SENT HER ON.

No Use For This Kind.

A town always wants more citizens, and Greenville is no exception, but in every community there are some "whose room is better than their company." One of this kind was in evidence Saturday night. It was a "soiled" damsel who, after tanking up on mean liquor, disturbed the denizens of a certain quarter of the town by the row she kicked up. She was before the mayor Monday to answer the charge of disorderly conduct. The judgment of the court was that her presence was very undesirable, and she was given until 5 o'clock to shake off the dust of the town. She shook on the first train.

THE GOOD STREETS MUST COME.

EDITOR REFLECTOR:

That better streets are coming, and that in the near future, is such a matter of necessity and certainly none can dispute, or will attempt. One question arises, which will and ought to be the main street to the depot? That Dickinson avenue can never be made the main thoroughfare without great conflict and greater cost is too plain to discuss. Then what can be the remedy? Common sense answers—in unmistakable emphasis—Evans street to Tenth street and then Tenth to the depot. Tenth street is the widest and prettiest street in the town. The new railroad will soon be completed, and a very much greater travel both of freight and passengers. Every street should be made better. Dickinson avenue for hauling and such as wish to make a quick walking trip to the depot, but main street, the main thoroughfare, should be of sufficient width as to give good room to travel and the route suggested is the only outlet and solution to the problem. It would be used more a great deal by the riding public than any other street in the town. It is to be hoped that those in authority and whose duty it is to consider this matter will give this thought and action. The streets for the last three months have been no better than a country road. The good streets must come, and why not begin to consider the matter as soon as possible. The cost of better streets would almost be saved in a few years by the difference in wear and tear of team and vehicles. Won't some one begin to think and act for the good of the town? X.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Baptist church will meet Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. P. E. Dancy.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Methodist church will meet Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock with Mrs. A. B. Ellington.

The monthly meeting of the directors of Home Building & Loan Association will be held at 5 o'clock this afternoon in H. A. White's office.

The Reflector praised the weather too quick again. September disappointed us with a heavy rain Monday evening. It is better today, anyway.

24 INNING BASE BALL GAME.

New Major League Record Established in Boston

Boston, Sept. 1.—A new major league record was established today when the Philadelphia American League team defeated Boston 4 to 1 in a twenty-four inning game lasting nearly five hours. An advertised double header brought a large crowd to the grounds but it was impossible to play the second game on account of darkness.

On but one occasion so far as recorded has this number of innings been exceeded. In 1895 a game between Fargo and Grand Forks, at Devils Lake, N. D., lasted 25 innings.

The second longest game on record prior to today's contest was the Harvard-Manchester game of 24 innings played in Boston common twenty-nine years ago.

But three major league games approach the present record, each having lasted twenty innings.

Coombs pitched one of the strongest games ever seen in this city five times passing dangerous batsmen only to get the next man. He struck out eighteen men and was batted safely fifteen times. The pitching of Harris equalled that of Coombs for 23 innings, but in the last inning he weakened after the Athletics had scored and was hit for two three baggers. The fielding was necessarily excellent.

GRAHAM SOCIETY EVENTS.

Graham, N. C., Sept. 1.—Miss Mabeline White entertained very informally, on Tuesday evening in honor of her guests Miss Nell Skinner, of Greenville, Miss Janet Quinn, of Salisbury, and Miss Margaret Springs, of Charlotte.

The fun lay in trying to blow the largest soap bubble.

The souvenirs furnished by the charming hostess, dainty white pipes tied with red ribbon were used for the purpose.

Miss Nell Skinner, being the fortunate winner of the ladies prize, a picture by Flagg Mr. Dudley Dupuy, the gentlemen's prize, a fine bryar pipe in a velvet case, and Mr. Hanes, the booby, a fig stem pipe. The drawing room was prettily decorated in trailing vines of white clematis, the only lights being used were Japanese lanterns with red and white lamps. Delightful refreshments were served and all spent a most pleasant evening.—Raleigh News and Observer.

Every Day a Big One

It took until 5 o'clock p. m. to finish Monday's tobacco sales. All that evening and night farmers were coming in with loads for today's sale. Greenville is certainly selling tobacco.

Any one having an accumulation of pennies on hand can dispose of them at the Greenville Banking and Trust Co. The bank wants pennies for making small change.

AYDEN ITEMS.

Newsy Notes From a Hustling Town.

Ayden, N. C. Sept. 4, 1906

J. H. Browning has changed bases. Sunday he went to Winterville and now the place that once knew him knows him no more. 'Tis sad.

Miss May Smith, the popular young daughter of friend J. R. Smith, will visit friends in and around Ayden during the week.

H. C. Ormond has purchased a fine lot on Main street and will at once erect a handsome residence.

Mrs. W. C. Jackson has come home from a visit in the country. Josh Manning was here yesterday.

Miss Lida Morrison left yesterday to spend sometime with friends in Hyde county.

