LOCAL NOTES AND TOBACCO JOTTINGS.

BY O. L. JOYNER.

The Southern Tobacco Journal this week gives an illustrated article on six presidents of tobacco association in North Carolina. They are all young men, and the Journal mentions the fact that Mr. G. B. Hughes, president of the Tarboro Board of Trade is one of the youngest men in the State to hold such a responsible position. In a week or two the REFLECTOR will give a good many illustrations of the Greenville tobacco market and the men who have made it. Among them our president P. H. Gorman who by the way is the youngest man in the State holding such a position.

The Kansas City Times has the following reference to the daughter of Col. J. S. Carr, President of the Blackwell Durham Tobacco Co:

The engagement is announced of Mr. Harry C. Flower, of this city, to Miss Lida Carr, daughter of Colonel J. S. Carr, of Durham, N. C. The wedding will take place this winter. Miss Carr already has a large circle of friends in Kansas City who will welcome her to a permanent residence. She has been the guest on several occasions of Mrs. T. J. Templer and Miss Tess Templer and of other friends. Miss Carr spent the summer in Europe and has just returned to her Southern home. Mr. Flower is one of the most popular and delightful of the young society men of Kansas City. He also passed the summer in Europe, and most of his time is devoted to the perfecting of business plans in Boston. Mr. Flower and his bride will live in Kansas city.

Export and Imports.

The exports of domestic leaf tobacco from the United States for the month of August, 1895, amounted to 51,437,092, and stems and trimmings to 695,489 pounds more, a total of 52,132,581 pounds of the value of $4,654,008. For the same month of last year the exports of leaf, stems, etc., amounted to 49,815,023 pounds worth $4,570,972. The increase in pounds is 2,317,558 and in value $83,036. The United Kingdom took 21,778,233 pounds; Germany, 12,676,552 pounds, and France, 4,661,608 pounds.

The cigar exportations were 183,000 valued at $3,773, for August, 1895, and 123,000, valued at $4,231, for August, 1894. Of cigarettes 45,743,000, valued at $112,201 were exported during August, 1895, and 42,255,000, valued at $122,475, during August, 1894. The value of all other manufactured tobacco exported during August, 1895, was $241,626, and during August, 1894, $243,864.

We imported during August, 1895, 2,762,618 pounds of leaf of the value of $1,559,119, and during the same month last year, 1,816,059 pounds of the value of $1,323,929.—Southern Journal.

LOVE AND MARRIAGE.

Some Reasons Why There Are Not More Happy Unions.

That matrimony is a happier state than celibacy when it means a union of hearts as well as of fortunes there is little doubt; but, though many people marry for love, or something they mistake for it, very few of these unions lead to lasting happiness. Why is this?

The great reason seems to me to be that in most lives the ruling passion is self, and upon this rock everything which comes in contact with it is shattered sooner or later. A man will often fancy himself very much in love with a pretty and sprightly girl, and all the more so if she has some means of her own. Now, the real fact of the case very likely is simply that the girl amuses him, and he pictures a little home with her as its mistress as a pleasant change from bachelor "digging." In fact, what he calls love is only another name for pure, unadulterated selfishness. He thinks of himself and not of her, and when he discovers, as he soon will after marriage, that she has rights, claims and wishes to be satisfied as well as himself, he will probably at first feel very much surprised, and then aggrieved and indignant.

Perhaps the girl may be in her way as selfish as the man and have married for the sake of position, wealth, independence from parental control, or some equally unsatisfactory reason. If this be the case, as soon as the little veneer of mutual attractions and sympathy which they called love has worn off, then both man and woman will find the marriage bond irksome and will look back wistfully to their old days of freedom.

In a case like this certainly we cannot say love has been destroyed by marriage, for, though both young people may have fancied they loved, it was a mere delusion, which time and better acquaintance must inevitably have dispelled without the help of matrimony.

Look at a higher and a happier marriage, one in which both parties start with a true affection for the other and a capacity for greater love, and also with a firm purpose of making the other happy. A few years pass, and how does one find these wedded lovers? She is probably absorbed in her children and her household cares, and her husband is of very secondary importance to her. Why is this? She has simply cared and then alienated her husband's love by her demonstrative affection, which in unmarried days was kept in check by maidenly coyness and modesty. For a short time it pleased him to feel he was her all in all, and that outside him she had no separate life and interests, but then her very devotion palled on him, and he at last, as it were, became quite surfeited with the sweets for which he had never obtained an appetite by fasting.

For marriage to be happy love must be cherished, and it must be restrained, encouraged, carefully nurtured and guarded, or it will take wings and fly away forever.—Home Notes.

AN ORATOR'S MEMORY.

It Sometimes Troubles Him, as Mr. Depew Can Testify.

