HON. LEE S. OVERMAN.

SPEAKS AT AYDEN AND GREENVILLE.

North Carolina Patriotism—Republican Charge of Democratic Extravagance Answered—Injustice of Tariff Fully Explained.

Saturday was a red letter day for the Democrats of Pitt county. The county candidates were at Ayden on that day, and with them was Hon. Lee S. Overman, the junior United States Senator from North Carolina. Senator Overman spoke to a large and enthusiastic crowd, numbering over four hundred. He was listened to with best attention and his speech accomplished much good.

Saturday night Senator Overman spoke to a good crowd in the court house at Greenville, many ladies being in the audience. He was gracefully introduced by Mr. H. W. Whedbee and spoke for nearly an hour and a half. After expressing his appreciation at the presence of the ladies Senator Overman went back to the founding of our government and told of the part North Carolina took in it. The pioneers to escape oppression and enjoy liberty and freedom, braved the billows of the Atlantic and landed on these shores. The hand of oppression followed them here but they arose in their manhood and threw it off. North Carolina was prominent in this revolutionary struggle.

The speaker then contrasted the two parties in existence at the beginning of our government. One was led by Hamilton who said the people were not capable of self government and wanted to establish a centralized government in Washington. The other was led by Jefferson who said the people had established this government and should have a government of their own with equal rights to all and special privileges to none. The latter principle won. North Carolina has always been conservative and jealous of her rights.

Later a party of spite came into existence and the civil war followed. North Carolina was slow to secede, but when President Lincoln issued a proclamation calling for 75,000 troops from this State she refused to fight against her sister States and joined forces with them. According to the voting population she furnished a larger number of troops than any other State and lost 40 per cent of them on the battlefield. Returning to devastated homes after the war the remnant threw aside their guns, and encouraged by our noble, patriotic women set to work to rebuild our State. Did the new party help in this? No, but on the contrary put its heels on our necks and put ballots in the hands of 3,000,000 half savages in the South.

Senator Overman then pictured the days of reconstruction following the war, how the Republicans plundered the State for their own benefit, robbed the children of their school money depriving them of education, and sold bonds the money for which went into their pockets. Yet this same Republican party now has the audacity to charge the Democratic party with extravagance in the management of the public schools. They pretend to give figures in comparison but do not include the graded and city schools in their report. Yes, we are spending more money than they did and we have our splendid schools to show for it, of which we are proud. We promised the people to give them education and we are carrying out that promise.

When the Republican party was in power in North Carolina riot and trouble predominated, but under the Democratic party peace and quiet prevail. He referred to recent scenes in Atlanta and Mobile and asked could our people again divide in the face of such occurrences and put negroes back on the registration books?

Senator Overman then took up National issues, dealing mainly with the tariff, referring to Secretary Shaw speaking in North Carolina in favor of protection and Secretary Taft speaking in Maine in favor of the revision of the tariff. The Republican party did not bring prosperity—no party can bring it. Prosperity or panics are the outcome of conditions. He then used several strong illustrations to show how the tariff takes money from the people and puts it in the pockets of the trusts. The money does not go into the government treasury, but goes to the trust magnates to reward them for their large contributions to Republican campaign fund.

Rockefeller is said to be worth $200,000,000, but he has not made that vast sum fairly. No man in his life time can accumulate that much wealth honestly. If a man had made $200 a day for every day in the 2,000 years since the birth of Christ, he would not have $200,000,000. If Adam had lived until now and made $50 a day for every day of the 6,000 years since his creation, and saved every dollar of it, he would not have as much as Rockefeller. It is through unfair laws that foster trusts and permit the robbing of the people that such sums are made.

By several examples Senator Overman showed how the tariff works detriment to our country, as it prevents them selling their goods to us and through retaliation they refuse to buy our products and other markets are thus closed against us. It was an able speech and made a lasting impression on all who heard him.

Col. Sugg Withdraws.

Col. I. A. Sugg, who some time ago announced himself an independent candidate for solicitor, has withdrawn. He authorized that his withdrawal be made public at the speaking in Ayden Saturday.

WHAT WE CAN DO.

IMPROVING SCHOOL ROOMS.

