Classification and Grading.

[Essay read by Miss Bertha Dawson before the Pitt County Teachers Association.]

The time was when the country school was considered a matter of small importance and one worthy of little consideration. But the fact is now being realized that in the country school lies the life and power of our nation, and a feeling is springing up that there is no better field in which to labor nor scarcely one capable of more improvement.

Statistics show that three-fourths of the children in the public schools of the South today are enrolled in the country school. Upon these children depends, in great measure, the future of the state. How important, then, that the training received should be such as to benefit them in every respect. The instruction given should not be imparted in a desultory, disconnected way, as is often the case, but in an orderly, systematized manner calculated to arouse in these pupils a desire for more and more learning.

In our cities, educational matters have been long considered, and consequently the city schools are more efficient. But it is only of late years that the country school has been a subject of much thought; so the rural school problem is still of the present.

In the city, the question how best to classify and grade children has been solved to some extent by a system of graded schools, where all children are classified and graded according to age, ability, and knowledge possessed by them. Forty or more children, all of the same grade, are placed, under the charge of one teacher. As these forty children all study the same subjects, and the same branches in those subjects, the teacher has few recitations each day and a large amount of time to devote to each recitation. This system can be used very successfully in a city where the schools have at least 400 or 500 pupils and thereby require the services of a dozen or more teachers.

But our country schools are necessarily of an altogether different order. Here we find each county divided into districts of about fifty or more pupils being in each district. For these fifty children of all grades and ages, only one teacher is employed. Can one be surprised then at the unsatisfactory results achieved in such a school? If only those fifty children could be gotten in one, or even two grades! But generally among these pupils, there is every variety of progress from the little tot ignorant of "A B C's," to the student almost ready for college.

How then shall the teacher best set to work about classifying and grading his school? How can any system or order be obtained? One very good idea to keep in view is this. Have as few classes in any one subject as can possibly be gotten without gross injustice to the majority of the school. By this means there will be fewer recitations and more time for each. And only those who have had experience in country public school work, can realize how hard it is to get a small number of classes in any branch. For instance in geography, there will be primary geography, elementary geography, manual geography; in arithmetic, there will be classes in division, classes in common fractions, decimal fractions, percentage &c., and so on through all the subjects taught. There will be scholars in spelling who will insist that they cannot keep up with other pupils a few pages ahead, and who will ask that a separate class be made for them. There will be the smart boy whose parents want him to advance too rapidly, the dull girl who is backward and needs constant coaching. All of these difficulties are to be met but generally by reasoning tactfully with pupils and by encouraging them, they can be brought to look at things as the teacher would have them, and made ready for any change that seems good.

The system of few recitations and more time to each will prove a great benefit to any school. But how to get this system is the question. In many public schools the teachers hear at least thirty recitations per day. This number, with the average school day of six hours gives about ten minutes for a recitation. What can be done by any teacher with any lesson in ten minutes? Suppose for instance it should be an exercise in reading. There is no time to bring out any beautiful thoughts which may be suggested by the lesson, no time to interest the child by asking his idea about any passage, he reads and so the reading degenerates into mere hurried word calling, the principal object being to get through with this lesson so as to be ready for the next. No wonder the class becomes dull, the teacher worried and the result disorder. The teacher could do away with as many classes as possible by following some carefully considered plan. Take for instance the pupils in reading. After they have thoroughly mastered the mechanical part of reading from some good second reader, the third and fourth reader classes may be united by letting them read such books as Robinson Crusoe, Old Greek Stories, Hiawatha, &c. These books are not so difficult but that all grades above second reader will find both pleasure and profit in their reading.

In arithmetic, it might be well to have three divisions: those studying the four fundamental operations, secondly those who study fractions and thirdly those in percentage. For studying out some plan for doing away with classes, particularly suited to his own school, the teacher will be well repaid. The advantages of this system are many. There will be a large number on recitation and so few left at their seats to create disorder. Thus the teacher will be enabled to give his whole attention to the recitation, and teacher and pupils alike will be interested in each other and the subject matter of the lesson, and by comparison of ideas the pupils will be led to express thoughts of which they were not judged capable.

The question of grading pupils is also a puzzling one. Here comes a scholar who studies advanced arithmetic and history and is just beginning geography and grammar. Indeed there are parents who seem to think that arithmetic is about the only necessary part of a boy's mental equipment. And fully imbued with this idea the boy comes into school with the intention of studying arithmetic to the exclusion of almost everything else. The only thing to be done is to attempt to show him the error of his way and to encourage him to devote more time to the studies in which he is lacking until there is greater uniformity in his work.

