

THE ONE WOMAN.

Dixon's New Play to Tour the South.

Thomas Dixon, Jr. s., new comedy-drama. "The One Woman," founded on his novel of the same name, will be produced in Norfolk, Va., October 1st, at the Academy of Music where his other famous play "The Clansman," made its record-breaking opening nearly a year ago. After a week in Norfolk and Richmond, Va., "The One Woman" will begin a tour of the South, playing the same territory as that covered by "The Clansman" last year.

The play is a more beautiful treatment of the theme than the realism of the book. The setting is entirely changed. The first act opens in a garden overlooking the bay and city of San Francisco, at the time of the rush to the Klondike. The three other acts are set in the frozen wilds of Alaska, showing its glaciers crowned with the Aurora borealis. Frank Gordon, the hero, is a college professor instead of a preacher, and Ruth Spottswood, the heroine, is unmarried until finally united to the man she loves.

This play, founded on the most dramatic and powerful of all Mr. Dixon's novels, treats of the influence of Socialism on love and character. It is a passionate defense of the sanctity of the home and a plea for the glory and freedom of individual manhood. Its tragic moments are relieved by irresistible humor.

The management of Masonic Temple Opera House is in correspondence with Mr. Dixon with the view of getting him to include Greenville in his datings on his Southern trip.

4TH PRIZE.

Below We Reproduce Mrs. R. P. Williams' "Reasons Why Every Residence Should Have Telephone."

This paper was awarded 4th Prize in the "Reason Contest" of the Home Telephone & Telegraph Company.

The Reason Why Every Residence Should Have A Telephone.

The residence is the home, the best that man means enables the bread winner to maintain. While he is away, at the office, on the road or in a distant city, it is untold comfort to be in direct communication with the wife, and hear daily of the welfare of the family.

The advantages to the house-keeper are manifold. A phone message speedily brings the grocer's wagon, or the hurry order to the market is rushed by the bicycle messenger.

When the cook fails to come, or in rainy weather, the service is invaluable.

In sudden illness, when dread and despair grip the heart strings, the phone that calls the Doctor, and brings relief is a blessing.

To women living alone it is both companion and protector, as it puts them in communication with the whole city force in an emergency.

A social promotor, the happening of the community "the daily round of little that large life compound," is freely disseminated, an a family with family, and adjacent townships are linked together

WHY HE ADVERTISED

Some Reasons Advanced by a Merchant in the West That Apply as Well Elsewhere

A couple of merchants out in Kansas got into an argument over the value of advertising. One was prosperous, and the other had seemed to miss the mark he was struggling for. He hadn't tried advertising because he said he never got far enough ahead to spare the money. The other merchant framed the reasons on which he based his prosperity, and the principal one was advertising. He put them down in black and white. They read this way.

"I advertise in newspapers because I am not ashamed of my goods or my work.

"Because I cater to the intelligent class. They read the newspapers, and I believe in increasing my business.

"I advertise in the newspapers because I can talk to more people through the newspapers, a great distance, in less time and at a more reasonable cost than in any other way.

"Because newspaper advertising has brought me greater returns with a smaller expenditure than any other advertising I have done.

"Because when I write an ad. I am not too stingy to pay for placing it in the best possible medium, because it is the cheapest in the end, and I have it inserted so that it is attractive. I then know it is seen and read by every one in the house where the paper goes.

"I investigate before I place an ad in a paper. I do not throw my money away. Still, I am not unreasonable enough to expect that twenty people who have read the ad. will come in with the paper in their hands and buy out my whole stock."—Saratoga Saratogian.

MRS. CARR ENTERTAINS.

Mrs. C. Stuart Carr entertained at cards from 4 to 6:30, Wednesday afternoon, complimentary to Mrs. Bellah and Miss Jessie Thomas, of Nashville, Tenn., who are the guests of their sister, Mrs. J. L. Little. After interesting games delicious refreshments were served.

A number of friends were present and after being most pleasantly entertained the guests departed with reluctance, declaring Mrs. Carr, as usual, the ideal hostess.

by common interests.

The benefits accruing to the rural homes by the telephone are incalculable. Keeping informed to the daily quotations make it possible to market the produce when most advantageous. The rural Telephone beats the rural mail carrier in circulating news, and is placing the farmer in touch with current events before the newspapers can reach him.

Another potent reason: everybody else has one, and failure to keep up with times reflects unfavorably on the individual.

