The Race Track.

Manager W. L. Cobb, Friday afternoon invited a REFLECTOR reporter out to inspect the race track that is being constructed a mile above town. We found the work progressing finely. Mr. Cobb was very enthusiastic over the excellent condition in which the track is getting and says he is determined there shall not be a better one in the State. The work has been done under the direction of Mr. Cobb and Mr. N. H. Whitfield, one of them being present all the time and seeing that everything is done properly. They say that Pitt county shall have a fair this fall, too.

Sunday Thought.

Ram's Horn.

A lazy man loses heart over-time he looks at the clock.

The sin that shines the brightest is the one most apt to kill.

Controversy in religious matters pays no spiritual dividends.

If we know how to aim, the bigger the giant the better the mark.

If the Lord could trust us with money we would all have more of it.

The man who looks through cob webs will see spiders everywhere.

It is always the self-righteous man who wants to know where Cain got his wife.

Some shepherds seem to forget that sheep never stand on their hind legs to eat.

The journey to the cross is short when we are willing to go to it with bleeding feet.

One reason why Christ ate with publicans and sinners was that they made him welcome.

The blind would never find out that they were blind if somebody with eyes didn't tell them so.

The preacher's spiritual life is more apt to widen and deepen when he is being persecuted for righteousness' sake than when his salary has been doubled.

Good Thing For Davidson College

Mr. James A. Bradley, of Oakland Cal., just before his death last December executed to Davidson College a deed for certain buildings in Minneapolis, Minn., estimated at about twenty-five thousand dollars. This property is now in the possession of the college, and will add materially to its means of usefulness. Mr. Bradley was originally a Wilmington man, but moved west years ago, and amassed a fortune, and being an unmarried man, he left about half of his fortune to benevolent institutions. The Masonic Orphans' Home at Oxford came in for about the same amount, and Union Theological Seminary, in Va., for about fifty thousand dollars.

Several of the State papers have been calling Pollockville "the walled city" because the last Legislature placed a fence around it. Greenville has been fenced in for several years in the same way.

Call it "guff, fiction, fairy tales, bluff, twisted truth, anything, but don't let the matter drop until you give me a chance to back up every claim I've made in favor of Clothes, Hats and Furnishings. Try a Suit of Clothes, a Hat, some Furnishings—that will do the business, and help to determine whether I preach facts or peddle fairy-tales.

Cotton and Tobacco.

The Carolina Farmer, of Florence, S. C., prints a statement of the farm operations of Mr. Smilie A. Gregg, of that town, for the year 1894. Mr. Gregg cultivated 257 acres, of which 116 were in cotton, 116 in corn and 25 in tobacco. The prices realized, the cost of production and the profits on the three crops were as follows:

116 acres of cotton, 52,018 pounds	$2,646.40
at 5¢ cents,
116 acres of corn, 1,400 bushels	840.00
at 60 cents,
Cost of making corn and cotton	2,351.88
	$1,135.02
Deduct value of corn not sold	840.00
Profits on cotton	$295.02
25 acres in tobacco, 24,410 lbs.
sold for	$2,528.25
Expenses of making tobacco	1,000.25
Profit on tobacco	$1,528.00
Profit on cotton	295.02
Total profit	$1,823.02

Mr. Gregg says: "You will see from this resume that there was only $295.02 profit on 116 acres of cotton and $1,528 on 25 acres of tobacco. I would not mislead any one by the above, but would say to all beginners to start with a small acreage of tobacco and increase when they have learned to cure, grade and other necessary knowledge, which they will have to acquire by planting tobacco."

THERE WERE REASONS.

A Fishing Tale That Was Received Incredulously.

The Local Sportsman Is the Narrator, and This Story Is an Alleged Experience of His—Towed In by a Porpoise.

A number of the guests of the Pickwick hotel were seated before the comfortable grate fire in the reading room of that institution talking of everything, says the New Orleans Times-Democrat, but the weather. At last the conversation got around to a subject that always brings forth a series of interesting stories and reminiscences—hunting and fishing. The most wonderful tales that were ever evolved in the mind of man were passed about as if matters of mere everyday occurrence, and the shades of Walton and the elder Nimrod must have wilted had they been anywhere about. One of the gentlemen had just finished a remarkable story of rescue, in which a fisherman had ridden a turtle for two miles off the Florida coast and was finally rescued by a passing vessel, a little the worse for wear and anxiety.