In one term a teacher cannot banish all the evils, cannot perfectly classify all his pupils. He can only work and strive toward the ideal which he has set for himself, knowing that the harder the striving, the grander the result.

When the much talked of consolidation of districts shall have taken place, when every school has a suitable building and the proper number of teachers, then our work will be easier. In the meantime fellow teachers let us be patient, classifying and grading our schools as best we may, knowing that in due time, if we are in earnest, there will be given us a better way.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1902.

The fellow who had to work Thanksgiving day is glad it is over, no doubt.

Now that we have all been told exactly what we have had to be thankful for, we should be able to pick out a few things to think about next time.

About twelve months from now we'll have another one. If those street improvements, electric lights and graded schools should get this side of the horizon by that time, much gratitude as well as turkey would mark the day.

The Durham Herald very sensibly observes:

"Mr. Fritchard may be deposed as leader of the republican party in North Carolina, but no leader will make the party respectable who is willing to do anything to keep on the right side of the administration. This policy would of course be best for those now in the party but it would not encourage a healthy or permanent growth."

The republican party is not so different in this respect from any other party. So long as national politics is inspired by Northern sentiment and dominated by men who are not in touch nor in sympathy with local conditions in the South, just so long must Southern politicians observe an independence that must necessarily result in friction with "the administration" at times, or forfeit the respect of their constituents. Statesmanship in the White House and quite as good an article of the same name hereabouts present no stronger claim to respect than in certain differences, according to the point of view.

Charity and Children, which is a part of the belongings of the Baptist Orphanage at Thomasville, observes that "our folks are drinking a good deal of liquor these days but it is made in the pot and tangles no legs. And by the way, there are many worse things in food and drink than pot liquor. The North Carolinian who is not familiar with it has suffered in his early education and needs to go back and begin it over again.—Charlotte Observer.

Bishop A. Coke Smith is presiding at the conference in Monroe this week. This is Bishop Smith's first appearance in a conference in his official capacity, and he has not only received a cordial welcome to the chair, but is presiding like a veteran. This is due not only to the high and sacred office that he occupies, but also to the deep personal esteem in which he is held throughout the conference.—Asheville Citizen.

THE SEWING MACHINE.

Unsuccessful Inventions That Preceded Howe's Patent in 1846.

The technical beginning of the sewing machine industry in this country was Sept. 10, 1846, when Elias Howe, Jr., obtained a patent for what grew into the first really practical sewing machine. Only three of the first Howe machines were made, however, and one of these was deposited in the patent office in Washington as a model. It was not until after 1850 that a factory for the making of sewing machines was built, so the enormous business of today has grown up in a short half century.

While Howe's invention marked the beginning of a successful industry, he was by no means the pioneer in efforts to substitute mechanical for hand sewing. As far back as 1770 Thomas Alsop patented in England a machine for embroidering. Another machine for embroidering in a loom was invented by John Duncan in 1804, and twenty-five years later another Englishman named Hellman patented still another embroidering machine.

The first recorded attempt at mechanical sewing was the invention of Thomas Saint, who took out a patent in England in 1790 for a machine which executed the old crochet stitch. It was not a success, but some of the features of the Saint machine appear in the perfected machine of today.

Bartholemey Thimonnier patented in France in 1830 the first sewing machine put to practical use. Eighty of his machines were in use for sewing army clothing in 1841, when a mob destroyed them because convinced they would drive seamstresses out of employment. Thimonnier built new and better machines, but all his work was again destroyed by angry artisans in 1848.

John J. Greenough took out the first patent for a sewing machine issued in the United States in 1842. It was intended to sew leather, but was of no practical use.

Walter Hunt of New York built a sewing machine in 1834, but failed to protect it by a patent. After Howe's machine appeared Hunt declared it embodied the ideas of his machine of 1834, but he was unable to establish his claim.

A small army of inventors appeared after Howe's patent had proved successful, and their genius was devoted to perfecting every part of the machine. How well they have succeeded is shown in the 8,500 patents for sewing machines and attachments issued by the United States since 1850 and in the fact that the American sewing machine leads all others in every country in the world.—New York Herald.

