LOAFING ON A WHEEL.

You may talk about your street cars and you 'idin' on the train,
But I'll take mine out in 'cycling when there is no snow or rain;
'Cause a feiler then goes glidin' just like the air was greased,
And it fills you with a ticklin' just like before you've sneezed.

Then it draws out all the sweetness and the vigor in the air,
And it stuffs it in your system and just simply leaves it there;
And if you're sick and triffin' from pleasure, work or sin,
That sorter takes and lifts you from the hole that you've got in.

And it makes you strong and healthy, and it fits you for your work,
And it makes you want to hustle in the place of grunt and shirk—
It makes you fit your clothing, 'cause it makes you want to eat—
Makes fat meat good as honey, and makes sleepin' just as sweet.

So I don't take no more sea-shore, with its 'skeeters and its sand,
And the very ancient maidens who are not much in demand;
And when for fun and physic others seek the mountain air,
I just ride my old bicycle, and I guess I get my share. —Sam Bean.

Graveyard Insurance.

News reached here that gross swindles in the way of graveyard insurance have been unearthed at the town of Beaufort. Two farmers and a medical examiner are involved. In some cases persons almost at the point of death were insured, and in one case this was done after the insured positively refused to be a party to the fraud. The conspirators offered the widow $2,000 to participate in the suits against the companies. In some cases the insurance was obtained by means of impersonations, sound men representing themselves as the assured, when really the latter were nearly dead. Fourteen of these frauds have been discovered.—Durham Sun.

A BRIDAL MELODY.

She stood like an angel just wandered from Heaven,
A pilgrim benighted away from the skies,
And little we deemed that to mortals were given
Such visions of beauty as came from her eyes.

She looked up and smiled on the many glad faces,
The friends of her childhood, who stood by her side;
But she shone o'er them all like a queen of the Graces,
When blushing she whispered the vows of a bride.

We sang an old song, as with garlands we crowned her
And each left a kiss on her delicate brow,
And we prayed that a blessing might ever surround her,
And the future of life be unclouded as now.

NEWS OFF THE WIRE.

Served by our "Leased" Underground Cable—(Limited).

The planing-mill, of the Reinhold Lumber Company, Lebanon, Pa., and $30,000 worth of lumber were burned. Loss, $100,000; insurance, $19,000.

The planters of Eastern North Carolina and South Carolina should invest in tobacco transplanters and save money, time and labor and be independent of dry seasons.—Winston Tobacco Journal

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin handed down a decision establishing the validity of the law which provides that life imprisonment operates as a decree of absolute divorce without further legal proceedings.

Sallie Lupton, the six year-old child of J. T. Lupton, was drowned last evening at the river bridge. She was last seen on the bridge about 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon and missed about a half hour afterwards. The river was dragged and the child found near the wharf about 8 o'clock.—Washington Messenger.

Defaulting Cashier, John R. Holland has fled from Charlotte suddenly. One thousand dollars has been offered as a reward for his capture. Some think he has committed suicide. As the investigation proceeds he is found to be a forger as well as a defaulter. The amounts can time to increase also and will reach at least fifty thousand dollars. There is some continue at his being allowed to escape. He was at his home and no effort so far as is known was made to prevent his fleeing from justice.

TOBACCO MANURES

The Kinds Productive of Certain Results.

(Southern Tobacconist, Richmond.)

The tobacco plant probably possesses more individual peculiarities than any other plant under general cultivation, and because of its peculiarities its culture cannot be engaged in with any measure of success by farmers unskilled and inexperienced in handling the crop. The difference in grade and quality of tobacco was recognized at a very early period in the history of its cultivation and our earliest records of sales showing very different prices, depending almost entirely upon quality. Notwithstanding the early and general recognition of difference in qualities of tobacco, we find that there is a very decided lack of information upon the subject of what are the requisites of soil, of fertilization and of growth which go to make up the desired quality.

Of course tobaccos for different purposes are graded upon very different scales, but the bulk of the crop is used for smoking and it is smoking tobacco that rules and sets the prices in the market. In smoking tobacco the flavor and aroma may be said to be the primary essentials and if for cigar making the texture, greenness of leaf with small veins and ribs are equally important factors, yet a tobacco may be produced possessing in the main all those characteristics and yet be very deficient in combustibility, that is having a poor burning quality, and, in consequence thereof, be very nearly worthless, and in order to be used to any advantage at all must be mixed with tobacco possessing a very good combustibility, thus causing one tobacco to burn and sell the other.

