Panel Blasts NASA's Safety Policies

Seal Failure Said Cause Of Challenger Explosion

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The destruction of Challenger and the death of its seven crew members had a single cause — the failure of a seal in the shuttle's booster rocket, the Rogers Commission said today. Its report faulted NASA for operating a "silent safety" program that concealed festering problems with the seal from top launch managers.

The panel urged NASA to review all items whose performance are deemed critical to shuttle flights and said the orbiter's tires, brakes and steering systems "do not have sufficient safety margin."

In its report to the president, just over four months after the Jan. 28 disaster, the commission said Challenger "struggled futilely against forces" triggered immediately after ignition when gas leaked past the seal.

The commission said the shuttle should not have been launched, and wouldn't have been if top launch managers had been aware of opposition from rocket engineers who feared the effects of cold temperatures.

"If the decision-makers had known all of the facts, it is highly unlikely that they would have decided to launch," the commission said.

In a 256-page report that combined a millisecond-by-millisecond dissection of the Challenger accident with sweeping recommendations for improved safety and management practices, the panel also said the shuttle's crew "apparently had no indication of a problem before the rapid break-up up" of the craft 73 seconds into flight.

"There were no alarms sounded in the cockpit," where the seven astronauts rode, or in Mission Control. "There was nothing that either the crew or the ground controllers could have done to avert the catastrophe," concluded the panel.

Although the commission called for many changes in NASA's practices, the final report singled out the Marshall Space Flight Center, the facility which oversees the booster rocket program. The report said Marshall suffers from "management isolation" which needs to be eliminated "whether by changes of personnel, organization, indoctrination or all three."

The report said NASA's highly successful safety program — a "hallmark during the Apollo program" — was allowed to lapse, and no where more than at Marshall.

The panel also pointedly criticized Lawrence Mulloy, the NASA official who was in charge of the solid rocket motor program at the time of the launch, for providing testimony that was contradicted by other facts developed in the case.

The commission, headed by former Secretary of State William P. Rogers, arranged to formally present its report to President Reagan at early afternoon. NASA Administrator James Fletcher, who has scheduled a news conference for later in the day, already has implemented some of the commission's recommendations.

TRAIN DERAILMENT — Five tank cars exploded after a flood-weakened bridge collapsed Sunday afternoon just north of the San Antonio International Airport. ## Railroad Tank Car Fire Watched As Most Evacuees Return Home

By SHEILA ALLEE
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A blaze continued to rage early today in one railroad tank car following a derailment and explosion that injured five people and forced as many as 2,000 to be evacuated, authorities said.

Most residents within a two-mile radius of the flood-weakened Salado Creek bridge, where the derailment occurred, returned to their homes late Sunday. But a half-mile area around the site of the accident was still off-limits this morning, authorities said.

It was one of three derailments across the nation Sunday. No injuries were reported in the other two, one in North Adams, Mass., and the other in Morgan City, Utah.

San Antonio authorities decided to let the remaining fire burn itself out, because pouring water on it would only flush chemicals into the creek, said Mayor Henry Cisneros.

Parts of the bridge and an undetermined number of cars form the Missouri Pacific freight train plunged into the creekbed when the derailment occurred shortly after 1 p.m., authorities said.

Railroad crews constructed dams on the muddy creekbed to contain any spills from the still-burning car, which contained the flammable gas butadiene, and the other four tankers that had burned.

One of the four tank cars also contains butadiene, a chemical used to

Waldheim Tops Voting; His Past Still Questioned

By ROLAND PRINZ
Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Kurt Waldheim scored a decisive victory in the presidential election, but his triumph raised questions about how Austria would deal with accusations that its newly chosen head of state hid a Nazi past.

The former U.N. secretary-general collected 2,464,598 votes, or 53.9 percent of the ballots cast in Sunday's runoff, to 2,107,317 votes, or 46.1 percent, for Socialist candidate Kurt Steyrer.

Since early March, Waldheim's campaign had been dogged by charges from the New York-based World Jewish Congress that he was involved in war crimes in the Balkans, where he served during World War II as a lieutenant in the German army.

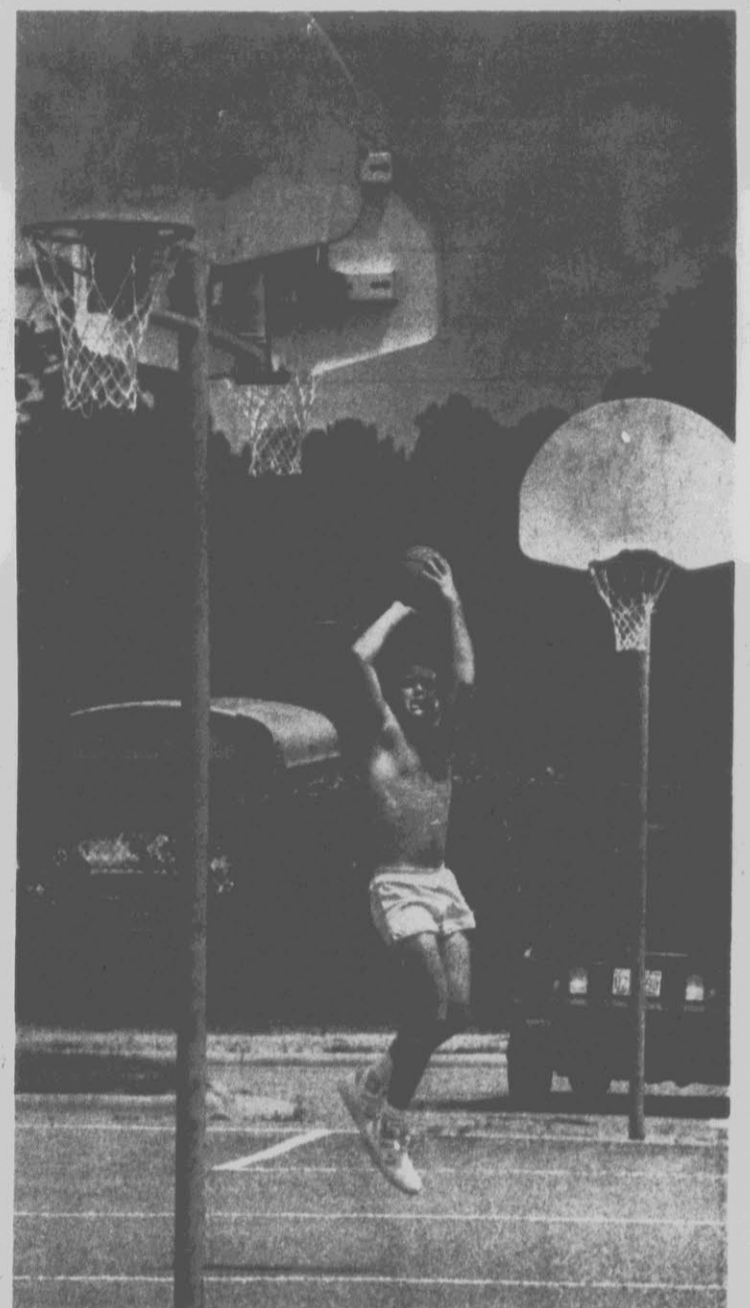

Waldheim, 67, repeatedly denied any wrongdoing, but he was forced to concede that he had kept silent for almost four decades on his whereabouts during three crucial wartime years.

Following his victory, Waldheim told a television audience, "The result showed that the Austrian people are not prepared to accept these accusations that have been made against me."

Asked to comment on the charges, Waldheim said, "I would like to say here with all certainty that this criticism did not come from gov-

Valuable Comic Book Discovered

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

A Greenville comic book dealer and collector has made the find of a lifetime — a Marvel Comics No. 1 — considered by many collectors to be the most valuable comic book in the world.

The book, which cost 10 cents when it was published in 1939, features "The Human Torch, The Angel, Submariner, Masked Raider, and Ka-Zar the Great and 12 Pages of Jungle Adventures." The cover shows a man shooting at a flame-like creature bursting through a metal wall.

The book was located in an eastern North Carolina home, one of a collection valued at about $30,000 by a local comic collector. The owner asked to remain anonymous. Tens of thousands of the comic were printed in 1939, but most were probably discarded, especially during the paper drives of World War II, according to Charles Lawrence, operator of the Booktrader and Nostalgia Newstand in Greenville.

"These are the kinds of books that make your hands tremble when you hold them," he said of the recently-found collection.

The owner is allowing Lawrence to market the 64-page book. On a scale of 10, Lawrence rates the condition of the book at 8.5 to 9. He said one in perfect condition has sold for $38,000.

He said the book is being kept in a bank safe deposit box until it is sold, both for protection from theft and from damage and deterioration. He shows photographs to interested persons.

The Marvel No. 1 was found among about 150 comic books, including some early Action comics — Superman and Detective Comics featuring Batman before he adopted Robin the Boy Wonder. Lawrence appraises the whole collection at about $35,000.

Lawrence, a Falkland resident who has about 30,000 comic books of his own, says the condition of this book is amazing — near perfect after more than 45 years. He said he often appraises books five or six years old that are falling apart.

Fighting Erupts In Squatter Camp

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Thousands of blacks armed with guns and clubs clashed today on the fringes of the Crossroads squatter camp, relief workers and news reports said. At least six people were shot and hundreds of dwellings were set afire.

The battles pitted some 3,000 conservative black vigilantes against 8,000 militant black youths and refugees, the South African Press Association said.

Crossroads, a shanty city 12 miles east of Cape Town, was the scene of fierce fighting between the two groups in May. At least 33 people were killed and 30,000 homeless. Police in armored personnel carriers tried to separate the groups, a police spokesman said. Police fired tear gas and buckshot to disperse the gangs of fighters, but could not immediately halt the fighting, the South African Press Association quoted a police spokesman as saying.

Fire razed an ambulance service and relief center that had been home to 2,200 refugees, and all the residents fled. Other reports said hundreds of shacks were burning in the KTC section of Crossroads, one of several settlements on the edge of the squatter camp.

A photographer who spoke on condition of anonymity said vigilantes

Wedding Vows Solemnized In Tarboro On Sunday Afternoon

TARBORO — The First Baptist Church of Tarboro was the scene for the wedding of Teresa Lindine Briley of Greenville and Warner Cooper Rackley of Farmville. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Revs. E. Lavelle Waters Jr. and Ronald L. Davis Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The organist was Darrell Mitchell of Greenville and the soloist was Mary King of Tarboro.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. James D. Briley of Tarboro and Mr. and Mrs. Warner S. Rackley of Farmville.

Escorted by her brother, David Briley, the bride wore a formal gown of white satin over peau de soie designed with a high neckline encircled with silk Venise lace. The gown featured a sheer yoke of point d'sprit outlined in ruffled chantilly lace. The French pouf sleeves were fashioned of satin and ruffled chantilly lace. The fitted bodice was overlaid in satin and extended to a basque waistline. The full circular skirt was accentuated by a satin pick-up overlay accented with satin ribbon. Tiers of chantilly lace complimented the skirt that extended to a chapel length train. She wore a chapel length veil of silk illusion bordered in scalloped chantilly lace attached to a matching lace capulet etched with pearls and iridescents. She carried a white lace cascade of white silk roses accented with peach sweetheart roses, baby's breath, stephanotis and greenery.

The maid of honor was Dawn Edmondson of Tarboro and the matron of honor was Sue Hardison of Raleigh. Bridesmaids were Melony Sullivan of Greenville and Tracy Brannan of Nashville, cousin of the bridegroom. Honorary bridesmaids were Judy Heath of Vanceboro, Mary Daniel of Greenville and Shannon Rackley of Rocky Mount, cousin of the bridegroom.

Each attendant wore a peach satin floor length gown featuring a fitted bodice with a sweetheart neckline, short pouf sleeves and a basque waist. Satin rosettes accented the neckline. Each carried a white lace fan with white and peach silk roses accented with baby's breath and peach streamers. The honorary bridesmaids each carried a white silk rose accented with baby's breath and peach streamers.

The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers were David Briley of Tarboro, brother of the bride; Ken Tyndall of Raleigh; and Johnnie Brannan of Nashville.

The mother of the bride wore a petal pink formal dress of chiffon over peau de soie. The mother of the bridegroom wore a formal gown of copen blue lustreglo.

A reception, hosted by the parents of the bride, was held in the church fellowship hall. Ollie Mae Taylor poured punch and Judy Heath presided at the register. Helen Rackley and Martha Kree, aunts of the couple, cut cake. Greetings were said by Mr. and Mrs. Art Thompson, and farewells were said by Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Sexton, Donna Cooper, Nelda Cabell, Edna Anderson, Nellie Stroud, Louise Fleming and Sharon Meeks also assisted with the reception.

The couple was honored with a rehearsal dinner hosted by parents of the bridegroom.

The couple will live in Greenville. The bride, a graduate of East Carolina University, is employed at Burroughs Wellcome Co. The bridegroom is a graduate of North Carolina State University and is employed at McDavid Associates of Farmville.

Miss Welch, Mr. Whitley Are Married

FARMVILLE — Sandra Leigh Welch of Walstonburg and William Thomas Whitley of Farmville were united in marriage Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the First Christian Church. The double ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Lee Parker. The organist was Miriam Bailey, the soloist was Mike Barnett and William Frazier was trumpeter.

