An Elephant Hung.

New York, November 8.—Mandarin, an elephant of the Barnum and Bailey circus was hung by strangulation tonight in his cage on the main deck of the steamship Minneapolis of the Atlantic Transport Line. A two inch hawser was fastened to a drum of a "winch" engine. The engines were started at the same and ran slowly at first, until the hawser was taught about the animals neck, when the speed was increased and the hawser quickly tightened. In a minute and a half, the hind legs sank to the floor of the cage and the elephant was unconscious. Just eight minutes after the engines had been started, Mandarin was pronounced dead.

The cage containing the body was then hoisted from the ship by a crane loaded on a barge, in which it was towed about twenty miles out to sea and sunk, the cage being weighted with about 5,000 pounds of old railroad iron. Mandarin was the largest elephant in captivity at the time of his death and had been with the Barnum and Bailey circus for twenty-four years. He weighed five tons and stood nine feet ten inches high. The elephant had recently become unmanageable rendering his destruction necessary.

A Republican Scarecrow.

In an interview printed in the Chicago Record-Herald Governor Cummins, republican of Iowa, referring to the prediction that terrible results would come from tariff agitation, said: "That is a scarecrow up in the corn fields. It is a device always resorted to by those who want the tariff treated as a sacred fetish. The menace to this country today is not tariff change, but the temptations to reckless stock watering, which avaricious men find in their ability to create monopolies in production. We cannot avert disaster by falling on our knees and worshipping a tariff schedule. The truth is that men who are enjoying the fruits of monopoly are daily laughing in their sleeves at the fatuity with which the people permit them to plunder under the form of law."

Advertisers who get their copy in first will get the best positions in the Special Thanksgiving Issue of the Daily Reflector. Eight pages, one thousand five hundred circulation guaranteed.

A terrible boiler explosion occurred at Mr. F. N. Hawkins' saw mill, about three miles from Dover, yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Mr. Hawkins was scalded about the face and struck by a piece of the boiler. Mr. Henry Tucker was very seriously and perhaps fatally injured. Mr. George Gray was also slightly hurt. Medical attention was had from Kinston. Mr. Hawkins says the engine was blown some distance from the mill, that it passed over his head going at frightful speed. It is not known what caused the explosion.—Kinston News.

MISS CARROLL THE WINNER.

F. C. Harding Presents the Gold Medal for the Best Essay on North Carolina History.

At the meeting of the Teachers' Association Saturday prizes that had been offered for the best essays on North Carolina history were presented. F. C. Harding presented the first prize, which had been won by Miss Ethel May Carroll, as follows:

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I rejoice with my young friend, Miss Carroll, in the distinction she has so recently won in her new and almost untried field of North Carolina literature.

I am glad that the good and wise statesman who has so generously offered this medal has limited you to some subject of North Carolina history, for no subject is more interesting or more worthy of your consideration than that of your native state, her history, her people, her resources and her possibilities. There is no state in the union whose early history is marked by a purer patriotism, more unswerving devotion to liberty or greater opposition to every form of tyranny than North Carolina.

Our forefathers have wrought out the fabric of a proud and noble history, but how little of that early history has been given to the world.

While Virginia, on one side has, had the labors of her Jefferson and her Marshall, and the classic genius of her Wirt, Campbell, Howe and others—while South Carolina on the other has employed the philosophic pen of her Ramsey, her Dayton, her Semmes, and others—North Carolina, earlier settled in point of time, full of glorious examples of patriotism and chivalric daring, has been sadly neglected by her sons and daughters.

Let not the heroic deeds of our forefathers be penned by foreign hands. The foreigner who writes her history may produce a beautiful composition, faultless in style, accurate in delineation and full of sound logic and wise conclusions, but he cannot enter into the sympathies and feelings of our people. What can he know, who has never been warned by the same sun, lingered among the same scenes, listened to the same tales in childhood, pledged to the same interests in manhood, enlivened by the same hopes and depressed by the same fears that go to make up the life of North Carolina.

As in portrait painting so it is in painting characters in history. Some foreign artist may catch some bold outline or prominent feature, but he cannot hope to delineate the fleeting shades of expression or the almost imperceptible play of features which are only revealed by familiar observation and daily intercourse.