If one may judge from the recent demonstration in Mr. Bryan's favor in New York, the Democratic party is not getting from the face of the earth so readily even if Mr. Roosevelt did say they must.

G. A. Case and B. F. Manning have erected a tent on the lot next to the postoffice for the purpose of taking pictures. Any work entrusted to them will be nicely executed. They both have a large experience.

Mrs. Louisa Cox, of Winterville, is here visiting friends.

Miss Dora Manning, of Winterville, was here last week visiting Miss Pearl Tripp.

Mrs. Kate Richardson came Saturday morning from New Bern to spend sometime with relatives here and at Omondsville.

Herbert Hardy and Nat Whitfield, both of Greenville, were here Saturday.

Merrimon McKinney, of Washington, is here visiting his mother and mostly other folks.

B. F. Early is seriously sick at his home on West avenue.

Mrs. R. H. Garris from the country is spending the week with her daughter, Mrs. W. E. Hooks.

Miss Nellie Barnhill returned to her home in Greenville yesterday.

Miss Lucy Brooks, of Grifton, is here on a visit to Mrs. Guy Brooks.

While hunting items yesterday we inquired of Steve Noble if he knew anything. His reply was "nothing only the miller's pig is fat." He ought to know, he was to see some one at the miller's Sunday and surely he saw the pig.

Misses Annie and Gussie Lawrence, of Greene county, were here Sunday and left yesterday for the Winterville High school.

Mrs. H. C. Ormond and children are over in Greene county.

Mrs. A. L. Harrington, of Kinston, is visiting her father, W. F. Hart.

THE WEATHER.

Fair and slightly cooler tonight. Wednesday fair.

There is so much water in the river that goods had to be moved up to the second story of the warehouse at the Norfolk and Southern wharf.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY

From Hope Fire Company

It is with sorrow that we learn of the death of Mr. A. P. Hyman of Tarboro N. C., whose life was so cruelly taken in Rocky Mount last Saturday night while at his post of duty by the hand of a midnight assassin. Mr. Hyman was the brother of our townman, R. Hyman, Chief of the Greenville Fire Department, and a member of Hope Fire Co.

Therefore we the members of Hope Fire Co., wish to extend to Chief Hyman and members of his distressed family our heartfelt sympathy in their hour of grief.

We your committee recommend that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy sent to Mr. Hyman and a copy given to the Daily Reflector for publication.

MAN FINDS SKILLET HE HID DURING WAR

Asheville, N. C., Sept. 3.—General James M. Ray, of Asheville, who during the war between the states, commanded the 60th North Carolina infantry, has received a letter from John G. Lindsey, formerly of Asheville, and now of Chattanooga, in which Mr. Lindsey says that he recently went to the battlefield of Chickamauga and located a spot and found a skillet that he had hid there more than 42 years ago.

Mr. Lindsey was a member of company A. North Carolina regiment, and was with his company during the battle of Missionary Ridge. On the evening before the Confederates evacuated the battlefield November 25, 1863—Mr. Lindsey went with several members of his company and begged supplies from General Bragg's cook. They secured the supplies all right, and then Mr. Lindsey prevailed upon the cook to lend him a skillet, promising to return the cooking utensils on the following night. But the fortunes of war made impossible the keeping of that promise and the return of the skillet. The troops were withdrawn that night and before taking up the march Mr. Lindsey hid the skillet in a rock cliff near by.

That was nearly 42 years ago. Recently Mr. Lindsey visited the battlefield and remembering the incident of the skillet and the additional fact that his promise to return the skillet remained unfulfilled; made search for cliff and skillet. With little difficulty he found the spot and skillet as he had left it. Now, after a lapse of nearly half a century, Mr. Lindsey would gladly keep his promise and return the utensil, but all the participants in the original transaction are dead and the old trying man will be sent to General Ray, at Asheville, to be added to his immense collection of war relics, said to be the largest private one in the state.

Mr. J. E. W. Sugg, a prominent farmer of Greene county, died Sunday night of congestive chill.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Of Those Coming and Going.

Charlie James returned Monday evening from Seven Spring.

R. F. Betts returned to Wilmamston Monday evening and Mrs. Betts joined him there today.

Miss Frances Bagwell left this morning for Oxford to resume her studies in school there.

Theron and Carman Cox and Lucille Spain left this morning for the Methodist orphanage at Raleigh.

Mrs. L. H. Lee and Miss Blanch Cromartie left this morning for Baltimore to purchase new millinery goods for Mrs. L. Griffin.

Mr. and Mrs. Shep Manning, who have been visiting the latter's father, Rev. W. H. Linghamhouse, returned to Rocky Mount Monday evening.

P. S. Cotten left this morning for Norfolk to engage in the practice of law there. Greenville regrets to lose this excellent young man but wishes him success in his new home.

Cities Should Own Light and Water Plants.

