The "Martin Family."

The "Martin Family" will open a revival meeting at the Christian church on Monday night May 1st. They are now in Kinston, having been there eight days.

A report from there this morning gives eighty eight confessions to date and the tide of interest rising.

The Christian church having proven inadequate the meeting has moved to the Baptist church and not all can be accommodated even there.

People from Kinston say that "Dr. Martin is a second Sam Jones with the slang left out." He is a man of great natural force and a powerful speaker, while his talented and consecrated family are equally efficient in musical productions.

EASTER AT THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Magnificent Decorations and Splendid Music.

Sunday was veritable "red letter day" at the Christian church. The beautiful decorations, an especially fine musical program, together with ideal weather, brought out large congregations and called forth unstinted praise for those who under the able leadership of Mrs. T. E. Hooker, arranged the decorations and furnished the music.

The decorative scheme was conceded by all to be the most beautiful ever seen in Greenville at Easter-tide, and from early morning until night an almost constant stream of lovers of the beautiful were visiting the church, the doors of which were left open giving all an opportunity to come and go at will.

The electric lights, which were used in public service for the first time, gave an abundance of light at the night service and brightened the charm of the floral display and added a cheerfulness to the atmosphere impossible to create with any number of oil lamps.

The chandelier and clusters are hung close to the ceiling thus doing away with the disagreeable and painful glare which is so prominent where the lights is within the range of vision. The pulpit is lighted by means of a desk lamp which gives ample light where it is needed and is shaded from the congregation.

The church is opened for inspection at all times and anyone desiring to look over the lighting system to ascertain the power and effect of the different arrangements can do so any night by notifying the pastor, who will be pleased to aid those who wish to secure information for lighting elsewhere.

LOST HIS WAD.

And Was Fined For Disorderly Conduct.

Oliver Smith, of Chicod, came to Greenville Monday and remained here over night. That night between 8 and 9 o'clock he made the outcry on the street that he had been robbed, and claimed that a negro boy had snatched his purse containing $75 and run off while going with him to the hotel.

Smith was considerably excited and much under the influence of liquor. He had a warrant issued for a colored boy named Zeno McGowan, whom he charged with the robbery. This morning a hearing was had before Mayor Wooten but he did not think the evidence against the boy was sufficient to hold him.

There was also a warrant against Smith for disorderly conduct. He plead guilty and was fined $2 and costs.

EARLY CLOSING.

Merchants and Clerks Will Get a Rest.

The dry goods, furniture and hardware stores have begun early closing for the summer. The following merchants have signed an agreement to close at 7 o'clock p. m., except Saturday, from April 24th to August 1st:

Wiley Brown, Pulley & Bowen, W. B. Brown, C. L. Wilkinson & Co., Baker & Hart, J. B. Cherry & Co., Frank Wilson, B. Fleishman & Bro., A. H. Taft, H. L. Carr, A. K. McGowan & Bro., Taft & Vandyke, James Brown, J. R. Corey, Sam T. White, A. E. Tucker, Fleming & Mooring, J. F. Davenport, C. S. Forbes.

Shooting at Goldsboro.

It is rumored here that a difficulty occurred in Goldsboro Monday night between Arnold Barber and a man named Edmundson, both prominent citizens of that city, in which Edmundson shot Barber. One report said the shooting would prove fatal, while another said it was not serious.

AYDEN ITEMS.

AYDEN, N. C., April 25, 1905.

Bentley Harris and Bernard Greene, of Greenville, were here a short while Saturday. It was a kind of a curiosity to see 'Nard.' In fact we don't remember ever having seen him this far from home before. We were glad to see him, he seems like some of our folks.

Friend Bill Tucker never forgets his friends. Saturday he presented Dr. Skinner, Ralph Jonsson and your humble servant, each with a beautiful rosebud, as pretty as we ever saw. We wore our's on the lapel of our coat. Everbody was guessing, but they couldn't tell whether it was a damsel fair, an old maid sweet, or a blushing widow. We didn't say.

Barnes Sumrell spent the Sabbath in Winterville.

Winterville was well represented here Sunday.

Last Friday morning a colored woman living a short distance in the country came to town bringing her sick child to see the doctor. Before she could do so, the child was taken worse and died in its mother's arms. The sympathy of all who witnessed the sad occurrence was very manifest and many were the words and offerings of aid tendered the bereaved parent. It was a sad scene as the poor mother left for her home with the dead child in her arms and would not be comforted.

