I generally feel fearful of what is going to happen in the next week or few days. I hate to say it, but I feel that our country is very vulnerable right now and will never be the same due to this attack on our freedom. I do fear for my life now more so than before these events. How could someone or a group of people hate America so much as to kill thousands of people & for what reason. I feel that America could be compared to a young person who at times feels that he or she is invincible, that entire idea has been shattered to me now. We are and will always be a strong nation in our economy and defense, and that could be one reason this happened out of pure jealousy of what we have and they lack. Should we go to war? I don't know? Who would we go to war with? If we attack someone or a group of people will there be retaliation from them will that start a war? Our pride has been hurt. People are comparing this to Pearl Harbor, but to me this is a million times more horrible than Pearl Harbor. The only thing I can compare this to is a movie or a fictional story. My sister works in the capitol and thank goodness nothing happened there, but it could have. I could have lost my sister yesterday, that is something ~~unbelievable~~ unbelievable & scary to me. Sterotyping is no doubt going to start to occur if the people who did this were of the Muslim faith, and it will be hard for me and many other people not to fall into this trap of stereotypes. Our nation doesn't do well with fighting against stereotyping, and I feel that is something that needs to be addressed. I just pray for all the lives lost and families of those people will one day find peace. President Bush has a lot on his plate right now and I do have confidence in him and his staff. People must not look at him in a negative light but as our leader, and that will be hard for some.