Alderman W. T. Dabney, of Richmond, has prepared a strong argument in favor of municipal ownership of a water and electricity plants. Every city ought to own its water and lighting plant. To give franchises to private companies is a wrong to the city and every consumer and a gift to private individuals of what belongs to all. In the past the mistake of giving away franchises was due to the fact that nobody knew their value, but now there is no valid reason against city ownership or operation. Experience has shown where the operation was put in the hands of a Board of Public Works municipal plants can be run better in the interest of the whole public than when conducted by private individuals for private profit credit.

Mosquitoes get worse, but they will skidoo when frost comes.

It's time to cross your fingers when you hear a man boasting of his good deeds.

Art has neither age nor sex. It demands the imagination of a child the sentiment of a woman, and the virility of a man.

THE REFUGEES.

"Will you not see me again, madame. Is there no question which you would wish to ask me before I go?"

"Good God," she cried. "Is this a man? Has it a heart? Are these the lips which have told me so often that he loved me? Are these the eyes which have looked so fondly into mine? Can you then thrust away a woman whose life has been yours as you put away the St. Germain palace when a more showy one was ready for you? And this is the end of all those vows, those sweet whispers, those persuasions, those promises—this!"

"Nay, madame, this is painful to both of us." "Pain! Where is the pain in your face? I see anger in it because I have dared to speak truth. I see joy in it because you feel that your vile task is done."

"My patience can bear no more!" cried the king furiously. "I leave you, madame, and forever!"

But her fury had swept all fear and discretion from her mind. She stepped between the door and him, her face flushed, her eyes blazing, her face thrust a little forward, one small white satin slipper tapping upon the carpet.

"You are in haste, sire? She is waiting for you doubtless. But it was a disappointment last night, was it not, my poor sire? Ah, and for the governor, what a blow! Great heaven, what a blow! No archbishop, no marriage, all the pretty plan gone wrong! Was it not cruel?"

Louis gazed at the beautiful, furious face in bewilderment, and it flashed across his mind that perhaps her grief had turned her brain. What else could be the meaning of this wild talk of the archbishop and the disappointment? It would be unworthy of him to speak harshly to one who was so afflicted. He must soothe her, and, above all, he must get away from her.

"You have had the keeping of a good many of my family jewels," said he. "I beg that you will still retain them as a small sign of my regard."

He had hoped to please her and to calm her, but in an instant she was over at her treasure cupboard hurling double handfuls of precious stones down at his feet. They clinked and rattled, the little pellets of red and yellow and green, rolling, glinting over the floor and rapping up against the oak panels at the base of the walls.

"They will do for the governor if the archbishop comes at last!" she cried.

He was more convinced than ever that she had lost her wits. A thought struck him by which he might appeal to all that was softer and more gentle in her nature. He stepped swiftly to the door, pushed it half open and gave a whispered order. A youth with long golden hair waving down over his black velvet doublet entered the room. It was her youngest son, the Count of Toulouse.

"I thought that you would wish to bid him farewell," said Louis. She stood staring as though unable to realize the significance of his words. Then it was borne suddenly upon her that her children as well as her lover were to be taken from her, that this other woman should see them and speak with them and win their love while she was far away. All that was evil and bitter in the woman flushed suddenly up in her until for the instant she was what the king had thought her. If her son was not for her then he should be for none. A jeweled knife lay among her treasures ready to her hand. She caught it up and rushed at the cowering lad.

Louis screamed and ran forward to stop her, but another had been swifter than he. A woman had darted through the open door and had caught the upraised wrist. There was a moment's struggle, two queenly figures swayed and strained, and the knife dropped between their feet. The frightened Louis caught it up, and, seizing his little son by the wrist, he rushed from the apartment. Francoise de Montespau staggered back against the ottoman to find herself confronted by the steady eyes and set face of that other Francoise, the woman whose presence fell like a shadow at every turn of her life.

"I have saved you, madame, from doing that which you would have been the first to bewail."

"Saved me! It is you who have driven me to this—you, whom I picked up when you were hard pressed for a crust of bread or a cup of sour wine. What had you? You had nothing—nothing except a name which was a laughingstock. And what did I give you? I gave you everything. You know that I gave you everything—money, position, the entrance to the court. You had them all from me. And now you mock me!"

"Madame, I do not mock you. I pity you from the bottom of my heart."

"None toward me? Oh, woman, woman!"

"What have I done, then? The king came to my room to see the children taught. He stayed. He talked. He asked my opinion on this and that. Could I be silent, or could I say other than what I thought?"

"And as by your own confession, you stole the king's love from me, most virtuous of women!"

"I had all gratitude and kindly thought for you. You have, as you have so often reminded me, been my benefactress. It was not necessary for you to say it, for I had never for an instant forgotten it."

Mr. Whyte and Mr. Gorman.

