Transmitter License Delayed

By MIKE HUGHES
Staff Writer

Just in case you've worked your fingers to the bone spinning the knob on your radio tuner from one end to the other in search of WZMB, you've been wasting your time. As has been the fortune of the station for several months, further problems have hampered WZMB from airing on schedule.

Transmitters, licenses, paperwork... so what is it this time?

According to Sam Barwick, WZMB's general manager, the station now lacks the studio-to-transmitter-link license (STL) necessary to air.

The STL license permits the station to transmit a microwave signal from the studio in Joyner Library to the transmitter link atop Tyler Residence Hall.

Though Barwick applied for the license at least two months ago, he is not certain when it will be granted. "We hope to be on the air by the end of this month or the beginning of next month," Barwick said, "but that all depends on the STL license."

Last month, when a faulty transmitter delayed the station from airing, Barwick explained that the equipment had been sent back to the company for repairs.

The transmitter, which was producing only about 100 watts, has since been returned, and according to Barwick, it looks "pretty good."

All problems aside, Barwick seems confident in WZMB's staff. "We just took on six or seven new people, and we're going to start training them now," he said. "Everyone on the staff is ready to go."

Programs scheduled for the station, when it finally gets on the air, will include religious shows, jazz and classical music shows and "off-the-wall" news reports.

Barwick also feels that guest speakers will probably become a part of the show.

So, when will students be able to tune in to WZMB for campus news, blues and views?

"Well," Barwick says, "the only thing I can say for sure is that we will be on this semester."

Air Florida Plane Crashes Into Frozen Potomac River

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An Air Florida jet, carrying 73 people into a snow-filled sky, slammed into a bridge packed to rush-hour capacity Wednesday and plunged into the icy Potomac River. Police said at least 63 people were missing and presumed dead.

Officials called off the search for bodies in the frigid water five hours after the crash with most of the bodies trapped underwater in the mangled wreckage of the blue and white aircraft.

District of Columbia Police Spokesman G.W. Hankins said although a handful of passengers survived, it was assumed most were trapped in the submerged plane.

Hankins said at least three — and perhaps as many as 10 — people aboard Air Florida Flight 90 bound for Tampa and Fort Lauderdale lived through the crash. Asked if the rest were presumed dead, Hankins said, "I'm afraid so. That's the assumption — that most of the people were still in their seat belts from take-off procedure and are still in the plane."

The U.S. Park Police said there were at least 16 known survivors, both passengers and those in cars on the busy 14th Street Bridge. The capital's first major snowstorm of the year sent thousands of government workers home early.

Federal safety officials had no immediate idea of what caused the crash — first fatal crash at National Airport in 31 years and the first commercial crash in the nation since 1979 — but said air traffic control was not part of the problem. More than 1,200 controllers went on strike last summer and were fired.

Air Florida said the plane, a Boeing 737, was carrying 68 passengers and a crew of five on a flight originating in Washington. The airline said 13 passengers were going to Fort Lauderdale and the rest to Tampa. It had not released a passenger list.

Joe Stiley, who was a passenger on the plane, said late Wednesday night in an interview at a Virginia hospital that he knew from the moment the plane lifted off it was not going to clear the bridge.

Stiley, 42, of Alexandria, Va., a professional pilot, said, "I had a pretty good indication that things weren't going right when we started down the runway."

"I turned to (my seatmate) and said 'We're not going to make it; we're going in,'" he said. "We were

Protestors March On Base

By PATRICK O'NEILL
Staff Writer

Concern over United States military involvement in the Central American nation of El Salvador became a North Carolina issue this week, as 200 people from all over the East Coast converged on Fort Bragg, the U.S. military base in Fayetteville, to protest the U.S. decision to train 1,000 El Salvadoran soldiers there.

"We've been told to train those people, and we will train them," said Captain Maddox, a spokesman for the base. "They're being trained here at their request...in basic combat training."

The U.S. also plans to train 600 officer candidates at Fort Benning, Georgia, starting later this month.

The demonstrators shouting "Hey, hey, Uncle Sam, we remember Vietnam" marched in orderly fashion onto the base to present a letter to the base commander, Lt. Gen. Jack Mackmull, protesting the training of the troops. A representative of base command, Col. Eric Erickson Jr. was on hand to receive the letter.

"We believe that if the present government is engaged in such violence and atrocities against its own people that it's immoral to continue to support that kind of regime," stated the Rev. Henry Atkins, coordinator of Triad Citizens Concerned for Central America, a Greensboro-based organization.

"Bringing the Salvadoran troops here to be trained is an escalation of the violence on the part of this country and this administration against the El Salvadoran people."

Rev. Atkins spent a week living with El Salvadoran refugees and claimed he spoke with women "who had seen their pregnant daughters' stomachs torn open and their fetuses fed to pigs." These acts, Atkins claimed, were committed by government troops.

According to Maryknoll Catholic priest Roy Bourgeois, who has spent time in El Salvador, there are 14 families representing two percent of the population who control 60 percent of the land and resources. This two percent, Bourgeois claims, "live in luxury, while the rest of the people struggle for survival."

"The U.S. government is siding with the rich two percent, who are backed up by the military," Bourgeois continued.

"The military are killing anyone they believe opposes them," added Atkins. "The violence is directed, by and large, against church people, because they are organized."

Atkins feels that U.S. fear of communism has played a large role in our support of the military in El Salvador. He feels that our military support was strengthening, as opposed to weakening, communist influence in El Salvador.

"If you want to drive people into the Soviet Camp, you couldn't develop a better practice than the one that the U.S. has now in its present foreign policy in El Salvador," he said.

Atkins also claimed that this position is "propping up an oppressive military regime."

Perhaps most notable of the killings in El Salvador took place in 1980, when Archbishop Oscar Romero was assassinated, while celebrating Mass, for speaking out against violence and government tactics.

Later in 1980, four Catholic missionaries were also killed. Two of the slain women were Maryknoll Catholic nuns.

According to Maryknoll spokesperson Sister Helene O'Sullivan, there are no longer any Maryknoll missionaries in El Salvador.

"We had to pull them out" because of the situation there, she said. "Our giving of arms to the military government just prolongs the fighting and prolongs the death. The U.S. should be pushing for a negotiated settlement as called for by the bishops."

According to Defense Department officials, the cost to the U.S. taxpayers will be $15 million for the training of the El Salvadoran troops.

