"TAKEN CARE OF" BY RAILROAD.

EDITOR OF THE "KING'S DOLLAR DAILY" SERVICE.

He Rendered It and While Road Offered Poultry $300 Jury Awards $1,200 and Road Appeals.

When a newspaper enters into gentlemen's understanding with a railroad that it will do everything to advance the road's interest in the paper's section, and that the road on the other hand will see that the paper "is taken care of" is the agreement of minds of a sort to constitute a contract that will be construed by the courts as to give the editor a recovery according to proven value of his editorial and personal assistance in the carrying out of the ends of the railroad?

Such is the basic question presented in the appeal of the Raleigh and Pamlico Sound Railroad from a judgment entered against it in Pitt county in a case wherein Henry T. King, one-time editor of "King's Weekly," and later of "King's Dollar Daily,"—not only gave up his editorial space in advocating the adoption of bond propositions in favor of the defendant railroad, but took off his shirt, labored at the polls and generally split himself up one way and down the other in an effort to serve the road and earn his money.

"That during years 1903 and 1904 the plaintiff was publishing a newspaper published weekly in Greenville, N. C., and was himself editor of said paper, which was first run as 'King's Weekly' and later as 'King's Dollar Daily.'"

"2. That during February 1902, the defendant company, then trying to secure aid in building a line of railroad from Raleigh to some point on Pamlico Sound, applied to the plaintiff to secure the columns of his paper, and his personal service, in trying to carry elections along the route of the proposed road by which bonds were to be issued for the use and benefit of said road, and in other ways assist the managers and directors of said road in their undertaking, and under the promise from the manager and one of the directors of said company that he should be 'taken care of' well paid for his service, he agreed to serve the defendant as best he could in the manner suggested, and did serve them in the ways indicated by defendants through the columns of his papers by advertisements, and by personal services at elections, and in other ways well known to defendants, for such services the defendants agreed and promised to pay—but when demand was made the said company admitted his right to payment, but only offered him $300 in second mortgage bonds of said railroad company for his services.

"3. That the services rendered by the plaintiff were reasonably worth the sum of fifteen hundred dollars.

"4. That the payment has been demanded and refused.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against defendants:

"1. For the sum of fifteen hundred dollars with interest thereon.

"2. For costs."

In his evidence, the plaintiff testified that he did yeoman's service for the railroad and, after all the victories had been won and the banner was flying, he had modestly asked his pay of Capt. J. M. Turner, who had promised to take care of him; that all that Capt. Turner had offered in requital of strenuous services was $300 in second mortgage bonds, which plaintiff flatly refused. Plaintiff thereupon sued for fifteen hundred dollars, the value of his editorial columns and other advertisements and notices, and personal work for three years, including work in the election.

To this showing the defendant was heartless enough to introduce witnesses who stated that they never read King's publications and did not know what side they were taking on the railroad, which everybody in Pitt county and Greenville favored anyhow. But Mr. King explained that a real hot editorial, or something copied from the Raleigh papers on the editorial page—was much more valuable than his regular advertising—the best of which was $250 a year from Munyon, and that if he had done for Munyon's remedy what he did for the Pamlico Sound he would have pulled the coin like a country boy jerks fodder.

The jury—considering that Mr. King had been three years on the job, and, as he testified, had neglected his business," awarded him $1,200, which ought to be reasonable in the light of the Drewry contract, but the railroad is appealing.—Raleigh News and Observer.

A Dude of Propensity.

