Daily Services at the Episcopal Church.

This the last week of the Lenten season, generally known as Holy week, brings to a climax the penitence and self-discipline of Lent, and absorbs both into the contemplation of the Passion and resurrection of Our Lord. There is, perhaps, no week in the whole life of Our Lord on earth that embraces so many events of such profound significance in His work of Redemption as does the week immediately preceding His resurrection. The Christian church, from the days of the Apostles to the present day, has reverently observed this week in commemoration of Our Lord's agony in Gethsemane, His atoning sacrifice on Calvary, and His glorious resurrection on that first great Easter day. There will therefore be daily services during this week at 4 p. m. in the Episcopal church, at which there will be a brief address each day reviewing the events of that day in Our Lord's life.

All are cordially invited to be present. We should remember that the Suffering and Atoning Sacrifice of Our Lord was not for a chosen few, but for all mankind, and everyone who can attend these services should do so in thankful remembrance of Him who died that they might live.

Friday, being Good Friday, service will be at 11 a. m. The offering at this service will be for mission work among the Jews. The same cordial invitation to be present is extended to all.

W. E. Cox, Pastor.

Someone shouting "fire" in a church at New Haven, Conn., caused a panic and a score of people injured while the congregation was rushing out.

Mrs. B. F. Shelton, of Speed, arrived Monday evening to visit Mrs. S. T. Hooker.

ANOTHER WOLD ABOUT RAFFLING.

A Communication
A few days ago public notice was directed to the growing evil of raffling or gambling. That "communication" was the result of interest awakened in this subject among the ministers and some of the lawyers and laymen of the different churches. These gentlemen make themselves jointly responsible for the warning given to offenders. They propose and have agreed also to stand responsible for the prosecution of any and all offenders hereafter.

This is no idle threat. After frequent discussion of the problem these gentlemen decided to publish the civil law and warn offenders, as was done.

The evil itself was more widespread than any one imagined, bad as it was known to be. From every quarter of the town facts have been gathered the past few days, showing an alarming state of things. Children have been raffling their toys. One little boy raffled a dollar, receiving therefor one dollar and a half, a slick way to make fifty cents. Another enterprising boy sold chances in a 30 cent rooster and took in over $3 on the deal. Any number of similar incidents could be cited from recent occurrences. The note of warning was raised not an hour too soon. The evil exists. No one questions it. What shall be done? Nothing! Shall we permit the gambling habit to be fastened upon the children, as well as adults, and say nothing about it, because, forsooth, some grown people have been guilty, and to speak of the sin would hurt their feelings?

One individual was heard to say of the former communication: "It was too personal." A gentleman made this rejoinder. "Any one in five hundred could have said it was too personal. I for one was guilty. I took chances in the pony."

The sin of gambling is to be avoided in the home and on the streets, as well as in a "gambling hell." The place does not change the character of the evil. Therefore, the gentlemen referred to above make this appeal to the good people of Greenville to rise up and stamp out this sin and folly. Its stain has been upon our town long enough. Any custom that our lawmakers condemn, and impose such heavy penalty against, must be dangerous. Every thoughtful person will see this.

Frost.

There was considerable frost this morning, and it seems to have extended well over the South. Reports from Texas say the young cotton was killed.

Public Library.

The ladies of the End of the Century Club have undertaken a most laudable enterprise in planning to establish a public library for the free use of the people of the town. To begin this the club will hold a book reception in the graded school building, on Friday night April 8th during which a delightful program of music will be rendered. As many of our people as can do so are requested to take with them to this reception a book to be donated to the library. This beginning of the library should be marked by a large donation of books. A public library will prove a great help to the town.

A tornado near Carruthersville, Mo., destroyed many lives and much property.

THE REFLECTOR AT HOME.

Printing Plant Now in its Own Quarters.

THE REFLECTOR is at last at home in its own building. A little more than three years ago the building it occupies was purchased with the view of making a permanent home for the paper. While possession of the building was taken and the plant moved at that time, only the business office was immediately in the building, the printery going next door for the time being. This was because the upper story of the building was at that time occupied by the Masons and other secret orders as lodge rooms, and as no other place for meeting was available to them, it was arranged that the lodges should not be disturbed until they also could get a permanent home.

