A Favorable Week.

The Weekly crop Bulletin for week ending Monday, June 12, 1905, says: "During the week ending Monday, June 12th, the weather on the whole was very favorable for agricultural interests except that the latter part of the week was too cool for the rapid growth of crops. Although some local storms occurred on Wednesday, 7th, with hail and high winds which damaged crops in a few counties, namely, Nash, Alamance, Vance, Franklin and Warren, there was a general absence of precipitation during the week over most of the state, giving farmers an excellent and much needed opportunity to cultivate crops and kill grass and weeds. In most of the northeastern and western counties, where the rainfall has not been excessive, the soil has become rather dry, and upland crops are beginning to need light rains. The mean temperature for the week averaged about 74 degrees, or nearly 2 degrees daily above the normal. On the 5th, 6th and 7th the temperature was quite high, maxima above 80 degrees being generally recorded; this was the most favorable period of the week during which crops made rapid growth; the latter portion was, however, cool enough to check growth, the temperature at night falling quite low. There was abundant sunshine everywhere during the week. The weather was especially favorable for farm work which was pushed vigorously in subduing grass and weeds, and most crops are now clean, well-cultivated and in good condition. Harvesting operations and making hay progressed favorably. Material improvement in crops took place during the early portion of the week.

Tobacco Exported From the United States to Canada.

There was exported from the United States to Canada for the ten months ending April, 1905, leaf tobacco amounting to $1,119,588, while in 1897 the exports amounted to $1,421,177, which, at that time, included Newfoundland and Labrador. The exports for 1905 show a falling off of $301,588, as compared with 1897--eight years ago.--Western Tobacco Journal.

Old Citizen Dead.

Every Girl Her Own Designer.

Has Paris become tired of setting the styles? It would seem so. Or perhaps Paris is determined to sit cynically silent and see what the rest of the world will come to if she quits setting the fashions. At any rate, the general order has gone forth from fashion's capital that the style in summer gowns this year will follow no clearly-set model, but that every woman in the world is graciously permitted to arrange her own costume to suit her personal taste and her particular style of beauty or temperament. If fashion's devotees attempt to follow this general order implicitly we prophesy much confusion and headache, not to say tears. If a girl is tall in inches and short on temperament, how will she reconcile the conflicting demands of flesh and spirit? If she has one of these pink and purple Browning club temperaments, and red hair, what colors shall she choose to harmonize with both? If her beauty is of the blonde type and her temperament brunette in nature, she could, of course, strike out an agreeable contrast by wearing black and white; and the girl with the open-work temperament can continue to wear peek-a-boo effects. But suppose a girl has no temperament at all? Then--but perish the thought.--Ex.

Jailer Indicted.

Charlotte, N. C., June 14.--The first sensation of the June term of the United States district court developed this afternoon when the grand jury returned a bill of indictment against Deputy Sheriff Crysel of Wilkes county for permitting a number of prisoners to escape from the county jail. Crysel is the jailer, and it is alleged that he is in the habit of giving federal prisoners the freedom of the premises. The federal statute views such action as this in the light of an escape. Among the prisoners who are said to enjoy their liberty are W. W. McEwen and Jesse McEwen, convicted at the recent term of the United States court in Wilkesboro and sentenced to five and four months imprisonment respectively. While enjoying the freedom of the premises last week Jesse McEwen made his escape.

It Must Tell.

Competition is awake to advantages, and the active merchant must be alive to its energizing influences or give up the race. Good advertising is the merchant's shibboleth, that will make competition do work for him. The man that advertises judiciously will find that it pays him a large income on the investment. He may never be able to tell just how much larger his sales have been, owing to his advertisements, but if he has not advertised for a year, and then resorts to a series of good advertisements for the following year, all other conditions remaining the same, and note the difference between the aggregate amounts of sales for the year he did not advertise, and for that in which he advertised, he will find a good balance in favor of the advertising year.--Merchants Journal.

Linievitch Surrounded.

London, June 15.--A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Seoul, Corea, says that the movements of the Japanese armies against Gen. Linievitch are progressing rapidly. The next few days should see the opening of what will probably prove the decisive action of the campaign. General Linievitch is in an almost hopeless position. His force is much inferior to that of the Japanese. The Russians are shaken by their repeated reverses and the disaster in the Sea of Japan caused consternation among them.