Parents of the couple are Mrs. Leatrice W. Welch of Walstonburg and the late Joseph E. Welch, and Mr. and Mrs. William L. Whitley of Farmville.

Escorted by her brother, Joseph E. Welch Jr., the bride wore a formal gown of white organza, schiffli embroidery and re-embroidered Alencon lace over peau de soie. The fitted bodice of schiffli embroidery was designed with a modified sweetheart neckline edged in re-embroidered Alencon lace and was decorated with pearls and iridescents. The back bodice featured a scoop yoke of English net and closed with traditional bridal buttons. The pouff sleeves of organza were enhanced by a small organza bow and a mock cuff of re-embroidered Alencon lace. The A-line skirt of organza was softly gathered on the sides and back and fell from the piped basque waistline to the floor, where a border of re-embroidered Alencon lace edged the hemline and chapel train. She wore a headpiece of silk Venise lace, pearls and silk flowers which held a tiered fingertip veil of imported silk illusion. She carried a cascade bouquet of stephanotis and white tea roses mixed with variegated greenery.

The maid of honor was Michelle Miller of Farmville, and the matron of honor was Brenda Maulding of San Jose, Calif., sister of the bride. Bridesmaids were Mary Jo Thaxton of Charlotte, step-sister of the of bride; Renee Carroll of Stedman, and Martha Rose Ellis of Wilson and Betsy Ellis of Raleigh, both cousins of the bridegroom. The flower girls were Shell Thaxton and Kerry Thaxton, both nieces of the bride from Charlotte.

Each attendant wore a turquoise satin floor length gown. The fitted bodice featured an open neckline, Juliet pouff sleeves and a natural waist. An asymmetrical drape accented the bodice. Each attendant carried a ribbon-tied bouquet of pink gerber daisies, miniature pink carnations and baby's breath.

Each flower girl wore a floor-length white eyelet dress tied at the waist with pink ribbon with pouff sleeves and a scalloped hemline and carried a basket of flowers.

The best man was the father of the bridegroom and ushers were David Whitley, brother of the bridegroom, Mike Windham, Randy Tyson and Rodney Faulkner, all of Farmville, and Gil Carroll of Stedman.

The mother of the bride wore a tea-length dress of pink jaquard silk styled with a high neckline and long sleeves. The mother of the bridegroom wore a blue, street-length dress with an accordion pleated skirt. Both mothers were remembered with a cymbidium orchid corsage.

A reception given by the family of the bride was held in the church fellowship hall. Wanda Mercer and Michelle Medlin served punch, and Diana Gordon and Emily Smith served cake. Greetings were said by Mr. and Mrs. Dixon Sauls, and farewells were said by Mr. and Mrs. Gene Brewer. Amanda Whitley and Jessica Whitley distributed birdseed bags.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom in the church fellowship hall. Several showers were given in honor of the couple. The bridesmaids gave a luncheon at the Southern Sportsman Restaurant.

After a wedding trip to Myrtle Beach, S.C., the couple will live in Farmville.

The bride attended Pitt Community College and East Carolina University. The bridegroom attended Lenoir Community College and is employed by Farmville Central High School and Ellis Auto Parts.

Double Ring Ceremony Performed In Vanceboro

VANCEBORO — Jill Widley Bland of Gritton and Clarence Eugene Neal Jr. of Vanceboro were united in marriage at 3 p.m. Sunday in a double ring ceremony conducted in Epworth United Methodist Church by the Rev. Richard Hill.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C.W. Bland of Gritton and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C.E. Neal of Vanceboro.

A program of wedding music was performed by organist and vocalist Shirley McLawhorn, trumpeter Mike Fussell and vocalist Joseph McLawhorn.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and she wore a gown of bridal satin with a sweetheart neckline accented with Venise lace and seed pearls. The Victorian sleeves were enhanced with Venise lace ending in a point. The skirt was edged in Venise lace which extended to a semi-cathedral length train. Her satin bridal hat was accented with Venise lace and seed pearls.

The maid of honor, Joanna Register of Cove City, wore an aqua tea length gown with matching accessories. She carried a bouquet of mixed summer flowers.

The bridesmaids, whose dresses were identical to that of the honor attendant, included Beverly Holton, sister of the bride from New Bern; Eleanor Wall of Ayden; Judy Fussell, sister of the bride from Greenville, and Sarah Lane of Roanoke Rapids. Each bridesmaid carried long-stemmed summer flowers.

The flower girl was Jenny Smith, niece of the bride, from New Bern. She wore an aqua long gown and carried a basket of rose petals.

Groomsmen were Samuel Lane of Roanoke Rapids, Phillip Russell, Neal Russell and Kenley Russell, all of Vanceboro.

Erik Smith, nephew of the bride from New Bern, was the ring bearer. The wedding reception was given by the bride's parents, and was held in the church fellowship hall. Jeanette Dixon cut the cake and Carol Gaskins poured the punch.

After a wedding trip to Kiawah Island, S.C., the couple will live in Vanceboro.

The bride is employed with First Citizens Bank in New Bern, and the bridegroom is a self-employed contract trucker. She is a graduate of West Craven High School, and he is a graduate of Mt. Olive College.

DISCOLORED FRONT TEETH

If you have discolored front teeth that detract from your appearance, your dentist can help them look natural again. There are many reasons why teeth become stained or discolored. Sometimes it is caused by certain childhood diseases accompanied by high fever. It can also be caused by certain medications, such as antibiotics or other drug therapies used to cure illness. Personal habits, such as heavy smoking or chewing tobacco can also cause teeth discoloration. Whatever the cause, no one wants to be embarrassed by exhibiting ugly, stained teeth when smiling.

To solve this problem, I recommend use of a composite resin. This is a versatile and useful material that has many important applications in the restoration of teeth. I can apply a thin veneer of composite resin and bond it directly over the surfaces of the stained teeth in a color that will match your natural teeth. The next time you call my office for a checkup ask about the bonding technique to cover badly stained teeth.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Abused Woman Says Don't Go Back'

DEAR ABBY: In March I read a letter in your column from a parent whose daughter had actually been beaten to death by her boyfriend.

I am enclosing photos of myself following the brutal beating I received from my husband of 11 1/2 years. It was the first time he had physically harmed me, although he had threatened me with a knife several times. These last five years I lived in terror of him, but didn't know how to get away without getting myself and my three children killed.

The assault occurred in a public place at 3:30 p.m. I asked him to meet me there because I was going to tell him I was leaving him, and I thought it would be safe. I was wrong. He nearly killed me. In addition to severe body pummeling, I suffered a broken nose, a blow-out fracture of my right cheek, severe eye damage, broken teeth, contusions and numerous hematomas on my head, which became swollen three times its normal size!

Your advice, to file charges and run as though your life depended on it, was good.

I ran to a shelter provided by the Women's Advocates — a rape crisis and intervention group. I also pressed charges. He was sentenced to an indefinite term not to exceed 10 years. He must serve 120 days at a correction facility, where he will be evaluated; then there's a possibility that he will be released.

He offered to give me everything I wanted in the divorce if I would drop the charges against him. I refused. I am glad I stood my ground because now it has been publicly validated that wife beating is unacceptable.

Abby, you have my permission to use my name and publish these pictures. Do whatever is necessary to let women everywhere know that they do not have to tolerate physical abuse! Urge them to contact the Women's Advocates or other local crisis intervention groups.

Don't back off, and above all, NEVER go back! — RAE BRENNAN, AMERICAN FALLS, IDAHO

DEAR RAE: I cannot publish your pictures, but I can tell you that I and my staff were horrified by them. The damage to your face and body defies description.

Thank you for sharing your story and reinforcing my advice to "run from an abusive mate as though your life depended on it — because it does."

Now, a word to all girls: Under no circumstances should you tolerate a rough shove, a punch, a slap, a twisted arm or any kind of physical abuse from a boyfriend. It's a clear signal that his uncontrolled anger could eventually escalate into more severe punishment.

Most women remain in abusive relationships because they are financially dependent. So, girls, complete your education — learn a trade or a profession so you can support yourselves and will never be forced to tolerate abuse because you can't afford to leave.

DEAR ABBY: I am a mature, intelligent, sensitive woman of 33. I am also a woman who has been approached often by total strangers who say, "My, but you have a pretty face." (I know I have a pretty face.)

The message is obvious. What they don't say is, "Too bad you're so fat — why don't you do something about it?"

Well, I know I am fat. And I have tried to "do something" about it all my life, and I am sick of it. I am not lazy. I am active, healthy and I eat nutritious food. I know I eat more sugar and fat than I can metabolize, but eating is one of the joys of living.

I am single by choice and by no means am I lonely or man-hungry. I'm satisfied with myself the way I am, and need to know what to say to strangers who walk up to me and tell me what a pretty face I have. — FAT AND SASSY

DEAR FAT: Say, "Thank you." (Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Blue Law

Greenville's blue law is confusing, discriminatory and unenforceable.

Shoppers don't know what they can or can't buy. Merchants don't know what they can or can't sell. One store interprets the restrictions literally; one next door is lenient in what it offers. Often, if a shopper can't purchase an item at one establishment, he can successfully try another. Both stores may be correct.

The law discriminates against stores that specialize in specific items, like auto parts, athletic equipment, toys and clothing, by keeping them closed on Sundays. These items are available on Sunday, however, at convenience stores and food stores — because under the blue law, those businesses are allowed to open.

Police, without standing sentry at each checkout counter to monitor what is sold, can't enforce the ordinance. Arrests, when they are made, involve the individual who sold the item in question. That person often hasn't been informed what to sell or what not to sell.

There is a large group that supports the blue law on religious principles. If the law were repealed, however, no business would be forced to open on Sunday and no citizen would be required to shop.

There is also a large group that wants to shop on Sundays. Under the blue law, they can shop, but only for certain items at certain stores. They don't know if they're breaking the law when they make purchases and clerks don't know if they're breaking the law when they ring up Sunday sales.

A repeal of the blue law could eliminate the confusion and dissolve questions about enforcement and discrimination. It is a move that should be considered.

Running Bear

If Greenville people were alarmed by seeing a young adult black bear on the loose, that young adult bear must have been even more alarmed by seeing so many humans on the loose — especially with so many of them chasing one lonesome bear.

K.J. Dunn, a state wildlife enforcement officer, felt sorry for the bear. According to him (and we agree), bears in today's world are entitled to pity.

"Their world is caving in on them", says Dunn. "One year they have a forest to roam in. The next spring they wake up and the forest is a housing development. They need big woods, and so much of our big woods are being cut."

There were repeated sightings and one has to marvel at the speed our bear displayed in getting around. Dunn recalled a tagged bear that was let loose in Dare County and the next day he was seen in the Washington, N.C., area.

He advises a bear is unlikely to do any harm ... if he's not cornered. We don't know of many people who are going to do that, either.

Israeli Invasion Still Plagues U.S.

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Aftershocks from Israel's invasion of Lebanon still plague America's policies and image in the Middle East four years after the operation designed to bring "peace to Galilee."

U.S. efforts to rebuild a stable, Western-oriented Lebanon in wake of the June 6, 1982, invasion failed and instead boosted Syria's influence, radicalized many Lebanese and contributed to terrorist attacks against Americans.

Western and Arab diplomats say U.S. frustration over Lebanon has discouraged the Reagan administration from playing an active, aggressive role in the search for an overall Arab-Israeli settlement.

Four years after Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin launched "Operation Peace for Galilee," Lebanon remains torn by factional fighting. The streets of its capital Beirut are a hunting ground for kidnappers and killers.

America's prestige in the Middle East remains low after the failure of its Lebanon policy, and American embassies worldwide have become fortresses against terrorists, many of whom are believed to be recruited and trained in Lebanon.

At first, Israel's success in driving the Palestine Liberation Organization from its Beirut stronghold appeared to offer the United States an opportunity to break the logjam in Middle East peace.

In September 1982, both President Reagan and Arab League heads of state unveiled peace formulas which, although vastly different, offered a starting point for serious negotiations. Israeli officials rejected both plans but spoke optimistically of Lebanon, free of PLO influence, becoming the second Arab country after Egypt to make peace with the Jewish state.

The atmosphere changed dramatically, however, when pro-Israeli Christian militiamen, angry over the assassination of Lebanon's Christian President-elect Bashir Gemayel two days earlier, entered Palestinian camps outside Beirut on the night of Sept. 16, 1982, and slaughtered hundreds of Palestinian civilians.

That convinced the Reagan administration to devote its diplomatic energies to getting the Israelis out of Lebanon before pursuing a regional settlement.

On May 17, 1983, U.S., Israeli and Lebanese officials hammered out an agreement providing for an Israeli pullout in return for political and military concessions from the Lebanese.

The Israelis, however, said they would not honor the agreement unless Syria withdrew its own forces, stationed since 1979 in the northern and eastern Lebanon as an Arab peacekeeping force.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, principal architect of the May 17 agreement, flew to Damascus to try to convince Syrian President Hafez Assad to accept the pact and withdraw his forces.

