ECU has completed a study on the impact of last summer's Hurricane Bonnie and has found that the evacuation costs for the storm were more than $46 million. According to the study produced by ECU Regional Development Services and the Departments of Sociology and Economics, the businesses in eight coastal counties suffered the greatest economic impact from the storm. The average cost or loss of revenue to each of 1,740 firms impacted by the voluntary evacuation order was estimated at $17,593. The total evacuation costs for the businesses were $30.6 million.

CORY SHEELER
NEWS EDITOR

The Student Government Association has their executive board in place and is ready to begin a new semester.

With many goals for the upcoming year, they want to get as many students involved as possible. The SGA will be holding elections for day representatives, dorm representatives and classes representatives. The election will be held Sept. 22 and the filing deadline for candidates is Sept. 3.

There will be a mandatory meeting on Sept. 8 in Mendenhall Student Center. Below is a list of the SGA executive branch.

Cliff Webster, Jr. Student Body President

Major: Graduate Student, MBA program
Marketing degree, May 1999.
East Carolina University

View on SGA: SGA gives students their link to a "fair share" on our campus. It gives them the chance to actually have a voice and make decisions that impact our student body. For example: the Student Recreation Center. The SGA put that into the workings for our university. And especially now, as the University is overlooking the master plan, we, the student body, can have a huge voice in what will happen over the next few years as we start to grow rapidly.

John P. Meriac Vice President

Major: Psychology/Business

View of SGA: Students should get involved in SGA to get a feel of what it is like to work with and help many people from all areas of campus and to gain an insider's perspective of how ECU works.

Overton Harper, III Treasurer

Major: Finance

View of SGA: Participating in SGA is an excellent way to make a lasting impact on East Carolina University

Jessica Dowdy Secretary

Major: Secondary English Education

View of SGA: To become familiar with the inner workings of ECU. To help with issues that students feel are imperative.

New vice chancellor named

Moore to oversee student services

TERRA STEINBEISER
STAFF WRITER

Dr. Garrie Moore has been appointed as the new vice chancellor for the Division of Student Life.

Moore came to ECU last year as assistant to the chancellor and director of equal opportunity employment, after working as the dean of students at Pitt Community College for a number of years.

As a part of the Student Life division, he takes part in overseeing the many services it offers. They include a variety of non-academic student activities and programs, including housing and dining services, recreation and intramural, minority student affairs, financial aid, orientation, career services and student health services.

The University of North Carolina Board of Governors acknowledged Moore's appointment as vice chancellor at a meeting on Aug. 13 in Cullowhee.

"I am very pleased that Dr. Moore has accepted this appointment as vice chancellor," said Chancellor Richard Eakin. "He has a distinguished record of service to higher education and to this region. I know that he will continue the tradition of outstanding leadership in the Division of Student Life."

In the excitement of taking on a new position, Moore has not overlooked the fact that there will be challenging times ahead.

"My first goal is to take a look at the existing programs to see if they're meeting the needs of the students. Then we can move on to see if we have the resources to begin new things," Moore said. "The challenges will include making sure we have appropriate quality housing and financial aid programs that are meeting the needs of students. We have to become equipped and stay equipped."

Moore is replacing Dr. Alfred Mathews, a faculty member who will be missed.

"In his 10 years here, [Mathews] invested a lot into the growth and development of the University, from buildings such as Wright Place, Todd Dining Hall and the Student Rec Center to new student leadership programs," said Dr. Richard Speier, dean of students. "His vision is going to be missed."

"However, Dr. Moore brings a new vision to the University. He's very concerned with the way the students think, feel and act," Speier said.

Overall, Moore feels that the transfer of leadership within the division will be successful.

"I'm really excited about the staff," Speier said. "They're all energetic, well-qualified, knowledgeable, student-centered and working hard to stay on the cutting edge."

Dean of students visits ROTC camp

Speier experiences trenches of Fort Louis

This summer camouflage, danger and heat surrounded Dean of Students, Dr. Ronald Speier. This was quite a contrast from his office environment.

Speier and his wife were invited by the ROTC to take part in the summer ROTC program in Fort Louis, Washington. Upon completion of the course, the dean was presented an ROTC Advanced Camp 1999 plaque.

Captain Donald Mundy presented the dean with the plaque, commenting on how proud he was of his cadets. Many of the them had gone through the course with Speier.

"Thank you very much, I truly appreciate it," said Speier, receiving his plaque. "I took great pride in wearing the uniform while I went throughout the course."

"He successfully completed a rough course," Mundy said.

University ranks high in magazine poll

U.S. News and World Report rates ECU 7th

PHILLIP GILFUS
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

ECU is ranked seventh as a Top Southern Public University, according to the 2000 College Rankings released this month by U.S. News and World Report. The university is also ranked 23rd among Southern regional universities.

The magazine used each university's academic reputation, retention of students, faculty resources, student selectivity, financial resources and alumni generosity to decide the rankings.

"I think it's wonderful," said Ronald Speier, dean of students. "Our quality of faculty and types of experiences that we offer in student life, inside and outside the classroom make us an excellent school."

ECU was placed in the category of "regional" schools, unlike UNC-Chapel Hill and Wake Forest, which were ranked in the "national university" categories.

U.S. News and World Report defined a "regional university" as one that offers "a full range of undergraduate and master's programs but few, if any, doctoral programs."

In the category of Southern Public Universities, ECU tied for seventh with UNC-Wilmington, Winthrop University (S.C.) and Longwood College (Va.). Appalachian State ranks number five, followed by UNC-Charlotte at number six.

In the category of Southern regional universities, ECU was tied with Longwood College, UNC-Wilmington, Winthrop University, Bellarmine College (Ky.) and Christian Brothers University (Tenn.).

"More and more people are viewing ECU as a good place to go to school," said John Durham, director of News and Communications.

He added, though, that not too much emphasis should be placed on rankings.

"The University makes its policies based on how to make this a better place to go to school, not on rankings."

Marion Sykes, senior associate director of admissions, stated that the rankings show that ECU has "the right balance."

"We have a great diversity of degree programs, ranging from fine arts to allied health programs," he said.

He added that ECU is large enough to "make a complete college experience," but small enough to have interaction among professors and students in the classroom.

Colorado University's human-rights repository in danger

University of Colorado—C.U. Boulder's campus may lose a significant portion of its world-renowned human-rights repository because the preeminent archive program is not fiscally and philosophically compatible with the goal of the university's so-called "Total Learning Environment" initiative, sources familiar with the situation told the Colorado Daily on Tuesday.

C.U. Boulder's human-rights repository—currently the largest academic collection of non-governmental human-rights materials in the world—contains documents donated by the Guatemala Human Rights Commission, the Soviet Jewry Rescue Movement, and the El Salvador Archive Project. The repository is also home to documents bestowed by Physicians for Human Rights, the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and the U.S. Department of State, which endowed to C.U. its files pertaining to atrocities committed by Iraqi secret police forces during the Persian Gulf War.

In January, C.U. announced with much fanfare yet another major acquisition: The New York-based Human Rights Watch organization—which has compiled voluminous files on human-rights violations around the world—had agreed to entrust all of its documents to C.U.

But on Tuesday, a Human Rights Watch employee who spoke on the condition of anonymity said that the organization is very frustrated with the lack of institutional support that C.U. has given the files. According to the employee, the organization may try to reclaim its materials so that it can entrust them to an institution that could better promote their historical importance to the public.

Religions converge at Indiana University in celebration

Indiana University — A swami, a rabbi, a Buddhist, a Muslim, a priest and a nun walk into a church.

It's not the beginning of a joke, or a meeting to argue religious differences. Instead, it was a celebration of the similarities of their faiths.

Understanding among various religious faiths was a common objective as His Holiness, the 14th Dalai Lama of Tibet, and other spiritual leaders led an "Inter-religious Vigil for World Peace," Monday evening.

The event was co-sponsored by the Monastic Interreligious Dialogue and the Tibetan Culture Center in celebration of the Kalachakra for World Peace 1999.

The Dalai Lama recognized Sister Mary Funk of Our Lady of Grace Monastery in Beech Grove, his brother Thubten Norbu of the TCC and others for planning of the vigil.

His Holiness' entrance was greeted by the sounds of the Drepung Loseling Monastic Choir and the Abbey of Gethsemani Monastic Schola. All attendants rose and many bowed as the Dalai Lama walked down the aisle, past an illuminated globe at the front of the church.

An invocation was given by representatives of Hindu, Islamic, Jewish and Christian faiths. Attendees included Swami Varadananda, Dr. Shahid Athar, Rabbi Eric Bram, Father Tobias Colgan and Sister Mary Sue Freiberger. Their speaking reflected similar ideals among faiths, recognizing one god, while praying for peace and harmony.

Twenty minutes of silent meditation followed a performance of "Ave Maria" by cellist Michael Fitzpatrick and harpist Laura Bryne. The silence was broken when Fitzpatrick and pianist Loren Tice softly played Ravel's "The Pavane."

To conclude the vigil, participants followed each other around the displayed globe before exiting. Bassist Anthony Stoops and flutist Lisha McDuff joined other musicians in playing a recessional song. The Dalai Lama smiled and shook hands with attendants as he left the church.

The dean visited Fort Louis with his wife on a two to three day vacation.

"I've been married 29 years, and it's been the first vacation we've taken without the children," Speier said. "We enjoyed walking around Port Angles, while waiting for the boat to camp."

"Hopefully, upon completion of the program, the dean will be able to pay big dividends for the regime presented," said Lt. Colonel Michael Loftin, jokingly.

The dean was able to see and experience what the cadets encounter at camp. The program was aimed to give Speier knowledge of what ROTC students go through so that he is better equipped to assist them with their problems.

"Now I can be sensitive with the knowledge I have gained from the program for when the ROTCs return to the campus," Speier said. "The ROTC is a great program. It started when I came to ECU, and now we are trying to expand the program."

In the midst of his honor ceremony, Speier mentioned his office door is always open to students, which is located in Whichard 201.

OUR VIEW

This month we have been ranked seventh among public universities in the South and 23rd among all Southern regional schools by U.S. News and World Report magazine.

At times our university seems to have a negative image. Talk to a person about ECU and they may start to ask about the "easy" classes, the downtown activities and wild parties. But that is not ECU. This month we have been ranked seventh among public universities in the South and 23rd among all Southern regional schools by U.S. News and World Report magazine. And rightly so. We offer over 14,000 students a variety of programs, both academic and recreational. There is a diverse group of degree programs to choose from, with over 20 degree programs holding national accreditations. Our School of Medicine draws students from everywhere and continues to excel in its nursing programs. Our university is large enough to be involved in Division I-A athletics, playing such schools as the University of Miami, West Virginia University and Tulane University. We offer an amazing student activity center at Mendenhall and an extensive Student Recreation Center. There is a countless number of student organizations for every interest or hobby a student has. But our school is also small enough to have a "small town" feel. Most professors have personal interaction with their students, calling them by name, unlike the lecture halls where "every student is just another number." This recent ranking of ECU in a magazine only encourages our belief that ECU is one of the best. And though we may get an occasional black mark on our record, we know that our students are trying their best and our faculty and staff work hard.

