Katerina Koloustroubis is a senior double-majoring in music performance and biomedical engineering at East Carolina University. She is a recipient of the EC Scholar full-ride merit scholarship; Honors College merit scholarship; Friends of the School of Music scholarship; Engineering Department merit scholarship; and The Yates Family scholarship. On top of this, she has been offered admittance into the Pi Kappa Lambda Music Honors Society, Omicron Kappa Delta Service and Leadership Honors Society, and the Phi Kappa Phi Academic Honors Society. She has additionally received the Pi Kappa Lambda Certificate of Honor for her accomplishments in music and a certificate of recognition for her work in the Omicron Delta Kappa Service and Leadership Honors Society. Katerina's research work in the Department of Anatomy and Cell Biology is undergoing the process for publication in the near future; she also presented research with the East Carolina University Music Education Department at the International Music Educators Conference in August of 2015. Currently, Katerina is interning with the Cypress Glen retirement facility in the hopes to facilitate a greater number of music therapy activities and events. She has performed in all orchestral positions with the ECU Symphony Orchestra and has participated in multiple venues, masterclasses, and competitions around the state and country. Via audition, for instance, she was invited to participate in the International Gateway Flute Festival for Sir James Galway and most recently in the 2016 California Summer Arts Program where she studied with Robert Dick, Ian Clarke, Carol Wincenc, and many more world-renowned artists. She is exceedingly grateful for every person who has inspired and supported her passions as a classical musician.