Who would look to a Frenchman for a good work on England, or to an Englishman for a faithful history of France? What foreign hand like Herodotus or Thucydides could have painted the achievements of the Greek? Who like Livy or Tacitus could have painted the shifting character of the Roman? Had the Greeks left their story to the Romans or the Romans entrusted their history to the Greeks, how different it would read today.

The proudest and noblest of North Carolina history is as yet an unwritten history, and of that which has been reduced to record how small a portion has been written by native North Carolinians. Williams, whose history was published in 1812, was a native of Pennsylvania and died in New York city. Martin, whose history was published in 1829, was a native of France and died in Louisiana.

Let the sons and daughters of North Carolina perpetuate in song and story the brave and heroic deeds of our ancestors who "Stood in the battle's red blast And flashed to the future the deeds of the past."

My young friend, I congratulate you upon the success you have achieved so early in life. Let not the distinction you have won be the end of a beautiful beginning. Use well every opportunity, equip yourself sufficiently and then go forth and tell to a listening world North Carolina's unwritten history.

Tell them that it was upon North Carolina's soil that the flag of England was first unfurled upon the American continent.

Tell them that in the placid waters that wash the sandy banks of North Carolina rested the first Anglo-Saxon anchor.

Tell them that upon North Carolina's soil, within the sound of the sea, came the first cry of Virginia Dare, the first sweet notes of American liberty.

Tell them that the first manifesto against the encroachments of English power, the elective franchise and the interference of trade was made in North Carolina a hundred years before the Declaration of Independence at Philadelphia.

There are some events which are engraved upon the heart of the nation—of these is our national birthday, the 4th of July 1776. But the 20th of May, 1775, more than a year in advance of this glorious period belongs to the Old North State. It is one of her reserved rights, and one she will never cede to the Federal Government.

Long before the famous tea party in Boston harbor, Hugh Waddell, with a determined band of Tar Heel boys, marched to Brunswick, before which town was anchored the British ship laden with stamped paper, terrified the captain, seized the small lifeboat of the ship, mounted it on wheels, erected a mast and hoisted the American flag and proceeded to Wilmington, seized the stamp master, carried him to the public market place, and forced him to take a solemn oath never again to execute the duties of stamp master. He was then released and the people, giving three cheers for American liberty, quietly and quickly dispersed. Here is an act of North Carolinians worthy of all Grecian or Roman fame.

The famous tea party in Boston Harbor, where a number of citizens, disguised as Indians, boarded a British ship, loaded with tea and threw its cargo in the sea, has been celebrated by every writer of our nation's history "and pealed and chimed on every tongue of fame." But here is an act of the old North State, another page of unwritten history hardly known beyond the borders of our own state.

The bravery and daring heroism of the men of 1776 can never be surpassed save only by the bravery of their sons and the loyalty of their daughters in the days of 1865.

Is Virginia proud of her numerous battle grounds? If she is tell her that every one of her hundred battlefields is paved with the bones of North Carolina heroes.

Tell them that Robert Lee, the foremost warrior of them all, ordinarily unmoved by sentiment or emotion, beholding his columns moved down and retreating before the deadly fire of the enemy, gazed with wonder at the steady ranks of the Tar Heel troops, as they advanced upon the enemy, and exclaimed, "God bless Speaking of Overcoats Here's a Prize.

Come in and see it—here's a picture of one our best sellers—doesn't show the cloth and the trimmings—doesn't show anything, really, except the style. Isn't it swagger? It is cut long just as the picture shows, and is made with peaked lapels, silk velvet collar; lined with with serviceable Italian cloth; cut with no seam in back, which gives the coat that loose, swagger effect from the shoulder down; full around bottom of skirt. We have also a complete line of blue and black Kersey and Oxfords 40 and 42 inches long. But this extra long swell coat is the thing for the young fellows who want to be smartly dressed—there it is on the right. Come in and take a look at our other styles; we like to show them. All prices.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1902.

Somebody has gone and discovered that "the basis of American society is wealth." Will somebody please climb down the well and see what holds up the water?

We shall miss the morning visits of the Kinston News, the paper having been discontinued. The editors wished to give more attention to job work than getting out a daily permitted. Best wishes, gentlemen, whether you are grinding out circulars or sausage meat. Should you decide to come back sometime you will find the latch string on your side of the door.