PATRICK MCMAHON

Students can have positive impact

All I'm saying is just that when you do get out into the real world, do not forget about the less fortunate.

Let me just start this off with a little welcome back to everyone here at good ol' ECU. Now that the hellos are exchanged, I feel the need to get this off my chest. You know, everyday I look around and realize how lucky I am to be here. Lucky to be in school, lucky to have such a good group of friends, and just lucky in general. When I think about all the things that could have gone wrong in my life, I feel privileged to have the opportunity to better myself through higher education. I'm sure most of us here at ECU are from North Carolina and know that certain areas of the state are not the best places to grow up in, but somehow we still made it through the rigors of early life and arrived here (enough with the ramblings, Patrick, get to the point). My point is, when you come to ECU and get your degree, don't forget about what you left behind and just say "I'm never going back to..." You owe that little town that you grew up in a whole lot. Sure it may be riddled in drugs, violence and ugly women, but that is no excuse. Use this newfound knowledge of the world and do something with it. I know it sounds stupid, but HELP SOMEONE.

Not everyone is as fortunate as us. Not everyone has a job right out of school that starts at 25 grand. For some people, it takes three to four years combined to make that much money. I'm not saying for everyone to drop that $40,000 a year computer analyst job and run into the slums of Kinston and throw $100 dollar bills at poor people. All I'm saying is just that when you do get out into the real world, do not forget about the less fortunate. You have to do something. Get involved with your church, your community leaders, the school board in your town and anything that can make a positive difference in someone else's life. This is not your choice, it is your duty.

Bicyclists should be more careful

Believe it or not, there are some who would be saddened if little me were to be flattened in the middle of campus by some mad cyclist.

who has suffered such close calls. Everyday, I see cyclists who do not seem to realize that our campus is a busy place with people everywhere. It is not a good idea to speed through campus at high speeds, endangering those on foot. It really makes me ill to see someone on a bicycle hurdling through with no regard for those around them.

Obviously, many riders do not seem to care about us poor lil' pedestrians. Today on campus I was nearly run over by at least three bicycles. I also witnessed a near head-on collision involving two bicycles, and saw one biker almost run over some poor girl with a bag full of books. How malicious!

Granted, not all cyclists around ECU are bad. I also do not have anything against riding a bike on campus. I think that it is a convenient, quick mode of transportation. My beef is not with cyclists in general. My concern is irresponsible riding. Bikes can be dangerous and those who ride through campus like a holy terror are not being fair to those on foot or to those cyclists who ride responsibly.

If you are going to ride a bike through campus, please do so carefully. Look out for those of us not riding, and also be aware of others who are. Believe it or not, there are some who would be saddened if little of me were to be flattened in the middle of campus by some mad cyclist.

Search for perfect pants comes up short

The last time I had to wear droopy pants was when I inherited them from my brother or my cousin.

whether I needed it or not—it didn't matter. Just as the hair was getting long enough to hold onto, off it came. That continued all through high school. Fortunately, back then, a lot of fathers still ran the family, and there were a lot of us kids running around with short hair.

Then, in the 70s, all hell broke loose. I went home from college for Thanksgiving and I sat across the table from my dad and my uncle Earl. I was proud of my dad since he always appreciated my coming home. But uncle Earl was another story. I remember him cutting into the slab of ham on his plate and without looking at me said, "you now one of them hippies?" Things got so quiet that I swear the turkey let out a little gobble. I said, "great-grand daddy had long hair and a beard—I wonder if anyone thought he was a hippie?" I remember the sweat breaking on my forehead, and I looked up at him keeping his eyes on his plate. Hippies had more important things going on back in the 70s than family grief.

How many times have I heard the expression "clothes make the man?" Of course, I suspect the same goes for women, too. But why some people wear clothes that make them look worse than they look, I can't understand. And why would anyone wear clothes that said "BUM" on them? If you already look like a bum, why advertise it? I think I'll make a line of clothes named "Flunky" and another called "Slob." I'm going to give Ralph and Tommy a run for their money. And, why pay good money to advertise another person's name—that's for kids who don't know who they are. I wonder if they still make Roy Rogers underwear?

I used to sweat it when I was a kid and still had my brother's or cousin's names sewn in my undies. I was afraid if I got hit by a car, no one would know who I was until it was too late. I can see it now—"here lies George Klutz."

Several years ago, I found myself struck by a train, and no, I wasn't in the track. The only thing I could think of, as I was lying there in the dust, was whose name is in my underwear? Then, I remembered I was over 21 and hadn't worn anyone else's underwear in years.

What I am trying to say is that guys have it rough finding the right length clothes, so give them a break. If a girl's dress is too short, who's going to point a finger?

Laws of physics apply to relationships

No matter how hard we try as humans to change other people and other things, we can't.

Much of the early work performed in the field of physics was devoted to explaining the concept of motion. The result of this early work and experimentation is adapted into the commonplace way we all view the world. Aristotle, Galileo and Newton are three dominant figures associated with the breaking ground on the broad scope of the study of physics. Although their work is now in part revised, the impact of their contribution is undeniable. So, what is the point here? Interestingly enough, the themes of their theories and studies in explaining an object's motion runs parallel to themes regarding the motion of life.

One of the very first individuals documented for investigating matters regarding physics is Aristotle. In 300 B.C., he thought the world to ultimately exist of four basic substances — earth, air, water and fire. While this theory is obviously in error today, his further conclusions on the placement tendency of these substances relates to the placement tendency in life. Aristotle claimed that every substance desires to exist in a certain place and will always end up in that place despite its temporary setting places. How true this is of people and places today. No matter how hard we try as humans to change other people and other things, we can't. Our attempts are in vain because the while we may alter people and things, the alteration is only temporary and thus unsustainable. Basically, people are who they are and things are what they are. Furthermore, these people and things will always revert to where and what they were meant to be in the first place because essentially, that is their true desire in the scheme of life. The only real, true and permanent change can only be made within you and should only be made for you and no one else.

The second figure to study physics occurred in the seventeenth century. Galileo, in his study of the universe, concluded that motion is constant and unless bothered, it lasts forever. This resulted in the "Law of Inertia." Inertia is the resistance to change motion. This law implies further that the greater the mass, the greater the resistance to change motion. How does this relate to the real world? The larger something or someone is in your life, the more you resist its changing and the harder it is for that thing or that person to change in the role they play in your life. Think about the things and people that either mean a lot or consume a lot of time. It should be apparent that these are the very things, like school, jobs, family ties and "significant" (or soon to be insignificant) others that you just can't change or from which can't break away. That is exactly why old rules are frustrating — why long-term relationships never seem to end and why old habits die hard. Large amounts of longevity, meaning and time increase the constancy of a situation and decreases the chance of those situations changing in your life.

Sir Isaac Newton should be a recognizable name for anyone familiar with math and science. He developed three laws regarding objects and their motion that set the precedent for the way motion is viewed still today. His third law is best suited for the application to life. Often called the "Law of Action and Reaction," Newton claimed that forces occur in pairs and that for every action, there is an equal and opposite reaction. So, the more you put into someone or something, the more you will receive, expect to receive, and hurt if you do not receive the extent of your efforts in return. It's like studying all night for a test and making a 50, or like being for with someone for 2 years and accepting that it just isn't going to work out. The reaction of large amounts of action exists in two extremes — really good or really bad. This doesn't mean to not put a lot of effort into something to avoid disappointment, though. That would be tragic because although you will avoid defeat, you will never experience success. It doesn't mean, however, to adjust and prepare for the results or the lack thereof of your efforts.

GETTING A HOLD ON CREDIT

College students drowning in plastic

NINA M. DRY
ASSISTANT FEATURES EDITOR

Among the multitude of offers students receive upon their arrival to campus, one that always seems to surpass all others would be credit card companies. Solicitors offering free gifts and "too good to be true" offers can be overwhelming for many. Are our college campuses a breeding ground for potential credit card holders? Are college students just setting themselves up for some serious debt?

Credit card companies have created a market specifically for college students, enticing them with a variety of incentives ranging from posters and T-shirts to bookbags and watches. All you have to do is "sign up and apply." Some practically guarantee students a card regardless of their credit history.

According to Discover card online, they offer a specific site for college students to apply for a card, offering such things such as no annual fees, discount rates on CDs purchased on the Internet, cash back bonus awards and what they consider "competitive" interest rates.

"[Credit card companies] advertise many gimmicks offering free stuff, but we all know nothing is truly free," said Brooke Allen, junior.

Another type of card that can be found on campus would be the Visa. If Visa creditors solicit on campus, they usually offer free novelty T-shirts in order to attract students to sign up. Even if your application isn't accepted, you at least got a free shirt to add to your vast wardrobe collection, right? Well, not all students believe so.

"Students want the benefits of free T-shirts, but what they don't realize is credit card companies sell their addresses to other companies, which will just tempt students to apply for more cards," said Stacey Pinney, sophomore. "I believe signing up for all of those cards ruins your credit line."

One reason more students find themselves applying for credit cards once they get into colleges because one of the first things they hear is how necessary it is to build a credit history.

According to Danielle Custis, senior, she applied for credit cards through the campus solicitors in order to build a history of credit.

"When I first enrolled in college, I knew that towards juniors, seniors and alumni.

"BB&T are our affinity credit card partner," said Phillip Horne, Associate Vice Chancellor of Alumni Relations.

According to Horne, student's approval is based on parents and students' credit rating. Once the student is approved, the line of credit is usually minimal.

Like most credit cards, the ECU Visa has its advantages.

The advantages of the card are that it has a fairly competitive APR rate," Horne said. "By virtue to the affinity program, a certain percentage of the receipts of that credit card program goes to the alumni association, which we use in turn to promote student and alumni programs."

The alumni association likes to think of themselves as not just sponsoring another credit card for upperclassmen and alumni.

"As a total package, the alumni association's affinity partner offers several advantages for the university in addition to the student," Horne said. "Whereas some of the other credit card companies don't have a relationship with the alumni association or the university beyond simply using students as a demographic group to which they can market and try to make a profit."