THE GREENVILLE MARKET IN NORTH CAROLINA WATERS.

And Farmers' Consolidated Tobacco Company.

Reports coming to hand from other Eastern tobacco markets indicate that Greenville is leading them all this season in the quantity of tobacco sold. This brings on the belief that Greenville is the best tobacco market, and The Reflector is frank to express the opinion that the Farmers' Consolidated Tobacco Company is largely the cause of this. That company has given a reputation to this market that no other enjoys.

It is remembered that last season the Greenville market was ahead of all other Eastern markets in the average price paid for the season's crop, and according to the figures of the secretary of the Greenville Tobacco Board of Trade the two warehouses operated by the Consolidated company led all other houses on this market by nearly half a cent in the average price. While this half cent may in itself look small, in the aggregate it puts thousands of dollars in the pockets of the farmers and was an advertisement for the Greenville market that continues to bear fruit.

The Reflector has in its career made some study of organizations among farmers and efforts to bring about co-operation to advance their interests, and nothing has so impressed us with its plausibility as this Farmers' Consolidated Tobacco Company. Faith was inspired in it from the beginning because of a knowledge of the man at the head of it, Mr. O. L. Joyner, and the more closely its career has been watched and a better insight into its plans obtained, the more firmly fixed is the impression that it is the ideal movement for the farmers. It is not only advantageous to the farmers composing the organization, but it helps the community in which the company operates, as is evidenced by the way it draws business to the Greenville market.

As almost every trade and profession has its organization to promote the welfare of those engaged in any particular following, it has given occasion to some wonder why the farmers could not get together in a business way to advance their interests. Years ago the Grange came into existence. It was a secret fraternal organization the purpose of which seemed to be only the exchange of ideas behind closed doors, and the Grange was soon forgotten. Then came the Farmers Alliance to fight the bagging trust. While this was also a secret organization, it started out well, but it went into politics and permitted itself to be used by designing men to get office, and that was the last of the Alliance so far as its influence was concerned.

The Cotton Association is a later movement. That has already done the farmers some good, but sticking up to their promises seems to be the greatest trouble. Some farmers have been known to attend a meeting of the association, assent to the agreement to hold their cotton, then go right out and sell cotton for future delivery. After all, under present conditions the price of cot-

Governor Glenn Will try to Have Christening of the Cruiser North Carolina at Wilmington

If the wishes of the governor of North Carolina are considered the United States cruiser "North Carolina" will be given its name in North Carolina waters at Wilmington.

That he has requested the United States government to have the christening take place there was last night stated by Governor Glenn, who said that he made the request, if there is sufficient depth of water in the harbor at Wilmington to accommodate the vessel, and that he understood that it could easily be accommodated there.

With this event taking place in North Carolina it is certain that great crowds will go to Wilmington to be present, and that the day will be made a great one by the hospitable people of that city.—News and Observer.

ton is a matter of speculation and not regulated by the law of supply and demand. If the farmers hold it for a time they have to come back in the end and sell it to the same speculators and middle men from whom they have been holding it. If they had more business in the movement and had bonded warehouses and factories to handle and work up their own product, the speculator would be out of the game and conditions would be different.

The Farmers Consolidated Tobacco company differs from the foregoing in that it is a business organization, conducted on business principles; hence success comes with it. To boil the facts down to a plain statement, it is a business organization of tobacco farmers who operate their own warehouses to sell their crop. The expense of operation is reduced to the minimum, and in addition to receiving high prices for their tobacco the farmers come together in annual meeting at the end of the season and receive handsome dividends out of the profits arising from the business according to the stock each holds in the organization. This is simply a matter of business and looking out for their own interests, and that the company in the three years of its existence has paid the stock holders dividends aggregating 80 per cent shows how admirably and successful the business is managed.

But some may ask, how can the Consolidated company's warehouse benefit the farmers more than others where the same buyers operate on the floors of all? The answer to that is easy. The company gets the profits arising from conducting the warehouse business and can afford to take chances on running prices to the top notch and can buy in any lot which the buyers do not bid high enough.

It is an organization that should appeal to every tobacco farmer, for he ought to see at a glance that it is to his interest to become a part of the company and cooperate with it.

Boy Gets a Fall.