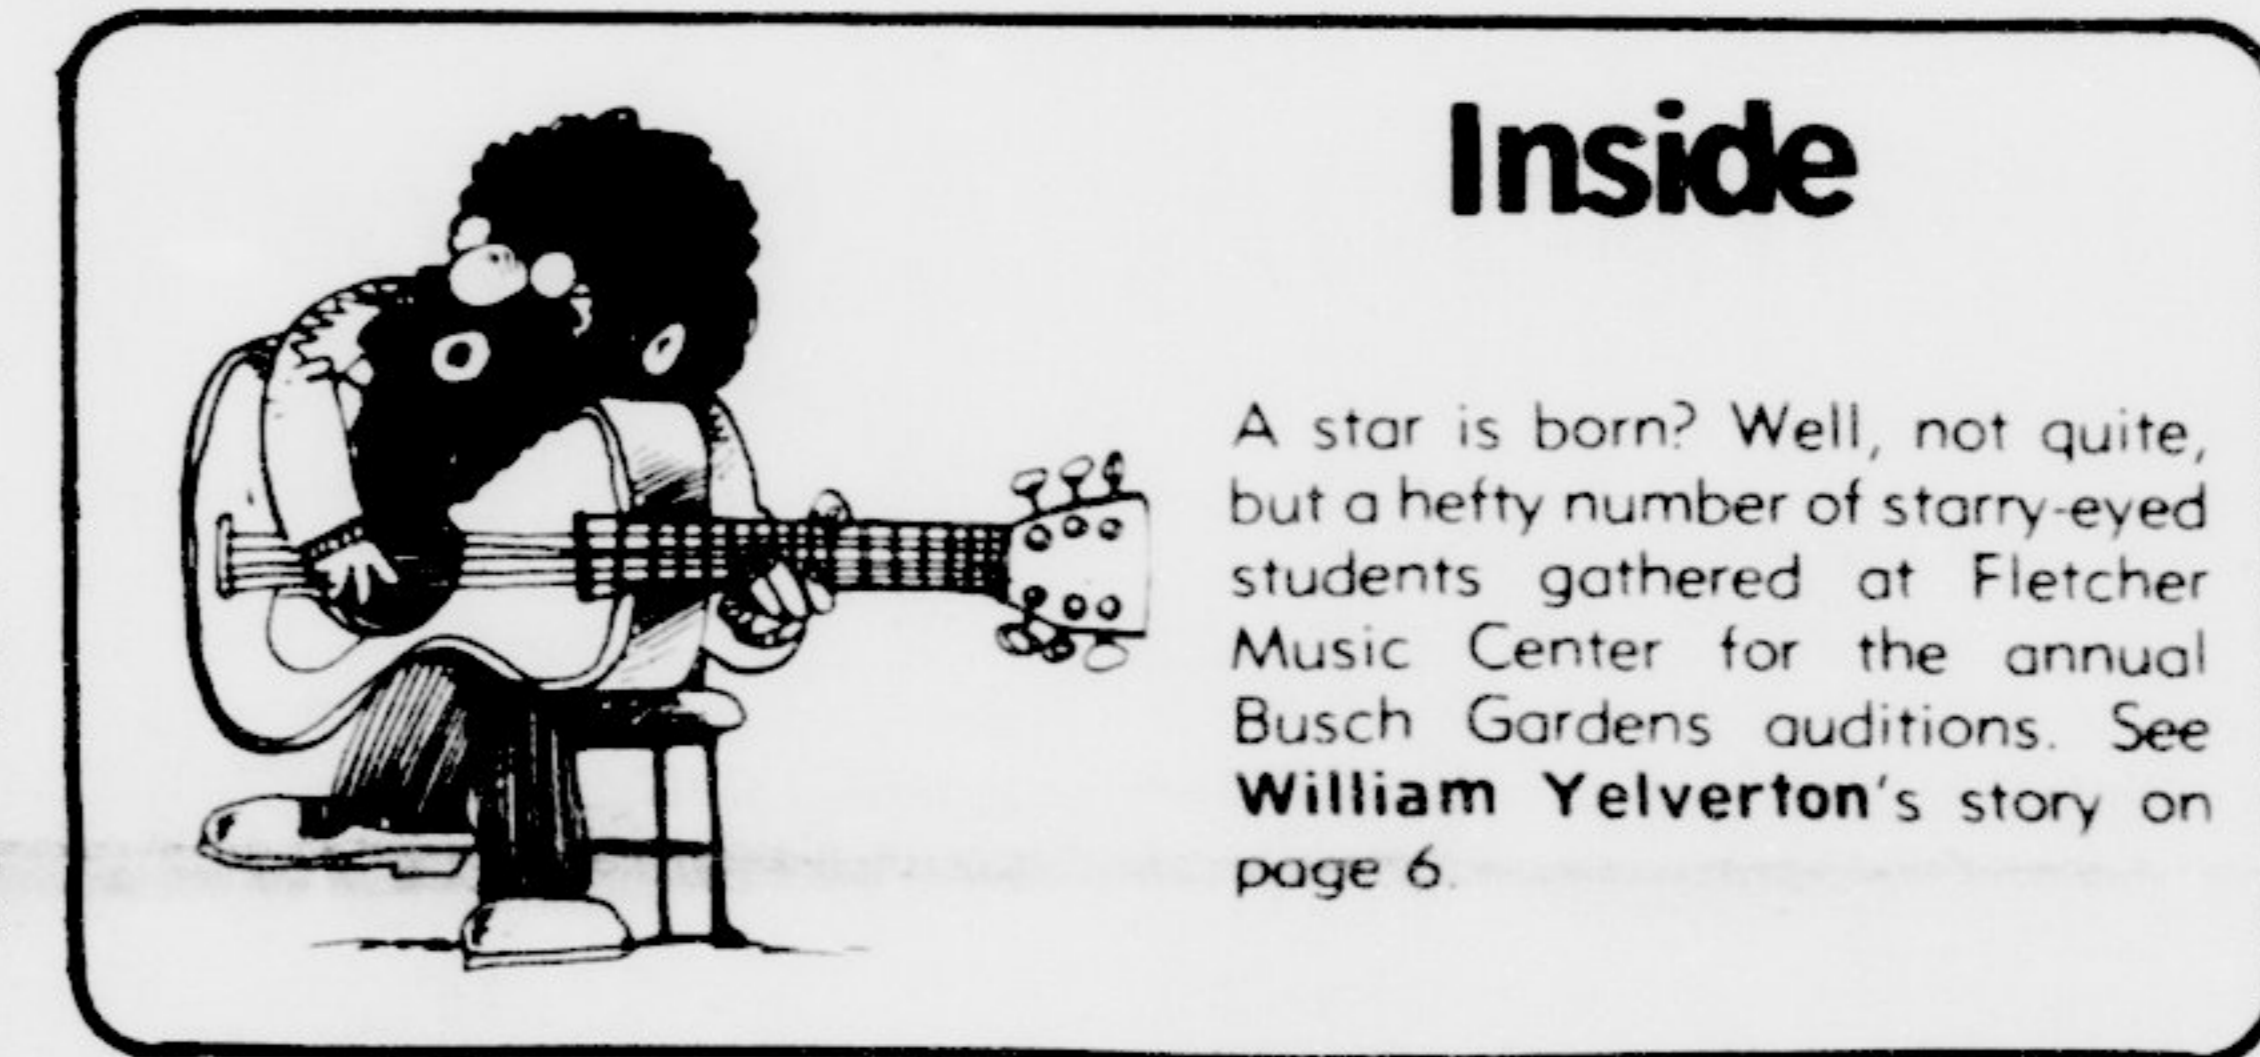

Back in Fayetteville, close connections were drawn by the demonstrators between U.S. involvement in El Salvador and this country's past experiences in Vietnam.

"We're treading this path again," noted Dave Dellinger, a peace activist with the War Resisters' League and former defendant in the Chicago Seven trial.

Dellinger made his statements during a press conference

Engineers To Be In Demand

(CPS) — The employment outlook for 1982 graduates, depending on field of study and geographic location, will either be "very good, or very, very bad," according to preliminary findings from a Michigan State University study on recruitment trends.

The annual study foresees that chemical engineers will command the highest salaries among graduates this spring, while education majors will probably draw the lowest salaries and experience the hardest time finding jobs.

"This will be a very unique year, unlike we've ever had before," reports John D. Shingleton, director of MSU's placement service, which conducts the study. "There is a very high demand for jobs in some disciplines and locations. We're seeing vast extremes in hiring practices. Everything either went up or went down."

On the up side are such disciplines as computer science, engineering, accounting, marketing, and transportation-related majors. Job seekers in those areas can expect to find good jobs at competitive salary levels, Shingleton says.

"The market will be high on anything relating to high technology, and low on disciplines such as natural resources, fisheries and wildlife, and arts and letters," Shingleton explains.

Chemical engineers with four-year degrees will earn around $26,000 their first year out of school, Shingleton predicts, while lowly education majors will scurry after jobs offering yearly salaries of around $13,000. Other studies, however, claim the teaching job market will improve by the mid-eighties.

Location will make a big difference in whether or not grads find employment this spring, Shingleton points out.

"The market in the midwest is drying up," according to Shingleton, "while the southwest and sunbelt areas look very good."

Although the job prospects for liberal arts majors in general will be less than rosy, Shingleton believes that good planning and preparation will net most graduates a job this summer.

"The market is tightening up a little, but there are jobs out there. People are just going to have to work a little harder to get work."

Scenes similar to the one above have been taking place across campus with the installation of the new Rolm CBX telephone system.

The new system, originally intended to be installed on Dec. 28, was "not actually cut over until Jan. 8," according to Brenda Herring of the Business Affairs office.

"It's not even a week," Herring said. "There are going to be a few bugs in it."

One of the features of the new system is the "U-Touch" pushbutton telephone. The system will also facilitate the installation of telephones in faculty members' offices. In classroom buildings such as Austin and Rawl, some faculty members had to go to department offices to place a call or unlock a "black box" telephone in some hallways.

The East Carolina business manager, Julian R. Vainwright, is heading the system cutover, but he was in a meeting Wednesday afternoon and could not be reached for comment. Herring said the new system was still being wired.

In a "VERY IMPORTANT" memorandum issued Dec. 11,

Vainwright explained that although the Rolm system is "modern" and "computerized with many nice features, it must be understood and used properly for optimum results."

"Each telephone user (faculty and staff) is urged to attend one two-hour training session," Vainwright's memo read. These "hands-on" sessions, using "live" phones, are required in the contract with Carolina Telephone and Telegraph, and will be conducted through Feb. 5,

However, problems seem to be persisting until the switchover is complete.

One worker at Mendenhall Student Center said several people there had been "cut off" during their telephone conversations.

Another employee in the building, which houses the student government and student union offices, said a number of people have had trouble calling out of Mendenhall. This worker, who asked not to be identified, recalled that "the phone would ring and we would get a recorded message even when we hadn't called out" at the information desk at the student center.

At the Student Health Center, "the phone is acting crazy," said Susan Reynolds of the infirmary staff. "The phone'll ring and there's no one there. We just hang up."

However, such problems seem to have spared Joyner Library. Director Eugene Brunelle suggested that any difficulties with campus telephones during the switchover were due to a lack of training in how to use the phones.

"Some of the numbers have been changed from what's in the book," Brunelle noted. Callers dialing one of these numbers are likely to hear the phone ringing in the receiver although it may not be ringing at the other end of the line, according to the library director.

In the Department of English office, "it's a little bit hairy," said secretary Kay Mills. "There've been so many calls coming in."

Mills explained that to connect a call to a faculty member's office, she has to "flash" — hit the button on top of the phone, or plunger in telephone company lingo — then push the star button and the seven button, and then the extension number. This process is repeated — except the one button is pushed instead of the seven — if there is no answer, Mills said.

"Oh, it's lots of fun," she added.

Those who still have rotary-dial telephones must now dial 27 instead of pushing the seven button to transfer a call.

Until then—

Data Bank Provided For Job Hunters

NEW YORK (UPI) — Job hunters now can submit their resumes to prospective employers anywhere in the country via a new national data bank, branch office of three former IBM executives.

Learn, president of CareerSystem, Inc., a firm he founded with William E. Berry and Philip I. Morgan. CareerSystem has launched a $2 million national advertising campaign to attract companies as potential employers and individual job seekers who can file their applications in a nationwide software system to be accessed by companies seeking specific abilities and talents.

The market is large, Learn said. Approximately $2.5 billion is spent in personnel recruitment every year by companies, executive recruiters, and private and government employment agencies.

The current 9.8 million unemployment figure emphasizes the need for such a national system, he said.

CareerSystem has the capability of listing 957,000 job seekers and can be expanded to hold "nearly the entire population of the United States." As many as 400,000 companies can use the system simultaneously, Learn said.

A helicopter circled above the march, keeping constant watch, and a number of photographers, some in military uniforms, took close-up pictures of the demonstration.

Maddox called the gathering peaceful. "It was handled very well, both on the demonstrators' part and all the law enforcement agencies that were involved," he said.

Polish Rulers See Possible End To Martial Law

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — Poland's military rulers said they want to end martial law as soon as possible but President Henryk Jablonski warned the timing depends on the "favorable transformation" of economic and social life.

Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Cyrtek returned from a

Moscow visit Tuesday with praise for the Soviet Union's "full understanding" and efforts "to give us all possible aid... until the crisis situation is finally removed."

He charged the United States was seeking to increase international tension by exploiting the Polish crisis.

Deputy Prime Minister Jerzy Ozdowski told a news conference Tuesday martial law "is a sharp, painful period which should be as short as possible."

Jablonski later told a gathering of foreign diplomats martial law "is our internal affair," Warsaw television said.

"Further decisions by the Polish authorities in this area depend solely on the tempo of the favorable transformation of the country's economy and social life," Poland's head of state said.

