THE WISE MAN

THE FOOLISH MAN

Chases up some "Bargain Store" or "Bargain Sale," thinking he will save 50c. or so on a pair of Shoes. What does he get? Well, it's hard to tell—gets the poorest of Shoes—gets an ill-fitting Shoe—gets every thing but what he wants—gets mad and declares he'll never do it again. And he won't. Reader, remember the parable.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Both branches of the legislature observed the anniversary of Lee's birthday on Monday. The House did not meet at all, and the Senate was in session only a few minutes before adjourning in honor of Lee.

In the short time that the Senate was together Senator Blow, of Pitt, introduced the three bills sent up from Greenville, one to amend the charter of the town, one to establish graded school, and one to issue bonds for improvements.

The well machine has been again placed at the well on Five Points to resume work on that hole in the ground.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1903.

Here is an item going the rounds of the press that is worthy of some notice and comment:

The Hustler says the liquor men of Wilkes have organized and employed lawyers to go to Raleigh to fight the anti liquor legislation proposed for Wilkes county. W. W. Barber, H. L. Greene and J. W. McNeill were employed.

We suppose there will be much of this kind of work going on throughout the state in the next few weeks. The liquor men are going to do all in their power to prevent the passage of the London bill by the legislature, and they will spend money freely to hire lawyers to help them in this purpose. Of course any and all lawyers have the right to accept such fees and do such work if they want to, but there is another view of the matter.

While every lawyer has a legal right to accept a fee and work for the whiskey interest, those who do so are, for a price, selling their influence against morality and temperance, and are helping to foster upon their people and their state the greatest evil in existence. They may have the legal right to do this, but they have not the moral right.

THE REFLECTOR is frank to say that every lawyer who will thus sell his influence to an evil that is so great a curse to humanity, ought to be marked by every advocate of temperance, and should be reminded of it if he ever comes before the public seeking suffrage. The people are in earnest in their determination to rid North Carolina of saloons, and the lawyer, or any one else, who throws himself in the way of this movement should take the consequences.

The bullet of the assassin Tillman reached its mark, and South Carolina is steeped in the crowning shame of a cruel, wanton, murder, worthier a Nero or a Caesar than an officer of an enlightened commonwealth. N. G. Gonzales passed away Monday morning, his life blood staining the pages of South Carolina's history. May justice be done, but "Vengeance is mine," sayeth the Lord.

A Chicago grand jury has indicted a bunch of coal dealers for charging extortionate prices. The trial will probably be deferred till "The Good Old Summer Time," and then we won't care a hang whether there's a coal trust or not.

THE MOONSHINERS

(Original.)

About ten years after the close of the civil war I took it into my head to visit the ground where I had campaigned as a soldier boy in the Union army, that region being about Jasper, Decker and Shelbyville, Tenn. There was an especial reason for my going. I had been an escaped prisoner of war and had been hunted with bloodhounds up on to the Cumberland plateau. On the west face of the plateau not far from where the university now stands I was taken into a mountaineer's hut by a girl about fourteen years old and concealed till my pursuers got tired of the search. The child had retained a place in my memory, and I desired to see her again.

I went to Shelbyville and proceeded from there on horseback to the base of the plateau and then up to where stood the hut in which I had been concealed. A young woman was standing at the door and, to my surprise, recognized me at once. She had changed so much from childhood to womanhood that I did not know her. Our meeting was so delightful that I remained at the place for a week. Mary's parents were dead, and she lived with an uncle. I tried to find out from her how he made a living, but failed to do so.

When I left, I started to walk to Bridgeport, intending there to take a train for home. The uncle offered to show me the way. I accepted his company—I did not need his guidance—and after passing the morning with my sweetheart, sitting beside her on a rock in view of the broad panoramas of woods and waters, villages and plantations spread out beneath us, her uncle and I set out together.

I was very much mystified as to the man's treatment of me. Every now and again while we walked side by side, suddenly glancing up, I saw him looking aside at me with a cunning gleam in his eye. Besides, I noticed that whenever we came to dangerous footings he invariably left me to go first, and once when we were near a cliff he suddenly stole up on me.

In passing down a steep declivity, I was in front. Suddenly the man gave me a push, with the words, "There's where we put revenue officers!" I fell, bounding from the branches of a tree, and landed on the ground. I was knocked insensible, but soon recovered consciousness, picked myself up and tottered on as best I could till I came to a hamlet, where I found a resting place. It was several days before I was in condition to take my departure.