Assad, fearing the agreement was tantamount to a peace treaty with Israel, denounced the accord and refused to withdraw his troops.

Within months, fighting had broken out again between Lebanon's Druse, Moslem and Christian factions around Beirut.

U.S. Marines, sent to the capital in August 1982 as part of a four-nation carcerating juvenile "status" offenders. These are undisciplined children who run away from home or skip school but commit no offense which would be a crime for adults. House Bill 569 is controversial because it steps back from that ban on status offender incarceration. It would allow up to 30 days for the worst of the chronic status offenders.

The bill does more. It also creates interdisciplinary committees in each judicial district to help district court judges devise disciplinary, and corrective, programs to help these children. The confinement would be ordered only when repeated attempts to help the child had failed.

Senate Bill 303 is being thrust upon North Carolina by recent federal legislation in the child support enforcement area. It would create mandatory wage and income withholding for parents who fall behind in their child support payments.

House Bill 1203 expands the definition of neglected children to include disabled infants, under the age of one, who suffer from life-threatening conditions and who are not receiving proper medical care. The bill would not apply in cases where doctors indicate that medical care could not save the child's life.

Two House bills, 987 and 988, affect commitments to the Division of Youth Services. Under 988, any youth getting a term of less than 90 days would have to be confined in a local or regional detention home. Under 987, a new minimum term of one year would be created for youths convicted of serious crimes, thus giving judges more latitude in sentencing.

All of the above bills were approved by the house in which they originated and are now in committees of the other house. Several other bills are alive because they remain in the appropriations committees.

The most controversial is the Endangered Child Act, Senate Bill 243. It is based on the premise that removal of a child from his home can be more harmful than helpful, especially if the child is taken from his home and put on the merry-go-round of foster home rotation.

Senate Bill 243, therefore, moves in two directions. First, it makes it more difficult for the county to remove a child from his home. At the same time, it develops a program for trying to correct the problems in the home which have led the county to consider removal in the first place. Second, for those cases where a child is removed and put in a foster home, the time before which a judge can order a termination of parental rights is reduced.

House Bill 738 would increase the number of poor, crippled children who are served by the Crippled Children's Special Health Services program. It would pump $4.1 million a year into the program so that all children living in families with incomes below the poverty line could benefit from the program. The extra funding would make it possible for 3,300 more children to receive medical help. Less than half that many are now served.

— Elisha Douglas —

Strength For Today

If history teaches one lesson with insistence and firmness it is that God Almighty does not intend that any one man or any one nation shall rule the world. Ambitious rulers have been trying to do so from the beginning, with grim disillusioning results.

For example, just before his death, Napoleon wrote these words: "I shall soon be in my grave ... Behold the destiny now at hand of him who has been called the great Napoleon! What an abyss between my great misery and the eternal reign of Christ who is proclaimed, loved and adored, and whose kingdom is extending all over the earth!"

Napoleon was no fool. He was able to see the difference between reality and falseness. This knowledge came too late to do him much good, but at least he saw at long last and understood. He knew that he was a pretender and Christ a king.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I am in agreement with the Planning and Zoning Commission in reference to the control of signs and billboards. It is possible for businesses to have signs that are tasteful — bigger isn't better.

Contrast, if you will, Greenville Boulevard with the attractive nicely landscaped buildings along Arlington Boulevard. This is the way Greenville should look.

We need citizens' support to help eliminate unnecessary signs. Help by attending the Council meeting Tuesday, June 10, at 7:30 p.m. in City Hall.

To the editor:

In Wednesday's letter to the editor, Charlotte Purrington voices the longing of most Americans for the comfort of secure peace and the expenditures of resources for the betterment of our people.

But there is a problem: What kind of society is to continue on this Earth? Will it be Western democracy, or will it be communism with its regimented life?

The founders of modern communism, Engels and Marx, proclaimed that the two systems cannot both survive. Each communist ruler and ideologue has reasserted this basic principle. Each has stated that there must be war and massive upheaval both before and after the communist take-over of a country.

Western democracy is led by the U.S.A. Communism is led by the U.S.S.R. The U.S.S.R. is the greatest empire that has ever existed; the most effective colonial power that ever existed. In the last 16 years, during SALT I and SALT II, Russia (which the U.S.S.R. is) has risen from clear military inferiority to the U.S.A. to be vastly superior in numbers of military weapons and armed personnel. We believe the U.S.A. is still superior in technology.

Ms. Purrington states that the GWEN construction is being done "without protest." I have read several protests in the Daily Reflector alone. Does she want violent protests as have been conducted against other of our defense effort? Is that her desire?

Let us hope that our U.S.A. can continue to be able to sustain itself using all possible defensive technological resources that we have.

Bills Affecting Children Still Alive

Buchanan In Isolation

WASHINGTON — Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan's rejection of Pat Buchanan ally, as top speechwriter, has more than ever isolated the communications director as an ideologue in a nest of pragmatists.

Regan had fired Bently T. Elliott, a Buchanan ally, as top speechwriter. Buchanan's recommendation to promote speechwriter Peggy Noonan to replace Elliott sat on Regan's desk for weeks, then was turned down. "Pat is being treated with such contempt that Regan must be trying to force him out," one White House aide told us.

Regan's men deny it, and Buchanan doesn't think so. But nobody denies his isolation. At the 8 a.m. senior staff meeting each day, the only participants following an ideological agenda are Buchanan and Budget Director James Miller. They are described by colleagues as impractical "ideologues."

This is no right-left struggle. To the conservative movement, Don Regan is measurably less obstructive than his predecessor, James A. Baker. He actively supports Regan's anti-tax cut and pro-Contra commitments. But lesser conservative issues that do not engage the president's attention suffer. Thus, efforts to water down affirmative action have languished, and the White House has not mobilized to combat the assault against judicial nominations.

Regan has functioned as chief operating officer, exuding power and control. An exception has been the speechwriting shop, a den of creative, often feuding individualists shaping an administration that sounds more ideological than it is by words put in the president's mouth. Regan's supply-side, anti-communist conservatism has been verbalized by Ben Elliott.

As Elliott's boss, Buchanan approved. But the chief speechwriter clashed with what are derogated as "mice": the chief of staff's lieutenants. Amid mutual charges of leaden prose and wooden ears is a struggle between caution and daring.

Regan would not tolerate the "friction," so Elliott had to go. In truth, he had pondered quitting for months. A soft landing was prepared: speechwriter for Rep. Jack Kemp's incipient presidential campaign. The harsher truth was that he had been fired.

The divided White House was displayed May 20 at Elliott's farewell party in the speechwriters' shop. Buchanan presided. National Security Council staffer Constantine Menges, fired a day earlier (and also bound for Kemp's campaign), was on hand. Regan and the "mice" were not invited.

Multinational Peacekeeping Force, joined in the fighting to support the Christian-led Lebanese army. Syria, hoping to undermine the May 17 accord, backed leftist Druse and Moslem groups.

American involvement in the month-long fighting deeply angered Lebanon's majority Moslem community and contributed to the wave of anti-American feeling which has made the streets of Beirut unsafe for Americans today.

In the south, meanwhile, Israel's occupation so radicalized Shiites that they joined with Palestinians in attacking Israelis. Earlier, many Shiites welcomed the Israelis because they hated the PLO, whose attacks on Israel had brought devastating reprisals on Shiite villages.

On Oct. 23, 1983, a month after a shaky cease-fire, suicide truck bombers believed to be pro-Iranian Shiites struck U.S. and French military headquarters in Beirut, killing 241 Marines and 58 French soldiers. Four months later, Syrian-backed militiamen overran West Beirut, prompting the United States, Britain, France and Italy to dissolve their joint peacekeeping force.

With West Beirut in the hands of his enemies, President Amin Gemayel, brother of the slain president-elect, bowed to Syrian pressure and abrogated the pact with Israel in March 1984.

Syria emerged as the major power broker in a Lebanon even more unstable and dangerous than before the Israeli invasion.

With the pact dead, Israel opted for a phased troop withdrawal, retaining an armed presence only in a 12-mile-deep "security zone," along its border.

Tower Discussed

Two nationally known speakers will discuss the Ground Wave Emergency Network communication tower being constructed between Vanceboro and New Bern in a meeting scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the City Council chambers, City Hall, 201 W. Fifth St., Greenville.

The 300-foot-tall tower will be two football field lengths in diameter and is part of a 500-tower GWEN network. The network is planned to be invulnerable to the effects of electromagnetic radiation released by exploding nuclear weapons.

The speakers will be retired Capt. James T. Bush, associate director of the Center for Defense Information in Washington, D.C., and Franklin C. Miller, director of strategic force policy at the Department of Defense in Washington, D.C.

Bush is a former chief of naval operations who has a master's degree in international relations from the University of South Carolina. Miller, who has a master's degree from Princeton University, is involved in formulation and review of U.S. nuclear deterrence policy.

Sunday Thefts

Investigators said five thefts were reported to Greenville police Sunday.

Officer E.M. Haddock said a truck loaded with building and roofing materials — with a total value of $44,860 — was taken from the Farmers' Tobacco Warehouse on North Greene Street in an incident reported at 7:44 a.m. The thieves gained entrance to the building through a skylight.

Officer S.B. Pass said a television set valued at $300 was taken from 1104 W. Fourth St. in an incident reported at 8:08 a.m., while Officer F.G. Pruitt said four tires, a radio and two speakers were taken from a vehicle parked at Curley's Exxon at 2800 S. Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 9:38 a.m.

Officer J.A. Bartlett said a booster, an equalizer, a radio-tape player, 20 tapes and a tennis racket were taken from a vehicle parked on a dirt road behind Wildwood Villa Apartments in an incident reported at 7:04 p.m., and $7 in cash and a textbook valued at $32 were taken from a car parked at the Western Sizzlin' Steak House at 2903 E. Tenth St. in an incident reported at 10:36 p.m.

Driver Charged

The N.C. Highway Patrol has charged Harold T. Little of 1805 West Conley St. with driving left of center and driving while his license was revoked in connection with a Friday traffic accident N.C. Hwy. 33 east, near Simpson, according to Trooper B.J. Jones.

Little, 37, was driving west in a truck that was carrying a load of sand.

Jones said the sand shifted, causing truck to cross the center line and side-swipe a car driven by Ressie B. Pryor, 76, of 2611 Jefferson Drive. Ms. Pryor's car then went into a ditch and Little's truck overturned in a ditch.

According to a spokesman at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, Ms. Pryor was treated for minor abrasions in the emergency room and released Friday. Little was released from the hospital Saturday afternoon.

Waste Regulations

The Pitt County landfill is open for disposal of empty agricultural chemical containers, but county officials say there are guidelines farmers must follow to dump their waste containers.

First, disposal must be done in accordance with all rules and regulations of the N.C. Division of Health Services and the N.C. Department of Agriculture.

Camp ...

set fire to some shacks. He said both sides were using pistols, automatic weapons and shotguns.

"That whole area is in flames, smoke is rising hundreds of feet in the air," he said. "A one-kilometer-long stretch is on fire, and thousands must be homeless. The fire was spreading so fast because of the wind that a lot of people didn't have a chance to salvage anything. You could see one hut, and then another and another burst into flames, and then a wall of fire."

Hundreds of vigilantes, known as "Witdoeke," Afrikaans for handkerchiefs which they wear to identify themselves, roamed among the smoldering shacks.

Army and police helicopters clattered overhead. Police reported some patrols had come under fire, and they sealed off parts of the area and ordered reporters to leave. Police also were reportedly trying to get into one house from which gunshots were being fired.

There were unconfirmed reports of at least one death.

In May, the vigilantes, including the oldest residents of Crossroads, effectively defeated the militant anti-apartheid activists for control of the camp.

Anti-apartheid activists have accused police of aiding the vigilantes, who are loyal to the conservative committee that runs the central camp.

The Rev. Allan Boesak, one of South Africa's most prominent civil rights leaders, said on NBC-TV's "Today" show this morning that "South African police have been very heavily involved in creating those factions."

"In arming one of the factions with something like 600 guns and ammunition and protecting them as they were sent out to attack other black people, that is very disturbing thing that is happening," he said.

According to Sam Uzzell, Pitt extension agent, that means containers must be rinsed with water, inside and out, and emptied. In addition, all steel, metal or plastic containers must have holes in the sides, top and bottom so water will not stand inside, Uzzell said.

All containers with a capacity of over 30 gallons must have the top and bottom removed "to assure compaction," he said. Paper, plastic or bag material must be shaken so that chemical residue does not become airborne during landfilling procedures, the farm agent added.

Finally, the hauler must inform the landfill attendant when containers of this nature are being disposed of at the landfill, Uzzell said.

Holy Trinity

Holy Trinity United Holy Church will have revival services today-Friday at 7:30 p.m. The speaker will be Norbert Simmons of Goldsboro.

Music will be provided by Sycamore Hill Baptist Church, today; Phillipi Church of Christ, Tuesday; York Memorial A.M.E. Church, Wednesday; Cornerstone Baptist Church, Thursday, and Deeper Life United Holy Church, Goldsboro, Friday.

User's Group Meets

Gary Morris, associate engineer for Carolina Telephone, spoke to the Eastern User's Group last week. He demonstrated how recent changes allow computer linkups within a one-building site, among communities, and worldwide.