Mr. Baird Sugg, of Greenville, is in the city. There is nothing out of the way in ordinary young gentlemen wearing long, tailor-made pants, patent leather shoes, spike-tailed coats, standing collars, plug hats, shirts with stiff bosoms, green ties, gold studs and diamonds and gold watches, but then Mr. Sugg is not an ordinary young gentleman. He is extraordinary. With his hair parted in the middle and a cane he made his appearance on Market street last night, to the delight of the ladies, who hugged him and exclaimed, "How cute." He was not abashed at the procedure, but acted as if it were only natural that he should be such a favorite. And, indeed, it is. Young Mr. Sugg is only five years of age, and can spell his name, which he did often enough at Brown's opera house which he visited. He was a side attraction between acts. He is of unusual intelligence for one of his age, and has a very amiable disposition. He is here with his grandfather, Col. Isaac Sugg, who is suffering with cancer at the Washington Hospital.—Washington Messenger.

The mistake the Messenger makes is in the name of the young gentleman, which is Baird Sugg Brooks, and his home is Elizabeth City instead of Greenville. Mrs. Brooks and her little son came here Wednesday to visit relatives.

Cayenne Pepper For Mice.

Cayenne pepper sprinkled freely in cupboards and shelves which mice are known to frequent will aid considerably in preventing them from spoiling garments, shoe leather, papers, etc. Lumps of camphor placed among clothes are also most useful as a means of scaring away mice, while books, especially when these are put away in shelves or boxes, should always be protected from possible depredations by interspersing the layers of books with small camphor bags.

THE SCHOOL BONDS ARE GOOD.

DECISIONS HANDED DOWN BY SUPREME COURT.

Statue Giving Greenville Right to Vote Bonds for Eastern Training School Upheld.

The Supreme court yesterday handed down a number of opinions, only one of which contained matter of State interest.

This was the decision in reference to the bonds voted by Greenville to support of the new Eastern Training School by which the bonds were upheld. The suit was evidently a friendly one, brought to establish the validity of the bonds.

Digests of the opinions filed follows:

Cox vs. Commissioners, from Pitt, Brown, J. Affirmed.

1. The courts will not go behind the ratification of an act to determine whether the provision of Art. 2, Sec. 12 of the constitution have been complied with.

2. The suffrage amendment of 1900, while fixing a new qualification for voters, left the matter of registration to the legislature.

3. The issue of bonds and a tax levy for the purpose of establishing an institution not strictly local is within the power of the legislature to authorize and within the scope of a city's corporate powers.—Raleigh News and Observer.

THE BOY AND THE PADDLE.

Defense of an Institution and an Implement of Grace.

If the boys must be flogged, the paddle seems to be an almost divinely appointed implement to do it with. That area of the boy which it most aptly fits is not very susceptible to mortal wounds; it has merely a sufficiency of nerves to unlock penitential tears by their tingling when temperately flagellated; and the bones which it contains are so abundantly swathed about with muscular tissue that there is no danger of breaking them. It is fashionable in these degenerate days to deny the hand of Providence in arranging the affairs of the world; but if there is one piece of evidence more convincing than another that the Almighty actually did fit this and that together and adapt one thing to another in our mundane sphere, it is a boy's body to receive impulsive stimulation from a paddle.

But must boys be flogged? What is the ultimate effect of paddling upon the boy himself and upon the teacher, upon paddler and paddlee, to borrow a legal terminology? In the opinion of the Oregonian, the paddle is distinctly and unequivocally a means of grace. It edifies not only the physical and intellectual parts of the boy, but also his soul. Many an unruly youth, apparently foredoomed to perdition and predestinated to wrath, has been plucked like a brand from the burning by a regenerative paddling. The world is full of men of light and leading whom Satan thought he had bought and paid for in their early youth, but who were redeemed and washed of their sins by a good sound whipping. Marvelous are the virtues of the paddle; salutary is the smart thereof, and the parent who rails against it is not wise.—Portland Oregonian.

OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT.

University Boy's Play "The Rivals." Press Comments.

The University Dramatic Club arrived on the midday train today and will present "The Rivals" in the opera house tonight. The boys give a good show and ought to be encouraged with a large audience.

PRESS NOTICES.

The Rivals, played last night by the University Dramatic Club, was a most creditable affair, and is well worth witnessing. The various characters were well played and the audience pleased with the performance.—The Leader.