The next summer I determined to go back to the plateau, first, to bring away the girl whom I had found I could not get on without; second, to get even with her uncle. I disguised myself so that the man at least wouldn't know me and armed myself to the teeth. I went to Tracy, wishing to separate the girl from her uncle, and induced a woman at whose house I put up to send for my sweetheart, the girl not knowing who had instigated the summons. While she was coming I went to the cabin, where I found her uncle. With feigned simplicity I gave him to understand that I was a revenue officer seeking my way to Bridgeport. He offered to accompany me, and I accepted. When he came to the place where he had given me the push, he made the attempt again; but, turning upon him, I covered him with a revolver and walked him back to the cabin.

Meanwhile, my sweetheart had gone to Tracy and, finding that the woman who had sent for her had nothing of importance to communicate, had returned and through a window had seen me marching her uncle up to the cabin. She being in shadow, I did not see her. When I came within about fifty feet of her, my revolver hanging from my hand, the muzzle pointing to the ground, I heard a voice:

"Hands up!" I knew some one whom I could not see had me covered, and my hands went up without delay. Then my girl came out. Her uncle as soon as she had covered me drew a revolver, and I was at the mercy of two weapons.

"Mary," I said in my natural voice. She dropped her weapon as if she had been shot and stood trembling, then ran to me and, sobbing, threw her arms around my neck.

Her uncle had confessed to her that upon my first visit he had believed me to be a revenue officer and had sent me to my long home. My coming was to her like a return from the dead.

Well, the uncle was considerably cut up when he found I was the man he had supposed he had killed, and for a time was a good deal puzzled what to do with me. We finally compromised by my putting a revenue stamp out of the way as legitimate. His niece had long dreaded his being engaged in the illicit business and begged him to give it up. I joined my pleadings with hers and promised if he would come to Ohio I would make him superintendent of a creamery I owned. He consented, and the three of us went out to the still, concealed in a shaded cleft, and, setting it on fire, watched it burn. Mary piling on the dry twigs and laughing and crying by turns from excess of happiness. We also decided to burn the home, which was worthless, and the last sight I saw on the plateau was the flames bursting out of the cabin in which Mary had saved me from my pursuers. Here I had fallen in love with her and where my courtship had concluded in so singular a fashion.

Mary and I have been married many years, and our grandchildren are now our chief delight. Her uncle made valuable superintendent and lived to a good old age. It has been the habit of my life when trouble has threatened me to remember the buying of the dogs that resulted in giving me so devoted Advice From Sadi.

Of the distinguished authors of Persia none perhaps has enjoyed a wider popularity than Sadi, who lived in the thirteenth century. He was a great traveler and a close observer, and his anecdotes and short stories are described as being founded on his own experiences and observations. In "Persian Poetry For English Readers" Mr. S. Robinson quotes the following from Sadi's writings:

A pupil said to his instructor, "What am I to do, for people incommode me with the frequency of their visits to such a degree that their conversation produces a great distraction of my valuable time?"

The teacher replied: "To every one who is poor lend and from every one who is rich borrow. They will not come about you again."

Another example embodies excellent advice. A silly fellow, having a pain in his eyes, went to a farrier and asked him for a remedy. The farrier applied to his eyes something which he would have given to an animal, and it blinded him, upon which they made an appeal to the magistrate. The magistrate said:

"This is no case for damages. It is plain that this fellow is an ass or he would not have gone to a farrier."

No man of enlightened understanding will commit weighty matters to one of mean abilities.

A Poser For Conkling.

When Roscoe Conkling first began the practice of law in New York, he lost a most important murder case on which he had worked very hard not only for the fee, which he needed badly, but for a reputation which he had to make. Despite his efforts his client was hanged. Later, when he presented his bill to the man's family, they refused to pay it on the ground that it was excessive. He took the bill to Charles O'Connor, the great criminal lawyer, asking him to pass judgment as to the equity of his charges. O'Connor scanned the account very closely and then, turning to Conkling, very gravely remarked, "Well, Conkling, taking into consideration the enormous amount of energy and time you have devoted to this case, the charges are reasonable, but see here, Conkling, don't you think the man could have been hanged for less money than that?"

The Ptarmigan's Tail.

One of the most entertaining chapters in natural history is that which relates to the many curious means that birds and other animals possess of deceiving the eyes of their enemies. Mr. E. S. Selys, in writing of upland game birds, calls attention to a remarkable and beautiful instance. When the ptarmigan puts on its winter dress, it has a black tail. One might suppose that this would attract attention to the bird crouching on the snow, but in fact it serves for concealment. Every projection on a snowfield casts a dark shadow and that is what the tail of the motionless ptarmigan looks like, the body of the bird resembling a mere hump on the white background.

