East Carolina University students had the opportunity to hear from Greenville Fire/Rescue Chief Eric Griffin at last night's Student Government Association meeting, regarding allegations published in The East Carolinian's article "Where There's Smoke, There's Fire."

ONLINE | FULL STORY

In the Great Rooms of Mendenhall, the SGA assembly gathered to hear a 10 minute presentation from the chief, including a powerpoint presentation followed by a brief question and answer section. Each assembly member was given note cards and encouraged to write down anonymous questions to be asked at the end.

"The opportunity came, when we realized that The East Carolinian had printed some information, that was in our opinion, misleading to the students," Griffin said. "I thought to myself, I said who could be the people other than the faculty and staff, who are already aware that we were really providing high level services, who would be the people that could help me get connected to the students."

Griffin said former employees are to blame for what he called "misinformation" in the reporting of "Where There's Smoke, There's Fire." He said the department was aware there were people who had negative intentions for the department.

"I think that the original reporting that was done was encouraged by people that did not have the best interests of the Greenville Fire/Rescue, nor The East Carolinian, nor the students of East Carolina University," Griffin said. "They encouraged The East Carolinian to print false information, so our job is to give them the real data, give them the facts, so that we can continue to have a great community."

Griffin said he reached out to SGA

Greenville Fire/Rescue Chief Eric Griffin said Tower 1 would not be able to reach the top of an East Carolina University dormitory, such as Greene Residence Hall, in the case of an emergency, in his first interview with The East Carolinian following the publication of "Where There's Smoke, There's Fire."

INSIDE | EIC RESPONSE

Griffin said Tower 1 is "the last ditch effort" because GFR uses a multitude of other tools and methods to ensure safety of those living in high rise buildings.

"If we're going to rescue students from a building, our preferred method is going down the unaffected stairwell," Griffin said. "Do not think that the tower truck is your savior. We work with the environmental services and all the life safety folks over at ECU to have your fire alarms tested, to make sure all your smoke alarms are working in the building, to ensure that you have clean, safe corridors to exist out of, to practice your emergency plan, to have that fire exit drill drilled into every single student's head."

Griffin added that preparedness is "how we save students, we don't save them with that tower truck. That tower truck is the last ditch effort."

The department makes sure the stairwells are safe for residents to use during a fire, adding the sprinkler and standpipe system are actively working to also protect residents and the building.

Griffin said students shouldn't expect to wait at the window for Tower 1 as "it may be unrealistic for Tower 1 to get there close enough."

Deputy Fire Chief Brock Davenport agreed, adding that GFR trains its firefighters in multiple ways of rescuing people in addition to the use of a ladder truck.

"We train our folks in repelling, so if need be you go to the top of the building and repel down to the higher floors or you secure one of the many stairwells and you make sure it's a safe passage and you help people get down the stairwells," Davenport said.

While talking about Tower 1, Griffin said there are different areas of ECU's main campus that the ladder truck wouldn't be able to access.

"There are many locations, especially when we look at the East Carolina University campus, when we talk about it being a walkable campus, that Tower 1 can't get close to the buildings," Griffin said.

While labels can be emotionally damaging, an upcoming original production shows they can be deadly if left unchallenged.

Hosted by The 5th Street Players, "Label: Pink" follows the story of two gay men who live in two different times periods, one past, one present. An exploration in how quickly human rights can be taken away and society's ability to protest, "Label: Pink" serves to comment on attitudes both past and present.

"Label: Pink" will open Friday at 7:30 p.m. and play again Saturday at 2:30 p.m. at Messick Theatre Arts Center in room 205, with tickets on sale for $5.

Written and directed by William Brooks, a senior theatre arts major with a concentration in props, the play tells the story of two writers, one living in Nazi Germany, and one living in a post-Trump America.

"You've got one homosexual living in 2020, and the whole show

Lead actor Donald Sutton, a senior musical theater and professional acting major, plays Lou Wolff, a homosexual poet living in 1942 Germany, when World War II was in full swing.

"Without giving too much away, Lou's character arc follows him as he attempts to hide from the Nazi party, struggling with his necessary but unwanted departure from nature and an inner turmoil based upon his inability to stand tall and be brave when his Fredrik is put in harm's way," Sutton said.

Brooks said the 5th Street Players Production gained inspiration from Brooks' research on the Holocaust.

"You don't really see a lot of information on homosexual victims during this time," Brooks said. "People knew about them, but they did a lot of

NAACP marches through campus

For the East Carolina University chapter of the NAACP, ECU is not just ECU—it's ECUUnited.

The NAACP, in association with the Student Government Association, hosted a march yesterday, starting at the Mendenhall Brickyard and at Gateway Residence Hall.

ECU's NAACP Chapter President Adedayo Adeniyi wants students to know that discourse outside of campus should not affect the unity of ECU's students.

"One thing missing is empathy, we all know the definition but not a lot of people care," Adeniyi said. "There's not a lot love and we want to be here for each other, regardless of what's going on."

While the march was hosted by the NAACP, members encouraged students of all backgrounds to join in the march, even if they didn't belong to any student organizations.