In the summer of 1871 Mr. Whyte, the new senator from Maryland, then senator and Democratic state leader, was seated in his law office in Lexington street, between Courtland and Calvert. A slender young man, slightly above medium height, with a pale, intellectual face, long, straight black hair and large, keen blue eyes, entered the room where the senator and party leader was examining a law report and, with a winning smile and putting out his hand, said:

"Senator Whyte, I have come in to say that I am favorable to your nomination for governor. I am Arthur Gorman of Howard county."

Although he had heard of him as a rising young Democrat, it was Mr. Whyte's first meeting with the late Senator Gorman.

When the legislature of 1872 convened the county leaders went to Governor Whyte, who had just been inaugurated, for advice as to the election of the speaker of the house of delegates. With characteristic decision and discernment the governor said:

"Why, you have just the man for the place."

"Who?" the then "state crowd" asked in chorus.

"Young Gorman of Howard," answered Governor Whyte, whose word was law, and Mr. Gorman became the speaker.—Baltimore Sun.

The Sewing Machine.

A new mucilage brush to clean a sewing machine is very satisfactory. Lifting the head, insert the brush into every crevice and crack, paying particular attention to the region beneath the needle bar. All this, of course, before oiling it. Then wash the brush and put it in the sewing machine drawer for future use.

To remove cloth from the following list, use the following method: French cloth, 8 parts; chloroform, 10 parts; water, 10 parts. Mix and apply to the cloth. Wash in water. Dry in shade.

Some People Expect New Shoes

HURT

And they are seldom disappointed. They buy that kind. The fact that a shoe should feel comfortable from the start is unknown to them because they have never felt the luxury of putting on a rightly made shoe.

The Hanan Shoe

offers more real comfort when new than their kind of shoes offer after months of wear—it starts out a smart, stylish shoe and ends just as smart and stylish.

There are not so many such people as there used to be. We know this because we sell so

Maybe you would like to prove these facts.

ANIMALS' ILLUSIONS.

The Horse a Prey to the Terrors of Imagination.

Birds are perhaps more commonly the victims of illusions than other animals, their stupidity about their eggs being quite remarkable. On one occasion, for instance, a hen got into the pavilion of a ladies' golf club and began to sit on a golf ball in a corner, for which it made a nest with a couple of pocket handkerchiefs. But many quadrupeds are not only deceived for the moment by reflections, shadows and such unrealities, but often seen victims to illusions largely developed by the imagination.

The horse, for instance, is one of the bravest of animals when face to face with dangers which it can understand, such as the charge of an elephant or a wild boar at bay. Yet the courageous and devoted horse, so steadfast against the dangers he knows, is a prey to a hundred terrors of the imagination due to illusions, mainly those of sight, for shying, the minor effect of these illusions, and "bolting," in which panic gains complete possession of his soul, are caused, as a rule, by mistakes as to what the horse sees and not by misinterpretation of what he hears. It is noticed, for instance, that many horses which shy usually start away from objects on one side more frequently than from objects on the other. This is probably due to defects in the vision of one or other eye.

In nearly all cases of shying the horse takes fright at some unfamiliar object, though this is commonly quite harmless, such as a wheelbarrow upside down, a freshly felled log or a piece of paper rolling before the wind. This instantly becomes an illusion, is interpreted as something else, and it is a curious question in equine neuropathy to know what it is that the horse figures these harmless objects to be. When Russian ponies first began to be shipped to England they usually objected to pass near a donkey. This reluctance was explained on the hypothesis that the ponies seldom saw donkeys in Russia and mistook them for bears.—London Spectator.

Cleaning Gold Braid.

Gold braid that is only slightly discolored may be cleaned by treating it with a soft brush dipped in fine whiting, calcined magnesia or fuller's earth. If badly spotted and blotched the stains may be removed by carefully brushing with a brush dipped in a warm solution of potassium cyanide—one dram to one-half pint of water—then in clean warm water. If the braid is of a poor quality all attempts at cleaning will only make its appearance worse.

Spots on Wall Paper.

To remove grease spots from wall paper or any colored material a capital plan is to mix fuller's earth to a paste (about the consistency of rather thick mustard) with water and ammonia, leaving the paste to dry for twenty-four hours or so. When dry it will brush off and should have absorbed all the ugly spots. Sometimes, however, a second application is necessary.

COUNTY CONVENTION.

By direction of the Republican County Executive Committee for Pitt county, a convention of the people of Pitt county is hereby called to assemble in the court house in Greenville Saturday Sept. 15th, 1906 at 12 o'clock for the purpose of nominating candidates for the various county offices and to transact such other business as may come before the convention. The people are requested to meet at the several voting precincts of the county on Saturday the 8th day of September, 1906, at 3 p. m. to nominate candidates for Justices of the Peace and Constables for their respective townships and to appoint delegates to attend the county convention. It is suggested that all citizens who desire to affiliate with the Republican party in this campaign, and see to a good opposition county ticket in the field, be invited and requested to act as delegates from their respective townships to the county convention.

