“

I participate in the movement that started with Stonewall by being my most authentic self and being outspoken on my stance on queer rights in my everyday life. As a white, cisgender, gay man, I know that it is important for me to not speak for queer people that are different from me, but to hold the microphone up to their mouths when they speak on their own intersecting identities. To me, being out and proud is a political statement. To be unapologetic in a world that wishes to silence us is to be the catalyst for change.