Paper Read by Miss Wright Before the Teachers' Association.

What can be done for our school rooms? Of all the important things that we can do, the foremost is to keep them clean. A trash barrel should be on each play ground and all nut hulls, lunch papers, etc., put in them. Any convenient receptacle may be made to serve the purpose of a waste paper basket in the rooms. We can have the floors scoured once every two or three months, and the rooms carefully swept and dusted every day. Children handle chalks, pencils and ink, eat greasy lunches and play ball, rinsing their hands once, perhaps, during the day. Can we not get them to have soap, towels and wash pans at school and use them freely?

Any one can have pictures in her room. Put up one of your own first, then ask the children to bring any they may have. At the expenditure of a few cents Perry pictures may be had, and they make an admirable decoration.

Schools presided over by earnest and progressive teachers will in a few years be provided with maps, globes, flags, unabridged dictionaries and libraries. Yards will be swept as often as necessary and possibly enclosed by a fence and flowers planted inside.

The influence of an attractive personal appearance is boundless. Without extra expense a good teacher will dress neatly and becomingly. We do not need expensive clothes but we do need to exercise good taste and common sense in what we wear, and above all let us be neat and scrupulously clean in every detail of the toilet. To look as attractive as we can is a duty we owe ourselves, our friends and the dear God who made us in His own image. Let those of us who are women take our womanhood with us into the school-room, and live there not only as teachers but as women and let our fight be for cleanliness, beauty and purity in all things.

Like the Nautilus which surrounds itself with a shell of pearl, teachers with lovely spirits express their souls and characters in the beautiful things they place about them. The crudest natures love beauty, 'tis the common cord by which all humanity may be drawn. Heaven, the highest goal man may reach, is always delineated as a place of perfect beauty, man himself is a thing of beauty. Did not God make him in His own body, then collect nature's rarest gems into the garden of Eden and leave his first man cradled in the lap of beauty? Nature's beauties, which are but God's thoughts crystalized, have an unbounded power over us. The mountains with their heaven-piercing heads; the ocean roaring and rumbling with the abundance of itself; the sun, with its majestic rise and mellow decline;

the strains of heaven-born music and

"Even the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears."

Heaven is God's home; earth his school-room, and nothing within the limited vision of man is half so grandly decorated. Its walls are pictured with mighty mountains rising ambitiously into the delicate tints of feathery clouds. Here and there over its floor are placed green rugs of grass showered with choicest flowers. It is dotted with silvery lakes and mighty cities and over all is placed Sol, the janitor, who keeps it bright, fresh and clean. Though we are powerless to have anything so grand, we can imitate our model at least, for

"A man's reach should exceed his grasp, Or what's a heaven for?"

To shut a child in an unattractive school-room with all the beauties of nature just outside is to reiterate the predicaments of Gantalus who was placed in a pool of water up to his chin with a bough of apples swaying above his head. When he stooped to quench his agonizing thirst the water would mockingly recede, and as often as he reached his hungry hand for an apple just so often did the bough sway beyond his reach. When school-rooms are so unattractive and the outside world so beautiful, small wonder that children don't like going to school.

My friend, Mr. College graduate, who had the supervision of three schools in a county of North Carolina asked me to visit his schools with him. First we went to the neighborhood of Prosperity Creek where the schools had been consolidated. The cleanliness of the large room was attractive, but the most striking feature was the decoration. The ceiling and floor were painted and the walls plastered. At a sweeping glance the eye scanned nicely framed portraits of such patriots as Washington, such authors as Longfellow until it rested on the benign countenance of the great teacher himself. There were other pictures which told stories of mercy, hope, courage, faith and charity. On top of the book case was a bust of Socrates, and one of Minerva the goddess of Wisdom. The windows were curtained with white lawn ruffled and draped gracefully about the casements. In the sunny ones sat pots of hyacinths and geraniums. In a corner was a pyramidal arrangement of shelves on which were pots and ferns, fragrant flowering plants, and graceful vines. On the teachers desk sat a vase of cut flowers and on the floor in front was spread a rug. The charm of the room was irresistible and I went away thinking money is like a fairy's wand, its magical touch can change hovels into palaces.