In one of the western senatorial districts ex-Judge A. C. Avery was the Democratic nominee. The contest between him and his opponent was very close, once reported as a tie. When the canvassing board was making up the returns, it was found that one precinct had not been reported. Leaving out the returns of that precinct gave the election to Judge Avery by a small majority, while if the vote of that precinct had been counted his opponent would have had a small majority. Learning the facts in the case, and that he was declared elected on a technicality, Judge Avery refused to accept the certificate of election. There is yet some honor in politics, and Judge Avery does himself credit in refusing the certificate under such circumstances.

Ordinarily, one would never suspect that the venerable fathers of this staid and respectable village ever allowed a facetious play of the imagination to mark any official proceeding; and it is only since last meeting the public is allowed to share the secret that the Board harbors a humorist who bids fair to out-mark Twain and out-fable Ade. The first intimation of this fact allowed to creep out appears in the report of the street committee, whose phrase, FAIRLY GOOD CONDITION, when dropped on the sensitive auditory of the average citizen invariably produces convulsions. One can readily understand the immediate effect of this report upon the Board: how the smile that floated around the room passed the limit of elasticity and burst forth in a luminosity that made the light of the nearest street lamp resemble an ink spot on the firmament; how the cemetery committee leaned against the wall as the only substantial support for such a weight of mirth; how the Mayor would fain have brought order out of chaos, but durst not for fear of strangulation; and how the Board's homeward course, after an impromptu adjournment, brought sleepy heads to windows in wonder of mirth that smote silence like a giant hammering on a porter house steak.

Verily, our city fathers know a good thing when they hear it.

A Turtle Story.

A Logan county man has just discovered that he has been running a turtle ranch unawares. The Kuttawa times says:

A few miles northeast of town is a very fertile piece of land that was known many years ago as Shelby pond. It is said that a long time ago snakes thrived there and hundreds of them could be seen among the weeds and grass around the margin of the pond. The land is reasonably dry now, having been drained for cultivation. The land belongs to Mr. C. W. Jones, who, in digging a stock pond near the outlet of the original pond, using plow and scraper, unearthed large turtles in great numbers and when the artificial pond filled with water and softened the bottom and sides, the place was visited and 180 turtles were counted around on the bank at one time. These had been imbedded while the pond existed and when drying up they delved into the mud and soft earth which hardened upon them and thus imprisoned them for many years, and until their rescuers resurrected them. They were found six to seven feet in the ground and some were over two feet across the back. It's not so much of a mystery how they got there as how they survived so long.

Poor Choice Either Way.

"When passing through a certain section of a certain State once," said a man who has traveled much, "a friend and I stopped at the house of a neighbor for tea. Soon after we had sat down at the table the housekeeper looked toward us and asked whether we wanted long or short sweetening in our coffee. As she asked that question I looked toward my friend, and he looked at me. I nudged him in the side, meaning that I wanted him to speak. He said that he would take long sweetening. With that she put her finger in a cup of molasses, put the same finger in his coffee and stirred. That was long sweetening. "Then she asked me what I wanted, and I said immediately, 'Short.' So she put her finger in another cup, took out something that resembled maple sugar, put it between her teeth and bit it in two parts. One part went into my cup and the other into hers. It seemed to be a case of no matter which sweetening you tried you'd wish you had taken the other."

Politics For Sweetheart and Wife.

Almost every other distinguished politician in the country has two sides—a public and a private side. David B. Hill has only one side—the public, the politician side. Politics has been and is sweetheart and wife and children and friends to him. It divides his allegiance with no social pleasure, not even with his happiness, nor with horses, nor cards, nor sports, nor dogs, nor automobiles, nor anything whatsoever. He is a very able lawyer, but he practices law only because he must make a living; and the one reason for his rather close attention to his law practice in the last two or three years is that the political conditions have made politics all but impossible for him. He is fifty-nine years old, and he has been a politician for nearly half a century. —Everybody's Magazine.

Few candidates take defeat with more grace than R. D. Douglas. And for his age he has had enough. Speaking of his latest Waterloo he said to-day: "Here we Republicans have all voted for Democrats and they gave us no votes at all. I now believe with Cooper, the novelist, in speaking of the Indians, that 'an independent Democrat is an extinct race that never existed!' It looks that way and Chairman Whitaker asserts over and over again that he 'cannot understand what was the matter with Halifax.' Greensboro Record.

The Best Remedy For Croup.

[From the Atchison, Kan., Daily Globe.]