A good burning tobacco is one that will continue to glow for some considerable time after being ignited, leaving a pale, gray or white ash and in cigars the ash should hold together.

There is no plant under general cultivation that can be modified to a greater extent in one or all of these essential qualities by fertilization and cultivation than the tobacco plant, and particularly is this true in regard to combustibility. Experiments have shown that the combustibility of tobacco is chiefly dependent upon the composition of the ash; that is, upon the proportion and combination of the mineral constituents of the plant.

In applying fertilizers or manure of course it is always desirable to produce an increase in the yield and in general that is the primary object of fertilization and it is only in the increase of yield that we commonly book the profit from the application of manure. With tobacco we find ourselves confronted with a very different condition of affairs, it often being easy to produce an increase in the field, but the product will be of an inferior quality and, in consequence, its total value much less than it would have been without the fertilization. Again, fertilizers will often show little if any increase in yield, but cause a great improvement in quality, and thus give returns by bringing more per pound than it would have otherwise. The Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station has been making experiments along this line and studying the effect of our chief fertilizing element upon the feeding habits of the tobacco plant and their ultimate effect upon its quality, and particularly the burning quality. These experiments, though conducted on

Maryland soils, yet have brought out many facts that are equally applicable to the crop wherever grown. The experiments show the potash salts to be the most potent factors in changing the composition and quantity of the tobacco produced. It was shown very plainly that muriate of potash, kainit and low grade sulphate of potash were unfit for use as a tobacco fertilizer and should never be applied to lands that were ever to be cultivated in tobacco; because the chlorine which these potash salts contain is taken up very freely by the tobacco plant and chlorine always produces a tobacco with bad burning qualities. On the other hand, high grade sulphate of potash always improved the burning qualities. Carbonate of potash (ashes) produces tobacco with the best combustibility. The application of potash was in most cases accompanied by an increase in yield, but in many cases the increase was small.

Phosphoric acid proved to have but little direct bearing upon the combustibility, but it generally produces a very decided increase in the yield. Lime and magnesia compounds in small quantities seemed to produce little effect pro or con, but in large quantities it produced a tobacco that cured badly and had an inferior texture; the duration of glow was considerably larger with lime and magnesia tobacco, but in many cases the ash was of a bad color. On the whole, while lime and magnesia will often very materially increase the yield, yet their quality is such that their application cannot be recommended.

The salient principles in the use of fertilizers for the tobacco crop may be summarized as follows:

- 1st. Apply fertilizers with reference to the improvement of the quality rather than the quantity and never sacrifice quality of tobacco for quantity.
- 2nd. Many things that produce marked increase in yield make tobacco of inferior quality.
- 3rd. Use concentrated fertilizers as the extraneous matter—matter not plant food—very often has the effect of making inferior tobacco.
- 4th. Never apply fertilizers to tobacco that contains much, if any, chlorine.

5th. Chlorine always causes tobacco to burn badly.

6th. Never apply common salts to tobacco lands.

7th. Do not furnish the potash of a tobacco fertilizer by means of muriate of potash as it produces a bad quality.

8th. Do not apply kainit to tobacco or tobacco lands, as it produces a bad quality of tobacco.

9th. Do not use low grade sulphate of potash in tobacco fertilizers as it causes inferior quality in the tobacco.

10th. High grade sulphate of potash always improves the quality of tobacco and generally increases the yield.

11th. The tobacco having the best combustibility was grown with carbonate of potash but the cost of carbonate often excludes its use.

12th. Never apply lime to land immediately before planting it in tobacco. In fact its bad effects in curing will sometimes last for several years.

13th. Phosphoric acid generally increases the yield, but does not affect the quality.

14th. Nitrogen produces in most cases an increased yield, but no marked effects on quality could be detected.

15th. Yard manure is not well adapted to tobacco, as it is apt to contain detrimental chlorine compounds and contains relatively too much nitrogen and too little phosphoric acid and potash.

The services which have been held at the Baptist church for the past ten or twelve days have been of such a character that they will result in much good to the community. There have been no high pressure methods resorted to for the purpose of counting converts. Mr. Olliver's preaching has been as fine as this town has ever heard and as purely Gospel as that of the Apostles. His presence and work has been a benediction to the town and will produce results in the lives of those who heard him. Such a man and such work are a blessing to every place. He will long be remembered here as a sweet, earnest christian minister and many a life will bless his coming.