"The next school we visit," said my friend, "is in Sleepy Hollow. The people there have money, but their ambition has not been kindled for anything better than the old uncomfortable school house." Sure enough the room was as rough as a chestnut burr both inside and out. No paint, no pictures, no curtains, no flags or flowers were here. I closed the door with a bang, for I was repulsed by the room and impatient with people who were so dead alive; as to contenance such a place. "These people," said Mr. College graduate, "so strongly feel the useless necessity of whiskey and tobacco they squander their money in providing these luxuries and remain indifferent to the necessities of the school room."

Next we visited the school at Poverty Cross roads. The building was much like the one in Sleepy Hollow. Inside we found the bright place of a progressive young teacher. In pretty groupings about the walls were arranged pictures cut from magazines; calendars were hanging here and there. The bright pictures from the back of scratch tablets had been pasted in panels on card board, and so attractive pictures were made. There were no curtains but around each window was twined a bamboo vine. On the table was a bottle holding a bouquet of wild flowers. There were some boxes on a shelf containing ferns the boys had got from the woods. When we inquired about her decoration the teacher said, "I thought to myself, suppose I do have bad walls and no money, I can and I shall surmount the difficulty. I find that God helps those who help themselves. I am going to use Perry pictures and have one corner of my room a literary corner, decorated with pictures of authors, another decorated with Bible pictures and the third is to be the patriot's corner, in the fourth I shall put pictures of men and things of today." Our visit was over, I was touched and inspired. Many school houses in our Old North State are situated at Poverty Cross roads. But we shall surely have better things if we but desire them with such force as to crystalize our desires into actual realizations.

"Flowers," says Ruskin "seem intended for the solace of ordinary humanity. Children love them." It requires no money to adorn our rooms with autumn leaves and golden daisies. In the spring when the world is one blooming flower bed, the teacher who neglects to have flowers in her room is responsible to God for one lost opportunity. Money furnishes rooms with handsome pictures, fine maps, flags and statuary, but how thankful I am we don't have to pay God for this fragrant and beautiful expression of his love—the flower.

A beautifully decorated room warmed by a noble teacher's character certainly begets a love for school, is conducive to more and better labor and has an admirable effect on the discipline. Apart from the cheer and happiness brought on the wing of beauty, its chiefest value is the appeal to the finer nature. Its effect is to calm men and make them cultured. How mysteriously powerful is this thing called beauty.

Man is but a reflection of all that he has seen and heard. Then let us surround him from his infancy with things lovely that the reflection, too, may be beautiful. The aesthetic is the Godlike side. Let us cultivate this side, for many there be who shall enter fields of culture and Christianity through the gate called Beautiful.

Johnny Hickey.

English people in New Zealand have a rough and ready method of Anglicizing the Maori or native names. Kete Marae the English always refer to as "Kitty Maria." One of the most formidable Maori rebellions was headed by a chief named Honi Heki, but the British soldiers called him "Johnny Hickey," and out of this grew the legend or tradition that he was really an Irishman paying off old scores in the guise of a Maori chief.—Argonaut.

Hard Traveling.

Hard traveling had no great terrors for a man who recently rode the 535 miles from Paris to Marseilles strapped to an axle beneath a French railway car. When discovered at the Paris station, he was so travel-stained that he was at first taken for a negro. However, when he was handed over to the police charged with intent to defraud the railway company, he said he was a Roumanian. Beyond a little stiffness he was none the worse.

of troubles that robbed E. H. Wolfe, of Bear Grove, Ia., of all usefulness, came when he began taking Electric Bitters. He writes: "Two years ago kidney trouble caused me great suffering, which I would never have survived had I not taken Electric Bitters. They also cured me of General Debility." Sure cure for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney complaints, Blood diseases, Headache, Dizziness and weakness or bodily decline. Price 50c. Guaranteed by J. L. Wooten's drug store.

Saved His Comrades Life.