This is the season when the woman who knows the best remedies for croup is in demand in every neighborhood. One of the most terrible things in the world is to be awakened in the middle of the night by a whoop from one of the children. The croup remedies are almost as sure to be lost, in case of croup, as a revolver is sure to be lost in case of burglars.
There used to be an old-fashioned remedy for croup, known as hive syrup and tolu, but some modern mothers say that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better, and does not cost so much. It causes the patient to "throw up the phlegm" quicker, and gives relief in a shorter time. Give this remedy as soon as the croupy cough appears and it will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by Wooten's Drug Store,

Farmville.

A Thanksgiving Dinner.

Heavy eating is usually the first cause of indigestion. Repeated attacks inflame the mucous membranes lining the stomach, exposing the nerves of the stomach, producing a swelling after eating, heartburn, headache, sour risings and finally catarrh of the stomach.
Kodol relieves the inflammation, protects the nerves and cures the catarrh. Kodol cures indigestion, dyspepsia, all stomach troubles by cleansing and sweetening the glands of the stomach. Jno. L.

GOING HOME

[Original.]

A train stopped at a little station in the interior of Connecticut. A gentleman alighted and stood, with a satchel in his hand and a light overcoat on his arm, looking about him.

"The railroad hasn't changed the appearance of the place much," he mused.
"There is the wood through which I shall have to go to reach the village.
The trees in that field were saplings, but they are now full grown. There is an iron bridge down there where that wooden one was I helped to destroy.
In other respects the face of the country is the same as it was thirty years ago."

So saying, he left the station, struck into the path and entered the wood.

Orville Gilbert when a boy had run away from home. He was a bad boy, and his parents could do nothing with him. He was always fighting with his companions, and when a lawless gang of boys was caught in some act of destruction Orville was sure to be found among them. One evening after his father had whipped him for being absent from home for several days without giving any account of himself he disappeared entirely. It was well that he did, for he was wanted by the civil authorities for being implicated in firing the bridge he had noticed replaced.

Orville worked his way westward until he reached the Missouri river, where he joined a wagon train starting out to haul a stock of goods to San Francisco. He delighted in riding in advance of the train scouting for Indians, and by his coolness and bravery several times he saved it from capture and the travelers from being murdered. On reaching the Pacific coast he was taken into the store where the goods were sold, helped to sell them, soon became a partner and at last grew very rich.

At first he did not write home, partly because he did not think it safe to give his whereabouts and partly because, like all boys who are troublesome, he considered himself badly abused. After that he became so immersed in business that he took no interest in anything else. One day he took up a poem by James Whitcomb Riley called "The Afterwhites."

Afterwhile—we have in view
A far scene to journey to Where the old home is, and where
The old mother waits us there, Pearing, as the time grows late,
Down the old path to the gate.
How we'll click the latch that looks
In the pinks and holyhooks,
And leap up the path once more
Where she waits us at the door!
How we'll greet the dear old smile
And the warm tears—afterwhile!

Gilbert discovered a tear in his eye after reading the poem, and he next day found himself on a train going home.

Reaching the house from which he had departed in anger years ago, he laid a trembling hand on the gate latch, then went up to the house. A young girl of fifteen came to the door.

"Are Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert at home?" he asked in a faint voice.

"The old people who used to live here?"

"Yes."

"No; they had to give up the house during the hard times."

"Where are they now?"

She hesitated, and Gilbert's heart sank.

"I don't know. They had a son who ran away. They always were looking for him to come back and give them a lift. The neighbors all laughed at them for thinking so, though my mother used to tell me the boy wasn't so bad, only full of devilry."

"Your mother was Margaret Pixley?"

"Yes. How did you know that?"

"I knew her when she was half your age. Who lives here now?"

"Mother and I."

"Is your mother a widow?"

"Yes."

"May I go in and rest?"

The stranger was made comfortable, though when the girl looked up at him suddenly she saw tears in his eyes.
Presently a woman slightly less than forty came in.

"Margaret Pixley," said the stranger, rising, "I am Orville Gilbert. I have been to blame in leaving my parents and paying no heed to them. Can you tell me where they are now?"

"Yes. Maggie, go out to the well and draw some water."

Maggie went out, and the woman replied to the question:

"In the Home for the Friendless." The man staggered and caught the back of a chair.

"Will you go and bring them?"