Ed Patrick and E. S. Edwards were in Greenville yesterday.

The Easter egg hunt was a huge affair and greatly enjoyed by the children of the town.

Ben Nunn has gone to Emporia, Va., and Mrs. Nunn is with friends in Greenville during his absence.

Mrs. Bettie Edwards, who has been on a visit to relatives here for sometime, returned to her home in Greenville Friday.

On the 20th inst. Amos Tyson started out on a speculative venture. His first advent was near Shelmerdine, his second a few miles further on and was of a more serious nature, but his third is about to result in a more disastrous catastrophe as there seems some likelihood of a successful termination.

The mill of the Ayden Milling and Mfg. Co. which has been out of repair is now in first condition and they are prepared to accommodate on shortest notice all who may honor them with patronage. They also call special attention to their line of beautiful buggies.

We have shook hands with some kind of folks during the last two days. Big folks, little folks, old folks, young folks, white folks, black folks, yellow folks in fact all kind of folks, governors, senators, congressmen, generals, colonels, majors and everything and every kind has had a shake.

Mrs. Eddie Coward came up from Kinston Monday.

Mrs. A. L. Gerkin, after spending sometime with Mrs. Georgia Raker has returned to her home in Richmond.

Mrs. Delphia Parker, of Falkland, has been visiting Mrs. J. T. Smith, Sr. She returned to her home Monday.

Arm Broken.

Saturday evening W. E. Harris was going along Evans street, rolling a carriage containing one of his children and a little daughter walking near them. By some accident the little girl fell down on the pavement and broke her right arm near the elbow.

ARRIVING DAILY.

There is one thing that we do not claim in our business to do and that is to sell goods cheaper than they can be bought—neither do we want to create the impression that our store is full of shop worn, out of style goods nor by filling our store with show bills and sign boards will we try to impress false ideas in your mind that we are going out of business, but we do wish it understood that we are receiving daily shipments of the newest things in and kindred materials so desirable with the women folk of Greenville and Pitt county, and we do hope that you will at least favor us with a visit to see these many new things.

TUESDAY, APR. 25, 1905.

ALL SHOULD TAKE WARNING.

A case was heard in the Superior court here Monday that should be a warning to all young men against drinking whiskey. Two young men of good family and high character suffered the humiliation of confessing in court the commission of an outrageous crime, for which a heavy fine was imposed upon them, and but for earnest pleading in their behalf and the leniency of the court would have served a sentence in prison.

These young men, Ed Hardy and Dow Beaman, of Greene county, came to Greenville one day and got drunk. On their way home they overtook A. J. Moyer, a citizen of this county, in the road, drove recklessly into his buggy and because of being rebuked for such conduct assaulted him with a pistol. At the trial they entered a plea of guilty and threw themselves upon the mercy of the court. Prominent officials of their county were present and testified to the excellent character of the young men, that they had never been in any trouble before, had never been drunk before, and their friends were greatly surprised that they had committed this offense.

Ex-Gov. C. B. Aycock appeared for the young men and made an earnest appeal to the court in their behalf. He said that while the magnitude of the offense must be admitted, the young men had confessed that they were drunk and unconscious of their conduct, and that they had suffered untold mortification and shame over such an act. He spoke a great truth when he said it shows what men will do when they are under the influence of whiskey.

Judge Webb in passing judgment upon the young men spoke of the magnitude of their offense. He said he almost felt it his duty to sentence them to prison, yet because of the high character they had shown and the excellent lives they had led he would only impose a fine of $50 each.

During the ordeal of the trial the young men showed that they suffered greatly. THE REFLECTOR does not make this comment upon the case for the purpose of adding to their humiliation, but only to give a word of warning to them and to others of the dangers of whiskey. This one drunk came near putting a blight upon their lives that they could never live down. Character that it takes years to build can be blasted by a single act, and nothing will so dethrone a man's reason and make him liable to commit crime as whiskey. Beware how you touch a thing so fraught with evil.

Greenville extends a cordial welcome to the delegates and visitors to the missionary institute and district conference here this week. Our people are glad to have these faithful servants of the Master in our midst and hope their deliberations may be crowned with abundant blessing.

The New Haven doctor who says that women have ugly knees is fixing to get himself in hot water.