"While returning from the Grand Army encampment at Washington City, a comrade from Elgin, Ill., was taken with Cholera Morbus and was in a critical condition," says Mr. J. E. Houghland, of Elgin, Iowa. I gave him Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and he was saved his life. I have been engaged ten years in immigration work and conducted many parties to the south and west. I always carry this remedy and have used it successfully on many occasions. Sold by J. L. Wooten.

BACKWARD BOYS.

Brilliant Men Who Did Not Shine in Their Younger Days.

I think most men who have been educated at any large public school will readily call to mind numerous instances of boys who were always winning honors, yet have not done anything worth remembering in after life. And I am confident that upon investigation the great names of the world would be found to be no exception. It will be found that the majority were brilliant in their younger days, but failed to make a name for themselves in later life. This is the fault of the boys, not of the school. Gladstone never took a prize at school, if I remember aright, though he subsequently gained a double first at Oxford. Those high priests of science and philosophy, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall and Herbert Spencer, did not particularly shine in their younger days.

We find plenty of evidence that people who in the first stages of their career make prolonged and exhaustive demands on their stores of nerve force rarely attain length of days. Whether those demands have been made merely in the pursuit of wealth or for some more noble object does not matter. The result is the same. Thus Napoleon considered about four hours in bed "a good night's rest." He joined the majority at fifty-one. Dickens passed over at fifty-eight, his great rival, Thackeray, at fifty-two. Byron achieved his unique reputation in the short compass of thirty-six years, Mozart in thirty-five and Schiller in forty-five. Alfred Beit died at fifty-three and Cecil Rhodes at forty-eight.—London Chronicle.

Jupiter's Double Moon.

The most wonderful of all the remarkable things which nightly come within the range of the powerful modern telescopes is the double moon which continually circles around and around Jupiter, the "giant of the skies." This astronomical oddity was not known until after the great Lick telescope was put in position on Mount Hamilton, the discovery of the tiny satellite only dating back to 1891. The first hint of the presence of this "moon of a moon" was given when one of the Lick observatory men reported that one of Jupiter's satellites appeared to be casting a double shadow on the giant planet's surface. From that time forward for some weeks a sharp lookout was kept, and at last the observers were rewarded in getting a glimpse of the curiosity—a tiny dot of a moon revolving around another moon, both held in position by the great Jupiter.

Might Have Changed History.

Napoleon III. of France, when a prisoner in the fortress at Ham, wrote and published a paper on the possibility of linking the Pacific and Atlantic oceans by means of a canal. This created so profound an impression that the minister plenipotentiary of Guatemala offered him the presidency of the construction of the Nicaragua canal. The proposal was followed by the offer of the presidency of the Ecuador republic. The latter offer was conditional upon King Louis Philippe's releasing the captive and upon the latter's giving his parole never to return to Europe. Louis Napoleon was prepared to give his parole, and Sir Robert Peel, then prime minister of Great Britain, was willing to back up his application for release upon these terms. Lord Aberdeen, however, would not hear of it, so the prisoner remained to be president and emperor of his native land.

Two Girls.

Does it pay to have good sense? In an Atchison family there are two girls. One of the girls insists upon taking music lessons, which the family finds very hard to pay for. She devotes her entire time to her music and never lifts her hand to do a stitch of sewing. The family says, "Jennie is so ambitious." The other daughter will not take music lessons or study art. She puts up preserves, does the housework and all her own sewing and is a fine cook. The family says: "Poor Lizzie. It is too bad she has not Jennie's ambition."—Atchison Globe.

Ice Cream.

Though the ancient Greeks and Romans used ice for table purposes to get through even hotter weather than we have been having lately, they knew nothing of the "ices." These were introduced into France from Italy about 1630 and known at first as "fromages glaces"—iced cheeses—although they were made of strawberries, apricots, and so forth, and contained not a drop of cream. From 1769 the use of "glaces" in the plural was sanctioned by the academy, but not before 1835 did the word "ice cream" force its way into regular acceptance. "Ices" are referred to from time to time in the earliest English literature. "Iced cream" however, was known as early as the year when William of Orange came over, and by the middle of the eighteenth century "ice cream" found its way into cookery books.—London Chronicle.

THE ENEMY BEHIND.

How a Hunter in Africa Was Saved by His Eyeglasses.