Following this the Masons set to planning for a Masonic temple. Such an undertaking as theirs must of necessity move slowly at first, but they were persistent and their noble efforts are shown in a handsome temple that is an ornament to the town and an honor to the fraternity. All the other lodges that have been meeting in the same hall with them take quarters in the new building. The temple is near enough completed for the lodges to move and their first meetings were held there last week.

The lodges vacating THE REFLECTOR building is followed by the plant being moved in, and the paper now has a home of which any country paper might well feel proud. We now have large, comfortable quarters for the printing department, with ample light and plenty of room for adding improvements, which will be put in from time to time as they can be procured.

The business office of the paper has not changed but remains in the corner room on the first floor where it has been these last three years.

THE REFLECTOR extends a cordial invitation to all to drop in at the paper's home at any time. It is your home paper, you have helped to make it and helped it get a home for itself, and the privilege is yours to come in at your pleasure, assured that a cordial welcome awaits you.

If you have business at the office you will find some one glad to wait on you, and if you have business in the printing rooms you will find Mr. W. F. Burch in charge ready to serve you with pleasure. The entrance to the printery is by the stairway leading from Third street.

Bear the fact in mind that when ever you invest a dollar in THE REFLECTOR we do our best to give you the worth of your money with interest.

Old Papers Cheap.

While THE REFLECTOR plant is being moved we find a large lot of old papers on hand. To save the trouble of moving these they will be sold in lots of 100 at 15 cents. They are serviceable for wrapping paper and various other uses. They will be offered at this price only two days.

THE WEATHER.

Fair tonight, warmer in western portion. Wednesday showers with rising temperature.

YOUR SPRING SUIT'S READY.

We say YOUR SUIT because it's built just as you would order it built. Built just as an exclusive tailor would build it, and all without the bother of measuring, fitting, chalking, trying on, etc., and without the fancy price the tailor would surely charge for it. The Best of Cutters and Tailors put all the life and go into our Clothing that it is possible to put into garments. The fabrics are new, the cuts are new. Step in and we'll take pleasure in showing you Your Suit, for we believe it will be yours indeed after you see it. Great range in prices.

MUNFORD'S OPENING.

Magnificent Display of New Goods.

Munford's big store was the center of attraction today and looked like a great bazaar was in progress there. It was the occasion of his annual spring opening of Easter goods, and it was a great success. In the early hours of the day ladies began thronging the store and all day they came and went in large numbers. That they were delighted with the display was attested by their praise and admiration of the beautiful goods.

The large centre display window of the store presented a magnificent arrangement of flowers, trimmings and hats, the design being most artistic. Every department inside the store was replete with the most fashionable of these season's output. There are dress goods of every hue and pattern, trimmings and ornaments beyond description, while the millinery was a marvel of beauty. The pattern hats are exquisite productions, giving the very highest touch of art in all designs and shapes.

Nothing seems wanting to make the opening attractive at every point, and the display is most creditable to the big store and to Mr. Munford and his clever army of assistants.

The opening will continue tomorrow.

HOW HE GROWED.

From Childhood to Manhood on a Slow Train.

Here is a joke that came to the ears of THE REFLECTOR and is too good to keep.

A drummer who wanted to take a trip on this branch of the Coast Line, bought a ticket at Kinston and left that town on the north bound freight. The conductor being much occupied with other things did not hurry about taking up tickets, and the train had gone many miles before he appeared in the coach with his punch. Reaching the drummer he called "ticket" and one was promptly handed to him.

The conductor looked at the ticket, then at the drummer, and casting his eyes from the one to the other again, remarked:

"You seem to have made a mistake, you cannot travel on this kind of ticket."

"That ticket is all right," interrupted the drummer, "I bought it at Kinston."

"But this is a child's ticket and you appear to be a man," explained the conductor.

"Is that so?" asked the jolly knight of the grip sack. "Well, I was a child when I bought that ticket, but your train runs so slow that I grew to be a man before reaching my destination."

TIM and BEAUTY

She was at once the wildest, most daring and most reckless little sou-brette to be found in any of the bohemian studios of Paris. No gathering was complete without the music of her laughter, the light of her black eyes. Scarce a picture was deemed complete until she had passed upon it her own merciless criticism, for Tim, with all the boldness of vulgarity that was yet her greatest charm, was still an apostle of the beautiful and the true and the dramatic in the highest and best sense of the words.

