Hurricane Bonnie Rakes Texas Coast

By DONNA GEHRKE
Associated Press Writer
PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Bonnie, the season's first hurricane, battered the Gulf Coast today with rain and winds up to 85 mph, killing one person, knocking out power and flooding low-lying areas before losing its punch over land.

along the Gulf Coast boarded up their homes and fled inland. One man was killed when his pickup truck was caught in a squall and went out of control on a roadway near Port Arthur, and four people were injured today when high winds flipped a pickup truck on a highway outside Beaumont, authorities said. Bonnie also spawned at least one tornado after hitting land about 4:45 a.m. CDT south of Port Arthur and east of High Island, the National Weather Service said. It was the first June hurricane to strike Texas since 1957. The storm was downgraded when maximum sustained winds dropped to 45 mph over land. The weather service discontinued all hurricane warnings as of 9 a.m. CDT, but warned that gale-force winds continued over southwestern Louisiana and southeastern Texas.

"The whole city is out of power," Port Arthur Police Sgt. Robert Williamson said this morning. But he said he was not aware of any serious damage caused by the hurricane. Laura Wagner, a dispatcher for the Jefferson County sheriff's department in nearby Beaumont, said she also had not received any reports of damage, though many roads were covered with water. "It's raining right now and the winds are blowing. But I've seen it worse during regular thunderstorms," Ms. Wagner said. In western Louisiana, Cameron Parish Civil Defense Director Haynes Picou Jr. said, "We've got strong winds and reports of a couple hundred thousand dollars in damages." No injuries were reported, he said, but winds up to 80 mph buffeted the little coastal towns near the state line, tearing limbs off trees and ripping holes in roofs. At 9 a.m. CDT, the National Weather Service said Bonnie's eye was located well inland, near latitude 30.2 north, and longitude 94.3 west, or about 15 miles northwest of Beaumont. It was moving northward near 10 mph, and was expected to continue at that speed and course today.

Pitt Board Told Pay Plan To Cost Over $1 Million

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Commissioners failed to come to terms with a proposed new pay plan for county workers Wednesday after being told the entire package would cost more than $1 million more than was budgeted this year for salaries. But the board asked for more cost figures and set a meeting for 2 p.m. Friday to consider partial implementation of the new plan. Reviewing results of a personnel management study of the county, Hal Scott of David M. Griffith and Associates told commissioners last week that Pitt's starting salaries average 9.27 percent lower than those of labor market competitors. "It's not as bad at the other end of the scale, but the starting salaries are low," he said. Scott also suggested that most workers leaving the county workforce voluntarily within the past year left for higher paying jobs. To reduce turnover of employees and to bring salaries in line with labor market competition, Scott recommended the reclassification of some jobs as well as a new pay plan (taking into consideration a proposed 5 percent pay increase for state employees in the coming fiscal year) that would: advance employees from step one to step two after completing six months of service; advance employees to step three "Job Rate" after one year at step two and provide for a limited number of merit increases for employees on step three or higher of a salary grade for one or more years. Scott said that under the proposed pay plan "employees set their own destiny. Pay increases above step three are strictly on merit (and) should be for documented performance at 'above average' level." Scott also recommended a method of assigning present employees to the proposed new pay schedule, based on length of service, that would place seasoned workers on a higher step than newer employees doing the same job. Wednesday, commissioners were told that the cost of reclassifying the positions recommended by Scott would be $55,236 under the county's present pay plan, while the cost of the classification changes, plus a 5 percent pay increase under the present system, would be $317,103 in the coming fiscal year. Under the proposed new pay plan, the cost of the classification changes, a minimum 5 percent pay hike and assigning present employees on the new pay scale according to length of service as recommended, would cost $1.02 million, the board was told. In addition to the costs involved in giving general county employees a pay increase, County Manager Reginald Gray told the board that a 6.5 percent pay increase for county-paid teachers and a 5 percent increase for other county-paid school employees would cost $380,170. With about 460 employees, Pitt County's payroll this year will total about $7.58 million, while the payroll for county-paid teachers and other school employees this year will amount to about $3.6 million. "We decided we would get them (employees) up to a competitive position," Commissioner Charles Gaskins said after hearing the cost figures. But he

Executions Ruled Out For Insane Defendants

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Constitution's ban on "cruel and unusual punishment" bars states from executing any insane person, the Supreme Court ruled by a 5-4 vote today. The court, by a separate 7-2 vote, ruled that Florida must hold new hearings into the mental competency of convicted murderer Alvin Ford, whose lawyers say he became insane while a death row inmate. All 38 states with death penalty laws, including Florida, have policies against executing mentally incompetent people even if they were competent when they committed their crimes. But until today, the nation's highest court never had said that such a policy is constitutionally required. In splintered voting, the court today reached these conclusions: — Ford, if he is insane, cannot be executed for the 1974 murder of Fort Lauderdale policeman Walter Ilyankoff. — If he is insane, he could be executed once he is cured. — The procedure Florida used in determining that Ford is sane violated his due-process rights. Seven justices said Florida must provide Ford with a hearing where his lawyers and the state's lawyers may present evidence as to his mental competence. "For centuries no jurisdiction has countenanced the execution of the insane, yet this court has never decided whether the Constitution forbids the practice," Justice Thurgood Marshall wrote. "Today

Soybeans, Corn May Survive

Damaged Crops Will Cost More To Harvest

By HAROLD JOYNER
Reflector Staff Writer

Tobacco and corn crops damaged — but not destroyed — by Tuesday's hail and wind storm may still be harvested but probably at a greater expense than farmers had planned, Agricultural Extension Agent Sam Uzzell said today. "For those farmers who had some hail damage to tobacco, and now have to harvest their crop, it may be quite difficult to do now," Uzzell said. He said Pitt County farmers experiencing total crop loss and having full hail insurance coverage may come out ahead because of the reduction in harvest costs. Two insurance spokesmen said today that, because of the way the insurance policy is written, it would be about five days before any dollar figures could be made on the storm that swept through part of southern Pitt County. "Stems on tobacco plants may be bruised, and it may be difficult to find the proper sucker to release and grow out in a plant," Uzzell said. Soybean plants will probably recuperate from the hailstorm, Uzzell said, because of their late harvest. "There's ample time for them to grow out," he said. Corn may also be harvested without any major problems, though it may be difficult for the combine to pick up wind-blown stalks. "Corn can recover from hail damage," Uzzell said. "But if corn crops were wind-damaged, it's going to be difficult to harvest." Drought conditions still remain for some area crops, he said, even though scattered showers have saved others from drought. "Ground moisture is sufficient for only a few days. But any longer periods without rain may cause problems," he said. Although they escaped this week's storm damage, farms north of the Tar River are still experiencing problems with low ground moisture, Uzzell said. "If we don't get a thunderstorm every few days, we'll be back with extremely dry crop conditions, and yields will be lower," he said.

Impeach

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Judiciary Committee voted unanimously today to impeach Harry E. Claiborne, the chief U.S. district judge in Nevada, who is serving a prison term for cheating on his income tax. The panel voted to impeach for the first time since it approved impeachment articles against then President Richard M. Nixon in 1974. The action sent the impeachment proceeding to the full House. Claiborne, 68, is serving a two-year sentence at the minimum security prison camp in Montgomery, Ala. He will continue to collect his $78,700 pay unless Congress removes him from his lifetime job.

Bid Accepted On Rose Project

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A low bid of $106,000 for field grading and drainage of the athletic field site adjacent to Greenville Middle School was approved by members of the Greenville Board of Education this morning. The facility is to be primarily for use by students at Rose High School, but will also serve athletic needs of other schools. The Greenville Paving and Construction Co. made the lowest of eight bids received for the work. The bid for the contract work is a unit price contract, which means that the final amount will be determined by measuring the completed quantities of work at the conclusion of installations. The accepted bid covers $94,600 for estimated construction cost, $8,040 for engineering services, and $3,360 as a contingency item. The other bids received for the grading and drainage project ranged from $108,000 to a high of $157,271. The 17.5-acre site was purchased with Greenville city school funds at a cost of $350,000. The property is adjacent to the Greenville Middle School, the Boys Club of Pitt County and the Sycamore Hill Church property on Arlington Boulevard. The site has 585 feet on the west that fronts Hooker Road. School Superintendent Eddie West said contract papers were due to be signed today, and that work on the site will begin at an early date. When completed, the complex will include a football field, a track, a soccer field, and baseball and softball facilities. A campaign within a short time will get under way to raise money for the facilities so that tax dollars will not have to be spent for that purpose. A groundbreaking ceremony has been scheduled for 12:15 p.m. Friday.

Technology Age Called Threat To Developing Relationships

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — In an era of increasing dehumanization it's important for people to learn to interact with others, says a United States International University professor of psychology.

"As technology advances, the emphasis is on being able to do things independently," says Dr. Michael Yapko, who is also clinical psychologist and director of the Milton Erickson Institute, a private facility in San Diego that treats psychological disorders.

"The average American watches a lot of television, for example. When so much time is invested in passive forms of entertainment which are basically asocial, social skills are bound to diminish."

Psychologists refer to the deterioration of social skills as the trend toward dehumanization, says Yapko, who describes the process:

"There is less and less opportunity for people to talk, interact and learn about the range of feelings, needs and motivations. When people are getting their money from a machine at the bank and sliding it into a slot at the gas station, they begin to feel lost in the shuffle."

"Little by little, a sense of alienation sets in," he explains. "Eventually, people become grossly unprepared in the skills needed to build healthy relationships."

"Even kids, instead of spending the summer outdoors playing baseball, getting poison oak and having fun, are being sent to computer camps. We shouldn't be surprised when those same kids have difficulty relating to other human beings whose buttons can't be pushed quite so easily as the buttons on a computer."

Although for the second year in a row the divorce rate has decreased, Yapko contends that studies indicate relationships are not working out for the better, but that people are opting in favor of financial considerations. Divorce is just too costly. This is consistent with another aspect of dehumanization, an emphasis on materialistic values, he adds.

"There have been a lot of jokes made about the number of marriages that go on the rocks because people would rather sit in front of a computer terminal than spend time with their spouse, but it is no joke," the psychologist says. "People are having substitute relationships with their cars, computers, VCRs and bank accounts."

The Yuppie movement represents the trend toward materialism, Yapko says.

"If you're a high achiever, like a president of the company, committed to your own success and prosperity, something has to be sacrificed. In the broader cultural perspective, relationships are taking a back seat."

Yapko notes that only 19 percent of all family units in the United States represent the traditional nuclear family.

"What are we teaching children? We are teaching that marriages aren't forever and that commitments don't have to be honored. If a family problem isn't immediately worked out, we start another family. If we don't like the terms of a contract, we negotiate another contract."

"When people sense their own inability to make a commitment and at the same time are afraid of being alone, the emotional adjustment is to say they enjoy being alone. Soon they will begin to believe it. It is the easiest way to sidestep the fear of loneliness."

Classified advertising dating, Yapko says, is one example of how people are improvising new strategies to meet people. "Advertising in the newspaper has become a legitimate way to meet people. Five years ago this would have been considered extreme," he says.

For those who want to overcome loneliness and establish meaningful relationships, Yapko has these recommendations:

— Know and be honest with yourself in regard to what you want and expect out of a relationship. People can avoid a lot of hurt and disappointment by communicating their expectations to the other party. Ask yourself: is this a casual friendship or a long-term commitment? Define the ground rules — they can always be changed.

— The subtle art of self disclosure is a key social skill in building relationships. When you feel comfortable with a person you would like to know, you have to open up, and that means taking a calculated risk. People are not as predictable as machines. There is an unavoidable element of risk and vulnerability involved in human relationships.

— Be tolerant of people and personalities that at first appear to be different from yourself. Don't shut out people because their background or ideas are not exactly the same as yours. After moving past the surface dissimilarities, you may find rich and fertile areas that can be shared.

— Get out and get involved. Explore the opportunities to share your interests with others. Adult education and college extension programs are readily available. Clubs and community support groups that cater to a wide variety of people and interests are always looking for new members.

— Stay active. Don't fall into the trap of depending on technological contrivances as a substitute for human contact. Smell the flowers, listen to the birds, breathe deep — and feel alive.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

Man Wants To Be A Father Without A Wife

DEAR ABBY: I am the father of a son, age 32, who has found a novel way to become a father without any of the headaches of being a husband. "Doug" bought himself a disposable mother!

He put up a notice at a local college for a "surrogate mother" to bear his child for $10,000. He interviewed three women, selected his "mate," and had his lawyer draw up a contract. The girl agreed to carry the baby, deliver it, and then hand it over to him with no claim on it whatsoever. I was surprised to learn there were so many desperate college girls who would do this sort of thing for a price.

Doug's mother and I know him well, and we both agree that he would make a rotten father. (He's as selfish as they come.) I'd like to have a grandchild, but I think every child deserves a mother. Besides, this sounds like a crazy idea — like "buying" a woman during slavery days. Women are more than just breeding machines. I think this world is going nuts and I am glad I lived in saner times. — HOLDING MY NOSE

DEAR HOLDING: Although Doug's motives may be pure, the realities of single parenthood could be a bigger headache than the marriage he seeks to avoid. If he had asked me (which he didn't), I would have advised him to borrow a baby for a week or two and find out if fatherhood is for him.

DEAR ABBY: Last year when several brothers and sisters were visiting our parents, I made a slip of the tongue and called my brother's third wife by his second wife's name. (She is well hated by the family.) I apologized immediately, but apparently my apology was not accepted.

My brother was not present to hear this, but he was told about it, and took it as evidence that I had probably been visiting with his second wife, which is not true. I haven't seen her since the divorce and have no desire to.

Since this slip of the tongue occurred, my brother and his wife have been very cool to me. I apologized once for what was a slip of the Joanne Moore of Greenville was the bride's attendant and Jim Pressly of Greenville, son of the bride, was best man.

A reception followed the ceremony and was held at Doctors Park Clubhouse, given by co-workers of the bride.

She is associated with Mid-Atlantic Mortgage Corp. and the he is with Toyota East, both in Greenville.

The couple will live in Greenville.

tongue, but I need to know how I can get them to believe me. — NO NAME OR TOWN

DEAR NO NAME: Please don't waste any more time and energy fretting about what could be in the minds of other people. If on your next meeting they are still "cool," ask them if something is bothering them. The burden of proof is on the accuser.

DEAR ABBY: Re "Forgotten Parents" who loaned their son $10,000 and never heard from him again: I myself had to borrow a similar amount from a family member and I've been unable to repay any of it. It's been over five years and I, too, have broken off almost all contact with the person who lent it to me. Why? I feel so guilty about not being able to repay any of it that I can't look him in the eye — so I avoid him.

Conversely, years ago, I loaned yet another family member a large sum of money. He was never in a position to repay me, and the same thing happened. (He avoided me.) However, I forgave him the debt entirely and told him that he didn't owe me a cent. After that, our relationship was fully restored and now we are close friends.

Can people put a monetary value on the friendship of family members? Sign me... THE VICTIM OF THE PROBLEM I SOLVED

DEAR VICTIM: Should they? No. Can they? Many do.

CONFIDENTIAL TO G.K. IN SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS: Finish college. You will be better equipped to keep the wolf from the door if you have a sheepskin.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are about to buy our first home together. He has boxes of pictures and letters from all his past lovers. I don't want them in our home, but he insists that they are a part of his life and he will not let them go.

I have asked him to store them in the home of one of his relatives so I will not have to run into them anymore.

Am I being childish? I love him very much, but this hurts. — HIS WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Childish? No. Surely there is somewhere to store these old souvenirs where you won't be "running into them." Basement? Attic? Let him find a place. And if he can't, I'm sure you can. Out of sight — out of mind.

'Networking' Aided Job Find

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Being resourceful and "networking" is how a Greenville resident got her position as a trip coordinator for President Reagan.

"A lot of Washington is networking," said Kimberly O'Brien, a member of the staff that makes travel arrangements for Reagan.

A Rose High School alumna, Ms. O'Brien said she moved to Washington in August 1984 after graduating from Salem College, and she found a job at the Agency for International Development in September where she met many people through her supervisor, Cathie Bennett.

"Just working with her, I knew a lot of people," she said. "She's young but she's done a lot in the few short years she's been there."

When Ms. Bennett told Ms. O'Brien about the job on the president's staff, Ms. O'Brien sent a resume and was hired in March of this year.

"I like knowing that I play a very important part in the president's trips," Ms. O'Brien said. Although the work day can be long, "you get to do so much that it makes up for the two or three times you stay past 7 or 8 (p.m.)," she said.

Ms. O'Brien has traveled to New York, Las Vegas and Greensboro to organize trips for Reagan. She also went to Paris Island, S.C., to organize events for the president at the U.S. Marine Corps boot camp, she said. "That was really fun to see the Marines at work," she said.

There is nothing she dislikes about the job, Ms. O'Brien said, but she will be job hunting again in 1988 when a new president is elected. "It's over with the administration," she said. "If (George) Bush was elected, he has his own advance team."

Ms. O'Brien said she is not sure what career she will pursue after her current job but she has confidence. After all, she said, "I didn't plan this job."

Confusion

When the U.S. Supreme Court turned down a plea to postpone the end of school-busing in Norfolk, Va. the justices paved the way to that city's returning to the neighborhood school concept.

It also raised the level of confusion as to what is the court's intent in relation to earlier actions designed to end the practice of segregated schools.

Critics of the recent ruling assert it means the return of 10 of the city's 35 public elementary schools to being almost all-black. Legal arguments advanced in the Norfolk case could apply to many other school districts across the country.

In his arguments to the court, Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds, head of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, said the practice of busing students to correct racial imbalances was a contributory factor to white flight from affected districts.

Controversy over the case gained prominence in 1984 when the Reagan administration urged a federal appeals court to allow a halt to the crosstown busing of elementary students. There was also injection of an intent to create an element of greater parental involvement in education.

Busing of young children to racially balance Norfolk's schools began as part of a court-ordered desegregation plan in 1971 and has continued although the school system in 1975 was declared totally integrated. The school board voted in 1983 to abandon busing for racial balance but postponed putting that action into effect.

Under the neighborhood schools plan, children will be allowed to attend schools closest to their homes. The city board has asserted all elementary school students have been assigned to schools for the fall and teachers notified of their assignments.

Still to be ruled upon is a formal challenge by some black parents to the end of busing, but the justices may not consider that appeal until October, well after the start of a new school year.

The Supreme Court has raised more questions than answers in the tangled web of its ultimate version of what is right and what is wrong in terms of assuring equality in the education field. The justices do not seem to have a clear picture in their own minds, much less projecting that image to citizens at large.

No Choice

The Legislative Joint Appropriations committee did the only thing it could do in rejecting Gov. Martin's proposal to shift some Highway Fund spending to the General Fund.

The committee approved a $415 million General Fund budget which sets higher salary increases for teacher and state employees than were called for in Martin's plan.

To do so, however, the committee refused Gov. Martin's call to shift $94 million from the General Fund to the Highway Fund to help finance a highway construction and maintenance program of $220 million.

All the needs are great, of course, but it is difficult to see how the Joint Appropriations Committee could have voted any other way. It is clear that teachers' salaries must be improved if we are to improve public education and certainly other state needs must be met from the General Fund.

That does not mean that the governor's highway program cannot be financed. The cost of the improvements can easily be paid by those who use them through a gasoline tax increase. Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan and Gov. Martin seem to have worked out a compromise plan for financing the roads program. It still includes the shifting of the driver education program ($27.6 million) to the General Fund. This remains a bad precedent to set. Nevertheless the compromise offers hope for solving the problem of highway construction financing. The General Assembly and the governor should lose no time in coming to terms on an alternative method of financing the much needed roads improvement program.