A senior Communist Party official, Jerzy Urbanski, said in a speech released Tuesday, future Polish trade unions must be party-controlled and purged of enemies of the political structure.

Martial-law officials dodged questions on Solidarity union chief Lech Walesa, held under house arrest somewhere in the Warsaw area.

Deputy Health Minister Stanislaw Mlekodaj said at least 10 people had died — one more than the previous official toll — in protests after the declaration of martial law Dec. 13. Two security men were near death, he said.

Warsaw Radio reported more summary trials of Poles charged with offenses under martial law and civil crimes. It said 394 cases had been brought against 618 defendants. Sentences included a three-year jail term for an activist convicted of organizing and leading a two-day strike at Wroclaw immediately after martial law was imposed.

Another man was jailed for four years and fined for trying to break into an explosives wagon in a military convoy in Kielce province, the radio said.

Warsaw television listed seven former high provincial party and government officials indicted for corruption and dereliction of duty.

But the government's attention centered on floods sweeping over 62 square miles of farmland, threatening Warsaw itself, Warsaw Radio said the army was helping flood victims with supplies of food, clothing and medical items and had set up 10 field kitchens.

Giving more time to the floods than to politics, the radio said the rampaging Vistula River still was blocked by a "mountain of broken ice," even though "work is going on night and day" by thousands of volunteers.

At least five other rivers were flooded, the radio said.

Egyptian Government Calls For Peace

CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — Secretary of State Alexander Haig reportedly blaming "lack of political will" by Israel for the stalled Palestinian autonomy talks, brought new options in the dispute to a meeting Wednesday with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

Haig and his chief Middle East advisers met Tuesday with Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Ali and his advisers for nearly two hours in a meeting that dealt exclusively with Palestinian autonomy.

"Egypt will spare no effort to keep the talks going until they bring about their desired results," Ali told Haig on his arrival in Cairo Tuesday. Palestinian autonomy is called for in the 1979 Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

The underlying problem, according to an assessment just completed by the State Department, is "the lack of political will" on the part of the Israeli government to make the transition to real autonomy for the 1.2 million Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Snowstorm Interrupts Atlanta Murder Trial

ATLANTA (UPI) — The prosecution had just established its first eyewitness link between accused killer Wayne Williams and his last alleged victim when a snowstorm interrupted the trial which is unlikely to resume until Thursday.

Snow was already on the ground Tuesday and the city was already paralyzed when Superior Court Judge Clarence Cooper hastily recessed the trial nearly two hours early.

Williams, a 23-year-old black photographer, is in the third week of his trial for the murder of Nathaniel Carter, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21 — two of the 28 young blacks slain in the city during a span of nearly two years that ended when Williams came under suspicion last spring.

The final witness Tuesday gave the jury of eight blacks and four whites the most dramatic testimony the prosecution has presented in the five days it has been setting forth its case.

Margaret Carter, a stout, middle-aged black woman nervously shifting her dentures, said she saw Carter and Williams together in a park near her housing project apartment the week before Carter disappeared.

A senior U.S. official told reporters, "The problem is how to generate that political will."

The state-controlled Middle East News Agency reported Haig said he wants to "play a role, personally and directly, in giving a push to the negotiations," and Ali welcomed this.

Haig brought the results of that Middle East assessment with several options but "no grandiose new ideas," U.S. officials said.

Although Haig has reservations, one possibility was naming a new U.S. high-level representative to the talks to replace Sol Einav who gave up the post when former President Jimmy Carter left office.

Defense attorney Al Binder asked Mrs. Carter when Carter had quit dating her niece. She said that romance ended in 1979, but she continued to see him frequently.

Earlier testimony on a day that seemed to go heavily in the prosecution's favor showed Carter was a heavy drinker who was seen alive as late as 3 p.m. on May 21.

He came to the house to play cards. He didn't stop visitin' just because he broke up with my niece."

"That's nice," sighed Binder.

Get rid of the turkey at the Greenville Athletic Club.

And all the pies, cakes, cookies and one-too-many beers you had over the holidays, too.

College students now can afford to take off extra weight at the Athletic Club. Or, just come out to have fun. Because, right now, we have a special offer that can help you join the Athletic Club without going broke.

No initiation fees at all for students.

If you join right now, there's no initiation fee as long as you maintain your membership. What's more, we'll pro-rate the $30 monthly dues (at $1 per day) from the day you join. All that means that here's an inexpensive way to find out about our facility.

And with racquetball courts, Nautilus equipment, aerobics classes and much more, there's bound to be something for you. So come on out to the Greenville Athletic Club. And get rid of the turkey.

This ad entitles you to one free visit to the Club as long as you bring the ad and come before Jan. 31. (Call for racquetball reservations).

EPA

Reagan's Cuts Hamper Effectiveness

*Oh beautiful for spacious skies,
For amber waves of grain,
For purple mountains majesties,
— from "America the Beautiful"*

Or so it used to be. With the onset of the industrial revolution and modern technology, however, the United States has become better known for its smoggy skies, its insecticide laced grain, its strip-mined mountains and its asphalt plains.

Because of the deteriorating state of the environment, the federal government created the Environmental Protection Agency.

And the EPA's success in the past decade has been impressive. For example particulates of soot and dust emitted into the air were reduced from 29,000 tons in 1972 to just 790 tons in 1979 in Massachusetts and from 139,000 to 82,000 in once hazy Detroit.

Also, under pressure from the EPA, corporate dumping of toxic waste into the Gulf of Mexico has dropped from 1.4 million tons in 1973 to none today. The EPA had made significant strides toward controlling pollution. Until Ronald Reagan became president that is.

Last February Reagan appointed 39-year-old Anne Gorsuch to head the agency. As a state legislator in Colorado she had led a successful battle to block the state's participation in the EPA's hazardous-wastes program and fought for less stringent automobile emission standards in Colorado's clean-air law.

So environmentalists were understandably shocked when the president appointed her as the nation's chief enforcer against pollution, and their worst fears have been realized in her eight months in office.

Her critics say that the "Ice Queen," as she is called, has begun to dismantle the agency and may already have done irreparable harm.

Though she gives lip service to the EPA's programs, she also argues that the agency can do its job "better and more efficiently without the same commitment of resources." Consequently she has volunteered reductions in EPA spending from $1.36 billion a year to less than $950 million by 1983. Furthermore, a ranking EPA official said last week that Gorsuch is preparing to fire at least 750 of the agency's 4,200 Washington staff and probably a similar percentage of the 5,800 field workers. This comes on top of the nearly 1,000 resignations received since Gorsuch has taken over.

She has also cut spending on every vital EPA program and urged major retrenchment in the Clean Air Act. Agency research scientists now cannot release their findings until they have been approved as "appropriate" by four levels of the bureaucracy; public information programs require seven levels of approval.

But Gorsuch is only following orders. As she says, "I work for the president, and will continue to give him my best appraisal of how his environmental program can be carried out."

