How Can the Teachers Best Improve Themselves?

[Essay read by Miss Annie Lois Ferrell before Pitt County Teachers' Association.]

The subject assigned us for discussion today is of so great importance that we shrink from the undertaking. We would that it had fallen to the lot of another—one more mature in thought, and one better fitted by experience and observation to suggest that which we all so much need—the best methods of improvement, and yet none of us should be inclined to shrink duty but be willing to study together anything which will be for our mutual good.

This subject presupposes two things if we would be benefited by its discussion. First, it must be granted that there is a desire for improvement. It would be useless to suggest methods, if there is no desire to utilize them. Again, there must be the willingness to do that which will give the desired end. We take it for granted that these two conditions exist in every member of this organization, and if the thoughts suggested are worth anything that the teachers will be quick to give them a fair test.

We shall discuss very briefly ten avenues of improvement in the order of their importance and also in the order of their availability to the teacher of ordinary means—in which class, we are sure, most of us find ourselves.

First, we must be observant. To the blind there is no such thing as seeing. To the unobservant the first channel of improvement is closed. A teacher must see what is transpiring in the world about him. Close observation of the most insignificant circumstance is not without beneficial results. We see the good and may imitate it, we observe the evil and may shun it. Blindness to things about us makes us incapable of change and in consequence strangers to improvement. Therefore, be observant if you would be progressive.

Again to improve there must be a daily preparation of that which we are attempting to teach. No teacher, be he ever so well informed, is so dry as he who is palming off the thoughts of other days on the work of today. It is mere repetition. There is no life, no burning vitality. To grow there must be other thoughts, new ideas born from new preparation and new study. Any teacher will starve—will die on the best thought in the world if there is nothing added to it. The purest water will become stagnant if no fresh water is tadded. Would you be line, progressive, powerful in your profession? If so, prepare well and thoughtfully the work of each day.

Thirdly, in your preparation avoid too many helps. Help of the right kind may be properly utilized, but the teacher who gets his help from his interline or his key has not grown. He has only enlarged from stuffing, not from thought, and when the shrinkage comes is even smaller than before. Don't order help for everything but insist upon your brain furnishing the solution. Again, the teacher to improve must keep up with current events—with changed and changing conditions. In fact we are always confronted with conditions not theories. To do this necessitates familiarity with the newspapers of the day, from your county paper to one of national reputation. Not only these but the great magazines of the day. It is well enough to be conversant with history that has already been made, but it is much better to know that which each day is making. Would you develop? If so do not neglect to familiarize yourself with what your age is doing. Again, following closely upon this and probably of more direct and immediate results upon your growth is the reading of educational journals. You need to have general knowledge but to be successful you need more specific information. This you can readily get from reading the great educational journals of the day. The lawyer reads books upon law, the minister reads his theology, the doctor burns the midnight oil in reading the medical books and journals of the best minds in his profession. So, fellow teacher, you need to come in contact with the best thought of your best teachers as it appears in the best educational journals of this day of educational periodicals. How many of you are reading these? Another essential to improvement, namely, attendance upon educational gatherings. A teacher needs something besides information. He needs enthusiasm, love for his work and professional pride. He can never be a great teacher without these. There is no more helpful source from which these arise than educational gatherings in which great questions and problems are discussed. The coming in contact with others, the clashing of thought with thought, the enthusiasm engendered by debate, come alone from these gatherings, and no teacher can afford to miss these if he would be fully equipped for his work.

The seventh avenue which seems may be appropriately mentioned just at this stage of this essay is, there must be system or a well prepared place to do these things. The teacher should sit down and deliberately map out each year's work and plan for reading systematically the best literature and history. Many people are educated but not cultured. There is a vast difference between education and culture. The teachers need alone all things else culture, knowing a great deal and yet rough, coarse and uncouth never makes a great teacher. In no way does the teacher so soon acquire culture as by constant reading of the best literature and at least a moderate familiarity with our best poets. Would you be cultured, read by some well prepared plan the best literature of the past and the present. Again, a timely suggestion it seems to us would be this: "Digest well what has been consumed." Many a man and woman, realizing that it is necessary to read extensively to be cultured, does so and yet fails to obtain the desired end. Why? They have made the mistake in not digesting well that which they have consumed. Be sure of this fact, you have grown only by that which has become a part of you, not by what you have been over. Modest reading with thought and the habit of appropriating a part at least of what has been read is far better than extensive skimming with nothing retained.