GUC To Meet

The Greenville Utilities Commission board will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. at the utilities building at the intersection of Fifth and Washington Streets.

Included on the agenda is the consideration of proposed changes to utility regulations and various reports.

P&Z Commission

The Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission will hold a special call meeting regarding signs at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the third floor Council Chambers of the Municipal Building.

ULOCO Explained

A program, "Utilities Locating Company (ULOCO): How the Law Affects You," was held for area contractors, city officials and utility employees last week at the Sheraton. The speakers, Carolyn Carter, manager of ULOCO; and Ray Killough, engineering manager of Piedmont Natural Gas Company, explained the importance of ULOCO and answered questions on legal responsibilities when underground utility lines are damaged. The program was sponsored by Greenville Utilities, Carolina Telephone & Telegraph and North Carolina Natural Gas.

Degree Awarded

Market Opens

BY CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Farmers' Market opened Saturday with one of the best selling days ever, market manager Terrie Whitehurst said.

"We had an excellent turnout," Whitehurst said, estimating that from 200-250 people attended the market. "They were buying," she said. "There were nine sellers there and most of them sold out."

Whitehurst said fresh vegetables and fruits sold at the market included beets, corn, peaches, collards, cabbages, Irish potatoes, string beans, onions, squash, turnips, broccoli, cucumbers, sweet potatoes and zucchini squash.

The annual membership fee for members is $10, Whitehurst said. New members pay an initial fee of $20, and all members pay a $2 parking fee each day they sell.

Persons interested in selling at the Farmers' Market should contact Terrie Whitehurst at 752-2934, extension 371, Monday-Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., or at the market. The market opens every Tuesday and Thursday, 7 a.m.-1 p.m.; Friday from 1 p.m.-7 p.m., and Saturday from 7 a.m.-1 p.m.

IN THE STATE

Highway Repair Priorities Noted In Agency Study

SILER CITY, N.C. (AP) — As summer vacation begins, car travel on the state's 76,451 miles of highway is expected to rise 10 percent to 15 percent above last year's levels, officials say.

North Carolina has more miles of highway than another state in the nation. But an April study by The Road Information Program, a Washington research agency, reported that 13,160 miles of North Carolina highway and 5,255 bridges need major improvements.

This month, the Legislature is expected to consider Gov. Jim Martin's first tax increase proposal — a gas tax increase of 2½ cents to help build and maintain roads. Martin's plan, including the tax increase, would raise an estimated $1.1 billion for highways over the next six years.

There are roads of which motorists should be wary. They include:

— The Hawthorne curve of Interstate 40 in midtown Winston-Salem. The curve, which twists sharply to the right as cars head eastward, is dangerous enough to have warning signs three-quarters of a mile in advance, a 40 mph speed limit, and a big sign that flashes yellow when traffic moves too fast.

The curve is also a bridge. Over the years, trucks have tumbled over the side to Hawthorne road below. "I had just opened up here in 1954, shortly after they built the bridge, when the first truck fell off of it," said Jesse Temple, who runs a jewelry shop 30 feet below the bridge. "Fortunately for me, I was on the south side and most of them fell off the north side. One hit the corner of that building over there once."

The road began not as an interstate but as a cross-town expressway. A 21-mile loop of I-40 south of town, to cost more than $147 million, is planned.

— The merger of I-40, I-85, U.S. 29 and U.S. 70 in a half-mile stretch of Greensboro.

"Out here, nobody yields for nothing," said Edna Smith, a convenience store clerk.

Greensboro police Lt. Tom Shelton said the biggest problems occur "when a truck gets sideways and blocks a couple of lanes. With the traffic as heavy as it is now, it'll be backed up nearly to Winston-Salem in a few minutes."

— Independence Boulevard in Charlotte, which was designed in 1949 to handle 25,000 cars a day but is now traveled by more than 60,000. Traffic engineers in the 1950s produced six 9-foot lanes — the standard is 12 feet — from its original four lanes.

A single intersection, Independence at Morningside Drive, logged 338 accidents, injuring 176 people, in the six years from 1980 through 1985.

The state plans to widen a portion of the road from six to eight lanes in fiscal years 1989-91 for $58.5 million.

There is also a seven-mile stretch of U.S. 421 between Staley and Siler City in Chatham County which has claimed the lives of eight people in the past six years, including two this year. Four times this year, shop owner Jim Velvin has videotaped sprawling tractor-trailer rigs and crushed cars to support his contention that the road is a killer.

"You've got the prince of roads here," Velvin said. "The road is non-forgiving."

Darrell Andrews, who owns a Siler City trucking firm, said word has spread over the years to truckers for whom U.S. 421 is the Wilmington-Greensboro route.

"We respect it very, very religiously," Andrews said. "The main thing up there is you have to be very alert and be right on top of your driving, as far as your speed. Because if you hit the shoulder, you're history."

"The biggest problem with the road is disrespect for it."

Assault Charges

MARSHALL, N.C. (AP) — Two residents of a home for the retarded and a third man have been indicted on charges of sexually assaulting seven children in a Madison County transportation department van that carried them to the Marshall Day Care Center.

Lathern Hensley, known as Buddy Norton, 26, and Pam Coli, 38, have each been indicted on seven counts of first-degree sex offense in connection with assaults on five girls and two boys between Jan. 16 and May 20, court records show.

The two are residents of the Mintz Family Care Home in Rector Corner, according to court records. They and several other clients of the Mountains of Madison program for the retarded in Mars Hill share the van with the children, the records showed.

Mountains of Madison is a training program designed to teach adults with disabilities skills they need to get along in the world.

N.C. Delegates Ready To Tip Scales At Baptist Convention

By The Associated Press

Officials say North Carolina voters could have a significant effect on the outcome of the presidential election of the Southern Baptist Convention, which is viewed as a battle between fundamentalists and moderates.

The presidential race pits the Rev. Adrian Rogers of Memphis, who started the run of fundamentalist leadership in 1979, against the Rev. Winfred Moore of Amarillo, Texas, who has the support of moderates.

The incumbent is the Rev. Charles Stanley of Atlanta, who defeated Moore last year. Stanley has served two terms and is ineligible for a third.

Tuesday's election is important because the president, with his appointive powers, holds sway over who serves on the boards of the SBC's 26 national agencies and seminaries.

More than 45,000 delegates are expected jam the Georgia World Congress Center Tuesday through Thursday.

The North Carolina convention, which represents more than 1.2 million church members, has had more than 4,000 requests for messenger registration cards — twice as many as last year.

The Rev. Robert Tenery of Morganton, a longtime fundamentalist leader, says his group will have the voting edge.

"We'll have lots of people there who have never been before," Tenery said. "I think they realize that if we don't keep the conservative trend going, it will undo all our work of the last seven years."

The pre-convention furor between the moderate and conservative wings of the Southern Baptist Convention could come down to a single question during this week's annual meeting in Atlanta: Were Adam and Eve real people tempted into sin by a talking snake?

The Rev. Ned Mathews of Parkwood Baptist Church in Gastonia, a national leader among SBC fundamentalists, says yes. He says his group is prepared to withdraw financial support for seminaries that teach otherwise.

"If certain churches wish to be moderate, that's their business," said Mathews, vice president of the Pastors Conference, a national group dominated by fundamentalists. "If they want to believe that Adam and Eve were not real people, that's their business."

"But shall we be compelled to pay the salaries of professors who interpret their freedom as a means by which they may deny cardinal biblical truths held by the majority of Southern Baptists? That's the issue. Everything else is a smoke screen."

Fundamentalists believe in the historical and scientific accuracy of the Bible, while moderates believe the Bible is divinely inspired but not necessarily literally true. The Rev. Scott Walker, a moderate from Monroe, says Southern Baptists ought to be able to disagree on biblical interpretation.

"I think the basis of Baptist theology is that you have a right to interpret scripture to your own best understanding," Walker said. He said he fears fundamentalists will push for a creed — or formal statement of belief — that Southern Baptists have never had.

"If you see a statement or formula emerge that professors and foreign missionaries and Southern Baptist agency employees would have to sign, there would be so many resignations, so many firings, such a bloodbath, I think you'd see the convention come apart."

Neither Mathews nor Tenery predicts a formal split in the SBC. But both agree a Rogers' victory will drive some moderates from the convention.

"There's going to be a bailout," Mathews said. "There'll be some departures."

Assembly Schedules Tuesday Talks On Open Meetings Bill

By F. ALAN BOYCE

Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill that would allow actions taken in improperly closed meetings to be voided by a judge, who could levy fines against officials who acted in bad faith, is expected to be the subject of lengthy debate during the General Assembly session.

Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, who sponsored the bill, said the expected debate was one reason he asked to have it scheduled at the first Senate Judiciary I Committee.

The bill won House approval last year and lodged in the Senate Judiciary I Committee. It is scheduled for discussion Tuesday.

"We want to go ahead and get it moving," he said. "Questions have been raised to me concerning a House amendment including hospital boards of trustees. I suspect we'll be hearing some more from them."

Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, chairman of the committee, said he agreed to consider the bill despite his own reservations.

"It's an extra burden you put on operating with private business," he said, pointing out that some government contracts might never be let if private businessmen knew the details could be subject to later disclosure.

"As for the penalties against individual members suspected of violating the law, I have grave concerns with that particular point," he said. "Most of those folks are trying to do a good job. They would not intentionally violate it. But just by the accusation, you'll destroy his political standing."

"I don't want to put that kind of political tool in the hands of anybody who might have a bad motive out there," Barnes said. "All I know is the media wants it and all the county commissioners don't want it."

In addition, Barnes and Ellis Hankins of the N.C. League of Municipalities, said the possibility of civil liability could prevent some people from seeking political office.

"Those public officials who act in good faith have nothing to fear from this law," said R. Fletcher Good, president of the North Carolina Press Association.

Barnes has been scrupulously fair toward other bills he opposed when they came before his committee. When legislation for mandatory seat belt use came up, he voiced his objections only outside the committee and did not try to influence debate.

Partly for that reason, both sides said they expected fair hearings. Committee member Sen. Lura Tally, D-Cumberland, said she favors the change but could not say how the bill would fare.

"It's at the top of our legislative agenda for the short session," Good said. "Under current law, injunction is the only remedy. What's done, even if it's done illegally, is done."

"Our official position is we support the open meetings law the way it is," Hankins said. "We realize that there are occasional meetings violations out of ignorance, and sometimes deliberate violations of the law. ... But the possibility of invalidating government action brings real problems."

Proposed Tax Jumps Prompted By Money Woes

GREENSBORO (AP) — Leaders in six of the state's top 12 urban areas have recommended tax increases of between 2 cents and 9 cents per $100 of taxable property.

"We have recommended a 2-cent increase for operations," said Robert Wurst, Asheville's audit and budget director. "In addition, our council has agreed to a 7-cent tax increase for a major public improvement program."

Charlotte faces a proposed 6-cent increase; Wilmington, 5 cents; Fayetteville, 4 cents; and Durham, 2 cents.

"Part of ours would be for a pay-as-you-go fund," said Philip

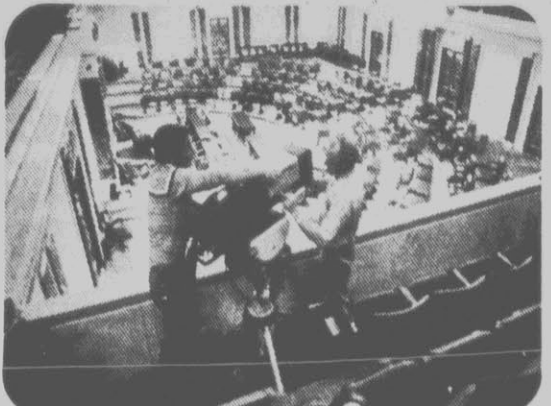

Cowherd, a budget analyst for Charlotte municipal government. "It would generate $8.4 million directed toward the capital fund for replacement of revenue sharing."

Except for Greensboro and Durham, none of the cities considering a tax increase raised property rates last year. Durham went up 1 cent in 1985; Greensboro, 2½ cents.

Officials say the increases are needed because of the expected loss of federal revenue-sharing funds this fall and the cost of issuing new bonds.

"These are things that every municipal budget officer in the nation is going through," said Randolph Arndt, a spokesman for the National League of Cities in Washington.

Americans can now watch the U.S. Senate in action live on C-SPAN. Some Senators worry about the effects of TV on the Senate's tradition of lofty debate. One can only wonder how the argument in 1856 between South Carolina Representative Preston Brooks and Massachusetts Senator Charles Sumner would have played on TV. After Sumner insulted Brooks's uncle, Brooks beat the Massachusetts Senator senseless. Sumner's injury kept him out of the Senate for over three years.

Reynolds Heirs Fuss Over Tobacco Cause

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A California actor whose grandfather founded R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. says he wants to help an anti-smoking campaign to "make up for the damage my family has done."

"I really am sincere about it," said Patrick Reynolds, the grandson of R.J. Reynolds.

Though Reynolds, who says he supports an increase in the cigarette tax, said he had been in touch with his four brothers and that they supported his actions, his North Carolina siblings offered a different opinion. "It's the damndest thing I've ever heard," said John D. Reynolds.