Wednesday afternoon Graham Flanagan, a little son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Flanagan, was walking on the parapet wall which crosses the culvert near the graded school building, when he fell off on the low side. He was knocked breathless for a moment by the fall but fortunately escaped serious injury, though his parents were considerably alarmed about him for a while. It is dangerous for children to walk on top of this wall yet it is almost a daily occurrence that they do so. They should take warning at Graham's narrow escape and keep off the wall.

CHAPTER IX.

It may have been that Mlle. Nanon, the faithful confidante of Mme. de Maintenon, had learned something of this interview, or it may be that Pere la Chaise, with the shrewdness for which his order is famous, had come to the conclusion that publicity was the best means of holding the king to his present intention, but, whatever the source, it was known all over the court next day that the old favorite was again in disgrace and that there was talk of a marriage between the king and the governess of his children. By midday there was none in the court who had not heard the tidings save only Mme. de Montespan, who, alarmed at her lover's absence, had remained in haughty seclusion in her room and knew nothing of what had passed.

Louis in his innate selfishness had been so accustomed to regard every event entirely from the side of how it would affect himself that he had never struck him that his long suffering family, who had always yielded to him the absolute obedience which he claimed as his right, would venture to offer any opposition to his new resolution. He was surprised, therefore, when his brother demanded a private interview that afternoon and entered his presence without the complaisant smile and humble air with which he was wont to appear before him.

"Why, monsieur, you seem less gay than usual today," said the king, with a smile. "Your dress indeed is bright, but your brow is clouded. I trust that all is well with madame and with the Duc de Chartres."

"Yes, sire, they are well, but they are sad, like myself, and from the same cause."

"Indeed! And why?"

"Have I ever failed in my duty as your younger brother, sire?"

"Never, Philippe, never!" said the king, laying his hand affectionately on the other's shoulder. "You have set an excellent example to my subjects."

"Then why set a slight upon me?"

"Philippe!"

"Yes, sire, I say it is a slight. We are of royal blood, and our wives are of royal blood also. You married the Princess of Spain; I married the Princess of Bavaria. It was a condescension, but still I did it. My first wife was the Princess of England. How can we admit into a house which has formed such alliances as these a woman who is the widow of a bankrupt soldier, a mere lamp-post, and whose name is a byword through the realm?"

The king had stared in amazement at his brother, but his anger now overcame his astonishment.

"Upon my word!" he cried: "upon my word! I have said just now that you have been an excellent brother, but I fear that I spoke a little prematurely. And so you take upon yourself to object to the lady whom I select as my wife?"

"I do, sire."

"And by what right?"

"By the right of the family honor, sire, which is as much mine as yours. I look upon it as a slight upon me and a slight upon my wife."

"Your wife! I have every respect for Charlotte Elizabeth of Bavaria, but how is she superior to one whose grandfather was the dear friend and comrade in arms of Henry the Great? Enough! I will not condescend to argue such a matter with you! Be gone, and do not return to my presence until you have learned not to interfere in my affairs."

"For all that, my wife shall not know her!" snarled monsieur.

The king was to have no quiet that day. If Mme. de Maintenon's friends had rallied to her, yesterday her enemies were active today. Monsieur had hardly disappeared before there rushed into the room a youth who bore upon his rich attire every sign of having just arrived from a dusty journey. He was pale faced and auburn haired with features which would have been strikingly like the king's if it were not that his nose had been disfigured in his youth. The king's face had lighted up at the sight of him, but it darkened again as he hurried forward and threw himself down at his feet.

"Oh, sire," he cried, "spare us this grief—spare us this humiliation! I implore you to pause before you do what will bring dishonor upon yourself and upon us!"

The king started back from him. "This is intolerable!" he cried. "It was bad from my brother, but worse from my son. You are in a conspiracy with him, Louis. Monsieur has told you to act this part."

The dauphin rose to his feet and looked steadfastly at his angry father.

"I have not seen my uncle," he said. "I was at Meudon when I heard this news—this dreadful news—and I sprang upon my horse, sire, and galloped over to implore you to think again before you drag our royal house so low."

"You talk like a fool!" cried his father. "I propose to marry a virtuous and charming lady of one of the oldest noble families of France, and you talk as if I were doing something degrading and unheard of."

Clerk Superior Court

"Pass it through my heart, sire!"

of the worst repute, she has led the life of an adventuress, is the widow of a deformed scribbler, and she occupies a menial position in the palace."

The king had stamped with his foot upon the carpet more than once during this frank address, but his anger blazed into a fury at its conclusion.