Clark Touted As Ambassador

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is being urged by unofficial counselors to appoint his old friend and former national security adviser William P. Clark as ambassador to the Soviet Union instead of White House Kremlinologist John Matlock, the State Department favorite for the Moscow post.

The president is being told that, with Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin's recall to Moscow as policy chief for U.S.-Soviet affairs, Reagan must have a confidant there to explain his own thinking. But Clark is also the choice of hard-liners who have chafed at Matlock's White House track record of trying to soften criticism of the Kremlin. If Matlock is passed over for Moscow, he has told friends, he will retire.

One hitch about Clark: Nancy Reagan, under the influence of presidential aide Michael K. Deaver, cooled on him during his White House stint as too much of a hard-liner.

The privately stated preference by Nancy Reagan for Paul Laxalt over George Bush is a major reason for concern in the vice president's camp that the senator may try for the 1988 presidential nomination.

Like her husband, the first lady is a longtime friend and admirer of Laxalt and wanted him as vice presidential running mate in 1980. That confirms apprehension by Bush backers that the president cannot even give implicit backing to the vice president to succeed him if Laxalt enters the contest.

Laxalt also would command support from Reaganites counted on by the Bush campaign. In addition, two ex-Reagan political operatives — Lyn Nofziger and Ed Rollins — are nearly certain to be in the front ranks of a Laxalt effort.

Any lingering suspicion that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy might change his mind about not running for president in 1988 will be exploded when his political action committee is at least drastically cut down or perhaps eliminated entirely.

The committee was set up as the embryo for Kennedy's '88 campaign, with veteran political organizer Paul Tully in charge. But it lost its meaning when the senator last year took himself out of presidential contention and now is a burden forcing Kennedy to attend fund-raising events around the country when he would rather concentrate on Senate business.

Tully, who worked on the Kennedy campaign for president in 1980 and Walter F. Mondale's in 1984, is looking for a new horse. Also candidates for departure are other non-Massachusetts operatives brought in after the 1984 campaign — including Texan Bob Mann and South Carolinian Bill Carrick (though Carrick may be asked to replace Mann as press secretary).

Richard M. Nixon dictated a jacket blurb praising "Game Plan," Zbigniew Brzezinski's new book on the U.S.-Soviet competition, without reading it — and then wished that he had.

When the former president finally did read the book by President Jimmy Carter's national security adviser, he sent a handwritten note to Brzezinski. He told him "Game

Drug Problem Continues To Frustrate

WASHINGTON — While friends and family were viewing the body of basketball player Len Bias in suburban Washington, Attorney General Edwin Meese III was on his way to Rome for yet another international meeting on narcotics control. The anti-drug crusade has helped make Meese, like his predecessor William French Smith, one of the most peripatetic members of President Reagan's Cabinet. So much so, in fact, that some influential House members would like to cut his travel budget.

People concerned about drug use have been overwhelmed by Meese's stewardship of an inter-agency group established by Congress last year to coordinate U.S. narcotics policy. He has not become the drug "czar" envisioned by some of the group's founders such as Sens. Joseph Biden, D-Del., and Lawton Chiles, D-Fla.

The result, these critics say, is that the U.S. has no coherent policy on the wide range of drug issues, from interdiction to treatment.

But the disappointment expressed about Meese may reflect an inner frustration in legislative circles about fighting a war that, like the one in Vietnam, somehow doesn't seem to turn the corner. Senate Majority Whip Alan Simpson of Wyoming recently expressed as much in a newspaper interview. The early reports that Bias's sudden death may have been drug-related have only turned up the heat on public officials, who would like to effect some accomplishments.

What might strike the average observer is the intensity with which the media have taken charge of the drug issue. Recent newspaper and magazine stories remain the single major source of information on Capitol Hill about the "crack" phenomenon, according to congressional aides. Newsweek, which published two covers on cocaine use this spring, featured yet another article in its issue of June 30.

Just because sales of a "Kids and Cocaine" cover exceeded the average by 15 percent doesn't necessarily explain the magazine's obsession with the subject matter, but it does suggest that we haven't seen the end of features about drug use and trafficking in Ronald Reagan's America. And that is either part of the solution or, depending on one's perspective, the problem. Public awareness undoubtedly helps inspire official action. Yet sensationalistic treatment of an issue can lead to policy by headline.

Media coverage undoubtedly helped inspire two congressional initiatives last week. Bills sponsored by Chiles and Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., would raise the legal penalty for manufacturing and distributing crack. In D'Amato's case, there may have been the added prod of an earlier decision by New York's Gov. Mario Cuomo, to funnel an extra $10 million into residential treatment programs.

New York's allocation of another $2 million, this time to the special narcotics prosecutor, is more in keeping with the stop-it-at-the-source emphasis of federal officials. When Vice President Bush recently disclosed a previously secret decision by Reagan to treat narcotics as a threat to the nation's security, and therefore a matter of military concern, it seemed a logical development.

Yet the mixed success of Bush's own ballywick, the so-called South Florida task force, may be an important indicator of the Pentagon's future in the war on drugs. The Bush task force has never received a penny of new funds. Unless the administration is willing to pump in the big bucks thought necessary to sustain the use of AWACS planes and ocean-going vessels, the Pentagon's contributions will probably prove spotty at best.

One responsibility that the administration seems inclined to leave to state and local authorities may, in the end, be the most important. Publicly funded drug treatment facilities are bursting at the seams begging for more dollars. Only those with the wealth to match the degree of their problem are finding a friendly marketplace. Ironically, the effort begun last year with a $1 million seed grant and the blessing of Nancy Reagan ended up last week on the scrap heap of discredited federal initiatives.

One could easily speculate that the martyrdom of an athletic superstar would, by its dreadful example, give a boost to the anti-drug crusade. By meaning different things to different people, however, the Len Bias tragedy might become prey to the same confusion that plagues the war on drug abuse as a whole. Let's hope that the message of his death — that mortality is a fickle animal — overrides the visceral temptation to seek out culprits.

Strength For Today

Several years ago an artist in this country read in a paper that a large sum of money was being offered for any letter or manuscript which might bear the signature of Button Gwinett, a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

For days this name haunted the artist for he knew that he had seen it somewhere. Then, in a leisure hour when he happened to be going through some old music folios, he discovered a letter signed not only by Gwinett but by Franklin and other members of the Continental Congress. He took the letter to a dealer in antiques and it was auctioned off for more than $50,000.

Everybody, of course, cannot find $50,000 hidden away in an old book. But it is certainly true that God has placed at the side of life's pathways thousands of providential mercies and circumstances which might be ours if we would make them so.

Tuition Hike Raises Flags

RALEIGH — Given the political controversies that have risen over proposals to increase the sales tax by a half-cent and the gas tax by 2.75 cents, it should not come as a surprise to anyone that Gov. Jim Martin's proposal to raise state college tuition by $16 a year sparked a major political battle.

Tuition for full-time students in the university system ranges from $350 to $480 a year. Martin proposed to up that tuition by 3.2 percent to a range of $360 to $496. For out-of-state students, Martin proposed a 12 percent increase on a tuition range of from $2,852 to $3,400 a year.

Despite the modest size of that proposed increase, Martin was bombarded with criticism for it. Leading the charge has been the administration of the University of North Carolina system.

Martin seems honestly baffled by his inability to get a tuition increase. In 1985, he proposed a 10 percent increase which would have averaged about $45 a year per student. The Legislature failed to approve it.

Martin says he planned to seek a 10 percent increase again this year but was talked out of it by university officials. He says UNC President Dick Spangler asked him not to go so high. The result, Martin said, was a scaled back request.

The Martin request would raise an additional $2 million that would be pumped into the General Fund. He considers it fair because it would maintain the current portion of a student's education which is covered by tuition. The current share is about 8 percent. Martin says it was as high as 13 percent not many years ago.

"Eventually, people are going to realize that it would be fair to ask the students in the state university and their parents to use a reasonable portion of their resources to pay ... just a reasonable portion" of the cost of educating a student, Martin said.

But Jay Robinson, Spangler's top assistant, said the inflation in university education costs is a lot greater than the 3.2 percent Martin proposed. He said the governor failed to consider the sizable annual increases in fees that students pay.

"Other costs already are making it very difficult for some young people to attend the university," Robinson said. "Anytime we increase (costs) we make it more and more inaccessible to some young people." Student fees for services such as room and board, athletics and student activities are not set by the Legislature and they have been rising steadily.

Martin says the university administration has a double standard. They're willing to raise fees on their own. "It's just when someone else proposes an increase that they react by saying it will drive students out of the university. That's just not fair."

Robinson counters that Martin is ignoring the historical division of costs recognized by the state. Tuition has always been heavily subsidized to keep the charge for students down and the university "accessible" to all, he said.

The General Assembly has not felt an obligation, however, to cover the room and board costs of a student, nor his student activities. "These are all things which we feel go into the total environment of college life," Robinson said. But they are not the nuts and bolts of a college education.

A year of study at the doctoral universities costs a student about $5,000, a figure which makes the $16 increase look puny, but a figure which, for many youngsters, is already way to high.

Soviet-U.S. Arms Talks Break For Summer Recess

By BRENDA WATSON
Associated Press Writer
GENEVA (AP) — The U.S.-Soviet arms negotiations broke for a summer recess today after seven weeks of talks that brought signs of movement on strategic and space weapons.

Max M. Kampelman, the chief U.S. delegate, said "important substantive differences" remain.

"But at least in some areas we may now have fresh opportunities for serious and constructive discussion," he told reporters after a final meeting before the summer break.

"We hope (the round) has in some areas opened the way to a serious dialogue which will narrow our differences and lead to agreement," he said, reading from a prepared statement.

Kampelman, responding to a reporter's question, dismissed as "propaganda" a remark by Soviet delegation head Viktor P. Karpov that no noticeable progress was made. "There's been some movement here," the U.S. negotiator said. The Soviets introduced a new proposal on strategic nuclear arms that called for reductions less than the 50 percent cut proposed by the United States, Kampelman said.

He indicated there were no new proposals on intermediate-range nuclear forces. "We hope to see a more determined Soviet effort in the next round to join us in seeking to bridge our differences."

The talks will resume Sept. 18, Kampelman said.

During the latest round, the Soviets offered a draft treaty on medium-range nuclear missiles, which the United States said contained nothing new, and a plan dealing with long-range and space weapons.

The Soviets drew a distinction between three types of space weapons: space-based anti-missile systems, anti-satellite weapons and weapons based in space and targeted on objects on Earth or in its atmosphere, according to a Soviet deputy foreign minister, Vladimir Petrovsky.

The United States has insisted on continuing to research into space-based missile defenses, which the Soviets have said would trigger an arms race in space.

The Geneva talks, which began in March 1985, are divided into three negotiating groups: on space and defense, intermediate-range nuclear weapons and strategic, or long-range, nuclear forces.

S. Africa Frees Labor Leaders

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government released at least a dozen labor leaders detained without charge under the 2-week-old nationwide state of emergency, union spokesmen said today.

The government gave no reason for freeing the union officials, including the head of one of the country's largest trade federations. However, dozens more labor leaders were among an estimated 1,800 emergency detainees still held, according to unofficial reports.

The releases followed warnings from union leaders in hiding and from strike-hit business executives that industrial relations were being undermined by the state crackdown.

In Pretoria, the government reported five blacks killed in violence during a 24-hour period that ended early today — including two shot by police firing at rioters and three slain by other blacks — raising to 66 the number of fatalities reported since the state of emergency was declared June 12.

The state Information Bureau also said there was no sign of strikes or other black protests to mark the 31st anniversary today of the signing of the Freedom Charter, which along with the June 16 anniversary of the 1976 black rioting in Soweto is a key date for hundreds of thousands of blacks.

Major anti-apartheid groups, including the now outlawed African National Congress guerrilla movement, signed the charter, a blueprint for a non-racial South Africa.

The government specifically banned commemorations of both events through June. President P.W. Botha said militants planned widespread violence to mark the anniversaries.

"First indications are that today is a normal working day ... no significant stay-aways have been reported," the bureau said in a statement.

The state of emergency gives broad powers to security forces and imposes stringent curbs on the press, including restrictions that prohibit reporting "subversive statements," which are vaguely defined, reporting the activity of security forces without permission, and identifying people detained under the state of emergency.

Released union leaders included Phiroshaw Camay, head of the 180,000-member Council of Unions of South Africa — an all-black federation which is the country's third largest after the giant multi-racial, mainly black Congress of South African Trade Unions and the white-dominated Trade Union Council of South Africa.

Camay was freed Wednesday with three top associates from Johannesburg's John Vorster Square police lockup.

"We were kept in solitary confinement and not interrogated at any stage," said Dale Tiffin, the union's press officer. "We still have 20 of our people in detention. ... We don't think mass detentions will solve anything."

Also released were eight national and regional leaders of the Congress of South African Trade Unions, said Marcel Golding, spokesman for black National Union of Mineworkers, an affiliate of the labor congress.

"We can't make head or tail of what their (the government's) strategy is," said Golding, adding that at least 65 national and local office holders from the labor congress remained in detention.

"While they are releasing some, we have unconfirmed reports they are detaining others. There is a constant attempt to destabilize unions all over the country," Golding told The Associated Press.

FBI Interviews News Executives

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI says it interviewed executives of major news organizations this week in connection with the nomination of William H. Rehnquist and Antonin Scalia to the Supreme Court.

The FBI said it conducted the questioning as part of its background investigations of the two nominees.

The news media executives said they told the FBI they didn't know Rehnquist or Scalia personally and that any information their organizations had about the two had already been published or aired.

In a statement, the FBI said that in conducting background investigations, "It is important ... to obtain input from wide and varied segments of our society. Representative members from the media have been contacted during the course of these two investigations in that the media is an important and informed part of our society."

FBI agent Steve Ramey of the Washington field office said that he had been asked by headquarters officials to talk to Washington network television bureau chiefs and to Washington Post executive editor Benjamin C. Bradlee about the nominations.

"What they said didn't add any light to what we already knew," Ramey said in an interview today. But he said the procedure was "useful in giving them an opportunity to speak their mind."

Bradlee said that when he was first contacted about being interviewed, he thought it was a "practical joke" being played on him by syndicated columnist Art Buchwald. Bradlee said he refrained from commenting on the nominees' opinions and reputations. He said he does not know Scalia and had only met Rehnquist.

David Buksbaum, CBS vice president for news coverage and operations, said that the FBI called Washington bureau chief Jack Smith and "we decided to tell them that anything we find out pro or con we are going to report." Robert McFarland, Washington bureau chief of NBC News, said he spoke with the FBI briefly, told the agency that he had been introduced to Rehnquist at a Washington cocktail party, and that he did not feel qualified to judge Rehnquist's or Scalia's qualifications for the job.

ABC News Washington bureau chief George Watson said that when an FBI agent called him, "we had nothing to say. Everything we say is in the foreground of what we and others have reported." Watson said he "didn't think it was appropriate ... for us to comment on the qualifications or character of the nominees. They will deal with First Amendment issues that involve us."

Two ECU Projects Receive Funding

ECU News Bureau
The North Carolina Biotechnology Center has awarded more than $800,000 to support biotechnology research projects across the state, including two projects at East Carolina University.

Dr. Henry Otto Stone of the ECU School of Medicine received $25,000 for his proposal, "Cloning of the Newcastle Disease Virus Gene for Fusion Protein." Newcastle disease is a major killer of poultry and wild birds. While a vaccine is currently available, a newer and more powerful vaccine is needed to offset the ever-present likelihood that new strains of the virus will develop. North Carolina's poultry industry, one of the largest in the country, could reap significant benefits from this research.

The Biotechnology Center awarded $18,500 to Dr. E.J. Stellweg, also a faculty member of the ECU School of Medicine, for his project titled "Microbial Detergent Compatible Lipases."

Stellweg plans to isolate microorganisms that produce substances called lipases. Lipases are biochemical catalysts or enzymes which digest or degrade certain types of fat, particularly the types responsible for grease stains. Stellweg plans to see if lipases can be added to laundry detergents, in the same way that protein degrading enzymes are currently added. The ability to combine lipases and detergents could provide a boon for the detergent manufacturing industry. The combination would mean lower washing temperatures, shorter washing cycles, and elimination of phosphate additives.

The Center's Competitive Grants Program is designed to provide seed money to support promising new research which has significant potential for advancing the state's economic development through biotechnology. The program enables researchers to launch new, innovative projects to attract additional funding from federal and private sources.

Chair Endowment

Nearly 100 East Carolina University officials, friends and business associates of the Robert Dillard Teer family gathered at the Governor's Inn in Raleigh Tuesday to celebrate the establishment of the Robert Dillard Teer Jr. Distinguished Professorship in ECU's School of Business.

The endowed chair — ECU's first — was established with a $333,000 gift from the Teer family in honor of Robb Teer, a 1967 graduate of the ECU School of Business. When combined with a matching state grant of $167,000 under a new program created by the 1985 General Assembly, the endowment totals $500,000.

The dinner was given by Robert L. (Roddy) Jones of Raleigh, president of Davidson and Jones Corp., and James H. Maynard of Raleigh, president and chief executive officer of Golden Corral Corp., both ECU graduates.

Best Chapel Services

Best Chapel Church will hold a union meeting Friday at 8 p.m. with Retha Dixon as speaker.

Saturday at 6 p.m., a business meeting will be held. The meeting will be followed by 7:30 sermonettes by Jimmy Stokes and Vicky Dixon. Music will be provided.

N.C. Towns Are Waging Annexation Battles

By TOM MINEHART
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — University Research Park officials argue that their area is too undeveloped for Charlotte to annex. Greensboro tries to take over the regional airport next door but has to settle for the area around it.

Willow Creek residents seek incorporation, which would block annexation by High Point. A truck manufacturing plant offers Mount Holly $100,000 a year in an attempt to stay out of the town.

Annexation battles rage in half a dozen places across North Carolina each year. And in most cases, the complex legal debate boils down to a city's desire for more tax money and whether residents think city services are worth that price.

"Citizens often oppose annexation because they oppose the additional taxation that comes with it," said Jake Wicker, a University of North Carolina professor who follows annexation cases. "Some also oppose it on philosophical grounds — they think they should have the right to vote on the question."

"The city is usually looking for an increased tax base, and also to obtain control with respect to utilities, streets, major thoroughfares and its long-range plan for the whole urban area."

Charlotte's proposed annexation of about a third of 2,600-acre University Research Park northeast of the city would cost businesses there an extra $4 million a year in taxes, said park president Rusty Goode.

"We already have 24-hour fire protection," he said. "The new sewer and water services would be insignificant compared to the $4 million."

The Charlotte council proposed June 9 to annex the area, and park officials have 30 days to file for a hearing before a judge.

Goode said the annexation would be illegal because the area is not 60 percent developed, as the law stipulates.

"No city in North Carolina has ever annexed anything as sparsely developed as this is," he said.

The area includes buildings and land owned by IBM, Southern Bell, Union Oil of California, Vertatim and Dow Jones, but Goode said only 30 percent of IBM's land, for example, is developed. Higher taxes could keep these companies from expanding in the area and drive business to competing Research Triangle Park near Durham, he said.

But Charlotte deputy city attorney Mike Boyd said the area is developed enough to annex.

"The city's contention is that the property owned by IBM is in use, that it's reasonable from an annexation perspective to consider the entire piece of property in use," he said. "If they (park officials) won the case, it would be a very significant case. If the city wins ... it would fall in line with other cases."