St. Petersburg, June 14.--The Gazette publishes today a interview with the secretary of the Chinese legation, who is represented as saying that Russia must make peace immediately as he is able to affirm that General Linievitch is surrounded.

King Oscar the British Admiral.

London, June 14.--King Edward has created King Oscar of Sweden a British admiral and has conferred the decoration of the order of the Garter upon the Swedish crown prince, Gustavus Adolphus, who will tomorrow marry Princess Margaret of Connaught.

LOST REVENGE

His death came upon her as a blow. There could be no doubt of that. She had never anticipated that he would die so soon. The man below had been her husband, and he was dead. She could only think of that at first.

How she had hated him!

He had bought her as the wife he desired. So surely he must have once loved her. But he had never shown it. She had feared him terribly that very first day, when they went away together from the church down the flat, gray road by the almshouses, where the old women stood bobbing in the rain, over the village green haunted by wandering geese, whose feathers were blown the wrong way by the wind that stormy day of their marriage. He must have once desired her. How he had stared at her in the shadow of the shut carriage, while the hoofs of the horses splashed in the puddles of the country road. His eyes never left her. They were slightly bloodshot and looked excited as they traveled over her face, and his full lips moved under his black mustache, but he said nothing.

How she had hated him!

The morning after their wedding she had tried to escape from him.
 She slipped out of the great Lord Warden hotel at Dover in the gray dampness of the dawn when he was sleeping. The sullen sea, which they were to cross presently, roared in her ears, and the sea gulls cried to her from the foam flecked pebbles of the steeply curving beach. The hull of a steamer loomed on the ragged horizon, and the rain drove over the shining asphalt ways. Two or three sailors hanging about, with peaked caps drawn down above their wet faces and hunched shoulders, peered at her as she crept from the hotel, a grain of humanity swept by the whirlwind. How cold it was and how desolate! In the wind came to her the strangled whistle of an engine, and then she knew she was too late. The train was flashing away as she struggled on against the tempest. She returned to his embrace.

How she had hated him!

And they traveled together. The snow-peaks of Switzerland, the green valleys, where the chalets rested on the steep slopes, as if tired and pausing but for a moment; the blue lakes of Italy; the old, sad cities, with their streets full of the echoes of dead voices; the weary ruins, passively enduring shrill calling tourists; the vineyards, where life was laughter and was song—she had seen them all with him. She hated them all. Even the flat reaches of the venerable Nile and the rose gardens of Damascus were loath-some to her. And now he lay dead, and she could hear the nightingales beginning to flute. Yet was she glad?

They had come back to England.
 People envied her. Women murmured his name as she passed by, murmured it in admiration, while the blood flamed in her cheek at thought that she was his. The great world took her for awhile, took her and gave to her only such profound weariness. In the park, as her victoria stood against the railings in the hot sun, and the murmur of society rippled round her beneath the trees, and the queens of society and the courtesans who were the recognized queens—the sinner incognita and the queen incognita—passed her by, she sickened again and thought of the rose gardens of Damascus and wondered if the world could give to her nothing, if his shadow must be upon everything, like the shadow of fate brooding black over the pleasure of life.

She wondered in a malady of dreaming, and the voices under the trees said she posed, because for a moment she ceased to think of them.
 Then she drove home as the twilight gathered about the city and tried to hush it all, in vain. She dreaded the falling of nights as children dread the grave.

How she had hated him!

And then a golden thread twined into the web of her tangled young life. One, in the midst of the ignorant and the careless, understood that she was in the prison house of despair and stayed awhile outside the grating of her cell to whisper of comfort. The dew fell upon the poor parched flower, and she opened her petals to receive it, but so secretly, always so secretly. Surely no one ever knew. Outside the garden room in the dusk he came when all was quiet. The jailer was away.
 He came and came again, and he taught her to see the stars through the grating of her cell, and he told her of the rising of the moon. And when he came it seemed to her that the nightingales were always singing.