SGA President La'Quon Rogers is proud to have the SGA associated with the NAACP's undertaking, and shares the NAACP's sentiment.

"I think it's good, and we definitely want to echo the message," said Rogers. "You can tell that it really comes from the heart."

Rogers went on to deliver powerful speech to the congregation right before the march was to start.

"We will not follow what the rest of the world does, we respect our differences, our diversity," Rogers said. "We will remain united, no matter what happens - ECUUnited."

'Peace Pole' to be unveiled today

Darby Hubbell
FOR THE EAST CAROLINIAN

An East Carolina University graduate student and artist will unveil her artwork to commemorate International Day of Peace today.

Jessica Bradsher, a Masters of Fine Arts student in sculpture, is the creator of ECU's Peace Pole, which is part of a global project to use art to bring awareness about international peace. A permanent Peace Pole will be unveiled today at 4:30 p.m. in front of Mendenhall Student Center.

"It's just such a great honor," Bradsher said. "Peace is important—maybe not for everything we intend to do but it is important that we all have peace at some point in the day to properly see and give respect to each other and what our intentions may be and what their ambitions are."

Bradsher focuses specifically on outdoor sculpture as an artist. Along with the Peace Pole which will be on campus, she has also created two other similar Peace Poles that will be permanently placed in Greenville, North Carolina. The other Poles' locations have yet to be determined.

After undergoing an intensive two month long process to create these poles, Bradsher said these projects will add to Greenville's community as well as ECU's.

"It's a great honor for me as an artist, but also a very important step in the international Peace Pole Project to have another planted in a big community," Bradsher said. "It's a great opportunity to stand out in the outdoor environment. Purple is our source of pride here at East Carolina."

Bradsher gave much of the credit for the Peace Pole to Cynthia Ann Bickley-Green, the coordinator of art education at ECU, who brought this idea to Bradsher after she interned with her this past summer as her graduate assistant.

"She knows how to make outdoor sculpture," Bickley-Green said. "So I was thinking we wanted to make one for the Memorial Library, but then I was thinking, well maybe we should make three and see if anyone else wants them. That's what her graduate assistantship became."

Bickley-Green was first introduced to The Peace Pole Project while in Osaka, Japan for an art conference

"I saw peace poles all through the temples, and nobody told me about them. So it's a pole, and it said peace in English, peace in French and then I assume peace in Japanese and so forth, and I kept seeing these poles all around Osaka," Bickley-Green said. "There was a person who was choosing people to send peace poles too. So we (ECU) were chosen because I signed the paper, we were then chosen to receive the peace pole from this Youth Art Peace Pole Project."

Bradsher and Bickley-Green approached Students Government Association to get permission to erect the Peace Pole because they wanted it to be a student-led project. Student Body President LaQuon Rogers said he was happy to approve the project because the message of world peace is incredibly pertinent to the diverse ECU community.

"What it symbolizes," Rogers said, "and I would hope that it would be, a fixture that will remind all of us of the importance of respecting each other and the importance of civil discourse and also the importance of remaining united...we are human beings and we are Pirates."

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Virginia Hardy agreed with Rogers, saying, although The Peace Pole Project is still a new concept to the ECU community, the message of peace and unity will always be something that the Pirate Nation consistently strives for.

"Any opportunity we have to shine a light on peace, rather than unrest, we should take it. I applaud the students for bringing this to fruition," Hardy said. "We have seen many of our student groups come together in the last couple of years. That's where #ECUUnited originated. From there we have started Pledge Purple, NC Civility Summit and Cupola Conversations. All of these initiatives are intended to work toward peace and unity on our campus."

President LaQuon Rogers through email to arrange the meeting, because he wanted to provide students with factual data about the department.

"I would hope that the students would hear the fact that I said education through prevention," Griffin said. "And to know that just because someone is talking about a fire truck, that's really not the best way to save a life. The best way to save a life is be prepared."

Griffin said The East Carolinian's report focused on Tower 1, but the truck is not the only tool the department has to fight fires.

"Wow. It was a lot. I think they talked about that tower truck a lot, as if it was the only fire truck that could do what it's doing in the city, but that's not correct," Griffin said. "That tower truck is not like a superhero, it's just a truck. It's another tool that we use to do firefighting at buildings."

Griffin said he knows the department has not had the best relationship with students at ECU, and he plans to fix this by having regular information meetings such as the one held yesterday.

"I realize that we haven't been connecting with the students as much as we should have been in the past," Griffin said. "So with this information being out there, I was really concerned that students were going to get information that would make them feel unsafe, when they really were safe."

Rogers said the chief was informative and focused on relaying information to the representatives.

"He didn't come as a scripted person, he came to talk about the facts of what GFR is doing," Rogers said. "As a leader, that's what I expect a leader to do, let's not play like there are no concerns; let's address them."

During his presentation, Griffin pointed out how busy the department has been over the past year. Griffin said just last year, the department answered 18,000 calls, and out of those calls, 83 percent were EMS related calls.

"When a lot of people think of the fire department, they don't recognize that the majority of our workload comes from EMS," Griffin said.

After Griffin's presentation, one of the questions asked him whether or not the ladder on Tower 1 could reach the top of dorms such as Greene Residence Hall.