Wicker said Greensboro had been working for a year on a major annexation to the west that would include the Greensboro-High Point-Winston-Salem airport. But airport authority officials and citizens of High Point and Winston-Salem objected, saying the regional airport shouldn't be inside one city.

"It started out as a standard involuntary annexation procedure but was converted after they negotiated an agreement that would leave the airport out," he said. The agreement is in a bill still pending in the state House.

The annexation would not entirely encompass the airport, but the agreement lets Greensboro treat the airport boundary along the non-annexed area as a Greensboro city boundary. This would make any future annexation of the area outside the airport much easier for Greensboro, Wicker said.

Under the agreement, Greensboro would annex a 3.5-square-mile area providing about $1.5 million a year in tax revenue, said city attorney Jesse Warren. If the airport had been included, it would have brought in another 5 square miles and more than $500,000 a year, he said.

"We think it's a good agreement, one that preserves the regionalism concept for the airport," he said. "The future annexation (provision serves) to preserve the growth of the city."

As High Point looks westward into Davidson County for possible expansion, wealthy residents of Willow Creek are trying to incorporate into their own town — a move that would stop annexation by the city two miles to the east.

"I wouldn't say we want to annex the Willow Creek area," said High Point city attorney Bryant Aldridge. "But High Point doesn't want to be landlocked."

High Point is blocked to the east by Jamestown and to the south by Archdale. And city officials say Willow Creek is trying to block them to the west.

But Brooks Reitzel, attorney for the Willow Creek Property Owners Association, said the incorporation bill pending in the state House "really has nothing to do with stopping High Point."

The purpose, he said, is to allow Willow Creek to get municipal financing to improve roads, waste disposal, police and fire protection.

Still, he said, residents oppose annexation by High Point.

"The city ... has not found a way to solve its own problems with water, police and fire and maintaining roads; and adding our area isn't going to solve the problem at all," he said.

Reitzel said High Point probably would like to take over Willow Creek, where the average house costs $250,000 and whose country club hosts the Henredon Classic of the Ladies Professional Golfers Association.

"There are a lot of bucks out there," he said.

The Freightliner Co. truck manufacturing plant, which would have to pay $350,000 in annual taxes if annexed by Mount Holly, this year offered the town $100,000 a year to lay off, said mayor Charles Black. The town declined and plans to go ahead with annexation.

"We'd like to work something out with them, get a consent judgment, but all they wanted was complete removal from annexation," he said. "We're not for that. We need the revenue."

Black said some "strings were attached" to the $100,000 offer, including provisions to stop the payments if the General Assembly changed its annexation laws or if another city tried to annex the plant.

But Freightliner vice president Robert J. Hodge said at a June 5 public hearing that the $100,000 would keep flowing as long as the property was not annexed. And he said annexation would violate an agreement the company had when it moved to Mount Holly in 1979.

Hodge said the $350,000 in new taxes would comprise 38 percent of the town's revenue but that the plant already provides its own water for fire protection and its own security force. And he said it already pays $40,000 a year to Gaston County.

Black said one of the town's main motives for annexation is to provide water to areas outside the city with contaminated wells and that some area residents even requested annexation.

House Approves New Sales Tax For Counties

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — The Democratic House leadership barely fought off an amendment to repeal the personal property tax before the House approved a bill to let counties levy an additional half-cent sales tax.

The amendment to repeal the property tax, offered by Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, failed 57-56 Wednesday despite an appeal to the poor that lured votes from all of the 14 blacks in the House except for the three representing Mecklenburg County. House Appropriations leaders Billy Watkins, D-Granville, and Bobby Etheridge, D-Harnett, led those opposing the amendment.

"I don't think we should give with one hand and take with the other," said Etheridge.

Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux, D-Durham, said the repeal could help the poor, who would be paying higher sales taxes on food and over-the-counter drugs.

And Mavretic said it was not unusual to provide tax relief and tax increases in the same session.

He urged members who considered organized support for the tax bill to also look at "a disorganized group: every taxpayer in the state who has a chance to speak on these matters only when you push a button in this House."

While the sales tax bill was approved 93-17 and moved to the Senate for consideration, Mavretic vowed to fight for the property tax repeal with his own bill, which was scheduled for House Finance Committee consideration today. He was optimistic that his bill would pass.

"I'm just going to make the case in Mecklenburg County on how much they gain and how much they lose," Mavretic said in an interview. "I wouldn't want to be running in November and have somebody say I voted against $23 million in relief from taxes."

Rep. Jim Richardson, D-Mecklenburg, said he and other county representatives were concerned that a large metropolitan area like Charlotte could suffer more from the repeal than other regions.

"We didn't know how much we were going to lose," he said, adding, "When you've got opposition in the November election, that might make a difference." Richardson does not. Rep. Ivan Mothershead, R-

Mecklenburg, broke ranks with Democratic colleagues in his district to join Republicans, who voted 25-10 for repeal.

"We're going to give the counties a dollar and all we're asking back is a dime," he said. "That dime will be hard to come by if we wait."

Rep. Vernon James, D-Pasquotank, said his sales tax increase could raise $183 million for local governments sorely in need of money for schools.

"This is probably the most important bill you'll pass this session,"

James said. "It does touch everybody."

Mavretic used the same global appeal to lobby for his amendment to eliminate the tax on household property and save taxpayers $26 million.

"The household personal property tax in this state is a joke," Mavretic added. "That tax makes liars of us all" because no one accurately reports all property.

Mavretic said 46 states do not have such a tax and that, "in many cases, it costs us more to administer the household property tax than it brings in."

Mavretic chided James for saying the sales tax would help offset losses due to federal budget deficit reduction measures.

"No one knows the effect of Gramm-Rudman," he said.

Property Tax Barely Survives Repeal Effort

Succession Bill OK'd

RALEIGH (AP) — House leaders are giving no odds on a bill that would remove from the November ballot a statewide referendum on whether governors should be prohibited from serving consecutive terms.

The Senate without debate Wednesday approved the bill on its final reading, 39-7. The measure was tentatively approved a day earlier.

House Speaker Liston Ramsey said Tuesday he would not take a position before the measure arrived in the House.

Last year, the Legislature enacted a proposed constitutional amendment that would rescind a 1977 amendment permitting governors and lieutenant governors to serve consecutive terms. Constitutional amendments must receive majority approval in a referendum after passing the state House and Senate by three-fifths margins.

But Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan called on the Legislature to kill last year's bill after Republicans indicated they would make it an issue in the fall legislative campaign.

ON THE RAILROAD — Rep. Bruce Ethridge, D-Swain, tries on a railroad hat in the state House chamber during Wednesday's legislative session in Raleigh. State Rep. Ivan Mothershead, R-Charlotte, passed out the hats to Democrats in a suggestion that they were railroading partisan legislation through the General Assembly. (AP Laserphoto)

Malpractice Bill Advances

RALEIGH (AP) — The state could be well on its way to ending a crisis in medical malpractice that has made doctors afraid to practice some kinds of medicine, says Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt.

Under a bill approved by the Senate Judiciary II Committee Wednesday, "North Carolina won't find itself the terrible position some of the states that neglected the problem found themselves in," Taft said. "This protects victims and it protects the medical profession."

The bill would limit medical malpractice awards and encourage self-policing by doctors. The committee reinserted Wednesday a $500,000 cap on damages a jury can award for pain and suffering, one day after eliminating the cap.

Taft predicted the bill would pass the Senate with few amendments, partly because of Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan's influence.

"The lieutenant governor has been seeing a firm and substantial influence in many, many issues," he said.

The bill would increase mandatory reporting by insurance companies to the state Insurance Department, encourage peer review for doctors to weed out those with a history of problems and would bar punitive damages in the first stages of a suit. Punitive damages could be sought in the later stages if sufficient cause is shown, Taft said.

In the past, punitive damages have seldom been paid but were often alleged, he said.

Senate Panel OK's Road Proposal

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — A compromise highway funding package crafted by Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan won overwhelming approval of a Senate committee, but could encounter fierce opposition in the House, lawmakers say.

Martin, a Republican, and Jordan, a Democrat, revealed Wednesday their surprise agreement to support a 2 cents per gallon increase in the gasoline tax and a new 3 percent sales tax on gasoline at the wholesale level.

If enacted, the plan would cost the average motorist an additional $20 for gasoline over the next year, beginning in mid-July. The plan would increase the cost of gasoline by about 3.5 percent at the pump, and would generate the approximately $200 million per year that officials say is needed to keep highway construction and maintenance from grinding to a halt.

The Senate Finance Committee endorsed the package 20-3, and the first of two Senate floor votes was scheduled for this afternoon. Legislative leaders of both parties said they expected the bill to pass by a comfortable margin.

"No question about it flying," said Senate Majority Leader Kenneth Royall, D-Durham. "Just a question of how fast it goes."

But two of the House's most influential members voiced strong opposition to another component of the six-point plan: the transfer of the state highway patrol and driver's education programs from the highway fund to the general fund.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, and Rep. Bob Etheridge, D-Harnett, co-chairmen of the House Appropriations Committee and top lieutenants of Speaker Liston Ramsey, said the transfers would deprive the general fund of money it cannot afford to lose.

"I have never supported transfers, and I don't intend to support them because we don't have the money," Etheridge said.

Watkins said he would alter his stand only on orders from Ramsey, who declined to take a position on the compromise bill despite reporters' repeated prodding.

"I'm not involved in that game playing," Ramsey said, adding that the plan would receive fair consideration when it arrives in the House.

Jordan said he checked with House leaders Tuesday night and "had indications that this was a proposal that they could feel comfortable with." He said Ramsey appeared to think it was "a responsible package."

Senate Democrats discussed the plan privately Wednesday morning, and endorsed it in a voice vote with no one dissenting, according to Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Martin, meanwhile, briefed GOP legislators at the Executive Mansion. Lawmakers said most were pleased that an agreement had been reached, and that a majority of the Republicans probably would vote for it.

"We're going to do our best to build strong, bipartisan support for this package," Martin said. Bill Redman, R-Iredell, the Senate minority leader, said at least seven of the Senate's 12 Republicans were committed to the bill. House Minority Leader Betsy Cochrane, R-Davie, said GOP support in the House might hinge on whether the Democratic leadership backs it.

The bill would raise about $172.2 million in fmscal 1986-87, $208 million in 1987-88, and $217.1 million the next year. By 1992, it would raise $243.5 million.

Martin and Jordan, often mentioned as likely opponents in the 1988 gubernatorial race, appeared jubilant and shook hands several times during a news conference in the state Administration Building.

Martin said the agreement proved that "we, with a bipartisan division of responsibility in state government, can govern."

Bush Seeks Congressman's Help In Getting POW Tape

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Bill Hendon, R-N.C., says Vice President George Bush has asked him to "do whatever you can" to obtain a four-hour videotape that reportedly shows live American prisoners of war in Southeast Asia.

Hendon said his efforts and those of an attorney for a retired Army major who has says he has seen the tape have been thwarted by Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, chairman of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee.

Retired Maj. Mark A. Smith of Fayetteville, who said he was shown the film by his source, Robin Gregson, alias "John Obassy," was scheduled to appear before Murkowski's committee Wednesday. Smith testified before the committee in January and provided some information on the tape, and was expected to reappear to give more details. The purported videotape has been offered to the government for $4.2 million.

Smith did not attend the hearing and avoided being served with a committee subpoena — which Murkowski said he would pursue again today. Murkowski dispatched committee staffers Wednesday to serve a subpoena on Smith at Washington National Airport, where he had reservations for a flight to Fayetteville. His attorney caught the flight, but Smith did not.

Hendon and Smith's attorney, Mark Waple, said Smith's absence was understandable because of Murkowski's treatment of Smith, Obassy and others involved in the issue.

"We're all trying very hard to secure this evidence," Hendon said. "But it's becoming increasingly difficult to provide the information the committee has requested when the names of the sources are being divulged publicly and discussed in the media."

Murkowski reportedly released Gregson-Obassy's name in a public session in May, over the objections of Defense Department intelligence officials who asked to keep the information classified.

Following that disclosure, Hendon sent a letter to Murkowski charging him with "dirty tricks" and saying the release of Obassy's identity "could jeopardize not only Obassy's life but the lives of the U.S. POWs I am convinced he has access to."

"What we have here is the ultimate in dirty tricks," Hendon said in the letter. "You subpoena Maj. Smith to produce the Obassy video and in the same breath you virtually ensure that he cannot produce it when you divulge his source's true identity in open session."

Hendon said Wednesday that since the vice president requested his assistance in March, he has taken at least one "international trip" on the issue, has had several meetings with Obassy and arranged a meeting between Smith and Defense Intelligence Agency Director Leonard H. Perrotts, during which Smith provided details of the film.

"I have seen portions of the videotape, which convinced me of its authenticity," Hendon said. "The portion I saw was a perfect match of Smith's description, thus leading me and other government officials to believe that Obassy in fact has access to not only the entire videotape but perhaps to the POWs themselves."

Smith and retired Army Sgt. Melvin C. McIntire have been principals in a tangled mystery surrounding reports that POWs are still held in Laos. They have filed suit in federal court in North Carolina against President Reagan and other officials in an effort to force the U.S. government to pursue the prisoner issue.

"I think it's fair to say some of us are beginning to question the reliability of this information," said Murkowski after Smith failed to show up.

House Committee Critical Of Leaf Buyout Proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Clauses in a proposed contract between major cigarette companies and tobacco cooperatives drew criticism during an informal hearing of a House subcommittee, where a tobacco official said the U.S. Agriculture Department might balk at approving the contract.

During the informal hearing by the House tobacco subcommittee Wednesday, Fred G. Bond, manager of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp. said that if that happened, "We'd have no contract and we'd have no buyout."

The major cigarette companies have several escape clauses in the proposed contract with tobacco cooperatives for a buy-out of leaf surpluses, according to a copy of the document released Wednesday.

The proposed agreement says that any "material adverse" change in the law revamping the federal tobacco program, which resulted in lower price supports and marketing quotas, would allow a company to stop its purchases. The restrictions against changes would apply to Congress as well as the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The buy-out, which is planned to take place over the next eight years, would be terminated if any of the 21 sections in the contract are invalidated by the courts as a result of a lawsuit brought by any party other than a tobacco company.

The companies would be allowed to challenge sections of the contract, however, without invalidating the entire agreement.

Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., called the contract "a Philadelphia lawyer-type contract with all kinds of escape clauses for the companies." Rose called on the USDA to take a firmer stance with the companies, although he said he did not believe USDA's reservations jeopardized a final contract.

Although Bond predicted in an interview later that the contract dispute would be resolved, he said a failure to seal the buy-out could destroy the effort to salvage the tobacco program that was launched more than a year ago.

Employers Complying With Rule

RALEIGH (AP) — The president of the North Carolina AFL-CIO, said his organization's preliminary survey of 350 or 400 companies found that many of them are complying with a law that requires companies to provide information about hazardous chemicals in the workplace.

But "the vast majority really haven't gotten involved with this right-to-know program since it went into effect last month," Chris Scott said.

Scott was among the environmentalists and workers' advocates who urged the Legislature Wednesday to appropriate money for the state's new right-to-know law.

"A law is no good unless there is some funding to implement it," Bill Holman with the North Carolina Conservation Council said at a news conference.

Scott said the proposed budget bill so far contains no funding to educate employers on the law's requirements or to enforce the law. But he said House Speaker Liston Ramsey has told him the funding will be inserted into the final budget.

Rep. Harry Payne, D-New Hanover, who sponsored the right-to-know bill last year, said he was confident funding would be approved.

"I think there were nine positions recommended and we'll probably get four or five," he said. "That's nowhere near enough to really crack down on the problem. In fact, nine is not enough, but you have to start somewhere."

Steve Unruhe, a spokesman for the North Carolina Occupational Safety and Health Project, said the Labor Department needs the money to tell companies how to comply with the law and to enforce the law.

The right-to-know law, passed by the 1985 Legislature and implemented May 25, requires companies using hazardous chemicals to provide a complete list of those chemicals to anyone making a request.

The companies also must provide an accurate material safety data sheet, describing hazards and precautionary measures, for any chemical upon request. Also, the companies must give the local fire marshal a list of all chemicals on the premises, including the quantity and location.

In addition, the federal government last year established a new OSHA standard, which also went into effect May 25. The standard requires companies to train workers on the hazards of chemicals they work with, to give workers access to a list of chemicals in the workplace and to label all containers. Also, workers have the right to refuse to work with chemicals that have not been identified.

Shaw Told To Repay Student Aid

RALEIGH (AP) — Shaw University has been told it must repay $503,962 in federal student-aid money that was improperly used by the university.

M. Bruce Nestlehut, an Atlanta regional inspector general for the U.S. Department of Education, notified Shaw of the misused money this month after his office reviewed audits of five federal student financial aid programs for 1979 through 1984.

"The ... amounts of $394,723 and $109,239 represent improper use of federal funds and must be repaid to the Department of Education," Nestlehut said in a June 13 letter to Shaw President Stanley H. Smith.

Smith could not be reached Wednesday for comment.

Meanwhile, the Shaw University faculty voted Wednesday to call for Smith's resignation, several faculty members said.

Faculty members voted 37-1 to send a resolution to Smith and Shaw's board of trustees calling for the president's resignation, according to faculty members who were not identified.

The resolution indicated no confidence in Smith's ability to lead Shaw through its financial crisis, according to the faculty members.

Private Prisons Could 'Save' $1.8 Million

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Private contractors can build and maintain prisons and protect inmates better than the state currently can — and they can save North Carolina money in the process, Department of Correction Secretary Aaron Johnson says.

"I believe it can be proven, and I believe it has been proven, that a private contractor can build the facility faster, maintain it cheaper and provide the same if not better care and protection to both the inmates and the public than we are currently providing in our very much overcrowded facilities," said Johnson.

Johnson said Tuesday that the state Department of Correction has received informal proposals from seven private companies that could save the state as much as $1.8 million in building four prison facilities.

"Of the 21 separate informal bids that we received, 10 of them were below the total cost of the state to provide similar programs," Johnson said. "Contracting with the private firms for the facilities would save the state as much as $450,000 per unit. And since this was on an informal basis, I am sure in a situation where we had competitive bidding, the savings would be even more."

The estimates, which Johnson said are confidential, involve the cost of opening and operating four facilities: one for sentenced drunken drivers, one for youthful offenders and two women's minimum custody work release centers.

Johnson and Gov. Jim Martin this year proposed spending $157 million over 10 years on new prison facilities. That package also included using private companies to build and operate some prisons.

The Joint Appropriations Committee Monday rejected the administration plan, and instead recommended an interim one-year program to spend about $14.5 million for prison construction. The committee package does not include private construction or operation of prison units.

"Much has been said about Governor Martin delegating to the private sector the important function of incarceration of lawbreakers," Johnson said. "I do not believe that the care and custody of inmates under control of the Department of Correction are any less or more important than the many functions that are currently being provided by private contract to the citizens of North Carolina."

"These functions range from care of the elderly, infirm and mentally retarded to youth offenders and most medical and dental care provided to those people under the supervision of the state," he said.

Johnson said some legislators have questioned how a private prison would be managed.

"It would be managed by our department in the same way other prisons are managed with the same rules and regulations prevailing," he said. "All administrative decisions concerning parole, good time, gain time and administrative punishments would be supervised and directed by area administrators who are state employees."

Nuclear Tests

PEKING (AP) — The official Xinhua News Agency reports that China has conducted 32 nuclear tests since the 1960s, more than foreign observers had estimated.

