Base Ball.

New York, June 28--New York opened up on Nops in the first inning today and, without an error, two singles and a home run by Davis, made enough runs to win the game from the Orioles. Pcad was substituted in the second inning, and the Giants got only one hit off his delivery. A hard inshoot hit Jennings on the head in the first, and after he had completed the inning he is seriously injured. Doyle was laid low by a bouncer going through his hands in the first inning, closing his left eye. Attendance 8,500. Score New York, 4; Baltimore, 2.

Philadelphia, June 28--The Phillies defeated Washington this afternoon in a well played and exciting game. The visitors played superbly in the field and also hit well, but not so sequentially as did the locals. The hitting of Delehanty was the particular feature. Attendance 2,471. Score Philadelphia, 7; Washington, 6.

Cleveland, June 28--While the visitors were unable to hit Young, the Indians pounded Killen freely. That tells the story of today's game. Attendance 1,200. Score Cleveland, 12; Pittsburg, 2.

Boston, June 28--With the game apparently safe for Brooklyn in the ninth, the crowd so rattled Daub that he gave three Bostonians their bases on balls, and singles by Duffy and Stivett's brought in the necessary runs. The playing of Long and Collins for the home team and of Griffin and Jones for the visitors were the features. Attendance 3,500. Score Boston, 9; Brooklyn, 8.

Chicago, June 28--The Colonels played all around the Colts today and won an easy game. Both pitchers were very wild, but Evans steadied down after making his gifts, while Korwan was hit with men on bases. Arson made a clean two baser in the first after Everitt and McCormick had singled, but Sheridan called it a foul, and in the argument that followed the captain was ordered to the bench. Attendance 1,100. Score Chicago, 2; Louisville, 7.

St. Louis, June 28--St. Louis Cincinnati game postponed on account of rain.

New York, June 28--Short stop Jennings, of Baltimore, who was hit on the head by a ball by Pitcher Rusie, in the base ball game today, is said to be suffering from concussion of the brain. Doyle, of Baltimore, was at first base, and was playing off the base. Rusie made a motion as though to throw the ball to Clark, New York's first baseman. Turning quickly, however, he faced the batsman, Jennings, and delivered a swift inshoot, which struck the Baltimorean above the left ear. Jennings turned completely around, then sank to his knees. Players from both sides rushed to his aid, and after a while he recovered sufficiently to take his base. He succeeded in tallying a run. In the next inning he went to his place at shortstop and played through the inning. Then he was taken with nausea, a physician was called from the grand stand and advised him to leave the field. He wanted to continue to play, but was forced to leave and went to the club house crying bitterly.

STATE NEWS.

The State Treasurer has brought suit against Stewart Bros., State Printers, for money they gouged the State out of.

Saturday night a negro tried to get in the window of a Durham young lady's room. The young lady sent three pistol balls after the scoundrel. He was arrested a little later.

It is asserted that the most oppressive law of the last legislature is the revenue act--particularly that part which makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by a heavy fine or imprisonment, not to pay taxes before the first superior court after the first Monday in September.

The Seaboard Air Line Company is renewing the track of the Carolina Central road between Charlotte and Rutherfordton. The old rail is being replaced with heavy steel rail and ten miles of track have already been relaid. June Marriages.

During the month of June the Register of Deeds issued twelve marriage licenses, seven for white and five for colored couples. This is three more than were issued in June of last year, and five more than in June, 1895.

"How Now?"

L. T. MANN.

I simply rise to ask if anyone can tell me how it has come to pass that preachers conceive themselves at liberty to address a public assembly in a vein of low innuendo, illbred ribaldry, and positive, downright vulgarity.

It is a shameful fact, that public deliverances from both pulpit and platform are frequently but the opening of the intellectual and moral charnel-house of the speakers, hidden life, and the reclamation and bringing to view of some carrion field of past character, out of which issues an awful stench, disgusting to refined sensibilities, and sickening to decent moral taste.

Of all men we think preachers ought to be purest. In the vast realm of truth apprehended by the human mind, that part of it regarded as peculiarly the field of the preacher is the purest and most ennobling of all its provinces. If so, how then can he come from this field bearing to his hearers nothing but garbage, that reeks with its rottenness, repels with its stench, or attracts only to involve and develop all that is vile, and to perpetuate its hateful contagion of filth.

If preachers persist in thinking and talking as they please, regardless of every principle of propriety, then decent men, and especially decent women, will be compelled to say with Bishop Duncan: "Thank God I am not called to hear you." Moreover, the good women of this land owe it to themselves as a matter of self-respect, to leave, in a body, any public assembly in which their modesty is affronted and their sex insulted by the low, coarse, language and illustrations, that frequently corrupt the sermon and mar the services of God's house.

For shame that such writing as the above should be called for. The time has come when something must be done to check this tendency of the time. I suggest that while philanthropists are endowing chairs of history, e. c., some good woman, as an expression of her resentment, and as a means of her protection, select one of our church colleges, and in it, endow a chair of Gentility, —written with a big G. We need gentlemen in the ministry as well as scholars. We have some, but want more.