The time has come, when two well organized and active political parties in Pitt county is essential to the proper administration of public affairs and the preservation of the independence and rights of the people. Prominent speakers will address the convention,

A BUSINESS PROPOSITION

The Reflector has been told that the contractors who are here to do the grading on the Raleigh and Pamlico Sound railroad have offered to hire all the county convicts they can get for their work. They offer to pay a good price per day for each convict, and in addition agree to bear all the expense of guarding and feeding them.

It strikes us that it would be wise for the board of county commissioners to consider this matter and to petition the judge at the coming term of the court to give them authority to hire out the convicts. The railroad contractors offer to employ the convicts for about six months, and as the number in the road gang will average about 35 it will mean some $8,000 or $10,000 in cash to the county for six months besides being relieved from the expense of guarding and feeding the convicts.

It is coming the time of year now when the convicts cannot do very much work on the public roads, and by hiring them out for the winter and turning their wages into the road fund of the county this fund would be large enough to do a great deal of good when the convicts are put back on the public road work next spring. The wages of the convicts for six months at the price the contractors offer to pay will put as much money in the road fund of the county as the road taxes amount to in two years. The public road work could be pushed forward more rapidly with the increased fund. It is a business proposition that the board of commissioners and people of the county should be interested in.

LEGACY TO A NEWSPAPER.

Referring some days ago to the fact that Biel, the noted South African multi-millionaire, had endowed telegraph, telephone, and transportation companies with several million dollars, this paper said that everything helped or educated the people had been endowed except a newspaper. And now comes a woman in Italy who gave in her will three thousand dollars to a certain newspaper, giving this as her reason: In recognition of my gratitude for having been so often entertained by it."

Rich men have frequently bequeathed large sums to secure instruction at a college upon certain topics. None but students at that college obtained the benefit. One of these days some wise rich man will endow a newspaper to teach some truth in which he profoundly believes, so that special articles from the most gifted men will appear regularly in its columns, illuminating the truth. It will then reach thousands and hundreds of thousands of people. The newspaper is the college of today to the masses and is to be more and more the medium of teaching and educating the people.—Raleigh News and Observer.

THE PRESIDENT ON TRUSTS.

Mr. Carnegie, at the opening of the Roosevelt campaign in 1904, in a burst of partisan philanthropy, said he would give one million dollars to the Republican campaign fund to elect Mr. Roosevelt. Did his liberal donation have the effect of enervating the judicial arm of the government? It looks so, for there has been no attempt to prosecute the steel trust and it must be remembered that Mr. Carnegie owns $100,000,000 of the steel trust bonds. As Mr. Roosevelt has discovered that "the question of revising the tariff stands wholly apart from the question of dealing with the so-called trusts—that is, with the control of monopolies and with the supervision of great wealth is business especially in corporate form."

It is possible that President Roosevelt does not know, or for partisan purposes denies that such "so-called trusts" as the steel trust the sugar trust and most manufacturing combinations that are complete or partial monopolies have been created and could not exist without tariff protection against foreign competition.

The protective tariff was the mother of those trusts and is still nursing those lusty infants.

Some Helpful Rules to Observe When Making Jam.

Skim the jam well and often. Use good, dry, not overripe fruit. The preserving pan should not be more than three parts full at the most.

The jam should be allowed to boil quickly the whole time; otherwise it will be a bad color.

When the jam begins to get decidedly less and to change color pour a little on to a plate and let it get cold. If it then forms a jelly it is done.

A copper preserving pan is best, but, failing that, a cast iron enameled stewpan does excellently. Tin pans should be avoided, as they spoil the color of the jam.

If you wish to keep the fruit whole boil the sugar and water first to a sirup and then put it in the fruit.

Coffee Jelly.

To one quart of coffee (as prepared for the table) one-half box of gelatin. Soak the gelatin in two-thirds of a cup of cold water for one-half hour or longer, then set the cup in hot water until the gelatin is thoroughly dissolved. Add one-half cup of sugar to the quart of hot coffee and stir in the melted gelatin and a little vanilla before the whole thickens. Set in a cool place to mold and serve with cream and sugar.

To Restore Oilcloth.

When oilcloth begins to lose its shiny surface it can be improved in appearance and made to last much longer by being varnished with glue. Wash the oilcloth thoroughly and let it dry. At night, when the traffic of the day is done, go over it with a piece of flannel dipped in glue water. Choose a nice dry day for this, and then the glue will be quite hard by morning, and the oilcloth will look like new.

A Test of Sanity.

Some visitors were being shown over a pauper lunatic asylum. They inquired of their conductor what method was employed to discover when the inmates were sufficiently recovered to leave. "We have a big trough of water," said the conductor, "and we turn on the tap. We leaves it running and tells 'em to bale out the water with pails until they've emptied the troughs." "How does that prove, then?" asked one of the visitors. "Well," said the conductor, "them as ain't idiots turns off the tap."