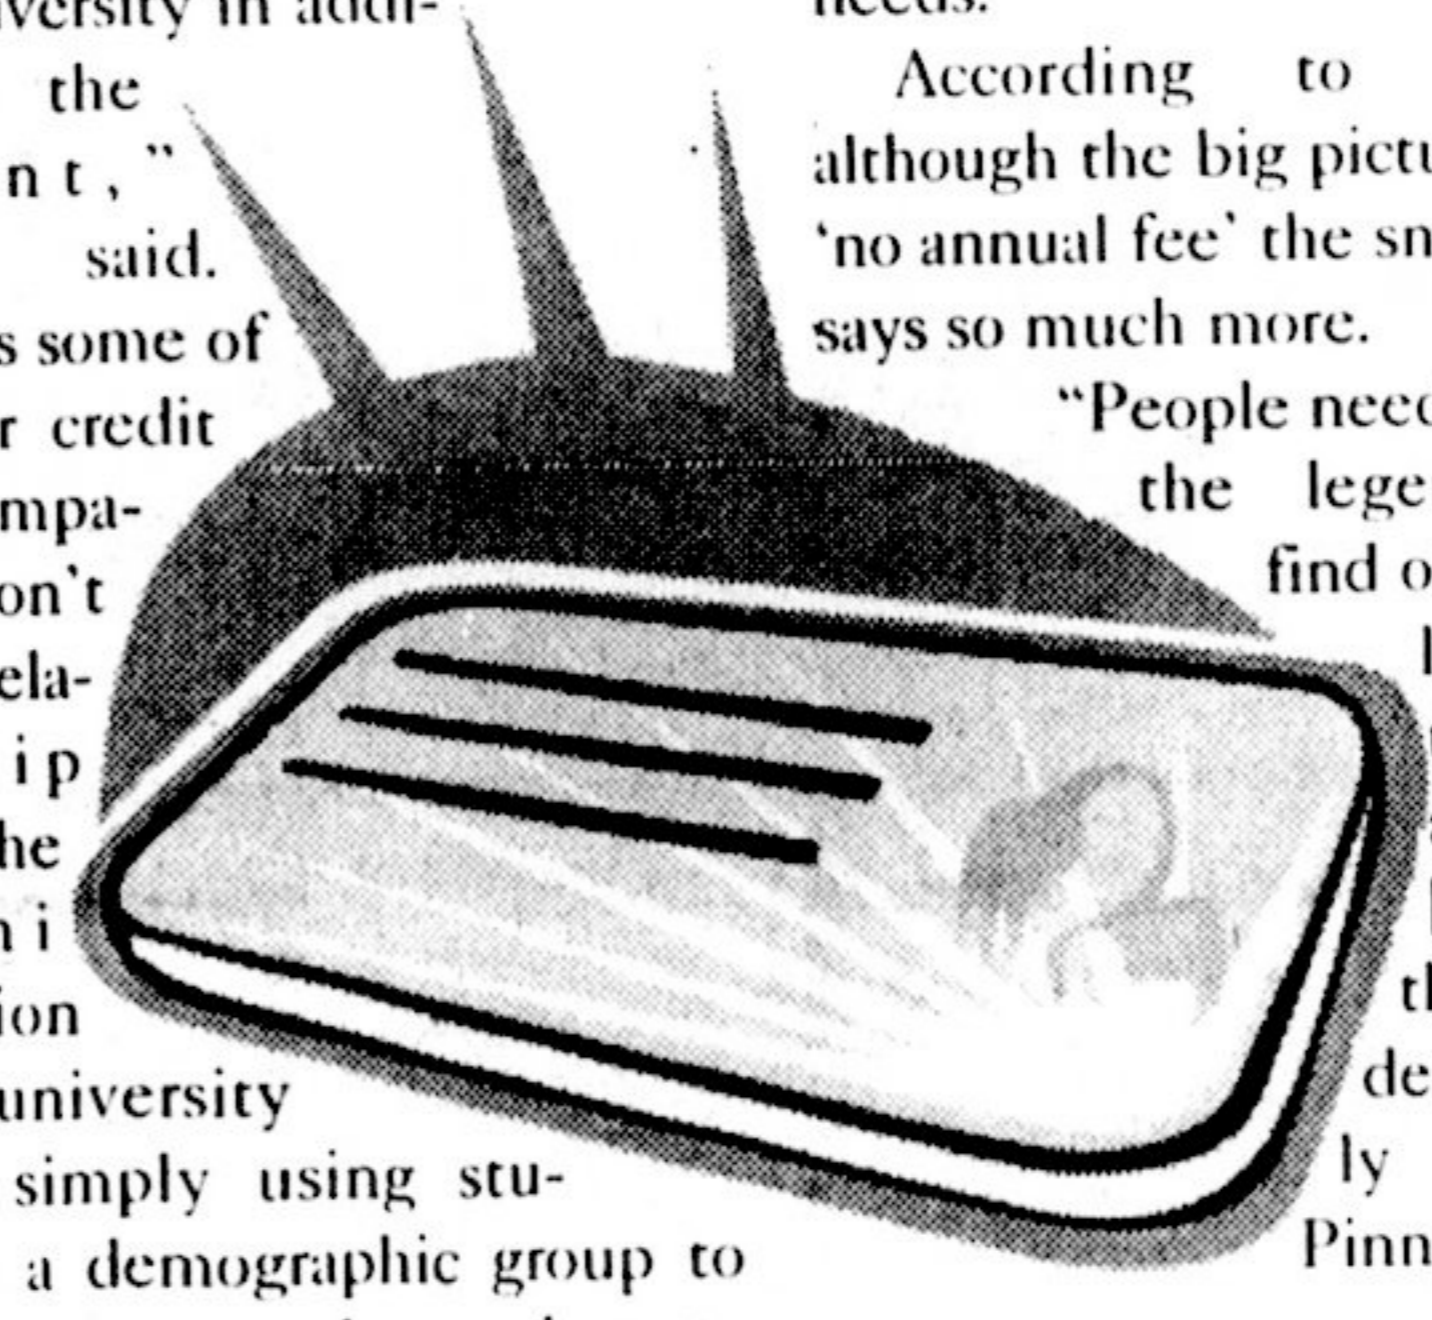

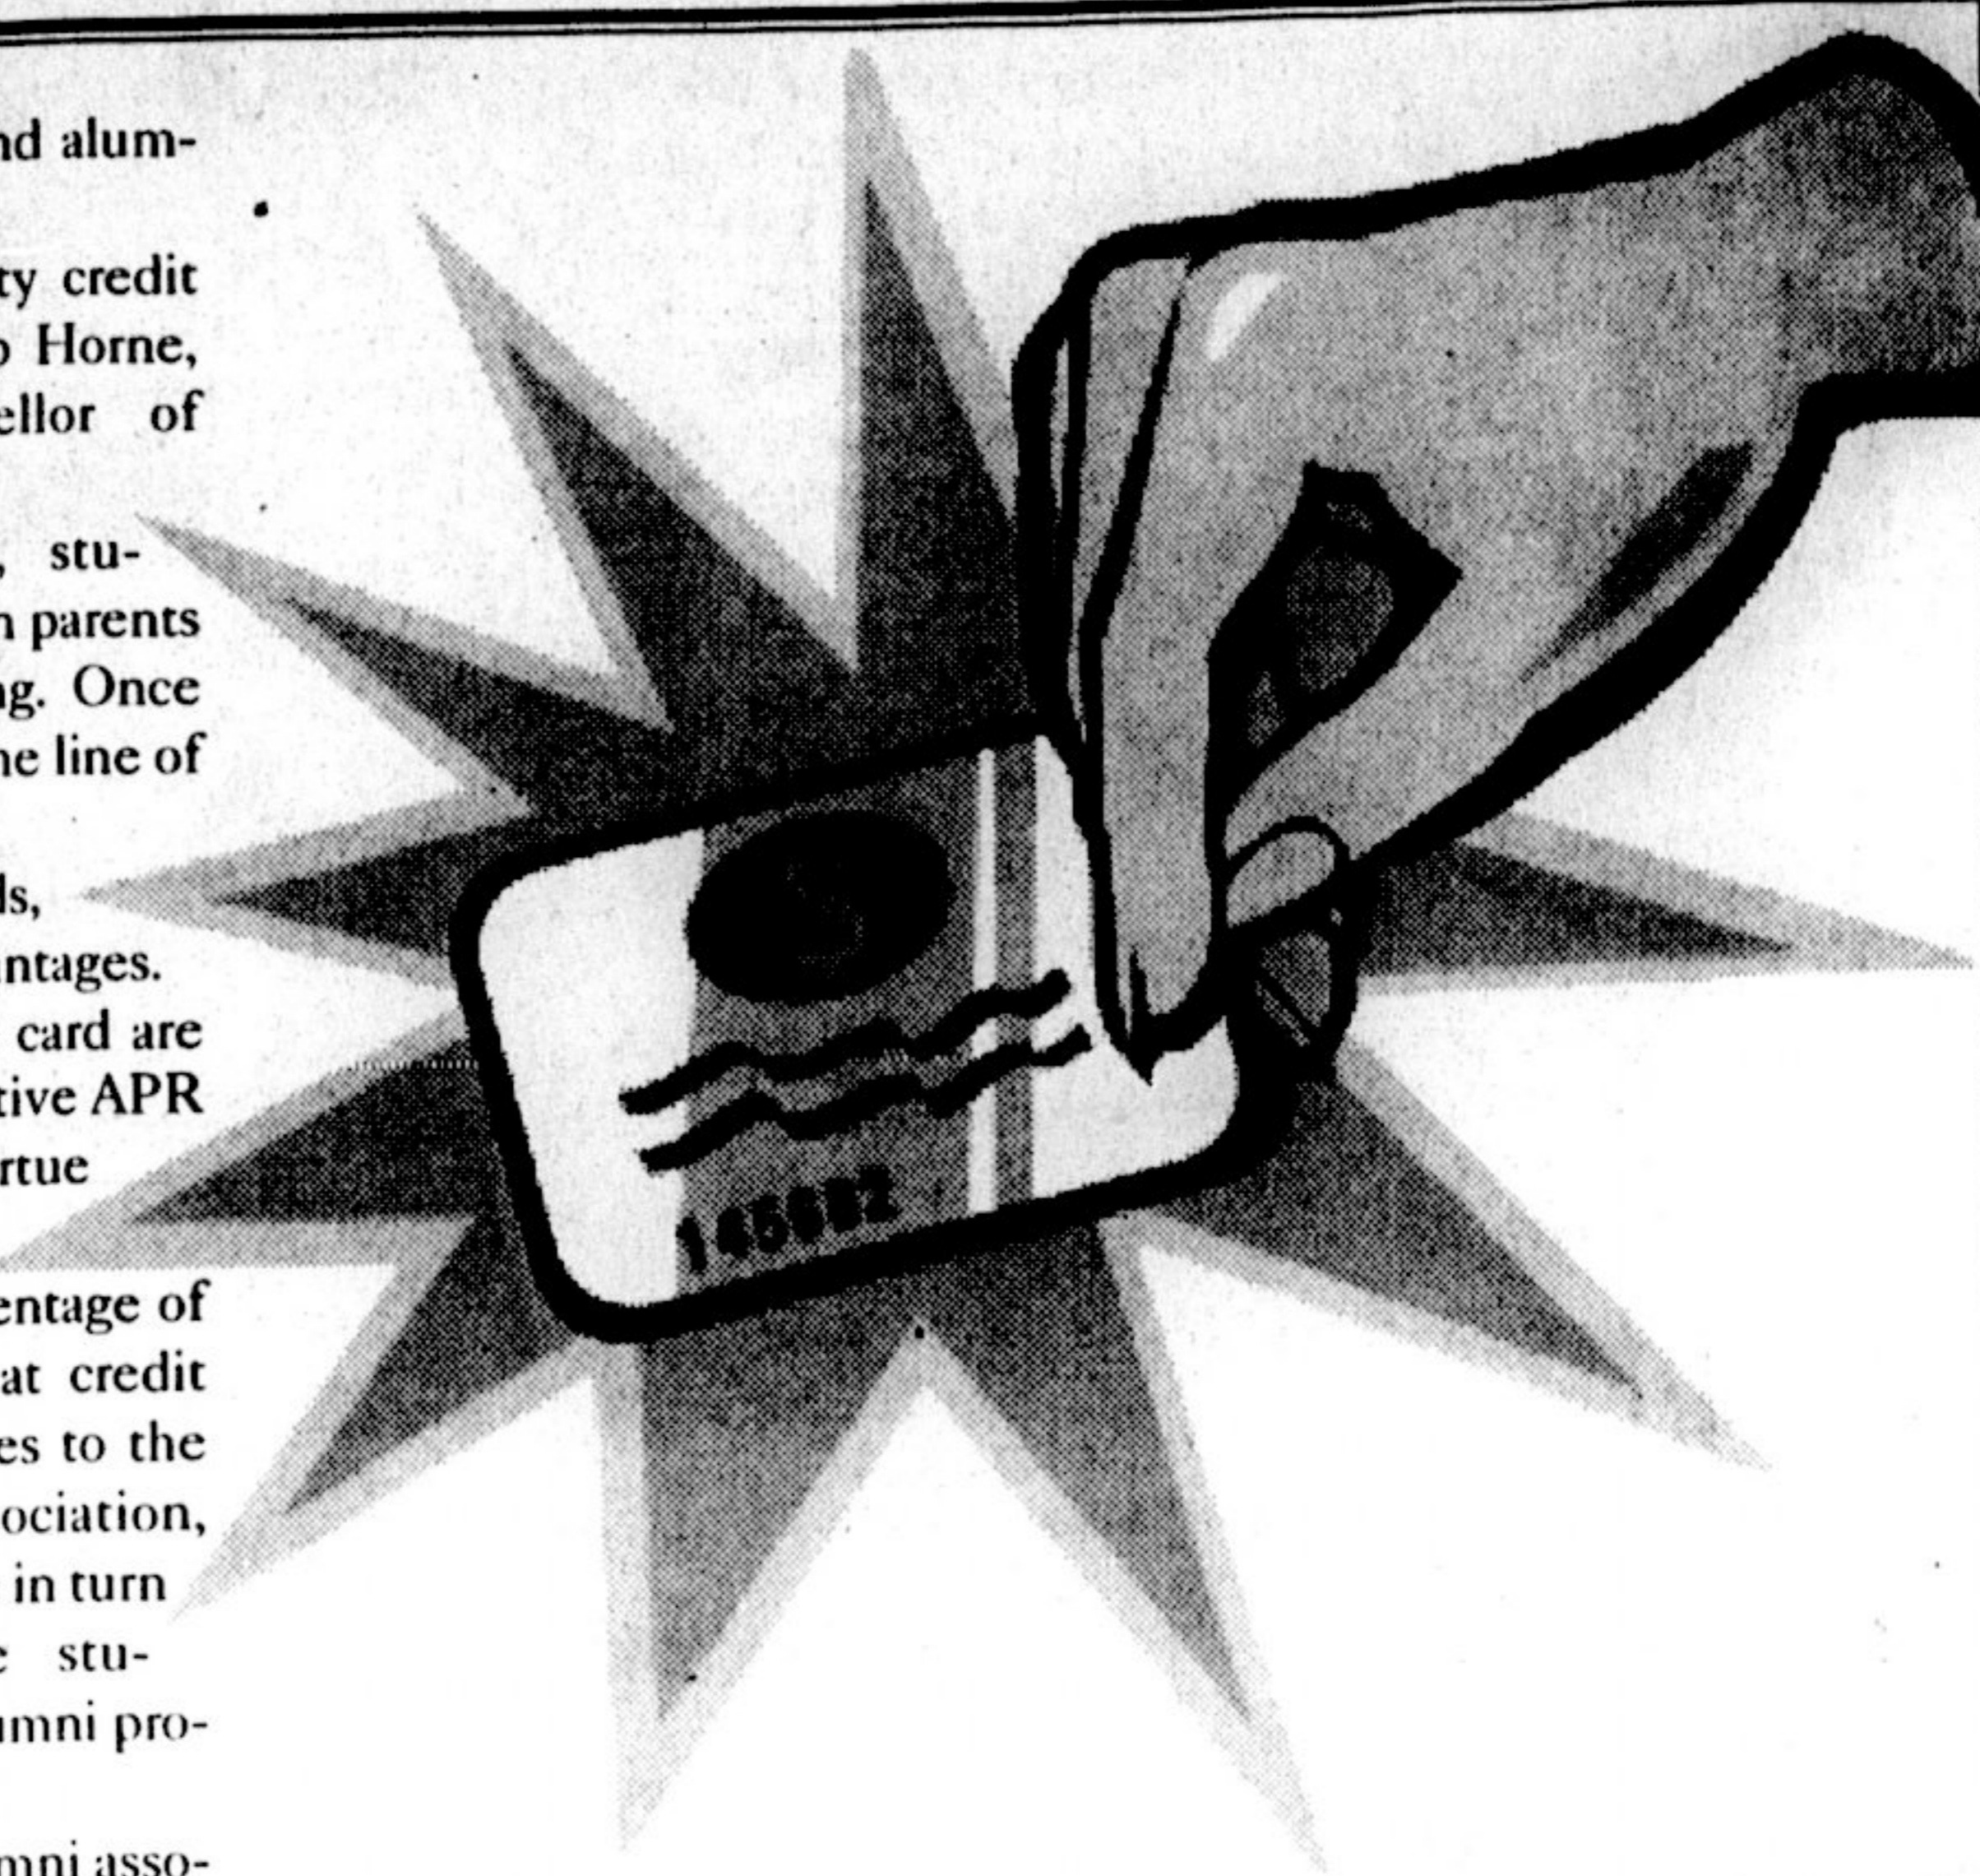

"We like to think of [our credit card] as part of a larger benefits package, primarily for alumni, but we're glad to be supportive of stu-

I need credit to do anything in the 'adult world'," Custis said. "Without a credit basis to build anything on, you really can't get along."

Offers of low APR, fixed rates and the option of accumulating free long distance when you make purchases on a particular card convinced Custis to apply for certain cards.

"The accumulation of long-distance time is like having a prepaid calling card, but it's perpetual because you keep spending in order to gain those 'free' minutes," Custis said.

The alumni association in conjunction with BB&T sponsor a credit card specifically aimed

