Carry the Work On.

The work of beautifying the court house lawn has not progressed far enough. The double line of coping around the square is a good beginning, but if the appearance is to be at all presentable something should be done to the sidewalk. It should be leveled and paved.

Better Look Out.

The prayer endless chain letter craze has struck Greenville, and those who are sending these letters had better be careful or they may get into trouble. It is a violation of the postal laws to use the mails for endless chain letters.

Does Greenville Want It?

The chamber of commerce of Washington is moving to get express matter handled on the mid-day trains. Greenville should be taking a hand in this matter. Express should be handled on the "Reflector Special," which would give our business men their packages several hours sooner than they now get them. Such things do not come without effort. If Greenville wants it the business men should go after it.

When Maxim, the famous gun inventor, placed his gun before a committee of judges, he stated its carrying power to be much below what he felt sure the gun would accomplish. The result of the trial was therefore a great surprise instead of disappointment. It is the same with the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. They do not publicly boast of all this remedy will accomplish, but prefer to let the users make the statements. What they do claim, is that it will positively cure diarrhoea, dysentery, pains in the stomach and bowels and has never been known to fail. For sale by J. L. Wooten

THE REFUGEES

By A. CONAN DOYLE

Author of "The Return of Sherlock Holmes"

COPYRIGHT, 1893, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

"Ha, then the king does indeed mean mischief. That is why his brow is so cloudy this morning then. By my faith, if the marquise has the spirit with which folk credit her, he may find that it was easier to win her than to slight her."

"Aye, the Mortemarts are no easy race to handle."

"Well, heaven send him a safe way out of it! But who is this gentleman? His face is somewhat grimmer than those to which the court is accustomed. Ha, the king catches sight of him, and Louvois beckons to him to advance."

The stranger who had attracted Racine's attention was a tall, thin man, with a high aquiline nose, stern, fierce gray eyes, peeping out from under tufted brows, and a countenance so lined and marked by age, care and stress of weather that it stood out amid the prim courtier faces which surrounded it as an old hawk might in a cage of birds of gay plumage.

Louis possessed in a high degree the royal faculty of recognition. "It is years since I have seen him, but I remember his face well," said he, turning to his minister. "It is the Comte de Frontenac, is it not?"

"Yes, sire," answered Louvois. "It is indeed Louis de Buade, comte de Frontenac and formerly governor of Canada."

"We are glad to see you once more at our lever," said the monarch as the old nobleman stooped his head and kissed the white hand which was extended to him. "I hope that the cold of Canada has not chilled the warmth of your loyalty."

"Only death itself, sire, would be cold enough for that."

"Then I trust that it may remain to us for many long years. We would thank you for the care and pains which you have spent upon our province, and if we have recalled you it is chiefly that we would fain hear from your own lips how all things go there. And first, as the affairs of God take precedence of those of France, how about the missions?"

"They prosper, sire. There are Iroquois at the Sault and the mountain, Hurons at Lorette and Algonquins along the whole river cotes from Tadousac in the east to Sault la Marie, and even the great plains of the Dakotas, who have all taken the cross as their token. Marquette has passed down the river of the west to preach among the Illinois, and Jesuits have carried the gospel even to the warriors of the Long House in their wigwams at Onondaga."

"I may add, your majesty," said Pere la Chaise, "that in leaving the truth there they have too often left their lives with it."

"Yes, sire, it is very true," cried De Frontenac cordially. "Your majesty folk. They are Huguenots, are they not?"

"For the most part, especially in the north."

"Then it might be a service to the holy church to send them packing. Tell me now, Frontenac, what force would you need to clear these people out—one regiment, two regiments and perhaps a frigate or two?"

But the ex-governor shook his grizzled head. "You do not know them, sire," said he. "They are a stern folk these. We in Canada, with all your gracious help, have found it hard to hold our own. To put New England into your majesty's hands I would ask 15,000 of your best troops and twenty ships of the line."