Conviction Follows Trial

When buying loose coffee or anything your grocer happens to have in his bin, how do you know what you are getting? Some queer stories about coffee that is sold in bulk, could be told, if the people who handle it (grocers), cared to speak out.

Could any amount of mere talk have persuaded millions of housekeepers to use the leader of all package coffees for over a quarter of a century, if they had not found it superior to all other brands in Purity, Strength, Flavor and Uniformity?

This popular success of LION COFFEE can be due only to inherent merit. There is no stronger proof of merit than continued and increasing popularity.

If the verdict of MILLIONS OF HOUSEKEEPERS does not convince you of the merits of LION COFFEE, it costs you but a trifle to buy a package. It is the easiest way to convince yourself, and to make you a PERMANENT PURCHASER.

LION COFFEE is sold only in 1 lb. sealed packages, and reaches you as pure and clean as when it left our factory.

Lion-head on every package. Save these Lion-heads for valuable premiums. SOLD BY GROCERS EVERYWHERE WOOLSON SPICE CO., Toledo, Ohio.

A ROMANCE OF WORK

The sun had lit a copper disk in an indigo sky. Heat danced, whirled and rolled a few feet above the alkali dust in the trail. Over the great patches of sagebrush the air hung like the breath of the dead. Not even the wing of a bird set it in motion.

A young woman sat in the doorway with folded hands and dejected shoulders. She was apparently as lifeless as her surroundings.

There had been a time when the sight of these withered plants cooked by the sun would have made her cry—not now, though. Janet Dinscombe wondered vaguely if she were losing her senses. She remembered hearing centuries ago—it was less than a year—that men lost their minds when they were alone for months in the desert. She had laughed at the thought of that when Roger Dinscombe had told her of his love before he came to work out a living on a sheep ranch. She would not delay the marriage. "I am to be a helpmeet, not a hindrance," she said, and urged him to take her with him. "I will keep house for you. We will be together. What more can we ask?" she said pleadingly. With a pretty flushed cheek up against his, Roger Dinscombe had not the courage to deny Janet Moore's demand. Her home was not very pleasant, he argued to himself in justification. And Janet had her own way.

The first two months the young wife went singing about the little cabin, happy enough. Then her step grew less lively, and hours of unhappiness followed. Roger loved her. Of course she knew that. But he did not tell her so very often now. Then, too, he was busy all day, and she had long forenoons and afternoons when there was nothing to do. Her house was neat as a pin. She even had read all the advertisements in the few papers which chance brought her. Her nearest neighbor lived five miles away. When Roger came home, he was too tired to talk much. There was a late supper and an early breakfast—and then silence and desolation.

One day Janet realized she was losing her love for her husband. That was when she had planted the garden. A few sickly plants grew there, which she kept alive by carrying water from a muddy little stream. When July came, this dried up. And now her plants were dead. She felt choked as she looked at them, but the tears did not come to her eyes.

Roger Dinscombe noticed the shadow which had settled upon his wife's face. Blaming himself, he grew irritable and moody. Instead of love making him tender it forced him to be distant. Often now husband and wife avoided looking into each other's eyes. That very morning he had spoken to Janet sharply as he went away. The words fell back on his own heart like a lash. "What a brute I am!" he muttered, and half turned to come back. But the set look on Janet's face came up before him, and he spurred on the pony he was riding.

"Am I going mad?" Janet repeated to herself until the sun had crept to where she sat. "I won't go mad. I am a girl of common sense. I used to hate the work at home of cooking for a houseful of stepbrothers and sisters, mending and darning, with constant whining and fretting from a stepmother who was as strong as I am. Now work would be the most blessed boon on earth. What shall I do?" The little sitting room and kitchen were spotless. She could not do anything there.

"I'll put my trunk in order," she thought. Not a ribbon was out of place. She took up a bundle of patches idly. "Why not make a quilt?" The idea pleased her as she looked over the patches. That bit of lilac print was her first "grown-up gown," and this blue and white checked calico was the dress she had on the first time she met Roger. She remembered now that she had a bunch of wild crab apple blossoms in her belt when she ran into Mrs. Dinscombe's on an errand and was told, "Janet, this is my son Roger, who has just come home from the west."