Few of our greater orators have had good verbal memory. Mr. Depew complains that it is the most embarrassing of his intellectual weaknesses. With a memory which is marvelous for events, and which carries in great detail things which have happened years ago, nevertheless Depew finds it a very severe, sometimes an almost impossible intellectual task, to commit even brief passages to memory. Conkling's verbal memory was not, at least at all times, to be depended upon, although some of his speeches he committed upon three or four readings of them. William H. Seward had a marvelous verbal memory. Having written a speech, it was firmly fixed in his mind after one reading, and that capacity President Cleveland also possesses.

The perfect preparation of a speech was, in Wendell Phillips' view, that one in which the mental operations were assisted in no way by outside aid. Only two or three times in his life did he prepare with pen and paper an address, and he always felt that these two or three speeches were the poorest of his efforts. He was constantly studying the art of oratory. In his daily walk or in his reading metaphors and similes were suggested, which he tucked away in his memory, and he even studied action as he watched the muscular movement of men whom he saw in public places.

He believed that a perfect speech could be prepared only after intense mental concentration. Of course the mind must first be fortified by such reading as provided facts. Having thus saturated his mind with information, he would frequently lie extended for hours upon his sofa with his eyes closed, making mental arrangement of the address. In fact, he used to write his speeches mentally, as Victor Hugo is said to have written some of his poems. A speech thus prepared Phillips thought was always at command of the speaker. It might vary upon every delivery in phraseology. It might be longer at one time than at another, but it would always be practically the same speech.

This method of preparation explains what has been a mystery to many persons. The several reports of his famous lecture on "The Lost Arts" differ in phraseology and even in arrangement. His oration upon Daniel O'Connell has been printed by different publishers, no two of them agreeing either in form or diction, and yet the speech is practically the same. Only one of his orations is left exactly as he delivered it, for he only delivered it once. That was the Phi Beta Kappa oration at Harvard a few years before his death. Mr. Phillips never read one of his speeches in print, and therefore never revised one. He was firmly of the belief that the printed thought and the spoken thought should be expressed in different form, and that the master of one form could not be the master of the other.—Philadelphia Press.

THE POWER OF SCENT.

Instances Showing That Rattlesnakes Have It to a Wonderful Extent.

I don't know whether rattlesnakes have the power of scent or not, but from what I have heard, and especially from what I have seen, it would seem to me that they not only have that power, but have it to a most remarkable degree. One summer in northern Pennsylvania I killed a fine specimen of a rattler and carried it on a stick two miles to the place where I was stopping. A native of that locality on seeing the snake said:

"That's a she rattler, and you folks around here want to watch out. Her mate will be along looking for her tomorrow or next day, sure."

I skinned the snake and took the carcass to the hogpen and gave it to the hogs and thought no more about it. Next forenoon I heard a loud scream from one of the women of the family, and she came running into the house declaring that she had seen a big rattlesnake on the front stoop.

"The first time," she said, "that a live rattlesnake has been around the house in 25 years."

I hurried out, but could see nothing of the snake. It occurred to me then what the native had said about the mate of the dead snake following her. I walked toward the hogpen, and there I discovered a rattlesnake moving to and fro on the ground in front of the sty and acting as if it were looking for a place to get in. I watched the maneuvers of the snake for a few minutes and then killed it. The snake was a male, and the native at once declared that it was the mate of the one I had killed the day before. The front stoop where this snake had just made its appearance at the house was the first place I had stopped with the dead snake and gone from there with it to the hogpen.

I perhaps, in spite of the circumstantial evidence against it, would never have believed that this snake was anything else but one that had come casually to the premises if a similar incident hadn't occurred a couple of days later. A man who was working in haying on the place lived four miles distant and went home Saturday night to spend Sunday. On his way back Sunday afternoon he killed a rattlesnake in the road and brought it in. It happened to be a female, and warning was given that a lookout better be kept for its mate. As a matter of curiosity I took the dead snake from where it had been laid in the road near the house and took it to an old vacant house in a field half a mile down the road from the place where I was stopping. I left the snake there, and next day went back to the old house to see if any snake would follow it there, keeping watch along the road. Along in the middle of the forenoon I saw a big snake coming down the road, and I got into a clump of bushes. The snake came into the field. It was a rattler, and it made straight for the house. I followed it. It went in at the open door. The dead snake lay on the floor. The live one went up to it and around it several times and then lay still, as if thinking the matter over. I watched the snake for ten minutes, and he never moved. Then I stepped inside the door. Like a flash the snake threw himself into a coil and faced me, glaring fiercely and making his rattles sing. I didn't like his looks and shot him with my revolver. I no longer had any doubt that the snake of the week before was the mate to the one I had killed and was satisfied that this one was the mate of the hired man's victim. But how had they followed the trails of their dead wives? That's what has always puzzled me.—New York Sun.