The teacher needs something else besides general preparation and culture of which we have been speaking up to this point. He must do special work—work of a special kind and this leads us to name as the next faithful source of improvement: He must study the lives of great educators, their methods, and plans of work.

This is positively necessary and is by far the most important method yet suggested. From the study of these comes direct information upon the subject matter of his chosen profession. It is informa-

Opportunity is Knocking

SOON it will be time to say farewell to old Winter and welcome the incoming Spring. Modern retailing knows no better time to close out stock than these between season days. We have cut our prices to move out the stock on hand and here's your opportunity. The prudent buyer will read this ad and call at once. The profit to us is in disposing of goods that, while new now, would be "last season's" next season. Your profit is in the money saved—and where else would you look for such splendid styles as we offer, at such small prices? Reductions touch all Clothing, Hats and Haberdashery—Boys' and Men's.

Don't let this opportunity get away from you.

FRANK WILSON,
The King Clothier.

tion that has not to be prepared. It is ready for us, it is of the right kind, and in character the best that can be had from any source. We get in compact form the thought of a lifetime of arduous labor. We get the experience observation and wisdom of lives earnestly devoted to our own profession.

No teacher has ever become eminent in his profession who did not have some familiarity with the lives of other great educators. We would emphasize with special force this absolute essential to progress and proficiency in our work. Following upon this, and suggested by the above is the last avenue which we shall mention, namely: cull the best from these and adapt these to your work and yourself to these—in other words make their thoughts, their methods and their plans your own with such changes as conditions and environments of your life make necessary. This done and you are equipped for the profession of your choice and you will never know failure. Nothing but success and advancement will be yours and from your life will come blessings to others. You will be able to serve, and in the estimation of our Master will be great.

Fellow teachers, we owe it to ourselves and those we teach to use every means of improvement. No one has a right to remain in the profession who has not the desire to improve, and who is not willing to utilize every means at his disposal which tends to this end. Let us arouse and avail ourselves, if not of any of these methods suggested, of some which lift us higher and higher, and make us better and more useful, so that at life's end it may be said of us that it was well we lived.

A correspondent of the Charleston News and Courier suggests that South Carolina should make a law that will render any one who carries a concealed weapon incapable of holding office in that state. A law like that will not do much good until the people become incapable of electing pistol-toters to office. Better get South Carolina to enforce the laws she has. Her present statutes have something to say about concealed weapons, murder, and the like. —Gastonia Gazette.

Started—Busted.

The well driving apparatus at Five Points raised steam again this morning, and the crowd of on-lookers responded to the whistle.

This was too good to last, however, for before the above paragraph could be handed to the printer there was another break. It seems that the pipe has split many feet below the surface, and if any well is made it will likely be in a new place.

FORGET THE PAST

On the first Tuesday in April it will be up to the people of Greenville to get in the band wagon and vote for improvements, or ever afterward hold their peace.

Friends, countrymen, it's no use to stand on the street corners and chew the rag about how you would manage the electric light plant and water works. The honorable non-script fathers of the city council will furnish all the talk that is necessary; the best thing you can do for your country is to shake the dust out of your jeans and walk up and vote for bonds, schools, lights, streets—in fact, vote for everything except whiskey. It is not necessary to vote often—just vote early and go out in the highways and other ways and pull in some other free, independent and sovereign citizen of this city who wants to see the June bug shake off its shell and bloom with beauty, health and learning. Let us hope there's a great day coming for Greenville, (with the gracious permission of the tobacco trust) and let us forget the failures of the past or remember them only to profit by them. The tide in the affairs of men which, if seized at the flood, leads on to fortune, is all but upon us. Seize that tide, my friends—grab her by the seat of the pantaloons and the nap of the neck and hold your holt like a republican freezing on to an internal revenue job, and some day you may have the proud privilege of being run over by a trolley car, chawed up by an automobile or clubbed by a policeman.