Louis sprang impatiently from his chair and caught up his cane. "The matter may stand until our council. Reverend father, it has struck the hour of chapel, and all else may wait until we have paid our duties to heaven."

CHAPTER III.

WHILE Louis had been affording his court that which he had openly stated to be the highest of human pleasures, the sight of the royal face, the young officer of the guard outside had been very busy passing on the titles of the numerous applicants for admission and exchanging usually a smile or a few words of greeting with them, for his frank, handsome face was a well known one at the court. Three years ago he had been an unknown subaltern bush fighting with Algonquins and Iroquois in the wilds of Canada. An exchange had brought him back to France and into the regiment of Picardy, but the lucky chance of having seized the bridle of the king's horse one winter's day in Fontainebleau when the creature was plunging within a few yards of a deep gravel pit had done for him what ten campaigns might have failed to accomplish.

A gentleman very richly dressed in black and silver advanced, as the door opened, with the assured air of a man whose rights are beyond dispute. Captain de Catinat, however, took a quick step forward, and barred him off from the door.

"I am very sorry, M. de Vivonne," said he, "but you are not on the list."

"What! in the presence of the king?" "You are mad!" He stepped back with gray hair and staring eyes, one shaking hand half raised in protest.

"I assure you that it is his order."

"If I could have one word with the king."

"Unfortunately, monsieur, it is impossible."

The angry nobleman stamped his foot and stared at the door as though he had some thoughts of forcing a passage. Then, turning on his heel, he hastened away down the corridor with the air of a man who has come to a decision.

"There, now," grumbled De Catinat to himself, as he pulled his thick dark mustache, "he is off to make some fresh mischief. I'll have his sister here presently, as like as not, and a pleasant little chance between breaking my orders and making an enemy of her for life. By my faith, here is a lady, as I feared. Ah, heaven be praised, it is a friend and not a foe. Good morning, Mlle. Nanon."

"Good morning, Captain de Catinat." The newcomer was a tall, graceful brunette, her fresh face and sparkling black eyes the brighter in contrast with her plain dress.

"A note from Mme. de Maintenon to the king. You will hand it to him, will you not?"

"Certainly, mademoiselle. And how is madame, your mistress?"

"Oh, her director has been with her all the morning, and his talk is very, very good, but it is also very, very sad. We are not very cheerful when M. Godet has been to see us. But I forget monsieur is a Huguenot and knows nothing of directors."

"Oh, but I do not trouble about such differences."

"Ah, if monsieur could talk to Mme. de Maintenon a little! She would convert him."

"I would rather talk to Mlle. Nanon, but if—"

"Oh!" There was an exclamation, a whisk of dark skirts, and the soubrette disappeared down a side passage.

Along the broad lighted corridor was gliding a very stately and beautiful lady, tall, graceful and exceedingly haughty. The lady was past her first youth, it is true, but the magnificent curves of her queenly figure, the purity of her complexion, the brightness of her deep lashed blue eyes and the clear regularity of her features enabled her still to claim to be the most handsome as well as the most sharp tongued woman in the court of France.

"Ah, it is Captain de Catinat!" said Mme. de Montespan, with a smile.

"Your humble servant, marquise."

"I am fortunate in finding a friend here, for there has been some ridiculous mistake this morning."

"I am concerned to hear it."

"It was about my brother, M. de Vivonne. It is almost too laughable to mention, but he was actually refused admission to the lever."

"It was my misfortune to have to

The old nobleman stooped his head and kissed the white hand.

has many brave men within his domains, but none braver than these. They have come back up the Illehois river from the Iroquois villages with their nails gnawed, their fingers torn out, a cinder where their eye should be and the scars of the pine splinters as thick upon their bodies as the fleurs-de-lis on yonder curtain."

"And you have suffered this?" cried Louis hotly. "You allow these infamous assassins to live?"

"I have asked for troops, sire."

"And I have sent some."

