Human needs create human questions. On one side the public is a vast army of human interrogation points. On the other side this store with its answers is surmountable. It matters not whether the question concerns a real or fancied need. A want is an incessant inquiry. We invite you to investigate and after you have investigated you will buy and buy liberal.

Barlow & Wilson's Minstrels.
Conroy and Murry are the hottest dancers in the country. They are with Barlow and Wilson's Minstrels.
Barlow and Wilson's Minstrels, which appeared here last night, opens a new era in minstrelsy. The performance was devoid of boisterousness, and the usual rough and uncouth language, which is common with some of the so-called first-class companies; yet the vivid portrayal of the unique attributes and the volent humor of the genuine darkey, was charming in the extreme. The vocal numbers were all given in a manner that took with the audience from the start, while the orchestra was all that was claimed for it. Barlow and Wilson's Minstrels always find a cordial welcome awaiting them here.—Salt Lake Daily Desert News.
Will appear at the opera house Friday night, 18th.

UNION SERVICES.

The Meetings Growing in Interest.

The attendance was quite large again, Tuesday night, at the union services in the Presbyterian church. Rev. J. A. Hornaday preached from the text "Thou fool: this night thy soul shall be required of thee." The sermon was strong and forcible. He showed that from the world's viewpoint the man of whom the text was spoken was a great success, in that he made abundant provision for himself in this world's goods; but from God's stand point he was a fool, in that he had neglected the most important matter of all, provision for his soul.

So many in this day and time do likewise. A year, a decade, a life time cannot determine what real success is—eternity alone can reveal it. After the sermon a number of people stood to request prayers.

The service at 10:30 this morning was conducted by Rev. F. G. Hartman.

Service tonight begins at 7.30.

Of course we said "certainly," whereupon she handed us an old piece of candy wrapped in yaller paper. That wasn't the kind, and a sort of sameness as before settled on us. A TRUE CONFEDERATE HERO.

Brave Deed of a Pitt Countian at Fort Fisher.

There is living in this county a man almost unknown who deserves a high place in the annals of individual heroism and an affectionate remembrance by every lover of the "Last Cause." That man is Taylor Harris, of Chicod township, and the incident I am about to relate occurred during the siege of Fort Fisher in 1864.

I had often heard the incident referred to spoken of by my friend, Mr. J. J. Laughinghouse, himself a soldier in the Confederate army, but a few days since as I walked into the warehouse one morning I heard one of the truck hands cry out "Taylor Harris, six lots." I immediately went to where Mr. Harris was unloading his tobacco and asked him to come in the office as soon as he was through with his tobacco, as I wanted him to tell me in his own way the story of how he saved the Confederate blockade steamer during the bombardment of Fort Fisher. "Oh!" said he "it has been so long that I have about forgotten it." I insisted and the following is an outline of how this plain peaceable farmer and good citizen acted the hero under circumstances that should keep his memory fresh in the minds of Southern men as long as daring and valor constitute the chief exponents of bravery.

For the purpose of supplying as far as possible the North Carolina soldiers with medicines and such other much needed necessities, Governor Vance had fitted up a steamer that ran the blockade between Wilmington, Nassau and other points, and it was during the siege of Fort Fisher that this vessel was attempting to come in Wilmington. She was sighted by the Federals and fired upon. Realizing that she would either be sunk or captured by the Yankees, her commander ran her on the beach and the crew swam ashore, whereupon the Federals boarded the deserted ship for the purpose of capturing and confiscating her cargo.

Colonel Lamb, who commanded Fort Fisher, had several pieces of artillery pulled down the beach and turned them on the Federals who were attempting to blow up the ship. After several shots had been fired the Yankees, finding it getting too hot, emptied several kegs of powder on her deck, and attached a slow match by saturating a string in kerosene oil and placing one end into the powder and firing the other end and then left her to blow to pieces. Volunteers were called for to save the doomed ship. Quite a number at once responded but Turner Harris was the first to reach the vessel. Clamoring over her gunwads he saw at a glance that the sputtering flame was within a few inches of the explosive, and realizing that an awkward step might throw some of the powder into the flame he carefully stepped over the outer rim of the powder circle and clasped the burning string with both hands, walked to the edge of the boat and threw it overboard.