The Rivals was presented in the opera house last evening by the Dramatic Club of the University of North Carolina. This three-act comedy was well acted by the University boys, who caused much laughter and applause. The plot is a strong one and the play ended satisfactorily to all.—Tarboro South-erner.

The Rivals was decidedly the best show of the season.—Charlotte Observer, C. H. Cor.

The Rivals was the best show of the season. The costumes were elaborate, the action was realistic, and it was hard for the spectators to realize that they were not in a theatre in Richmond or Baltimore.—University Tar Heel

NORTH CAROLINA'S HAPPENINGS

Brief Items of News Over the State.

Gastonia, N. C., Feb. 25.—Having just called upon his sweetheart and before he had been seated, John J. Fry, a young man of this town, remarked that he wanted to "show you a trick," pulled a pistol from his pocket and shot himself through the head, the wound resulting in his death a short time afterwards.

Rodman Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, carries insurance in the sum of $4,000,000. The two women who carry the heaviest life insurance in the United States are Mrs. B. N. Duke, of Durham, for $358,000, and Mrs. Julian S. Carr, of Durham, for $250,000. Mrs. Mary S. Williamson, of Elon College, carries insurance for $103,000. John D. Rockefeller only carries $50,000 on his life.—Raleigh News and Observer.

Leroir, N. C., Feb. 25.—Yesterday afternoon, the three-year old child of Mr. Walter Presnell, who lives a few miles out from Lenoir, fell into a pot of boiling water that was made ready for cleaning some slaughtered hogs. The child was so badly burned that it died a few minutes after the doctor arrived.

High Point, N. C., Feb. 25.—George Smith, a farmer living near this city, was found dead today by his little five-year-old boy. Dr. C. E. Reitzel went out to view the remains, but there were no signs of anything but a natural death, most probably from heart trouble.

CONTRACT FOR PAVING BRICK.

Greenville Man Gets the Order for His Firm.

The committee of the board of alderman having in hand the letting of the contract for paving brick to be used on the streets, has made the contract for the first half million vetrieved brick, representing approximately $15,000. The cost of the brick is $31.70 per thousand delivered in Greenville.

It is good enough news for Greenville that the brick have been purchased for the paving, and it is equally good to know that a home man got the order. The deal was made through Mr. J. B. Higgs, who is the Southern representative of the Mack Mfg. Co., of Philadelphia. We expect this is the largest single order a local broker has ever received, and it speaks well for the town that a home man gets it.

Trade Report.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 26, 1908. Bradstreet's Saturday will say for Richmond, Va., and vicinity:—Little change is noted in the condition of trade since last week. Retailers are buying in small amounts and their stocks have been reduced. Wholesalers of staple lines anticipate increased sales as the spring season approaches. Orders for dry goods and notions are small. The produce market shows more activity, and prices are well maintained. Sales of loose leaf tobacco show an increase over last week and prices continue high, especially for the better grades. Lumber continues in little demand. Retail trade is at the usual end season dullness. Collections are slow.

If the Wilmington papers think prohibition will not prohibit, we see no use of their making such a to do over the prospect of the state going dry.
If they can get it just as easy after as before that ought to satisfy them.

As the congressional investigating committee has endorsed the action of the president in dismissing those negro troops
because of the Brownsville affair, Senator Foraker and his followers can go to making another noise.

While, of course, there will come shouts that the negro who did the murderous work in Fayetteville was drunk in a prohibition county, yet it is fair to also remember that if it had not been a prohibition county he could have gotten drunk just the same.—Wilmington Dispatch

The Atlantic Coast Line reducing its passenger fare between Greenville and Wilson to a figure below the mileage rate fixed by the legislature in order to meet the competition of the Norfolk and Southern, which reached that town by a shorter route, shows that the railroads had poor grounds for fighting
the rate established by the State.
It shows also that if competition will reduce passenger fares it ought also reduce freight rates.
But as there is no competition between the two roads in freight rates to Greenville, our people ought to take more interest in establishing a line of water transportation so as to make both the roads reduce freight rates.