Care in Choosing Glasses.

A dealer in optical instruments declared that it gave him real pain to note the careless manner in which half the persons in New York wear glasses. "It is a wonder to me," he said, "that they don't bring on blindness. In the first place, the frames should always be fitted to individual faces instead of being picked up indiscriminately without regard for facial peculiarities. The size of the lenses is another important consideration. Most of the glasses I see on the street are too small. They should be as large as the face of the wearer will permit, for a lens of good size not only affords better protection to the eye, but is more becoming than a smaller one. Another tribulation of the weak eyed is due to the reflection from the edges of unframed glasses. The eyelashes should be attended to in order to get the best results from a pair of spectacles. Many lashes are worn so long that they brush against the glass. This is decidedly injurious.—New York Times.

A Lesson in Hospitality.

A curious instance of provincial hospitality in a small Tuscan town is recorded by Luigi Villari in "Italian Life in Town and Country."

A lady of very noble birth and of considerable wealth was giving a musical party—it was the first time she had invited friends to her house that season. The entertainment began at 2 p. m. and lasted till 7. No refreshments were provided for the guests, but at half past 4 a servant appeared and solemnly presented a cup of chocolate to the hostess and one to her mother. This, of course, would only be possible in a very provincial town. In the more civilized spots excellent refreshments are always offered to the guests.

A Scriptural Weapon.

Children tumble into strange morasses when they grapple with theology. They trip over words. For example, the other day a teacher at Stepney took for the Bible lesson the story of Samson. At the end of the lesson questions were put to test the understanding of the scholars. "With what weapon did Samson slay a thousand Philistines?" was the question. For a space there was silence. Then a little girl spoke up. "With the ax of the apostles," she said.—London Chronicle.

Conceited.

Phyllis—Harry is the most conceited man I ever met.

Maud—What makes you think so?
Phyllis—Why, he first asserts that I am the most adorable woman in the world, the most beautiful, intellectual, and in every respect a paragon, and then he wants me to marry him!

Seesaw.

Nodd—Every time I go on a vacation I swear I'll never take another.
Topp—Why don't you stick to it?

Stepped Against a Hot Stove.

A child of Mrs. Geo. T. Benson, when getting his usual Saturday night bath, stepped back against a hot stove which burned him severely. The child was in great agony and his mother could do nothing to pacify him. Remembering that she had a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm in the house, she thought she would try it. In less than half an hour after applying it the child was quiet and asleep, and in less than two weeks was well. Mrs. Benson is a well known resident of Kellar, Va. Pain balm is an antiseptic liniment and especially valuable for burns, cuts, bruises and sprains. For sale by Wooten's Drug Store, Greenville, Farmville Pharmacy, Farmville.

The Best Remedy For Croup.

[From the Atchison, Kan., Daily Globe.]

This is the season when the woman who knows the best remedies for croup is in demand in every neighborhood. One of the most terrible things in the world is to be awakened in the middle of the night by a whoop from one of the children. The croup remedies are almost as sure to be lost, in case of croup, as a revolver is sure to be lost in case of burglars. There used to be an old-fashioned remedy for croup, known as hive syrup and tolu, but some modern mothers say that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better and does not cost so much. It causes the patient to "throw up the phlegm" quicker, and gives relief in a shorter time. Give this remedy as soon as the croupy cough appears and it will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by Wooten's Drug Store, Greenville, Farmville Pharmacy, Farmville.

"I got soaked by rain," says Gertrude E. Fenner, Muncie, Ind., "and contracted a severe cough and cold. I failed rapidly; lost 48 pounds. My druggist recommended One Minute Cough Cure. The first bottle brought relief; several cured me. I am back to my old weight, 148 pounds. One Minute Cough Cure cuts the phlegm, relieves the cough at once, draws out inflammation, cures croup. A N AVERTED TRAGEDY

[Copyright, 1901, by C. L. Sherwood.]

It was only yesterday at breakfast that he had asked, half in earnest, whether she expected company, and she had granted a certain reasonableness to the question, for there was twice as much meat on the table as was necessary; also it was the first of the month and their prenuptial figures on the cost of living had been more than doubled, while the prenuptial earning capacity had in no way increased.

So, though this first manifestation of a spirit of criticism cut her two-month-old wifeliness, it was passed over, for John was very loving toward her. She was duly sorry about her extravagance and, with a pat on the cheek, told him she would try to figure more closely.

