FALL SELLING.

Putting it Strong.

And why not? When the merchandise and prices will back up the statements made concerning them, we have every right to "Put it Strong." There is nothing wrong in emphasizing excellence when the emphasis is within the bounds of truth, when facts are given without misrepresentation.

Our "Ad" States Facts.

Just facts, something well worth remembering. Counters and tables piled high. Stacks and stacks of mens, boys and youths clothing. Every place rambled and packed with shoes. We can show you to your entire satisfaction. Counter room needed in our dress goods department. Selling must continue to relieve the pressure. Come early before the best things are gone. All the latest styles and weaves in dress goods. Agents for Standard Patterns.

RECOLLECTIONS OF GREENVILLE IN MY BOYHOOD.

BY T. C. DAVIS.

The burning of the Masonic lodge on the 25th ult. came soon on our efforts to recall some incidents and associations of the long past in connection with it. The building was probably seventy-five years old. I knew and can recall every door and window in it. The tears of the dear children at its destruction was a fitting requiem.

On the lot adjoining and once a part of the lodge lot lived Mrs. Catherine Randolph, widow of Dr. Jesse Randolph. Her maiden name was Elliot, she was related to the Elliots of Elizabeth City from whence she came.

On the other side of the street and immediately in front of Mrs. Randolph, Mrs. Susan Johnson lived. Johnson is one of the old names in Greenville. Holland Johnson, which was also the name of our townsman, Mrs. Johnson's husband, represented the county in the Legislature in 1795. And our Mr. and Mrs. Johnson were the parents of my old friend and school fellow, Jack, who has recently died. He was a disciple of both Nimrod and Walton and fish and fowl must have had a jubilee when they heard he would trouble them no more. "May he rest in peace and may light perpetual shine upon him."

Of the good ladies just mentioned one of them did a thriving millinery business, while the other was a fashionable mantua maker, and it requires no imagination nor the assistance of a contemporary to prove that theirs was the particular locality where ladies most did congregate. R. & J. (a familiar contraction) were the particular friends of all the ladies, and singly, in twos, in fours and in troops, "at all hours of the day and in all sorts of weather," they were sought and consulted in matters of taste and in all the ramification of the toilet and the act of dressing. That gown that pretty Sally Smith and the hat that graceful Patty Jones would wear to church next Sunday might there be seen, and engagements and marriages not announced as they are now, with eyes and ears wide open, it was frequently possible to forecast, generally to the satisfaction of the public always kindly interested and cruelly kept in the dark if possible. Book clubs, patriotic societies, and the like, were not in vogue in their day. Big social functions were not frequent, and conversation parties, through the influence of sober sided religious people, were for a time substituted for the ball and the cotillion. But our mothers and sisters, always resourceful, doubtless had a good time, notwithstanding, and sometimes visited R. & J. in white apron and fly bonnet, spending the afternoon untrammelled by the presence of the sterner sex, and limited by womanly delicacy only discussed their rights and privileges in the light of law and morality as it appeared to them. These are in part the reasons why Mesdames Randolph & Johnson were notable in their day and generation.

On the lot adjoining Mrs. Randolph my father lived, and it was here I spent a good part of my boyhood. The dwelling was un-

Say, Jack

That's a swell looking Suit you have on--mind telling me where you got it? "I got it at Frank Wilson's." I'd like to have one about like it--mind telling me what it cost? "Of course not, $15.00. Great Scott! I would have guessed $25.00. Are there any left? "Yes, but you had better get one quick for they will all be closed out very soon--everybody likes them."

The above conversation was heard on the street yesterday.

pretensions but comfortable, and before the store was built on the corner the front of the lot was a large flower garden and shrubbery, in which my mother with gauntlets, hoe and shears spent happy moments trimming, training and talking to her pets.

"No roses ever bloomed like hers,
No lillies were so sweet
And pansies, jessamine, mignonette,
Ran riot at her feet."

My father died forty-four years ago, my mother four years earlier. The family were scattered and the old home passed over to strangers.

About the centre of the lot in front of our house stood the old academy, a good sized, two-story building about 30x60, at one end of which was a belfry with a bell not over large, but with which the boys woke the echoes three or four times a day, greatly to the annoyance of people with weak nerves, and if Old Nick is still in existence his sonorous voice must long since have been pounded to a leaden clatter. The academy was built, I have been told, for a famous teacher named Ellenwood, who was a poet of some pretensions, and one or two of his poems were to be found in a school reader of that day. He was also a great chirographer and could write legibly the Lord's prayer in a space the size of a dime and it was he who executed in chalk the large oomas, colons, semi-colons, &c., on the unpainted ceiling around the room in the first story, which could be plainly seen when the house was torn down, and must have been there sixty years or more. I do not know the names of his immediate successors, but there was the eccentric but talented Lovejoy, who after remaining in Greenville several years went to Raleigh and established the first military school in the State. Then a young man named Stodard came from the north, a brother of the author of the Latin Grammar, and being in delicate health ate scuppernon grapes imprudently and died within a month. John Selby probably succeeded him. And then Harry Dimmock, afterwards editor the "North State Whig," the contemporary of the "Standard," "Raleigh Register" and "Fayetteville Observer." C. J. O'Hagan succeeded him (peace to his ashes). Then came Judge Warren before he studied law. Then Jas. Murray, a pains-taking, faithful teacher, who was succeeded by D. R. Wallace, now a distinguished citizen of Texas.

The Greenville Market.

Mr. M. A. Allen, Secretary of the Greenville Tobacco Board of Trade, gives us the following figures of sales on the market this season: In August there were sold 1,653,694 pounds at an average price of $9.10; in September 2,665,169 pounds at an average of $8.57; in October 2,087,897 pounds at an average of $11.46. For the three months the sales aggregate 6,406,760 pounds at an average of $9.51. There may be some markets that sell a little more tobacco than Greenville, but we do not believe any can show so good an average.

Lady Managers.

Among the ladies named by Governor Aycock to represent North Carolina at the Charleston exposition, we notice the names of Mrs. T. J. Jarvis, of Greenville, Mrs. E. R. Cotten, of Bruce, and Miss Elizabeth Laughinghouse, of Grimesland.

Ready for Work.

The Greenville Steam Laundry, Kirkland & Davis proprietors, will start up work tomorrow. The machinery has arrived and was put in position today. Both members of the firm are experienced in laundry business and are prepared to turn out the very best work. The laundry is located in the Perkins building on Fourth street.

Meeting Continues.

Large congregations heard Rev. C. A. Jenkins in the Baptist church at both services Sunday, the church being especially crowded at night. His subject at the morning service was "Christ the Advocate" and at night "The second coming of Christ." Both were excellent sermons and considerable interest was manifested.

The meeting will continue this week. Service tonight at 7:15, sermon at 7:30.

Died of Yellow Chill.

Mr. Theodore L. Greene, who lived near Williamston, in Martin county, came to Greenville last Thursday evening to sell a lot of tobacco. Soon after arriving he had a yellow chill, and took a room at the Quinn House. He continued to grow worse and died Sunday morning a little past 3 o'clock. The remains were taken to his late home Sunday.

Mr. Greene leaves a wife and several children. He was one of the leading farmers of his county and a good man. All care and attention possible was given him during his sickness here.

Dr. O. H. Shinn, Universalist, will preach in the Christian church tonight and tomorrow night. His subject for tonight is "The pure and undefiled religion."