China exploded its first atom bomb in the Gobi Desert in 1964. The Xinhua report praised the bomb's creator, nuclear physicist Deng Jiaxian, and quoted excerpts from an article about Deng to appear in the official magazine Outlook Weekly.

Soviets Turn In Alarm

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A Soviet Union weather satellite flying 62 miles above the United States picked up the distress signal of an airplane on the ground in Chapel Hill Tuesday night, according to University of North Carolina officials.

The airplane, a Piper Aztec, is owned by UNC-Chapel Hill. The emergency locator transmitter is designed to send out a mayday radio signal after a plane has crashed, but the signal came from an airplane parked at Chapel Hill's Horace Williams Airport.

"The best we can determine, the emergency locator transmitter was turned on by a pilot hitting the switch with her foot," said Alan B. Fearing, director of the university's Medical Air Operations, the agency that operates the plane.

The Soviet satellite, operating in accordance with an international agreement, reported the signal's location in a message sent directly to a computer at Scott Air Force Base at Belleville, Ill. The Air Force received the message at 11:35 p.m. and contacted the Civil Air Patrol at Raleigh-Durham Airport, said Lt. Col. Edward R. White of Scott Air Force Base Rescue Coordination Center.

Troopers

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Highway Patrol has eliminated its age ceiling for new troopers and has raised its mandatory retirement age to 70 in response to an age-discrimination lawsuit.

The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission sued the department in March 1985, charging that the department's practices — hiring only troopers 32 or younger and forcing their retirement at 55 — or 62, if they could pass yearly physicals — violated the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 and the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

But the department in 1984 informally ended its ban on hiring troopers older than 32, according to court documents filed in the case.

Department officials predicted that few employees would choose to work to age 70 because most early retirees can make almost as much money as they could if they stayed on the job.

In the June 5 settlement, the state agreed to amend the N.C. Administrative Code to eliminate the age ceiling for new troopers and raise the retirement age.

Prosecution

RALEIGH (AP) — A federal judge has ordered the U.S. Attorney's Office to oversee the prosecution of White Patriot Party leader Glenn Miller Jr. in a July contempt of court hearing initiated by a Klan-monitoring organization.

In a pretrial motion, Miller, a Johnston County resident, asked U.S. District Court Judge Earl Britt to disqualify Morris Dees, an attorney for the Southern Poverty Law Center of Montgomery, Ala., from prosecuting the case. Miller contended that his rights of due process of law would be violated and that Dees would be a witness in the case.

Britt Tuesday ordered the U.S. Attorney's Office to direct the prosecution of the case, which is scheduled to begin July 7 in Raleigh, while allowing Dees and other attorneys for the plaintiffs to assist. He cited an opinion in a federal court ruling that a criminal defendant is entitled to a fair and impartial prosecutor.

Agent Convicted

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agent has been found guilty of conspiring to blow up his estranged wife's apartment.

A federal jury in Charlotte deliberated for eight hours Wednesday before finding Dale Winters guilty of five charges in connection with a Sept. 6, 1985 firebombing.

Winters was found guilty of conspiracy; aiding and abetting an attempt to destroy a building; transporting a destructive device; aiding and abetting a conspirator in receiving a destructive device, and soliciting others to commit a crime. He is being held in the Mecklenburg County Jail awaiting sentencing, which is scheduled for July 7.

Winters was an ATF agent in Charlotte for seven years before he was transferred to the bureau's Miami office early last year.

No one was injured in the blast, which caused $1,500 in damages.

Spangler Home

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The home of the University of North Carolina system's president will get a $378,000 face-lift thanks to private contributors.

IN THE STATE

Firms and foundations, many from the hometown of the UNC President C.D. Spangler, donated money to have the Chapel Hill mansion repaired.

UNC originally had planned to pay for the improvements with revenues from university research projects. But unsolicited, private donations have poured in since word got out about the house's condition, said L. Felix Joyner, UNC vice president for finance.

Joyner said the funds that were pledged or received will be used to get the house ready for occupancy before Spangler's inauguration Oct. 27.

No state money will be required but the General Assembly still must approve the project and it is expected to do so in a special provision in a final budget bill this month, Joyner said.

Bush Visit

RALEIGH (AP) — Vice President George Bush will be in Raleigh Friday to campaign for Republican Rep. Bill Cobey and help raise funds for Cobey's re-election effort.

Bush is scheduled to meet about a dozen students from Enloe High School at 11:30 a.m. The students were chosen to respond to letters sent to the White House by Soviet students.

At noon, Bush will hold a $500-per-person reception as a fund-raiser for Cobey, who faces Democrat David Price in November.

Bush is scheduled to speak for about 10 minutes at a 12:30 p.m. campaign rally for Cobey at the Raleigh Civic Center.

Candidate

RALEIGH (AP) — When Presbyterians meet in 1987, the Rev. John D. MacLeod Jr. of Raleigh will be one of the candidates for the top elected post in the 3.1 million-member denomination.

MacLeod, who is general secretary of the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina, has been endorsed for the position of church moderator by the Fayetteville Presbytery.

Each year, Presbyterians elect a moderator to preside over their annual meeting and to act as a roving, goodwill ambassador within the church. The position has become increasingly important since the Northern and Southern branches of the church reunited in 1983.

Cloggers

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Sonja Shepard of Morristown, Tenn., and Bobby Revis of Waynesville, N.C., were chosen grand champion cloggers at the 4th annual "Hee Haw" International Clogging Championship.

They won an appearance on "Hee Haw," a syndicated weekly television show featuring country music and comedy.

Other winners Wednesday included the Leather and Lace Cloggers, Asheville, N.C., best novelty line.

German Award

DURHAM (AP) — West Germany has given its highest civilian award to R. Taylor Cole of Durham, James B. Duke professor emeritus of political science at Duke University.

The award for service to the country was presented at Cole's home by Alexander von Schmeling-Deringshofen, consul-general of the Federal Republic of Germany, who is stationed in Atlanta.

Schmeling-Deringshofen said Cole helped West Germany re-enter European society after World War II. Cole began studying Germany in 1933 as a fellow of the Germanic Society of America.

Cole served as consultant to Gen. Lucius Clay, then military governor of the U.S. Zone and head of the Office of Military Government.

Holiday

RALEIGH (AP) — Easter Monday no longer will be a paid holiday for Raleigh city employees, who instead will have the third Monday in January off in honor of Martin Luther King Jr.

The City Council approved the holiday swap Tuesday in a 6-2 vote.

The action was praised by veterans, who had worried that the council would drop Veterans Day. But some city employees denounced the move, saying they didn't want any change in their holiday schedule.

Theresa U. Teachey, a spokeswoman for city workers, expressed surprise when informed of the decision.

"You're kidding," she said. "That's Jesus. That's the Christian holiday."

Surrender

CUMMING, Ga. (AP) — Timothy Kevin Turner, 24, of New Bern, N.C., turned himself in to police in his hometown Wednesday, charged with murder in the slaying of Forsyth County teen-ager Bonny Kay Dodd.

In New Bern, Sheriff C.W. Bland said Turner, a Georgia native who had lived in New Bern for about two years, had waived extradition.

Turner's arrest ended an 10-day investigation into the disappearance of Miss Dodd, who was last seen when she left her south Forsyth County home June 15 to take a friend home.

Walraven said Turner was visiting relatives in Forsyth County the week of Miss Dodd's death.

Hijacking Defendants Criticize Prisons

GENOA, Italy (AP) — Defendants in the Achille Lauro hijacking trial have complained about prison conditions, with one of them staging a mock suicide attempt to attract attention, according to a report read in court today.

Judge Lino Monteverde today read a telegram sent by officials at Novara prison. Testimony from witnesses ended Wednesday.

The telegram said Mohawat Gandura, a Syrian also known as Ibrahim Husari, on Wednesday tied a sheet to an iron bar in his cell while numerous prison staff members watched. The telegram called it a "staged" gesture to protest the food and the strict surveillance.

Gandura is a minor defendant, charged only with aiding and abetting the hijackers.

After the telegram was read, Youssef Magied al-Molqi, the hijacker accused of killing crippled American passenger Leon Klinghoffer aboard the cruise ship, complained from his courtroom holding cell that the prison atmosphere was "oppressive." He did not explain what he meant.

After a courtroom outburst last Friday, in which threats were shouted at the prosecutor, the defendants were transferred from a Genoa prison to the Novara maximum-security facility.

A verdict is expected late next week in the trial of 15 men charged in connection with hijacking the Achille Lauro off Port Said, Egypt, in October. Klinghoffer, 69, was slain during the two days of terror at sea, and all but Gandura face charges of murder.

Among the 10 defendants being tried in absentia is Mohammed Abbas, who prosecutors claim plotted the hijacking. Abbas, also known as Abul Abbas, is a leader of the Palestine Liberation Front, a faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

On Wednesday, Monteverde read a sworn statement from Marilyn Klinghoffer in which she said she heard shots and then a splash, but did not know until the hijacking ended that her husband had been shot to death and his body thrown overboard.

One of four Palestinian hijackers cried and kissed Mrs. Klinghoffer when she asked for news about her wheelchair-bound husband, the statement said.

Mrs. Klinghoffer, 58, died of cancer Feb. 9. Her statement was made to Italian authorities Oct. 12, three days after the hijacking ended.

Capsules Banned

SEATTLE (AP) — Authorities could confiscate over-the-counter medications in capsules found on store shelves in King County today, and the sale of most such drugs were banned statewide to counter cyanide tampering that has killed two people.

The 90-day statewide ban on sales of nonfused capsules, approved Wednesday by the Washington Pharmacy Board, formally takes effect after paperwork is completed, probably by Friday, said Chuck Kleeberg, chief of environmental sciences for the Seattle-King County Health Department.

Meantime, the state agency banned the sale of two-part, nonfused capsules in the county and directed health department officials to check stores and confiscate the medications if necessary.

About 95 percent of all over-the-counter medication in capsule form is available in other forms, and the rest would be available as prescription medication, which is not affected by the ban, officials said.

In Washington, D.C., Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Dr. Frank Young said he knew of no other states banning over-the-counter capsules.

The ban was prompted by the discovery of cyanide Tuesday in a bottle of Anacin-3 capsules during a random check.

Since then, the FDA checked 121,000 capsules collected in south King County, where cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Excedrin killed two people earlier this month, but no further contamination was found.

Tuesday's discovery in a North Auburn store was the fifth bottle of pain medication found to contain cyanide. Cyanide-laced Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules were blamed last week in the deaths of Sue Snow, 40, and Bruce Nickell, 52, both of Auburn.

Don Williams, executive director of the Pharmacy Board, said the Anacin-3 may have been found in one of the same stores where tainted Excedrin was bought. "Since that information was not publicly released, this leads me to believe this was not a copycat," he said.

But Jim Davis, director of FDA investigations in Seattle, said the agency hasn't ruled out the possibility that more than one person is involved.

Federal Agencies May Ask Bids From Utility Suppliers

By ELIZABETH TUCKER
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — The federal government is proposing a radically new way of obtaining traditional monopoly services like natural gas and electricity: asking utilities to compete to provide them.

In a proposed government rule, the General Services Administration — which buys services for more than 100 federal agencies — the Department of Defense, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, would competitively procure utility services — electricity, natural gas, water, sewage and steam.

The rate impact on customers "could be substantial" if the proposed rule goes into effect, according to Charles Gray, assistant general counsel to the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners.

The government spends about $4 billion a year on these services, which represent 2 percent of the annual national output by utilities. Excluded from the proposal is telephone service. The GSA has asked for competitive bids for a new federal telephone system.

The federal government, which produces its own steam at more than 100 government sites, also has asked for competitive bids to have an outside operator run three large steam plants in the District Of Columbia and Virginia.

The all-encompassing utility proposal is an outgrowth of the Competition in Contracting Act of 1984, which requires federal agencies to procure all goods and services competitively, GSA officials said.

At stake are hundreds of millions of dollars the government pays to utilities across the nation.

"The bottom line is we don't have a statute that says you can avoid competition in the public utility service area," said Richard Hopf, deputy associate administrator for acquisition policy at the GSA. "There is a statute that says you must seek competition." The goal of the proposal is to get superior service at better prices, he said.

But utility regulators and utilities say there are major public policy considerations and technical problems in the government proposal.

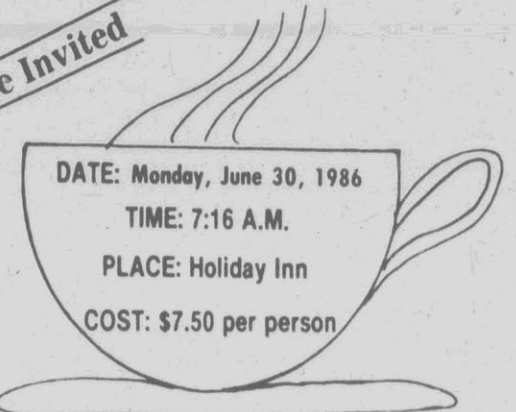

"It's a threat to the whole structure of basic utility law and practice that has been in existence for 50 or 60 years," said Gray of the association of utility regulators. "Should the federal government be allowed to leave utilities hanging, and other customers who have no alternatives paying for the fixed costs of the system that have formerly been paid for by the federal government?"

In a letter written to Terence C. Golden, administrator of the GSA, House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jamie L. Whitten, D-Miss., and two other members, Reps. Edward R. Roybal, D-Calif., and Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., said, "the proposal appears to involve clear disregard of federal, state, or other regulatory bodies that govern utility services," and called the potential impacts "serious."

Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the House subcommittee on energy conservation and power, said, "Our concern is what the impact is on all residential customers of electricity who do not have the ability to shop around."

House Opens Impeachment Hearing For Imprisoned Judge

By LARRY MARGASAK
 Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying "no one stands above the law, not even the judges," the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee today opened an impeachment proceeding against Harry E. Claiborne, a federal judge imprisoned for not paying his taxes.

The proceeding against the chief U.S. district judge in Nevada began with the statement by Rep. Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J. It was the first impeachment session by the full panel since it voted to impeach then President Richard M. Nixon in 1974.

Claiborne, 68, is serving a two-year sentence at the minimum security prison camp in Montgomery, Ala. He will continue to collect his $78,700 pay unless Congress removes him from his lifetime job.

Rodino said at the outset of the proceeding, "In the United States, no one stands above the law, not even the judges who interpret the law for us."

He said impeachment "is not a remedy used lightly," and noted that in the past 200 years, only nine judges have gone through impeachment proceedings in the House.

The committee was considering four impeachment articles approved last Tuesday by the subcommittee on courts. Passage of any article would advance the proceeding to the full House.

"I believe that the full Judiciary Committee will report out four articles of impeachment in essentially the same form approved by the subcommittee," Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., who is spearheading the impeachment move, said Wednesday.

The impeachment articles said Claiborne should be removed from the bench because he:

— "Willfully and knowingly" filed a tax return for 1979 that he "did not believe to be true." Claiborne reported an income of $80,227 when "he well knew and believed" his income was above that figure.

— Did the same with his 1980 tax return, in which the reported figure of $54,251 was less than he earned.

— Was convicted on the tax charges by a jury, sentenced to a two-year prison term and fined $10,000.

—"Violated his oath of office and reduced confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary, thereby bringing disrepute on the federal courts and the administration of justice."

An overall impeachment resolution said the judge was guilty of "high crimes and misdemeanors," the Constitution's terms for behavior warranting removal from office.

Richard Cates, special counsel to the subcommittee, said the criminal record against Claiborne shows he failed to report $18,000 in income on his 1979 return and $87,000 on his 1980 return.

Only Congress can remove Claiborne from his lifetime job, take away his salary and bar him from ever serving the federal government again.

The final step would be a trial before the Senate, which last occurred in 1936 and concluded with the removal of U.S. District Judge Halsted L. Ritter.

In 1974, three articles of impeachment were approved against Richard Nixon. The proceeding ended there because Nixon resigned the presidency before the matter reached the full House.

The Claiborne proceeding is precedent-setting, according to Kastenmeier, since it is the first time "a convicted and incarcerated federal judge is the subject of an impeachment inquiry."

Space Agency Will Delay Launch Of Planned Jupiter, Solar Probes

By LEE SIEGEL
 AP Science Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The Challenger space shuttle tragedy and reduction of the Centaur rocket program will cause a 3½-year delay in launching space probes to Jupiter and the sun, says the director of NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Because the delay in launching the Galileo probe to Jupiter means the craft will take a longer route, actual exploration of the giant planet will be delayed at least 5½ years, Lew Allen said Wednesday.

While the delays are agonizing, "we can't accept the notion that this represents anything like a fatal blow to the long-term prospects for solar system exploration," he said in a speech to lab employees.

In an interview after his speech, Allen said he feared the delays might demoralize laboratory scientists and prompt some to seek employment elsewhere.

The lab is operated by the California Institute of Technology and runs America's unmanned space exploration program for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Allen said the Jan. 28 explosion of the Challenger, which killed seven astronauts, was the first of two major blows to interplanetary exploration.

The second blow came last week, when NASA bowed to safety concerns by abandoning a $674 million program to use shuttles for launching highly volatile Centaur upper-stage rockets to propel scientific probes to Jupiter and the sun. The Centaur uses liquid fuels that prompted concerns about its safety in the shuttle cargo bay.

Cancellation of the Centaur program means Galileo and the solar exploration probe, named Ulysses, must be launched either from the shuttle aboard less volatile upper stage rockets or directly from Earth on more powerful Titan 34D-7 rockets, Allen said.

Unlike the Centaur, the upper stage rocket uses solid propellants.

The Magellan Venus Radar Mapper — which will study the surface hidden beneath Venus' thick clouds — also will be delayed by the Centaur cutback, Allen said.

Galileo and Ulysses originally were scheduled for launch aboard Centaurs from the cargo bays of two shuttle flights in May. Magellan had been scheduled for launch in early 1988.

Galileo would have arrived at Jupiter in late 1988. Ulysses, using Jupiter's gravity as a slingshot to go into orbit over the sun's poles, would have flown over the sun's south pole in mid-1989.

Both launches will be delayed until at least until late 1989, Allen said, adding that the delays could be longer if NASA has to wait in line behind Department of Defense space missions before it can use inertial upper stage or Titan rockets.

The earliest launch date for Magellan will be late 1989.

The powerful Hubble Space Telescope, which had been scheduled for launch from a shuttle this fall, now will be launched from a shuttle no earlier than early 1988, Allen said.

The portion of the lab's budget funded by NASA — about 75 percent — is at a record high of $830 million this year, he said. The lab employs more than 5,000 people. An additional 1,000 employees of contractors work at the lab.

Allen pointed with pride at the exploration of Uranus by JPL's Voyager 2 spacecraft, and to the lab's involvement in the exploration of Halley's comet in March by European, Soviet and Japanese space probes.

The Halley missions showed the importance of JPL's plan to launch a so-called Comet Rendezvous-Asteroid Flyby mission in 1992, he said. That probe would fly past several asteroids, then rendezvous with Comet Tempel 2 in 1996.

NASA hasn't approved the $760 million mission, but Allen said it was essential for the program to start in 1988.

Senate OK's Security Funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — A program to tighten security at U.S. embassies against terrorism and thwart electronic surveillance of diplomatic messages would get $1.1 billion in the next 15 months under a bill passed by the Senate.

The bill, approved on a voice vote Wednesday after seven hours of debate, includes $34.5 million to protect from surveillance the electric typewriters, word processors and other electronic equipment used by embassies to process and transmit sensitive diplomatic communications.