Perchance there came a time when her moral and social being underwent a change, and the change came with the advent of the Beauty.

There, in a society where all received a nickname, he had been dubbed the "Beauty" from the first moment of his appearance among them, and the name, by reason of its appropriateness, clung to him.

Certainly there was no satire in it. Tall and well proportioned, with long, straight features and clustering brown curls about his well shaped head, the man they dubbed the Beauty was handsome indeed.

He had come to Paris to work—Paris, the wonderful, the great, wherein life was life indeed and art was art. His name was Cecil Brandt, and he came from some remote town in the west of England.

She was very silent when she first saw him. She seemed to gaze at him wonderingly, as at some rare creature that was different from anything else she knew. They twitted her afterward about it, saying she was unnaturally quiet. One was even audacious enough to suggest laughingly that it was a case of love at first sight and that the mighty Tim's wings were singed at last. But she broke away from them and shut herself in her room and flung herself on the floor there and cried the night away, weeping perchance the first bitter tears that her reckless life had known, tears born of an undefined feeling in her breast that there was something wanting in her, some womanly attribute that she had never caught and perhaps might never reach now.

Thereafter came the change in her. She was in all things the same reckless, merry hearted Tim of old days, yet with all this there was a subtle alteration. Her dress was neater and quieter, her tumbled hair was smoothed more often. She would creep up to his studio sometimes and stand there timidly watching him. He painted as well as he did everything else. There were a power and a dramatic force about his work that were lacking in the work of most of the men of the schools.

"You love your work?" she asked suddenly one day as she stood near him.

"Love it," he exclaimed. "Yes, indeed. What would my life be without it, Tim?"

"You paint well," she said, with a decisive nod of the head.

He laughed quickly.

"Who made you a critic, little one?" he asked, turning to her.

She shrugged her shoulders.

"They all show me their work. I know the style of each one of them. Some will never paint, poor boys! Some take to it as a baby to its mother's milk. But they all ask me. I am no critic, but I know when trees are trees and when figures are faces live. My father was an artist here in the Quartier."

"An artist? Have you never painted?"

She laughed, showing all her white teeth.

"Painted? Never. I have all my work to do to live. There is no time for that, even if I could. I assist madame, I run errands, I—I am many things. But my father was clever. He would have been a great artist had he lived."

"How long has he been dead?" she asked idly, still painting steadily.

"Soon after I was born. It was absinth that killed him. I do not remember him. I was a baby. But they told me, and he was very clever. Since"—she shrugged her shoulders carelessly again—"I have been here as long as I can remember. Every one has been good to me."

He felt a vague and tender pity for the girl and showed it perhaps in many little ways, and Tim's grateful heart went out to him in a love and loyalty that she had never felt for any man yet.

He was engaged at that time upon a picture for the Salon—the picture that afterward appeared upon its walls and drew all artistic Paris, all the artistic world, in fact, to gaze upon it in wonder and admiration—the picture that brought fame and fortune to the Beauty in one short, glad, triumphant hour. It has scarcely been forgotten even now. It was called "Hunted" and represented a slave girl, with wild, haggard eyes and affrighted face, tearing through the thorns that had torn her flesh and clothes and stumbling over the broken ground of a dreary landscape.

The lurid light of the setting sun was behind her, topping the dark line of hills, and the figures of her pursuers could be discerned far away, black against the flaming sky.

The Beauty was very poor at that time and was working with redoubled energy at the picture, for it must be finished by a certain date, and there was much yet to do. Perhaps insufficient nourishment and want of exercise and hard work all told upon a frame that was never of the strongest. Certainly the Beauty fell ill one evening, fainting as he laid aside his brushes, and was in the torments of a high fever for many weeks. The friends who heard of it and came to see him found Tim, with a white face, installed as nurse. She promptly ordered them away.

"Get to your work, boys," she said as she thrust them out of the door. "He wants a woman here. I've nursed some of you before; leave me to it now. I'll tell you if I want help. But it is a little thing."

Surely man was never watched and tended on this sorrowful earth before or since as Tim watched and tended the Beauty. In all his worst ravings she never left him. To the kindly doctor who suggested that she must rest she held out a firm young hand, and with all her eyes in the appeal begged that he would test her pulse.

"I am firm and quiet and strong," she said steadily. "What more would you want?"