"Do you dare," he cried, with flashing eyes, "to call the charge of my children a menial position? I say that there is no higher in the kingdom. Go back to Meudon, sir, this instant and never dare to open your mouth again on the subject."

The young man bowed low and walked with dignity from the chamber.

The king's first hot anger had died away by now and had left behind it a cold, bitter spirit which was even more formidable to his antagonists.

But he had little breathing space. His assassins knew that with persistence they had bent his will before, and they trusted that they might do so again. It was Louvois, the minister, now who entered the room, with his usual port, his usual bearing, his huge nose and his aristocratic face, which, however, showed some signs of trepidation as it met the baleful eye of the king.

"Well, Louvois, what now?" he asked impatiently. "Has some new state matter arisen?"

"There is but one new state matter which has arisen, sire, but it is of such importance as to banish all others from our mind—your marriage, sire."

"You disapprove of it?"

"Oh, sire, can I help it?"

"Out of my room, sir! Am I to be tormented to death by your importunities? What! You dare to linger with I order you to go!" The king advanced angrily upon the minister, but Louvois suddenly flashed out his rapier. Louvois sprang back, with alarm and amazement upon his face, but it was the hilt and not the point which was presented to him.

"Pass it through my heart, sire!" the minister cried, falling upon his knees, his whole great frame in a quiver with emotion. "I will not live to see your glory fade!"

"Great heaven!" shrieked Louis, throwing the sword down upon the ground. "I believe that this is a conspiracy to drive me mad. Was ever a man so tormented in this life? This will be a private marriage, man, and it will not affect the state in the least degree."

Louvois gathered himself up and shot his rapier back into its sheath.

"Your majesty is determined?" he asked.

"Absolutely."

"Then I say no more. I have done my duty." He bowed his head as one in deep dejection when he departed, but in truth his heart was lightened within him, for he had the king's assurance that the woman whom he hated would, even though his wife, not sit on the throne of the queens of France.

These repeated attacks, if they had not shaken the king's resolution, had at least irritated and exasperated him to the utmost. He wore accordingly no very cordial face when the usher in attendance admitted the venerable figure of Father la Chaise, his confessor.

"I wish you all happiness, sire," said the Jesuit, "and I congratulate you from my heart that you have taken the great step which must lead to content both in this world and the next."

"I have had neither happiness nor contentment yet, father," answered the king peevishly. "I have never been so pestered in my life. The whole court has been on its knees to me to change my intention."

The Jesuit looked at him anxiously out of his keen gray eyes.

"Fortunately your majesty is a man of strong will," said he, "and not to be so easily swayed as they think."

"No, no, I did not give an inch. But still it must be confessed that it is very unpleasant to have so many against one."

RURAL MAIL ROUTES

There is no feature of the rural free delivery mail service that impresses the government mail officials more than the patronage the people give their respective routes, and this largely determines whether a route shall be discontinued or reduced to less frequent trips. When the people themselves fail to show interest in the service the conclusion naturally follows that they do not appreciate it. If an inspector goes over a route and finds that not over twenty five or fifty per cent of the people living directly on the route have mail boxes, he at once forms the impression that they have very little interest in keeping the route in operation.

It is not the policy of the government to abolish or curtail any route if the people show by their patronage that they appreciate it. Not long ago there was talk of reducing some routes at Wilson to three times a week, and now we see it stated that two routes at Elizabeth City are to be reduced unless the patronage is increased, sixty days having been given for the people to show their interest in the matter.

We call attention to this that the people of Pitt county may look after their routes. The rural free delivery service is too great a convenience to be curtailed or discontinued, but on the contrary it should be enlarged until every rural section is served. The people can show their interest by getting every family living on a route to put up a mail box, and then take more newspapers and write more letters. It helps every home to have plenty of good newspapers in it. Take a daily paper if you can and as many others as possible. Let your list of reading matter include your county paper, your church paper, a good farm paper, a magazine or two and such others as your means will permit. Follow these suggestions and you need have no fears of losing you mail route.

The school book agony for this state is over, at least so far as the publishers are concerned. The purchasers' part is yet to come.

Chicago New Distinction.

