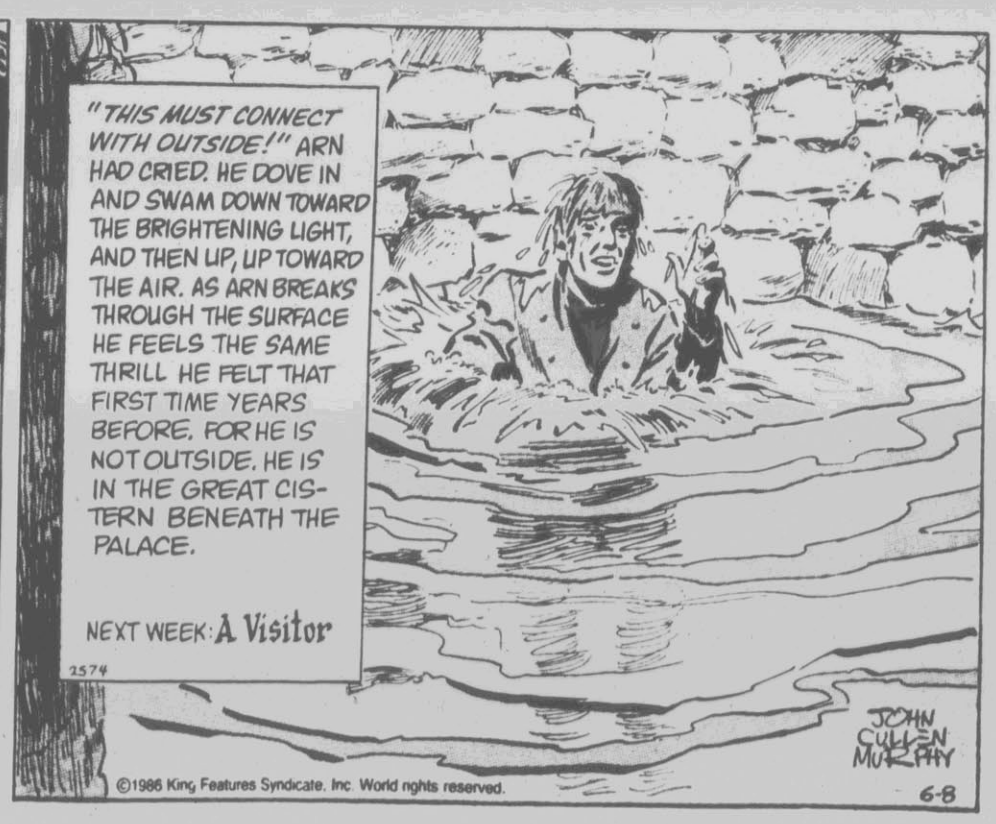

FROM THE WOODSMAN'S HOUSE TO THE PALACE A JAGGED FISSURE SCORES THE EARTH. HAD THE GROWN-UPS EVER KNOWN ABOUT IT? ARN DID NOT THINK SO. THE WOODSMAN'S BOY HAD FOUND THE PASSAGE, AND SOON ALL THE LADS OF CAMELOT SHARED A WONDERFUL SECRET.

IN PLACES THE PASSAGE IS SO LOW AND NARROW THAT ARN MUST WRIGGLE THROUGH. HE DOES NOT REMEMBER THAT HAVING BEEN A PROBLEM BEFORE. IN OTHER PLACES THE FISSURE WIDENS INTO GREAT CHAMBERS. MEN HAD BEEN HERE BEFORE, IN A DISTANT AGE.