Earth Day still growing

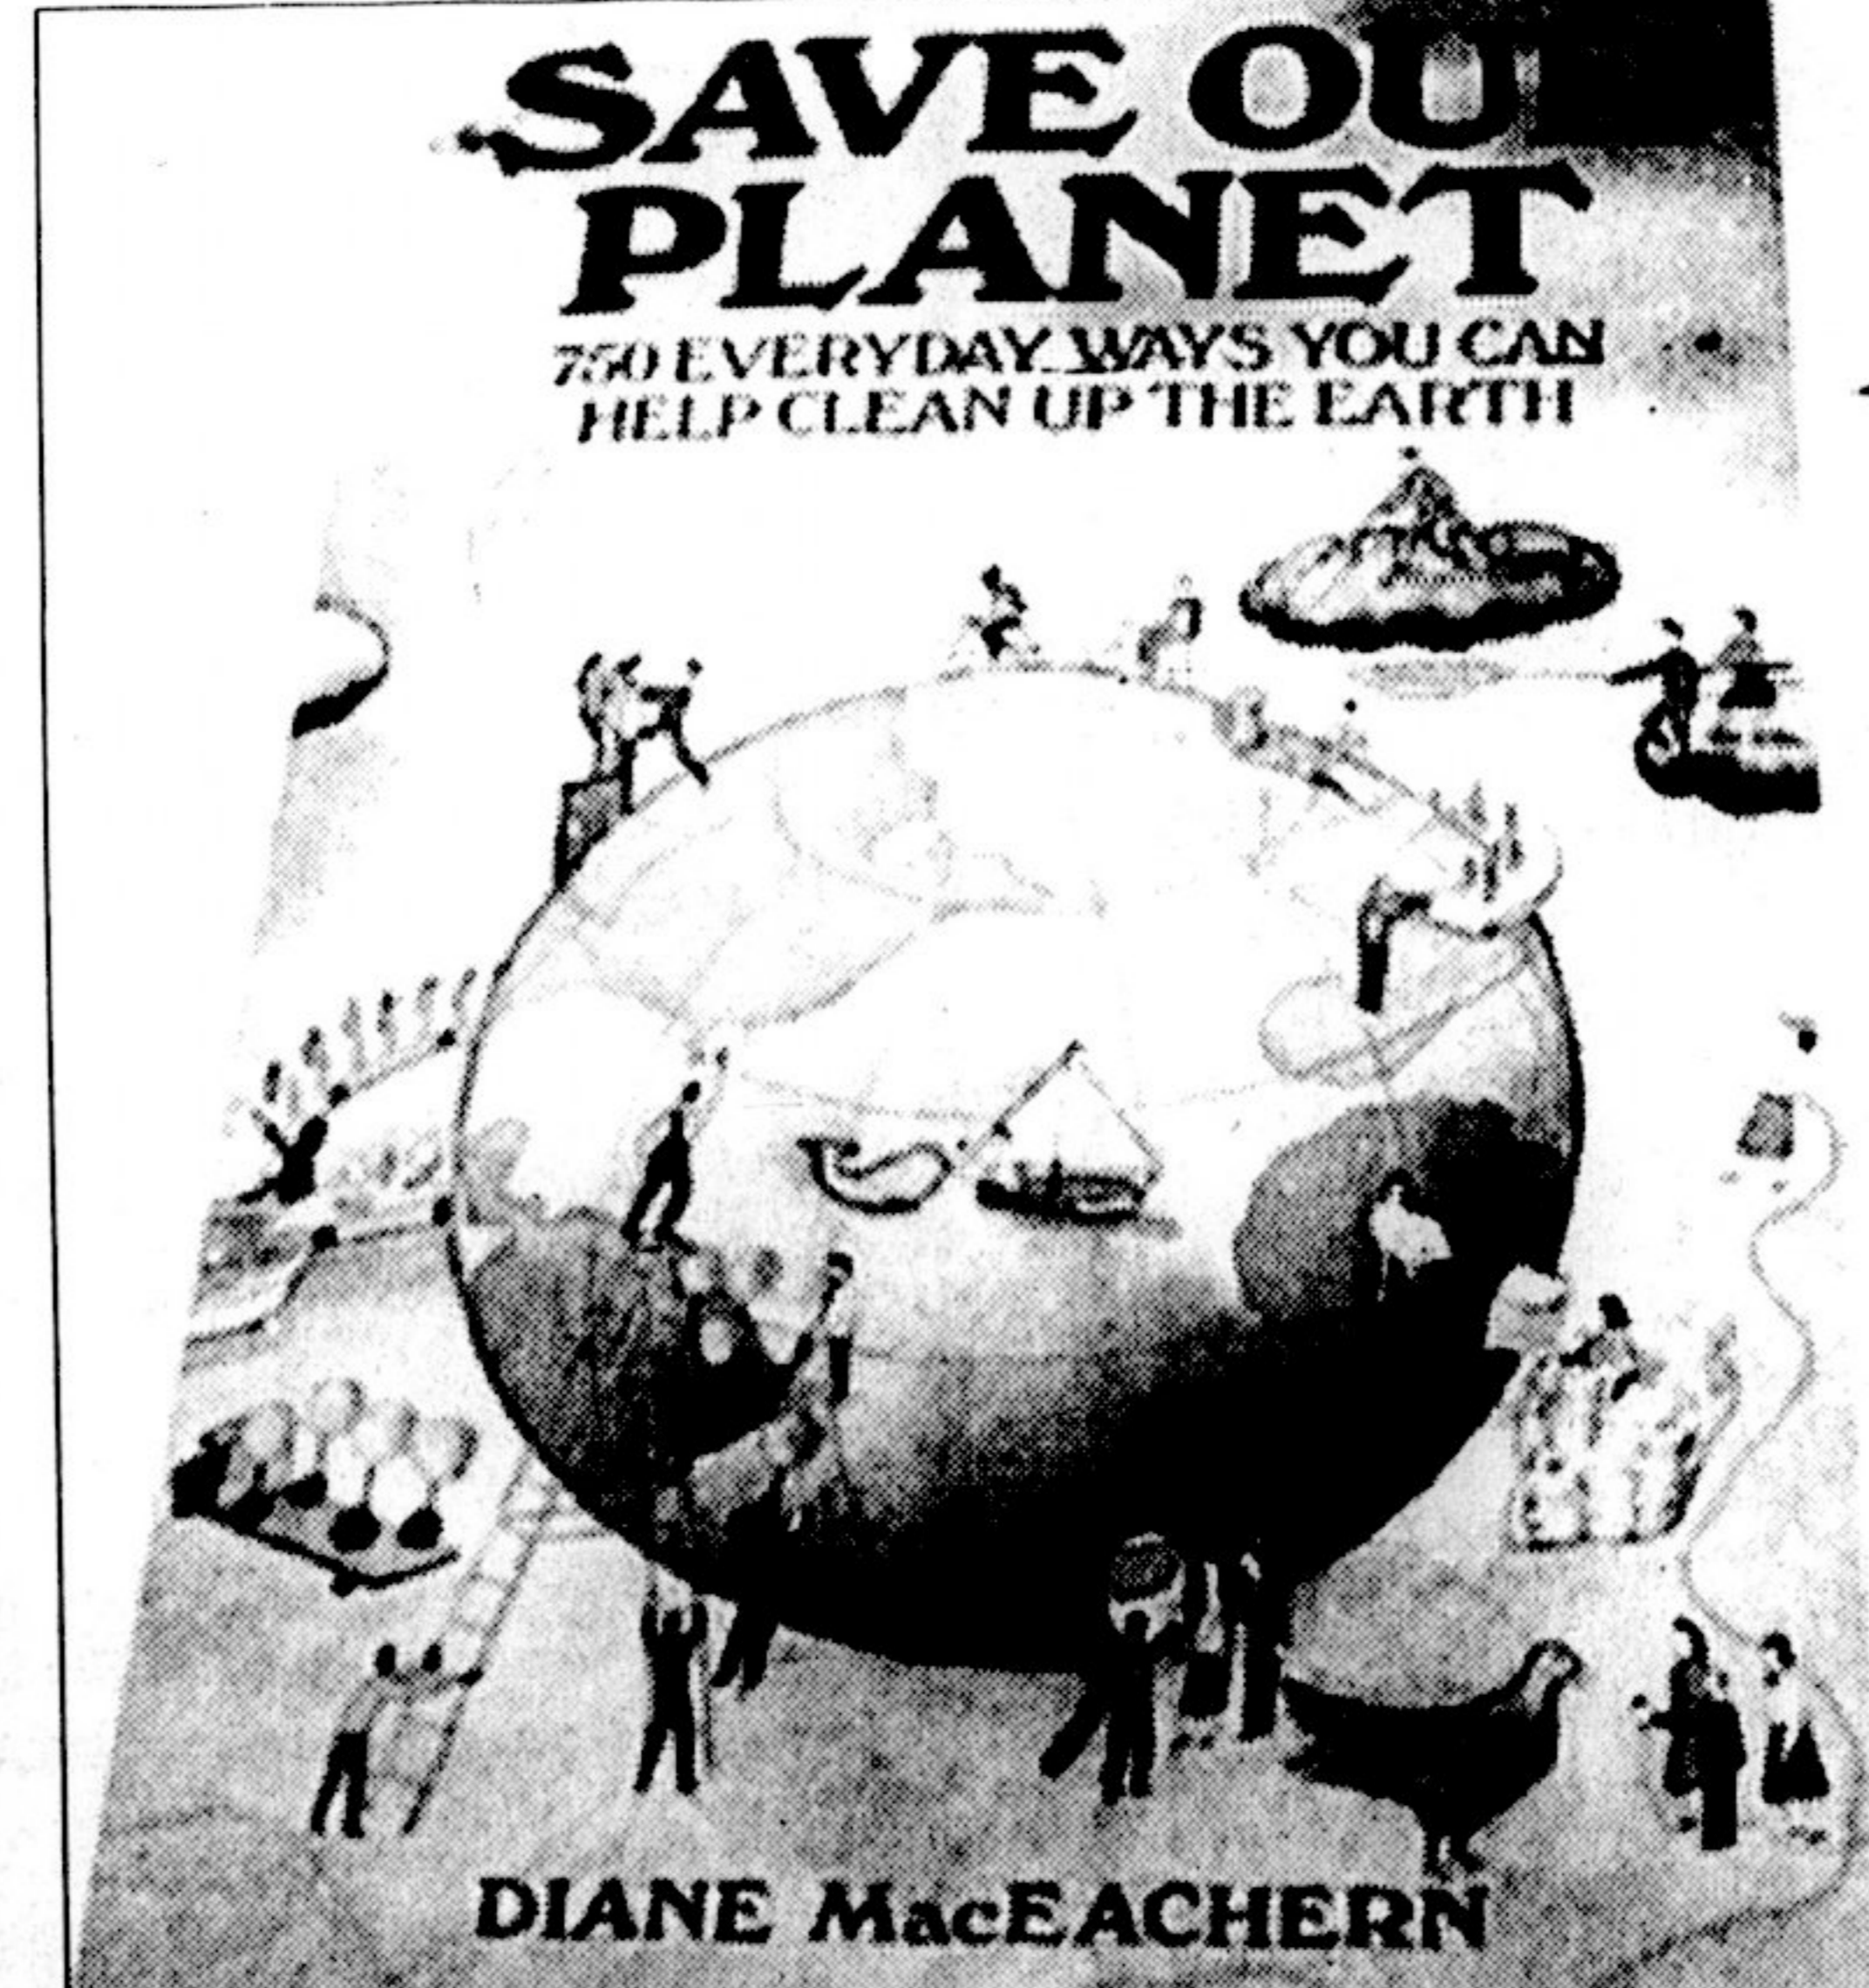

Student participation increases in recent years

MIKE EDWARDS
STAFF WRITER

In the last 40 years, the once small activity known as Earth Day has grown into a world-wide event. Even though Earth Day 1990 was not quite "The Day the Earth Stood Still," by day's end organizers of Earth Day 1970 said that 200 million people in 140 nations had taken part in the largest grass-roots demonstration in history.

This year, on April 22, the celebration of Earth Day will be taking place all over the world. And guess what? You too can participate this year at ECU! Since the 1970s, when people gathered to protest the federal government's involvement in Vietnam, hundreds of activists received their unofficial education in public speaking. Today, many activists run various public offices across the country. Unfortunately, many are attempting to run the government into the ground.

What is Earth Day? Mainly, it is the realization each year that there are limits to the abuse and destruction that occur on this planet without causing irreversible changes. The poisoning of our waterways due to major fish kills, as well as increases in cancer and water-borne infections are all evidence that our natural resources are in danger. Before the 1970s one could feel safe in taking a drink from a lake, stream or creek. According to Kathleen Meyer's book, How to Shit in the Woods, we can no longer drink from even the most remote, crystal clear streams without the possibility of contracting Giardiasis.

The human population is continuing to increase at an astounding level. It took tens of thousands of years for humans to copulate, fertil-

Organizations cater to students' interest

BRIAN FRIZELLE

Coming to college for the first time can be shocking as your life drastically changes. A helpful idea is to seek out others with the same interests that you have. A simple way to do this is to join a campus organization.

ECU offers a broad range of organizations to choose from. Three of which are the International Student Association, East Carolina Communication Organization (ECCO) and the ECU Marching Pirates.

The International Student Association includes over 150 students hailing from 59 different countries. The association's main purpose is to give international students a chance to adjust to American living.

"We have get-togethers," said Markus Doell, association president from Germany. "We let people bring in their own country's food. We also participated in Greenville's International Festival."

The association offers services to help international students when they need it.

"We have a little network," Doell said. "If you have a problem, you have someone that has been here a while to help you."

The association also gives American students a chance to find out about other countries and cultures.

ECCO is a pre-professional organization for communication students. It is, however, open to all other undergraduates as well.

"We are a new organization looking for dedicated people," said Kelly Albada advisor to the organization.

Education and service make up the mission of the East Carolina Communications Organization.

"We offer a lot of opportunities," Albada said. "And we look for those who can create their own opportunities."

ECCO seeks to expand students' possibilities in the communication market.

"Our students want the same opportunities as students in Raleigh or Charlotte," Albada said. "People can only learn so much through courses."

ECU also offers the Marching Pirates. The Marching Pirates main focus is entertainment during footize and produce before the population reached one billion. According to USA Today, this magical number occurred in 1804. The second billion took only 74 years. By 1974, we moaned and groaned our way to over four billion. As luck would have it, thanks to those individuals who keep insisting to others "to go forth, multiply and replenish the earth," it took only another 13 years to pump out another billion. If you ever wonder why the roads seem so crowded, why there is always a line at the check-out and why tensions are running so incredibly high these days, perhaps it is a result of the 6 billion people competing for clean air, pure water and a free lunch.

We've failed miserably in our meager attempt to control ourselves. However, the numbers of concerned citizens are steadily increasing, meanwhile, more areas of the country are running out of water, being subjected to genetically altered foods to feed all of the hungry mouths or dodging bullets from gunmen who have lost their minds from the all the pollution and noise!

Today is one of the most critical moments in the history of life on Earth. Unfortunately, it is not as critical as tomorrow or the next day. But organizations such as Earthday organization (<http://Earthday.info.htm>) or Earth First (www.environmentweb.org/ef/), the more radical of the two, are growing with individuals like you. Earth First believes that over the last several hundred years, human civilization has declared war on large mammals, leading some respected scientists to conclude that the mammals that will survive the near future will be those that humans allow to live. Other prominent biologists remain aghast at the devastation of rain forests and temperate old-growth forests and remain pessimistic that the Earth could lose one quarter to one third of all species within a very few years.

The world as we know it is changing. Get involved with one or both of these organizations. The Earth you save is your own, and unless you plan on becoming an astronaut, get involved or get out of the way. Set your sites on participating at ECU's Earth Day celebration on April 22.

ball games. The band also performs at various places around the area.