We are neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but we predict that if the kind of speech es made by two of the gubernatorial candidates at Wadesboro last Saturday is kept up until the meeting of the state convention
the democrats will be so disgusted with both that neither will stand a chance of securing the nomination—and rightly so.—

At times when you don't feel just right, when you have a bad stomach, take something right away that will assist digestion; not something that will stimulate for a time but something that will positively do the very work that the stomach performs under ordinary and normal conditions, something that will make the food digest. To do this you must take a natural digestant like Kodol For Dyspepsia. Kodol is a scientific preparation of vegetable acids with natural digestants and contains the same juices found in a healthy stomach. Each dose will digest more than 3,000 grains of good food. It is sure to afford prompt relief; it digests what you eat and is pleasant to take.

A Servian Custom.
A traveler through Servia will often notice dolls hung up inside the cottage windows. His first idea is one of surprise that the children should so often choose this particular spot to store their toys, but presently he learns that the dolls are put up as a sign to announce to wayfarers that a marriageable daughter dwells in the house. The idea is to remind acquaintances from other villages who may have forgotten her existence. This custom is naturally confined to peasants, but nearly every house has a wreath of corn ears hung up on the outer wall. This wreath is brought back from the harvest festival, and there is a superstition that if it be stolen a daughter of the house will shortly be married. Where this is particularly desired care is taken to suspend the wreath well within reach of possible marauders.

Mary Was Obliging.
The Dundee Advertiser tells a story of a country cleric, still on the underside of forty, who was driving home along a road from an outlying hamlet when he overtook a young woman. He recognized her as Mary, the maid of all work at a farm which he would pass on his way to the rectory, so he pulled up and offered her a lift. Mary was nothing loath, and the parson was glad of her company. All the way to the farm gate they chatted pleasantly, as country people do, and when her destination was reached he set her down. Then she thanked him for his kindness and his company. "Don't mention it, Mary;
don't mention it," he said politely as he pulled the rug around his knees and gathered up the reins.
"No, I won't," answered Mary in an obliging tone, and the young rector went on his way thoughtfully.

What Is the First Law of Nature?

"Self preservation is the first law of nature," answers Johnny Jones.

Correct, Johnny. Go right up to the head of the class. This law applies to a community as well as to an individual. Under the severe operation of this law a town that does not take care of itself, that does not look after its own interests first, that does not look out for Number One, soon falls into a bad way.

That's just as sure as shootin'. It's the law.

We must obey the law or take the consequences. If we in this town and community do not work together for our own good, the mutual good of all of us, in all lines of business, we have only ourselves to blame if the place slides down the inclined plane instead of climbing the golden ladder of prosperity and progress.

For instance, if we do our retail trading with big city stores that have no interest in us except to get our money and keep it, local trade must suffer and shrink, town property values and farm land values must decrease—and there you are!

Johnny Jones, who knows the law, is a wise lad, but how about his papa and mamma?

Do they obey the first law as applied to the old home place? If they don't, Johnny may have to apply the law to himself when he grows up. He may have to go to the city to make a living. Let's all think it over.

HANDEL'S FITS OF RAGE.

The Great Master's Fiery Wrath When His Temper Cut Loose.

Handel was much given to flying into eccentric rages, though he was not a wholly unkind man. He knew his power, says a biographer, as every genius knows his power, and it is not surprising that he was thought to be overproud and egotistical. He would deal out torrents of abuse when "things vos mixed," to understand which one required an intimate acquaintance with at least four languages—English, German, French and Italian. Yet these rages, it has been said, were the healthy outbursts of a great mind, not morbid, jealous feelings.

Such fits of wrath led to amusing scenes. Handel thundered and roared at Cuzzoni when she refused to sing an air he had written for her, and she did so only from fear lest he should give effect to his threat to throw her out of the window.