The Senate approved an amendment, sponsored by Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, and Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., to raise from $12.5 million to $34.5 million the amount earmarked to protect embassy communications.

"State-sponsored terrorists can and do subject our facilities to intensive surveillance. If we fail to protect the information about our security practices we make it that much easier for terrorists to attack," said Leahy, vice chairman of the intelligence panel.

The money also will enable the State Department to "put Americans in charge of computers in U.S. embassies rather than leaving reams of sensitive information in the hands of foreign (employees who are) ... often hostile intelligence agents," Leahy said.

The bill incorporates recommendations made by an advisory panel on embassy security appointed by Secretary of State George P. Shultz in the wake of the 1983 bombing attacks on the U.S. Embassy and the U.S. Marine compound in Beirut, Lebanon.

European Leaders To Press South Africa To Drop Policy

By DAVID MASON
Associated Press Writer
THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — European Community foreign ministers agreed today on the need to press South Africa to abandon its segregationist policies, a Dutch official said.

However, no sanctions against South Africa were decided upon in the two-hour foreign ministers' session held prior to meetings today and Friday of the top leaders of Common Market nations.

Jan Jonker Roelants, spokesman for the Dutch delegation at the 12-nation meeting, told reporters after the foreign ministers met:

"What we all agreed is that a signal should be given to South Africa. There will be much further talk on how we constitute this signal."

Roelants noted the European Community approved a list of measures against South Africa last September, including a continued ban on arms sales, the withdrawal of military attaches, discouraging of cultural and scientific exchanges and a ban on cooperation in the nuclear field.

"There is ample reason to ponder on further measures," he said. He said no agreement was reached in the preliminary session.

The summit of Western European leaders was expected to focus on reaction to the South African crisis, including the nationwide state of emergency imposed June 12.

Officials said earlier that they hoped the foreign ministers would be able to draw up a list of proposals to submit to their leaders, who are scheduled to meet after a lunch given by Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands.

But observers saw little hope of quick agreement on how to pressure the Pretoria government to abandon apartheid and negotiate with the black majority.

Despite calls from black leaders and a special study group from the British-led Commonwealth for tough measures against South Africa, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has stood firm against mandatory economic sanctions.

Britain, expected to take the lead in any Common Market measures directed at its former colony, was said to favor financial help, including education and legal aid, to assist victims of the apartheid system of forced racial separation.

Aides to Mrs. Thatcher said she also favors a Common Market mission to South Africa, led by British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe, to make one more attempt at persuading President P.W. Botha's government to change its ways.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and French Premier Jacques Chirac were expected to line up with Mrs. Thatcher against stringent economic sanctions. Other members of the trading bloc, such as the Netherlands, Denmark, Spain and Greece, were believed to favor some sort of punitive measures.

Earlier this week, both opposition and government parties in the Dutch Parliament called on Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek to again urge his colleagues to stop imports of South African wine, vegetables and fruit as an economic sanction.

But Mrs. Thatcher was said by her aides to oppose such a measure because it would hit South Africa's black workers most.

Van den Broek told Parliament sanctions should not cause the collapse of the South African economy, but force the Pretoria government into negotiations. He said the pressure "should be increased slowly, but steadily and effectively."

Other suggestions considered in meetings prior to today's summit include a ban on direct air travel between European capitals and South Africa, but opponents have pointed out that non-Common Market airlines would certainly fill the gap.

A ban on new investments in South Africa has also been suggested, but this has been labeled "gesture politics" by opponents who point out that most new investment has already dried up.

The Common Market does $15.4 billion in two-day trade with South Africa annually, with Britain and West Germany accounting for half that sum.

In addition to South Africa, the summit will review East-West relations, the Common Market's farm trade dispute with the United States, the state of the European economy and nuclear safeguards following the April 26 atomic accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Ukraine.

Irish Vote In Bitter Bid To Make Divorce Legal

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press Writer
DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Torn between their allegiance to Roman Catholicism and a liberal democratic tradition, the Irish voted today in a bitterly contested referendum on whether to legalize divorce.

Polling stations opened for the 2.4 million eligible voters at 9 a.m. Voting ends at 10 p.m., with the first results due Friday.

With the latest poll predicting defeat for the proposed constitutional amendment by a 55 percent to 45 percent margin, Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald appealed Wednesday to voters to back the reform initiative he launched nine weeks ago.

The most recent poll, published in the Irish Times on Wednesday, left the anti-divorce camp confident of victory, although Deputy Prime Minister Dick Spring said the soundings of his Labor Party pointed to a 53 percent vote in favor of divorce.

The coalition government, composed of the Labor Party and FitzGerald's larger Fine Gael party, is asking voters to drop the 1937 constitution's outright ban on divorce, which makes Ireland the only Western European country except Malta where marriage is legally indissoluble.

The government insists the new divorce law will be extremely restrictive, requiring couples to show a court that their marriage has been irretrievably broken for at least five years, that no reconciliation is possible, and that spouses and children are provided for.

But in a 97 percent Catholic country with 87 percent Sunday church attendance, divorce, along with contraception and abortion, remains widely opposed.

Catholic bishops have warned that divorced people will be refused church marriages, and the influential Archbishop of Dublin, the Rev. Kevin Macnamara, has gone as far as to liken divorce's effect on society to the Chernobyl nuclear disaster in the Soviet Union.

The Divorce Action Group, which led the pro-amendment campaign, says 70,000 people in Ireland are trapped in broken marriages and deserve a second chance.

FitzGerald, in his final appeal to the electorate, tied the issue directly to the Northern Ireland conflict.

He said Protestants in that British-ruled province had a record of denying the Catholic minority its rights, and urged his own people not to behave likewise by denying basic rights to its own minority of unhappily married citizens.

FitzGerald, who was elected four years ago promising a "constitutional crusade" to modernize his country, believes its image of church domination unifies Protestants and makes unification with Northern Ireland harder.

Worker Released

PARIS (AP) — An Air France employee held in Iran for more than a year on charges that he turned his home into a center of corruption has been freed, the French airline said today.

Jean-Yves Albertini, director in Tehran for France's state-run airline, was arrested on April 18, 1985, allegedly during a party at his home attended by some 50 Iranians.

Charged with "inciting Moslems to debauchery" and "forbidden sexual practices," he was sentenced July 9, 1985, to a year in prison.

The French government has been working for the release of Albertini, and in November the French Foreign Ministry indicated that he might benefit from a pardon.

Albertini had been based in Iran for 2½ years when he was arrested.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices turned downward today as traders cashed in on some of the market's recent gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which closed Wednesday less than a point shy of a new high, dropped 2.74 to 1,882.31 in the first hour today.

Losers held a slight edge on gainers in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Opening-hour volume on the Big Board came to 31.16 million shares.

Analysts said the market was faced with selling after the Dow Jones industrial average approached the 1,900 level for the first time.

They said the importance of round-number points like that often is exaggerated, but that some investors do use them in planning when to sell stocks.

Otherwise, there was no significant change apparent in the news background that permitted the market to score broad gains on Tuesday and Wednesday, carrying most of the broader indexes to record highs.

After drifting upward in the latter stages of Wednesday's trading, interest rates headed lower again in the credit markets this morning.

ITT Corp. climbed 2 1/2 to 52 1/2 and led the active list. ITT and France's state-owned CGE confirmed that they are negotiating for CGE to acquire most of ITT's phone switching equipment business, which is based in Europe.

ASE's composite index of all its listed common stocks lost .28 to 142.46. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 1.20 to 283.99.

On Wednesday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 9.50 to 1,885.05, its highest closing level since it reached a peak of 1,885.90 on June 6.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 3 on the NYSE. Big Board volume totaled 161.79 million shares, against 140.62 million in the previous session.

Bonnie ...

The hurricane's highest winds were 85 mph, with gale-force winds of 39-54 mph extending outward 75 miles from the center, which spanned 25 miles. Forecasters said tornadoes were possible in the hurricane warning area, as well as tidal surges of 5-7 feet.

Neil Frank, director of the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., said, "This wasn't a severe hurricane, it wasn't a major hurricane, but it was a full-blown hurricane when it moved across the coastline this morning."

He said the hurricane was still potentially dangerous, but that apparently people in threatened areas had heeded evacuation orders.

A tornado blew off the roof of a mobile home this morning in Winnie, Texas, 20 miles southwest of Beaumont, but no one was injured, said Mary Batiste, a dispatcher with the Chambers County sheriff's department.

Four people were taken to the hospital after high winds flipped over a pickup truck, said paramedic Robbie Isaacs. A 20-year-old woman was being examined for possible shoulder and back injuries, but the other three suffered only minor injuries, he said.

Evacuees carrying blankets and clothing moved into two shelters set up by the Red Cross in Port Arthur, and many slept or monitored Bonnie's progress on portable radios.

"My lights went out. I was afraid it was going to get worse and we wouldn't be able to get out," said Rudolph Foreman, adding that he had to dodge flying debris today on his way to the shelter.

About 15 residents were stranded by high waters in Sabine Pass, on the Texas-Louisiana border, after ignoring advice to evacuate, Williamson said.

David Kava, in charge of the weather service office in Port Arthur, said: "We're experiencing wind gusts to 63 miles an hour and some pretty good rain. We have widespread power outages ... Actual telephone poles have been blown down, and of course, we've got all kinds of trees down here."

Bomb At Madrid Airport Hurts 3

MADRID (AP) — A bomb planted in luggage exploded today at the El Al Israel Airlines counter at Barajas Airport, and police said at least three people, including a police officer, were injured.

Police said one of the injured was an "Arab-looking" man who was believed to be the owner of the luggage. They said he was under arrest. An El Al employee also was hurt, they said. The explosion occurred at 3:30 p.m. (9:30 a.m. EDT), 15 minutes before the weekly El Al Flight 396 was to depart for Tel Aviv.

The national news agency EFE quoted an employee of the Mexican airlines, Aeromexico, as saying an El Al employee took the suitcase containing the bomb off a conveyor belt when he saw smoke pouring from it. EFE quoted the Aeromexico employee as saying the El Al worker shouted to people standing nearby before the suitcase exploded, injuring him.

The El Al check-in counter is not separated from the other counters in the international terminal.

Spanish National Radio said damage was extensive and that smoke filled a large part of the airport's international terminal.

In Tel Aviv, El Al spokesman Nachman Kleiman, told The Associated Press that only an El Al employee was injured.

Pitt County Returns To Winning Ways

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

If ever a team needed a win, it was Pitt County American Legion Post 39 and it got one Wednesday night, breaking a four-game losing streak with a 6-4 win over Wayne County.

Axel Smith provided the bat by collecting two hits and two RBI, while Eric Jarman and Bronswell Patrick combined for the win. Another contributing factor to the win was that Post 39 committed only one error the entire game. With the victory, Pitt County is now 8-8.

Jarman, who picked up the win in relief, entered the game in the fifth inning and gave way to Patrick, who came on in the ninth for the save. "We needed this one," said Post 39 Coach Toby Holliday. "We just kept it close (and) we got some key hits. Jarman came in and did a good job, Bronswell did a good job."

One week ago, Post 39 raised their record to 7-4 with an 11-6 win over Edenton last Wednesday. Since that game, Post 39 had dropped four games in a row. With only two games remaining against Edenton and Kinston before the playoffs, Pitt County needed to get back on the winning track.

Pitt County led early, 2-0, but fell behind 4-3 after the sixth inning. Shannon Peede opened up the seventh with a walk and Shane Adams reached on a fielder's choice to force out Peede. Jarman then walked to move Adams to second. Adams then went to third on a passed ball and came home on a wild pitch by Wayne County's Tony Tillman to tie the game at 4-4.

Wayne County failed to score in the top of the eighth as Jarman faced four batters, getting three putouts sandwiched around a walk. Patrick opened the bottom of the eighth with a deep shot to centerfield that was good for a triple. Smith then rapped a single up the middle to score Patrick. Steve Mills followed with another single to score Smith and provide the final margin.

Jarman faced the first three batters of the ninth inning, giving up two walks while striking out one. Patrick came in to get one out on a fielder's choice before striking out pinch hitter Trey Aycock on four pitches to end the game.

With the game scoreless heading into the bottom of the fourth, Jarman opened with a walk. Lee Hardee then notched a single and Fred Bryant followed with a reach on a fielder's choice that forced out Jarman. Smith then rapped a single to score Hardee and Bryant and put Post 39 up 2-0.

Wayne County came right back in the fifth to make it 2-1 when Kevin Kennedy slapped a single to score Cam Pridgen.

Pitt County then changed pitchers, taking out starter Mike Burnham and replaced him with Jarman. Burnham had thrown three-innings of relief in Tuesday night's 10-6 loss to Wilson.

Wayne County's Tillman then ripped a double to score Kennedy and tie the game 2-2.

Peede put Post 39 back ahead in the bottom of the fifth when he scored on Hardee's groundout. The lead was shortlived as Wayne County's Eric Baldwin scored on an error in the sixth to tie it and Pridgen followed with a squeeze to score Bass and give Wayne County its first lead 3-2.

Burnham, Jarman and Patrick combined to hold Wayne County to five hits. Jarman struck out 11, Burnham three and Patrick one. Smith and Mills led Pitt County with two hits apiece. Pitt County plays Edenton at home on Monday.

Radio Station Reports Bias Bought Cocaine

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — The shocking drug-related death of basketball star Len Bias could have repercussions far beyond the University of Maryland campus.

Members of Congress and sports personalities, including Bias' coach, Lefty Driesell, have proposed a national "war on drugs," while renewed proposals for a re-evaluation of collegiate athletics have come from across the nation.

Calls to a national cocaine hotline increased by more than 40 percent after the Maryland state medical examiner announced Tuesday that Bias, a superbly conditioned 22-year-old athlete, had died of cocaine intoxication less than two days after being drafted by the NBA champion Boston Celtics.

One of Bias' prospective Celtic teammates, Kevin McHale, said the All-American's death has made him willing to undergo drug testing. And McHale has urged the National Basketball Association Players Association to back a tough testing policy.

A criminal investigation of Bias' death continues, but authorities appear to be stymied until a Prince George's County grand jury begins taking testimony on July 14. Even then, three key witnesses may be barred from making voluntary appearances before the panel.

A Baltimore radio station, WBAL, reported early today that Bias bought eight grams of cocaine in Washington the morning of his death. The station, quoting unnamed sources at the University of Maryland, said he paid $800 for the drug.

Arthur Marshall, the county state's attorney, said that he has rejected, at least for now, offers from lawyers to have the grand jury take testimony from basketball players Terry Long and David Gregg, who reportedly were in the room when Bias was stricken, and former student Brian Tribble, who was with Bias several hours earlier.

In an interview Wednesday night, Marshall explained that his rejection is based on a section of Maryland law which grants immunity from prosecution to anyone who testifies before a grand jury probing drug-related matters.

When he called for the grand jury investigation, Marshall also suggested that the panel look into a possible pervasive drug problem among Maryland athletes.

Phillies Say Goodbye To Former Ace Carlton

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — If Steve Carlton is to win the 319th game of his career, he'll have to do it for a team other than the Philadelphia Phillies.

On Wednesday, after 22 seasons — 14 with the Phillies — and four Cy Young awards, the 41-year-old left-hander was given his unconditional release.

Phillies President Bill Giles, nearly in tears on several occasions while making the announcement, said he had tried to talk Carlton into retiring. When Carlton insisted he could still win, Giles reluctantly sent him packing.

"He still thinks he can pitch and win. ... But I was convinced that it was not in the best interest of the Phillies for him to continue pitching for us," Giles said.

"The decision was mine," Giles said. Carlton has won 318 games, 10th on the all-time list and 6th in National League history. But Giles said the veteran left-hander was released because the Phillies felt he can no longer pitch effectively in the major leagues.

"It has been 14 memorable and remarkable years," Giles said. "The greatest left-handed pitcher in Phillies history and one of the greatest pitchers of all time will no longer be pitching in Philadelphia."

"I want to thank Steve for all he's done for the Phillies and for Philadelphia."

Carlton was not at the news conference, maintaining the stony silence with the media imposed some eight years ago because of alleged references to his personal life by writers.

But in a tape played to fans at Veterans Stadium prior to the Phillies' game against the Chicago Cubs Wednesday night, Carlton said he felt he still can pitch.

"It's unfortunate it came down to these circumstances to where it was a difficult decision for Bill Giles to make. I still have goals to accomplish and still can pitch effectively," he said.

Carlton also thanked Giles and wished his teammates luck.

"In conclusion, my deepest thanks to you, great fans, in the city of Philadelphia for all the great memories and support you have given me and my family over the last 14 years. Thank you and God bless you."

Giles said one American and one National League team had inquired about Carlton.

Not everybody in the Phillies' organization is convinced that Carlton is through as a big league pitcher.

Pitching coach Claude Osteen didn't dispute Giles' decision, but said he still had a feeling deep down that left-hander could win some games.

"I had hoped that he'd be given to the All-Star break (July 15)," said Osteen. "There is nothing I can do to defend his last five starts."

"He's not in command of his pitches, not strong, yet if he hooks on with another team and given enough time to work things out, I think he might win."

In his last 15 1-3 innings, Carlton has allowed 31 hits, 23 earned runs, walked 15 and struck out 14 with a 13.53 ERA. For the season, Carlton is 4-8 with a 6.18 ERA and has issued 45 walks in 83 innings.

Carlton was 1-8 in 1985 and missed most of the season after going on the disabled list in June with a strained rotator cuff in his left shoulder.

Last Saturday, Carlton was knocked out early by the St. Louis Cardinals, and Giles said Wednesday, "I had made up my mind in the fifth inning Saturday. It took me three days to get up enough nerve to tell him."

Giles described Carlton as unemotional when the president told him of the release.

"I think he knew it was coming. He didn't say a whole lot other than that he could still pitch."

Phillies' manager John Felske said no matter what Carlton believes about his ability to pitch and win, the statistics are contrary evidence. But Felske, for whom Carlton has a 5-16 record, said he was not happy to see Carlton go.

"It hasn't been an easy decision for anybody in this organization." "We're not very happy about the decision. But it was something we had to do. Nobody is happy to see Steve Carlton walk out of our clubhouse and not return."

Felske said doctors had cautioned that with the type of injury Carlton incurred, the arm might deteriorate just from wear and tear.

The manager said the whole club is pulling for Carlton to hook on somewhere else and become the pitcher he was once.

Besides his 318 victories, Carlton's accomplishments include a National League-record 3,982 strikeouts, second only to Nolan Ryan in major league history, as well as 55 shutouts, fifth in National League history, and six 20-game seasons.

Carlton has made 671 starts, more than anyone else in National League history, and is 10th on the overall major league list with 4,961 1-3 innings pitched.

Former ECU Coach To Be Enshrined

The late Clarence Stasavich, director of Athletics at East Carolina from 1963 until his death in 1975, will be inducted into the Florida Citrus Bowl Hall of Fame during ceremonies Friday night in Orlando.

Stasavich, who served as the Pirates Head Football coach from 1962-1969, led two ECU teams to the then Tangerine Bowl in 1964 and 1965. He coached both of those squads to bowl victories, defeating Massachusetts, 14-13, in 1964 and blanking the University of Maine, 31-0, the following year.

Stasavich will be one of five inductees this year at the eighth annual Hall of Fame Banquet. Representing the Stasavich family will be Dr. Henry Van Sant, administrative assistant to the athletic director at ECU. Van Sant was a member of Stasavich's coaching staff during those years.

Stasavich, who compiled a seven year coaching record of 50-27-1, was honored as National Coach of the Year in 1964. He was inducted into the ECU Sports Hall of Fame in 1976.