A Tramp of the Sea.

The shark known as the elephant, bone and basking shark roams nearly all temperate seas. Its mouth is comparatively small and bears six or seven rows of very small teeth, perhaps 200 in a row. The gill openings are enormous, the gill rakers long, close together and slender, recalling whalebone; hence the name whale shark. The skin is rough, covered with short spines. Where these monsters live in winter is not known, but doubtless they roam the temperate and semitropic seas. In summer they are gregarious and are seen in schools lying on the surface seemingly asleep. They reach the New England coast in June and July, the Hebrides and the Frith of Clyde in June and leave in July. On the Pacific coast they are found off Monterey bay in July, large schools being seen on the surface, where they can readily be approached.—Metropolitan Magazine.

THE REFUGEES

By A. CONAN DOYLE,
Author of "The Return of Sherlock Holmes"

COPYRIGHT, 1898, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

"Maybe he'll get a stroke or break his neck down those stairs. I've nothing to work with now, but a few rubs with your bar will finish the job. Ah, dear, you are right, and we are fairly tired!"
A great bell had begun to ring in the chateau, and there was a loud buzz of voices and a clatter of feet upon the stones. Hoarse orders were shouted, and there was the sound of turning keys. Five minutes passed, however, and yet another five minutes, without any one appearing.

"Well, I'll have that bar out, after all," said the American at last, rising and stepping over to the window. "Anyhow we'll see what all this catterwauling is about." He climbed up on his pegs as he spoke and peeped out. "Come up!" he cried excitedly to his comrade. "They've got some other game going on here, and they are all a deal too busy to bother their heads about us."

De Catinat clambered up beside him, and the two stood staring down into the courtyard. A brazier had been lit at each corner, and the place was thronged with men, many of whom carried torches. The main gate was open, and a carriage, which had apparently just driven in, was standing at a small door immediately in front of their window. A man wearing a plumed hat and enveloped in a riding coat stepped from the carriage and then, turning round, dragged a second person out after him. There was a scuffle, a cry, a push, and the two figures vanished through the door. As it closed the carriage drove away, the torches and braziers were extinguished, the main gate was closed once more, and all was as quiet as before this sudden interruption.

"Well!" gasped De Catinat. "Is this another king's messenger they've got?" "There will be lodgings for two more here in a short time," said Amos Green. "Give me your bar again. This thing is giving. It won't take us long to have it out." He set to work furiously, trying to deepen the groove in the stone, through which he hoped to drag the staple. Suddenly he ceased and strained his ears.

"By thunder!" said he. "There's some one working on the other side!" They both stood listening. There were the thud of hammers, the rasp of a saw and the clatter of wood from the other side of the wall. "What can they be doing? Can you see them?" "They are too near the wall." "I think I can manage," said De Catinat. "I am lighter than you." He pushed his head and neck and half of one shoulder through the gap between the stone and there he remained until his friend thought that perhaps he had stuck and pulled his legs to extricate him. He writhed back, however, without any difficulty.

"They are building something," he whispered. "Building?" "Yes. There are four of them, with a lantern."

"What can they be building, then?" "It's a shed, I think. I can see four sockets in the ground, and they are fixing four uprights into them."

"Well, we can't get away as long as there are four men just under our window."

"Impossible!" "But we may as well finish our work for all that."

The gentle scrapings of his iron were drowned amid the noise which swelled ever louder from without. The bar loosened at the end, and he drew it in. The steady hammering and sawing went forward. It was early morning, and the first cold light was beginning to steal over the courtyard before the work was at last finished and the workmen had left. Then at last the prisoners dared to climb up and to see what it was which had been constructed during the night. It gave them a catch of the breath as they looked at it. It was a scaffold. It was buttressed up against their wall, and in the center stood a headsman's block.

"I think it is time that we left," said Amos Green. "The window is clear. Let us make a rush for it."

"It is useless. I can see a line of armed men along the farther side of the yard. And here come more. See, at the center gate!"

As he spoke the door which faced them opened, and a singular procession filed out. First came two dozen footmen, walking in pairs, all carrying halberds and clad in the same maroon colored liveries. After them a huge bearded man, with his tunic off and the sleeves of his coarse shirt rolled up over his elbows, strode along with a great ax over his left shoulder. Behind him, a priest with an open missal pattered across the courtyard and in a shadow was a woman, clad in black, her neck bare, and a black shawl cast over her head and drooping in front of her bowed face. Within grip of her walked a tall, thin, fierce faced man, with harsh red features and a great jutting nose. He wore a flat velvet cap with a single eagle feather fastened into it by a diamond clasp which glowed in the morning light. But bright as was his gem his dark eyes were brighter still and sparkled from under his heavy brows with a mad brilliancy which bore with it something of menace and of terror.