Suggestions on the Question of Buying Tobacco at the Barn Door.

There is one practice that has become almost universal in this territory indulged in by the warehousemen in which it seems from zandry complaints we hear from many farmers reform is desirable. It is a practice which we suppose it would not be very difficult to correct. This needed reform is in the matter of warehousemen sending men direct to the barn door to buy the farmer's tobacco instead of waiting for it to come to market to be sold direct on its merits on the floor.

This custom of buying in the country has been going on for several years, though at the outset of the warehouse business, and for many years thereafter, this was not the case, nor is it the case on some markets now for the warehousemen to purchase any tobacco in the country.

If all tobacco was sold by the producer on the warehouse floor more uniformity of price to the farmer would prevail and he would be the gainer, besides it would be more satisfactory to all interested in the aggregate. One reason that it is objectionable is that the same tobacco the dealers buy of the farmer at the barn door is put on the floor and the price is pushed to a higher price by said buyer than the farmer who did not sell in the country and put his tobacco on the floor is able to get for his sold the same day, and this naturally creates dissatisfaction.

We think that much complaint would be hushed up if tobacco was again sold in every instance direct by the farmer on the warehouse floor. Such a course it strikes us would redound to the benefit of farmers and warehousemen, and indeed to the dealers generally. Of course concert of action on the part of all warehousemen in this territory would be required to accomplish the result suggested.

We throw out these suggestions for what they are worth, believing at the same time that it would be to the interest of all to bring about a reform in this matter.—Oxford Ledger.

A BAD PRACTICE.

The Charlotte Observer of Sunday refers at length to a matter from which every paper in North Carolina suffers more or less, but which affects, probably, the daily newspapers most—the practice indulged in so extensively of borrowing subscribers' papers; of habitually using the property of another and frequently to the annoyance and inconvenience of the owner.

The practice sometimes works two ways against the paper. Some who borrow would subscribe if they couldn't borrow, and once in a while a paying subscriber, one who appreciates the paper and is really anxious to have it in his home, becomes so worn out and disgusted with the borrowing habit that he stops taking it himself in order to get rid of the borrower.

The Observer evidently thinks the confirmed borrower a hard nut, for it says it "despairs of its ability to say anything which will pierce the hide of the newspaper borrower and it has no appeal in the matter except to its subscribers," and adds:

"The good will of a person who will persistently beat upon you is hardly worth the having, and the man who subscribes and pays for a newspaper, like a man, ought not hesitate to deny to anybody the right to read his paper before he and his family do, nor hesitate to tear it up when they have finished with it. We frankly avow a certain amount of personal feeling in this matter, being aware that those people who curse this paper most generously are persons who never subscribe for it nor buy a copy of it, but borrow it from one year's end to another from better men than themselves."

From our own experience, we are prepared to endorse as a chunk of solid truth the statement of our contemporary that "those people who curse this paper most generously are persons who never subscribe for it nor buy a copy." Fortunately, the animus of this class is frequently so apparent that the purpose to injure the paper falls flat or proves a boomerang and rebounds upon the source of abuse.

The Observer concludes its remarks upon the subject as follows:

"It is much the habit of supercilious deadbeats to turn up their noses at the State papers and wonder why North Carolina cannot have great papers such as other States have. We have no words to waste on the deadbeats, but to honest men who pay for this paper we wish to say that North Carolina will never have a great paper until subscribers cease lending such as we already have. This will bring the sponges to terms and they will perforce become newspaper subscribers; and this will help them, too, for they will then become more self-respecting and better citizens."—Winston Sentinel.

A Shrewd Swindler.

One of the shrewdest swindlers that ever struck Richmond county, says the Rockingham Index, was here for a few days in May, got over $1,100 out of the county, took his departure and has not been seen or heard of since that time. He is badly wanted by most of the school committeemen of the county and in case he can be found things will be made rather hot for him.

But J. D. Abbot, the man they're after, has got his money and it is hardly probable that he will want to renew his acquaintanceship in the county of Richmond. Abbot claimed to represent a first class chart house and went to see the various school committees. He showed them a very good chart and sold some of them at $37.50 and in payment therefor he took vouchers upon the county treasurer for the money. In other instances Abbot asked the committeemen to just sign their names to a piece of paper as an endorsement for the commissioners. By some slick means he worked most all the districts and it is suggested that he resorted to forgery in several instances. The sheriff did not want to pay Abbot the money but the vouchers were in proper shape and correctly signed and he could not do otherwise. Abbot has his $1,100 but not charts have reached the deluded purchasers and it is not thought by many that he is anxious to deliver them. It has been several weeks since he took the orders and got his money but the present whereabouts of Abbot and the charts is an unsolved mystery.

Shaving Statistics.