William N. Reynolds said his younger brother might be seeking publicity to further his fledgling Hollywood career.

"He's not as rich as you might think," William Reynolds said. "Why would you just pick on tobacco? I'll bet liquor killed more people and broke up more marriages than tobacco ever did."

Richard "Josh" Reynolds III said his brother's actions were disturbing.

"Patrick didn't bother to ask me about it," he said. "I don't support higher taxes for anything."

Patrick Reynolds has signed on to help the American Lung Association in its campaign against smoking. He has distributed photographs of himself chatting with senators on Capitol Hill and has volunteered to testify before congressional committees. In a press release announcing his anti-tobacco campaign, Reynolds said he is troubled that "such an extreme special interest as the tobacco lobby" is able to keep cigarette taxes so low.

"I feel the American public has good to my family," said Patrick Reynolds, who inherited $2.5 million from his grandfather. "I believe this tax could be the most popular tax in history."

He said he thought his late grandfather would approve of his activities.

"I think he's up there smiling at me," he said.

In addition to his Washington lobbying, Patrick Reynolds is writing a book about his family and recently signed a contract with Little Brown, a Boston publishing firm. "It's a book about fathers and brothers and sons," he said.

"All he's trying to do is get publicity for a book and get a made-for-TV show like 'Dallas,'" John Reynolds said. "This man is not honoring any image that his father had."

Patrick Reynolds, who said he smoked cigarettes for 10 years, would not explain fully the origins of his concern about cigarettes. Earlier this year, he approached officials of the recently merged R.J.R.-Nabisco Co. and asked to serve on their board of directors. He also asked them to consider a joint business venture, which he would not discuss.

Company officials confirmed that both requests were rejected, but declined to elaborate. "We won't have any comment on any activities by him," RJR spokesman Peter Allensaid.

Patrick Reynolds began his Washington lobbying soon after the rejection by RJR officials, but he said the two happenings are unrelated.

His work with the American Lung Association also is in its beginning stages. "We haven't decided what we're going to do with him," said Rich Jachetti, a New York consultant for the lung association.

Although his permanent home is in Los Angeles, Patrick Reynolds said he plans to make more frequent trips to North Carolina in the coming year to interview subjects for his books.

Employees Learn To Skirt Test For Drugs

By MARTHA WAGGONER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — If employees have enough notice of a urinalysis test, they can hydrate themselves to change the drug test results and there's nothing employers can do about it, a lawyer and toxicologist who provides such tests to companies says.

"That's why most companies don't tell employees (about urinalysis) very far ahead of time," said Ted Shults of Compuchem, a company in Research Triangle Park that does urinalysis and environmental testing. Some companies and the military use urinalysis testing to determine if employees are taking drugs.

Marijuana tends to linger longer in a person's system than other drugs, Shults said. But businesses are becoming more concerned about cocaine, especially with the emergence of crack, he said.

"At first, Wall Street wasn't interested in drug testing because their high performers would come up positive," he said. "Now they're seeing the down side of cocaine," such as embezzling, and companies are more interested in urinalysis, he said.

Employees have tried various ways of beating a urinalysis test, but Shults says the methods rarely work and usually only succeed in getting the employees in trouble.

"I know there will be articles out there, Abbie Hoffman, how-to-build-a-bomb situations," Shults said in a recent interview. "But I have concerns about people who may be fooling themselves and getting themselves into unnecessary trouble."

Shults said the testing method used by Compuchem, called mass spectrometry, has an accuracy rate of 99.9 percent. But not all companies use the mass spectrometer, he said.

"From my position, the bottom line is that the testing can be done right, but it isn't done right all the time," he said. "It can be done properly, it should be done properly, but that doesn't mean it is being done properly."

Some companies use methods that are 98 percent effective, he said. "Out of 100 people, that means that one or two who have never done anything can be accused and that's completely unfair."

Since companies began using urinalysis, employees have been coming up with ways to try to beat it. One of the more imaginative efforts came from a man who put a catheter containing "clean" urine under his arm, ran a tube under his arm and down his shirt to his genitals and gave samples of that urine when called for a sample, Shults said.

A woman filled a condom with urine, placed it in her vagina, and then pricked it when it came time to do a sample, he said. When the army began urinalysis, civilians often offered to sell clean urine to soldiers, Shults said. The problem, he said, was that the urine sold to soldiers sometimes contained drugs.

"Soldiers would say 'But I bought the urine,' and that's not a very good defense," Shults said.

Employees also have added to their samples compounds that can interfere with the test results, he said. Drano, which contains lye, has been added to samples and will mess up the enzyme test, he said.

"If a lab is testing for those things, it won't pick up drugs, but it will pick up the Drano," Shults said. "Not all labs are checking for those things. But it becomes risky business. We've had samples here with everything from chewing gum to cigarette butts in it. You obviously wonder who's doing the sampling."

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined broadly today, retreating from last week's record high in the Dow Jones industrial average.

Dow Jones's average of 30 blue chips fell 15.74 to 1,870.16 in the first hour of trading.

Losers outnumbered gainers by about 2 to 1 in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Among actively traded blue chips, International Business Machines dropped 1 1/8 to 148 3/4; Eastman Kodak 1/8 to 61 1/2; and American Telephone & Telegraph 1/4 to 24 3/4.

Saga Corp. rose 2 to 39 1/2. Marriott Corp. said Saga, which had opposed a $34-a-share takeover bid from Marriott, agreed to a sweetened offer of $39.50.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks lost .95 to 140.03. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .58 at 279.96.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 6.46 to 1,885.90, topping the record closing high of 1,882.35 set on May 29.

But declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 4 on the NYSE. Big Board volume totaled 110.91 million shares, against 110.92 million in the previous session.

Panel ...

Rendering its verdict on the nation's worst space disaster after a 120-day probe, the commission demanded that NASA change the design on the solid rocket boosters. "No design options should be prematurely precluded because of schedule, cost or reliance on existing hardware," the commission said.

It added that NASA should give "full consideration" to conducting test firings on a redesigned rocket in a vertical configuration, a plan that some NASA officials have said previously could delay the return of the shuttle to space well beyond the July 1987 target date.

The commission report made these other recommendations:
 — NASA should see to the formation of an independent committee to oversee the redesign effort on the booster rocket;

— NASA should overhaul its shuttle management system to give the program manager — now, as in January, Arnold Aldrich of the Johnson Space Center — greater authority, and set up a shuttle safety panel including representatives from the astronaut corps. Establish a new safety organization that would be independent of other NASA program responsibilities.

— Conduct a comprehensive review of all items whose performance are deemed critical to shuttle flights. It said the orbiter's tires, brakes and steering systems "do not have sufficient safety margin."

— NASA found a tendency of "management isolation" at Marshall Space Flight Center, the NASA installation with responsibility for the faulty booster rocket, and said improvements are needed "whether by changes of personnel, organization, indoctrination or all three."

— Recommended that NASA "make all effort to provide a crew escape system" during the orbiter's gliding descent from orbit, as well as provide for greater emergency landing possibilities in the event that two or three of the shuttle's main engines fail during ascent.

— Called on NASA to establish a flight schedule more "consistent with its resources," and stop the practice of removing parts from one shuttle to supply another.

The conclusion that the shuttle accident was caused by a breakdown in a seal in the right rocket booster was no surprise — having been discussed in the commission's public hearings.

But the panel went on to say that problems with the seal made the Challenger explosion "an accident rooted in history."

"It began with the faulty design of its joint and increased as both NASA and contractor management first failed to recognize it as a problem, then failed to fix it and finally treated it as an acceptable flight risk," the commission said.

"The commission has concluded that neither (rocket manufacturer Morton) Thiokol nor NASA responded adequately to internal warnings about the faulty seal design," the report said. "Furthermore, Thiokol and NASA did not make a timely attempt to develop and verify a new seal after the initial design was shown to be deficient."

"The failure was due to a faulty design unacceptably sensitive to a number of factors," the report said. Among those factors, the report said, was the effects of cold temperatures on synthetic rubber O-rings designed to seal the joint to keep hot gases from escaping. Challenger was launched when the temperature was 38 degrees, 15 degrees colder than it was on any of the 24 earlier shuttle flights.

The cold robbed the O-rings of their resiliency, reducing their ability to expand and contain the gases, the commission said.

There was plenty of warning from lower-level engineers that the joints were badly designed, including one report that said they could cause a catastrophe that would destroy the shuttle and its crew, the report said.

But it said these warnings went unheeded by top officials of both the space agency and the manufacturer, Morton Thiokol.

On launch day, some Morton Thiokol engineers argued against lifting off in the cold weather.

The commission said it considered the possibility of sabotage "in detail" and found "no evidence, either at the launch pad or during other processes prior to or during launch."

The report said the first indication of a problem came a scant .678 seconds into the flight, when a strong puff of gray smoke spurted from the vicinity of a seal in the right booster rocket. "Eight more distinctive puffs of increasingly blacker smoke were recorded" between .836 seconds and 2.5 seconds, the report said.

It said the black color and dense composition of the smoke "suggest that the grease, joint insulation and rubber O-rings in the joint seal were being burned and eroded by the hot propellant gases."

At 37 seconds, the shuttle flew through the first of several high-altitude wind shear conditions, lasting until about 64 seconds, but the shuttle's guidance, navigation and control system "immediately sensed and countered" the forces, the report said.

The shuttle then went through the routine experience of maximum dynamic pressure on its ascent, and it wasn't until 58.788 seconds that the first "small flame" was detected emanating from the booster. "It grew into a continuous, well-defined plume" about a half-second later, and rocket telemetry began showing a pressure difference between the left and right booster rockets, "confirming the growing leak in the area of the field joint," the report said.

"Beginning at about 64.6 seconds, a bright swirling flame indicated that it was mixing with leaking hydrogen from the shuttle's main external tank," the report said. The flame had burned through the external tank.

At a little more than 72 seconds into the flight, the lower strut linking the rocket to the main tank was severed or pulled away and the booster rocket began rotating on its top attachment.

The tank's main hydrogen tank gave way, releasing massive amounts of liquid hydrogen. The solid booster rocket hit the main tank at the nose. Very quickly, Challenger, travelling at nearly twice the speed of sound, at 46,000 feet, "was totally enveloped in the explosive burn ... The orbiter ... broke into several large sections which emerged from the fireball."

The victims were Dick Scobee, spacecraft commander; Michael J. Smith, pilot; Judith Resnik, mission specialist; Ronald McNair, mission specialist; Ellison Onizuka, mission specialist; Gregory Jarvis, a Hughes Aircraft engineer; and Christa McAuliffe, the first teacher to fly aboard the shuttle. Their remains were later located on the ocean floor off Cape Canaveral.

ernments, but exclusively from personal statements, from one minister or from the other in Israel."

Waldheim was backed by the conservative People's Party for the largely ceremonial post. He will be sworn in July 8 for a six-year term.

As Austria's head of state, he will receive foreign guests and make state visits to other countries. But legislators in some countries, including the United States, Britain and Israel, have demanded he be banned because of his alleged activities in the German army.

Waldheim's victory was quickly followed by comment from abroad that many Austrians were bound to dislike: criticism from Israel and support from the Soviet Union.

In Tel Aviv, a government spokesman said, "Israel expresses its deep regret and disappointment at the election of Kurt Waldheim as president of Austria."

"The election did not come as a surprise, but until the last moment, we hoped that logic and reason would prevail, and that the election of a man like Waldheim would be prevented," the spokesman said.

Israel today recalled Ambassador Michael Elitzur from Vienna for consultations to protest Waldheim's victory. Israel's deputy foreign minister, Roni Milo, had said Sunday on Israel Radio that the Jewish state would cut back its diplomatic and business relations with Austria if Waldheim won the election.

In contrast, the Soviet news agency Tass hastened to report Waldheim's election and claimed it signaled the failure of an "unseemly undertaking" of U.S.-backed Zionists to accuse Waldheim of war crimes and meddle in Austrian affairs.

In Washington, the Justice Department said Waldheim will be allowed into the United States even if his alleged Nazi past puts him on a "watch list" of foreigners barred from this country.

Department spokesman Patrick Korten said on Sunday that Waldheim's status as head of state would override any action against him under laws allowing the government to deny visas to undesirable aliens.

A 1978 law allows the United States to exclude aliens who were associated with the Nazi government and in any way participated in the mass executions of Jews and other ethnic groups in World War II.

Waldheim's victory was based on widespread support from the environmentalist Greens faction and votes from Socialists disenchanted with the work of the Vienna government and the party's involvement in a series of scandals.

Celts Claim 16th NBA Title

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics got humiliated. Then they got mad. Then they got their 16th NBA title.

Angered by one of their worst performances of the season in losing the fifth game of the NBA championship series, the Celtics charged back Sunday with one of their best games of the playoffs, trampling the Houston Rockets 114-97 to complete a 4-2 victory in the best-of-7-games final round.

"Go ahead. Kick our tails. See what happens," a grinning Kevin McHale yelled during the celebration in Boston's locker room.