And now the jailer had gone away forever. The prison doors were open. She stepped out into the starlight and the moonlight. He lay dead in the room below her. She had not seen him dead. She must go down into that silent place where he lay in silence. She thought only of him. Her small face was very white as she walked softly down the stairs. She saw the merry notes dancing in the cloud of gold dust that the sun shed obliquely through the leaded lattices of the hall, and she turned her eyes away from them and wished the sun would go down.

 With the darkness her strange constraint of calm might fade away.
 She longed to feel more natural.
 She passed through the door very quietly and closed it behind her and locked it. He had been laid upon the wide couch where she sat sometimes at eventide alone. A white covering shrouded the great form that her girl's flesh had shuddered at, had shrunk from so often. A ray of dying light glinted where the head was. When she drew back the covering the ray shone upon the gray, swollen face, into which she gazed for a long while. The upper lip was drawn back from the strong white teeth. The mouth seemed to grin callously. She could fancy that the frown soul of the dead man was laughing somewhere far off and that the body which in life had so often obeyed the spirit with the weakness of custom still mechanically bowed to its will, still revealed outwardly that which was no longer prisoned within it. Yes, as she looked at the mouth she felt that the dead man's soul was laughing.

She wondered why, and as she stood wondering over the smooth shaved lawn, past the sundial and the leaping silver of the fountain, one came to the garden room—the man who understood her and had striven to comfort her.

He did not know yet. He stole so softly because he believed her husband was living and not because he knew he was dead.

He stood at the window and whispered her name, and as he spoke a rush of joy swelled through her heart. She left the dead face uncovered and crossed to him.

"Is he gone?" he asked.

"He is gone," she answered. "Kiss me."

He caught her passionately and pressed his lips on hers.

"How I love you!" he murmured.

"How I love you!"

As he said the words she turned round from him and looked back into the slowly darkening room.

A strange, horrible fancy seized her.

She thought she heard the dead man laugh.

"When will you give yourself to me?" her lover whispered. "I have waited so long! Come, leave your prison house. Let the jailer find the cell door open when he returns, the prisoner escaped."

She answered him:

"He will never return to find me." He held her closer against his heart.

"You have resolved to dare all, then; to dare all for my sake?"

A wild triumph shone in her white girl's face, a wild triumph thrilled in her sweet girl's voice, as she replied:

"The prison house has crumbled to the dust. The prisoner is free." He strained her yielding body in his arms.

"You mean that you will come, that you will leave him to long for you? You will forsake him? I love you!"

But she shrank from him again and trembled. She looked behind her into that still, shadowy room.
 The warm blood in her young body seemed to freeze. Surely she heard the dead man laugh again in the gathering darkness!

"You will leave him? You will come?"

"There is no need," she said.

He kept her in his arms. His kisses never left her face. He whispered:

"Why?"

"He is dead."

He loosened his arms from about her. His mouth left hers.

She pointed backward into the room which was now quite dark.

"He is there, lying dead. And you love me, and I am free."

She lifted her face to his, and her eyes were full of happy tears. But he looked at her and muttered a curse between his teeth. The love died from his face and left it hard and wild with impotent disappointment and despair.

Then he turned away. He turned away and went out into the twilight across the smooth shaved lawn, past the sundial and the leaping silver of the fountain and beyond—into the night.

He had been the dead man's lifelong enemy. He had been close upon his revenge, and now the ~~en~~ he hated had passed beyond his power to hurt. He could never wrong him through all the years. Why should he stay?

She sank down by the window without a cry. She could not understand.

And in the silence and the close darkness the dead man laughed.—

Queen Quality

It Sets the Style.

What do we mean when we say that the styles of most of the shoes for women originate with the "Queen Quality" Shoe?

Simply this. The "Queen Quality" is, and always has been a leader. It gets up its own original patterns at great expense, and has established a reputation for the style and beauty of its creations.

OTHER MAKERS ARE CONTENT TO AWAIT THEIR APPEARANCE, and then copy them as closely as possible.

But "Queen Quality" "sets the style"—don't forget that!

And one other point—"Queen Quality" offers twice as many styles for your consideration as any other shoe.

You cannot suggest a need which is not fitted with a "Queen Quality" shoe specially designed for it.

Does not this realize the ideal of a strictly custom shoe? And such a shoe for $3.00. Think of it! Oxfords $2.50.

Tans in all shape are here.