It is to be expected that every new legislature will want to put a new kink or two into the constitution, but we are inclined to hope that there will be no tampering with that instrument this session. Senator Bellamy's bill providing for a constitutional amendment to allow each race to further tax its property for educational purposes looks all right on the face of it, but we fail to see its urgent need. Taxation is a ticklish subject, and, we think, the less legislation looking to any increase of taxes the better. We ought to try to get along with one constitution a few years longer, and then we shall see what we shall see.

We suggest to the Greensboro Record that it explain to those of its farmer friends who are opposed to the Audubon society what "Audubon" means. How could the farmers be expected to take kindly to a society with a name that sounds so much like "Ohbedam"?

A German prince with the name Wolfgang Zu Stolberg-Stollberg has been found dead beside his rifle. It is not known whether the name or the rifle caused his death.

A high authority makes the statement that New York city is practically bankrupt. Now who stole the money from the New Yorkers who stole it from each other?

By all means let the president arrange to give each of his colored friends 40 acres and a mule. And if the mules are shy, substitute a life-size photo of himself.

A news item says that the president's car was dark when it passed through Altoona the other night. What else could be expected of Teddy's car?

Wonder if it's too unkind to suggest that Raleigh bed bugs had something to do with Representative Morton's motion that the house meet at 7 a m?

Lemuel Eli Quigg comes out of the congressional bribery case with colors flying, and some lesser lights come out with a pace-making record for lying.

Senator London's championship of the popular anti-saloon measure bid fair to make him as famous as England's greatest city.

A Virginia newspaper asks, "When is a Man Drunk? We suggest that it all depends upon the man."

A Petersburg darkey who has but slight regard for the president is turning white.

SHE DID NOT MARRY AGAIN

[Original.]

One day during the haying season of 1890 an old man stopped at a farm on the outskirts of an Iowa town and asked for work. Being short of hands, John Lupton, who managed the farm for his mother, concluded to take on the new hand even though he appeared to be too old for such hard work. However, Andrew McCabe proved a very good workman, and at the end of the haying season the family had become so much attached to him and he seemed so loath to depart that they permitted him to remain. He was patient and willing and took upon himself many duties that tended to relieve them of much of the drudgery. Mrs. Lupton, the mother of John, seemed especially interested in the old man. There was something about him that appealed to her, though she could not tell what it was—a familiar tone in the voice, an expression in the face, his gait as he walked from the well to the barn with a bucket of water in each hand. At any rate, there was a soft spot in the woman's heart for him, and she was always ministering to his comfort. She gave him one of the best rooms in the house, she would insist on his receiving the daintiest bits at table, and if he came in overheated she would gently force him into a hammock on the porch and often sit fanning him. Indeed, John Lupton, fearing that his mother might take it into her head to marry the old man, was beginning to think that he had better be sent away. However, when Lupton came to this decision the haying had come round again, and, to tell the truth, John was so fond of the old man himself that he put the matter off. One day McCabe was driving a load of hay from the field to the barn when the wagon upset and he fell, striking his head against a stone. He was carried unconscious to the farmhouse, and the village doctor was called. The case was pronounced critical, as the skull was injured, and a surgeon came from the city who performed the operation called trepanning, or removing a portion of the skull. The first words spoken by McCabe after the effects of the anesthetic had passed off were: "Hi, hi, Johnny Reel! See 'em run!" Turning to John Lupton, the surgeon asked him if he had ever heard the patient speak of having been in the army, to which John replied that he had never heard him speak of his early life at all. All listened for more words from McCabe, but his mutterings were incoherent. When he came to himself, the surgeon ordered every one from the room, and the patient was kept quiet until it was safe to permit him to sit up and receive visits from the family. Then the startling discovery was made that he did not remember any of them. He had had a few words with the surgeon, who told him that the year was 1900 and not 1864, as he supposed, and that he had doubtless been living for thirty-six years without remembrance of his own identity. The subject had scarcely been entered upon before the family doctor, who now had charge of the case, forbade his patient either to talk or think about it under penalty of probably losing his life. But now that McCabe had no recollection of those with whom he had been living an interest was aroused in finding out who he was, that he might be restored to his family. The doctor questioned the convalescent. "Are you sure your name is McCabe?" "McCabe? No. Who said so?" "What is it?" The old man looked troubled. He could not remember. "To what command did you belong?" "Company K, —th Iowa infantry." "We shall not have much trouble in finding out your identity, for this place is near the state capital, where the records are kept. I'll attend to it myself." When the doctor left the house, he informed the family that he had in his notebook a memorandum of the man's regiment and would look the matter up. Two days later he returned with a very singular expression on his face. After asking the condition of his patient he went into his room and closed the door. In a little while he called for every member of the family to come to the patient's bedside. When they were all assembled, they found McCabe propped up with pillows, but instead of the melancholy face he had worn, especially since the operation, he beamed upon them with a newly kindled interest. "I am going to make an announcement," said the doctor, "with reference to this veteran of the civil war. He enlisted in 1862 in the —th Iowa infantry and was reported missing after the battle of Nashville, since when he has lived under the name of Andrew McCabe. His real name is John Lupton, and he is the head of this family." The wife tottered to the bedside and sank on her husband's breast. John Lupton, Jr., came up behind his mother and grasped his father by the hand. The others stood by wonder-stricken. The doctor stood back. For some time there was no sound save the sobs of the woman who at twenty had been widowed and at fifty-five was reunited with her husband. If the Widow Lupton was attentive to the wanderer, she was a thousand times more devoted to him now that she knew he was the same John Lupton she had married and seen starting off in the pride of youth with his regiment and had since two years later mourned as dead. And John Lupton, Jr., rejoicing in the return of a father whom he had been taught to revere as one who had died in battle, ceased to worry that his mother had thought of marrying.