"We play at local high school band competitions to help recruit members for our marching band," said B.J. Bullock, snare drum player for the Marching Pirates.

The band is not exclusive to music majors or even strictly of ECU students.

"Sometimes we have some members from the community that just want to be part of our marching band," Bullock said.

A lot of different areas of study are represented by the band.

"It's a great way to socially meet people," Bullock said.

There are many organizations offered at ECU. Students may find one that suits their interest.

Name
Hilda Hill
Department
Foreign Languages

Professor Hill has taught classes in both German and Spanish at ECU since she arrived here in 1965. Her office, full of posters of Latin American scenery as well as books in English, Spanish and German, is a testimony to her interests in languages and travel.

Hill began her studies at Mexico City College where she earned her B.A. She continued her studies at the University of Southwest Louisiana and Middlebury College in Vermont, earning a master's in German and an AND (All But Dissertation) in Spanish. Her interests in language stemmed from travels during her youth and her strong propensity for learning. At 13, she moved from her home in Germany to New Mexico, where she learned Spanish and English simultaneously.

Travel was natural for her; it ran in her blood. Her father loved to travel, and she very much enjoys it as well. She has seen many exotic places in the world. Mexico, Hong Kong and China are three of her favorites. The United States also beckons her with its many great scenic locations.

"Europe is so full of culture, old world cities and beautiful cathedrals," said Hill.

She first began teaching out of necessity, not out of desire. The teaching certificate was something to fall back on, but once she got into it, she was hooked.

Her husband was a professor at ECU as well, and they have been here quite a while. The classes that are her favorite to teach are Latin American Literature and Latin American Business. Obviously she has read many books; her personal favorite is Gabriel Garcia Marquez's One Hundred Years of Solitude.

"It is powerful, and it speaks about every aspect of Latin American life that you could possibly imagine," said Hill. "It speaks to every possible aspect of a reader's interests."

If there is one thing she could communicate to all students, it would be that there is so much more for them than they realize.

"There's a whole big, wide, beautiful world out there, and every language is a world of its own," said Hill. "You become a whole new person with every language that you learn."

When a person visits a country where they can speak the native language, they are welcomed as a friend in that country instead of a haughty American or a rich tourist, according to Professor Hill. Travel has been a source of learning and enjoyment for her in her life, and she encourages ECU students to follow in her footsteps and learn about the world through experience as well as literature and pictures.

Weaver shows versatility

Head coach pleased with switch

STEPHEN SCHRAMM
SPORTS EDITOR

Bobby Weaver came to ECU, a quarterback with explosive speed and loads of promise. Despite getting injured twice last season, the speed and the potential are still there. Only now, they will be used to move the ball on the ground instead of through the air.

The 1998 season began with sophomore Bobby Weaver taking over as quarterback. Weaver led the Pirates to two wins in his first three starts, before the Oct. 3 home game against Army.

Weaver threw for two touchdowns and rushed for a third. He completed 16 of 23 passes for 255 yards. It was undoubtedly his best game of the season, it also turned out to be the worst when his season began to unravel. He was sidelined because of a sprained ankle in the second half. David Garrard stepped in and the Pirates held on to win the game.

Garrard started two of the next three games. The redshirt freshman filled in nicely throwing for 430 yards and three touchdowns in Weaver's absence.

Weaver's ankle healed and he got the start against Houston. It was on Halloween that his triumphant return to the starting lineup would turn into a nightmare.

He was 2 of 2 passing for 29 yards when he went down with an injured knee. He had torn his ACL and was done for the season. Garrard would go on to start the remainder of the games and would be looked upon to be the starter for the 1999 campaign.

"I think I did a fair job," Weaver said. "I think we moved the ball pretty well and everything, but Dave's the quarterback now and that's what we've got to concentrate on." Weaver's arm wasn't his only weapon in 1998. His speed made him a threat on the ground as well as in the air. His versatility gave him a second chance to be one of the main contributors on the 1999 squad.

"Well, after the knee injury, David stepped up as quarterback and we had to get all of our best athletes on the field and [Weaver] is one of them," said Steve Logan, head football coach.

Before practices began, the decision was made to make Weaver a halfback. The Pirates were deep at the position, but they finished sixth out of eight teams in the conference in rushing offense in 1998.

"I welcomed [the change] with open arms, I just want to get on the field and play some ball and do the best wherever I'm at," Weaver said.

Weaver will share time and carries with junior, Marcellus Harris and junior transfer, Keith Stokes.

Weaver has had little trouble adjusting to his new position.