"One regiment. More is needed, sire."

"There are the Canadians themselves. Have you not a militia? Could you not raise force enough to punish these rascally murderers of God's priests? I had always understood that you were a soldier."

"It is just because I am a soldier and have seen something of war that I know how hard it is to penetrate a country much larger than the Lowlands, all thick with forest and bog, with a savage lurking behind every tree. You are a soldier yourself, sire. I ask you if such a war is an easy task for a handful of soldiers, with a few censitaires straight from the plow, and a troop of coureurs-de-bois whose hearts all the time are with their traps and their beaver skins."

"No, no; I am sorry if I spoke too hastily," said Louis. "We shall look into the matter at our council. And yet you must not look for too much for Canada has been a heavy cost to us, and we have many calls in Europe."

"Ah, sire, I would that you could see that great land. It is so vast, sire, so rich, so beautiful! Where are these such hills, such forests, such rivers. And it is all for us if we will but take it. Who is there to stand in our way—a few nations of scattered Indians and a thin scattering of English farmers and fishermen. Turn your thoughts there, sire, and in a few years you would be able to stand upon your citadel at Quebec and to say there is one great empire here from the snows of the north to the warm southern gulf and from the waves of the ocean to the great plains beyond Marquette's river, and the name of this empire is France, and her king is Louis, and her flag is the fleurs-de-lis."

"On my word, count," said the king, "you have caught something of this gift of Indian eloquence of which we have heard. But about these English

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 22, 1906

May the old Confederate veterans have the best time of their lives at the encampment at Morehead this week.

Send Florida the palm. A negro was arrested at Lakeland, in that State for attempted criminal assault. A mob gathered and took the negro away from the officers for the purpose of lynching him. The mayor appeared and appealed to the mob to let the law take its course, and the negro was delivered back to the officers. North Carolina and South Carolina should take notice.

The trusts get abused but the government goes right on making contracts with them. In a deal for armor plate the steel trust got two thirds of the order in the face of a lower bid by an independent concern, and in the purchase of army blankets the order went to the wool trust when an independent maker had a bid several thousand dollars lower. That is a way the government has of stopping trusts.

The Reflector is accomplishing something that makes it take hope. Its recent comments pertaining to Greenville's past and future is putting folks to talking and out of much talking something is apt to happen. They are talking about the advantages of the river front for pleasure and recreation; the changing of the wharf from its present location to the end of Evans street and then improving the streets from the wharf to the depot; the building of more business houses and more dwelling houses; the organization of a chamber of commerce; the securing of factories, and so on. All of these are subjects of importance, and the more talk there is about them the sooner something will be doing. If all want to talk at once, or several times on the same subject so much the better. Keep up the agitation.

When you sell your cotton and tobacco, you should leave the money with the National Bank, and take a check book.

When you pay an account with a check, the check acts as a receipt and can easily be traced.

When you have your money in the Bank you cannot be robbed of it on the highways.

It costs you nothing to carry a bank account, and it is certainly the cheapest and best insurance against loss of money.

THE REFUGEES.

fuse him, madame."
 "You, Captain de Catinat? And by what right?" She had drawn up her superb figure, and her large blue eyes were blazing with indignant astonishment.
 "The king's order, madame."
 "The king! Is it likely that the king would cast a public slight upon my family? From whom had you this preposterous order?"
 "Direct from the king through Bonfems."
 "Absurd! Do you think that the king would venture to exclude a Mortemart through the mouth of a valet? Go, tell the king that I am here and would have a word with him."
 "Impossible, madame. I have been forbidden to carry a message."
 "To carry any message?"
 "Any from you, madame."
 "Come, captain, you improve. It only needed this insult to make the thing complete. You may carry a message to the king from any adventuress, from any decayed governess"—she laughed

He slipped in front of her.