"I am willing to demonstrate that the ladder will go to a certain level, but what I will tell you is that ladder will not reach the top of Greene dorm," Griffin said.

Griffin said the ladder is not designed to reach the top, but these dorms are built using Type 1 or Type 2 construction, meaning they are built to be fire-resistant and noncombustible and are equipped with sprinkler systems.

"We have been doing some things at the game that we want to improve on," Griffin said. "Used to be, we have EMS trucks on at least four corners of the stadium and a dedicated unit on the field. So it took more EMS units to have coverage for the city, as well as have coverage for the county."

Griffin said if GFR puts too many EMS units at ECU football games, it adds more pressure on the county because they are responsible for assisting GFR if the department is overtaxed with calls.

"We have been developing a model at the games that improves patient care, reduces emergency room visits, insures that the families can stay connected," Griffin said.

He said this year with the new model, GFR works ECU football game with Vidant emergency room physicians and EastCare.

"We need to make sure we are educating not only the students but all the public first—from the whole prevention perspective, is that that's the way we save lives. It's educate people first," Griffin said.

"There's always two sides to a story, but it's really cool that they took the time out of there day to make sure everyone's safety is assured"

-Haley Creef

Some of the other questions presented to Griffin included the discussion of the misinformation in The East Carolinian's report, positive culture at the department, as well as the department's training program.

SGA Assembly Member Ian Childs, who asked several of the questions that were presented to the chief, said he wished the meeting would have been longer, and Griffin would have provided more details surrounding the allegations.

"I think that Greenville Fire/Rescue Chief Griffin handled himself professionally, but I would have liked him to really answer the questions specifically and address the issue more straightforwardly," Childs said. "I think we got statistics about the department but there wasn't really any response to the allegations."

Colin Johnson, at-large representative of SGA's Equity and Intercultural Engagement Committee said he appreciated the chief's presence and presentation of information.

"I'm glad he addressed the article in The East Carolinian, that we heard from his side of the story and that he shared information on how the department can improve in relations to the community and make sure they can respond to any emergency on campus and in the community," Johnson said.

SGA Treasurer Haley Creef also said she respected the chief's decision to come speak to the organization about the safety of students.

"There's always two sides to a story, but it's really cool that they took the time out of there day to make sure everyone's safety is assured," Creef said.

Rogers said SGA will remain committed in being transparent and focusing on the safety of the student body through several initiatives including holding conversations with facility administrators and the Greenville Fire Department to make sure measures are in place to ensure safety in an event of a fire.

MEETING

Due to Tower 1's weight and footprint, certain areas of the university's main campus wouldn't be accessible to the ladder truck in an emergency, Griffin said.

"From a rescue standpoint, it depends on what side of the building Tower 1 is located on and what the other impediments are," Griffin said. "It's going to depend on every situation. If the tower has to go up (and) it has to do a rescue, the actual distance is going to be decreased. Greene Residence Hall has grass and walkways in the surrounding areas, so I can't tell you what floor it's going to reach to."

During the interview, GFR brought up several issues it had with The East Carolinian's reporting of the allegations against GFR, such as the staffing of ECU home football games.

Griffin said in the past, GFR has worked with a number of other EMS providers to cover ECU home football games.

Griffin said he would rather use resources from his department than bring units in from Pitt County EMS that need to cover other parts of the county.

"I think the people of Bethel and Pactolus would be concerned if we said 'Hey, send your front line truck over here to provide EMS at (the ECU football) game,'" he said.

Griffin added this is why the department

Exercise and drinking beer might not seem as if they go together, but Trollingwood Taproom and Brewery offers both options each Thursday night through its weekly Run Club.

A Greenville native and former bartender Robin Ashley worked with East Carolina University professor Blakely Brooks to bring forth the Trollingwood Run Club. Every Thursday at 6 p.m., members of the Greenville community gather to run a 5K loop, starting at the brewery.

Robin Ashley

“We do a three mile run and one of my main concerns when we started is I wanted nobody to feel left behind,” Ashley said. “So there’s always a sweeper, somebody to stay with the last people to make sure they don’t get left behind or lost on the route.”

The idea originated from Brooks. He runs with a brewery club in Raleigh and brought the idea up to Ashley, who was bartending at Trollingwood at the time. Since then, over 100 members have participated in the 5K since it started this past St Patrick’s day, with a consistent 25 members who return week to week.

“We have a growing group of professionals in town combined with the large student body of ECU that makes Greenville a good place for a run club,” Brooks said. “It’s fun to work up a sweat and cool down with a cold beverage.”

Ashley said every five times you attend and run you earn a $5 gift certificate to the brewery which happens to be the cost of a beer.

Trollingwood, located at 707 Dickinson Avenue, is the oldest brewery in Greenville. Since Dec. 16, 2015, Trollingwood has served a variety of brews to the local community. According to owner Justin Smithwick, the brewery intends on kicking off the fall season with a cinnamon porter that is “dark and delicious.”

“We’re a small nano brewery, a local bar that serves local products and local beer,” Smithwick said. “Just a cool place to chill and we’re trying to support local music as well; it’s important to us.”

