FIRMNESS.

So much is to be gained by moderation and firmness of speech as opposed to hysterical passion, that it is worth while for every one to try to learn how to control the tongue and the pen so as to obtain the greatest amount of influence over others.

The objection to strong or intemperate language is that it gives rise, unnecessarily, to contentious opposition. A radical in religion or politics takes such extreme views and urges them so offensively that he provokes quarrels, yet never makes a convert.

They are questions of conscience, and each voter is to vote not for his interests (temporal advantage), but for that which after careful thought seems to him right.

Would that this unassailable proposition could be burned into every heart! There is a matter of morality involved in almost every political question—involved more deeply in none than in the two suggested above.

How to Settle the Political Questions.

Our Church Record, of Greensboro, the organ in the State of the Methodist Protestant church, has this week an editorial of such impressiveness under the above caption that we print it with unusual prominence. It follows:

There is but one way to reach a final settlement of a political question, and decide it strictly in accordance with the principles of rectitude.

The tariff question and the currency question are both moral questions.

We will always be floundering about in uncertainty over the tariff question so long as we are simply trying to determine what is best for me and my section, i. e., will make what we have to buy cheapest and what we have to sell dearest.

The currency question cannot be settled finally by a mere consideration of the standard that will make debts easiest to pay or that will give the greatest value to bonds.

There is a right and a wrong in both these questions, and the right is not to be found by a war of classes, each seeking its own interests independently of the rest.

They are questions of conscience, and each voter is to vote not for his interests (temporal advantage), but for that which after careful thought seems to him right.

Would that this unassailable proposition could be burned into every heart! There is a matter of morality involved in almost every political question—involved more deeply in none than in the two suggested above.

The Sin of Fretting.

"Watch any ordinary coming together of people and see how many minutes it will be before somebody frets; that is, make a more or less complaining statement of something or other, which most probably every one in the room, or in the railway carriage, or in the street, it may be, knew before, and which nobody can help.

A French court has decided that when an unmarried woman reaches 30 years of age she may be considered an old maid. But how are they going to tell when an unmarried woman reaches the age of 30 years? In this country they hardly ever pass 25.

Narrow Escape.

"Josiah," said Mrs. Chugwater removing her wraps, "the preacher this morning was speaking of the people's lack of knowledge about scriptural things. He said: 'For instance, if you were out in company and somebody spoke of Urah Heep or Sherlock Holmes, you would be ashamed if you had never read or heard about those characters.' And then he asked: 'How many of you know anything about Elnathan?' I could feel myself growing red. I've forgotten all about Elnathan if I ever knew. Who was he, Josiah?"

"H'm!" said Mr. Chugwater cautiously, "Bible character, wasn't he?"

"Of course."
"Then," rejoined Mr. Chugwater, with much severity, "you ought to be ashamed to come to me for information about him! Read your Bible, woman! Read your Bible!"—Chicago Tribune.

Don't let a fakir come around and hypnotize you into buying something you do not want. Assert yourself, and use your time and your money for your own advantage. There is a great profit in the schemes worked by fakirs, who only expect to catch one customer out of twenty people they tackle. Don't you be the twentieth chump. A fakir is easily bluffed if you once learn how to do it. You haven't time to talk to every man or woman who comes around with a scheme.

FRISKY ORGANS.

Persons Whose Hearts Move About in Their Bodies.

Some Queer Cases That Have Come Under the Observation of Physicians—Nature's Strange Compensations.

The human heart has been up to some queer freaks of late in various parts of the United States. Indiana leads, as she usually does, in the matter of freaks. In the town of Anderson in that lively commonwealth, lives one John Reville, an enterprising and hard-working baker. It was Reville's good or bad fortune, as he looks at it, to woo and win Mary Hastings, esteemed by many of the youths of Indiana. When the engagement of the baker to Mary was announced there was much anger among the girl's less favored suitors.

Henry Jameson, who had felt certain of Mary's affections, did not content himself with mere words. He lay in wait for Reville on the night of January 30, and when the lover left the house of his fiancée Jameson rushed on him and, pressing a pistol to Reville's heart, pulled the trigger. That would have been the end of Reville had he been like other people. But it had happened during a recent illness his heart had shifted from the left to the right side, so that the bullet that was to have ended his life sped harmlessly between his seventh and eighth ribs, and to-day he is about again almost as well as ever, and preparing for the wedding. As for Jameson, he is in jail, thanking his stars, now that his jealousy has cooled down, that nature helped him to escape the gallows.

Almost as queer is the case of Marion Elmore, of Chicago. Marion is a young woman of 19, and is employed as a saleswoman in a dry goods store. No one ever suspected that there was anything wrong with her heart until the other day, when she underwent an examination by the medical examiner of a life insurance company. The medical man found that Marion had been born with a proper enough heart, but it had gradually worked its way over from the left to the right side, being located now close to the ribs, in the place where the liver ought to be.

Miss Hattie Benedict has a heart that for months past has been in a state of transit, moving from its normal position toward the right side and up and down and then back again. Miss Benedict lives in Marengo, Wayne county, this state. Four months ago she fell into a trance that lasted until a few days ago, when she practically regained consciousness. Dr. William Hubbell, who had her in charge, said the first words she uttered were:

"I am alive. Please do not bury me." Then she passed her hand to her right side and declared that her "heart" was hurting her. Dr. Hubbell made an examination and found that the heart had shifted fully four inches to the right and two inches upward. The doctor was by no means surprised, as the heart had been guilty of similar eccentricity three times during the trance condition. Each time the organ went back to its old position, and Dr. Hubbell declares there is no danger to be apprehended. He can give no reason for the strange phenomenon.