"Yes."

"I will be here tomorrow at this time.
Don't tell them that I have come."

The next day when Orville Gilbert "clicked the latch" of the gate a woman with snow white hair tottered down the path and threw her arms about his neck. Then he went into the house, where he found his father, too feeble to rise, but Orville took him up in his arms.

"It is not much that I can do to atone for my neglect, but what I can do will be of more comfort to me than to you.
We will live here or go to a finer house."

"A finer, not a better," said the old mother.

"No; this is home. Whatever we can do to improve it we will do, but we will stay here."

"Margaret kept us here as long as she was able," said the old woman. "She gave us our living for years."

"Why did you do that?" asked Orville, turning to Margaret.

The woman blushed.

"If you must know, I had a child's fancy for the bad boy whom everybody abused."

And so Gilbert got a wife to help him shower comforts on his father and mother.

JIM'S REINCARNATION

[Copyright, 1901, by D. H. Talmadge.]

The worm turned on the morning of Sarah Shaw's death. He sat upon a box hidden from the street by a lilac bush. His attitude was that of one who mourns, but the expression of his face was that of triumph, strenuously subdued. A hand was placed on his shoulder presently, but he did not look up.

"Yes, Martha," he said.

"Won't you come in and have a bite to eat, Jim? Benjamin's here, and we'd best arrange about—the funeral."
The worm stood up and threw back his shoulders.

"I made all the arrangements, Martha, before you came."

His sister gazed at him, a bewildered expression in her eyes, her tongue tied with sudden amazement. Brother Jim had actually gone ahead and done something on his own responsibility.

Jim Shaw, seeing her wonder, understood—and smiled.

"Yes, Martha; I think I'll look after my own affairs now." There was an instant's hesitation, and he cleared his throat nervously, then sat down on the box again. "Forty-three years come next Saturday Sally and I will live together without ever a hitch worth mentioning. We fought our battles against the world side by side, at least as close as a smart woman like her and a dolt like me could. She was always a little ahead of me. Any one in this village 'll tell you she was the smartest of us two. She had what's called executive ability. She went ahead and done things. I didn't. It's been town talk for forty years."

"Don't you think folks exaggerated some, Ben?"

"Exaggerated? Land, no! Many the time has she thrown her head back and said to me: 'James Shaw, 'twas the good Lord's providence that you married me. If you hadn't, I don't know what would have become of you.' I s'pose she suffered considerable along of my shiftlessness. Poor Sally!"

"'Twas only her way, Jim."

"I know it. I ain't layin' it up against her. 'Twould have killed her long ahead of her time if anything had happened to make her believe she wasn't holdin' up everything on her shoulders to keep it from fallin' down and smashin' me. But she knows now.
She's gone where there ain't no mista."

Jim glanced at the silent house, then at the great red barn beyond the apple orchard.

"Most all there is to life," he resumed after an interval, "is thinkin' you've done the things you've thought of doin'. Take the barn there, for instance. One day Grimson he met me on the road goin' to the creamery and says to me, 'I hear you're goin' to have a new barn, Shaw.' 'Who was tellin' you?' I asks him. 'My wife,' says he, with a sort of snicker. 'She was at the Social Hour meetin' yesterday, and she heard your wife say so.'
'Then I reckon it's true,' says I and drove on.

"'Twan't no news to me. Two days before that I'd completed a little deal in timber that had cost me in the engineerin' of it more than six nights of bad sleep. Sally didn't know nothin' of it. I'd kept it from her. Land knows, she had a big enough load to carry without bein' burdened with all my business troubles. I had the price of a new barn right in my inside vest pocket when I brought up the subject that day. 'Sally,' says I, 'I reckon we've got to have a new barn.' 'So I've heard you say these five years,' says she, 'and well I'm aware, Jim Shaw, that we'll never get it till I go ahead and do it myself.'

"I let on to be riled then, and I says,
'Well, why in tunket don't you go on and do it?' And she drew herself up, like she always did when I spoke in that aggravatin' way, and her eyes snapped and her lips set firm over her teeth. 'I just will, you shiftless man,' says she. And she did. That barn's a monument to her executive ability, Martha. She went and seen the carpenter, and he come and seen me, and the barn was built. Land, she was proud!"

One of the gnarled, knotty hands reached down and plucked a white clover blossom. The woman said nothing, but her gray eyes were brimming with an ineffable tenderness.