Coming up in December is the “Mill Chill,” a four mile race in Rocky Mount featuring a variety of foods and beers. With many competitive run clubs in the area, Ashley said the Trollingwood team is thrilled to take on the challenge as the winners get a beer trophy and plenty of bragging rights.

“I think there’s at least 15 breweries (in the Triangle area) that have teams,” Ashley said. “You pick a team when you sign up. Each brewery is competing for the most people and the fastest people. We’re really excited about it. We’d love to have more people sign up for team Trollingwood.”

Youtube aids student artist in music career

Lauren Sura

Garnering more than 80,000 followers on Youtube alone, local musician Amanda Lopiccolo has begun her climb to the top.

A junior majoring in criminal justice at East Carolina University, Lopiccolo’s childhood was full of change, so music has always been one of the most promising and constant things throughout her life.

Amanda Lopiccolo

“Growing up, music was really one of the only things, besides family, that was really concrete,” Lopiccolo said. “I am an Army brat, so I moved around a lot and music ended up becoming, not only a part of my family, but a part of me.”

Lopiccolo really began to expand her musical skills when she joined choir in middle school, at the same time teaching herself how to play the piano and working on harmonies and lyrics with her sister, Alexis.

“When she was packing up for college, I came across her baby book and I read an entry I wrote when she was two that talked about how she always walked around the house, singing at the top of her lung,” Nancy Lopiccolo, Amanda’s mother, said. “Music, for Amanda, is a large part of who she is and how she expresses herself. When she writes music, when she sings, it comes from her heart and not her head.”

Inspiration for artists can come from anywhere, but Lopiccolo said she prefers to keep it personal by referencing important events and meaningful things that have occurred in her life. Lopiccolo added she wouldn’t put her music into a particular genre or style.

Lopiccolo’s love for music has the support of many family and friends as she develops her craft.

“I just really love how she creates music that speaks volumes to anyone who listens to her,” Madison Appalsammy, a friend of Lopiccolo, said. “Seeing the fire inside of her when she’s singing has been an amazing experience and seeing how passionate she is about music just describes who she is on the inside.”

Musicians are now finding new means to spread their creations, and platforms such as Youtube, which was founded in 2005, have opened up numerous opportunities to artists who have shared their creations with those on the web.

“I started out on Youtube just like any other 13-year-old wanting to be discovered, but as time went on, I realized it became less about someone important finding out about me and more about the right people finding my music,” Lopiccolo said. “All I have ever wanted is to move people with my music the way I have been moved by music and I feel honored to see that I have done so.”

ALBUM REVIEW

"Candy" mix features good song flow

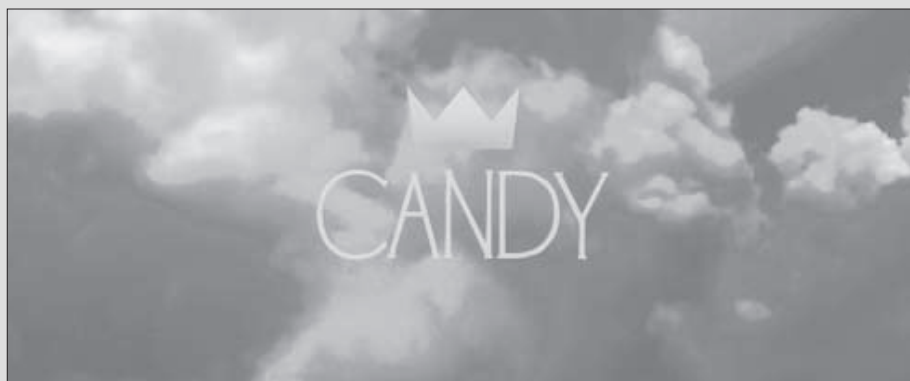

Danielle Schmid
TEC STAFF

Songs that flow from one to the other, each with a unique sound, accompanied by visual artwork, make up the recent mix, “Candy,” released by Louis the Child.

Since their EP “Love is Alive” was released earlier this year, the two-man group Louis the Child has performed at music festivals such as Moonrise, Electric Forest and Camp Bisco. On Aug. 2, the duo released their four dates and surprised fans with 25-minute mix, “Candy.”

While the mix features 23 songs that flow together as if they were made for each other, each song does have its own personality and an interesting song title to go with the creative sounds. Titles of the songs vary from “dotdotdot” and “dopetUne” to “damn son” and “ideaaa 2.” Let’s just say, the boys spent more time on the music than the titles.

Compared to their vocally rich EP “Love is Alive,” “Candy” is mainly instrumental with select vocals thrown on a couple tracks. The songs vary from calming futuristic-bass sounds to heavy dubstep. At 21:38, the duo shows off their collaboration with DJ Whethan with “with wheathin 2.” The track’s choppy and hardcore manner is reminiscent of something electronic dance music producer Skrillex or progressive-house DJ Deadmau5 would be featured on.

While many successful artist may have songs hidden under their belt, especially DJs, a lot of artists take never released songs to their graves. Look at Michael Jackson for instance, after his death, an entire movie with unreleased songs was made. The fact that Louis the Child released 23 free songs and mixed them all together for their fans is impressive; it not only shows dedication but it shows the duo truly loves what they do and doesn’t just do it for the money.