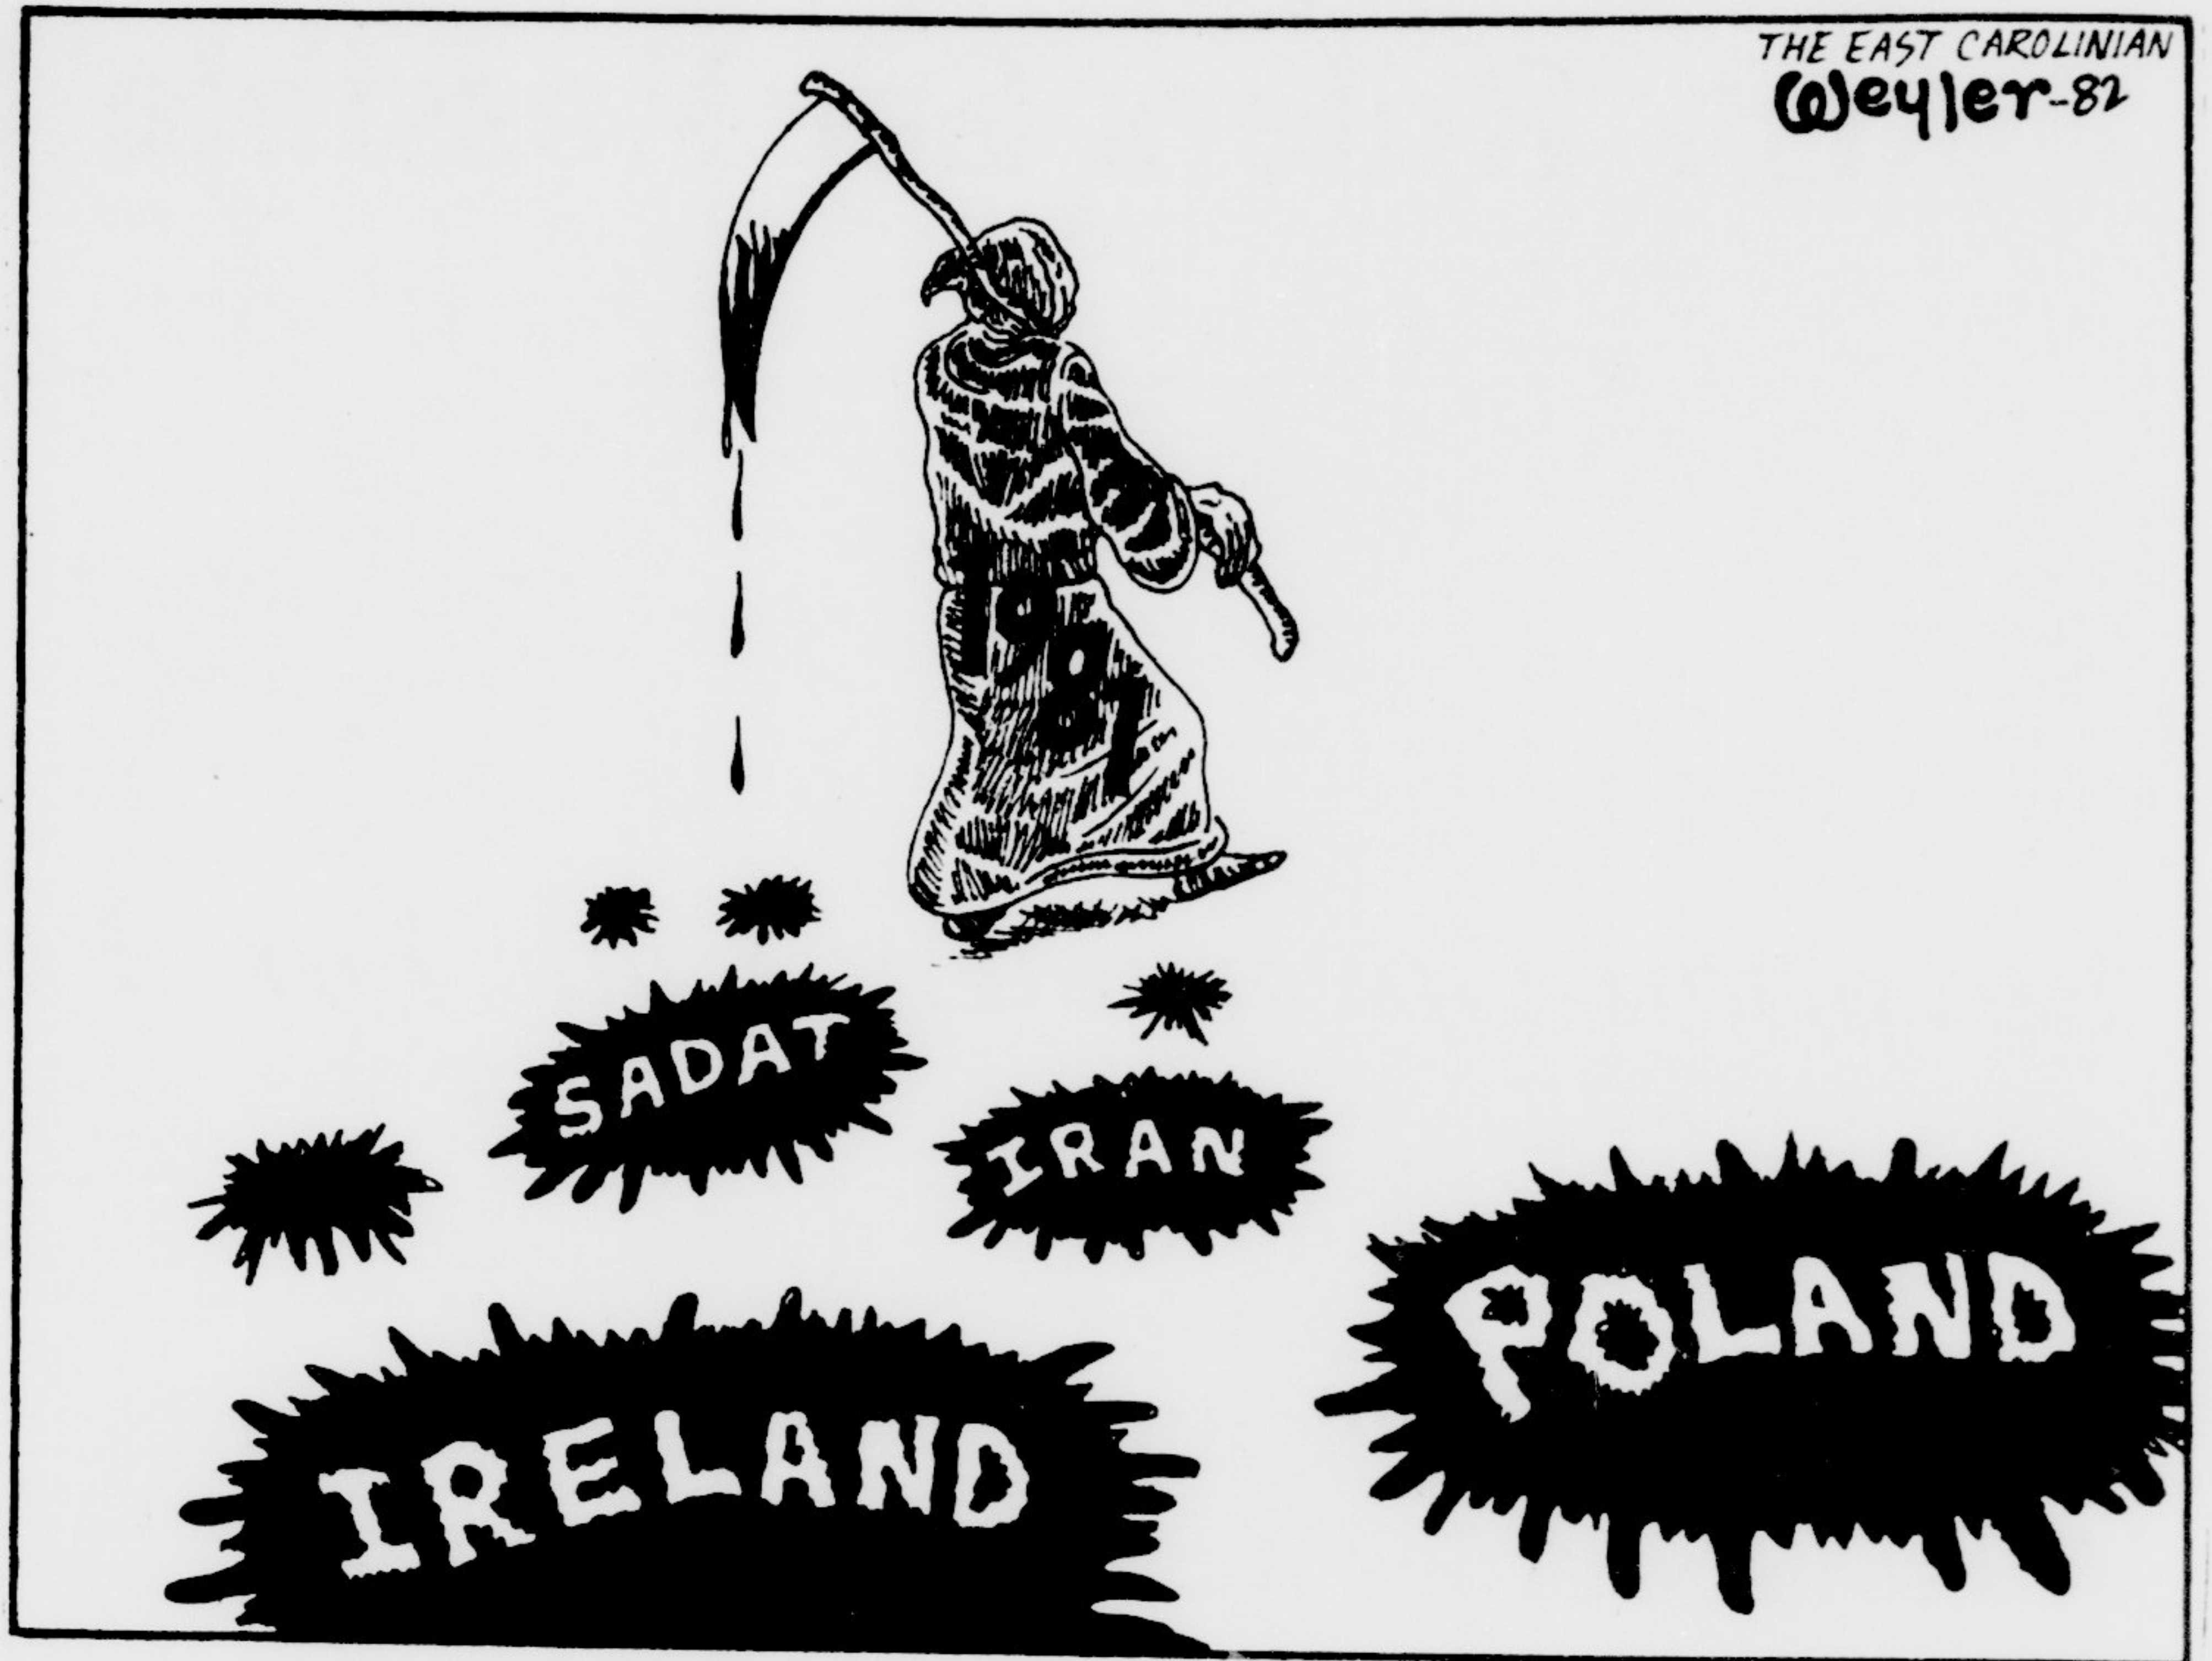

Therein lies the problem. Reagan's environmental program is geared more toward what is good for industry than what is good for this little blue planet of ours. The record of Gorsuch and Secretary of the Interior James Watt over the last year is evidence of the administration's insensitivity toward environmental issues.

In an effort to get the economy back on its feet, Reagan fails to realize that we are in the process of polluting ourselves right out of existence.

We can fill the sky with soot and car exhaust. We can fill the oceans with garbage and nuclear waste. We can level the forests and pave the great plains. But once we've done all this it is likely that we will have irreparably destroyed the planet.

This can be avoided by increasing, not decreasing, funding and support for the EPA and its purpose. The administration should not only increase the agency's budget but support stricter anti-pollution legislation.

We've got to take care of the planet Earth, after all it's the only home we've got.

Education — A Nasty Addiction

By KIM ALBIN

I woke up this morning and found myself in the hangover stage of a longtime addiction. I was in Greenville, North Carolina, the town in which I had built my entire life around my habit — going to college.

It has taken me a long time to admit to myself that my stay here has been an addiction. I forced myself to admit it today because I realized that another semester was just what I needed to cure the pain of last semester's hangover.

I was starting a new semester — on an empty stomach.

Experts tell us that one warning sign of an addiction is the tendency to indulge oneself without a conscious decision to do so. This morning I realized that I could not recall making a decision to return to ECU this semester; my return was automatic. That's scary.

And I feel kind of ashamed. Look at what all this college has done to me: I do not sleep or eat right, I am nervous most of the time, my family worries about me, and I have not been able to work for years. But I just cannot stop.

It may be time to kick the habit, but I do not think that I can quit. This is not just a physical addiction to campus food that I am fighting — it is also an intense psychological need for little pink schedules, Cepacol lozenges, lots of sidewalk, the sight and sounds of ongoing construction, Mendenhall Student Center, and parking tickets.