The man who spends half his time trying to classify people said he never saw so many left eyed passengers in one car. "What do you mean by left eyed passengers?" asked his companion. "People who use their left eye more than their right," was the reply. "The species is not common, and of course none but a student in ocular science would be able to detect offhand the few whom we do meet. A left handed person advertises his peculiarity at once; not so the left eyed man. As a rule it takes an oculist to determine which eye has been used most, but there are certain peculiarities of the pupil and lid that may be taken as pretty sure signs by the trained observer. "Left eyed people are made, not born. Most of us have been blessed by nature with eyes of equal visual power, but the attitude we strike when reading or writing causes us to exercise one eye more than the other, and the first thing we know we are right or left eyed. This is a one sidedness that should always be taken into consideration when buying glasses."—New York Times.

A Collector's Prayer.

So deeply passionate is Mr. Hodgkin's love for the rare and the curious that one thinks of the Thomas Hearne mentioned by him, who in all simplicity of heart thanked God for his success in collecting. "O most gracious and merciful Lord God," writes this devotee of old books, "wonderful in thy providence, I return humble thanks to thee for the care thou hast always taken of me. I continually meet with most signal instances of thy providence, and one act of yesterday, when I unexpectedly met with three old manuscripts, for which in a particular manner I return my thanks, beseeching thee to continue the same protection to me a poor, helpless sinner, and that for Jesus Christ his sake."

Balzac's Passwords.

It was not easy to make one's way into Balzac's house at Chatillot, Rue des Batilles, for it was guarded like the garden of the Hesperides. Two or three passwords were necessary, which were changed frequently for fear they should become known. I remember a few. To the porter we said, "The plum season has come," on which he allowed us to cross the threshold. To the servant who rushed to the staircase when the bell rang it was necessary to murmur, "I bring some brussels lace," and if you assured him that "Mme. Bertrand was quite well" you were admitted forthwith. This nonsense amused Balzac immensely, and it was perhaps necessary to keep out bores and other visitors still more disagreeable.—Miss Wormley's "Memoir of Balzac."

A Story of Bishop Williams.

It is told of Bishop Williams of Connecticut, for many years presiding bishop of the Episcopal church in America, who lived all his life a bachelor, that he was talking one day with a young man from the west about a tax a western state was trying to impose on bachelors, the tax to be increased a certain per cent for every ten years of bachelorhood. "Why, bishop," said the young man, "at four age you would have to pay about $100 a year." "Well," said the bishop quietly and in his old time vernacular, "it's wuth it."

His Part.

Little Jack—What did papa mean by saying that he was captain of this ship? Ma—Oh, that is only his way of saying that he is the head of the house. Little Jack—Then, if pa is the captain, what are you? Ma—Well, I suppose I am the pilot. Little Jack—Oh, yes, and then I must be the compass? Ma—The compass? Why the compass? Little Jack—Why, the captain and pilot are always boxing the compass, you know.