The Youtube video that goes along with it is also wild and intense. Parts of the video feature visual abstract artwork that has trippy lines and colors moving to the beat. Other parts of the video give a behind-the-camera view. Each song has its own visuals that gives us a new perspective on the song.

The most intriguing part of the visual begins at 9:04 with the song “Lovely Build.” The song features soft incomprehensible vocals and is the calmest of the 23 songs. The visual is a view of someone looking down at their sneakers making the audience feel as though someone’s lost or looking for something, and it gives me a sad, strung out vibe.

After this soft, chill-house track, the mix cuts into a hype build-up song called “Dubstep Drop that is flames update.” This ‘dubstep flame’ has a suspenseful electric sound that leads up to the next track “Sick Electronic Song 2.” This song has a hardcore drop that includes a vibrating sound that explodes with fast paced electronic sounds.

A fan favorite, “Tools,” comes in at 16:57. This track was originally recorded by the indie up-and-coming DJ Yellerkin. Unlike the rest, this song has recognizable vocals and more of a softer sound.

My favorite thing about this mix is the fact the duo did not label when a song begins or ends. Because of the solid transitions Louis the Child created, listeners really have to use their imagination and figure out when the next song starts. This is the type of mix one can listen to 20 times and still not know where a song begins and ends.

OUR VIEW

DACA deserves protection

On Sept. 5, President Donald Trump announced the rescindment of the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program. With six months for Congress to revisit the issue and the legal status of thousands left uncertain, the American public has been split in terms of support for those affected, and the pressure of those in power to confront the issue rises by the passing days.

Installed by former President Barack Obama, DACA is an immigration policy that allowed various individuals, known as DREAMers, who entered the country illegally as minors to be protected from deportation by awarding them benefits such as a renewable two-year period of deferred action from deportation, work permits and admission to universities across the United States.

We, the editorial staff of The East Carolinian, acknowledge the cruciality of this rescindment and its localized impact on students at East Carolina University and neighboring universities throughout the state. This administrative action is worthy of considerate response from leaders across our nation, from the political to the educational.

Along with ECU Chancellor Cecil Staton, we are “united in support of all students” when it comes those in the ECU community that is affected by this rescindment. We approve of Staton’s statement of support and his efforts to provide services and legal aid to impacted students.

In regard to the future of DACA, our editorial staff urges for bipartisan consideration, empathetic efforts, and strategic assessments from those who represent the people of our nation on Capitol Hill.

Editor-in-Chief speaks out on GFR claims against TEC

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Yesterday, The East Carolinian had the opportunity to finally sit down with officials of both Greenville Fire/Rescue and the city of Greenville.

This meeting came nearly three weeks after The East Carolinian released “Where There’s Smoke, There’s Fire,” an investigative report written by our News Editor, Matthew Prensky, regarding allegations of misconduct and mismanagement within GFR.

Chief Eric Griffin, Deputy Chief Brock Davenport, GFR’s Public Information Officer and Life Safety Educator Rebekah Thurston and the city of Greenville’s Public Information Officer Brock Letchworth were all in attendance. Myself, Prensky and our Managing Editor, Javeria Salman, attended this meeting on behalf of The East Carolinian. We have released the video of this meeting for our readers online to provide total transparency.

To begin the meeting, Letchworth said, “As I mentioned, when we sent the invitation over for this meeting, I think this is a good opportunity— a much needed opportunity, for you all to get some questions answered, that you want answered. We’re certainly happy to do that. But also, a chance for us to talk about some of the concerns we have related to the reporting that’s taken place so far and what we feel is really not fair treatment to us in terms of how that reporting is being published.”

While we appreciate the chance to finally have our questions directly answered by GFR, and we were prepared to hear out the city and GFR’s concerns, there are a few things I’d like to address publicly. We gave the city and GFR a chance to speak their peace without interruption or debate, now I’d like to take the time to speak ours.

First and foremost, I’d like to address the claim of unfair reporting which was brought up on numerous occasions during the meeting.

On the morning of Aug. 30, Prensky reached out to numerous sources for a comment on the allegations. Each source was contacted multiple times, as he pursued a response, and all but GFR provided comments.

While we understand the sources we reached out to would’ve likely preferred more time to prepare a statement, at no point did anyone request additional time. We explicitly informed Thurston we wanted a comment from GFR by 5 p.m. that day regarding the allegations, and eventually extended our deadline for the department to 7 p.m. Had Thurston addressed our requests for comment or informed us that the department would prefer to meet prior to publishing our report, we would’ve been willing to take them up on that offer, but instead, our questions went unacknowledged and that request was never made.

What I know for a fact about that day is that East Carolina University’s Associate Vice Chancellor for the Office of Environmental Health and Campus Safety Bill Koch was able to get into contact with Chief Griffin. In a quote regarding allegations of the mismanagement of Tower 1 in our initial report, Koch said, “My office contacted Greenville Fire/Rescue and Chief Griffin said that that is not true.” So, if Chief Griffin addressed Koch’s questions regarding the allegations on the day of Aug. 30, why was The East Carolinian avoided?