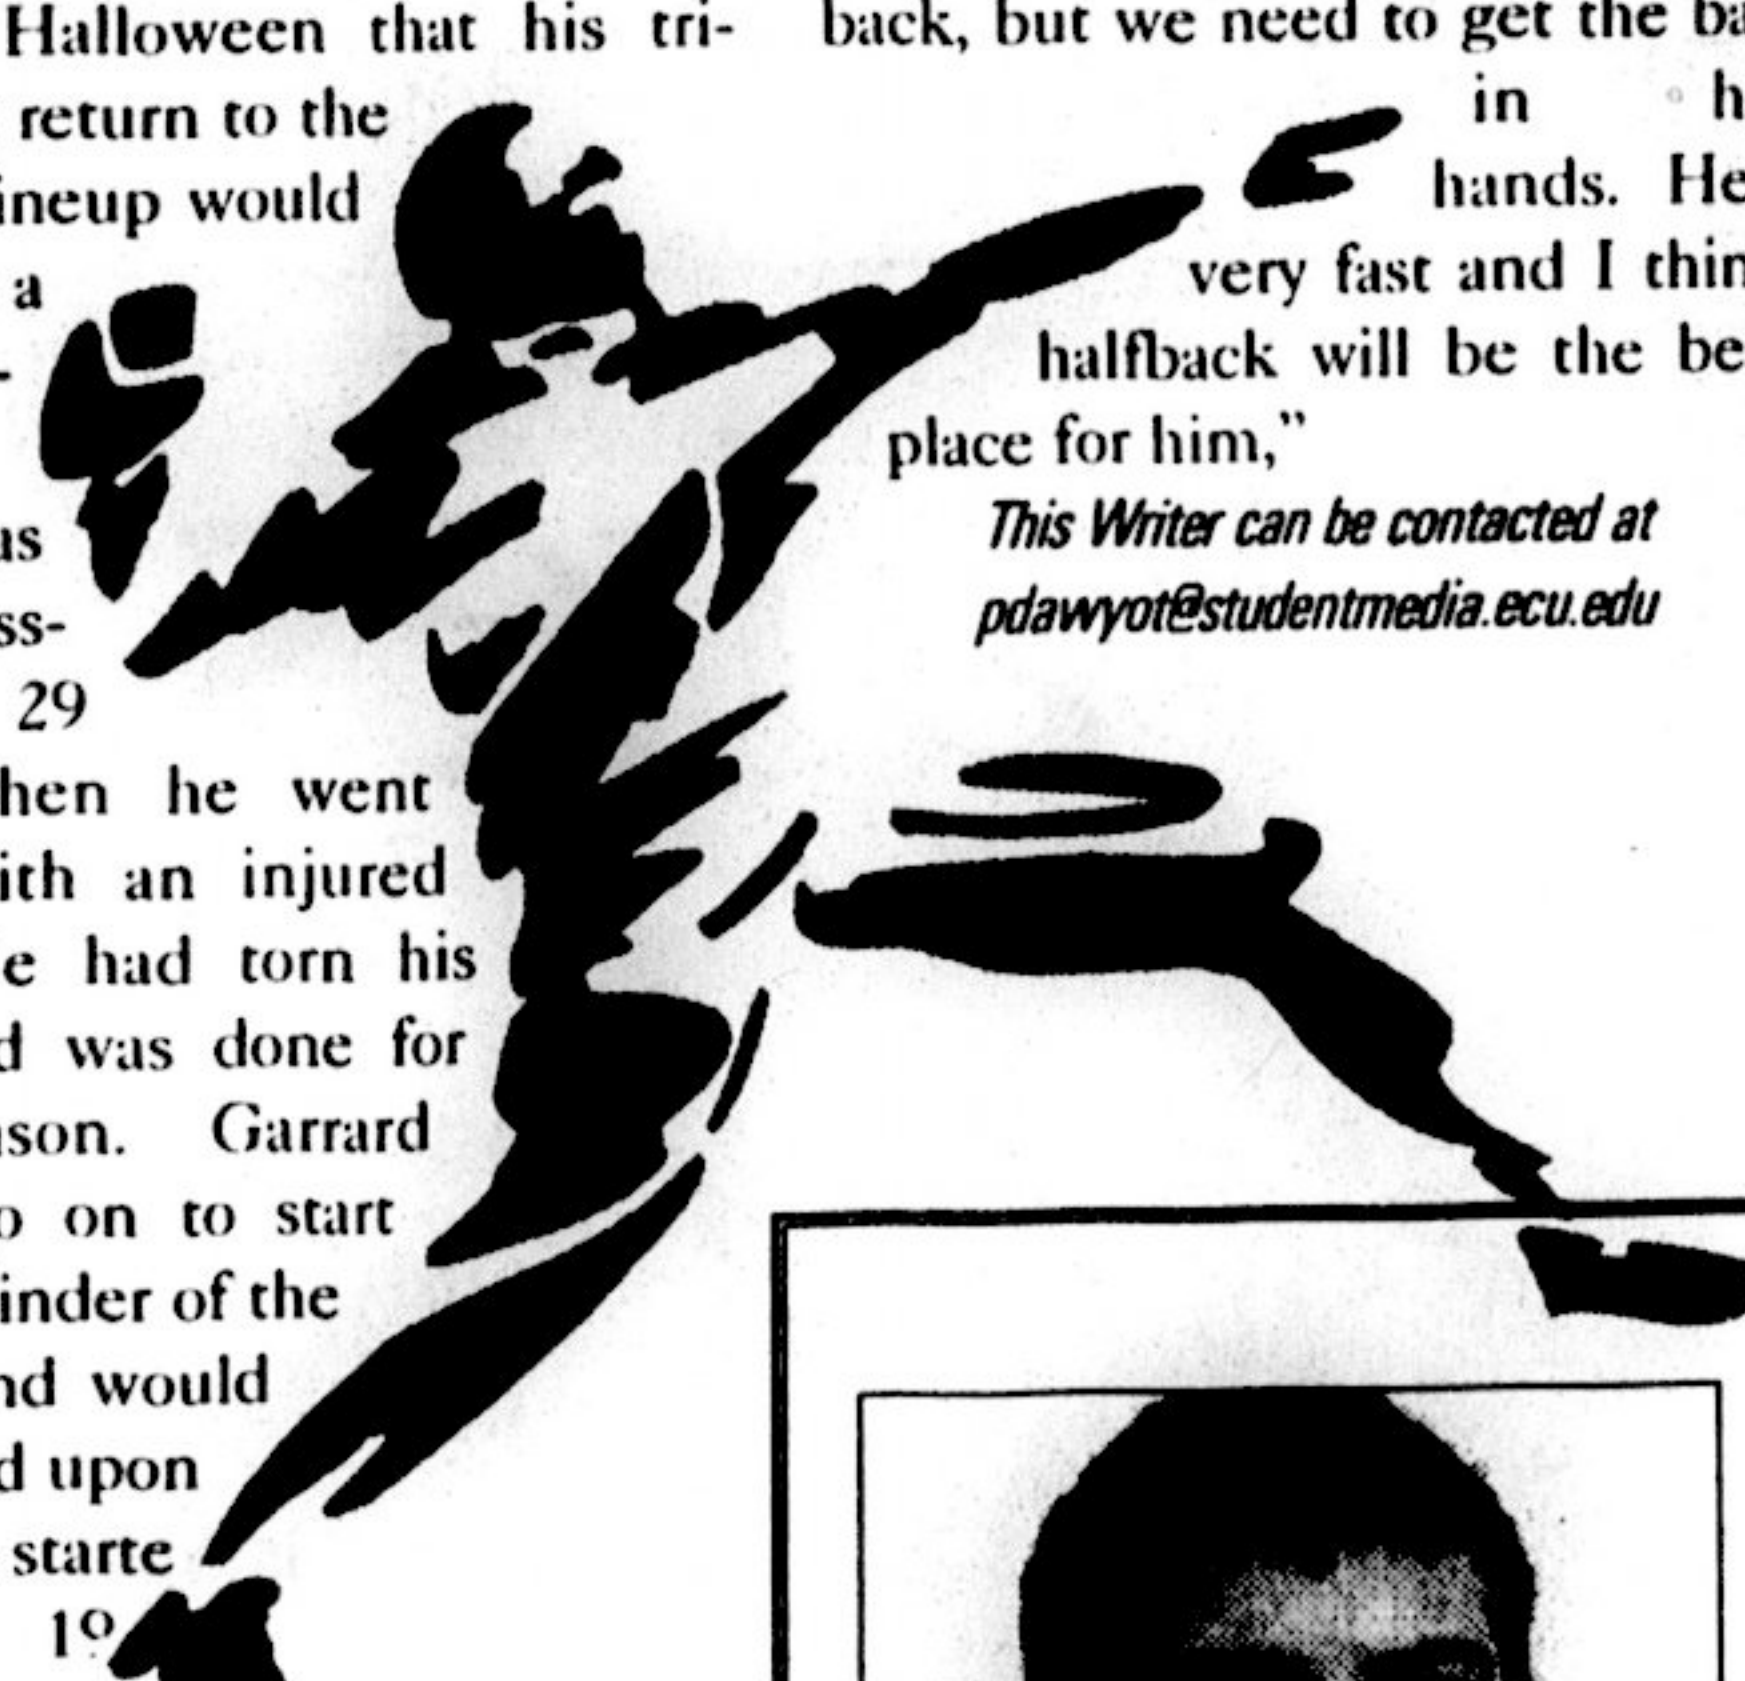

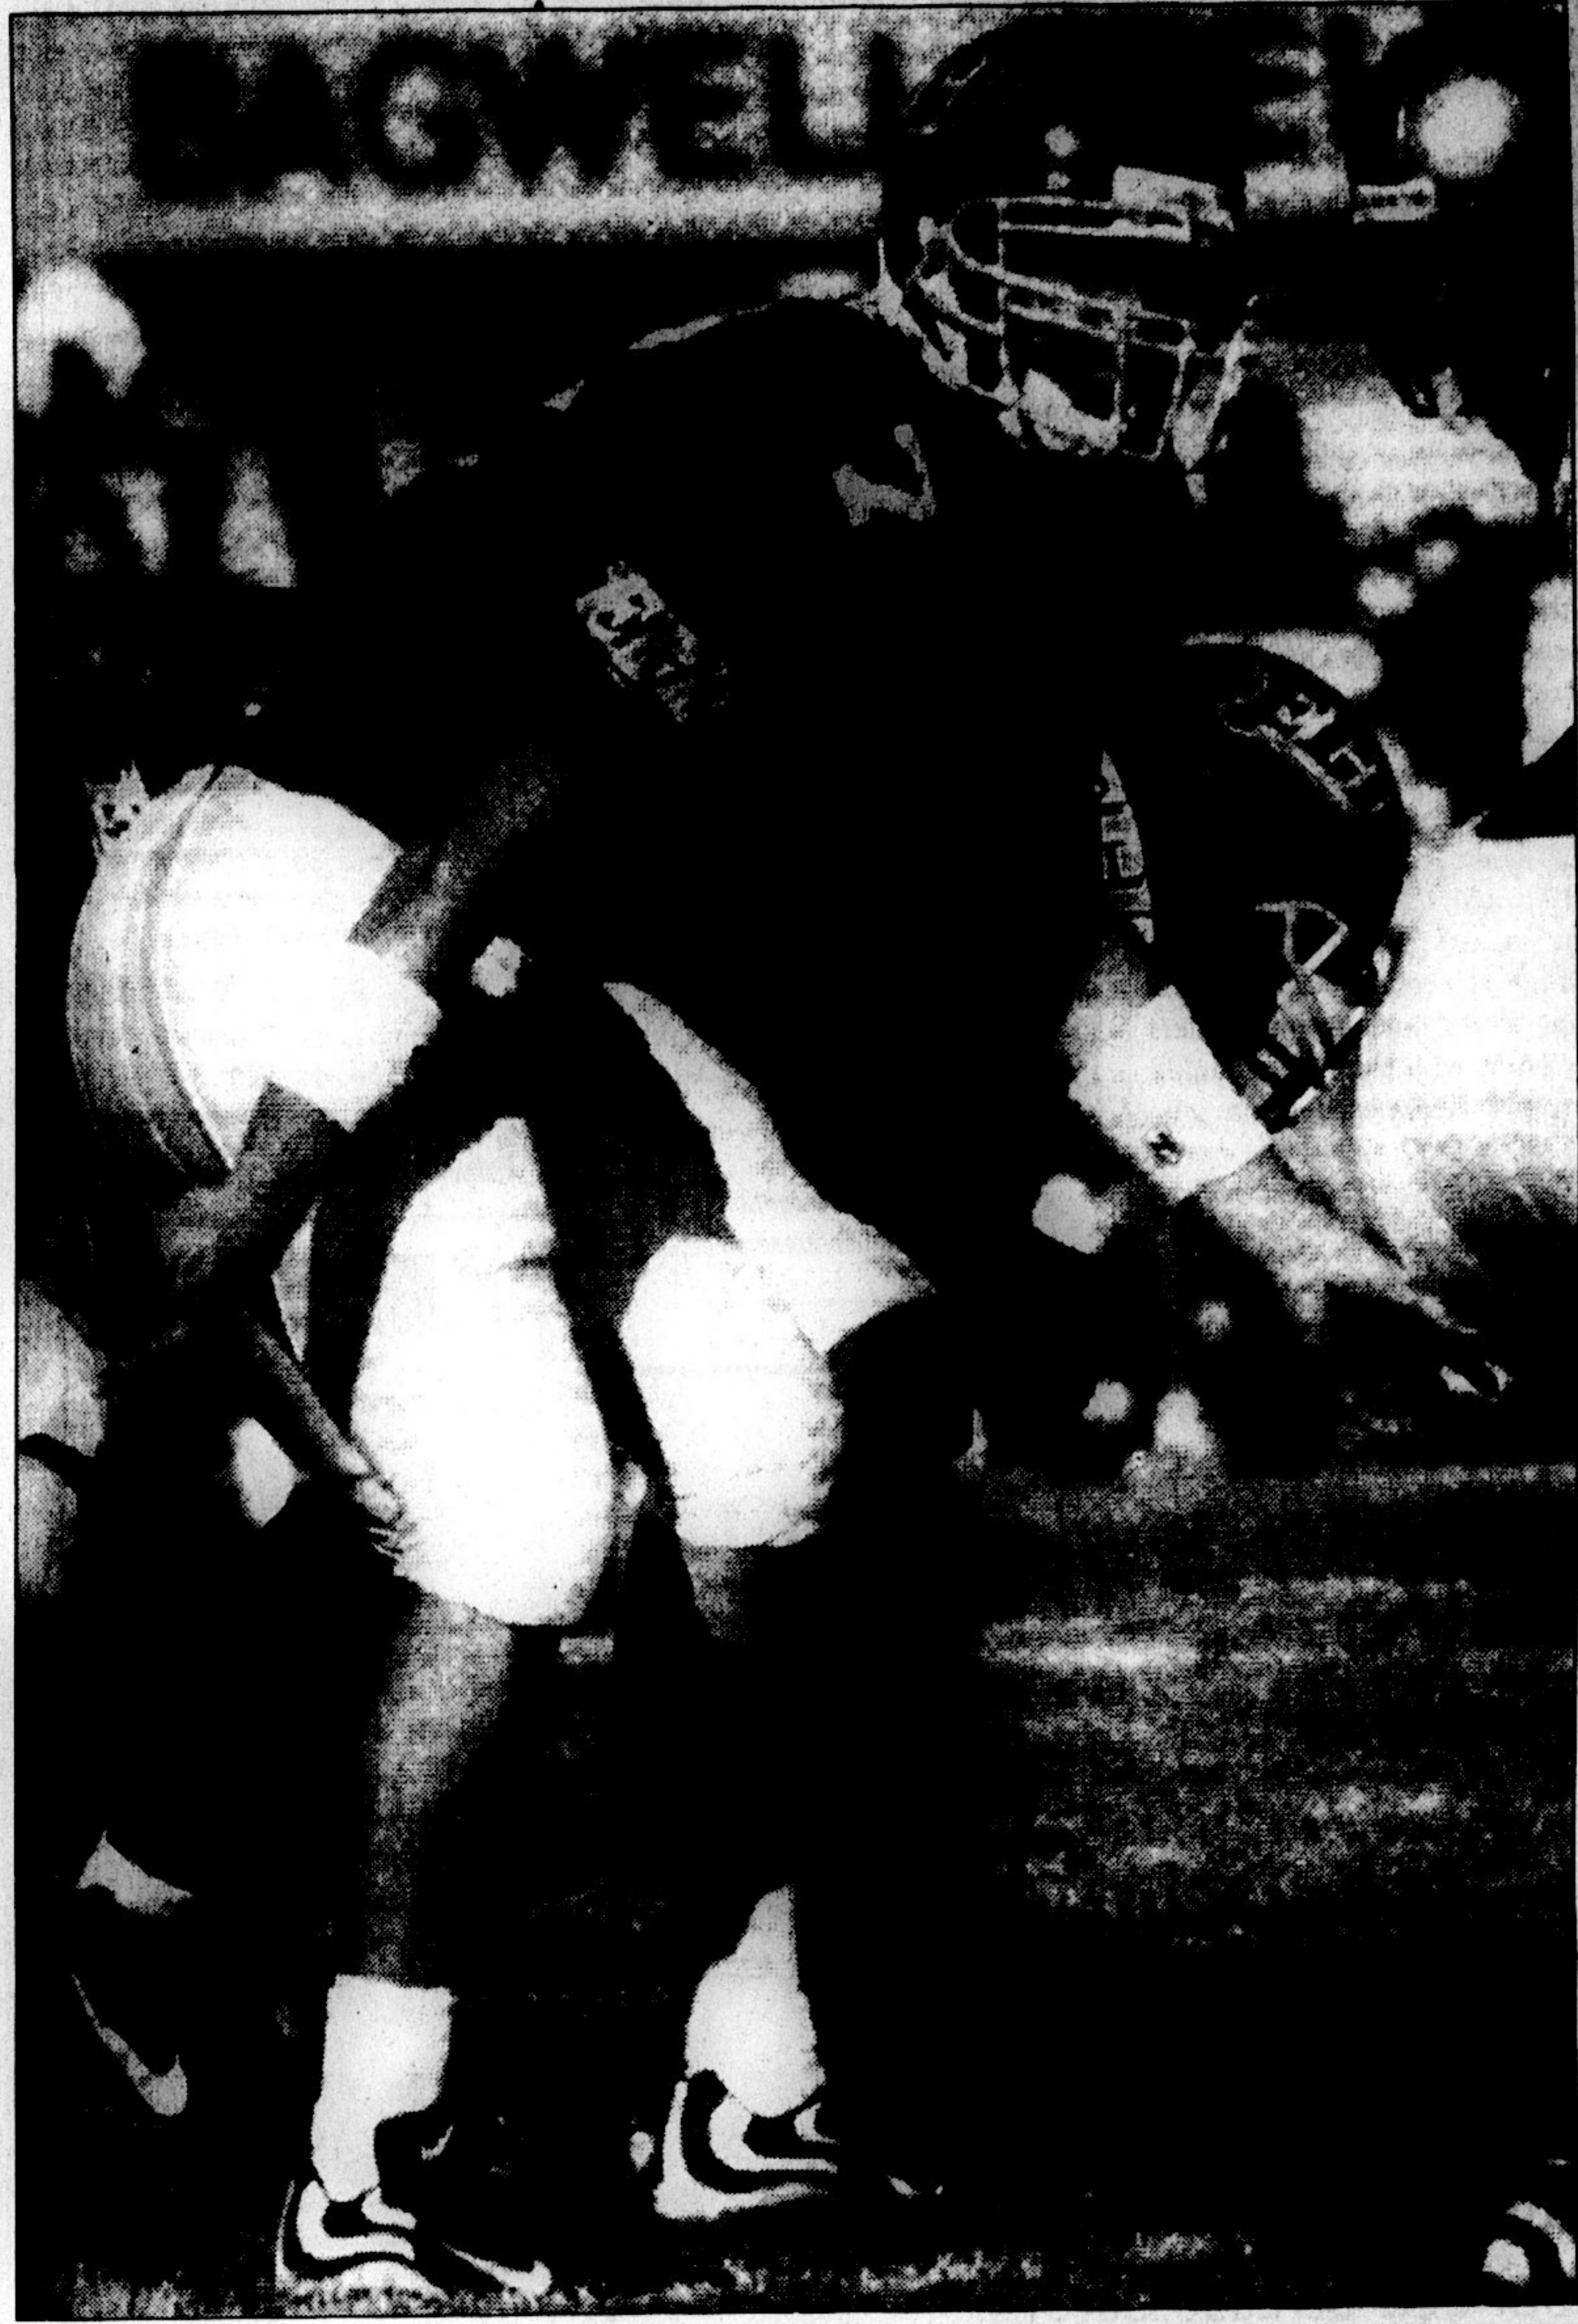

"He's doing well" Logan said. "He's starting to get integrated into the offense, learning how to run the routes," Logan said. "He knows which routes to run, being an ex-quarterback. He just needs to refine his route running technique."

Weaver's work and versatility will make him an integral part of the 1999 Pirates.

"It's good to have him out there on the field," said teammate Jamie Wilson. "He may not be a quarterback, but we need to get the ball in his hands. He's very fast and I think halfback will be the best place for him."

Volleyball team shows dedication, teamwork

Players ready to start season

RYAN DOWNEY
STAFF WRITER

What does August mean to you? To a certain group of ladies, August means volleyball practice. According to players and coaches this year's August tradition is going very well.

According to head coach Kim Walker, the team is in better shape coming back from summer break than any team has been in any of her previous five seasons at ECU. There is much potential with this year's team. This season's team is a junior-laden squad, with senior Shannon Kaes bringing in loads of experience. The team, which was 10-18 last season, has high but attainable hopes for this year.

"We are very excited," said Liz Hall, a junior from Antioch, California. "We should win the conference."

Experience will help the team when the game is on the line. The experience factor will be very important and for this year's team, it will be a nice change up from last year's young team.

During the 1998 campaign, the Pirates were among the youngest teams in the conference. This group has been there before and found out what it felt like to play their hearts out and still come up short. Kim Walker felt that the team had trouble closing games last season in the early part of the fall; by the end of the season, they had more poise. A real positive is that Walker can see the players have taken that into this season's practices.

"The team has matured a lot," said Kim Walker, head coach.

Maturity is such a big factor in sports when times get tough. Fans should look forward to a mentally tough as well as physically tough team. Though there is a large group of upperclassman and there are also some newcomers to the squad. Robin Drewes, a 6'2 player out of Florida and Dawn Bender, a 5'7 outside hitter are, according to Walker, talented players who are now adjusting to the grind of college sports from high school.

According to Liz Hall, the practices are centered on individual technique. The squad's technique will be put to the test on an important early trip to Missouri. In Missouri, the team will meet competition including Missouri, SE Missouri and New Mexico State.

Women's soccer aims high

Donnenwirth sets sights on CAA

SYLVANNE MILENKOVICH
SENIOR WRITER

The ECU women's soccer team is set to begin their season this Friday with goals set high for individual achievement and team success in conference play.

"Athletically we want to win the [conference] championship," said Rob Donnenwirth, women's soccer coach. "Academically, concerning our GPA, we are one of the top teams."

The lady Pirates will open their season this Friday when they play host to Elon.

"It is a long season so we need to take one game at a time," Donnenwirth said.

This year the women will face 19 games, eight of which are conference play, then the CAA tournament.

After preseason training and play Coach Donnenwirth is confident that the women will have a good showing this season.

"The team has steadily improved to where they can knock off a top team on any given day," Donnenwirth said.

With ECU's backfield stacked with four seniors and three other seniors covering the other positions, the Pirates have a lot of experience to use to their advantage.

"[The seniors] have been through it before and know what each team means." Donnenwirth said. "We're looking to them for leadership."

Some key players to watch are midfield players Erin Cann, Kelly Gray, and Leanne McInnis who Coach Donnenwirth describes as very strong.

Other players to look for are forwards Amanda Duffy and Jennifer Reiley.

"Amanda is a smart player up top and Jenn compliments her with speed," said Donnenwirth.

One of Coach Donnenwirth's concerns is the plague of injuries that have affected his team during preseason training. Five potential starters had to sit out last week's exhibition game against UNC-Greensboro.

"Our goal is to get the team healthy," Donnenwirth said.

Senior Stephanie Wrass, midfielder, suffered a pulled hamstring during preseason but will play on Friday.

"[Stephanie] is making her way back," Donnenwirth said. "She is not 100 percent but she'll be playing in Friday's game."

Other players who will not be playing Friday include midfielders Kelly Gray, who suffered an ankle injury, and Leanne McInnis, who out west," Hall said.