The Rockets booted the Celtics 111-96 in Thursday night's fifth game at Houston. Boston's play was sloppy, its shooting touch, hustle and inside defense missing. And 7-foot-4 Houston forward Ralph Sampson punched 6-1 Boston guard Jerry Sichting.

"We had a game to play and I had already forgotten about it," Sichting said Sunday. "If you are out for revenge, you are not going to play your type of basketball."

The Celtics gave a new twist to the "don't get mad, get even" approach. They did get mad but Sunday's game was hardly even.

Boston won the opening tap, forced 11 Houston turnovers in the first quarter, pushed its lead to 41-30 with 6:40 left in the second period and kept its advantage in double figures throughout the second half. Except for a first-quarter lapse, in which Houston's Akeem Olujuwon had three steals in 41 seconds, it was the Celtics' game from start to finish.

"Today," Boston guard Dennis Johnson said, "we played the way we wanted to."

Sampson didn't. He made just one of eight shots in the first half and four of 12 for the game. He scored only eight points.

"I just played bad. I was not unnerved by the crowd," said Sampson, who was booed nearly every time he touched the ball. "If I played well, I think we would have won."

The Celtics didn't play well Thursday night and returned home grim and determined Friday. Practice on Saturday lacked the usual lapses into levity.

"The intensity level was just incredible," said Coach K.C. Jones, who won his 10th title with the Celtics, eight as a player and two in his three years as coach. "We were ready to play Saturday."

"We were mad," McHale said. "They hurt our pride the way they beat us in Houston."

Boston, which had just a pair of two-game losing streaks all season, changed its tactics as well as its emotions in going from a 15-point loss to a 17-point victory.

Jones shifted defensive ace Johnson to Rockets guard Robert Reid, who had 17 assists Thursday night but just six Sunday. The coach emphasized boxing out, especially on the defensive boards, after Houston had 19 more rebounds than the Celtics Thursday night. On Sunday, Boston outrebounded Houston for only the second time in the series.

"They played with more enthusiasm," Olujuwon said. "They were fired up and went after every rebound and loose ball."

A raucous home crowd energized the Celtics on a humid afternoon in non-air-conditioned Boston Garden. They won their 38th straight game in the building where they were 48-1 for the season, losing only to Portland on Dec. 6, 121-103. Including playoffs, the Celtics won an NBA-record 82 games this season and lost just 18 times.

"It would have been tough to come in here and win," Rockets' Coach Bill Fitch said after Boston boosted its home playoff mark to 10-0. It would have been easier had Houston not gotten subpar performances out of most of its players. Olujuwon led the Rockets with 19 points, nearly seven below his average for the series. Mitchell Wiggins and Jim Petersen, key bench performers earlier in the series, combined to make just three of 13 shots and had just four and three points, respectively. Rodney McCray had 16 points and Reid and Lewis Lloyd 12 each.

McHale and series most valuable player Larry Bird led Boston with 29 points each, Danny Ainge added 19, Robert Parish 11 and Johnson and Bill Walton 10 each.

It was just the fourth time in the last 14 years that a team won the title on its home court and the third straight time the deciding game was played in Boston Garden. The Celtics won the championship in Boston in 1984, then lost it last season to the Los Angeles Lakers in six games.

"There was little doubt we had to take control early," said McHale, who got the game's first two baskets off his own offensive rebound and a steal by Bird.

Boston never trailed and bolted to a 22-10 lead. But Houston got the next 11 points, five by Olujuwon. It was the Rockets' only run of more than three points in the first three quarters.

The Celtics responded with seven of the last nine points of the first quarter to grab a 29-23 lead. Houston cut it to 31-28 before Boston went on a 24-10 tear that made the score 55-38 at halftime. McHale had 13 points and Bird had nine points and three assists in the surge that broke the game open.

In the first three quarters, 21 of Boston's 30 field goals came on layups, tips, dunks or goaltending calls. The Celtics' lead ranged from 14 to 30 in the second half.

"A big difference was Boston's tenacious defense," Petersen said. "Ralph was just forced away from the basket. ... They kept him out of the low post and he was not able to get his hook shot off."

Reid said that when Sampson and Olujuwon were double teamed, "they passed it (the ball) outside and our shots didn't fall."

Houston hit just 42.7 percent of its field-goal attempts and didn't sink more than 48.5 percent in any of the six games.

"Nobody played great (Sunday) but we played well as a team," said Bird, who had 11 rebounds and 12 assists for his second triple-double of the series. "We wanted this game over by the (start of the) fourth quarter and that's what happened."

The Rockets entered the series with hopes of knocking off the heavily favored Celtics. After falling behind 3-1, they hoped to become the first team to overcome that deficit in a championship series. Now, they are looking ahead.

"This is one of those steps getting to the top," Sampson said. "We are on our way to being the best."

For now, that honor clearly belongs to the Celtics.

"What a great year," said club president Red Auerbach, who has been with the Celtics for each of their 16 titles. "It's one of the greatest and probably the greatest team I've ever been associated with. They just produced every time they had to."

Richmond Gets Much Needed Win

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — There was far more relief than elation when Tim Richmond wrapped up a long day at Pocono International Raceway with a much-needed victory.

Richmond, who turned 31 on Saturday, on Sunday survived a 6-hour, 17-minute marathon in winning the Miller High Life 500 NASCAR stock car race.

The event was slowed by nine caution flags and by a 1-hour, 51-minute rain interruption that came right at the halfway mark.

But, in the end, with the final caution flag still waving, it was Richmond taking the checkered flag just ahead of Dale Earnhardt.

"It's just a big, big relief," said Richmond, whose last previous victory was 64 races ago, in April 1984 at North Wilkesboro, N.C.

"We've been trying and trying and we've been so close," said the former Indy 500 rookie of the year with the movie-star looks. "That's a long time when you're as competitive as I am. I kind of feed off these checkered flags."

It was the fifth victory in Richmond's NASCAR career and his second on the 2½-mile Pocono tri-oval.

The winner averaged just 113.279 mph in the endurance event as he picked up first-place money of $46,705.

Earnhardt, who sports a 251-point lead over defending Winston Cup champion Darrell Waltrip in this season's standings, loomed large in Richmond's rearview mirror before the final caution flag came out just four laps from the end of the 200-lap race.

"I don't know whether I could have caught him or not," said Earnhardt, who had cut a seven-second lead down to just over two seconds when the final yellow flag came out. "My brakes didn't look too good and I was being careful with them."

"After we made the last pit stop, I tried to put some pressure on him," Earnhardt added. "But I guess it wasn't enough."

Richmond admitted he saw Earnhardt closing in, but he said, "I felt like we could hold him off. And when that yellow (flag) came out, I knew we had it."

The final caution was brought out by the worst accident of a day filled with spins and crashes.

Buddy Arrington suffered a concussion and spent the night in an Allentown hospital after his car spun and was struck by cars driven by Morgan Shepherd and Harry Gant.

Shepherd came away with multiple bruises, Gant with possible broken ribs and a possible broken sternum and a cut on his chin. Both were treated at the infield care center and released, with Gant expected to visit his own doctor today in North Carolina for further examination.

Earlier accidents took out Waltrip, who wound up last in the 40-car field, and knocked Neil Bonnett and Terry Labonte off the pace. Shepherd and Wallace were also involved in the accident with Labonte, but were able to continue, with Shepherd running fourth before the last accident and Wallace finishing sixth.

Cale Yarborough was third, followed by Ricky Rudd and Bill Elliott. Geoff Bodine, who led several times and was running third late in the race, wound up ninth after pitting when the final yellow flag came out.

Rain began falling in sheets on lap 95. Because the weather for the rest of the afternoon was uncertain, NASCAR officials chose to run five laps under a caution flag in order to reach the halfway point — 100 laps — and make the race official.

The slick-tired cars took 26 minutes to complete those five laps, riving slowly through hub-deep water on the track. Several of the drivers stuck their heads out the side windows of their cars in order to see where they were going. Stock cars do not have windshield wipers or defrosters.

"It was really something," Richmond said. "I was running third (behind Bodine and Earnhardt) and I lost sight of the pace car. I didn't want to speed up and have the pace car wind up in my grill, but I really couldn't see where I was going."

A crowd estimated at about 60,000 was on hand before the rain, but more than half had departed by the time the race restarted under partly sunny skies nearly two hours later.

Richmond, in his first year with car-owner Rick Hendricks, who also fields a car for Bodine, said, "The car was pushing before the rain. Fortunately for us, we got to run again. We made a few changes and the car was excellent the rest of the way."

"We've had some strong runs this year, particularly in the last couple of weeks," he continued. "That's a good sign of a new team coming together. Usually, people progress. If we progress, we should win more often from now on."

The biggest worry for Richmond and crew chief Harry Hyde near the end of the race was the fact that Richmond was getting low on gas.

"Our radios were not working right," Hyde said. "We could hear Tim but he couldn't hear us. We had the gas planned for 36 laps, but he came in a lap early and that meant he had to go one more (37) than we wanted (at the end)."

"He came on the radio (about 12 laps from the end) and said to raise the (pit) sign if I wanted him to conserve fuel. I waved it up and down like crazy and he feathered the engine down and used some slower traffic to draft a little. I think he would still have made it if it had stayed green."

Richmond smiled and added, "I knew we'd make it. It was our day."

Lendl Overpowers Pernfors

PARIS (AP) — Ivan Lendl had been there before. He did not want the scene repeated.

Standing on center court in the French Open men's championship match Sunday, with two sets in hand and the third sitting tantalizingly close, Lendl suddenly was transported back in time.

It was 1984 all over again. Lendl trailed John McEnroe 3-6, 2-6 in that French championship. But Lendl went on to win the last three sets 6-4, 7-5, 7-5 for his first Grand Slam title.

"I thought about it," Lendl said when the 1984 turnaround was brought up. "I thought it had better not happen. It is nice to win like that but not to lose like that."

In this case, deja vu did not come true.

Lendl, the top seed from Czechoslovakia, held on to beat unseeded Mikael Pernfors of Sweden 6-3, 6-2, 6-4 for his second French Open and third Grand Slam crown.

On Saturday, Chris Evert Lloyd successfully defended her women's singles championship, beating top-seeded Martina Navratilova 2-6, 6-3, 6-3. It was Lloyd's seventh French open singles championship.

From 0-2 in the second set to 3-0 in the third, Lendl won nine games in a row and looked a cinch to take the match. Then Pernfors came back.

"I thought I could make it look a little better," said Pernfors, who admitted he wanted to "go sit in the stands" in the midst of Lendl's run. "He kind of lost his momentum there for a little while."

Pernfors charged back. He held for 1-3, broke for 2-3, held for 3-3 and broke again for a 4-3 lead.

"I got a little tired," Lendl said. "It took a lot out of me."

Lendl blew a triple break point in the next game and Pernfors had two chances to make it 5-3. But two errors — a backhand into the net and a forehand long — gave Lendl the break to even the set and all but assure his victory.

The top seed held serve for 5-4, then broke for the ninth time on the sunny, warm afternoon to take the match.

"At 4-4 it was a difficult game," Lendl said. "At 5-4 I put pressure on him. He rushed a couple of shots."

Lendl won all of his points in the game that gave him the lead for good on errors by Pernfors — a forehand crosscourt into the net, two long forehands and a backhand long.

On his second match point, Lendl broke on another long forehand by Pernfors, ending the amazing run of the native of Malmo, Sweden by way of Athens, Ga., where he won two NCAA championships at the University of Georgia. In six previous matches in the tournament, Pernfors had beaten four seeds — No. 3 Boris Becker, No. 5 Stefan Edberg, No. 8 Henri Leconte and No. 11 Martin Jaite.

That kind of tournament enabled Pernfors to call Sunday "the happiest day of my life on or off the court," despite the championship-round loss.

Pernfors against Lendl was not a mismatch. The Swede traded groundstrokes with Lendl and ran down just about every shot the Czechoslovak champion sent his way.

There were long rallies, with Pernfors running the baseline from corner to corner, and some memorable points at the net. One volley from Pernfors came off his shoetops. One by Lendl came with him leaning backwards. A drop shot by Lendl was so good he stood and admired it, only to have Pernfors reach it, lob it to the far corner and turn it into a winner.

"I was a little surprised by his backhand," Lendl said. "He won a lot of points that way. It was hard to read him. It was difficult to pass him."

Celts Savor Win, Season

BOSTON (AP) — Within minutes of winning the 1986 NBA championships, the Boston Celtics started thinking about 1987.

"I want to be back here next year," Larry Bird, the NBA finals most valuable player, said after Boston's 114-97 victory Sunday over the Houston Rockets clinched the Celtics' 16th NBA title. "I'm going to work hard this summer and get ready. But I probably won't touch a ball for two or three weeks."

Red Auerbach, president of the Celtics and coach of their first 10 title teams, said this may have been the best of the championship winners.

"They are one of the greatest, if not the greatest team we've had here," Auerbach said. "They produced every night and responded every time they had to. The chemistry was just great."

No team has repeated as NBA champion since the Celtics did it in 1969, and Bird said the team's health next season could determine its chances.

"We appreciate winning it now because our team is getting older and some guys are prone to injury," Bird said. "The key to repeating is Bill Walton. If he stays healthy, this team will continue to be successful."