The members of the party looked at each other for a few moments, when a local sportsman, who had said nothing up to this time, concluded it was time to uphold the reputation of the locality.

"Well, that's all well and good," he said, "but a little experience of mine some years ago may appear quite as remarkable, and I presume no one will doubt the truth of the narrative when I myself tell it. I was hunting and fishing in Barataria bay, and for several days had enjoyed myself hugely. Fish of all sorts were plentiful and the marsh hens flew before my gun in clouds. It was not an uncommon thing for me to load my boat to the gunwales with trout and red fish in a single morning's outing, and I could vary the monotony of this sort of sport by capturing a few tarpon. A favorite method employed by the fishermen in this section of the coast waters is to catch the silver fish where the waters eddy, and when the gleaming fin would break the surface to plunge a grain just abaft the dorsal and let 'er go. This was sport, and when you consider the fact that they, the men, usually fished in small pirogues, the performance may well be called dangerous. It became quite expert at this, and would go at the tarpon with all the temerity and sangfroid of an old timer. I never, however, succeeded in gaining a silver fish.

"This is not the story I want to tell, however. One morning when I was about two miles from shore, right out to sea, I cast my lines and the Spanish mackerel began biting like mad. My hands were blistered, and I could scarcely move in the boat owing to the vast quantity of the beauties which I had pulled in. I rolled up my lines, settled myself for a comfortable row, back to shore, and was knocked out to find that my oars had dropped from the pins and floated off. At first I felt amused at the predicament, but this feeling changed to something like fear when I ascertained that there was not a piece of wood in the boat with which I could make a paddle, and I felt worse as I noticed a drift seaward and that the sun was falling. My quandary increased, and I yelled vociferously in hopes of my voice reaching the shore. Foolish hope. Time drew on with wonderful rapidity until the sun went down. Twilight is not long on the coast, and as the sun dipped the wind died away, leaving the surface of the gulf as smooth as a pond. Suddenly I heard a snort, and then another, and the water was broken into a heap of swirls by the breaking of a great school of porpoises. The fish approached the boat, dangerously close I thought, until at last a bright thought struck me, and without losing any time I grappled my largest line, and quickly tying a slip noose, watched my opportunity, and as a porpoise broke within a few feet of the boat I threw the noose, lasso fashion, and the loop landed square and fair over the huge dorsal fin of the cetacean—and slipped off. My next cast was more successful, the fin being corrugated by age, and the line held.

"It is a well known fact that a porpoise when struck or injured makes for shore. My capture followed this very plan, and, gratified at my sagacity and knowledge, I fastened the line in the prow of the boat, and soon had the satisfaction of witnessing my novel steed cavort toward the shore, growing already dim in the fading light.

"I was in luck, for the trip was made without incident, the fish thinking only of getting away from the line, and soon I saw the water fly as he plunged over the first sandbar. I was near enough to wade, and cut the line, thanking my stars and the porpoise for a remarkable deliverance. A little while later I was on shore telling the story to my friends, who, by the way, did not believe me."

FAME WON BY ACCIDENT.

His First Successful Picture Was an Advertisement.

The great French painter, Bastien Lepage, who died lately, was pursued by unmerciful disaster through his youth in his efforts to study art. His mother worked in the fields to keep the sickly boy at school. At fifteen he went alone to Paris, starved for seven years, painted without success, but still—painted. He had just finished a picture to send to the salon when Paris was besieged and he rushed with his comrades to the trenches.

On the first day a shell fell into his studio and destroyed his picture, and another shell burst at his feet, wounding him. He was carried home and lay ill and idle for two years. Then he returned to Paris, and, reduced to absolute want, painted cheap fans for a living. One day a manufacturer of some patent medicine ordered a picture from him to illustrate its virtues. Lepage, who was sincere, gave his best work to his advertisement. He painted a landscape in the April sunlight; the leaves of tender green quivered in the breeze; a group of beautiful young girls gathered around a fountain from which the elixir of youth sprang in a bubbling stream. Lepage believed there was real merit in it.

"Let me offer it at the salon," he asked his patron.