In writing of his hunting adventures in Nubia in Harper's, Captain T. C. S. Speedy tells how he was saved from the attack of a native by the reflection in his glasses.

"After a slight refreshment I spread my sheepskin rug a couple of yards off and, turning my back to the fire, kept a lookout in front, as owing to the precipitous stony cliff that rose on three sides of our camping ground I found it was next to impossible for any one to enter except in that direction. Suddenly a log which had been charred quite through fell asunder, throwing out a large shower of sparks, while a bright flame shot upward. To my surprise I beheld before me an extraordinary sight which held my attention fixed, though for a moment I did not realize what I saw. Immediately before my eyes was the diminutive figure of a native, evidently, from his mop of hair, one of the Hadendoa tribe, but only about two inches in height, spear in hand, which he was quivering up and down as if on the very verge of striking a blow, a fiendish grin distorting his countenance. My astonishment lasted but an instant. I quickly perceived that this was the reflection in my spectacles of an enemy behind me, who must have slipped in while I was dozing, and that I was the object of the aim which in another second would have proved fatal. There was not time either to rise or turn, but, flinging myself backward, I seized the savage by his foot and, pulling him forward, happily upset him on his back and closed with him.

"The excitement and breathlessness of the struggle prevented me from calling out, especially as I had at first great difficulty in retaining my hold of my foe, owing to the slipperiness of his greasy skin, but the sand which stuck to him as we rolled over and over together soon enabled me to obtain a better grip. Luckily in our rough and tumble contest I had my eye against one of my spectacles, and although sound asleep I was on his feet before he could get a fully set foot on the ground. ### The Great Problem of Tomorrow.

A scientist tells of the energy the earth receives from the sun: "When the sun is nearly overhead he delivers power at the surface of the earth at the rate of more than two horsepower for each square yard of surface. Even after deducting the loss occasioned by the absorption of the earth's atmosphere, it is still true that each square yard receives when the sun is shining the equivalent of one horsepower working continuously. This means there is delivered on each square yard an energy able to lift a weight of 33,000 pounds one foot in one minute, and this power is continuous. On the broad, sunlit plains of Arizona the sun delivers an equivalent of mechanical energy which, expressed in horsepower, would seem almost infinite. A small part of it would suffice for the whole world's work. Why is it not set to doing this work? This is the problem of tomorrow.

A Kipling Correction.

Rudyard Kipling dined on one occasion with a party that included several other well known writers—a fair proportion of men and women who knew something about literature and a few who knew little and made up for their lack of knowledge with pretense. Several on the last described kind started a useless discussion concerning spellings, pronunciations, etc., and one, firing his remark straight at Kipling, said, "I find that 'sugar' and 'sumac' are the only words beginning with 'su' that are pronounced as though beginning with 'sh.'"

Bored though he was, Kipling's politeness did not desert him, and, assuming an expression of interest, although his eyes twinkled behind his glasses, he asked, "Are you sure?"—Churns.

Bismarck and His Wig.

Bismarck occasionally wore a wig. He wore it for warmth and was proud when it successfully served its purpose. But at a blessing of the Neva, at which his sovereign and the czar were present, the wig played him false. An officer remarked upon its appearance as they galloped along together. "Is it visible?" asked Bismarck. "Yes; devilish distinctly. It's slipping down on one side," was the answer. Bismarck careered up to the carriage which was waiting for him, removed his helmet, tore off his wig and threw it into the vehicle, while the czar and a whole host of other distinguished men looked on in amazement. Said Bismarck's sovereign at the end of the day, "What an utterly diabolical maneuver you executed with that wig of yours!"—St. James' Gazette.

Had Not Learned It Yet.

A bank official, who has many amusing stories at his tongue's end, tells of a stolid German woman who went into the bank one morning to deposit a fat roll of bills and open an account. She was asked to sign her name in the book reserved for the signatures of depositors and began to do so with the twisting of her face and the squinting of her eyes. The completion of the signature dismayed the teller. "What a peculiarly atypical signature," he said. "I had never seen one like that before." "I had never learned it yet," she said. "I had never learned it yet," she said. "I had never learned it yet," she said.

There Was No Hurry.