"And 'twas the same way with most everything we done, Martha. There ain't no harm in sayin' it now. I won't be here long, and I've got to hump myself to get the credit that's due me. She had it all for more than forty years, and I thank the blessed Lord she never saw through the deceit I was practicin' on her. I'm—I'm afraid I'm a sort of a scribe and Pharisee, Martha. Long at the last I worried considerable for fear I'd bust out and spoil it all. 'Twan't no easy matter holdin' in. Sometimes when my liver was more obstreperous than common 'twas like pullin' teeth for me to keep from tellin' her what a rickety old foundation her reputation as the ruler of our roost was built on."

He drew a long breath.

"But I didn't. And she died as happy and self satisfied as a child. Jimmy,' says she to me when her breath was near spent, 'I was in hopes you'd be called first. I don't know what you'll do without me. But it won't be for long, dear, and I'll be waitin' to take care of you over there.' And then, before I thought, I says: 'I'll be all right, Sally. I can take care of myself.' And she rose right up. 'No, you can't, James,' says she. 'No,' says I, scared at what I'd said, 'no, I can't, Sally.' And she sunk back, smilin' the smile—she'd smilin'—more than forty years ago."

His sister leaned forward impetuously and planted a kiss on his leathery cheek.

Henry Watterson lectures here to two score paid tickets; Sam Jones plays to standing room; a circus gets 12,000 spectators and only a thin line of fashionables see a gorgeous Shakespearean production; Sundays everybody eats cold light bread and goes to church, and during the week society plays euchre and the rest of the population rides on the merry-go-round.—Charlotte Observer.

Washington Letter

Special Correspondence from the Capital of the Nation.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Nov. 10, 1902.

When it was first realized that the republicans had won complete control of the House of Representatives it proved a bitter disappointment to the democratic leaders in Washington who had worked so indefatigably all summer, but as the smoke of battle clears away and it is possible to take a more dispassionate view of the situation there are many consoling features in the "republican victory." Governor Odell, who carried New York state by a majority of 110,000 two years ago, was this year elected by so small a majority that it is evident to everyone, familiar with the situation, that a closer supervision of the "up-state" polling places would have meant his defeat while, if such a man as Judge Parker had been the democratic nominee, Mr. Odell would have been snowed under. Again, prosperity in the party, as is inevitably the case, has given rise to numerous feuds despite the President's appeals to "hang together." A number of republican Senators and Representatives have been in Washington during the past week and all emphatically declare that there will be no change in the tariff schedules. They are undoubtedly correct but how will that please the western element of the party, the Iowans and the Minnesotians especially?

Another point which must be remembered in connection with the recent campaign is that where a congressional nominee reported to Judge Griggs that his district was close and that it would require a few hundred dollars, or perhaps the services of an able speaker to pull him through and the Judge spared him a small amount out of his carefully treasured fund, Representative Babcock immediately sent several speakers and several hundred dollars into the district. The democrats will, however establish permanent campaign headquarters in the near future and will use every legitimate means to amass a campaign fund and perfect the organization before the great fight of 1904. There were many incidents of the recent fight which were carefully noted and which will be most available in the future. The final conclusion of Judge Griggs, as expressed to your correspondent yesterday, is that "as straws show which way the wind blows, so there are many straws which point to democratic victory two years hence."

There is a good deal of gossip in Washington at present in regard to the future of Arthur P. German, Senator-elect from Maryland. Mr. German is an astute politician and an able leader and it is assumed that he will promptly become the leader of the democratic side of the Senate. The republicans, talking among themselves, say he will prove a "thorn in their flesh" and many prominent democrats say "He is a safe man to watch."

The announcement made last week by Representative Dalzell, who came to Washington for the purpose, that he will be a candidate for the speakership, is the first actual opening of a fight which promises to prove interesting and bitter. Mr. Dalzell will stand for the extreme phase of protection and those members who are unalterably opposed to the tariff revision will doubtless flock to his support. On the other hand, Representative Babcock will make a fight for the speakership and he is believed to represent the "moderate revision" faction. Representative Cannon of Illinois will make a vigorous contest for the position and heretofore he has been the favorite. Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, whose great anti-trust movement appears to have flashed in the pan, is also a candidate and before the struggle is over there is likely to be a pretty quarrel.