Again, he administered a thorough rating to a chorister named Jansen, who had assured Handel that he could sing at sight.

"You scoundrel!" yelled Handel, shaking his fist underneath the nose of the frightened chorister. "Vat do you mean by deling me dot you could sing at sight?"

"So I can, sir," stammered Jansen, completely unnerved, "but not at first sight, sir."

In 1753, in the Lenten season, a minor canon from the cathedral of Gloucester offered his services to Handel. His offer was accepted, and he was employed in the choruses. Not satisfied with this department, the canon requested leave to sing a solo, that his voice might appear to more advantage. This request was also granted, but he executed his solo so little to the satisfaction of the audience that, to his great mortification, he was violently hissed.

When the performance was over, Handel, who for once was not in a rage, came to the unfortunate and said: "I am very, very sorry for you, my dear sir, but go back to your church in de country. God will forgive you for your bad singing. Dese wicked peoples in London, dey will not forgive you."—Washington Star.

Christmas Presents.

The custom of giving presents at Christmas seems to have gained ground in England since the close of the seventeenth century, when a French visitor to England considered it worthy of notice. "Whereas," he observes, "little presents from one another are made only on the first day of the year in France, they begin here at Christmas, and they are not so much presents from friend to friend or from equal to equal (which is less practiced in England now than formerly) as from superior to inferior.

"In the taverns the landlord gives part of what is eaten and drunk in his house that and the next two days. For instance, they reckon you for the wine and tell you there is nothing to pay for bread nor for your slice of Westphalia," an anticipation of the modern free lunch. But in some parts of East Anglia the great day for giving and receiving presents is not Christmas, but St. Valentine's day, before which children formally present to their parents lists of the particular articles they specially wish for.—London Chronicle.

Aldrich and Lowell.

When Lowell was editor of the Atlantic he received a contribution from Thomas Bailey Aldrich, then just starting in his literary career. He was much impressed with the literary merits of the article and in sending the author a check for the same inclosed a congratulatory note, advising him to continue writing and to follow literature as a profession. The kind thoughtfulness was appreciated and remembered by Aldrich, and the note was carefully preserved. Years after, when Aldrich himself was the editor of the Atlantic and Lowell sent a contribution, he was gratified at receiving a copy of the note he himself had written years before. When it is realized that Lowell had already made a reputation in letters the clause advising him to stick to literature has a funny significance.

Knew He'd Killed Something.

A certain young gentleman, an amateur sportsman, went to the highlands for a "shoot." One day, with rather a white face, he called the keeper to him and said: "I say, keeper, are all your beaters here? Do you mind counting them?"

"Vera weel, sir," replied the keeper and whistled to his men.

"Yes, they're all here," he continued after counting them.

"Are you quite sure?" said the sportsman anxiously.

"Yes, sir; Ah'm certain."

The gentleman heaved a sigh of relief. "All right," said he, "then behind that rock down there you'll find a dead roebuck!"—London Tit-Bits.

TAMING ELEPHANTS.

They Are Singularly Helpless and Fearful For Such Great Animals.

To see the working elephant at his best one must go to Burma, where the teak timber trade, worth millions of dollars a year, is the staple industry. Teak, as every one knows, is a very valuable wood, quite equal to mahogany, and much used in expensive furniture and fittings. There are in Burma vast forests, thousands of square miles in extent, and these are leased by the Indian government to private corporations, many of which employ over a thousand elephants, each one of them worth at least 5,000 rupees, or $1,675. These elephants are renewed from the wild herds as occasion demands. But the Indian government strictly protects every elephant between the Himalayas and Cape Cormorin, and not one may be shot save by special license and when it is clearly shown he is a "rogue" or outcast from the herd and on that account likely to become a serious menace to the villagers.