Stern of mien and keen of eye, the school inspector was examining the boys in arithmetic.

"Now," he said, "I'll just set you one more sum. If a cat falls down a bottomless well, and for every two feet it climbs up it falls down three, how long will it take to get out of the well?"

One boy got hold of a slate, and after filling both sides of it with a mass of figures asked for another slate.

"Good gracious, boy," snapped the inspector. "haven't you the sense to see that the cat will never get out of the well?"

"Don't be in a hurry, sir," replied the boy: "there's plenty of time and heaps more slates. If you wait long enough I'll bring the little beggar out in Australia."—London Answers.

THE FIRST LIGHTHOUSES.

They Were an Outgrowth of Beacon Fires on Headlands.

When ships are sailing upon the ocean the lights of heaven are their guides. Even in the dark ages, when the compass and sextant were unknown instruments, the seemingly motionless pole star hung like a beacon light in the northern heavens, and the rising and setting of the sun and stars distinguished the east from the west. When, however, ships came near the land the lights of heaven are not sufficiently safe to guide them. Rocks lie in their paths, unseen in the night; reefs and shoals spread under the water, while unsuspected currents sweep the frail craft all blindly upon these dangers.

Nevertheless, ships were sailed along dangerous coasts for centuries before a plain system of marking dangerous places was invented. The early mariners were bold and reckless rovers, more than half pirates, who seldom owned a rod of the compass, which they sailed and could not see established lights and landmarks. When they cared to go on a trade beginning, then, of a sailing vessel, the houses was when the mariner, with whom the reckless mariner sailed in those dark days, would sail near the harbor mouth, and the ships into port by day, and the reefs for their guidance at night. Such a harbor guide had a tall, bare landmark in the daytime, and a light by night, it soon became a settled shape—a tower, which could be built a fire, and a tower was usually built of stone.

This method of guiding ships into the ports which the mariner scarcely established, but human wickedness used it as a means for their destruction. Bands of robbers, or, as they came to be called, "vreckers," would hide themselves somewhere near the coast, sought by a richly laden vessel, and, after overpowering the crew, would extinguish the beacon fire on the night on which the vessel was expected. Then they would light another fire near some treacherous reef. The mariner, sailing bold toward the false light, would dash his vessel to destruction on the reef, whereupon the robber band would plunder the wreck and make off with the booty. —St. Nicholas.

She Opened the Door.

A doctor who had saved the life of a woman, a personal friend, was asked his charge. He had generally allowed his personal friends to remunerate him as they thought fitting.

"But don't you often get disappointed on these terms?" she inquired.

"I may say, never." "As you are so often pleased, here," and she playfully gave him her empty hand, while in the other was concealed a check for a handsome sum. "How could I could have taken you in?" she asked, producing the check.

"But you have only succeeded in drawing me out," he said, believing to relinquish her hand, "don't insult me with a check, I am most generously rewarded."

Perhaps she understood the doctor's difficulty and was glad to help him out of it. At any rate, the giving of her hand led her to her heart.

German Court Dancing.

The German emperor insists upon good dancing at court, and the arranging of an evening party is one of his favorite pastimes. He is most anxious that the court balls shall be distinguished for their elegance and exacts that the smallest details shall be carefully planned beforehand. Each year, therefore, he chooses, either from his household or from the First regiment of cavalry of the guard, two brilliant cavaliers, who are excused from all military duties. These officers must dance to perfection, wear their uniforms with distinction and lead a cotillon with method and dash. They open the ball with a princess of the blood royal, and they and their partners bring the function to a close with a deep obeisance before their majesties. Upon their success in this exacting role their future career largely depends, and it is said and may easily be imagined that their exalted office is no sinecure.

When Maxim, the famous gun inventor, placed his gun before a committee of judges, he stated its carrying power to be much below what he felt sure the gun would accomplish. The result of the trial was therefore a great surprise instead of disappointment. It is the same with the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. They do not publicly boast of all this remedy will accomplish, but prefer to let the users make the statement. What they do claim, is that it will positively cure diarrhoea dysentery pains in the stomach and bowels and has never been known to fail. For sale by J. L. Wooten.