Angels Complete Texas Massacre

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The California Angels are finding a little bit of heaven against the Texas Rangers this season.

Kirk McCaskill, who had a two-hitter in his previous outing against Texas, pitched a one-hitter Wednesday night as the Angels beat Texas 7-1, breaking a first-place tie with the Rangers. The victory gave California a 6-0 record against their American League Western Division rivals this season.

"They've scored nine runs in six games against us," Angels Manager Gene Mauch. "They just happened to run into the most consistent pitching we've had this season."

The only hit off McCaskill, 8-4, was a third-inning homer by Texas third baseman Steve Buechele. McCaskill allowed two walks — both of them to Buechele — and struck out 10.

"It didn't feel like a no-hitter," said McCaskill, who added that he pitched a better game in the 2-1 two-hitter against the Rangers on June 17. "I can't really explain why. Maybe it's because the one hit was a home run. You might say I came within 450 feet of a no-hitter."

In other AL games, it was Boston 5, New York 4; Toronto 5, Milwaukee 1; Seattle 6, Cleveland 1; Detroit 11, Baltimore 2; Kansas City 5, Oakland 4; and Chicago 4, Minnesota 3.

Mauch and Texas Manager Bobby Valentine agreed that California's success against Texas so far this season would not demoralize the Rangers.

"They've got a real young team, and young teams have a way of shrugging adversity off," Mauch said. "We beat them three straight at our place and they bounced back and won four in a row. No way you can count them out."

"The Angels have an experienced club and they're playing well right now, but they haven't heard the last from us, I guarantee that," Valentine said. "We just have to go to Seattle now and turn things around. We've got a lot of games left and these kids have bounced back before. Now is certainly not the time to panic."

The Angels gave McCaskill all the support he needed with a four-run third inning off Texas starter Bobby Witt, 4-6.

Rick Burleson doubled in the first run, Gary Pettis singled in another and rookie Wally Joyner knocked in two more with the first of his three singles.

Red Sox 5, Yankees 4

Boston scored five runs in the first inning and made them stand up, salvaging the final game of the three-game series against New York, the Red Sox' closest rival in the AL East. Al Nipper, 4-4, pitching his first game since undergoing surgery May 18 after suffering a severe gash behind his right knee, survived a shaky start and checked the Yankees on eight hits for seven innings before giving way to Joe Sambito.

"It was weird, a very strange feeling, in the first inning, but then I began to get my rhythm back and all the hard work in the past few weeks paid off," Nipper said.

Sambito protected the lead for his sixth save as Boston increased its lead over the Yankees to five games.

Tony Armas highlighted Boston's five-run first inning with a two-run single. Bill Buckner added a run-scoring single, Don Baylor an RBI double and Rich Gedman a sacrifice fly, giving the Red Sox a 5-2 lead against New York starter Doug Drabek, 0-1.

Tigers 11, Orioles 2

The Tigers hit four homers, two of them by Kirk Gibson, in the first four innings as they stopped Baltimore right-hander Mike Boddicker's seven-game winning streak.

Royals 5, A's 4

Kansas City, which got out of a jam in strange fashion in the top of the ninth, beat Oakland in the bottom on the inning on Jorge Orta's RBI single.

With two outs and A's runners on second and third in the ninth, Jose Canseco walked off Steve Farr, 5-1. But pinch-runner Ricky Peters, who said later he thought the bases were already loaded, started walking home and was tagged out, ending the inning.

White Sox 4, Twins 3

Bobby Bonilla scored from first base on a two-out double by Greg Walker in the sixth inning, breaking a 3-3 tie and lifting Chicago over Minnesota.

Bonilla, who had singled to center off loser Frank Viola, 7-6, hesitated as he reached third base after Walker's double into the left field corner. But when Bonilla saw the relay throw going to second base, he raced home safely ahead of Steve Lombardozzi's throw.

Mariners 6, Indians 1

Seattle left-hander Mark Langston overpowered Cleveland, striking out 15 and allowing only three hits.

Langston, 8-5, who recorded his fourth straight victory, set a team record for strikeouts, passing the previous club mark of 13 by Gaylord Perry in 1982.

Blue Jays 5, Brewers 1

Jessie Barfield and Rance Mulliniks broke open a close game with homer, while Toronto pitching held Milwaukee to six hits.

Jim Clancy, 7-5, allowed five hits over six innings, and gave up the only Brewers' run on Ben Oglivie's infield single in the top of the sixth, which made the score 2-1. Dennis Lamp allowed one hit over the last three innings for his first save.

Barfield made it 3-1 with his 18th homer in the bottom of the sixth off Milwaukee starter Tim Leary, 6-6.

Mulliniks pushed the lead to 5-1 in the seventh with his eighth homer after Tony Fernandez had singled with two out.

Coleman's Sprint Lifts Cards

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

According to Vince Coleman of the St. Louis Cardinals, "Speed kills." So does lack of same.

Coleman's speed helped the Cardinals defeat the Pittsburgh Pirates 2-1 in 10 innings Wednesday night for their sixth consecutive victory. The Los Angeles Dodgers, on the other hand, had two consecutive runners nailed at third base to defuse an eighth-inning rally in a 3-2 loss to the Atlanta Braves.

Coleman opened the Cardinals' 10th with a single off reliever Pat Clements and took second on a wild pitch before Tito Landrum walked. Tom Herr singled to right and Coleman, who had stopped at third, sped home when Joe Orsulak's first base struck Herr on the leg near first base.

"He was worried about having to make a good throw and had to hurry," Coleman said. Orsulak agreed.

"You know with Coleman running that you've got to come up with the ball and get rid of it quick and throw it accurately," he said. "Actually, it turned out that I could have taken my time on it. The throw was a little low."

The Pirates argued that Herr intentionally moved into the path of the throw, a claim disallowed by umpiring crew chief John Kibler and denied by Herr.

"I was trying to get out of the way," Herr said.

Meanwhile, Atlanta led Los Angeles 3-0 after 7½ innings on Rick Mahler's one-hit pitching and Bob Horner's two-run double in the top of the eighth. But in the bottom of the inning, Franklin Stubbs, who singled in the third inning and again in the ninth, beat out a bunt and took second on Mike Marshall's single.

Paul Assenmacher relieved and surrendered a single to Len Matuszek that loaded the bases and a two-run single to Enos Cabell. But Matuszek was forced at third on Ed Amelung's bunt and, after Gene Garber relieved Assenmacher, Cabell was out at third on a botched hit-and-run play with pinch hitter Ken Landreaux at bat.

"I didn't do anything right," Landreaux said. "I was waiting for a good pitch to drive and wasn't expecting a hit-and-run. I must have turned away when he gave me the sign."

In other National League games, San Diego downed San Francisco 3-1, Cincinnati nipped Houston 4-3 in 10 innings, New York beat Montreal 5-2 and Chicago outlasted Philadelphia 10-7.

After being held to one hit by Danny Cox over the first seven innings and trailing 1-0 on Andy Van Slyke's fifth-inning homer, the Pirates tied the score in the eighth. Cox had retired 16 batters in a row when Tony Pena led off the Pittsburgh eighth with a double and scored on pinch hitter U. L. Washington's single.

Braves 3, Dodgers 2

Rick Honeycutt, who has the lowest ERA in the majors, allowed an unearned run in seven innings but it was enough to make him the loser. Atlanta took a 1-0 lead with two out in the sixth when Dale Murphy tripled and scored when third baseman Cabell misplayed Horner's sharp grounder. It was the Dodgers' 87th error of the season, most in the majors.

Padres 3, Giants 1

Dave Dravecky's two-run single in the fourth inning helped him snap a personal four-game losing streak. Dravecky, Lance McCullers, Craig Lefferts and Rich Gossage blanked the Giants until Rob Thompson homered in the ninth inning.

San Diego scored off Vida Blue in the first inning on an error by third baseman Chris Brown, Tony Gwynn's single and a sacrifice fly by Kevin McReynolds. Blue walked Carmelo Martinez to open the fourth and gave up a two-out double to Bip Roberts before Dravecky's single.

Reds 4, Astros 3

The Astros blew a chance to regain first place in the NL West when Dave Parker's 10th-inning single enabled Cincinnati to beat Houston and kept the Astros one-half game out and only one game in front of San Diego.

With one out in the 10th, Tracy Jones singled off Houston reliever Aurelio Lopez, took second on Dave Concepcion's grounder and scored on Parker's single. "I don't mind being the hero. When the game's on the line I like to be out there. I'm a competitor," Parker said. He's got me out two times before and made me look bad. Tonight he got the screwball up in a situation when he had to get the ball over the plate."

Mets 5, Expos 2

Kevin Mitchell and Len Dykstra doubled home runs in a four-run fourth inning as the Mets salvaged the finale of a three-game series and moved nine games ahead of Montreal in the NL East. Winning pitcher Sid Fernandez, 9-2, scattered six hits over six innings and also singled the go-ahead run in the fourth. George Foster added New York's fifth run with his 12th homer of the season.

Cubs 10, Phillies 7

Rookie Dave Martinez's two-run double tied the score in the sixth inning and two batters later Shawn Dunston put Chicago ahead with another two-run double. The Cubs, who blew a 3-0 lead and trailed 5-3, knocked out Charles Hudson in their four-run sixth. Martinez doubled for his first major-league extra-base hit and RBIs. After Tom Hume relieved and hit pinch hitter Terry Francona with a pitch, Dunston, who singled home Chicago's first run in the second inning, doubled home two more.

USFL Winds Up Testimony

NEW YORK (AP) - With a "I'm telling it like it is" performance worthy of his most newsworthy moments on the air, Howard Cosell has wound up the USFL's case in its $1.69 billion antitrust suit against the NFL.

After 20 days of testimony from 22 witnesses over seven weeks, the fledgling league on Wednesday rested its case with the jury of five women and one man. The NFL case now begins with Chet Simmons, the former USFL commissioner as the first witness.

But for spectacle, Simmons will have to go far to top Cosell, who spent 3 1/2 hours on the witness stand Wednesday with a performance peppered with references to subjects ranging from the Iran hostage crisis to the old "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" puppet show. It was an appearance that had the packed courtroom in a continuous uproar.

"During his direct testimony, Cosell contradicted several points made earlier by ABC witnesses, including a statement by Arledge, the head of ABC News and Sports, who testified that Rozelle had never expressed his displeasure over the contract the network gave the USFL for its start.

And while he said he was disinterested, Cosell said at one point, "I'm here to help these people," referring to the USFL. He also said under cross-examination that Donald Trump, the owner of the New Jersey Generals, had offered him a chance to buy into the USFL team.

But that was overshadowed by the spectacle of Cosell himself and of his sparring with NFL attorney Frank Rothman, who once represented him. When he finished, U.S. District Judge Peter K. Leisure remarked to him: "Thank you very much, Mr. Cosell, we enjoyed having you with us."

Throughout his time on the stand, the first 39 minutes of which Cosell spent talking about himself, the spectators were treated to a show that was as much "Cosell on Cosell" - the title of one of his books - as it was an antitrust trial. The words, the phrases, the intonation, were all right from the television set and his amplified words could be heard well down the hallways outside the courtroom.

At various times, he referred to the Iran hostage crisis, his books, President Reagan, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, Johnny Carson, Walter Cronkite, Coca-Cola, Dr. Pepper, singer Michael Jackson's cross-country tour, fight promoter Don

King, "Kukla, Fran and Ollie" and the time early in his career when he "was going locker room to locker room with a 40-pound tape recorder on my back."

Later, he ran down a roster of the 1969 New York Jets: "No. 12, Joe Willie Namath; No. 32, from Maryland State, Emerson Booser; No. 83, the wide receiver from Texas, George Sauer Jr. ..."

At one point, he interrupted himself, telling Rothman, "this is irrelevant, Mr. Rothman, that's colorful" and at another he suggested that he had pursued a story "like no other journalist ever has."

Later, after one long dissertation, Rothman told Cosell: "I'm not as smart as you, sir" to which Cosell replied: "Well, Frank, we learned that long ago."

The crux of his testimony concerned discussions with Arledge and Arledge's deputy, Jim Spence. The television issue is critical to the trial. The USFL alleges that the NFL pressured the three major networks into denying it a contract for its switch to the fall and is asking that the established league be thrown off at least one of the networks.

Cosell described a 1984 meeting with Arledge, the head of ABC news and sports, at "a very long luncheon" at which Arledge described Rozelle's feelings about the USFL.

"Roone said to me," Cosell testified, "you know, you've got to understand. Pete is all over me on the grounds that I'm sustaining the USFL with the spring contract." When he told me that I was shocked."

Under cross-examination, Rothman got Cosell to acknowledge that, with or without pressure, the USFL had received a contract from ABC.

Arledge, contacted later Wednesday at a dinner in New York, said: "I stand by my testimony in court that Rozelle never expressed any displeasure. It was only Bowie Kuhn, the baseball commissioner, who was unhappy. He felt it was baseball's time of the year on television, and not football's."

Cosell also pointedly contradicted Arledge's deputy, Jim Spence, who had testified that ABC had a policy against competitive bidding. That,

Spence said, is why ABC didn't want the NFL to but the Super Bowl up to bid, a point the USFL claims gives the league leverage over the networks.

"The fact is," Cosell said, "competitive bidding is a way of life in television despite any protestations to the contrary."

Cosell also testified that he was told by Chuck Sullivan, the president of the New England Patriots, that the NFL's supplemental draft of USFL players was an antitrust violation. He said the comment was made at a party at Madison Square Garden before the fight between Marvelous Marvin Hagler and Roberto Duran.

Cosell described Sullivan as wearing a "rock-and-roll-type outfit" because the Patriots' president was promoting the Michael Jackson tour at the time. Cosell also ran off a long list of those present, including former deputy secretary of state Warren Christopher "who some of you will remember played an integral role in the release of our hostages in Iran."

Of the encounter with Sullivan, Cosell testified:

"I said 'Chuckaroo, how could you put in the supplemental draft because its overtly antitrust?' He said, 'I know it as a lawyer, and I told them that, but they did it anyway.'"

The 1939 Texas A & M football team held its combined opposition to an average gain of only 1.71 yards on 447 plays.

Labor's Top Lobbyists Fighting To Hold Line

By SPENCER RICH
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — About 12 years ago, the late Clarence Mitchell, then one of the rare black lobbyists working the Capitol Hill corridors of power, came to testify at a civil rights hearing chaired by an old-style southern senator.

Mitchell, representing the NAACP, was scheduled to appear early, but the senator found one reason after another to slip white witnesses in ahead of Mitchell: This witness had to make a plane; another had to go back to the office. After two or three hours, Mitchell, angry but determined to keep calm, was allowed to appear — last.

For decades, that was a way of life for black lobbyists on Capitol Hill. They were few, they usually focused on civil rights issues, and they often faced insensitivity, humiliation and barriers.

Today this is changing, and Robert M. "Bob" McGlotten is evidence of the change. At 48, he has just become the first black named to one of the most influential lobbying jobs in the nation, representing millions of people — most of them white.

McGlotten is the new director of the legislative department of the AFL-CIO, which despite membership losses in recent years remains the most powerful social welfare lobbying force in the country. The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations has 13.6 million members, numerous political action committees run by itself or its 99 international unions, and large numbers of volunteer political workers.

Civil rights, an area in which McGlotten has a lot of experience, is an important part of his legislative assignment on Capitol Hill. But he is also a labor man down to his bones, working on an array of issues that he believes affect all workers, white and black.

International trade problems and the threat they represent to American jobs. The effect of tax revision on low- and middle-income workers. Budget allocations for public services. Improvement of the minimum wage. Strengthening the bargaining rights of unions and the prevention of what the AFL-CIO sees as legislative union-busting. Protection of Social Security, unemployment insurance and Medicare benefits. Improvement of pensions, workplace health and safety, job training.

McGlotten was raised in an Italian neighborhood of South Philadelphia that had only a sprinkling of blacks. His father was a teacher in Delaware and then a chef in Philadelphia. McGlotten attended the public schools and then St. Joseph's College, studying industrial relations, and the University of Pennsylvania, studying law. He has a law degree but has never practiced.

His first job was as an industrial relations trainee in the Philadelphia subway and bus system. Later he worked for the Philadelphia transportation workers Local 234; for the AFL-CIO Council of Philadelphia as an organizer for the Sulfite, Pulp and Paper Workers and the American Federation of Teachers; and for the Rev. Leon Sullivan, a black leader and organizer of job programs for minorities.

In the late 1960s McGlotten spent three years in the national AFL-CIO civil rights department here, working to get minority participants into building trades jobs, then spent two years at the AFL-CIO's Human Resources Development Institute working on job training and affirmative action programs. Next came a spell as special assistant to Labor Secretary Peter J. Brennan. He joined the AFL-CIO legislative department in 1974.

As director of the legislation department, McGlotten has seven AFL-CIO lobbyists working directly under him, plus the assistance of various AFL-CIO departments specializing in subjects such as Social Security. He also can seek the help of lobbyists from constituent unions and other labor groups. Every Monday when Congress is in session, McGlotten meets with about 60 lobbyists from 25 to 30 affiliated unions to exchange information and discuss strategy.

For 12 years, he has been a presence on Capitol Hill, huddling with Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., Democratic leaders Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., and Rep. James C. Wright Jr., D-Texas, and a host of others of both parties on the major bills.

McGlotten lobbied heavily for a trade protection bill that was passed by the House over presidential opposition in May. "The biggest issue for labor now is trade — the question of fairness," he said in a recent interview. "We want to protect our markets from unfair trade practices, whether it's dumping by others or not allowing us to export goods to other countries." Labor believes, he said, that the administration is not doing enough to combat practices by other countries that are wiping out millions of American manufacturing jobs.

Tax revision is another major issue for the AFL-CIO, and while the organization does not endorse all provisions of either the House bill or the Senate committee bill, it supports both versions generally, in part because they would "lower the burden of taxes on low-income and middle-income people, close loopholes and shelters that have no economic significance in the real world." And the AFL-CIO strongly opposed taxing workers on the value of premiums for health insurance and pension contributions paid by their employers. "We won on that," McGlotten said.

As Congress begins to focus on the 1987 budget, the AFL-CIO is striving for more money for grants to communities for basic services, and to hold the line on funding of basic federal programs. "After all, they don't have to gut the occupational safety and health laws to kill them — just cut funds and there's nobody to administer them," McGlotten said.

The AFL-CIO is one of the most powerful groups in the Save Our Security (SOS) coalition of more than 100 organizations opposed to cuts in Social Security and Medicare, and in the Health Security Action Council. "There are shifting coalitions on other matters — it depends on the issue," McGlotten said.

He said his activities and the political action committees that make contributions to candidates are only "a small part" of labor's political clout. "The important part is that our members are willing to participate in politics at the grass-roots level. Our members talk to the members at home. We're able to really mobilize in almost every congressional district in the country."

The AFL-CIO is also a major participant in the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a coalition of 185 labor, black, senior-citizen, women's, church, disability and social action groups that spearhead civil rights action.

But McGlotten noted the change in recent years that has seen black lobbyists move into areas other than civil rights. "The number of blacks in lobbying jobs has increased since I first started in 1974," he said. "Blacks are a part of society and most politicians understand that. Institutions are picking their best lobbyists to represent them, and if they're black, they're black."

McGlotten quickly listed lobbyists and legislative analysts who are black and are working not for civil rights groups but for labor and business organizations on general legislation: Gene Casraiss, United Auto Workers; Calvin Johnson, AFL-CIO; Kimberly Parker and Mike Reid, American Postal Workers Union; Peggy Bracy Brown, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees; Earl C. Robinson, International Association of Machinists; Dave Claxton, United Food and Commercial Workers; Stacey Mobley, du Pont; Wendell Holloway, Ford (now on leave to run for Congress); Freddie Lucas, General Motors.