But this morning they had eaten in silence. She could not speak, for she was on the verge of tears. Neither did he speak, except to say that she did not understand, but would when she had thought it over.

Now she had thought it over and almost decided that she had never, in the two years of their acquaintance, known the real John. She almost reached the conclusion that he had deceived her, that he was not the sunny, open faced boy he seemed, but a brute who could not control his own temper and who took pleasure in coldly and cruelly showing it to her.

So she cried in the cozy little front room of the little house in the suburbs, and the torn collar on the dresser in their room was to her mute evidence of his true self.

The truth of the tragedy was this: The collar he had tried to put on that morning was frayed and saw toothed, old and useless. He had scratched his neck, and he had said, not altogether pleasantly, that it should never have gone to the laundry, and then, vindictively, she thought, he had deliberately torn it in two.

All it meant to her was the loss of her ideal, and that was everything. And then he had not seemed to see how she felt. The words in her mind were, "Now we know that he never could know and never could understand."

It looked that way, and helplessly he also realized it, though perhaps it should have been, "Did not understand."

He had quoted the lines himself as he left her, but he quoted them verbatim, with the proper pronouns, and then was sorry they had come to his mind.

All the way to the city it worried him. Why had she not answered him when he had spoken to her immediately after the collar episode? It had always brought an answer—that hearty, kindly, "What's the trouble, Mrs. John?" his pet name these two months. Then he said, "If she's going to get huffy and quiet about nothing, all right."

But as he thought it over perhaps he had not been exactly affable at the table. He had kissed her goodbye, however, and her response was of the passive, dutiful variety. It made him blue to think of it.

At the office he found that he had to recheck all his additions, and the second bookkeeper was spared the usual "jollyng." By 9 o'clock he found that he was shading every figure made.

There was one page in last year's cash-book similarly disfigured, the day after she had accepted him. So he stopped work and sharpened his pencil. By the time he had used up two inches of it and the neat pile of red shavings had grown to magnificent proportions his brow was less clouded, and he reached to the side of his desk and rang a messenger call.

It was 11 o'clock when at the door of a certain little house in the suburbs a tearful little housewife took a package from the blue coated messenger of peace. The flowers were violets, her favorites, and this was the note with them:

Dearest Mrs. John—Probably I am a brute, probably I don't understand, but anyway I want to let you know I am sorry. I haven't had any great peace of mind since I left you, and I thought it might make you feel better to let you know right away that I really wasn't very angry when I tore up the collar—that is, not any angrier than any man ever is when he puts on one of those saw toothed things. And if you'd had the experience with starched linen I have you'd appreciate this; but, thank goodness, you're not mannish enough to have run to them. (You'll have to read this twice to catch my meaning.)

The fact is this: In my boarding house life I always tore up a collar the moment it showed signs of dissolution, but I haven't a doubt that I paid laundry bills enough, at 2 cents per, on useless collars to keep us in theater tickets for a year. So, there.

Q. E. D., as we used to love to write after problems when we were in the high school.

Well, I've got to catch up on some work I mixed up this morning, so will close. Hope you like the flowers. Will be home by 5 at latest. Lovingly, JOHN.

At 5 o'clock on the little porch of the little house in the suburbs stood a young housewife in a fresh lawn gown, with fresh flowers scattered through it and pink ribbons twisted about it, where they ought to be—at least so John thought, for it was his favorite gown.

She wore a bunch of violets at her belt, and—well, they got inside the little hall with all the haste that was meet and seemly.

A MAN'S NECKTIE.

What the Manner of Its Arrangement Tells to One Woman.

"I wouldn't attempt to judge a man by his coat," she said gravely, "but I would not hesitate two minutes to judge him by his necktie. It is an almost infallible guide. Of course there are exceptions, but the character and intellect of most men can be told by the way in which they tie their ties. Now, take the overclever man, for example.

"The tie of the genius has afforded much 'copy' for the pen of the satirist and the pencil of the caricaturist, but in reality any little peculiarity or idiosyncrasy in dressing is generally the outward and visible sign of vanity rather than of personal untidiness. The average man, with an ordinary share of intellect, seldom knows how to tie a tie as it can be tied and is tied by men with no intellect at all. He may possess a charming selection of the best ties which Broadway can supply and does not in the least look eccentric—nay, rather, he often wants to be as smart in appearance as possible, but somehow he rarely achieves his object.