The woman had fluttered at the foot of the scaffold, but the man thrust her on, and two of the followers caught her by either wrist and dragged her forward.

"Oh, Maurice! Maurice!" she screamed. "I am not fit to die! Oh, forgive me, Maurice, as you hope for forgiveness yourself! Maurice! Maurice!" She strove to get toward him, to clutch at his wrist, at his sleeve, but he stood with his hand on his sword, gazing at her with a face which was all wreathed and contorted with merriment. She turned away and threw back the mantle which had shrouded her features.

"Ah, sire!" she cried. "Sire! If you could see me now!"

And at the cry and at the sight of that fair pale face De Catinat, looking down from the window, was stricken as though by a dagger, for there, standing beside the headsman's block, was she who had been the most powerful, as well as the wittiest and the fairest, of the women of France—none other than Françoise de Montespan, so lately the favorite of the king.

CHAPTER XIII.

ON the night upon which such strange chances had befallen his messengers the king sat in his cabinet attended only by Louvois, his minister. There was a tap at the door, and Bontems peeped in. "The archbishop has arrived, sire."

"Very well, Bontems. Ask madame to be so good as to step this way. And order the witnesses to assemble in the anteroom."

As the valet hastened away Louis turned to his minister. "I wish you to be one of the witnesses, Louvois." "To what, sire?" "To my marriage." The minister started. "What, sire! Already?" "Now, Louvois; within five minutes." "Very good, sire."

There had meanwhile been busy goings on in the small room where the red lamp burned in front of the Virgin. Françoise de Maintenon stood in the center, a little flush of excitement on her cheeks and an unwonted light in her placid gray eyes. She was clad in a dress of shining white brocade, trimmed and slashed with silver serge and fringed at the throat and arms with costly point lace. There came a discreet tap at the door.

"It is Bontems, madame," said Mlle. Nanon. "He says that the king is ready."

"Then we shall not keep him waiting. Come, mademoiselle, and may God shed his blessing upon what we are about to do!" The little party assembled in the king's anteroom and started from there to the private chapel. In front walked the portly bishop, clad in a green vestment, puffed out with the importance of the function, his missal in his hand and his fingers between the pages at the service de matrimonia. The king and Mme. de Maintenon walked side by side, she quiet and composed, with gentle bearing and downcast eyes, he with a flush on his dark cheeks and a nervous, furtive look in his eyes, like a man who knows that he is in the midst of one of the great crises of his life. Behind them in solemn silence followed a little group of chosen witnesses, the lean, silent Pere la Chaise, Louvois scowling heavily at the bride, the Marquis de Charmarante, Bontems and Mlle. Nanon.

The torches shed a strong yellow light upon this small band as they advanced slowly through the corridors and salons which led to the chapel. A minute later they were before the altar, and the words were being read which should bind them forever together. As they turned away again, her new ring blazing upon her finger, there was a buzz of congratulation around her. The king only said nothing, but he looked at her, and she had no wish that he should say more. She was still calm and pale, but the blood throbbed in her temples.

But a sudden shadow had fallen across her, and a low voice near her ear. "Remember your promise to the church," it whispered. She started and turned to see the pale, eager face of the small beside her.

"Your hand has turned cold, Françoise," said Louis. "Let us go, dearest. We have been too long in this dismal church."

Mme. de Montespan had retired to rest, easy in her mind, after receiving the message from her brother. She knew Louis as few others knew him, and she was well aware of that obstinacy in trifles which was one of his characteristics. If he had said that he would be married by the archbishop, then the archbishop it must be. Tonight at least there should be no marriage.

She dressed herself with care in the morning. No news had come to her of the great event of the previous night, although the court already rang with it, for her haughtiness and her bitter tongue had left her without a friend or intimate. She rose, therefore, in the best of spirits.

She was still in her boudoir putting the last touches to her toilet when her page announced to her that the king was waiting in her salon. Mme. de Montespan could hardly believe in such good fortune. She had racked her brain all morning as to how she should win her way to him, and here he was waiting for her.

He had come with every intention of beginning the interview by telling her bluntly of his marriage, but now, as he looked upon her beauty and her love, he felt that it would have been less brutal to strike her down at his feet. Let some one else tell her, then. She would know soon enough. All this ran swiftly through his mind, and she as swiftly read it off in his brown eyes.

"You have something you came to say, and now you have not the heart to say it. God bless the kindly heart which checks the cruel tongue!"

"No, no, madame," said Louis. "I would not be cruel. I cannot forget that my life has been brightened and my court made brilliant during all these years by your wit and your beauty. But times change, madame, and for every reason I think that it is best that we should arrange in the way which we discussed the other day and that you should withdraw yourself from the court."

"Withdraw, sire! For how long?" "It must be a permanent withdrawal, madame. I need not say that I shall make your retirement a happy one as far as in me lies. Your allowance shall be fixed by yourself. A palace shall be erected for you in whatever part of France you may prefer, provided that it is twenty miles from Paris. An estate also."