The young Mrs. Dinscombe's face softened as she seemed to live it over again and to see honest blue eyes looking at her, saying, "I approve of you." Piece after piece was unfolded. This white mull was her wedding dress. Smoothing and petting it with fingers which would get jerky, Janet sat for a long time. Then the tears came—tears which seemed to melt the iron band around her heart. When she remembered where she was, it was almost supper time, and she jumped up with a little start. "Poor Roger!"

she murmured. "What must you think of me?" She cooked the best that her kitchen afforded and in a half ashamed way slipped into the blue and white checked dress which she had kept. It was a little out of style; but, then, fashions do not cut much of a figure in a Utah desert. "I wonder if he will notice?" she said to herself. She hoped he would, and yet the thought frightened her.

Roger stopped a moment as he came up to the door and saw her with a look on her face that sent the blood to his heart with a thud. He paled a little, and then, gathering her up in his arms, carried her to the rocking chair, dropped to the floor and buried his face in her lap, sobbing as if his heart would break. "Roger! Roger!" was all she could say. Finally he grew calm, and then he said: "I couldn't stand it any longer, and I made up my mind today to send you away where you would be happy, and then to come home and see you looking just as you did the first moment I ever saw you—and I've loved you ever since—was more than I could endure."

"Well, I'm not going, Roger," said his little wife in an assumed practical manner, "to do anything but get your supper." Which she did when she could get out of his arms. Later in the evening they talked it over. Janet got the patches, and they planned what design she should use. "I think I would like to make it look like the leaf of a sagebrush if you will draw one for me, Roger," she said thoughtfully. Roger was only too happy, but it took two or three evening consultations before he could design a pattern that suited. Evening after evening the work was brought out for inspection. Roger must see how she had fitted the pieces together, look at the stitches, hear the history of each tiny bit of new cloth, and when praise had been given and suggestions made there was always time left for the husband and wife to talk quietly and happily together. When the quilt was pieced, came the quilting, at which Roger tried to help with his great, awkward fingers. At last it was complete. It was beautiful in their eyes, because they saw reconciliation and happiness stitched into it. "Four thousand eight hundred and twenty-two pieces, would you believe it, Roger?" said Janet. "Let us take it to the fair when you go in with the sheep. I am sure it will get first premium."

Going to the territorial fair was their fall outing. They would do their trading and lay in their winter supplies. Roger fixed up the herder's wagon as cozily as possible. There were the cook stove, the bed, the water cask and bucket, a looking glass and washbasin and chair for Janet. It took four days to reach Salt Lake City, and then Janet had the satisfaction of seeing her quilt with the inscription, "Four thousand eight hundred and twenty-two pieces," hanging on a line in the woman's department of the great red brick building where the annual exposition is held. It had a red ticket the last day.

Two young women, tourists who had stopped in the city of the saints and who had been attracted by the people attending the fair, stopped in front of the quilt and read the inscription, "Four thousand eight hundred and twenty-two pieces." "What do you think of that for woman's work, Julia?" said the tall girl to her companion. "Think! I think the woman was a fool who would spend her time making a thing like that. She'd better be doing nothing at all." "What do you know about it?" said a white faced little woman, with blazing eyes. "I made that quilt, and I did it to keep from going mad. What do you know about nothing to do?" Her anger had burned out by this time, and she began to stammer. Then something in the girls' faces encouraged her to go on. "Would you like to hear the story?" She told it simply enough, but it touched her listeners and made them her friends as they realized for once in their lives what it would be to do without work, daily papers, magazines, theaters, music or church. They must have her show them the wagon in which she traveled. Then they must go inside and have her tell them more about her life as a sheep herder's wife.

"What will you do now?" asked the tall young woman as they were about to part. "You cannot piece quilts all the time." "I shall find plenty to do. There will be sewing and planning this winter," Janet Dinscombe answered as a flush crept over her cheek, "and next summer, please God, I shall not be alone."

That night the sheep herder's wife was very happy as she fell asleep in the wagon, with one hand touching a package of books which had come "with the love of two girls from the east," and the other resting on a bundle of soft material which she would fashion into tiny garments against the coming of a little child.—Nevada Victoria Davis in New York Press.

SOME FAMOUS DOUBLES.

Striking Counterparts of Louis Napoleon and Louis Philippe.