An instant more and the daring little sea rover that had run so many perilous voyages to bring the balm of relief to the wounded, suffering soldiery of North Carolina would have been blown to atoms. And Taylor Harris at the risk of his life saved the ship. A soldier's duty it is true, and yet the discharge of that duty so nobly and faithfully performed is that which draws in us admiration for such deeds.

For to him the success of the Southern arms promised no alluring reward, nor defeat its stinging terrors.

Taylor Harris is now seventy years old and has lived a quiet peaceable, good citizen of our county all his life, and like thousands of others he will go to his reward practically unknown, yet a greater hero than Hobson. O. L. JOYNER.

Talking about "grafts" and grafters, Col. Fairbrother says they are not all confined to the departments in Washington by a jug full. It is the colonel's opinion that almost all of the fashionable towns have them, for fashion rules the roost, even down to the minutest details. "There are undertaker grafters, livery grafters, flower grafters and the rest of them," sagely remarks the colonel; "funerals ought to be abolished. I mean these fashionable funerals wherein the aforesaid grafters get a chance to do business. A liveryman will charge you just as much for a carriage to drive two blocks to a funeral as he will for an entire day. It's a great shame, that's what it is; it ought to be abolished. Some beloved old Catholic priest a number of years ago took up the reformation, but he could not make it. I think they crucified him and put him out of business."

The colonel will find many to agree with him, but it is feared they will not carry out his ideas.—Greensboro Record.