Besides, I cannot remember what the real world is like. A friend of mine who just came back to school tells me that in the real world the year begins in January and is not divided up into semesters like our years are. (I wonder how the people know when to celebrate holidays?) Instead of getting checks in the mail, people get jobs. They buy books only when they feel like it — if they have enough money.

And so, after all this time, I finally understand this weird predisposition for life on this campus. Had I only discovered it earlier, the last several years would have been much more pleasant.

I guess the hangover will go away in a week or so. It must have resulted from the withdrawal that I went through during the Christmas break. That was unbelievable — cold chills, waking up in the middle of the night craving a textbook, a sub sandwich from Famous Pizza and a walk around Wright Circle.

What really terrifies me, though, is not knowing where to go to get help, or how long this will last, or if this compulsive "studying" will be my demise. I wonder what my life would have been like had I not become addicted to college. I wonder...

Whew, it's okay. Someone just informed me that they have found a cure for this nasty addiction — it is a miraculous and proven phenomenon called graduation. I will certainly need a dose. Otherwise I may have to face the people who keep sending those checks in the mail and tell them that I cannot find a job in the real world.

For Some People, No Free Lunch

By ART BUCHWALD

"Lunchtime, everyone. Class dismissed."

"Elizabeth, what are you doing with that tray?"

"Getting some lunch."

"Your name isn't on the list. You are not entitled to lunch."

"How come my name is not on the list?"

"Your parents did not fill out the correct forms. Under new government guidelines, only those children whose fathers and mothers make less than a certain salary each year are eligible for a free lunch. You can't eat until your parents prove you are entitled to the food."

"Yes, ma'am. What should I do while the other children are eating lunch?"

"You can read something?"

"What do you want me to read?"

"You can read the new government regulations concerning free lunches. Then you can explain it to your parents."

"Yes, ma'am. Where should I sit while I'm reading the thing that says I can't have lunch?"

"You can sit with the children eating their lunch, but you're not to touch their food."

"Watching other kids eating makes me hungry. Could I go over to the corner by myself and read this paper?"

"No, that would make you special, and you can not have extra privileges just because you're not eligible for the hot lunch program."

"Teacher, I'm trying to read this thing, but I don't understand one word."

"That's because you're not concentrating Elizabeth. You're daydreaming aren't you?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"What were you daydreaming about?"

"Lunch. I was thinking how nice it would be to have one."

"Elizabeth, I know it's difficult for someone in the sixth grade to understand what is going on in the country. But President Reagan doesn't have enough money to give everyone a school lunch. He can only give it to poor children."

"My father says we're poor."

"Yes, but you're not poor enough. You have to be very, very poor to get a free lunch."

"Does the President get a free lunch?"

"He gets an allowance, and his lunch comes out of his allowance."

"I don't get an allowance."

"Perhaps someday when you grow up and become President you will."

"How am I going to grow up and be President if I don't eat lunch?"

"There is no reason to get sassy, Elizabeth. There are people in Washington working day and night trying to cut the fat out of the budget, and one of the areas where they decided there was too much waste was in free school meals. They hope to save $50 million in this program alone."

"What are they going to do with the $50 million?"

"They're going to give everyone a tax cut so people will have more money to buy lunches."

"Will I get a tax cut so I can buy lunch?"

"Of course not. You have to work to get a tax cut. But your Daddy and Mommy will."

"My Daddy said he doesn't make enough money to get a tax cut."

"He may not get one directly, but the tax cuts other people get will trickle down to him in time."

"How?"

"It's all in the regulations, if you would just stop wasting your lunch hour, and read them."

"Who wrote this thing?"

"David Stockman. He's the man the President has made responsible for seeing that the wrong children don't get free lunches."

"He got any kids?"

"No, he happens to be a bachelor. Why do you ask?"

"No reason I can think of."

Original Yearbook Cover Not That Bad?

I am writing about the 1981 Buccaneer cover dispute. I have seen the original cover, and I am one of quite a few people who do not wholeheartedly agree with the decision not to use it. I happen to know the artist who did the original, and not only is he a competent graphic designer, but he also put in a substantial amount of time for which he has been rewarded with nothing but ridicule. He certainly did nothing to deserve the editorial comment in the Buccaneer pertaining to the "Year That Almost Wasn't." To start with, the title was not pink, it was lavender, which was intended to bring out the sophisticated colors of the mannequin's dress. The mannequin was not "propped up" against the '57 Chevy, it appeared to be standing in front of it. The overall effect was tasteful, with a New Wave undertone, and it was certainly the more fitting cover considering the theme of this year's Buccaneer: "A new wave. Or rather, new waves. In a world bustling with tension and change, East Carolina was not immune." Certainly, it seems that the Buccaneer staff was not only immune, it was passed by. To Amy Pickett and Lisa Coleman I can only say that I do not understand how anyone could purposefully be so cruel as to rub in a disappointment such as this individual was faced with. Mention was also made that the original cover was "inappropriate to the student body and our work." I suppose, then, that a yearbook designed almost totally in Carolina Blue is appropriate? I rest my case.

To the Buccaneer staff I can only say, get your act together, and by the way, what about those 5,000 original covers that you must have used student funds to have printed and then never used?

Marvelous Music

In the fall of 1980 while on campus with my daughter, I attended a trombone concert (plus guitar, piano, and bass — I think) in the Student Center. The musicians were marvelous, their attitudes enthusiastic, and the whole atmosphere was nothing short of magic.

I will never forget what pleasure that group gave me during those two hours. (Maybe I am being dictatorial, but what a shame the whole student body wasn't required to witness this excellence!)

Prison Letters

My name's Joseph Beaman. I'm in prison for possession of marijuana with intent to sell. I was born in Greenville and need someone to keep me informed on what's going on at the Attic, Elbo Room, Carolina Opry House, etc. After my release, I plan to transfer credits to ECU from another school. Please put this letter in The East Carolinian so that a pretty female Pirate may see it and write.

My name is Larry Vaughn. I'm a Federal Prisoner at Talladega, Alabama. I been in Prison since 1971. I've lost contact with all friends and family and it's very lonely in one of these places. I started out with a four to six year sentence, but in 1976 I only had a few months until I got out, and I was put in a spot of either killing a man or being killed. So I got a murder charge and got a life sentence for it.

I am right now locked down in segregation unit and being constantly harassed by officers. For a charge of possession of narcotics. Which I'm not guilty of. They didn't get me with any narcotics, it's just a beef to get my back in a maximum security lock-down unit.

I am 29 years old, blond hair, blue eyes, white, 5-11, 170 lbs. I'm very lonely, and locked in a world of darkness, with such unbelievable hatred all around me. I'm lonely, and I'm reaching out to touch someone in the free world. I want to change my life, and I want friends who will let me care about them and who will care about me in return.

If you're interested in becoming a friend and sharing a few minutes of your time with me, I'll gladly answer any and all letters and questions. I'm very open-minded on all subjects and life. My address is:

Hi. I'm presently in prison here in N.C. and have been for almost seven years. I'm white, single, 26 years old and lonely.

Only nine more months stand between me and freedom, and I would very much like to correspond with one of you lovely young ladies.

Help me make my last nine months in this cage a little more pleasant. I need a friend!

At Least 63 Presumed Dead In Plane Crash

 running out of runway. We didn't have the speed."

Eyewitness Arthur Coleman, who was on the bridge when the plane crashed into it, said, "I looked over in the water and I saw people scattered all in the water."

Rescue workers struggled with sub-freezing temperatures in the bone-chilling water, bathed in the harsh light from lamps carried by helicopters, a large white yacht and emergency vehicles parked on the bridge deck.

The plane crashed only seconds after leaving the north end of the main National Airport runway at 4 p.m. EST. The runway, which handles one flight every 90 seconds during peak hours, aims directly at the bridge about a mile away.

Jets customarily roar over the heavily used bridge at an altitude of about 500 feet — low enough to rattle the windows of passing cars.

The plane sheared the tops off cars of commuters trying to get home during the snowstorm. Government employees had been sent home early because of the weather and the bridge was packed when the plane hit.

Heroism and deep tragedy marked the minutes and hours after the crash.

Salvation Army Major Harold Anderson, who visited the crash scene, said one man was seen under the ice trying frantically to get out, but by the time the ice was broken he was dead.

A stewardess from the plane was pulled from the water by a man who shed his heavy coat and plunged into the Potomac.

"She was hanging on to a rope hanging down from a helicopter," said Lenny Skutnik, who was on the bridge when the plane crashed. "She grabbed hold of it and then she just gave out. I jerked my coat off and dove in."

"You couldn't last in that water for more than 20 minutes," said Dr. William Fouty at Washington Hospital Center, where one survivor was taken.

Hundreds of onlookers gathered along the river shore, standing in six inches of snow. Temperatures hovered in the mid-20s.

Families of possible victims of the crash gathered at the suburban Crystal City Marriott hotel near the airport to learn the fate of loved ones. Less than a year ago, other families met at the same hotel to welcome home the 52 Americans who had been held hostage in Iran.

Two Catholic priests who talked with family members said one man had put his wife on the plane to visit her grandmother who was suffering from cancer. Another man apparently lost his elderly mother.

Two parents had a son on the plane, another man had placed his 20-year-old wife aboard — and one young woman had said goodbye to her fiancé at the boarding gate for Flight 90.

A second tragedy struck the nation's capital within an hour of the air crash. At least three people were killed and several injured in the derailment of a subway train near the Smithsonian Institution station.

The D.C. fire department was bearing the brunt of both rescue efforts.

Police spokesman Hankins said officials hoped to resume the search for bodies in the air disaster "at some point" Thursday.

"We're waiting for additional equipment," he said, especially heated diving suits.

On the bridge, eerily illuminated by flashing lights playing off the swirling snow, officials tried to clear the wreckage of a half-dozen vehicles mangled by the plane as it scraped across the road.

At Tampa, people waiting for Flight 90 were taken into a room near the Air Florida office. A guard was posted outside.

The National Transportation Safety Board immediately launched an investigation, including looking for the crucial flight data recorder which will give a picture of the final seconds of the flight and the cockpit voice recorder.