"In my years of lobbying, I've never known a member to shut the door because I was black," said McGlotten. "This is 1986, and we're talking about issues that affect all workers, black and white. Society has changed."

McGlotten does not assert that the world of 1986 is completely without dislike or prejudice, because "the general attitudes out in the public apply in the Congress, and you instinctively know if someone has an attitude" against blacks. "But as far as closing the door, I haven't found it."

"In fact, there's more hostility in some quarters because you're from labor than because you're black."

Scientific Team Studies Vegetables As Farm Crop

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer
TIFTON, Ga. (AP) — Scientists at a top agricultural research facility are exploring all aspects of vegetable growing — from insect control to marketing — to determine whether such alternative crops can improve profits for beleaguered farmers.

"We are not discounting any possibility," said K. Dean Batal, a horticulturist at the University of Georgia's Coastal Plain Experiment Station. "It's quite a team effort involving practically every expert on this station."

In the fields surrounding the Experiment Station and at two other locations in south Georgia, the scientists have planted special plots to determine if crops such as broccoli, cauliflower, cucumbers, Irish potatoes, bell peppers and leaf lettuce can be grown economically.

Uncertainty over the future of tobacco and dwindling profits on all traditional row crops like soybeans and corn have forced farmers to consider alternatives, but the experts are quick to point out that vegetables are not for everyone.

"I see that there's going to be more producers growing vegetables in this area," said James E. Epperson, a University of Georgia agricultural economist in Athens. "But you're not going to take 40,000 farmers and turn them into vegetable growers. There's just not that much demand."

Successful vegetable growers have to establish their reliability among buyers and be extremely skillful in scheduling their crops to meet demand, he said.

"You can't go from row crops to vegetables overnight," Epperson said. "You have to be a specialist. Market coordination requires extreme skill. If you mess up one time, you're finished. They (buyers) won't deal with you anymore."

The market value of horticultural crops, which include fruits and pecans, vegetables and ornamentals, totaled about $665 million in Georgia last year, and Epperson said south Georgia's fresh produce market is growing at a rate of about 4 percent each year.

"The good thing is that we've got many, many vegetables," he added. "There's no limit to the kinds of vegetables that can be grown. Since we've got so many there's quite a bit of room for new producers."

But many problems have to be ironed out before Georgia can become a major vegetable supplier on the scale of California and Florida.

"There's no shortage of vegetables in the grocery store," said Ray Worley, acting head of the Experiment Station's horticulture department. "What we've got to do is put something in at a lower cost than someone else, or of better quality, or something new they don't have."

Horticulturists like Worley and Sharad C. Phatak are studying growing methods. Entomologist Richard B. Chalfant is examining pest control problems. Plant pathologists like Ronald D. Gitaitis and Donald R. Sumner are trying out different crop rotations and other methods to combat plant diseases.

Others involved in the research include weed scientists, geneticists who perfect varieties suitable for the state, agricultural engineers who develop the specialized equipment needed to plant, irrigate and harvest the crops and economists like Epperson.

Batal and Epperson are taking part in a three-state project involving 12 vegetables to determine whether farmers could grow them at a profit. Scientists from each of the three states — North and South Carolina and Georgia — will meet July 1-2 in Fletcher, N.C., to discuss their findings.

Phatak noted recently that Georgia farmers would face higher production costs because of insects, weeds and disease. A sweet-corn grower in southwest Georgia, for example, has to apply insecticide 40 to 50 times during the fall growing season, compared to Canadian growers, who would have to spray only three or four times.

Nevertheless, Phatak said he believes Georgia has the potential for commercial vegetable production.

Two major producers of fresh vegetables for the winter market, California and Florida, could face problems in years to come. Some experts contend Florida's burgeoning population will deprive the state of agricultural land and a growing water shortage in both states is likely to increase production costs. Georgia, on the other hand, has an abundance of land and water.

The Peach State already is a leader in cow peas, turnip greens and collards. It ranks fifth in sweet potato production and is a top producer of watermelons.

In an effort to generate additional sources of cash, growers within a 50-mile radius of Tifton have established a $15 million-a-year transplant industry that supplies vegetable plants to producers in the Midwest.

Another positive sign is the recent growth in the state's shipping and packing industry. In the last eight years, at least 14 firms have been established to ship produce to other parts of the country, according to Batal.

Benny Goodman, who died on June 13, was the first big band leader to bring black musicians into a white band — for example, by making use of the vibes of Lionel Hampton (left). Jazz, which has influenced music throughout the world, was created by unknown black artists. But blacks often had a hard time receiving credit for their efforts. The earliest jazz recordings were made in 1917 by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band. All the members of this band were white.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll-call votes during the week ending June 20.

House
SOUTH AFRICA — By a vote of 150 for and 268 against, the House rejected an amendment to soften proposed U.S. economic sanctions against the white-minority government of South Africa.

The amendment sought to exempt from the sanctions any South African-based company, American or foreign, that abides by the fair employment code developed by Philadelphia minister Leon Sullivan.

Employers under the Sullivan principles must provide non-discriminatory working and housing conditions. About 75 percent of the approximately 280 U.S. companies doing business in South Africa are Sullivan signatories.

The vote occurred just before the House repudiated the administration and passed, on a non-record vote, a far-reaching bill to penalize Pretoria for its official policy of racial segregation known as apartheid.

The bill (HR 4868) cuts virtually all economic U.S. ties with South Africa, requiring American companies to cease operating there within 180 days. Also, it bans all imports from South Africa except for certain strategic metals, and bars South African airliners from landing in the U.S.

The bill was sent to the Republican-controlled Senate where its future appears dim.

Dan Burton, R-Ind., who sponsored this amendment, said strengthening compliance with the Sullivan principles was preferable to economic sanctions that would diminish U.S. influences over the South African government.

Opponent Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., said, "The struggle against apartheid is no longer a struggle for desegregated workplaces or improved working conditions — it is a struggle for political rights."

Members voting yes wanted to soften the sanctions bill.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were William Cobey, R-4; Howard Coble, R-6; Alex McMillan, R-9; James Broyhill, R-10, and Bill Hendon, R-11.

Those voting no were Walter Jones, D-1; Tim Valentine, D-2; Charles Whitley, D-3; Stephen Neal, D-5; Charles Rose, D-7, and W.G. Hefner, D-8.

THE SALT TREATY — By a vote of 187 for and 222 against, the House rejected a Republican-sponsored amendment reinforcing President Reagan's plan to disregard certain limits of the SALT II arms control treaty with the Soviet Union.

Reagan recently announced the U.S. no longer is bound by the 1979 pact, which the Senate has not ratified but which has been respected by U.S. administrations.

Accusing the Soviets of repeatedly violating the treaty, Reagan said the U.S. likely will exceed SALT limits later this year when it deploys another B-52 bomber equipped with Cruise missiles.

Democrats have made Reagan's announcements into an issue, and this vote occurred during debate on their non-binding resolution (H Con Res 350) urging Reagan to continue abiding by SALT II, a resolution later sent to the Senate.

Echoing Reagan's views, the rejected GOP amendment stated the U.S. should abide by SALT II only to the extent that the Soviets obey it.

Members voting no wanted Reagan to continue adhering to the SALT II treaty.

North Carolina representatives voting yes were Valentine, Cobey, Coble, McMillan, Broyhill and Hendon.

Those voting no were Jones, Whitley, Neal, Rose and Hefner.

Senate

TAX RATES — By a vote of 71 for and 29 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to add a third tax rate, aimed at well-off individuals.

als, to the two rates set forth in the Finance Committee's sweeping tax reform bill.

Under the committee bill, individuals would pay at the rate of either 15 percent or 27 percent, and capital gains would lose their current preferential treatment and be taxed at the same rate as other income.

Under this amendment, a rate of 35 percent would have been added to apply to incomes of at least $79,000. The 15 percent bottom rate would have been lowered to 14 percent, and capital gains would have continued to receive preferential tax treatment.

The vote occurred as the historic legislation (HR 3838) neared final Senate passage and conference with the House.

Bob Packwood, R-Ore., said the amendment should be killed because high taxation of the rich "will encourage us to start to put back in the deductions, exemptions and privileges for the very rich that we have gotten rid of in this bill."

George Mitchell, D-Maine, who sponsored the amendment, said middle-income taxpayers were treated shabbily by the bill, but that his amendment "will more than double the amount of tax relief going to those American families who earn between $30,000 and $40,000."

Senators voting no favored the amendment.

North Carolina Sens. John East, R, and Jesse Helms, R, both voted yes.

GOVERNMENT PENSIONS — By a vote of 57 for and 42 against, the Senate tabled (killed) an amendment to retain a pension tax benefit primarily for federal workers and certain other government employees nationwide who contribute to their retirement funds.

The vote left intact a plan to end the tax break as part of the pending tax reform legislation (above).

Under the disputed provision, a federal civil servant, for example, upon retirement can recover certain pre-taxed contributions to his pension plan without having to pay additional taxes on his money. He has three years after retirement to take advantage of the provision.

Bill Bradley, D-N.J., who voted to kill the amendment, said, "The effect of this proposal is to raise taxes on 20 million Americans... in order to pay for the benefit that will be enjoyed by one million Americans."

Amendment sponsor Paul Trible, R-Va., said, "It is simply unfair to change the rules of the game" that federal retirees had used for 30 years.

Senators voting yes wanted to end the tax break that primarily benefits government pensioners.

North Carolina Sens. East and Helms both voted yes.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT — By a vote of 18 for and 80 against, the Senate failed to table an amendment to retain the U.S. tax on foreigners' capital gains from the sale of U.S. property.

The vote occurred during debate on the tax overhaul bill (above), which had proposed eliminating the tax in keeping with the way other countries treat similar gains made within their boundaries by American investors.

It marked one of the few setbacks for sponsors of the legislation, who had feared that too many successful amendments would collapse the bill.

The tax, which generates $1.2 billion annually, was enacted in the late 1970s in response to concern that foreigners were buying too much American farmland. Under the amendment, the revenue is to be used to permit farmers to continue income averaging and to enhance certain taxpayers' medical deductions.

Senators voting no wanted to retain the tax on real estate gains by foreigners.

North Carolina Sens. East and Helms both voted no.

To succeed at bridge, you need to learn to plan the play of the hand in a logical manner. Put yourself in the South seat and see how you would tackle a four-spade contract after the lead of the ten of diamonds.

The bidding has been routine North made a forcing raise of your one-spade opening and, with a dead minimum, you could do nothing other than raise to game.

The diamond opening lead has solved your problem in that suit. East produces the king, you win and, since your contract is unbreakable if trumps split evenly, you cash the ace-king of spades. Unfortunately, West shows out on the second round. You have two potential heart losers and a possible club loser; you might avoid at least one of these either if East has the queen of clubs or West has the ace or jack of hearts.

With all those finesses staring you in the face, did you spot that the winning line is to avoid any finesses? You simply bang down the ace-king of clubs and, if the queen does not drop, cash the high diamond and then continue with the jack of clubs and claim your contract regardless of who wins the trick.

If East has the queen, he is end played and must either give you a ruff-stuff or else lead a heart and thereby limit your losers in that suit to one. So let's suppose that West wins and shifts to a heart. You call for a high honor from dummy and East must duck to avoid the end play. So now your throw him in with his master trump, and this time he is truly thrown in. No matter what he returns, you have held your heart losers to one.

Court OKs Use Of Photographs

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Penthouse magazine may republish nude photographs of television actress Priscilla Barnes but may not identify them as her, a federal appeals court has ruled.

Penthouse initially published the photographs under an assumed name in 1976, and sought to republish them naming Ms. Barnes after she became well known as a star of the TV show "Three's Company."

Because of a dispute over how Ms.

Barnes agreed to be identified, the magazine sought federal court approval of its plan to republish the photographs. But U.S. District Judge James Ideman ordered Penthouse to refrain from publishing the photographs and to return the originals to the actress.

Ideman's order was overturned Tuesday by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here, which ruled that Penthouse must refrain from using Ms. Barnes' name in connection with the photographs.

Court Eases Rulings On Libel

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — News media lawyers predict that public figures who say they have been libeled will find it tougher to place their lawsuits before a jury because of a new Supreme Court ruling.

By a 6-3 vote in a case involving columnist Jack Anderson, the court Wednesday made it easier for trial judges to approve pretrial dismissals of such lawsuits. The ruling reversed a 1984 decision by appeals Judge Antonin Scalia, President Reagan's nominee for the court.

"I think it's a cause for quiet celebration," said New York lawyer Robert Sack, who represented numerous news organizations in a friend-of-the-court brief in the closely watched case.

"As a practical matter, it's a very important decision that could save immense wear, tear and expense ... protecting the press against unnecessary litigation," Sack said.

The justices ordered a federal appeals court to consider dismissing a libel suit against Anderson and a magazine he publishes, The Investigator.

Anderson and the magazine were sued by the Liberty Lobby and the group's founder, Willis Carto. The suit contends two 1981 articles falsely described the group as pro-Nazi and Carto as a man who tried to emulate Adolf Hitler.

Anderson's syndicated newspaper column is not involved in the suit.

The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here had ruled that the suit should proceed to a jury trial. Scalia, in writing for the appeals court, said imposing the increased proof requirement before the trial "would effectively force the plaintiff to try his entire case" first before the judge and then before the jury.

Led by Justice Byron R. White, the high court said the appeals court used a too-lenient standard of proof in determining that the Liberty Lobby and Carto were entitled to a jury trial.

A series of Supreme Court rulings has established that the Constitution's free-press protections require public figures who say they have been libeled to prove the allegedly libelous statements are false and were made with "actual malice" — knowledge or reckless disregard of the falsity.

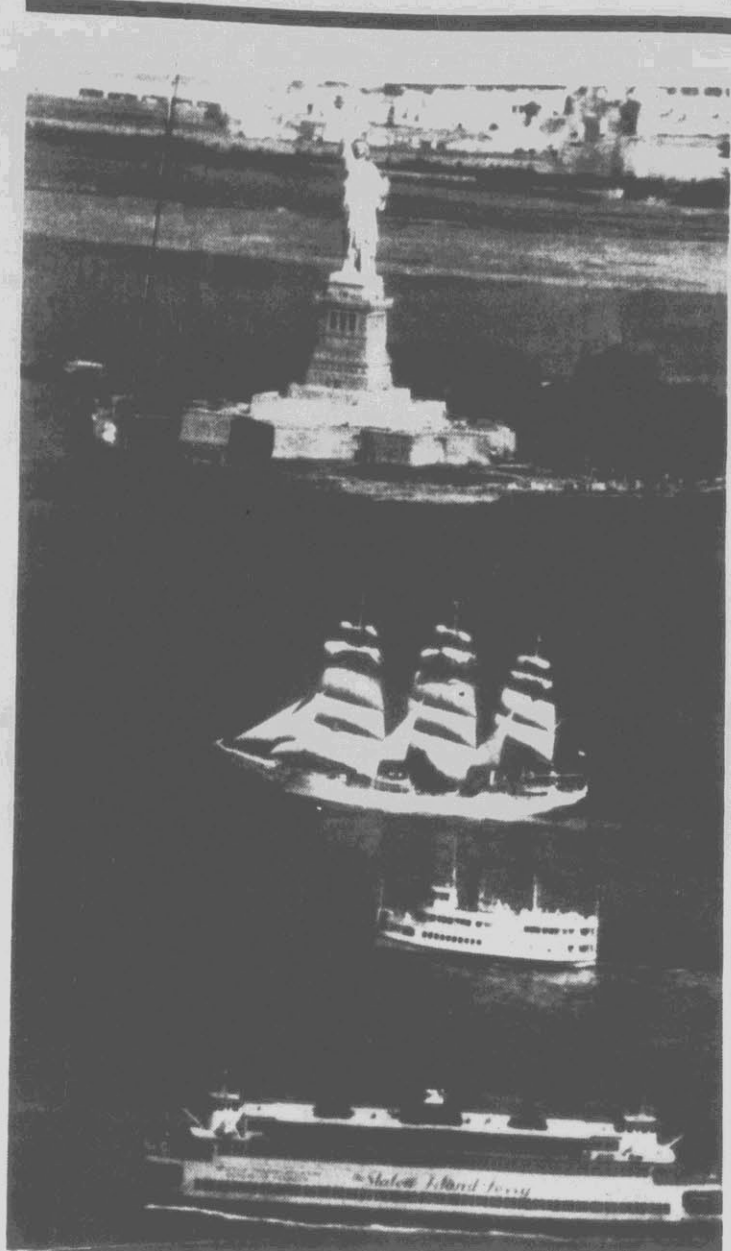

And the public figures must offer "clear and convincing" proof of that malice.

Private citizens who sue for libel must prove only that the allegedly libelous statements are false and were made negligently.

The standard of proof facing them also is a more lenient one — that the "preponderance of evidence" favors them.

At issue was whether public figures also face the more stringent "clear and convincing" standard of proof when trying to defeat a libel defendant's request for a pre-trial dismissal of the lawsuit.

White, joined by five other justices, said the more stringent standard also applies when judges are asked for "summary judgments" — pre-trial dismissals.

Graphic Computers Add Sparkle To TV's Imagery

By RICHARD DE ATLEY
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some of television's best visual moments are the slam-bang station identifications or the brilliant program opening sequences which make some shows look like a limp afterthought.

The three-dimensional network logos that dance across the screen are the product of graphic computers. While the expense limits such graphics to just a few seconds, the demand for such imagery has increased.

It also has sparked a new growth industry for powerful computers that once were only purchased for high-tech defense companies to design aircraft or train the pilots that fly them.

"We wanted to turn it into a general product," said Ken Dozier, president and chief executive officer of Interactive Machines Inc. His company makes the IM1500, an increasingly popular image-making machine.

"In both computers and graphics, there's an emerging market that is above the general computer market and below the supercomputer market. That's the area we're headed for," said Dozier, a former rock musician.

The $40,000 IM1500 computer that creates three dimensional line images was designed for architects, but so far, not one architectural firm has bought the machine.

Instead, IM1500s are used to project realistic images of enemy and friendly aircraft on a dome at the pilot training center at the Lemoore (Calif.) Naval Air Station. The computers also are at several graphic imaging firms, and two of them are at work for Universal Studios.

The computers and their visual image programmers can make a three-dimensional network logo loop across the screen, or rise triumphantly over a moving pattern of smaller logos.

Universal, the first studio to start its own computer graphics department, discovered it would be cheaper to produce the images in-house than contract to the growing number of independent firms.

"The studio is starting to use more video technology," said Ron Saks, head of the department. "Any time people are exposed to the computer graphics, it pushes up their expectations, and the producers and directors want to incorporate them."

Saks' department also does contract work, and has created computer images for television commercials such as the flying electrical plug for Circuit City stores.

The unit also has done work for other studios, such as the Warner Bros. movie "Spies Like Us," and the "Twilight Zone" television show.

For Universal, Saks has created special effects and computer images used in "Knight Rider," where the computers are used to create the line images seen on KITT the Car's radar screen, and "Airwolf," where computer-created missiles were cut into a film sequence.

"It normally would have been done with rotoscoping, which is hand-animation to match the existing action. The images then would have been shot onto high-contrast film and then composited with the other action," said Saks.

"But we used the computers to build three-dimensional rockets, and once they were done we used computer rotoscoping to line up and position them in the action," said Saks. "We were able in less time to do more effects. We could do more — faster and cheaper."