British Museum Treasures.

Among the many costly treasures to be found in the British Museum is the "Maze Psalter," the second book known to have been printed that bears a date and which is valued at $5,000. The books printed by Caxton represent to the museum a fortune in themselves, while the Elgin marbles represent an enormous value only to be estimated in millions. The Rosetta stone might fetch anything from $100,000 to $150,000,000, and the Nineveh bulls with human heads would be cheap at $50,000.

The Ubiquitous Union.

Young Wife (sobbing)—Oh, Clarice, I'm so unhappy! I'm going h-b-home to t-t-t to my mother!

Clarice—Good gracious, dear! Surely George is not so unkind to you already!

Young Wife (sobbing)—N-n-no, no, no; it's not that. But Mr. Binks, the husband of one of our members, has refused to buy Mrs. Binks a new toque, and the Amalgamated Wives' union has ordered us all out on strike.—Illustrated Bits.

Insulted Her Feet.

Mrs. De Bride was entertaining callers. After they left she remarked to her husband:

"I hope they didn't see my walking shoes lying there. They would think me very untidy if they did."

"Oh, if they saw them they probably thought they were mine," answered her husband in a consoling tone.

And she hasn't spoken to him since.

The Speaker.

Many years ago an Allen county man announced himself as a candidate for the legislature.

"But you can't make a speech," objected a friend.

"Oh, that doesn't make any difference," innocently responded the candidate, "for the house always elects a speaker."—Iola (Kan.) Register.

A Transformation.

"How do you like our climate?" asked the South Carolinian a quail.

"It has made a new creature of me!" enthusiastically replied the ricebird, which had called it a fobolink when it left New England last fall.—What to Eat.

Making a Chump Of a Hero

(Original.)

"Don't you think," said Julia to me, "that it would be nice for us to make a story together?"

We were sitting in the library in easy chairs, before a log fire. Story writing was a part of my work, and I did it for pay. Therefore I discouraged Julia's plan.

"There's too much shop about it for me," I said.

"But I'm curious to know how these things are done. Come; yield to me for once. How do you begin?"

"The first thing to determine upon is a plan. To tell the truth, one seldom strikes an original subject for a story, but if one is handy at the business he may take an old theme and serve it up daintily, so as to give it the flavor of originality. In all or nearly all stories there are a male lover and a female lover, a vil'—"

"You mean a man who has given his heart to a woman who responds to his passion."

"Yes; that's it when we get it on paper, but before that we say first—to take a common subject—here's the man lover, here's the woman lover—or loveress, if you prefer it. And now for the complications. Experience teaches us to avoid details that are very common. Don't make the lover and loveress!"

"I wish you'd find other names for them."

"—'spoon in the conservatory.'"

"It's a delightful place for lovemaking."

"That's the reason story makers always use it. Then don't make the lover rescue the—the girl from a fire. The firemen are the ones to do that if it must be done at all."

"Never mind the don'ts. Get on with the story."

"Well, first we'll give them names. The lover is Charles. Perhaps we'd better make him a young lawyer; the loveress—I mean the loved one—is Lucy, and the villain is an officer of the United States army who distinguished himself in the Spanish war."

"What a funny kind of villain!" cried Julia, suddenly looking up at me.

"Wherein does his villainy consist?"

"In loving the heroine."

"But Captain"—She stopped and colored.

"Captain Pebbles, to give him a name, is really not so much to blame as Lucy, who falls to see Charles' advantages and insists on giving her heart to the captain. You see, the villainy is in the military trappings that have induced so many girls to lead garrison lives who might otherwise have had comfortable homes."

"I see," said Julia, wagging her toe on a foot rest, "but I don't think that has anything to do with it if she loves him."

"Well, to go on with the story, Lucy gives Charles the grand bounce. I mean she dismisses him as a lover, though she retains him as a friend. You see, Charles has loved her a long while, and she was always very nice to him till the captain came along, when she changed like a weather vane."

"Nothing of the kind. I mean you can't make a heroine of a girl as fickle as that."

"That is what Charles thinks about it, so after bearing Lucy's acceptance of the captain's attentions for some time he just buttons up his coat, puts on his hat with a slap on the crown, crams his hands into his trousers pockets and goes off by himself, perfectly indifferent."

"Wouldn't it be a nice complication to have him suddenly struck with another girl?" asked Julia, glancing at me slyly.