Elmer Harris' heart began to change two years ago. Harris lives in Minneapolis, and the doctors there have been keeping close watch on him. They say that every three months Harris' heart has moved half an inch with absolute regularity in a diagonal line toward the lower right side of the body. The movement seems to take place in jumps that occur toward the end of every third month. When the migration is going to stop is a problem that is filling the unfortunate owner of the heart with much uneasiness. His general health does not seem to have been affected, and he says he feels no pain. He never knows that his heart has shifted until the doctors tell him so after each move.

Here in New York city Dr. Cyrus Edson has a queer case in one of the patients whom he has treated for consumption with his famous remedy. The patient had lost one lung, the right, before he came to Dr. Edson, and had been given up as a hopeless case by a half dozen physicians. Dr. Edson himself had but little hope of effecting a cure, as the left lung had been attacked. But he gave the patient the usual hypodermic injections, and to everyone's surprise the man recovered.

To-day he is apparently as well as ever he was, though he has but one lung. But a strange thing has happened. In accordance with nature's usual law of compensation by which one organ that has to perform the functions of two is correspondingly strengthened, the patient's remaining lung has been very much enlarged. So great has this enlargement become that the heart has been displaced, and now beats about the middle of the man's body.—N. Y. Journal.

Evidently Quadrumanous.
A suggestion of a confirmation of the Darwinian theory is conveyed by the following colloquy:
Mrs. McGuire—Is it sick ye are, Mrs. Murphy?
Mrs. Murphy—Indeed, I'm that same. I wuz walkin' the fure wid a foot ache all night, an' I co'd cowlid in the pains o' my feet.—N. Y. Herald.

FAMINE IN INDIA.

Pressure of the People on the Soil and the Labor Problem.

The scarcity in northern India is assuming a threatening aspect. The season has not sufficiently advanced to warrant an estimate of the dimensions to which the distress may attain, nor is it yet possible to distinguish between alarmist rumors and well-founded forecasts. A calculation brought by the last mail puts the probable cost of relief in four districts alone of the northwest at 1,750,000 rupees, and the expenditure required to deal with the whole threatened area at 5,000,000. Such calculations lie for the moment beyond the range of criticism. But they make us realize, what for some years we have been allowed to forget, that widespread scarcity forms a contingency with which the Indian government must constantly prepare to reckon.

It is exactly 30 years ago since the Bengal famine of 1866 rudely awakened the British conscience to the darker side of our progress in India. That progress, whether gauged by the increase of the people or the educational influences which have been brought to bear upon them, is one of the most wonderful facts in the history of the world during the present century. But it is a triumph of British administration for which the Indian peasant has at intervals to pay a terrible price. We have removed the old Asiatic check upon the population by more rapid stages than we have created the modern European safeguards against the results of its accelerated growth. The ancient checks upon the Indian population were the sword, pestilence and famine. The sword has ceased out of the land; pestilence is encountered by a vast system of medical aid; famine is mitigated by an equally vast system of relief. But as famine, in the appalling sense of the word, has become rarer, partial scarcities have grown more frequent. Throughout large areas of India the pressure of the people on the soil is so intense that even a partial failure of the crops means severe suffering to millions, and serious failure produces a scarcity which taxes all the resources of the government to prevent it deepening into famine.—London Times.

Parsnip and Salsify Fritters.
Wash, scrape and boil parsnips till tender, and mash fine when done; to each pint allow two tablespoonfuls of butter, salt and pepper to taste; add a beaten egg; stir all together over the fire a few minutes, let cool, shape into balls, dip into egg, then into crumbs, and fry in deep hot fat. Salsify or oyster plant fritters are made in the same way, only when boiling add two tablespoons of vinegar to the water. Boiled parsnips, dipped in batter and fried in hot fat are excellent, and boiled, cut in halves lengthwise, buttered and peppered, they form a nice accompaniment to steak.—Boston

Don't Throw Eggs.

Twice since he has been here the colored medicine vender, calling himself Dr. Gilliam, has been egged while giving his concerts at night on the public square. This is very bad behavior on the part of the egg throwers—if they do not like the concerts they can stay away from them. It is not gentlemanly to throw eggs at anyone. The doctor swore out warrants against some parties and had them before the Mayor to day, but failed to show any proof at all against them.

NOT LIKE IT USED TO BE.

We could see the pitcher very well, But not the man at the bat! Through the hole we found in the left-field fence. But we never minded that, A part we saw, and a part we heard, And as regards the rest, We used the imagination heaven Has given so boys, and guessed.

The sun beat hotly upon my neck, And I knelt in a posture there That would break my neck to attempt to-day, But, of course, I didn't care, There were two men out, a runner at first, Score tied, and upon my ear, There fell "Strike two!" from the umpire, In tones like a fog-horn clear.

Then a dandy drive that center muffed— The sun shone in his face— And I asked my surging, clamorous heart;

"Will he try to make second base?" I saw the fielder when he threw, The hurtling ball described, And I heard the coacher hoarsely yell To the runner there to slide, And that was all I saw or heard, I was swiftly lifted thence; Another boy had claimed his turn At the hole in the left-field fence.

As I sit in the grandstand here to-day The conviction comes to me That the game as a whole in far from what

Its fragments used to be, A stated sight by indulgence dulled Years for the contenance Compelled by circumstances like that Of the hole in the left-field fence. —From the Detroit Tribune.