Immediate speculation focus on the weather, but Frank Taylor, chief of the NTSB accident investigation division, said the board had no early indication that icing was a problem and had no idea now what caused the crash.

However, he said investigators had impounded the glycol solution used to de-ice the aircraft as a routine measure.

Ted Maher, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration, said there was no indication that any air traffic control error was involved in Wednesday's crash.

"By all that it looks like, right now, it had absolutely nothing to do with the air traffic control. It was a departure accident," he said.

"The airplane looked like it lost its sense of direction," said eyewitness Jerome Lancaster. "Its nose was up. It was the bottom that hit" the bridge.

"It happened instantly, just like a movie or something," said Lancaster, an Air Force sergeant.

The injured were taken to several hospitals in Washington and nearby Virginia. Health officials renewed an urgent plea for Type O blood — first issued Monday to replace stocks used over the holiday — and got an immediate, overwhelming response.

Doctors and nurses were airlifted to the crash site within minutes, where they treated the few survivors pulled to shore. A convoy of Air Force medical units arrived a few hours later.

The multi-lane, twin-span, 14th Street Bridge is a major artery between downtown Washington and the Virginia suburbs.

Rescue vehicles had difficulty getting through the traffic-clogged streets to the crash site. Fire engines, sirens screaming, raced into a near-gridlock traffic snarl on 14th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, two blocks from the White House.

Zztandottie, Zverblis End Phone Book

NEW YORK (UPI) — Many people go through life wishing their names were different — maybe Fairbanks, Cabot, Lowell or even F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Well, if you are dissatisfied with your name, consider the following people who because of the tyranny of the alphabet, have had to wait in lines all their lives just because their surnames began with the letter Z.

Archimedes — I. Zztandottie is the last person listed in the Manhattan telephone directory. (And, yes, Zztandottie does indeed exist. He is a medical doctor who not only is a physician but also is involved in medical jurisprudence and represents international cases at the World Court at The Hague in the Netherlands. Furthermore, the name Zztandottie is a shortened version of an ancient Greek name too difficult to spell in English.)

Robert J. Zverblis is the last listed in Houston and Ralph Zzyk ends the book in Philadelphia. And a double-Z person — Zap Zzyne — has the distinction of being last in the San Francisco directory.

And if you think your name isn't distinctive enough, how would you like to be listed with the 505 people in Manhattan named Ng? Among the Ng's alone, there are 12 people named Kwok Ng and nine named Chun Ng.

Or how about being one of the approximately 3,240 people named Smith listed in Manhattan? That would be a bit humbling to be sure.

Even presidential names do not insure exclusive listings. In Manhattan, there are 10 Reagans, more than 360 Carters, about 500 Fords, more than 50 Nixons, and about 390 Kennedys. But take hope, even though there are four George Washingtons listed, there is only one Eisenhower.

'Hey Kid, Wanna Be In Show Biz?' (For A Day)

By WILLIAM YELVERTON
Style Editor

"We are auditioning," the ad read, "for over 200 singers, dancers, musicians, variety artists and technicians for The Old Country, Busch Gardens, 1982 Entertainment Season.... Audition date: Greenville, N.C., Wednesday Jan. 13, 2-6 p.m. East Carolina University, A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall, Carnegie Hall, it isn't. But then again, on a wintry day in January, it was.

Busch Gardens held auditions. There was a touch of class on the stage: a large, black grand piano, complete with an accompanist.

Taped to the stage structure was a large poster showing the pay rates for the 1982 season: area supervisor, $6.15; stage manager, $6.05; Performer I (Country, Italy, Kaleidoscope), $5.80; Performer II (Globe, Festhaus), $5.20; Musician, $5.80; technician, $4.90; dresser, $4.10; costume character, $3.65.

The accompanist played some soft music, possibly to calm the contestants. And then the pay rate sign fell.

Showtime, folks.

Situated behind the large piano were the judges — three of them — waiting for the first hopeful.

And at 2:20 p.m., she appeared — a lovely young lady, a dancer. "If...they...could...see me now, that little gang of mine..." she sang, smiling always, with her hands on her hips. The judges sat smiling, nodding and tapping their toes. "That's enough," one of them said.

"Thank you," she said politely. "Thank you," they added.

A young man — contestant number two — very articulate and polite, appeared on stage. A singer. And did he sing. A song from Cabaret.

"It's got to happen/It's got to happen/Sometime. Maybe this time I'll win."

A few will. But a lot more will be disappointed.

Nervous?

"Well, I have been!" the young contestant said. "But I'm just going to get up there and do it. And if they like me, they like me. If they don't, they don't." She was dressed in a western shirt and hat, holding a record and a cassette tape.

She practiced her dance routine while she sat, moving her feet continually. She also practiced her stretching. Got down on the carpeted floor, and waited. And waited.

Then she was called.

"Hi," she said, seeming very certain as to whether she would succeed or not. She says she's a dancer, but she can sing, too. You have to be versatile in this business.

"And all that jazz! And...all...that...jazz," she sang. And she always smiled, looking right at the judges who returned the favor.

"Thank you," they said. "Okay," she replied. "I hope you enjoyed it."

Showtime, Folks

East Carolina University played host to "All That Jazz" (a scene from the motion picture is above) Wednesday afternoon as Busch Gardens held auditions for the 1982 Entertainment Season. There was plenty of dance, music, singing, all sorts of entertainment ranging from juggling to fiddle playing. There were many contestants, but only a few were selected. That's not to say that all weren't "stars for a day."

There was a five-minute wait before the next contestant appeared. He was an actor, clear and articulate, and he recited Shakespeare. "Do I dare? And do I dare?"

A young man, a trumpet player was next. The "head" judge, a clean-cut, somewhat thirties man, seemed to favor musicians.

"Durwood," he said, sounding as if he wanted to make the young man feel at home. "Please feel free to blow a few notes, play a scale. Whatever." Then Durwood walked across the stage, his confidence restored, and he grabbed a stand, placing his sheet music on it. And then he played some soft, swaying music. Concert music. He had a handkerchief wrapped around the valve casing of his horn. Just like ol' Satchmo. The lights flickered off his silver horn as he moved to the beat of the music.

Something a little different, almost refreshing, awaited the audience next. A young man, wearing a suit, complete with a top hat and white gloves, appeared in blackface.

He did mime, something he called "The Phases of Life." He portrayed a baseball player as he slid across the stage. And a bronco rider, as he slapped his hat against the back of his leg, jumping up and down. He portrayed a young father whose wife had just given birth to a boy. He gave the judges cigars which seemed to relieve the tension in the building.

The young man was also a juggler. He threw black and white balls up in the air as he joked with the judges.

This young man was special. He was clearly the best up until now. And the audience knew it.

A dancer was next, dressed in black, and she performed to Liza Minelli singing "City Lights." Then came another young dancer, and she whirled and twirled to music from "All That Jazz." She even snapped her fingers right on time. "Meet our friendly, eager group," the record sang. "We only need to service you."

Then there was a change of pace. A young lady, dressed very neatly in slacks and a white sweater, appeared. Apparently she had forgotten to put her age on the application. "Are you 18?" one of the judges asked. "Yes," she answered quickly. She sang "Second Hand Rose," and seemed to add a touch of Broadway to the "show." She then sang "Climb Every Mountain" from The Sound of Music.

Later on in the afternoon came something surprisingly, uniquely different. A young lady danced to a Pepsi commercial.

"Do you believe," one of the judges said, "that you're the first one we've ever had to dance to a Pepsi Cola commercial?"

You have to be a little different in this business. If you want to succeed.

Consider The Pet's Size Before Choice

By TOM HALL
News Editor

Any dog is a major investment but few investments become members of the family. If chosen carefully, your pet will reward you many times over the initial cost in terms of affection and happiness. However, your dog can become an endless source of heartbreak if you buy it without considering its eventual size, temperament and health costs.

Your friends will be eager to offer advice on the type of dog you should buy, but ultimately the decision is yours. With purebreds, you can choose a pet that conforms to your tastes. You can predict a pedigree puppy's size, weight and even its temperament when it is full-grown. Mongrel admirers may tell you that purebreds are inbred, but at least with purebreds it is possible to trace inherited diseases. However, if you're buying a particular breed because it is in fashion or you see it as a status symbol, perhaps you'd rather have a teddy bear in an Izod shirt.

Before you're set on buying a purebred, think about the cost. Prices often start around $75 and average between $125 and $150. This may sound like a great amount of money, but added costs can be kept to a minimum with little caution in selection and good health care of your purebred.

Most people buy a dog because they like the way it looks. You should also consider your lifestyle. Some breeds don't get along well with small children. A large dog may adapt to city life, but can you keep it from dragging you down the sidewalk by its leash? Reading the American Kennel Club's illustrated

Complete Dog Book is a good way to learn about breeds and their characteristics. Your local veterinarian may also be willing to suggest what kind of dog is right for you.

When you find the breed you want, try to see an adult of that breed. Your friends or veterinarian may know someone who has one, or you could visit a dog show. Watch the dog closely. How does it behave? How does it act toward you? Every owner is certain to say that his breed is best, but if he says his dog is having a bad day, check and see if a bad temperament is common in other dogs of that breed.

Once you're convinced that a certain breed is for you, look for a reputable breeder. Those sad-eyed puppies in the pet store may pull at your heart-strings, but they're more likely to put a dent in your pocket-book. You don't want a dog that's already sick, and pet store pups almost always cost more than those from a breeder. Many buyers of commercially sold puppies are saddled with extra veterinary bills. These puppies are especially prone to respiratory diseases as a result of air conditioning and cramped, unsanitary cages, not to mention the psychological problems that may come from hours in harsh fluorescent lights with many other howling pups.

Breeders can be found through classified ads, dog shows, and veterinarians. The best way to judge a breeder is by the number of questions he asks you. A good breeder won't sell a puppy to someone who won't give it proper care. If he asks you about the time you spend at home, your children, your experience with pets, your familiarity with the breed and exactly who will take care of the puppy, you can usually rest assured that he's a good breeder.

Purebred breeders should present certification of the puppy's parentage from the outset. This documentation is needed to register your pet with the AKC. If the breeder doesn't have certification papers, leave. People are often shocked when their uncertified "purebred" grows to three times its expected size.