"And then he finds out when it's too late that Lucy's acceptance of the captain's attentions were simply the result of pique."

"H'm! It seems that we are going all wrong. The lover and loveress (excuse the word; I can't find another) appear to be very commonplace people, easily made jealous without cause, especially the girl!"

"You mean the man."

"Well, never mind which is to blame. The villain turns out to be the only sensible one of the lot, and a real hero in a military way if not as a lover."

"Let's have it that the captain is engaged to another girl all the while."

"What?"

"Yes; the captain is engaged and has made Lucy his confidant."

"That won't do."

"Why not?"

"Because it will make the hero of the story appear like an over-jealous chump. Besides, the heroine has no business to have secrets from her real lover."

"Do heroines go about revealing confidences?"

I scratched my head thoughtfully. I had set out to make my principal man a hero. Julia had slapped him a gander. "I'll tell you what we'll do," I said at last. "The villainy is in the villainy of the villain. Suppose we reverse the process and make a chump of the hero."

"We don't need to do that. The hero has made a chump of himself."

I turned and met a merry pair of eyes and a smile.

"And that's the—"

"Climax."

"Not a bit of it," I said, rising and squeezing myself into the chair best of her. "This is the climax." I kissed her once; I kissed her twice.

"That's the climax to the first and second chapters," she remarked.

"Don't, dear Julia, how happy you have made me! I shall not sleep a wink tonight for joy."

"Now you're talking like the lover in your stories."

"Not a bit. This isn't fiction. It's the real thing." F. A. MITCHEL.

Unconscious From Croup.

During a sudden and terrible attack of croup our little girl was unconscious from strangulation, says A. L. Spafford, postmaster, Chester, Mich., and a dose of One Minute Cough Cure was administered and repeated often. It reduced the swelling and inflammation cut the mucous and shortly the child was resting easy and speedily recovered. It cures Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, and all Throat and Lung troubles. One Minute Cough Cure lingers in the throat and chest and enables the lungs to contribute pure, health giving oxygen to the blood. Jno. L. Wooten.

Worry.

This is easier said than done, yet it may be of some help to consider the matter. If the cause is something over which you have no control it is obvious that worrying will not help the matter in the least. On the other hand, if within your control you have only to act. When you have a cold and fear an attack of pneumonia, buy a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and use it judiciously and all cause for worry as to the outcome will quickly disappear. There is no danger of pneumonia when it is used. For sale by Wooten's Drug Store, Greenville, Farmville Pharmacy, Farmville.

A small voice in a man often has the same effects as a whole in a nickle.

One Hundred Dollars A Box.

Is the value H. A. Tisdale, Summerton, S. C., places on DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. He says: "I had the piles for 20 years. I tried many doctors and medicines, but all failed except DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. It cured me." It is a combination of the healing properties of Witch Hazel with antiseptics and emollients; relieves and permanently cures blind, bleeding, itching and protruding piles, sores, cuts, bruises, eczema, salt rheum and all skin diseases. Jno. L. Wooten.

Turkeys are innocent birds; almost any silly woman can stuff them.

Croup.

The peculiar cough which indicates croup, is usually well known to the mothers of croupy children. No time should be lost in the treatment of it, and for this purpose no medicine has received more universal approval than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Do not waste valuable time in experimenting with untried remedies, no matter how highly they may be recommended, but give this medicine as directed and all symptoms of croup will quickly disappear. For sale by Wooten's Drug Store, Greenville, Farmville Pharmacy, Farmville.

Of course it isn't a crime to be a woman—neither is it manly.

The crowned heads of every nation. The rich men, poor men and misers.

All join in paying tribute to DeWitt's Little Early Risers.

H. Williams, San Antonio, Tex., writes: Little Early Riser Pills are the best ever used in my family. I unhesitatingly recommend them to everybody. They cure Constipation, Billiousness, Sick Headache, Torpid Liver, Jaundice, Malaria and all other liver troubles. Jno. L. Wooten.

A short acquaintance is always trying to make a touch.

The nicest and pleasantest medicine I have used for indigestion constipation is Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets," says Melard F. Craig, of Middlegrove, N. Y. "They work like a charm and do not gripe or have any unpleasant effect." For sale by Wooten's Drug Store, Greenville, Farmville Pharmacy, Farmville.

A Scientific Discovery.

Kodol does for the stomach that which it is unable to do for itself, even when but slightly disordered or over-loaded. Kodol supplies the natural juices of digestion and does the work of the stomach, relieves the nervous tension, while the inflamed muscles of that organ are allowed to rest and heal. Kodol digests what you eat and enables the stomach and digestive organs to transform all food into rich, red blood. Jno. L. Wooten.