The Emperor Napoleon III. had a double of about his own age in the contractor for public fetes during the second empire. His name has escaped my recollection. He had also contracts for soldiers' shoes and uniforms, and he kept his stores at the old hippodrome after the lease to a circus company fell in. His likeness to the emperor startled me the first time I saw him. This happened at the ticket office of the Passy railway station. When I scanned him more closely I saw that he was not Louis Napoleon risen from the grave. No double will bear scrutiny, however well made up, as this particular one would have been. He knew of the resemblance I had noticed and gloried in it. The Comte de Paris also had a double, or what looked one at a distance. The likeness, strong enough to have been the pivot of a tragedy of errors, disappeared greatly when he took off his hat. The Comte de Paris had a pointed head like the German emperor's; the person I speak of as resembling him had a full forehead projecting near the roots of the hair.

I often saw old and young ladies extremely like Queen Victoria. The former mostly came from Frankfurt or parts of Franconia, near the duchy of Coburg. The sister of the late Mrs. Moses Levy of the Daily Telegraph could, had her complexion been unburned, have easily passed at the age of eighty for the late queen. Louis Philippe's double, an Italian named Chiappini, emigrated to the Cape. I have somewhere a letter dictated by the late Lord Newborough to his son and addressed to me, in which his lordship stated that the first time he saw the citizen king he exclaimed, "What an image of Chiappini!" and could not keep his eyes from following him for a whole evening.

In history we have the false Smerdis. Different impostors passed themselves off as Sebastian, king of Portugal, who was believed to have been killed in a battle with the Moors in Morocco. Miss Jane Porter early in the last century revived the legend in a novel. She sided with those who held Sebastian to have been wounded only and hunted down by Philip II. of Spain, who seized on his heritage. Three "false Joans of Arc" appeared in the six years following that of her execution. Two of them avoided every one who had known her.—Paris Cor. London Truth.

Diamond Cut Diamond.
The following story comes from Belgium:

Two fellow travelers got into conversation and came upon the subject of free luggage, when one asked leave to measure the other's trunk. The result was that the measurer said:

"Your trunk is seven and a half centimeters too long and has no right to be in the compartment of free luggage. I am a railway inspector and must fine you 5 francs. Please give me your name and address."

The proposed victim of misplaced confidence was, however, equal to the occasion.

"Kindly lend me your measure, that I may satisfy myself on the subject." Then with a polite smile, "I am a director in the royal weights and measures office. To my great regret I notice that your measure is not stamped as is required by law, so that, firstly, your measuring is not legally valid, and, secondly, it is my painful duty to subject you to a fine of 50 francs. Please give me your name and address."

Letters from Women

Cured by the use of Kodol are received daily. Their troubles nearly all begin with indigestion or other stomach disorder.

If the food you eat fails to give strength to your body, it is because the juices secreted by the stomach and digestive organs are inadequate to transform the nutrient properties of the food into blood. That is indigestion. The system is deprived of the amount of nourishment required to keep up the strength, and the result is that one or more of the delicate organs gradually grows weak, and then weaker, until finally it is diseased. Here a great mistake is made. That of treating the diseased organ. The best doctors in the land make this very mistake. Why should they? It is so easy to see that the trouble is not there.

Kodol Cures

This famous remedy puts the stomach and digestive organs in a healthy condition so that rich, red blood is sent coursing through the veins and arteries of every muscle, tissue and fiber throughout every organ of the body, and by Nature's law of health, full strength and vigor is soon restored to each. Kodol cures indigestion, dyspepsia and all stomach disorders.

I have taken Kodol for nearly two months after each meal and it is the only remedy that gave relief from the terrible pains I endured. After a time I would take it but once a day, and now, while I keep a bottle handy, I seldom need it, as it has cured me. Mrs. J. W. COLBAUGH, Mill Center, N. Y.

PAPOOSE POPCORN FORAGE, POULTRY, POPPING

A subscriber to the Southern Agriculturist secured the original seed from an old Indian in Northwest Texas. After experimenting with it seven years he wrote that paper: "With good ground and care it will make from 50 to 100 bushels to the acre, and planted thick and cut stalk and all it will make more feed and better feed than anything I ever saw. The old Indian said poultry fed on it would never have the cholera. I have not lost a fowl with cholera since I have been raising it. It also pops beautifully." This article brought hundreds of requests for seed, and now only a few bushels are left. Send 10c for a 3 months' trial subscription to Southern Agriculturist, 39 C. P.