After you have the certification in hand, ask to see the puppy's ancestry charts before seeing the puppy. It's hard to turn down that adorable bit of fluff in your hands. The charts may be confusing at first, but take your time and ask questions. It's your money and your sorrow if problems show up after you buy a puppy. Check to see if the same names appear more than once on the chart. Just as in humans, if the puppy is the product of close relatives, genetic defects are much more likely to emerge. Don't be impressed by the number of champions on the pedigree. Champions are often bred for their looks alone, and if the puppy has a champion as a close ancestor, it may have inherited problems in health or temperament. Puppies with champion potential cost more, too, and that's a needless expense if you're not planning to show your dog.

Some breeds are especially susceptible to inherited health problems, but with careful breeding these defects can be eliminated. If the breed you want has high in-

Restaurant Offers Many Popular Items

By CHAD BUFFKIN

Situated among the numerous fast-food restaurants on East 10th Street is the Szechuan Garden Chinese restaurant. When you go in, no time is wasted in getting you seated and taking your order. Because of the smallness of the place, the tables are situated close together, making the noise level rather high.

The menu offers almost 100 items ranging in price from 65 cents for egg drop soup to $15 for Peking duck. The most popular item on the menu, according to one waitress, is the dinner combination platter which offers a selection of main dishes such as sweet and sour pork, chicken chow mein, roast pork, egg foo young or shrimp with lobster sauce and includes hot tea, soup, fried rice and egg roll. The prices of the combinations are from $4.55 to $5.95.

I was served a generous amount of sweet and sour pork which was delicious. The soup was tasty also, but the egg roll tasted like the frozen kind you get at the grocery.

The beverage menu listed a variety of California and imported wines and also several popular brands of beer — American and Oriental.

The decor of the Szechuan Garden is "fast-Chinese." The Oriental lights and paintings are expected in Chinese restaurants, but the red, white and blue wall paper made me think of the hot dogs that used to be served there by the previous tenants.

If you're planning an enchanting evening with a friend and looking for a quaint, romantic oriental restaurant, this isn't the place to go. If you're just hungry for Chinese food, however, the Szechuan Garden offers good food — except for the egg roll — fast service and reasonable prices.

Early Teams Very 'Original'

reason — players' greed. Certain baseballers were dissatisfied with their salaries in the AA or National League and sought to secure higher compensation for their efforts. A top-notch player could expect a contract for as much as $2,500 a year in the Players' League. But the benefits, again, were short-lived. The league's lifespan was also only one year, just as the Union Association. But if nothing else, the Players' Association boasted some of the most original names for their teams. Just imagine a contest between the Buffalo Bisons and the Boston Beaneaters. Or how about the Brooklyn Wonders against the Pittsburgh Burghers? Perhaps the reason for the league's short history is apparent. Who in his right mind would pay money to see a Boston Beaneater?

The next organization to appear on the scene came in 1912. The U.S. League, founded by William Abbott Witman of Reading, Pennsylvania, became the fourth such league attempting to move into baseball's big time. Beginning in May 1912, the league got into severe trouble right from the start. In the first game between New York and Reading, pitchers for both teams had a few "arm control" problems. As the day progressed, nine batters were hit by wild pitches; two suffered injuries which successfully removed them from the game... on stretchers. By 1913, the league was abandoned. But in that same year, another league was formed. The Federal League, which lasted until 1915, turned out to be another terrific money loser, dropping over $176,000 of investors' funds in just two seasons. Critics of the league could not pinpoint the exact reason for the organization's collapse. But once again, the question arises, who would pay good money to support a team called the Brooklyn Tip-Tops (named after the owner's bread company)? The Chicago Whales? The Newark Peppers? Needless to say, even an admission price drop to a dime couldn't salvage this league.

But these leagues were not without their great names and their influence on modern baseball. On a typical Sunday near the turn of the century, a fan could sit at the ball park and watch as such famed players as Harry Wright, Charlie Comiskey and Tony Mullane battled it out on the mound and at the plate. But the players' nicknames were probably the only aspect of the league which was worse than the team nicknames.

Some Dogs Have Genetic Diseases

Some breeds are especially susceptible to inherited health problems, but with careful breeding these defects can be eliminated. If the breed you want has high instances of genetic diseases, be sure to ask the breeder specific questions. Although the defective puppy is to be pitied, the buyer is the one who must bear the weight of the breeder's mistakes. A good breeder will keep progeny records to note how offspring turn out and to improve his breeding program.

Ask about hip dysplasia if you're looking for a large breed puppy. This is a disease of the hip joints that eventually causes dislocation of the hip socket. If you want a miniature or toy breed, ask about patellar luxation. That's the scientific name for dislocation of the kneecap that may cripple a dog. Epilepsy is found more often in the dog than in any other domestic animal; be on the lookout if you're buying a setter, retriever, spaniel, dachshund or beagle. Progressive blindness is also found in many breeds, so be sure to inquire about it. Now ask the breeder about a health guarantee. Reputable breeders should be willing to exchange a dog or give full refund if problems crop up within a year. The best guarantee is one in which your money is refunded and you get to keep the dog. You won't want to give up the pet you've grown to love, and the refund will help pay the veterinarian bills.

If all these points check out fine, you're ready to see the litter. Always see one or both parents; you'll see the temperament you can expect the puppies to have when grown. Aggressiveness in shepherds, trembling in Dobermans, and hyperactivity in poodles, setters and schnauzers are just samples of what you can avoid by watching a litter's parents closely.

Let the puppies roam around. Are they playful and active, or do they shrink back? A good test for alertness is to shake your ear keys while moving them slowly from left to right. A six- to eight-week-old puppy should be able to follow the keys with its eyes. A puppy may seem long-legged and awkward, but make sure it's not having trouble walking. When the puppy isn't looking, call it or clap your hands; see if it notices. Bright, attentive eyes are usually a sign of good health.

If a breeder of a litter does not measure up to your standards, don't buy. Many puppies are bought from the first breeder visited. Don't feel guilty if you want to shop around. If it makes you feel better, tell the unsatisfactory breeder that you'd like to see some other breeders before coming back. Then don't come back.

If you've found a good breeder and a healthy puppy, congratulations! This can be the start of a long and happy friendship with your pet.

A Rivalry Revisited

Bucs vs. Seahawks

By CHARLES CHANDLER
Sports Editor

The young basketball rivalry between East Carolina and UNC-Wilmington has blossomed in recent years to the point that players on both squads admit it is legitimate. That young rivalry will be renewed tonight (Thursday) in Minges Coliseum.

Tip-off time is 7:30 p.m. for the game that will feature a pair of clubs playing their best ball of the year. Both the Pirates and Seahawks have won four of their last five.

If this year's game at Minges is anything like last year's, fans are in for a real show. A last-second bucket last season by Edwin Timmons gave the Seahawks a 57-55 victory. ECU returned the favor at Wilmington later in the year, winning 72-64.

The Seahawks, 7-6, have historically brought a sizeable fan gathering with them to Minges. The team itself always seem to be full of enthusiasm. This, said ECU head coach Dave Odom, is something his team must offset.

"We must counteract their emotion early in the game," he said. "There's no doubt that they'll come in here and be really ready for us. They always are."

Wilmington's enthusiasm, Odom said, stems from the growing rivalry between the two schools. That rivalry, he soon added, is not one filled with bad blood.

"We do have a neighborhood rivalry, and I think that's good. But it is not a heated rivalry, just very competitive. I remember when we went down there last year their fans were really fired up for us. I hope our fans will return the favor this year."

Odom agreed that the teams' recent winning ways was evidence that both clubs may be coming of age at the same time.

"I think the game is a very important one for us," he said. "Certainly it is for them too. Our immediate goal is to improve and continue winning."

Odom described the Seahawks' zone defense as "traditionally one of the best we face." He said penetrating inside that zone and hitting from the outside will both be objectives of the Pirates, who are 6-6.

ECU is enjoying one of its best years ever from the floor, connecting on 50.4 percent of its field goal attempts. That figure is well above last season's final 45.7 percentage.

The current average is also above the school record of 49.6 percent, set in 1979.

Balanced scoring has been the byword thus far for the Pirates. Forward Charles Green leads the way with an 11.8 average. Point guard Tony Byles is fractions behind, tallying 11.7 points per game. Forward Morris Hargrove is also in double figures at 10.8.

Shawn Williams, a 6-5 forward, is the only Seahawk scoring in double digits. He is averaging 17.4 points and 5.7 rebounds per game. Point guard Frankie Dickens is next, averaging an even nine points.

ECU's Odom is impressed by both of UNC-W's top scorers.

"Williams is a fine player. He has traditionally been a thorn in my side. And Dickens provides quality at the point. I have great respect for his abilities."

ECU's Leading Scorer, Charles Green (34), Puts Shot Up

Jones Paces Lady Pirate Upset Of Tar Heels

ECU coach Cathy Andruzzi talks with Lady Pirates during a timeout. The team upset arch-rival North Carolina Tuesday night in Chapel Hill.

CHAPEL HILL — East Carolina's Sam Jones pumped in 19 points and Loletha Harrison held North Carolina's Kathy Crawford scoreless for the first time in her college career Tuesday night as the Lady Pirates pulled off their second straight upset of an Atlantic Coast Conference team, dumping the Tar Heels, 71-66.

Crawford, a 5-11 junior forward, played only 15 frustrating minutes in the game, and failed to score from the floor. It was the first time she had ever been scoreless during her three-year career at North Carolina.

North Carolina's Tresa Brown tried to take up the slack, firing in 30 points on 14 of 20 field goal attempts and two of two from the line, but it wasn't enough to overcome the pesky Pirates, now 6-7 on the season.

North Carolina drops to 7-6 on the year.

Early in the second half, East Carolina, down 37-36 at intermission, ran off a string to take command. The Lady Pirates scored the first six points on a pair of jumpers by Jones sandwiched around a basket by Mary Denkler. The Lady Pirates never lost the lead again after that.

Jones, who scored 14 of her 19 points in the second half, paced the way, while point guard Lorraine Foster and Lillian Barnes helped push the Lady Pirates out to as much as a six-point lead, but couldn't break away from North Carolina.