MISS MONIE BOWEY,

No. 38 Perry Street, DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

A couple of winters ago I slipped on a frozen sidewalk and fell flat on my back. On being examined I found that I had sustained internal injuries which laid me up for more than two months. After that I noticed that I had pains in the back and groin which I never had before. I doctored and doctored for several months but as the pains increased instead of growing better I decided that I was not having the right treatment. Reading in the papers of the wonderful cures performed by Wine of Cardui I wrote to one of the parties and received a very satisfactory reply and I immediately sent for some. In a very short time I felt generally better and after seven weeks faithful use I was once more well and strong. I have never had a sick hour since and I daily bless your splendid medicine.

Miss Monie Bowe

Wine of Cardui makes women more womanly by curing their weakness and making them stronger. Wine of Cardui cured Miss Bowe. As a medicine for all women in every trying period of their lives can you think of a better medicine for yourself, your sister, your daughter or your mother? Can you think of a more acceptable present to give your friend than a bottle of this medicine which will bring her health and happiness? You are suffering? Your duty is to rid yourself of this pain. If your daughter, mother, sister or friend is sick and in need of relief, your duty is equally great to them. Many women, now well, owe their lives to friends who brought them Wine of Cardui.

Wine of Cardui is adapted to women at any age in any walk of life. For the working woman it gives her strength for her tasks and better treatment than a doctor for very small cost.

Your druggist will sell you a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui. Secure the medicine today. Take it in the privacy of your home. Relief will come to you as surely as you take it.

WINE of CARDUI A million suffering women have found relief in Wine of Cardui.

At this term of Superior court the grand jury made the following reports:

ON OFFICES

We, the grand jury, recommend that upon examination of the Register of Deeds office the Campbell index system be adopted and all old record index books be transcribed therein, and such additional shelving be added as may be necessary for the preservation of the records of said county; and that better water facilities be provided for the court house and jail.

The Superior court clerk's office in good condition.

UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY.

Monday, January Nineteenth, 1903.

General Orders No. 9, Headquarters Army Northern Va., April 10th, 1865.

After four years of arduous service, marked by unsurpassed courage and fortitude, the Army of Northern Virginia has been compelled to yield to overwhelming numbers and resources. I need not tell the brave survivors of so many hard-fought battles, who have remained steadfast to the last, that I have consented to the result from no distrust of them. But, feeling that valor and devotion could accomplish nothing that could compensate for the loss that must have attended the continuance of the contest, I determined to avoid the useless sacrifice of those whose past services have endeared them to their countrymen. By the terms of the agreement officers and men can return to their homes and remain until exchanged. You will take with you the satisfaction that proceeds from the consciousness of duty faithfully performed; and I earnestly pray that a merciful God will extend to you His blessing and protection.

With an increasing admiration of your constancy and devotion to your country, and a grateful remembrance of kind and generous considerations for myself, I bid you all an affectionate farewell. R. E. LEE, General.

The above was the mournfully interesting souvenir presented by Mrs. Travis Hooker to some 30 guests on Monday afternoon, January 19th. The occasion was the celebration of the birthday of Gen. R. E. Lee, which is required of every chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy, and we wager that within the borders of the state no more beautiful or touching features of the occasion were presented. The reception room was darkened and lit up with a number of wax candles throwing a soft halo about a perfect picture of Gen. Lee with its frame of grey and gold, which was suspended above an arch, draped with red and white bunting on which were inscribed in letters of the same colors several of Gen. Lee's most brilliant victories.

After the opening ceremonies, some time was devoted to business matters; and later an interesting contest for prizes was begun, Mrs. E. A. Moye, Jr., and Mrs. F. C. Harding being the winners.

Elegant refreshments closed the memorable evening. Mrs. M. D. Swan, of New York, was the guest of honor.

Dislocated Her Shoulder.

Mrs. Johanna Soderholm, of Ferguson Falls, Minn., fell and dislocated her shoulder. She had a surgeon get it back in place as soon as possible, but it was quite sore and pained her very much. Her son mentioned that he had seen Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised for sprains and soreness, and she asked him to buy her a bottle of it, which he did. It quickly relieved her and enabled her to sleep, which she had not done for several days. The son was so much pleased with the relief it gave his mother that he has since recommended it to many others. For sale by Wooten's Drug Store, Greenville, Farmville Pharmacy, Farmville.