The Indian government itself undertakes the trapping of the wild elephants through its forest department. In the old days this was done by digging pits in the jungle and covering them lightly with twigs, branches and grass. But for one elephant successfully taken by this method at least twenty were maimed or destroyed, and now the "kheddah" system is in vogue. The kheddah is simply an immense inclosure made with the trunks of trees and with a V shaped entrance. On a day prearranged thousands of beaters under the supervision of white shikaris, or hunters, drive the wild herds from their feeding grounds toward the kheddah, and at last, with a thunder that shakes the ground, many hundreds of the monsters rush, screaming and trumpeting, into the great inclosure.

Next day expert mahouts, or drivers, mounted upon tame working taskers, enter the kheddah and begin to make friends with the captives. The work of taming these wild elephants is astonishingly simple. It is also comic to witness, because so well trained are the tame decoys that should the prisoners misbehave themselves they are very drastically corrected by the tusks of their taskmasters. In a week or so each captive is led forth between two tame elephants, and his education is very nearly complete. Many elephants are shipped from India proper up to Moulmein and Burma in ships specially built for the purpose. I have seen as many as 120 full grown elephants being put on board one of these curious liners. They are lifted by a special sling harness, attached to cables and a powerful crane.

It is pitiful to see the terror of the enormous brutes dangling helplessly in midair, and when one realizes what agonies they suffer at the mere sight of a mouse one understands their dread of being swung in midair. The elephant laborers are fully grown at twenty-five years, and then they do their best work, traveling faster than the older ones. For nearly fifteen years they continue to increase in weight, and their experienced mahouts are able to tell their age at a glance by the shape of their ears. As workers they are both quiet and swift. I have seen a Rangoon elephant outrun a fast horse for a short distance. Oddly enough, they cannot jump in the least, and a deep ditch only seven feet wide is to them quite impassable. Nearsighted they are too. But to make up for this their sense of smell is little short of miraculous.—W. G. Fitzgerald in St. Nicholas.

Poems Offered.

A correspondent writes: "On reading your paper this morning I find a pretty little poem signed Leigh Hunt. I have one or two at present I would like to have you consider. Hoping for a favorable reply, I am," etc.

That's the way it goes. We just knew that if we let Leigh Hunt contribute some verses a lot of others would want to. Send your poems in, lady. But, understand, we didn't pay Leigh a cent for his, so don't expect any pecuniary advantage. Hunt is satisfied with the honor he got. You must be the same.—Cleveland Leader.

The Toad the Friend of Man.

There are no better friends to have in the garden than the toads. If they could be protected and encouraged to live there they would eradicate many of the grubs and outworns that do so much damage to plants. The great enemy of the toad is the small boy. Bands of schoolboys have been known to go out and in a single day kill as many as 200 of these useful animals. Boys regard this as innocent sport, being untaught and not knowing that the toad is a most valuable insect destroyer. Teach these young barbarians to avoid cruelty.—American Farmer.

To Cough Properly.

Few people know how to cough properly. It never occurs to the ordinary individual that there is a right way and a wrong way of doing it. Yet it is a matter of no small importance. If every sigh means a drop of blood out of the heart, as people say, every cough means some greater or less proportion of time knocked off one's life. Most people cough as loudly and forcibly as they can. But it is rather costly noise, for the single reason that it tears and inflames the lungs. The lungs consist of an extraordinarily delicate spongelike tissue, which sometimes gets inflamed and choked with phlegm. When we try to get rid of this substance we cough. But obviously if we remove it violently we must necessarily injure the delicate lung tissue. Therefore train yourself to cough as gently as possible.

He "Followed Copy."

Mrs. Marble after the death of her husband went to Mr. Stone, a dealer in headstones, and consulted him in reference to an inscription. She said, "Put on it, 'To my dearest husband,' and if there be any room left, 'We shall meet in heaven.'"

Entering the cemetery and going to her husband's grave, she noticed the headstone and quickly rushed to see how he had engraved it. The poor old widow's heart beat with pain when she read the following on the headstone: "To my dearest husband, and if there be any room left we shall meet in heaven."—Port Chester Record.