The second issue I’d like to publicly address are the claims that Prensky harassed Thurston. These claims are brought up in part three of the meeting video beginning at 23:00.

Prensky sent out an email requesting comments at 8 a.m. on Aug. 30 and after not receiving a response by noon, he began calling to request comments. This is the same approach he took with all of his sources until making contact. When we did finally make contact with Thurston, she was headed into a meeting, at which point Prensky informed her of our final 7 p.m. deadline for comments. Per Thurston, she had documented 18 phone calls from Prensky that day. Admittedly, as the 7 p.m. deadline approached, we did increase our efforts to get comments, but we received no follow up from Thurston. After the final 7 p.m. call, we ceased contacting Thurston that evening for comments.

Later that night, Prensky was contacted by an officer of the ECU’s police department alerting him that the repeated phone calls to Thurston constituted as harassment.

However, we’d like to make it known that after the initial contact from ECUPD, The East Carolinian was assured by ECUPD’s Deputy Chief of Police Jason Sugg that after reviewing the incident, ECUPD would be dismissing it.

To put it simply: a reporter was contacting a public information officer for information. Regardless of whether or not that is her sole duty at GFR, it is still a part of her title. If she doesn’t plan on answering the public’s comments in the future, then don’t give her the additional title of public information officer. It’s misleading.

In part three of our meeting video beginning at 34:36, Thurston said to Prensky, “We can’t drop everything to respond to questions that seem sort of slanted to begin with and we know you’ve been working on for four/five months. I was waiting for you to reach out to me.”

So if you were waiting for a call and had been waiting all these months, why is it that when we finally reached out for comment, we were ignored, accused of harassment, eventually redirected to Letchworth for all comments regarding GFR and then ultimately accused of unfair reporting?

I’d like to make it very clear, that if at any point a source feels information has been omitted or is not factual, provided evidence, The East Carolinian is more than willing to update the story on our website, provide a correction or clarification in our next issue and/or open our editorial page up to letters. With “Where There’s Smoke, There’s Fire,” we understand this is a sensitive, controversial topic. We don’t want to hide information from our readers and our intention has never been to purposely omit information for the purpose of spinning a story. But we can’t fix it if you don’t talk to us and tell us what we’re missing or not getting right, GFR. Instead, you waited three weeks to set up a meeting and hammer in saying we’ve been unfair. Where was GFR on Aug. 31 when our initial report hit the stands? Where was GFR on Sept. 5 when we followed up with ECU and city officials regarding their reactions to the report? How about Sept. 7, when students shared their unease and fears regarding the allegations, and records revealed the city had previous knowledge of GFR concerns? I could go on, but I think you all get the point. We’d heard nothing directly from GFR.

We appreciate Letchworth’s assistance with questions over the last three weeks, but the allegations at hand are heavy. Why didn’t Chief Griffin speak up sooner, especially if you all supposedly already knew what we had been working on?

The third issue I’d like to publicly address is the claim that we omitted interviews from “the other side.”

On top of the lack of response from GFR to The East Carolinian’s efforts, during our meeting, Chief Griffin referred to instances where he claims The East Carolinian purposely did not include positive comments given to us by sources Prensky interviewed.

Omitted sources Chief Griffin claimed we interviewed were Mike Burton, Tom Moton, Jeffrey Robinson, J.J. McLamb and Roberto Portela. While Prensky did reach out to Burton, Moton, Robinson and Portela for comments, he did not interview them as they declined to comment. As for J.J. McLamb, he was never approached for comments by Prensky. It seems as though you were misled, Chief Griffin.

During Prensky’s five-month investigation, he talked to a total of 25 current and former GFR employees. To date, 265 people have signed a petition on change.org requesting the dismissal of Chief Griffin and Deputy Chief Davenport. While GFR did provide some much needed answers during our interview regarding some of the allegations, citizens of Greenville are still due an independent, outside investigation of the department to ensure that this issue is looked upon with complete objectivity.

In Griffin’s words, which can be heard in part three of the meeting video at 32:30, we have “created a mess.”

If that’s the case, then I firmly believe the only thing that will clean this up is an independent, outside investigation, and The East Carolinian will continue to stand behind that sentiment as the next logical step.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

ECU official responds to TEC report

I want to assure our campus community, especially those living in our residence halls, that to the best of my knowledge, Greenville Fire/Rescue is properly prepared to respond as needed to an emergency on campus or at Dowdy-Ficklen Stadium. This is based on my observations and those of my safety staff, as well as the explanations and assurances provided by Chief Griffin of Greenville Fire/Rescue during recent discussions.

Unfortunately, in recent articles published by The East Carolinian, facts provided by ECU staff, including myself, have been left out causing undue anxiety among our residents. This was unnecessary and avoidable and I take issue with anything that impacts student well-being. The following information was provided to The East Carolinian Aug. 30 – it is important information that will hopefully ease any anxiety among our students and parents.