When it comes to "ways that are dark, and tricks that are vain," Chicago takes rank with the healthiest in the "Ch. nee." According to a dispatch to The New York Herald of yesterday, the city of embalmed beef and doctor-d sausage has just furnished another scandal, for the attention of the health authorities. A big factory has been discovered, devoted to the "re-processing" of ancient and decayed eggs—eggs of doubtful and pedigreed vintage: malarious eggs. The establishment is said to have been closely guarded and the health officials searching for it were enabled to locate it only by reason of acute olfactory nerves. The process, it is stated, was to take eggs that were beyond all hope of sale on the market, mix them in great vats, run the mass over huge rollers, deodorize, dry and sift it and finally ship the stuff to bakers all over the country. And the dear people come along, buy the baker's bread and that's what they get. For bold, rapacious rascality commend us to Chicago.—Charlotte Observer.

She Smothered Chicken Right.

A Charlotte lady day before yesterday had company and went to interview her cook. "Can you smother a chicken, Sempronia?" asked the lady. "Yes, ma'am." "Just one for dinner?" "Yes, ma'am." The lady was entertaining her guests, when a horrid odor began to grow upon the air. She excused her guest and followed the trail, which led to the kitchen. The fool cook had thrown the old hen, feathers and all, into the oven of the stove. "When I sets in to smother a chicken," she told her mistress, "I smothers hit right, I does."—Charlotte Observer.

"Then there is the more credit to your majesty for having resisted them. You have done nobly, sire. You have earned the praise and blessing of holy church."

"I trust that what I have done is right, father," said the king gravely. "I should be glad to see you again later in the evening, but at present I desire a little leisure for solitary thought."

Father la Chaise left the cabinet with a deep distrust of the king's intentions. It was obvious that the powerful appeals which had been made to him had shaken if they had failed to alter his resolution. What would be the result if more were made? And more would be made. That was as certain as that darkness follows light. Some master card must be played now which would bring the matter to a crisis at once.

The bishop of Meaux was waiting in the anteroom, and Father la Chaise in a few brief words let him see the danger of the situation and the means by which they should meet it. Together they sought Mme. de Maintenon in her room. As the two plotters looked upon her perfect complexion, her regular features, so calm and yet so full of refinement, and the exquisite grace of her figure and bearing they could not but feel that if they failed in their ends it was not for want of having a perfect tool.

She had risen at their entrance, and her expression showed that she had read upon their faces something of the anxiety which filled their minds.

"You have evil news!" she cried. "No, no, my daughter." It was the bishop who spoke. "But we must be on our guard against our enemies, who would turn the king away from you if they could."

Her face shone at the mention of her lover. "Ah, you do not know!" she cried. "He has made a vow. I would trust him as I would trust myself."

But the Jesuit's intellect was arrayed against the intuition of the woman.

"Our opponents are many and strong," said he, shaking his head. "We must bring the matter to an end."

"And how, father?" "The marriage must be at once, this very night if possible."

"Oh, father, you ask too much. The king would never consent to such a proposal."

"It is he that will propose it."

"And why?" "Because we shall force him to. It is only thus that all opposition can be stopped. When it is done the court will accept it. Until it is done they will resist it."

"What would you have me do, then, father?"

"Resign the king." "Resign him!" She turned as pale as a lily.

"It is the best course, madame." "Ah, father, I might have done it last month, last week, even yesterday morning."

"Fear not, madame. We advise you for the best. Go to the king now, at once. Say to him that you have heard that he has been subjected to much annoyance upon your account, that you cannot bear to think that you should be a cause of dissension in his own family and that therefore you will release him from his promise and will withdraw yourself from the court forever."

She cast a light mantle about her shoulders.

"I follow your advice," she said. "I believe that you are wiser than I. But, oh, if he should take me at my word!"

"He will not take you at your word."

The king had remained alone in his cabinet, wrapped in somewhat gloomy thoughts. Suddenly there came a gentle tap at the door, and there was the woman who was in his thoughts standing in the twilight before him. He sprang to his feet and held out his hands with a smile.

"Francoise! You here? Then I have at last a welcome visitor, and it is the first one today."

"Sire, I fear that you have been troubled."

"I have indeed, Francoise."

"But I have a remedy for it."

"And what is that?"

"I shall leave the court, sire, and you shall think no more of what has passed between us. I have brought discord where I meant to bring peace. Let me retire to St. Cyr or to the Abbey of Fontevault, and you will no longer be called upon to make such sacrifices for my sake."

The king turned deathly pale and clutched at her shawl with a trembling hand, as though he feared that she was about to put her resolution into effect that very instant.

"No, no, Francoise; you must not leave me! You must stay with me and be my wife." He could hardly speak for agitation, and he still grasped at her dress to detain her.