Not True Love.

Grace (to her bosom friend, who is caressing a bleary eyed poodle)—I hear your engagement with Fred has been broken off.

Bertha (with a sigh)—Yes, I found that his love for me was not the deep, true love which nothing on earth can change, so I was compelled to let him go.

Grace—Why, how did you find it out?

Bertha—Easily enough. He got so angry every time poor Flossie bit him.—London Mail.

REAL SEAMANSHIP.

A Thrilling Story of Maritime Adventure and Coolness.

Mr. Bankson was telling a story of maritime adventure. As he advanced in it, says a writer in the New York Sun, his fellow club members gathered around him and acquired delicious thrills. A storm was evidently about to break. He had told how banks of cloud appeared in the west and massed themselves there, and he went on:

"It was no time to be at sea. I knew that at high water there would be trouble.

"The light breeze failed. I had all sail set, but could not keep steerage way. I simply drifted with the tide. The surface of the sea was like glass.

"A white fringe of clouds rapidly advanced and hid the dull leaden bank below them. I knew what that meant. I overhauled my ground tackle, keeping an eye all the time on the storm coming up against the direction in which the wind had blown before the calm fell.

"Suddenly a ripple appeared on the water beneath the cloud. The sails of the vessels up to windward dropped as if the halcyons had been out. Men scurried about the decks.

"A yellow ruffle appeared upon the water and advanced like an express train. Beyond it was a solid wall of rain, split by streaks of lightning, and there was peal after peal of thunder.

"I tried to head the craft so that she would take the gale head-on, but it was no use. The ripple on the water, following closely the yellow foam, was upon me.

"What was I to do? I could let sail go on the run, drop the anchor, pay out all my line and hang on. But what if the gale should be so stiff that she wouldn't lie to it? Then I would have to buoy my anchor and send with bare poles until it blew itself out. While I went over this in my mind it came to the instant when something had to be done."

Bankson paused at this thrilling moment.

"Well," demanded a listener, "what did you do?"

"I got out," said Bankson. "Without another moment's hesitation I stepped overboard, took the canoe under my arm and walked ashore just in time to escape a wetting above the knees."

FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

The Cause of Indian Summer and Origin of Its Name.

As the boys and girls all know, we usually have a season of comparatively mild, hazy weather some time in November, to which has been given the name of Indian summer. Familiar as the phenomenon is, however, few people know what causes it, chiefly perhaps because they have never tried to find out. Most of the scientists attribute the mildness of the air at that time to a change in the condition of the atmosphere, which confines to the lower strata the heat radiated from the earth's surface. This explanation is not wholly satisfactory to a layman, but it seems to be the best that the scientists can do for us. The hazy condition of the air at that time is more easily explained. It is due to the decay or the slow chemical combustion of leaves, grasses and other vegetable matter under the combined action of frost and the sun. As to the name, Indian summer, several explanations have been given of that, the most plausible being that the early settlers called it so because they believed that the smoky appearance at that time was caused by forest and prairie fires kindled by the Indians. Some people think that the name came from the fact that the Indians took advantage of that period to lay in their winter supply of game.—Chicago News.

A Trusting Monkey.

Poor little monkeys! They get hungry and tired and sleepy just like children. Here is a story of one who lives in Buffalo. He belonged to an organ grinder who stopped in front of a veranda where a kind hearted gentleman sat. When he came up and held out his little cap for a bit of money the gentleman, who is very fond of animals, gave him a red checked apple.

The monkey jumped upon his lap and ate the apple, and between the bites he fixed his bright eyes on the face of his new friend. He must have made up his mind that he could trust him, for as he finished the apple he laid his head against the gentleman's arm and fell asleep. The kind friend of animals paid the organ grinder to play a long time, so that the tired little monkey could have his nap. When he awoke his master pulled the chain, and he followed the organ again, much brighter and happier for the kindness shown to him.