In winning their 16th title, twice as many as any other NBA team, the Celtics prepared as perhaps they have for no other game this season.

"We had one of the meanest practices I've ever seen around here and there was no doubt how determined we were," Boston Coach K.C. Jones said of Saturday's workout. "I had to call off practice because these guys went at each other like Muhammad Ali and the gorilla. The intensity level was just incredible."

Jones said the team was irritable in the locker room before the game.

"I was not surprised (by the margin of victory)," Jones said. "I haven't seen guys that aggressive since the Chicago Bears."

Kevin McHale felt the same way. "I never saw the fire in the eyes of our players the way I saw it today," he said after scoring 29 points and grabbing 10 rebounds. "We were mad."

Referring to an easy Rocket victory Thursday night in Houston after Ralph Sampson of the Rockets was ejected for fighting, McHale said, "You can step on our blue suede shoes, but you can't hurt our pride."

McHale and the Celtics had their pride damaged last year when they lost to Los Angeles in six games in the final series.

"I had a lousy feeling last year ...

and it lasted a long time ... but I feel great right now."

Celtics guard Dennis Johnson credited the capacity Boston Garden crowd of 14,890 with spurring the team to victory.

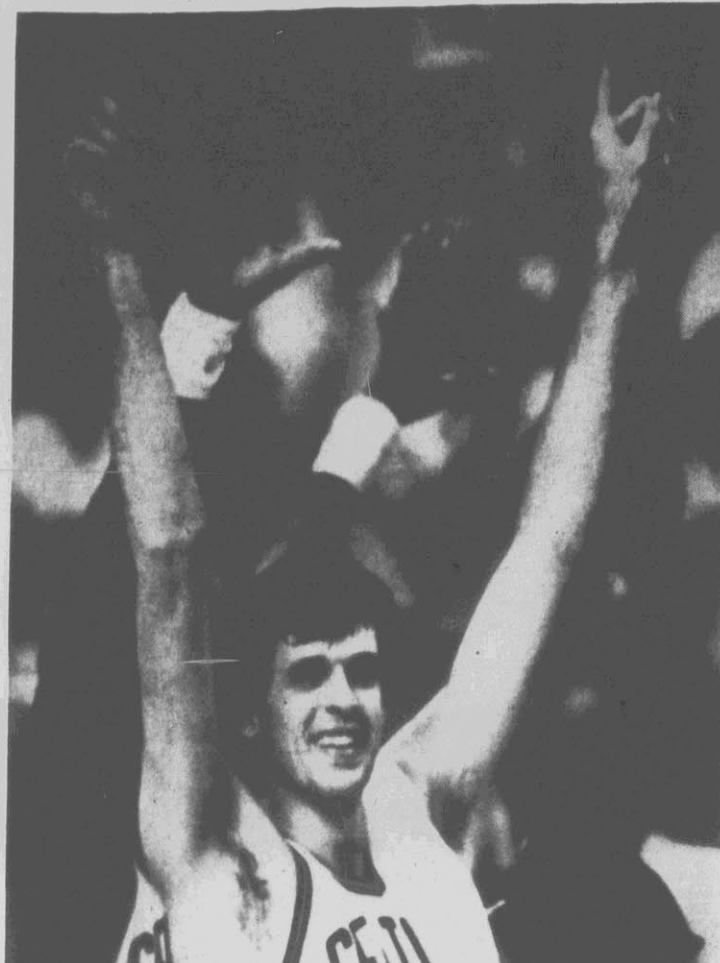

"Every time we go out on this floor, we expect to win for these fans," Johnson said. "I think they had quite a bit to do with what happened out there. They were the noisiest I've heard in 10 years."

Johnson said Thursday's loss played a major part in the Celtics' attitude Sunday.

"We respond to talk, and there was a lot of talk about us the last few days. ... We busted our butts out there," he said.

By closing the season with 41 consecutive victories at home, the Celtics had a reason to be confident at Boston Garden.

"This is our kingdom," Celtics assistant Jimmy Rodgers said.

Sampson Comes Up Short

BOSTON (AP) — The Houston Rockets surprised the NBA by reaching the final series and pushing the champion Boston Celtics to six games, but the concluding games left only dark memories for Ralph Sampson, one of the league's brightest young stars.

Although Boston won its 16th NBA title Sunday with a 114-97 rout over the Rockets, much of the talk since Thursday night's fifth game and after Sunday's deciding game centered on the 7-foot-4 Houston forward, and not because of any great performances.

Sampson became the focus of unwanted attention when he popped his cork during the second period of Game 5 and started swinging at Celtics. He was ejected from the game, but his teammates, spurred on by more than 16,000 near-crazed fans, went on to a rousing victory in the Houston Summit that forced a sixth game in Boston.

The Celtics acknowledged that the crowd affected their play — "We lost our composure," Larry Bird said.

But Bird also issued a challenge to the Boston fans for Sunday's game, saying Sampson might need a hard-hat when he enters the Garden.

During the next two days, Boston fans heard replays of Celtics' announcer Johnny Most's call of the fight, a one-sided account that no doubt added to the frenzy.

Beside the outcome of the game, the questions left to be answered Sunday were:

How would the Boston Garden fans react to Sampson, and how would he react to them?

The answer to both questions didn't take long.

Sampson was resoundingly booed when he first appeared, he was booed when the starting lineup was introduced, he was booed every time touched the ball during the game. Many fans showed up with signs that read: "Sampson is a sissy."

But Sampson didn't have to duck any flying objects from the relatively well-behaved sellout crowd of almost 15,000.

For Sampson's part, he appeared much less aggressive than he did before his home fans in Houston. He scored two points and had four rebounds in the first half when the game was decided as the Celtics rushed to a 55-37 lead, and he finished with eight points and 10 rebounds.

The destruction of his game was clearly visible.

When Bird was asked about Sampson's performance, he said: "The fans had a lot to do with that."

But Sampson and his coach, Bill

Fitch, saw it differently.

"I just played bad," Sampson said. "I was not unnerved by the crowd. They did a great job with security. I never felt threatened. I didn't play well."

"I don't know or care what people think," Sampson continued. "I didn't think about Game Five. This was Game Six. I didn't read the papers. I went out to take care of myself. If I played well, I think we would have won."

Kinston Trounces Snow Hill, 21-9

Scott Barnhill went 5-5 and Kinston American Legion Post — took advantage of six errors to defeat Snow Hill American Legion Post 93 21-9 Saturday night.

Snow Hill led 8-6 heading after three innings but was outscored 12-0 in the next two innings.

In the bottom of the fourth, Kinston's Curtis Patterson reached on a single and stole second. Whit Whitley was walked. Snow Hill then got two batters out. Jerry Waters was then walked to load the bases. Neil Outlaw was walked to bring home Patterson. Snow Hill changed pitchers and Jay Bryan followed with a walk to score Whitley. Barnhill knocked a single to drive in Waters and Outlaw and give Kinston a 10-8.

Snow Hill failed to score in the top of the fifth and Snow Hill tallied eight runs to put the game away. Snow Hill pitchers walked five runners and hit one batter in the inning.

Ken Tyndall started things off when he reached on an error. Patterson walked. Tyndall and Patterson pulled a double steal. Tyndall came home on a wild pitch. Whitley walked. Felton Mason then walked. Chad Howard singled to drive in Whitley and Patterson.

Mason then scored on a wild pitch. Howard stole second, and went to third on a wild pitch that Mason scored on and later came home on a passed ball. Jerry Waters followed with a single. Outlaw was hit by a pitch. Scott Barnhill then rapped a single to bring home Waters. Tyndall reached on an error by the third baseman to score Outlaw. Barnhill went to third on that error and came home on a passed ball. Snow Hill committed three errors, had two wild pitches and two passed balls during the inning. The inning ended with Kinston up 18-8.

Snow Hill is now 1-4 and plays at Rocky Mount on Thursday.

The Way Greenville Was ## Part II: Turn of the Century Village

This is the second of a 10-part series by Greenville writer Patricia M. Moore on the city's history. In this segment, lamplighter Henry Duff was real but his actions and his thoughts are depicted as they might have been.

By PATRICIA M. MOORE

The time was dusk. The date was Dec. 3, 1900. Henry Duff paused to light the oil lamp on the post in front of the Pitt County Courthouse at Third and Evans streets.

Then he crossed West Third Street, passing the new Daily Reflector building on the corner, where the Express Co., telegraph company, an insurance agent, several lawyers and the Masonic order also had offices.

He paused to look in the window of a fancy grocery, then walked on, passing the Queen's Co., another grocery (this one a "plain" grocery), a combination grocery and bakery, a hardware store and other small businesses including saloons on the northwest and southwest corners of Fourth and Evans streets.

The next block of Evans, between Fourth and Fifth streets, was a continuation of these same kinds of mostly wooden, narrow store buildings as was the opposite two-block side of Evans.

From time to time along his nightly rounds, Duff, lamplighter and town janitor, shook the dirt off his shoes on the brick walk in front of the stores that had one. Or he escaped the rain and wind by standing under an occasional wooden awning, called a "shed," that extended from a store front over the walkway that bordered the dirt street.

Occasionally, he sat down to rest or think on a wooden bench that a kindly merchant had placed under a shed.

By the time he finished his rounds, Duff had made a circle from the county jail behind the courthouse and back. He had lit lamps outside the Quinn House, a hotel located at Evans and Second streets. Behind that was Mayor J.G. Moye's office and the brick market house that had stalls for merchants to display their wares.

At mid block on one side of Cotanche between Second and Third streets was the John Flanagan Carriage Works; on the other side was the town's best known hotel, the Macon House. Another hotel was at the corner of Second and Reade streets.

In addition, there were other types of businesses in town. Duff counted several stables, an undertaker, tobacco warehouses, a wood working shop, machine works, marble yard, printery, barber, Hop Lee's Chinese Laundry and, of course, millinery shops. The Perkins Opera House, near the corner of Fourth and Washington, had a livery on the first floor and an auditorium for dances and traveling shows on the second floor.

Carolina and Virginia Telephone Co. was on the opposite corner.

Duff recalled other points of interest along his route, like the three town cisterns — one at Evans and Fourth streets, one at Sutton Lane (now Seventh Street) near Evans and a third one near the corner of 10th and Clark. In addition, there were two wells at B.E. Parham's Stemery on Pitt Street. These were sources of the town's water supply except for individual cisterns and wells.

He passed the fire station on Fourth Street between Evans and Cotanche where the town's firefighting equipment was kept — one La France steam fire engine, 1,050 feet of 2.5-inch cotton hose (in good condition) on a hand reel, one H and L truck and one combination (chemical and water hand engine).

Now he reached the foot bridge that took him home, the one that went over Sutton Lane near Professor W.H. Ragsdale's Male Academy on Evans Street.

He was thankful he didn't have to cross the footbridge over the deserted, dark East Fourth Street ravine.

Nor did he have to go into Buzzard's Roost, a section of town near the intersection of Fifth and Reade streets. He sometimes hunted in Buzzard's Roost, always careful because the underbrush was so thick he couldn't see 12 feet ahead. There were all kinds of bones in Buzzard's Roost, previously a slaughter yard, and there was quicksand where the creek passed through.

Some people claimed it had been an Indian graveyard, but Duff doubted that.

Buzzard's Roost was where the "pest house" was located, the place where people with no place else to go might find a place to sleep or something to eat.

The few times Duff had traveled to little Washington, 25 miles away, he had followed Third Street out of town, crossing the ditch at Green Mill Run on horseback. There wasn't a bridge there, so when rain caused the water to rise, a person got muddy or wet, or both. But that was the only way out of town on the east side.

River Road, an extension of Fifth Street, was the western exit from town. The route south was along Dickinson Avenue, once called Plank Road because it was built by the state in the 1850s as part of the Plank Road system between Greenville and Wilson.

To the north was the wooden bridge built over the Tar River in the 1820s. At night, even as far away as Ninth Street, he could hear the clop-clop of horses' hooves on the bridge.

Evans Street, popularly known as "Main Street," ran clear through town from the river and then out toward Winterville, following the same route that Indians and early settlers had used to travel from the Tar River to the coast.

But the town was beginning to change. Twenty years earlier, only 912 people lived in Greenville. Now there were 2,565 people.

The railroad depot had been finished for 10 years, and people were riding the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad more than they rode in boats, although you could still go to Washington by gas boat. Some travelers even came to Greenville by boat, then boarded a train to complete their journeys.

Like a thousand other people, Duff had gone to see the town's first train, the one that stopped on the northern side of the Tar River at Riverton Station in August 1889, and he cheered the train's arrival just like everybody else.

Change was in the air. In August, Greenville — like the rest of the state — approved a constitutional amendment requiring registered voters (male only) to be able to read and write any part of the state Constitution as well as pay the poll tax. The amendment had a grandfather clause whereby a person or his lineal descendant who could vote in 1867 could vote now, even if he couldn't read and write, providing he registered before Dec. 1, 1908.

In reality, the amendment disfranchised blacks and symbolized the end of Reconstruction.

There were other changes, mostly local. In September, the Masons had opened Masonic Hall School for girls.