Needed Them All.

A well known authoress was once talking with a dilapidated bachelor, who retained little but his conceit. "It is time now," he said pompously, "for me to settle down as a married man, but I want so much. I want youth, health, wealth, of course; beauty, grace"— "Yes," said his fair listener sympathetically, "you poor man, you do want them all."

Prophetic.

Henry W. Grady less than a month before his death at the early age of thirty-nine remarked to a friend: "Imagine me as an old man! Picture me baldheaded, half blind, toothless and leaning on a cane! It can never be. It is too ridiculous. A man with my riotous blood, tremendous energy and restless activity must die young!"

Shirt Sleeves to Shirt Sleeves.

Oliver Wendell Holmes counted only three generations between shirt sleeves and shirt sleeves. A daughter of Tolstol in an interview with Henry Norman expressed the same idea in these words: "No Russian ever 'founds a family,' as you say. A man makes his fortune; his son lavishes it; his son disperses it."

Marks Time.

Nodd—Your baby isn't three months old yet, is he? Todd—Oh, yes. To be exact, I have been awake now just ninety-six nights. —Life.

Nash, a writer of the sixteenth century, says, "If a hogge loseth an eye, he dyeth presently." Also, "Goats take breath not at the mouth and nose only, but at ye earse (ears) also."

Coming Next Week

Judging from the number of times they were encored and re-encored, the Dunbar Company, which filled a place on the lecture course last night, was one of the most popular that has been in Maryland. They were called back from one to three times on each number. Those most popular with the audience, however, were appearance and responses of the quartette at the bells.—Maryville Tribune.

This is another testimonial of the Dunbar Company who will appear in Greenville Thursday, Feb. 27th. for the benefit of the Methodist church lot.

LETTER TO R. L. DAVIS.

Greenville N. C.

Dear Sir: You can't afford the best, and your business experience has shown you that it is the cheapest. If all men would learn this, they'd save a lot of money.

Devoe Lead and Zinc cost a little more per gallon than mixed paints, but it takes fewer gallons to paint a house, and it wears longer. It is the cheapest paint in the world.

Mr. Frank A. Morse, druggist of West Rutland, Vt., writes:

I ordered 15 gallons of your paint, thinking from experience with mixed paints, that it would require that amount to paint my house. I used only 8 gallons.

Mr. M. Austin Belcher, of Winthrop, Mass., bought eleven gallons; he only used six.

Our agent at Morrisville, N. Y. Mr. E. N. Dexter, writes:

On every job I have sold, Devoe Lead and Zinc has given good satisfaction and has taken a less quantity than expected.

We could make this letter a hundred times as long with such examples,

Yours truly,

F. W. DEVOE & Co.

New York

Legislation Tuesday.

There were enough measures already introduced in the legislature to keep both the senate and house busy discussing and passing bills at Tuesday's session. Not many new bills were presented, and these were chiefly local in their nature. Enough are already in hand to consume some time in their final disposition. Out of seventeen petitions read Tuesday in the Senate and twenty-eight in the House, thirty-six of them were for temperance. This shows the interest of the people throughout the state on this great question.

Well Nigh Hopeless, Indeed.

The negro man who last week passed a forged check for $500 on the bank at Scotland Neck under the name of Battle, was named Hyman and had been a school teacher. This is what education has done for him. It placed in his hands the power to commit a crime he would not otherwise have possessed, without raising his moral nature above its commission. Education is not always a means of improving the moral condition of those acquiring it. This seems to be especially the case with the negro race. Such acts as this injure with a great many white people the cause of public education of the negro.—Wilmington Messenger.

Dislocated Her Shoulder.

Mrs. Johanna Soderholm, of Ferguson Falls, Minn., fell and dislocated her shoulder. She had a surgeon get it back in place as soon as possible, but it was quite sore and pained her very much. Her son mentioned that he had seen Chamberlain's Pain Balm advertised for sprains and soreness, and she asked him to buy her a bottle of it, which he did. It quickly relieved her and enabled her to sleep, which she had not done for several days. The son was so much pleased with the relief it gave his mother that he has since recommended it to many others. For sale by Wooten's Drug Store, Greenville, Farmville Pharmacy, Farmville.