And the doctor looked perplexed, but patted her cheek and left her with the Beauty.

She found that all her patient's ravings took but one turn. Where-soever they might begin they came back always to one point, and that one point was his unfinished picture. Now it was finished, he thought, and had been accepted. Again he would cry bitterly that the days were passing and that they were holding him back from it and that it would never be completed in time, and he would struggle to get out of bed, even in his awful weakness, to reach the picture.

Tim well knew that the time was short, and she thought with despair of the uncompleted canvas and of all that it was to have done and of all that it would never do now. She had had a half formed hope in her mind at first that he might sometimes in his delirium cry her name, and she listened eagerly, but he spoke always of the picture.

At last one day, when it wanted but a week to the time when the pictures must be sent in, he suddenly cried her name, and she ran to him and bent over him.

"Tim—Tim," he whispered, scarcely knowing her, "the picture, the picture! Will it never be done—will it never be done? O God, how they hold me back! Will no one help me? It is my life—my life!"

He exhausted himself presently and lay quiet, and she stole away, with tear bedimmed eyes, into his studio and uncovered the great picture. So near and yet so far, she thought. If he could but start now the picture might be completed.

She went softly back into the room again and found him apparently sleeping. Gradually she slipped down beside the bed on her knees and raised her young face, and a prayer stole up out of her careless heart, the first that her abandoned life had known.

She knelt there for a long time, with her face hidden, then rose quietly and pressed her lips to his and went out to the studio, as one walks in a dream, with a new, strange light on her face, and took up the brushes and palette fearlessly and set to work.

Day after day she painted without hesitation, kissing his lips always before she started, telling no one, but keeping the studio locked from all eyes.

She grew thin and weak and ill. All the bright and buoyant young life of her seemed to be absorbed in her work. With a dreaming wonder, that was in itself the greatest wonder of all, she saw the picture grow under her hands until it was finished.

They had missed her a couple of days and, seeking her, found her lying peacefully at the foot of the easel. The Beauty was better and convalescent and knew them and inquired for her. At first they thought she was asleep from exhaustion, but on trying to rouse her they found that she was dead. The old doctor said that it was heart trouble, and she had died in her sleep.

The Beauty never knew. In his delirium he had joined so often the real and the unreal that he came to believe that he had completed the picture himself. At all events, it made him famous.—True Flag.

Heroic Mother.

A Japanese widow was the mother of one son upon whom she depended for support. She wanted her boy to become a soldier, but under the military rules he could not be accepted because she was dependent upon him. But neither rules nor laws could thwart her patriotism.

She killed herself that her beloved might give his services and perhaps his life to his country. Nations made up of that kind of spirit are not easily conquered.

COLDS CAUSE PNEUMONIA.

One of the most remarkable cases of a cold, deep-seated on the lungs, causing pneumonia, is that of Mrs. Gertrude E. Feener, Marion, Ind., who was entirely cured by the use of One Minute Cough Cure. She says: "The coughing and straining so weakened me that I ran down in weight from 148 to 92 pounds. I tried a number of remedies to no avail until I used One Minute Cough Cure. Four bottles of this wonderful remedy cured me entirely of the cough, strengthened my lungs and restored me to my normal weight, health and strength." Sold by John L. Wooten.

DO YOU WANT STRENGTH?

If you want to increase your strength you must add to and not take from the physical. In other words, food that you eat must be digested, assimilated and appropriated by the nerves, blood and tissues before being expelled from the intestines. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure adds to the physical. It gives strength to and builds up strength in the human system. It is pleasant to the taste and palatable, and the only combination of digestants that will digest the food and enable the system to appropriate all of its health and strength-giving qualities. Sold by J. L. Wooten.

A CURE FOR ECZEMA.

My baby had Eczema so bad that its head was a solid mass of scabs, and its hair all come out. I tried many remedies but none seemed to do any good until I used DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. The Eczema is cured, the scabs are gone, and the little one's scalp is perfectly clean and healthy, and its hair is growing beautifully again. I cannot give too much praise to DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve.—Frank Farmer, Bluff City, Ky. In buying Witch Hazel Salve look out for counterfeits. DeWitt's is the original and the only one containing pure Witch Hazel. The name E. C. DeWitt & Co is on every box. Sold by J. L. Wooten.