shrilly at her description of her rival—"but none from Francoise de Mortemart, Marquise de Montespan."
 "Such are my orders, madame. It pains me deeply to be compelled to carry them out."
 "You may spare your protestations, captain. You may yet find that you have every reason to be deeply pained. For the last time, do you refuse to carry my message?"
 "I must, madame."
 "Then I carry it myself."
 She sprang forward at the door, but he slipped in front of her with outstretched arms.
 "For God's sake, consider yourself, madame!" he entreated. "Other eyes are upon you."
 "Pah! Canaille!" She glanced at the knot of Switzers, whose sergeant had drawn them off a few paces and who stood open eyed, staring at the scene. "I tell you that I will see the king."
 "You will ruin me if you pass."
 "And none the less I shall do so."
 The matter looked serious. De Catinat was a man of resource, but for once he was at his wits' end. Mme. de Montespan's resolution, as it was called in her presence, or effrontery, as it was termed behind her back, was proverbial. If she attempted to force her way, would he venture to use violence upon one who only yesterday held the fortunes of the whole court in the hollow of her hand and who, with her beauty, her wit and her energy, might very well be in the same position tomorrow? If she passed him, then his future was ruined with the king, who never brooked the smallest deviation from his orders.
 "If madame would deign to wait," said he soothingly, "the king will be on his way to the chapel in an instant."
 "It is not yet time."
 "I think the hour has just gone."
 "And why should I wait like a lackey?"
 "It is but a moment, madame."
 "No, I shall not wait." She took a step forward toward the door.
 But the guardsman's quick ear had caught the sound of moving feet from within, and he knew that he was master of the situation. "I will take madame's message," said he.
 "Ah, you have recovered your senses! Go, tell the king that I wish to speak with him."
 He must gain a little time yet. "Shall I say it through the lord in waiting?"
 "No; yourself."
 "Publicly?"
 "No, no; for his private ear."

How to See the Wind.

Take a polished metal surface of two feet or more and with a straight edge. A large hand-saw will answer the purpose. Take a windy day on which to make the experiment, paying no attention to atmospheric conditions, for such an experiment can be as successfully made on a clear day as it can on a cloudy one, and the results will be equally good in summer and winter. The only thing you need to look out for is that you do not attempt to "see the wind" on a rainy or murky day, as conditions are then very unfavorable. When everything is in readiness, hold the metallic surface at right angles to the direction of the wind—i. e., if the wind is in the north hold the metal east and west, but instead of holding it vertical incline it about 42 degrees to the horizon. When this has been done sight carefully along the edge of a sharply defined object for some moments and you will see the wind pouring over in graceful curves almost like water.

The Juvenile Way.

Children are the real humorists. They never rack their brains to say something funny. Here is a small boy's ingenious "composition" on politeness:

"Never eat quickly, or you might get bones in your throat. My father knows of a boy who got killed over his Sunday dinner. The greedy boy was picking a rabbit's head in a hurry and swallowed one jaw of it, and my father says he was choked to death there and then. Be very polite over your meals, then, especially when it's rabbits. Since my father told me that I have always felt rather queer over a rabbit dinner. I don't talk much and don't ask for any more."

A definition that won a little girl praise despite its strangeness was "Tuff, clean, and clean dirt stuck."

Have The Foundation Right.

The Corset is The Foundation

Upon which all women should build their appearance. Those who desire to make the best appearance possible are most careful in selecting their corset, realizing that the best results can be attained only when the corset is right, right in fit---right in shape. The gown may be handsome and stylish in itself, but it will never show to best advantage over an ill-fitting, poorly constructed corset.

OUR CORSET DEPARTMENT

Comes to your aid just at this point by offering you a large variety of styles and makes, the kinds that have been tried and found satisfactory, and the selection is so great you may easily choose the right shape, the one best suited to your needs, the one that will insure comfort and a stylish figure combined. We would like to show you the new "Invisible Lacing," and explain the many advantages it possesses over other kinds. Our corset department is very popular--there's a reason--Let us show you.