"Oh, sire, how can you think that such things as these would compensate me for the loss of your love?" Her heart had turned to lead within her breast. Had he spoken hotly and angrily she might have hoped to turn him as she had done before, but this gentle and yet firm bearing was new to him, and she felt that all her arts were vain against it.

"Madame," said he, "I have thought well over this matter, and it must be as I say. There is no other way at all. I have ordered your brother to have his carriage at the post at nine o'clock, for I thought that perhaps you would wish to retire after nightfall."

"To hide my shame from a laughing court! It was thoughtful of you, sire. And yet perhaps this, too, was a duty, since we hear so much of duties nowadays, for who was it but you?"

"I know, madame, I know. I confess it. I have wronged you deeply. Believe me that every atonement which is in my power shall be made. Nay, do not look so angrily at me, I beg. Let our last sight of each other be one which may leave a pleasant memory behind it."

"A pleasant memory!" All the gentleness and humility had fallen from her now, and her voice had the hard ring of contempt and of anger. "A pleasant memory! It may well be pleasant to you, who are released from the woman whom you ruined, who can turn now to another without any pale face to be seen within the salons of your court to remind you of your perfidy. But to me, pinning in some lonely country house, spurned by my husband, despised by my family, the scorn and jest of France, far from all which gave a charm to life, far from the man for whose love I have sacrificed everything—this will be a very pleasant memory to me, you may be sure."

The king's eyes had caught the angry gleam which shone from hers, and yet he strove hard to set a curb upon his temper. He felt that it was for him to do so, and yet it did not come kindly to his imperious nature.

"There is nothing to be gained, madame," said he, "by using words which are neither seemly for your tongue nor for my ears. You will do me the justice to confess that where I might command I am now entreating."

"Oh, you show too much consideration, sire! Our relations of twenty years or so can scarce suffice to explain such forbearance from you."

"Your words are bitter, madame. Françoise, be reasonable, I implore you. We have both left our youth behind."

"The allusion to my years comes gracefully from your lips."

How to See the Wind.

Take a polished metal surface of two feet or more and with a straight edge. A large handsaw will answer the purpose. Take a windy day on which to make the experiment, paying no attention to atmospheric conditions, for such an experiment can be as successfully made on a clear day as it can on a cloudy one, and the results will be equally good in summer and winter. The only thing you need to look out for is that you do not attempt to "see the wind" on a rainy or murky day, as conditions are then very unfavorable. When everything is in readiness, hold the metallic surface at right angles to the direction of the wind—i. e., if the wind is in the north hold the metal east and west, but instead of holding it vertical incline it about 42 degrees to the horizon. When this has been done sight carefully along the edge of a sharply defined object for some moments and you will see the wind pouring over in graceful curves almost like water.

The Juvenile Way.

Children are the real humorists. They never rack their brains to say something funny. Here is a small boy's ingenuous "composition" on politeness:

"Never eat quickly, or you might get bones in your throat. My father knows of a boy who got killed over his Sunday dinner. The greedy boy was picking a rabbit's head in a hurry and swallowed one jaw of it, and my father says he was choked to death there and then. Be very polite over your meals, then, especially when it's rabbits. Since my father told me that I have always felt rather queer over a rabbit dinner. I don't talk much and don't ask for any more."

A definition that won a little girl praise despite its strangeness was "Turf, sir, is grass and clean dirt stuck together by God."

Hook's Fishy Compliment.

It was Theodore Hook's good or evil fortune to find himself one night at a musical "party," says a biographer. In the course of the evening's entertainment a young lady attacked a very difficult song, which she gave with exaggerated expression and a great many blunders. Next to Hook sat an elderly lady, as decided an amateur in criticism as the songstress was in singing, overflowing with gushing ignorance and sparkling superlatives.

"Oh, Mr. Hook," she murmured, "don't you adore singing? It's so full of soul!"

"Well, madam," replied the famous English humorist, "for my part I think there is more of the blunder than the sole about it."

She is the pink of prettiness. Girls be careful of your complexions. None should believe in "make up." Take Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea; "saves make-up." Tea or Tablets, 35 cents. Wooten's Drug Store.

Modest Claims Often Carry the Most Conviction.

When Maxim, the famous gun inventor, placed his gun before a committee of judges, he stated its carrying power to be much below what he felt sure the gun would accomplish. The result of the trial was therefore a great surprise instead of disappointment. It is the same with the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. They do not publicly boast of all this remedy will accomplish, but prefer to let the users make the statements. What they do claim, is that it will positively cure diarrhoea, dysentery, pains in the stomach and bowels and has never been known to fail. For sale by J. L. Wooten.

Don't you think you'd better let it rain when it is raining, rain away. For the sun will be shining bright if you take Rocky Mountain Tea tonight.