With 2:54 left and time running out on the 30-second clock, Fran Hooks hit a jumper from the key for a 64-58 lead. From that point, the Tar Heels had to resort to the foul, and in the final minutes, East Carolina connected on five of six free throw tries to put the game away.

In the first half, Brown scored 18 of the first 20 Tar Heel points as the Heels moved out front by as much as four points, 32-28, in the late stages of the period. Brown hit a pair of free throws to set that margin.

A Hooks jumper with seven seconds left in the half pulled the Pirates within one, 37-36, and set the stage for the second half takeover by East Carolina.

ECU's game plan, with Denkler getting double-teamed, was to get the ball to the off-side for the short jumper, and it worked quite well according to Coach Cathy Andruzzi, as Jones, Barnes, Hooks and Foster got 10-foot jumpers near the basket.

In the meantime, East Carolina's defense made it tough on the Heels to score inside. After shooting 56.7 percent in the first half, the Tar Heels shot only 40 percent in the second. Crawford, Henrietta Walls and Meredith White, who each have seasonal averages in double figures, contributed a total of eight points in the game.

Turnovers also were a key factor, as the Pirates forced 23 by the Tar Heels while committing only 15 of their own.

Despite a wide Tar Heel rebounding edge, 48-31, Harrison ended the game as the overall leader with 11. Carolina was paced by Kanti Killian with 10 and Brown with nine.

In addition to Jones' 19, Denkler finished with 13, while Barnes had 12. No one besides Brown scored in double figures for the Lady Heels.

"Our kids played an excellent, excellent basketball game," Andruzzi said. "The difference in the game was that our kids played solid, fundamental basketball."

"Usually, when you are out-rebounded like we were and outscored from the floor, you lose, but the key was that our kids have matured and took the ball from them. We had only 15 turnovers to their 23 and we had 11 steals. We had full control of the game."

Andruzzi said that the Pirate defense keyed the win, making outstanding plays to keep Carolina from making a comeback after ECU had taken the lead. "Harrison did an outstanding job on Crawford in the first half, and after they took her out, we put her on Brown in the second half, and she did a good job there, too," Andruzzi also noted that Jones had eight rebounds and five steals in leading the Pirates.

"Hooks played an excellent defensive game, too," she added.

"This was the type of game where we had to be on the ball head-wise because they were making so many changes in the lineup. We had to make a lot of adjustments, and Rosie (Thompson — now assisting in coaching) did a great job of getting us on the right people."

The Lady Pirates return to action on Friday, hosting nationally ranked Division II Campbell in the 8 p.m. game of the Duke-East Carolina doubleheader in Minges Coliseum. Duke takes on James Madison at 6 p.m., and the two host teams switch opponents for Saturday night's action.

Wilmington's Williams Returns 'Home' To Face Pirates Tonight

By CHARLES CHANDLER
Sports Editor

Homecomings. Basketball players have a special liking for them. Tonight's East Carolina - UNC-Wilmington will be one of sorts for Seahawk forward Shawn Williams.

Williams hails from nearby Washington and will be playing as close to home as is possible, ECU being the nearest university to his hometown. Washington is, of course, the town that once raved over their beloved "Pam Pack", which marched to two consecutive state 3-A championships while Williams was in high school.

Those Washington teams are considered among the best ever in

Former Washington High star Shawn Williams

North Carolina prep basketball history. In addition to Williams, the Pam Pack featured current college stars Alvis Rogers of Wake Forest, and All-American Dominique Wilkins of Georgia.

Williams played in the shadow of those two prep phenoms. That, he now says, did not bother him.

"It wasn't frustrating for me at all," he said. "Everybody asks me that. But I'd even catch myself watching them in practice or in the games. It was like watching a human highlights film."

Many observers felt during Williams' senior season at Washington that he would surely opt to go to East Carolina. His mother was, and still is, an employee of the university. A scholarship offer from the Pirates did not come, though, and he ended up at UNC-Wilmington.

"I thought about East Carolina some," Williams admitted Wednesday via telephone. "But when I came to Wilmington I knew that it was the place for me. I felt that I could fit in here. I was probably looking to get further from home than Greenville anyway."

The Seahawks traditionally play ECU a tough game in Greenville. Williams certainly is no exception. He was a real demon on the boards in last season's 57-55 win over the Pirates.

"We all look forward to playing East Carolina," he said. "It has a special effect on us. Only a few other teams compare. When I first got here I was told ECU was one of our rivals. I know now that is true."

UNC-W forward Shawn Williams scores against ECU during his freshman season.

The Seahawks stand 7-6 on the season. That winning record is largely thanks to increased output and leadership from Williams.

The 6-5 junior forward is averaging 17.4 points and 5.7 rebounds per game. Williams says he came into the season looking to improve his game.

"This year it was a matter of me saying, 'I can do and I am going to do it.' I think I had a lot more determination coming into this year, and I have developed a lot more confidence than ever as the season has progressed."

When making his remarks about the Seahawks this week, ECU coach Dave Odom let it be known that he had a great deal of respect for the Washington native.

"Williams seems traditionally to be a thorn in my side," Odom said. "He has always played extremely well against us. We are going to have to try to do something about him Thursday night."

No doubt Williams will be ready for the Pirates' greeting. After all, homecomings do not come along everyday.

Denkler, Relay Team Make National Lists

Noting the Pirates:

LADY PIRATE forward Mary Denkler is the state's leading women's scorer, averaging 21.7 points per game.

That figure also ranks Denkler 17th in the nation among Division I players.

Her best performances of the season came against Northwestern and Miami (Ohio). She poured in 29 points in both contests.

FIVE OTHER Lady Pirates are among the national leaders as well. They are featured on the women's track team.

The ECU women's 200-yard freestyle relay team is ranked fourth in the nation among Division I schools by Swimming World Publications. Making the honor even more impressive is the fact that the Lady Pirates are a Division II team.

ECU's time of 1:40.59, recorded in the Penn State Relays, stands as the fourth best in the nation this year.

The fivesome of Carol Shacklett, Moria McHugh, Nancy James, Lori McQuestion and Nan George combined for the time.

North Carolina's time of 1:37.29 tops the list. The remainder of the top ten is, in order, West Virginia, Pittsburgh, ECU, Houston, Alabama, Michigan State, James Madison, Virginia Tech and Michigan.

Charles Chandler

environment. He stated earlier in the week that he was looking forward to playing in the coliseum that he once thought would be his college basketball home.

CHUCK BUSHBECK, the ECU placekicker who battled Hodgkin's disease to play for the Pirates this past fall, has returned home to Philadelphia.

Bushbeck has transferred back to Villanova, his college home for three years before the school dropped its football program. Bushbeck moved back and will graduate this spring. If he had remained at ECU he would have had to have forfeited many of the academic hours he had earned at Villanova.

His disease, by the way, is in remission and his chances for recovery look bright.

ECU GUARD CHARLES WATKINS will rejoin his Pirate teammates for tonight's game with UNC-W. He had been on a voluntary leave of absence before returning to practice Tuesday.

Watkins missed four games during the absence and, says Pirate coach Dave Odom, will have to work himself back into the ECU lineup. He had been a regular before taking the leave.

Mark McLaurin and Bill McNair have shared time at the position while Watkins has been out. McLaurin will get the starting call tonight.

IM Sign-Up Is Set

The ECU Intramural Department would like to welcome back all students, faculty and staff members from the holidays. Again, we will offer activities suited for every participant, no matter his or her particular desire. So come out and enjoy the fun. REMEMBER: PARTICIPATE RATHER THAN SPECTATE!

For all those who want to rid themselves of that extra "Holiday Weight" or just get in shape, the IM Department is offering "Aerobic," "Belly Dancing," and "Self-Defense" classes. Registration is in Memorial Gym, Room 204 between the hours of 8-12 and 1-5. Fees for the classes are $5 for 1 night per week or $10 for 2 nights per week. Also $15 per couple will be charged for couples classes held on Tuesday and Thursday from 5:15-6:15. Further information can be obtained at the Intramural Office or by calling Sue Stanley at 757-6064. Remember these classes start the week

Men Swimmers Need Win Badly — Scharf

By THOMAS BRAME Staff Writer

"The ECU men swimmers have got to beat Navy to have a winning season," proclaimed Pirate Coach Ray Scharf after a disappointing loss to Maine.

The loss to Maine put the Pirate's record to 3-2. The loss was due partly to the absence of the divers. "The loss of the divers hurt our team both psychologically and physically," explained Pirate mentor Scharf, "we lost 14 points due to their absence, that hurts."

Navy is a formidable opponent for the Pirates with a record of 1-1. Their only loss was a close one to a good Harvard team. The meet with the Pirates is set for 1 p.m. on Saturday here at the Minges Natatorium.

The Lady Pirate swimmers will also meet Navy on Saturday. The women are coming off a big win against James Madison. Four national qualifying times were achieved in that victory. The women are doing well, their record standing at 2-1.

The women of the Naval Academy have a record of 1-1 thus far this season.

"This meet against Navy is the toughest dual meet for our swimmers thus far in our year," said ECU Coach Scharf. "This is also the biggest for us thus far."

Tourney Tickets Available

Tickets to the ECAC-South tournament, to be held March 4-6 at the Norfolk Scope, will be given away at each remaining ECU home game. Also, tickets are available for purchase at the Minges ticket office.

Ten books of tickets to the tourney will be given to students for all of ECU's remaining home dates. Students can also buy as many books of tickets as they want for $9 each. The regular price is $12.

The book of tickets will admit students to each of the tourney's six games. Three first-round games will be played on Thursday, March 4; two semifinal matchups on Friday, March 5; and the championship game on Saturday, March 6.

The tournament winner will go on to play in the NCAA Tournament.

Ticket Pick-Up Set

In an attempt to avoid congestion in front of Minges Coliseum on game nights, the ECU athletic department is making tickets to men's basketball games available to students prior to each home contest.

It was incorrectly stated in Tuesday's edition of The East Carolinian that pre-game pick-up for women's basketball games would also be available. Instead, students will be up ticket stubs for Lady Pirate games just prior to gametime.