And Greenville had its first fancy suburb, Skinnerville, started by Harry Skinner and L.C. Latham. That was between Pitt and Vance streets and Third and Fifth Streets on the western part of town.

A new town regulation required bicyclists to have lights at night and forbid them to ride on the sidewalks.

Trains couldn't go over 10 mph through town, and they couldn't block street crossings for more than 10 minutes.

So far, all this was fine with Henry Duff. But first thing you knew, there would be more laws and a man wouldn't be able to gallop a stallion on the main street or tie a mare to a shade tree bordering a city street.

And if Greenville kept growing, he'd need help with the lights. Without them, the town would be as dark as the countryside. Duff shook his head, picturing dirt streets with no lights.

He tried to imagine what electric lights would look like, but he'd never seen an electric light. He had heard that Editor Dave Whichard of The Daily Reflector said Greenville wouldn't be much of a town until it got modern advantages that other towns of any importance had. The advantages the editor named were water and sewer services and a graded school in addition to electric lights. The paper said all that might cost as much as $50,000.

He shook his head, able to imagine dark streets more easily than he could picture electric lights and a school that had to be financed by $10,000 in public money. Why, it already cost the town almost $600 to operate and maintain the oil lamps. He only made $17 a month in summer, $20 a month in winter. These kind of changes were more than he could comprehend.

But all this thinking helped pass the time for him, especially on a cold, winter night when there were few townspeople out for him to stop and talk to. Thankfully, he now was on his own front porch.

By the time night policeman W.H. McGowan rang the curfew bell across from the courthouse square to signal the saloons to close at 11 p.m., Duff was in bed, wrapped in a homemade quilt. He would be up at dawn, to put out the oil lamps.

EARLY 1900s MARKERS — A stroll through Cherry Hill Cemetery is like a step into the past. Sometimes plain, sometimes elaborate, markers at the Pitt Street burial ground date back to the Spanish-American and Civil wars. Stones can also be found designating resting places of such former notables as N.C. Gov. Thomas J. Jarvis who served the people of the state from 1879 to 1885. (Reflector Photo by Cliff Hollis)

LOVE ME TENDER.

You know how the song goes. Love me tender, love me sweet, you just can't pass me up? Truer words have never been oinked. And all because Darryl's has given my choicest friends the leading role in their new Back Rib Special. For $6.95 you get succulent honey basted pork ribs topped with Darryl's own special barbecue sauce. And they share the plate with fries, cole slaw and two pieces of parmesan toast. It's a bargain any pig would be proud to be a part of.

Except me of course. My goal is to become a football for the Chicago Bears. To each his own. Right?

Thinking Big A Lifelong Habit Of Tiny Billy Barty

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Billy Barty has been fighting discrimination for most of his 61 years, and for him it has been a winning battle.

Barty is 3 feet 9 inches tall, and his acting career, which started in 1928, is at its peak. But he remains devoted to his cause, and on non-working days he can be found at the North Hollywood office of the Billy Barty Foundation for Little People.

"We've got some big things coming up: a chili cookoff, a celebrity auction and our annual Billy Barty golf tournament in Palm Springs Sept. 12-14," he reported from behind his three-foot desk. The events benefit the foundation's work in helping little people adjust to their lives and work, promoting public awareness of their problems and helping in medical and legal problems.

"Our goal is an international headquarters and a retirement home," Barty said enthusiastically.

The ebullient Barty has never been busier. He has a major role in Paramount Pictures' current fantasy, "Legend," starring Tom Cruise. He recently returned from Israel, where he appeared with Amy Irving in "Rumplestiltskin," and he may return there for another fairy tale film. Before that he was on stage in "Romance Language" at Los Angeles' Mark Taper Forum.

"I just did a couple of other pictures," he said in an interview. "In 'Body Slam,' which Hal Needham directed, I played a wrestling promoter and announcer, a cute little cameo. In 'Tough Guys,' I was one of the crooks that Kirk Douglas and Burt Lancaster tried to recruit to pull off a job. What a pleasure to work with a couple of pros like Kirk and Burt. None of the stuff you get from new actors today: 'What should I do?' 'How do I read this?' Those two guys know what they're doing."

Billy Barty has been a pro since the age of 3. Born in Millsboro, Pa., to full-grown parents, he toured in vaudeville with his two sisters, also full-grown, made his film debut in a two-reel comedy, "Wedded Blisters." He was busy in films during the 1930s, appearing in such musicals as "Goldiggers of 1933" and "Footlight Parade," as well as

"Alice in Wonderland" and "Midsummer Night's Dream." His most memorable scene came in "Nothing Sacred," when he ran out and bit Fredric March on the leg.

"I also made 75 'Mickey McGuire' comedies," he said. "The star changed his name from Joe Yule Jr. to Mickey McGuire to Mickey Rooney. Mickey and Donald O'Connor and I have always kept in touch. We've known each other more than 50 years."

Billy tried to break out of show business in the 1940s when he studied to become a sports announcer and journalist at Los Angeles City College. However, he was drawn into television, appearing on local shows and working as the host of his own children's program. From 1952-60 he toured as one of Spike Jones' zanies, then he returned to movies.

"My big breakthrough came with 'Day of the Locust,'" Barty said. "That changed the perspective producers had of me. I was thought of as an actor, not just a little person being cute with Spike Jones." W.C. Fields and Me' followed. I was the last one cast in the picture, and Universal wanted to see footage from 'Day of the Locust.' The producer, Jerry Hellman, had his editor put together all my best scenes. I was really grateful for that."

Barty is married to a small person, Shirley, and they have a daughter their size, Laurie, 23, as well as a normal-size son, Braden, 15.

His own talent has opened doors for Billy Barty, however, the discrimination against little people is still there.

"People do not understand the medical, psychological, vocational and social problems that can derive from being small," said Barty. "Because of that, little people are not considered a part of society but as something strange and even laughable.

"I tell others my size that we can prove ourselves in almost every profession. There is a solution to every problem...."

"We can drive by using special extensions. We can do the same thing that a six-foot person does to reach 10 feet — only we get bigger ladders."

PBS To Air Documentary On The Blues

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — There's only one kind of music that would find inspiration in a rat running through the kitchen, and roaches crawling up the wall.

The blues.
"I got roaches in my kitchen. Mouses like a drove of coons. Seems like these rats and roaches. Gonna drive me outta my room." So sings Silas Hogan, one of the grand old bluesmen of Baton Rouge, La., featured on "Rainin' In My Heart," a one-hour documentary tonight on public television.

This program may be a little puzzling for those who knock public television for being an elitist outfit which has lost touch with that mythic figure, the common man.

The music, and the program, are as deeply rooted in reality as you can get, in the poverty, the back-breaking labor and the romantic tangles of people at the bottom of the heap.

This being PBS, the bluesmen have to share the podium with folklorists and ethnomusicologists who explain how dreadfully significant it all is. Most of the time, however, is devoted to music.

Hogan sings his songs under a spreading tree with his buddy, Arthur "Guitar" Kelly. The guitars are electric, but their music is in the slow, jerky style of the acoustic players.

Hogan and Kelly also are seen playing at Tabby's Blues Box, a Baton Rouge haunt where the old sound is honored but not copied. The proprietor, Tabby Thomas, teams with his sons to play a hard-driving blues influenced by the Chicago bands.

Thomas has recorded a few records which went nowhere, and now his efforts are devoted to the Blues Box and to the Louisiana Blues Festival every year.

"I didn't make it," he says. "I'm not thinking about making it. I want to help somebody else."

Baton Rouge is home to a fair cross-section of the blues sound. Henry Gray, who played in Chicago for 15 years before coming home, is the only man on the program who plays alone, wailing his songs over the banging beat of his piano.

Taping for the documentary was done just in time to catch Moses "Whisperin'" Smith, the harmonica player and singer who died in 1984 at the age of 52.

The cameras also go north to Chicago to watch Buddy Guy, a Baton Rouge native who has won a national reputation. He performs at the Checkerboard Lounge, a shabby bar which serves as a shrine to the poverty and misery which spawned the music, the poverty which still rots the fabric of the neighborhood where he plays.

Rivers' Book In Demand

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Fans of Joan Rivers stood in line for more than two hours to have copies of her autobiography "Enter Talking" signed by the barbed-witted star.

The book, No. 4 on The New York Times best-seller list, is dedicated to NBC Tonight Show host Johnny Carson who, she wrote, "made it all happen."

Published reports say the two haven't been on speaking terms since May 6, when she announced she'll be hostess of a live talk show, in competition with Carson, on the Fox Broadcasting Network.

She got a bit of stage fright before the Saturday book-signing session, held at the Doubleday Book Shop, wailing to a reporter, "Nobody will be there."

Convicted Killer Executed In Texas

By MICHAEL L. GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Rudy Ramos Esquivel, telling his friends to "be cool" as they read him Bible passages, was executed by injection early today for shooting to death a narcotics officer eight years ago.

The execution was the first of an inmate who had raised the issue of the exclusion of jurors because of their race since the U.S. Supreme Court declared such exclusions as unconstitutional.

"Give my love to everybody," he told four friends who witnessed the execution, the 14th in Texas since the state resumed carrying out death sentences in 1982. "Thank you for being my friends."

"We love you," Ester Gonzales, one of the witnesses, said.

"I love you," he replied, as another witness, Barbara Longoria, read from a Bible.

"I have fought the good fight," Mrs. Longoria read from the Book of Timothy, citing passages she had highlighted in her Bible with red and yellow markers.

She collapsed into the arms of her husband, Pilo, who told her, "It's OK. He's with the Lord."

Esquivel took six deep breaths. His eyes closed and there was no further movement. He died at 12:21 a.m.

"I don't think I've ever seen an individual as calm and peaceful and cheerful when he was about to meet his Maker," said Attorney General Jim Mattox.

Esquivel, a Hispanic, was the first non-white executed since the Supreme Court ruled April 30 that jurors could not be excluded solely on the basis of race. Esquivel's attorney raised that as an issue, and he received a stay on Friday by a federal judge in Houston. But a panel of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Saturday that the high court's ruling could not be used in appeals begun before April 30.

On Sunday, the U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way for the execution, voting 7-2 to deny his request for a stay.

Mattox said there was no evidence to show any jurors in Esquivel's case were excluded because of race.

"Therefore, it did not apply," Mattox said.

Esquivel, 50, whose criminal record dated to 1953 when he received a 99-year term for participating in a gang rape, had three earlier death dates postponed.

He was on parole from the rape conviction on June 8, 1978, when he shot and killed Timothy Hearn, 28, a Houston police narcotics officer. He also had been paroled from California after serving time for assaulting a police officer and forgery.

"I think it's a travesty of justice to prolong an execution this long," said Jim Moseley, who helped prosecute Esquivel. "It has been a long time."

Robert Hearn, the slain officer's father, said Esquivel's execution was justice being done.

"I think it's fitting and proper," he said Sunday.

The execution was the fourth this year in Texas, which has 232 death-row inmates, and the nation's eighth in 1986.

Esquivel was moved at mid-afternoon Sunday from his death row cell at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis I Unit to the Walls Unit, 15 miles away. He was calm throughout the day.

His final meal was fried breast of chicken, corn on the cob, french fries, salad, jalapeno peppers and pecan pie.

Esquivel, in interview last week, insisted he was framed by police for the shooting.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠K982 ♥9 ♦AQ85 ♣8762

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1♥	2♦	?

What action do you take?

A.—The adventurous among you who play negative doubles would probably wheel out your new weapon. However, we prefer to try to penalize the opponents. So, if we were using the negative double we would pass and hope that partner would reopen with a double. If we were not employing that convention, we would double for penalties—we have excellent prospects of developing four or five tricks in our own hand.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AQ65 ♥85 ♦AJ63 ♣952

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1♦	Pass	1♣	Pass
2♥	Pass	3♦	Pass
3♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Thus far, you have done little to tell partner how strong you are and what excellent support you have for his first-bid suit. Partner has bid his hand to show a 3-4-5-1 distribution, so we would jump to six diamonds. We would be very surprised if it depended on more than a finesse.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠KJ72 ♥Q9842 ♦A ♣A107

The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1♥	Pass	Pass	1♣
Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You can make a good argument for a leap to four spades, but partner can have a pretty weak hand for his balancing bid in this position. You know he is short in hearts yet he did not have the strength for a takeout double. Under the circumstances, we would start with a cue-bid of two hearts and then raise spades at our next turn.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AK98 ♥J73 ♦AJ5 ♣J105

The first three players all pass. What is your opening bid?

A.—Since partner could not open the bidding, we would give up all thoughts of game and concentrate on finding the best partial. Therefore, even if we were playing five-card majors we would open this hand with one spade, intending to pass any response by partner.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AK ♥AJ65 ♦83 ♣KQJ65

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	1♥	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—You must show your great strength, and "clever" bidders might choose a false jump shift to two spades. However, to jump in a non-suit that is higher-ranking than the suit in which you want to play is fraught with danger. Our choice would be a leap to four hearts.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable. As South you hold:

♠7 ♥A1084 ♦KJ73 ♣K983

The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1♣	Dble	2♣	?

What do you bid now?

A.—We feel your hand is too strong for a jump to four hearts. Our choice would be a cue-bid of three spades, which not only tells