A BASHFUL COUPLE

(Original.)
 "What's the matter with our little Polly, Sarah?"
 "I don't know, John."
 "She looks sad all the while. Perhaps she misses the society of young people. It's hard on a girl of her age to be shut up with her grandparents. Besides, she's of an age when I fancy a young girl ought to have a lover."
 "I wonder if she has anything on her mind."
 "It's my thinking she's unconscious of the true cause—the natural yearning for husband and children."
 "Polly's always been backward in encouraging young men."
 "We'll have to give her more opportunity to mingle with them. In that way her bashfulness will gradually wear off."
 The next day grandma announced to Polly that she might invite Edward Dwight, a young midshipman from the Naval academy home on leave, to tea. Polly colored at the mention of such a thing.
 "Oh, grandma!" she exclaimed.
 "Well, what is it, Polly?"
 "Do you really think we'd better invite him to tea?"
 "Certainly. Why not, child?"
 "Oh, I don't know. I'll think about it."
 "John," said grandma that evening to her husband, "I never in my life saw a girl so timid about meeting one of the opposite sex as Polly. I've told her to invite the midshipman to tea, but I'm afraid she'll never have the courage to do so."
 "Don't force her, Sarah."
 However, the invitation was given and accepted. Young Dwight appeared on the evening in question and sat talking with grandma while supper was being prepared. He was somewhat incoherent in his remarks and replies, and the old man thought him as easily embarrassed as Polly. Then they all went in to supper, and under the influence of the hot biscuit, cream potatoes, thin slices of ham and a salad, re-enforced by the grandparents' efforts to make the young people feel easy in each other's company, all was going well, when grandma made a bad slip of the tongue. She was dreaming of the time when her dear little Polly might be the wife of an admiral, and in the midst of her reverie, having occasion to speak to Polly, called her Mrs. Dwight.
 Had a 2,000 pound projectile been exploded on the deck of a man-of-war it could not have created as much consternation as this blunder produced upon the young people. The midshipman turned white, the girl red, while grandma and grandpa may be said to have looked blue. Grandpa saw the midshipman dart a glance at Polly, half angry, half surprised. What it meant the old man could not explain, but he took it to mean that Dwight had no fancy for matrimony, which, considering his youth and condition, was not surprising.
 There was no comfort at table after the fatal blunder, and grandma, who had caused it all, had the adroitness to leave out the cake and preserves, which had been intended for a last course, and, rising from the table, led the way to the drawing room. But grandpa found something to take him out to the barn, and grandma found it necessary to interview the servants. The young couple were left sitting on opposite sides of the room, and grandma could have bitten off her tongue at having spoiled an incipient affair between a boy and a girl. She wished she could have left them not so far apart, but did not dare risk any more blunders by trying to bring them together. She was busy for some time about household matters, and grandpa was talking to a neighbor. Then grandpa came in, and the old couple went upstairs.
 "The young fellow don't seem to be in a hurry to go," remarked grandpa at 9 o'clock.
 "Hasn't he gone?" replied grandpa.
 "I thought I heard the gate click some time ago."
 "I don't know. Perhaps we'd better go down and see."
 They went together softly downstairs. All was still in the drawing room. The door was shut, but if there had been an ordinary conversation between two people it could have been heard in the hall. The old couple listened for a moment; then grandpa remarked that he reckoned the room was empty. He opened the door.
 Wonder of wonders! There sat Polly on the midshipman's lap and in the midshipman's arms.
 Polly sprang up, and Dwight, rising, stood looking with a mingling of sheepishness, assurance, conscious pride and happiness. Then he spoke out like the little man he was:
 "This can go on no longer. Polly and I have been married for a month. If it is known, I'll be shipped from the academy, for no undergraduate is allowed to be married. If you good people will keep our secret all will come out right. I graduate in the coming June and will then be an officer in the United States navy. If you object to me as a husband for Polly, I shall blame myself; if not, I shall be glad for what I've done."
 By this time the old people had somewhat recovered from their surprise. Grandpa seized the boy's hand and Polly flew into grandma's arms.
 "John," said the old lady before they went to bed, "how do you suppose they found the times and places to meet?"
 "Don't know, Sarah. Reckon it runs in the blood. Do you remember how you met me every few days for two months without your parents knowing anything about it?"
 "Do tell!" replied grandma meditatively. "It's astonishing how things keep succeeding one another the same way."

When You Have a Cold,

The first action when you have a cold should be to relieve the lungs. This is best accomplished by the free use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. This Remedy liquefies the tough mucus and causes its expulsion from the air cells of the lungs, produces a free expectoration, and opens the secretions. A complete cure soon follows. This remedy will cure a severe cold in less time than any other treatment and it leaves the system in a natural and healthy condition. It counteracts any tendency toward pneumonia. Editorial Luxuries in Carolina.

This is from the Clarkson Express: "It's rather a queer time of year for strawberries, but in this delightful climate of ours we raise them any time. Miss Empire Brown, of Western Prong, sent us a nice box of them yesterday." Our friend of the Express should consider himself very fortunate while living in a land like this. Especially should he appreciate the ladies who send him nice boxes of strawberries at this "queer time of year." The Journal's time may come some day for such luxuries, but just now old field peas and hog jowl are the finest dishes we enjoy. Hard to beat.—Duplin Journal.

Dorothy Dodd SHOES.

The "Dorothy Dodd" Shoe has that something in beauty and style that means individuality.

It possesses "style" in the highest degree; it gives distinction to the foot. In the diversity of kinds there are styles for every person from the exquisite evening slipper to the sturdy winter street boot; they all have a light, airy gracefulness peculiarly their own, which is sure to appeal to a woman's eye. "DOROTHY DODD" Shoes Fit, They Fit Perfectly.

Shoes should always fit closely under and about the instep so as to make it impossible for the foot to slip forward and crowd the toes, while the ball and toes should have plenty of room thus giving free play to the foot.

This is exactly what "Dorothy Dodd" shoes do. Our new Spring Styles in oxfords and sandals will be ready shortly.