The statistician has been at it again. The average man, he has discovered, has 20 square inches of beard on his face. Ergo, if a man with 20 square inches of face shaves every morning, he will scrape over 7,300 square inches in a year. Accordingly, if he shaves from the time he is 20 until he is 70 years old, he will have shaved 365,000 square inches.

The Prince of Wales has lent his countenance a new hat, which as described is none other than the grandfather's hat of this country; and the swell youths who would have scorned to wear that venerated headgear while it lacked authority will now frantically don it when decked with a London label—because it's English, you know!

Instead of saying "papa" and "mamma" when she spoke to her father and mother, little Pauline said "Clara" and "Abraham," for her mother called her father "Abraham" and he called her "Clara." One day Pauline's mother tried to break her little daughter of this habit. "You must call me 'mamma' and your father 'papa,'" she said; "not 'Clara' and 'Abraham.'" The little girl tried and tried, until her eyes were full of tears. "I do it," she said at last. "Mamma and papa, not Clara and Abraham!" Then she came dancing up, proud of her new learning. "Tan I tell Abraham 'bout it when he tomes home?" she asked.

HOW DAVY CROCKETT DIED.

Not Davy of the Alamo, but His Nephew, at Cimarron, N. M.

"It was in the summer of 1877 that I first visited New Mexico to inspect the Moreno mine in the interest of a syndicate of New York capitalists," said C. J. Eixon, a mine expert and mineralogist. "Awaiting the arrival of certain parties I was to meet, I staid at Cimarron, at the famous Lambert's hotel. I don't know whether it is now in existence or not, but then, considering its environment, it was, so far as beds and the table went, a remarkably good house to stop at. But there were other features about it that were rather startling to a man of quiet tastes. The landlord, with something of pride, pointed out the bullet holes that riddled the walls and ceiling of his barroom and informed me that 25 men had been killed in that room—seven in a single year. He told me of some of the orgies enacted there when the cowboys came in from the round up with a realism that made me glad that I had arrived at a time when they were expected to be out on the range. I exhausted the sights of the town—a little half American, half Mexican settlement built along the Cimarron river—in one brief stroll and spent the rest of the first day there with a novel in the barroom, which was also the hotel office.

"Two cow men rode into town early in the day and, in company with one or two of the townsfolk, paid pretty constant attention to Lambert's bar. My host took occasion to point out one of them and tell me in a whisper that he was Davy Crockett, who had come to New Mexico from Texas. He was a nephew of the Davy celebrated in song and story who ended his days in the massacre at the Alamo.

"He did most of the business when the three negro soldiers were shot in this town last year," said Lambert. "He and Jim Lanier, the man that's with him, had to go out and live with the Utes and Apaches until the affair blew over. No, they never were brought to trial, couldn't get a grand jury in Colfax county to indict them. The sheriff holds warrants against them, but it would be as much as his life is worth to try to arrest them. You can see how nice and peaceable they are when nothing comes up to irritate them."

"I looked with interest at Crockett, a little, wiry fellow with a thin lipped, determined mouth and a keen, unquailing eye, but in no way unpleasant of expression or manner. He and his companion were typical cowboys in dress. They drank steadily and quietly all day, the only effect of the liquor they took being to make them listless and depressed.

little more jocular and talkative. From time to time the name of Reinhart, the sheriff, came up, and I could see that there was no good feeling between them and him.

"Evening came, and at about 10 o'clock I went up stairs to my room, leaving the two cow men and their friends still drinking at the bar. I did not go at once to bed, but sat by my window enjoying the beauty of the night, with its soft, cool air, clear sky and brilliant stars. I had begun to undress when the two cow men came out from the tavern and mounted their horses. I heard them tell some one that they were going out to their camp on the mesa to start on a cow hunt next day. Each had a little harmonicon—mouth organ, it is often called—and they rode down the main street of Cimarron side by side, playing in unison a sentimental tune which was pleasant to hear.

"I had turned from the window, when bang, bang, bang—bang, bang—bang, came the sound of a volley of shotguns from somewhere down the road, then a cry and a rush of horses' feet. Two horses were dashing out of town like runaways. On one was a swaying man, who still kept in his saddle; the other was riderless, as I learned afterward. Davy Crockett lay dead in the road, shot full of slugs and buckshot. A party, evidently learning the route the two cow men would take, had lain for them in ambush behind a fence. Crockett fell dead to the ground with the sound of the volley, but his companion, desperately wounded, managed to cling to his horse, and the animal took him out of danger and carried him to the cattle camp. He eventually recovered from his wounds.

"It was generally said in Cimarron that the attacking party was a sheriff's posse, headed by Reinhart. I don't know that the statement ever was denied, for, if true, he might have been acting within the limits of his authority. I knew enough not to mix or meddle in Cimarron feuds or politics and not to be inquisitive. I never heard that any pretense of investigation was ever made as to this carefully premeditated killing, which was an incident of my introduction into New Mexican life."—New York