Typically, a finished computer-generated image, such as the opening sequence of the "NBC Nightly News," can cost anywhere from $3,000 to $5,000 a second to produce. Obviously, there's no room for mistakes.

What makes such images possible is the relatively cheaper cost, about $100 a second, of creating a skeletal version of the images on computers such as the IM1500, and rehearsing their movements before adding the colors and shading for the finished product.

Six Plays On Broadway Will Close This Weekend

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Six plays, including a long-running Neil Simon comedy, close this weekend, reducing by more than one-third the number of productions currently on Broadway.

The casualties include Simon's "Biloxi Blues"; the revival of Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey into Night" starring Jack Lemmon; "The Boys in Autumn" with George C. Scott; the English hit "Benefactors"; "The Petition," starring Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn, and a revival of "Loot," Joe Orton's black comedy.

"Business is not good. Normally this would be a pretty good time of the year," said Douglas Urbanski, one of the producers of "Benefactors." "I'm only guessing, but I think that the people who are coming to New York this summer are not really theatergoers."

Only "Biloxi Blues," a hit from the 1984-85 season, and "Benefactors," which had a six-month run, made money, while "The Boys in Autumn" was performed at the non-profit Circle in the Square. The rest closed at substantial losses.

"Benefactors," which returned its more than $800,000 investment last May, suffered a drop in business when two of its stars, Sam Waterston and Glenn Close, left the show two weeks ago. It was shut out in competition for Tony Awards as was "The Petition," "Long Day's Journey into Night" and "Loot."

Shows that were big Tony winners — "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," "I'm Not Rappaport" and "Sweet Charity" — have spurred at the box office. All are doing business of more than 90 percent capacity.

Some of the shows will have life after Broadway. "Long Day's Journey into Night" heads for London in July and then engagements in Tel Aviv and Los Angeles.

Still, Broadway is looking toward what promises to be its busiest summer in years. Fourteen shows remain on Broadway, including "Cats," still a hot ticket after more than three years. A 15th, the revival of "Arsenic and Old Lace," starring Jean Stapleton, Polly Holliday and Tony Roberts, opens Thursday.

Robert DeNiro arrives next month in "Cuba and His Teddy Bear," a drama about a drug dealer and his son. The play transfers to Broadway

July 16 for a 10-week run following a sold-out engagement at the New York Shakespeare Festival's Public Theater.

Three big musicals are scheduled to open in August. They include "Honky Tonk Nights," a look at black vaudeville; "Me and My Girl," the London smash that features the hit song "The Lambeth Walk," and "Rags," starring Teresa Stratas and Larry Kert, about immigrants on New York's Lower East Side in the early 1900s.

Allmans To Play

MACON, Ga. (AP) — Gregg Allman and the other surviving members of the Allman Brothers Band plan to reunite for a July 12 performance, their first concert reunion in four years.

"I hope there can be a 1980s Allman Brothers Band without losing what the whole idea is about, which is just playing good music," drummer Jai Johnny "Jaimoe" Johnson said Tuesday.

Johnson and keyboard player Chuck Leavell, who joined the band following the death of guitarist Duane Allman in 1971, said the group will play at the Volunteer Jam concert in Nashville, Tenn.

"I said yes and everybody else has agreed," Leavell said.

Joe Sullivan, a spokesman for the concert, would not confirm the band will perform, but said "there's always a surprise list of guests."

The Macon-based rock group was popular during the 1970s and broke up in 1982 with three of its six original members.

Berry Oakley, the band's original bassist, was killed in a motorcycle accident in 1972 and Johnson left in 1980. In addition to Johnson, original band members Gregg Allman, Dickey Betts and Butch Trucks will perform at the concert.

Trooper Killed With Custer Finally Joins Other Victims

By BILL CURRY
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

CUSTER BATTLEFIELD, Mont. — In a solemn military ceremony that so long eluded him, a young American soldier known only as "Trooper Mike" was finally laid to rest Wednesday, 110 years after he fell in battle with George Armstrong Custer.

His remains had been overlooked in a previous mass burial ceremony in 1881, but on Wednesday, almost to the very hour that Custer was overrun in the Battle of the Little Bighorn, a seven-member military escort, in rigid respect, bore him at last in a flag-draped container to his grave.

His actual name is known to none, and he was interred with the anonymous remains of 33 others killed during Custer's Last Stand — remains newly brought to light as the result of an extraordinary archeological examination of the Custer Battlefield.

"The unnamed soldiers honored here today are symbols of soldiers of all wars and deserve our respect and reverence," said John D. McDermott of the President's Advisory Council on Historic Preservation. "Let us come to hope ... that in future years we may come to fully understand and appreciate what happened here."

Already, the archeological effort here is offering new insight into the men and events of June 25, 1876, when Custer and 209 others were slain by Sioux and Cheyenne warriors as he rode to attack their Indian village.

"We're getting a much better description of the flow of battle," Douglas D. Scott, a National Park Service archeologist who supervised the effort, says of the fighting that spawned a century of myth, speculation and historic disputes over what happened at the Little Bighorn River that day. "We can get some idea of individual movement."

"We have perpetuated one of the myths: Last Stand Hill with Custer and 40 to 50 of his men may have been a last stand. Last Stand Hill may very well be one of the last places to fall."

By meticulous plotting of bullets, casings and other battle remnants, Scott and others have, in essence, reconstructed the battlefield as a "crime scene," complete with ballistics comparisons that allowed them to chart the movement of individual weapons through battle.

The reconstruction more closely matches Indian accounts of the battle than the Army's, Scott says, supporting Indian accounts that the 7th Cavalry fought bravely and was not routed, as some historians have suggested. "A running fight?" he says. "No, it was not."

But the team is also discovering facts about the individual men who died with Custer — including the fact that some shouldn't have been here at all because they were too young to enlist.

They have also found, Scott said, that the Indians who swarmed over the cavalry troops that day were far better armed than previously believed.

The archeological work here began two years ago, when James Court, superintendent of the Custer Battlefield National Monument, seized on an Aug. 9, 1983, prairie fire that had denuded much of the battlefield. That presented the opportunity for the first systematic search for battle remnants.

In addition, Court saw the opportunity to solve the riddle of the markers that had been placed on the battlefield supposedly marking the spots where men had died. "There were 260 markers," Court says, "but only 150 of the 260 markers bore some semblance of being right." Archeologists found that many paired hillside markers actually represented one fallen soldier. In what may well be the most extensive use of metal detectors ever in an archeological investigation, volunteers then spent the summers of 1984 and 1985 locating, unearthing and recovering 2,200 artifacts, 411 human bones and 200 animal bones.

Among the most surprising of finds was the nearly complete skeletal remains of the man dubbed Trooper Mike by a laboratory worker. Analysis showed him to be about 22 years old, 5 feet, 7 inches; he most likely was one of five soldiers in either Company C or L.

His ribs bore signs of two bullet wounds, and a bullet fragment was still lodged above his left wrist. There were cut marks on his hip and thigh bones.

Fragments of skull indicated massive damage from a blunt instrument.

Dr. Clyde Snow, a forensic anthropologist who examined the bones says of "Trooper Mike": "I would think the two body shots were incapacitating, maybe not lethal. The wounded were then dispatched with blows to the head. The last stage was post-mortem mutilation — dismemberment of the legs and thighs," a common religious practice of Indians.

"Trooper Mike" was found just below a place called Greasy Grass Ridge. Like the other enlisted men killed here, he was hastily covered with earth soon after battle, and cursorily re-buried in 1879, after the elements had exposed the remains of many.

In 1881, an Army detail disinterred all the Custer remains that could be found, and they were reburied during a formal ceremony for the fallen in a mass grave atop Last Stand Hill. A granite marker was placed over them.

But near a ridgeline south of Last Stand Hill, Trooper Mike went unnoticed. It was not until the summer of 1985 that his remains were unearthed, one leg still wearing his Army-issue boot.

On Wednesday, he was carried to his grave in a container with bones from 36 others — 33 whose partial remains were found during the last two years, and who are probably buried in the mass grave, and three who were found in 1958.

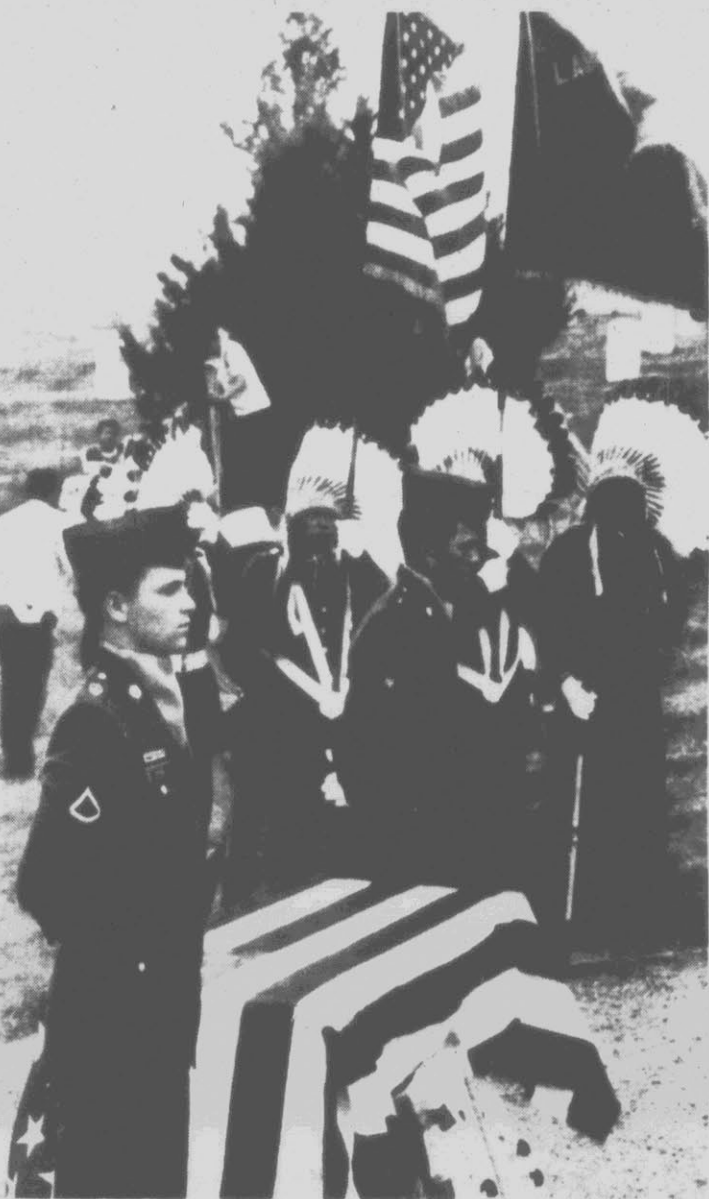

With several hundred tourists looking on, a ceremony was played out as earnestly serious as though the 110 years had not passed. It was rich in irony. A color from the 7th Cavalry in Fort Hood, Texas, wore Indian headdresses. A representative of the Oglala Sioux noted that "we of the Indian nations look upon this battle as one of our finest hours."

The remains were then carried to a grave in the national cemetery here, and with a final sounding of taps, committed to the land on which they had died.

But there was less a sense of finality concerning the findings of the archeological studies.

"There'll always be speculation," David Boyd, a Custer buff and documentary filmmaker, says of the unanswered questions and conflicting theories on the battle and command decisions of that day. "It's just the mystery that surrounds it."

"The archeologists won't settle anything."

New Rules Covering Nixon's Documents Become Effective

WASHINGTON (AP) — After 12 years of legal wars that are far from over, regulations go into effect today to govern the way the public can get to see 2.5 million pages of documents that Richard Nixon was forced to leave behind.

But in keeping with a history that has yet to see a single document opened to the public, a public interest group was ready with a lawsuit to challenge an interpretation by the Reagan administration that Nixon has the final say on what will or will not be released.

The National Archives prepared to send letters in the next few days to President Reagan, Nixon and at least 60 other people who asked to be notified that it intends to allow access to the files.

A general notification also will be published shortly in the Federal Register, and those affected have at least 30 days to object.

The regulations went into effect automatically when a Wednesday midnight deadline passed without action by Congress to disapprove of the regulations. It was the end of a 60-day waiting period. As part of the regulations and before opening any papers, the archives is required to give the 30-day notice.

Past attempts to make the documents available have resulted in suits either by Nixon or people who generated the documents. Even if anticipated future suits don't materialize, the archives doesn't expect to release any papers until late fall.

Congress passed a law seizing control of Nixon's papers and the White House tape recordings in 1974 after he resigned the presidency. The law directed the fullest possible public access to the papers, especially those pertaining to Watergate, and directed the archives to draw up regulations for that.

Five drafts of those regulations were rejected for one reason or another, including five lawsuits by Nixon or his former aides. Last July, a final version was submitted to the White House Office of Management and Budget for review.

Those regulations provided that the archivist of the United States would rule on any Nixon objections to release of the documents on grounds of executive privilege and that the former president would be entitled to court review of any decision he disagreed with.

But when the rules were approved and returned to the archives, they were accompanied by a Justice Department memo that said the archives must honor Nixon's claim or go to court to overturn them. The memo also said Reagan had the right to stop release of documents on executive privilege grounds.

Frank Burke, the acting head of the National Archives, said during a congressional hearing that he had no choice but to comply.

Acting on a request by three senators, acting Comptroller General Milton J. Socolar studied the Justice memo and declared it to be contrary to the 1974 law and "fundamentally inconsistent with the final regulations." Socolar said the inconsistency precludes the archives from following the Justice Department rule.

Of the conclusion that the archivist must defer to any Nixon executive claim, Socolar said, "We see no way in which this conclusion can be read into the current regulations."

The suit, prepared by Public Citizen, challenges the lawfulness of the Justice Department opinion, which, it said, "will substantially curtail public access to the materials and tape recordings." It asks the court to direct the archives not to comply with the memo.

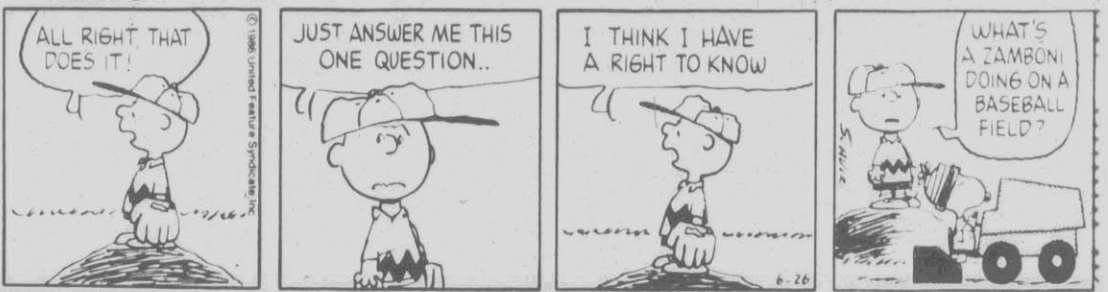

Other plaintiffs are the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press and David A. Bollier of New Haven, Conn., a free-lance journalist. Defendants are Burke, OMB Director James Miller, Attorney General Edwin Meese III and Nixon.

Under the law, the archives must notify the president, Nixon and the person who created the records that it intends to release them.

Researcher Says First, Only Child Are Brighter

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — First-born and only children enjoy an intellectual advantage over younger siblings because they are exposed to more adult-level thought and speech, according to a University of Michigan researcher.

A family's intellectual atmosphere tends to decline as the family expands, and newer members are especially shortchanged, psychologist Robert B. Zajonc said.

Zajonc said his theory is supported by Scholastic Aptitude Test scores, which began rebounding when the baby boom of 1945-1962 ended and family size began declining.

Parents provide the primary intellectual influence during a first-born or only child's formative years, but that influence becomes diluted by younger children, said Zajonc, director of the Research Center for Group Dynamics at the university's Institute for Social Research.

"As families get larger, children's intellectual development suffers, and the effect is accentuated by birth order," Zajonc said. "The more older siblings a person has, the lower his or her intellectual level, because of the overall decline of the family's intellectual environment."

First-borns and only children absorb knowledge and experience from their parents, Zajonc suggested. But those children often inherit that role when younger brothers and sisters arrive and are ill-suited to it, he said.

The SAT and other tests of intellectual ability "depend heavily on verbal ability," Zajonc said.

"Then imagine the intellectual environment as providing a pool of words to the growing child," he said. "Adults contribute a large vocabulary to the pool, and babies contribute nothing. And how do you talk to a baby? You use baby talk."

"The pool of words surrounding the only child at age 5 is different from the pool surrounding the second-born child of the same age who has a 7-year-old sibling."

Zajonc first cited his birth-order theory in 1976, when he predicted an increase in national SAT scores after 1980. The average score that year was 445, down from 490 in 1963.

"Because there had been a steady increase in average family size for the students taking the SATs between 1963 and 1980, SATs were predicted to decline until 1980 and then to rise again when the birth rate, and therefore family size, began decreasing," he said.

"The trend of continued decline in family size suggests a rise in SATs until the year 2000," Zajonc continued. "A leveling off and a decline is expected thereafter."

SATs are taken by only about 25 percent of the U.S. population, but Zajonc said he found further support for his theory in results from the Iowa Basic Skills Test, given annually to all students of all ages in that state.

Iowa students born in 1950-63 posted declining test scores, while those born later showed improved performance.

Zajonc suggested that a family's intellectual level could be maintained at a higher level by spacing children farther apart, but he said his theory was not meant to explain individual differences in achievement.

Scientists Isolate Hormone That May Control Female Cancer

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP) — One of the chemical triggers that determines a person's sex also may yield an important new tool for controlling cancers in women's reproductive organs, researchers say in a study published today.

The effort represents another successful attempt by biotechnology to manufacture rare human hormones outside the body for the treatment of disease. If it works as researchers hope, the substance will suppress or cure cancers of the ovaries, cervix, uterine lining, Fallopian tubes and vagina. These cancers kill about 22,000 U.S. women each year.

Until now, the hormone — known as Mullerian inhibiting substance, or MIS — has been so rare that scientists have been unable to study its properties. Instead, they've had to work with the cattle version of the chemical.

But now scientists have isolated the gene that controls the production of this elusive hormone, and have inserted it into cancerous hamster cells, which will make it in large quantities.

In the womb, the hormone prevents boy fetuses from developing female sex organs.

A report on the work, conducted at Massachusetts General Hospital and Biogen, was published in the journal Cell.

Researchers caution that human testing of the hormone won't begin for two years, and the substance will not be available for routine use for five or six years.

Dr. Patricia K. Donahoe of Massachusetts General said MIS may be "a highly selective chemotherapeutic agent that won't cause toxicity in other cells."

Early in their development, all fetuses have two tubes that are the forerunners of sex organs. One, called the Wolffian duct, develops into male sex organs; the other, the Mullerian duct, becomes female organs.

Male fetuses produce MIS, but females at this stage don't. The hormone makes the Mullerian duct shrink and disappear. And with another hormone, called testosterone, the male fetus goes on to grow male sex organs based on the Wolffian duct.

Women's sex organs develop from the Mullerian duct. Scientists reasoned that a hormone that inhibits the growth of this duct might also stop cancers of the adult organs that are derived from the duct.

Until now, however, this theory has been hard to test, because researchers haven't been able to acquire the hormone in quantities large enough to experiment with. Boys stop making MIS between ages 2 and 6. For reasons that scientists don't understand, girls begin producing the hormone in minuscule amounts during puberty and continue throughout their adult lives.