The manufacturer was delighted. "But first paint a rainbow arching over the fountain," he said, "with the name of my medicine upon it." Lepage refused. "Then I will not pay you a sou for the picture!" The price of this picture meant bread for months and the painter had long needed bread. The chance of admission to the salon was small. He hesitated. Then he silenced his hunger and carried the canvas to the salon. It was admitted. Its great success insured Lepage a place in public recognition and his later work a place among the greatest of living artists.—Current Literature.

(A FORCED) APOLOGY.

Lord Churchill Brings a Vapid Youth to His Knees.

At an entertainment once, where Lady Randolph Churchill was playing on the piano, a tall youth was observed paying a languid and rather insolent attention to the music, standing close enough to the performer to have his comment easily overheard by her. "Lord Randy" was close at hand, too, and presently heard the vapid youth remark: "Deuced fine music, you know, but it lacks weal soul—it lacks weal soul." To the critic's astonishment a muscular young man, with a big mustache, whom he had not noticed before, whispered in his ear: "For a shilling I'd wallop the life out of you!" He hastened to withdraw, but without discovering the identity of the performer.

A small boy in one of the German town public schools wrote a composition on King Henry VIII. It read as follows: "King Henry 8 was the greatest widower that ever lived. He was born at Anle Dpaine, in the year 1066. He had 610 wives besides children. The first was beheaded and afterwards executed, and the 2d was revoked. Henry 8 was succeeded to the throne by his great-grandmother, the beautiful Mary Queen of Scots, sometimes called Lady of the Lake, or the Lay of the Last Minstrel."—Exchange.

The instruction in Cuba is assuming considerable proportions and it is difficult to see at present what may be its results.

TOBACCO NOTES AND TOBACCO JOTTINGS.

BY O. L. JOYNER.

TOBACCO FRECKS.

"The cause mentioned in last Friday's REFLECTOR or the Tobacco Frecks, or what some call Frog Eyes is in my opinion a mistaken idea."

The above is an extract from an article written by Rev. G. M. Billings, late of Danville, Va. in reply to an article which we had written on what is commonly known here as tobacco french. On account of the uncommon use of the word french in this application it was mistaken for the word freck and so printed hence

Mr. Billings article. We are very glad, however, that he wrote as he did on the causes of Frog Eyes or what is in reality tobacco frecks, however widely we may differ as to the causes and remedies. We want to say before getting away from tobacco french that we have searched Webster's International and find no such word as french as applied in this case and for the lack of a history or work on the diseases of plants until a better word is found we shall have to stick to this otto quism. We have written Mr. Enery, agriculturist at the State Experiment Station, giving as best we could a description of the disease, and asking him the cause and remedy. His reply will be published and we hope to enlighten our readers on this question.

Mr. Billings says that where he was raised (near Danville) several causes are assigned to Frog Eyes or frecks, most important of which is the over use of guano, and that few of the causes can be remedied under any circumstances. He says too that wet weather and springy or undrained land will produce frecks and the only remedy is to thoroughly drain the land and lay by the tobacco with a daggan plow so that the surface water will drain off. To this we agree with him fully and the farmer who plants tobacco on such land will either have to drain it or become a bankrupt tobacco grower, but in regard to the use of guano we differ widely. He says, however poor the land, not more than 400 pounds of guano should be used to the acre. This depends materially on the kind of guano used. There are brands 400 pounds of which would be a plentiful supply but ordinarily the brands that are used under tobacco it is but little over half enough as time and the practical experience of some of our best farmers has demonstrated. In fact we have frequently seen argument in the leading agricultural journals against the use of strong fertilizer on poor land on the same principal that strong food will not do for a debilitated stomach, and it may be that Mr. Billings has been misled in his experience along this line because of the use of too strong fertilizer on land that was not able to utilize it and hence the Frog Eyes. Only a few years ago when this county was first learned its first lessons in tobacco culture the aid and experience of old tobacco men was necessary, and in the heavy application of manures that was practiced by the eastern farmers they expressed wonder and had serious doubt as to the results. Only one year was required to teach these old hands in tobacco culture that the main secret of success of the Eastern tobacco farmers lay in the preparation of the soil and his system of fertilizing while the main cause of the failure of some of the best farmers in the old tobacco belt lay in the deficient fertilizing system.

This writer heard it once remarked by a Granville county man on the streets of Oxford, "no wonder you can make fine tobacco in Pitt county if we were to use the manure you do, we could make it too." 400 pounds of guano may do for some soils but not for Pitt county.