The players are also looking forward to games against seven ACC schools such as the University of North Carolina, Duke and N.C. State. One of the most important games this season will be against the Campbell Camels. Campbell, which will visit Greenville Sept. 1, will be the team's first home game of the season. The team would like to start off the home season with a win. Stacy Pleasant, an ECU player, was confident about the Campbell game.

"I know they are beatable this year!" Pleasant said. She also added that success will take a lot of dedication and teamwork. It's no doubt that teamwork will be important this season. As the old saying goes, a team is only as good as its weakest player, but if the players work together, they can build on each others strengths and minimize any weaknesses that might exist. The team has not had a chance to look at one game as a barometer for how good the team is going to be for the season, but does look forward to playing schools from conferences such as the ACC. It looks like it will be an exciting season.

"Right now the team is taking things one piece at a time," Walker said.

Men's soccer ready for season

Team boasts new leadership, attitude

SUSANNE MILENKEVICH
SENIOR WRITER

ECU men's soccer team is preparing to begin the 1999 season with some changes in the coaching staff and a new attitude.

"We want to establish ourselves as a competitive team in the CAA," said Devin O'Neill, men's soccer coach.

O'Neill, who has experience as an assistant soccer coach at three universities, joined the purple and gold after Will Wiberg resigned as ECU's head coach after the 1998 season.

"I am very excited about the opportunity to be a head coach at a great institution," O'Neill said. "I am also excited about the challenge of coaching in an excellent conference like the CAA, which had teams in the NCAA Tournament last season."

With a new atmosphere about the program the team is sure to turn some heads this season.

"It is important for us to make sure people realize we are a good soccer program," O'Neill said.

O'Neill and his team have accepted their goal as a challenge considering some teams in the CAA are ranked nationally in pre-season polls.

"It will be difficult because the CAA is one of the most competitive conferences in the nation," said O'Neill.

The Pirates face a tough schedule this season as they are set to play in 18 games, eight of which are conference play, then in the CAA tournament.

O'Neill feels the team is ready to face the road ahead as he believes they continue to improve every day in the preseason.

"We are very happy with the effort and commitment the players have shown throughout the preseason," O'Neill said. "We are happy with the way things are coming together."

You can check out the men when they host their season opener against Appalachian State on September 1 at 3 p.m.

Training camp tough on rookies

BEREA, Ohio (AP) - Training camp is over for the Cleveland Browns and coach Chris Palmer, in his first year as an NFL head coach, is as glad to end the grind of two-a-day practices as any rookie player.

"I don't know who's more tired, the coaches or the players," he said. "It's been taxing both mentally and physically."

The expansion Browns wrapped up their first training camp Monday with two sessions in front of a sparse crowd at their headquarters outside Cleveland. From now on, the Browns will practice once a day in sessions closed to the public.

Cleveland opened its camp earlier than most teams and closed later. But Palmer said he and his staff needed all the time they could get to teach their young team.

Quarterback Ty Detmer, a veteran of training camps in Green Bay, Philadelphia and San Francisco, said a tough camp was to be expected.

THE CARD Post... Report #333 Please Inn. The following is a brief update to the 'petition for judicial review' of 'warning of trespass' issued 1/29/99 by ECU. The petition was 'ordered' by Wayne Superior Court's judge to a 'mediated settlement conference'. Recognizing that would not address the legal questions presented in my petition...I made a formal motion to dispense with the 'mediated settlement conference', move the case to Wake Superior court...& for discovery purposes to have access of tapes of taped ECU appeal hearing 4/7/99 (due to lapses, deletions, misquotes of hearings transcripts)...& copies of papers left for ECU's Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs. Those were the papers requested by the Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs for review & response to my efforts 12/4/98 of going to ECU to seek an ombudsman to address a potential flaw/malpractice in education at ECU. My present understanding of the progress of this 'motion' is that there is no time table for the Superior Court judge to respond. Hope to research this matter in time for next report.