Directly you see a really beautifully tied tie (except in the cases of military men and actors, with whom it is a part of the training) which never moves out of place, following faithfully the little idiosyncrasies of contemporary dandyism, you may be fairly certain that you are not face to face with an undiscovered Shakespeare or an embryonic Goethe. Of course, in the case of a rich and important personage, the lesser details of the toilet are usually left to the valet, but even then I defy a man of real brains to keep his tie at the exact angle for any considerable time. At dinner you will generally find that by the time the soup has arrived the evening tie has shifted its position or become obliquely set. This could probably be easily avoided, only it happens that the way in which a man wears his tie indicates pretty accurately the wearer's intellectual appreciation of trifles.—Toledo Blade.

What Washington Lacks.

There is no avenue in Washington which measures adequately up to the full demands of civic beauty. Woodward avenue in Detroit, Euclid avenue in Cleveland, Peachtree avenue in Atlanta, Independence avenue in Kansas City and Summit avenue in St. Paul are all examples of handsome thoroughfares, where magnificent private residences are set in miniature parks. On a larger scale Brookline, near Boston, presents a charming picture of suburban development along picturesque and artistic lines. There is nothing of the kind in Washington.—Washington Post.

Every one should take care that he behaves so well that his enemies do not behave better.—Atchison Globe.

The Weather.

For North Carolina:

Fair and continued cold tonight, Saturday fair and warmer.

Accept Thanks.

The managers of the Deestrick Skule requests THE REFLECTOR to extend their sincere thanks to all who participated in the exercises at the opera house Thursday night or in anyway contributed to the success of the undertaking, and to the public for the very liberal patronage extended the performance. Especial indebtedness is acknowledged to the Creighton's, whose assistance proved so valuable before the audience, to the orchestra, whose generous service is heartily appreciated, to Mr. Cotton for a very clever solo, to Mrs. G. B. Hadley, Mr. York, Mrs. J. B. Cherry, Essie Whichard.

Family Reunion.

The home of Mr. Robert Starkey was the scene of a merry thanksgiving gathering yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Kleber Denmark and young son, of Kinston, and Mr. and Mrs. W. M. McArthur and children, of Rochdale, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Starkey, and found the entertainment provided for them pleasant indeed. Mrs. Denmark, who was formerly Miss Florence Starkey, is very popular in Greenville, as are also Mr. and Mrs. McArthur. Their many friends here were pleased to see them, and the family reunion was an altogether enjoyable occasion. The Thanksgiving dinner served was perfect in every respect and all who partook of it will remember the occasion in years to come.

THE DEESTRICK SKULE.

Criticism by Col. I. A. Sugg.

The Deestrick Skule was all "an fait."

The crowd was the very largest. The receipts more than was expected.

The characters, "ad captandum." The music, ne plus ultra.

The women, grandiloquently, chaming and altogether lovely.

The men, superlatively handsome and gallant.

The small boy and his accustomed squeak-whistle and boisterous noise, very much, a great deal too much, in evidence.

Base hits numerous, center B. hits unanimous.

Cheek by Jowle—after the Skule.

A business getter for the holidays—Christmas Number of the Daily Reflector, out Dec. 18.

A Remarkable Coincidence.

In the Messenger of the 20th instant there appeared an editorial under the head lines "Pritchard Then and Now." We did not know then that we were forestalling a similar editorial of The Wilson Daily News of the 21st. Had we known this we would have deferred publication until after the latter date and given The News credit for it, as the two editorials are identically the same—word for word. We beg pardon of The News editor for publishing his editorial without giving due credit, but as it appeared in the Messenger the day before its publication in the News, a fair-minded public will hardly criticize us very much for failing to give the latter paper credit. The two articles are so identically similar that an unfortunate, but rather amusing typographical error which crept into the first publication, whichever one that was, also found its way into the other. Forgive us this time, Brother, and we will try not let it occur again.

What it Means.

We're tired of answering questions!

"Fewer Gallons; Wears Longer" means that you don't have to paint your house so often, and you don't have to use so much paint. Costs less for the job, and you don't have to do the job so often.

The new paint is not new at all. It's the biggest selling paint in the United States, and the firm that makes it is 149 years old.

Devoe Lead and Zinc—fewer gallons than mixed paints, wears twice as long as lead and oil. H. L. Carr sells it.