All of ECU’s residence halls have fire alarm, detection and sprinkler systems and are constructed of fire resistant materials. High rise residence halls have concrete floors and block walls, even the carpeting and other materials must meet flame spread requirements. Essentially, the only materials that will easily burn in a room are the contents brought in by residents and Campus Living has restrictions on those materials. Campus Living also conducts regular inspections of the residence halls to insure all requirements are met. In 20 years, I am not aware of a single fire in an ECU residence hall that has progressed beyond the room of origin.

In addition to the construction requirements, fire drills are conducted each semester and the facilities receive a fire safety inspection each year by the state fire marshal and ECU’s Environmental Health & Safety safety inspector, as well as monthly fire extinguisher and other required fire system inspections. Residents participate in drills and are instructed to immediately evacuate when an alarm is activated using the nearest enclosed, fire-rated stairwell.

Greenville Fire/Rescue is involved in building design reviews and we conduct tours with them whenever a building is constructed, significantly renovated or by request. The tours help them to determine the best method for response to a fire or other emergency under their jurisdiction and expertise.

Personally, I have responded to questions from The East Carolinian as far back as April related to this story and have answered questions via email and phone to insure the reporters had the information they needed from me. I along with other ECU staff were quoted in the original story published Aug. 31. Therefore, the statement made in an East Carolinian editorial on Sept. 4, “...East Carolina University, GFR and the city of Greenville have been eerily quiet. Officials have either refused to speak with The East Carolinian after multiple attempts, held up or outright stonewalled the publication’s efforts to report or provided one sentence answers which were both vague and uninformative.” was not factual.

Finally, I have spoken with the Greenville Fire/Rescue Chief and the City Manager, as have others at ECU. They are reviewing the allegations made in the original Aug. 31 article and we owe them the respect and necessary time to handle that review properly and thoroughly.

Thomas Sirk attempts to pass the ball to one of his receivers downfield against West Virginia University. Sirk will be the starter on Sunday.

Pirates fired up for Huskies

Aaron Jackson
TEC STAFF

With the American Athletic Conference all shaken up, East Carolina University must now prepare to face the University of Connecticut this upcoming Sunday. To kick off AAC conference play, ECU has an odd chance to be tied for first place in the division with a win.

Originally the game between the Huskies and Pirates was scheduled to take place in November, but due to Hurricane Irma, it was pushed forward to Sunday as both the Florida teams in the conference are trying to make up postponed games.

The Pirates head up to Rentschler Field in East Hartford, Connecticut, winless, looking to secure their first win against the Huskies. With a chance to be tied for first on the east side of the AAC division, there's extra motivation to start winning for the Pirates. After back-to-back 50-plus point beatdowns from West Virginia and Virginia Tech, ECU must not take UConn lightly, though the Huskies lost last year in their matchup 41-3.

"We're looking at a good football team coming off of a tough loss to the University of Virginia, so I understand that they will be chomping at the bit to get going against us," head coach Scottie Montgomery said in his weekly press conference. "I think coach (Billy) Crocker has done a good job. Last year, he was one of the best defensive coordinators in the entire country."

UConn faced a tough loss to the University of Virginia 38-18 last week, falling to 1-1 on the season. The Huskies were not able to score until the second half while turning the ball over three times.

"On offense, the quarterback is the guy that leads this football team. Bryant Shirreffs is a good football player. I think their running back duo No. 22 (Arkeel Newsome) and No. 11 (Nate Hopkins) are kind of big and powerful," Montgomery said. "Then quick and fast is their third-leading carrier, the quarterback, so that lets you know what they want to do with the football."

The defense for UConn is also similar to that of WVU, as Montgomery expects the Huskies to come out in the same defensive formation, a 3-3 stack, where six players will be close to the line of scrimmage in order to bring extra pressure.

"Being able to go against West Virginia, their defense has really given us the ability to see some of the things that UConn can do to us this week," Montgomery said.

ECU's offense will be on the field but with Sirk leading the way. After missing the game against Virginia Tech, Sirk will head into the game healthier and more prepared than he was in his first start with an extra week to game plan.

Sirk has had ups and downs as quarterback for the Pirates, tossing four interceptions in the first three games. Montgomery said with Sirk leading the offense, it presents the Pirates with a chance to open up the run game.

"It changes our game plan a little bit and it also changes how the defense will play us a lot," quarterback coach Tony Peterson said. "(Sirk) being somebody that can throw the ball very well, now their defense will have to cover everything."

The Pirates are also changing the way they practice in preparation for the game against UConn. Montgomery informed his players he wanted them to go live in practice, or play at 100 percent. He expects this new way of conducting practice will make his athletes play harder in the game Sunday.

"So all in all, we are going against a good football team," Montgomery said. "We know that all of our goals that we set forth at the beginning of the year had nothing to do with the first three games of the year; they had everything to do with the conference play."

ECU takes on UConn to kick AAC play off at noon Sunday in Connecticut, with the game being nationally televised on ESPNU. With a chance to take a claim of first place in the conference, expect the Pirates to be fired up.

The East Carolinian Sports experts predict this weekend's football game

Kayla Morton

Sports Editor
@mortonsalt74

Record: 2-0
Who wins? ECU, 31-29
Why? Neither of these teams deserve a victory based on their play this season, but someone will have to win. UConn's special teams are absolutely horrible. They don't have confidence in their kicker, who has yet to make a field goal on the year, has missed an extra point and went 0-for-3 during their last game on two point conversions. UConn will lose this game by three or less due to a missed field goal but will convert a two-point try.

Aaron Jackson

Football Editor

@AaronJtheWriter

Record: 2-0
Who wins? ECU, 34-27
Why? ECU needs this win more than ever. If they win Sunday's game against the Huskies, the Pirates will be tied for first in the division. ECU will have to shape their defense to stop the three headed rushing attack with Arkeel Newsome, Nate Hopkins and Bryant Shirreffs. With Thomas Sirk back running the offense, expect for ECU to come out hot again, but this time sustain the great play over four quarters.

Tyler Gavin

Football Writer

@tygavin13

Record: 2-0
Who wins? Connecticut, 24-17
Why? While the talk all week coming into this game is focused on the poor play of both defenses, it'll be an offensive struggle come Sunday. ECU has played a much tougher schedule and have been beaten up without developing a consistent offensive rhythm. Even though I think they'll enter the fourth quarter with a lead, the Pirates' inexperience in closing games will plague them down the stretch. After long enough, the two running backs will break down ECU's weak run defense leaving the Pirates' secondary exposed. Expect to see ECU's offense get rattled down the stretch and allow the Huskies to come back.

Torbett achieves 400th victory

Chase Carroll
TEC STAFF

East Carolina University's volleyball head coach Julie Torbett reached a historic feat of 400 wins Tuesday night. As a video presentation from current and former players played, a smile spread across Torbett's face.

ECU defeated North Carolina Central University in dominant fashion 25-15, 25-15, 25-9, to achieve the 400th career win. Former and current players, whose names were not provided in the video as they spanned from as far back as 20 years, took to the video board to show just how important Torbett has been in their lives, as well as to congratulate her on the milestone. While Torbett had said winning 400 would be just a number to her, the video and lasting impression she has left on her players is what she is really proud of.

"Of course, it is exciting to get a landmark win, but I think about the players. I really do like how special the players have been, and all the players' lives I've gotten to share," Torbett said. "Some of those girls were 40 years old that were on the video, I've known them a long time. To see them be so successful, and to know that part of winning on a volleyball court can teach them how to be successful in life is really just a humbling experience and role I get to play."

Success has been nothing new in Torbett's career, as she spent 17 years at UNC Asheville, earning two Big South Coach-of-the-Year awards, as well as 304 of her total career wins. She inherited a struggling ECU volleyball program in 2013, and has quickly improved the team. She helped the program earn its first .500 season in more than 10 years during the 2016 campaign. The improvement of the ECU volleyball program is something Torbett is even more proud of than her milestone 400th win.

"The transformation has been great, just to be able to take over a program that really struggled for quite a few years," Torbett said. "That has been a mountain to climb, but the players are buying in, and the culture has changed, so anytime you see something like that that you know you have a part in, it's powerful. So I'm very proud of that, and proud of the girls, how hard they fight and that gritty spirit."

ECU soccer set to start conference play

Robert Romero
TEC STAFF

As conference play begins, the East Carolina University soccer team will use its best start in program history to attempt to clinch a tournament berth as it begins American Athletic Conference play.

ECU will play its first two conference games this weekend against both the AAC teams from Florida. The Pirates face the South Florida Bulls on Thursday and wrap up their four-game homestand on Sunday against Central Florida.

As conference play approaches, their 5-2-2 record is the team's best start in program history. ECU is undefeated at home with a record of 3-0-2, and three Pirates—forward Courtney Cash, goalkeeper Michelle Newhouse and defender Kim Sanford earned AAC weekly honors in the same week for the first in program history.

Last year, ECU's soccer team tallied a total of five wins, but this season the Pirates have already eclipsed that mark at 5-2-2 heading into conference play. However, according to head coach Rob Donnenth, the start of conference play is more like a start of a brand new season.

"Everybody now in the league standings is 0-0," Donnenth said. "We talked about pre-season, non conference, conference and then postseason. (We must) prepare the same way that we have been preparing for each game that we've played."

USF enters the game fifth in the AAC with a record of 4-2-0. Due to Hurricane Irma, the Bulls have only played one game since Sept. 3, with the games against Mississippi State and the University of Florida being postponed. The Pirates may have an upper hand in the match up because USF has missed practices and games.

UCF has also been affected by Irma, having only played in a scrimmage game since Sept. 3. However, the Knights enter Sunday's game ranked No. 15 in the nation and second in the AAC standings with a 4-1-0 record. The Knights are currently the only nationally ranked team in the AAC.

According to Donnenth, the lack of recent play for the Bulls and Knights could either be a blessing or a curse for the Pirates. On one hand, the long layoff could give the Pirates the upper hand because both teams could be slow and rusty due to all the missed practices and games. On the other, both Florida teams are well rested and could start the games very hungry and energetic.

After this weekend, ECU will travel north to take on the Temple Owls (4-3-1) and the Connecticut Huskies (2-4-1), who are two of the bottom three teams in the standings.
