Try It Young Man.
Let a young man at twenty years of age put twenty dollars at interest, instead of expending it for tobacco. Then, at the beginning of the next year repeat it, and include also the principal and interest of the preceding year, and thus continue to do from year to year, until he shall have reached the age of seventy the amount he would exceed thirty thousand dollars. How many of our young men will try it.—Ex.

WHO SAID BASE BALL?

Build a Suitable Ground for the Boys.

That Greenville has some good stuff in the way of young baseball players was shown Friday afternoon when the eighth and tenth grades crossed timber. Although it was the first time the boys were on the field this season, they did credit to themselves and played a fast and snappy game, which is shown by the resulting score, 6 to 5 in the tenth grade's favor. The work in the box by White for the eighth graders and Ragsdale for the tenth was superb. Home runs by Dupree and Lipscomb, of the eighth and tenth respectively, were the features of the game.
The fact that we did not get in the league is no reason Greenville should not have some baseball this summer. There is plenty of good material, which, if properly backed, would give some interesting games. It costs much less to have a home team, so why not build a ground for the home boys to play upon as would have been done had we got in the league. A man once said, "a town without paved streets and baseball is a dead one," and he certainly spoke a parable when he said it. We are working on the streets, so all left to do now is to build a park. Awake to these facts, good people; give the boys your encouragement and support, and this summer, while all other towns are spending hundreds of dollars on the game, you will have to pay only a few dollars and will see just as good ball.

A Farmer's Views on Advertising.
"If mail order houses get $1,000 out of the county each month, that belongs to the home merchants, the fault is with the merchants themselves. These houses advertise and give us prices on everything. They tell us what they have and what they want for it. Of course we get soaked once in awhile. Then we can try some other house. Most of the home merchants who advertise don't quote prices. They neglect to tell us what we want to know—the prices. Of course we can go to the store and ask, but you all know how it is—one does not know so well what he wants to buy when he is at home. And here is where the mail order houses make their hit. They send their advertising matter into our homes, and we read it when we haven't anything else to do.
"Right here is where the home merchants fall down. If they talked there business to us in our homes the same as the mail order houses do, the people would be in to see them next time they come to town and in many cases make extra trips to see the things at once that they didn't know they wanted until they were brought to their attention."
"The home merchant can save the expense of getting out a catalogue. We read the home paper more carefully than we do the catalogue, and if the merchants want to talk business with us let them put their talk in the home papers and put it in so that we know they mean business. The merchant likely nine times out of ten sells his goods as cheaply as the mail order houses, and, I believe, in many things they are much cheaper, but how are we to know if he does not tell us about it?—Ex.

HAPPENINGS IN NORTH CAROLINA

ITEMS TOO SHORT FOR SEPARATE HEADING.

Prominent Citizen of Tarboro Dead—A Suicide at Burlington.
Tarboro, N. C., March 27.—James I. Barnhill, one of the leading business men of the town, died here last night, aged sixty one years. He has been ill for two years with a complication of disease. Mr. Barnhill came to Tarboro fifteen years ago from Pitt county, and amassed quite a little fortune in the lumber business. Surviving are his mother, Mrs. A. S. Barnhill, two brothers, Sidney and Gray, two sisters, Mrs. Roebuck and Mrs. Everett, of Pitt county, and one sister, Mrs. Lon Harris, of this place.
High Point, N. C., Mar. 27.—It is with pleasure that the Baptists of the State learn that the next session of the State Woman's Missionary Society of that denomination will hold their next meeting with the First Baptist church, of this city. The lady delegates from here made a special bid for the convention. It will meet here the latter part of March 1909.
Burlington, N. C., March 27.—This community was horribly shocked tonight when it became known Edwin H. White had committed suicide in his room by shooting himself in the heart with a pistol.

Senate Passes Aldrich Bill.
Washington, D. C. March 27.—The Aldrich currency bill was passed by the senate today by a vote of 42 to 16, in the main a party vote. Previous to the taking of a vote on the Aldrich bill, a vote was taken on the Bailey substitute, authorizing the government, instead of the national banks, to issue the emergency circulation for which the bill provides. The vote on the substitute stood 42 to 13, and this vote was entirely partisan, even Senator LaFollette casting his vote with the Republicans. The bill has been before the senate since January 9. The vote was not reached until after 6 p. m.

It Will be Your Fault.
If you miss getting The Reflector after the first of April you will know it is because the new postal law has gone into effect and that you failed to respond to the statement sent you showing that you were far enough behind on subscription to be affected by the ruling. It is not pleasant to us to have to drop any names, and if any one is dropped it is because you force us to do so.
Superintendent Haskins says the coal bin at the water and light plant is soon to be enlarged to double its present capacity.

THE GOVERNOR WRITES.

Expresses Himself Plainly About Action of Railroads.

Raleigh, N. C. March 27.—Governor Glenn on his return to Raleigh today sent President Finley of the Southern Railway Company a letter demanding that the restrictions put on the use of "compromise" mileage books that they must be presented to local agents for trip mileage to be drawn and certificate tickets issued, be annulled and declaring the injection of this regulation is decidedly without at least the spirit of the compromise agreement. In the course of the lengthy letter the governor says: "The only result of your action is to dissatisfy the traveling public with the rate law and if you enter into the spirit of your agreement you cannot desire to do this.
I therefore urge that you have this order changed yourself and try to induce the other railroads do the same, for such action as you are now taking will certainly bring about further friction between the legislature and railroads, which will be of no benefit to the roads not withstanding the decision in the North Carolina and Minnesota cases. You know as well as I that the state is not without its remedy, (which can be effected by the legislature) and neither the railroads or the state can gain anything by having a spirit of hostility existing between them."

Unique Calendar.
Mr. L. C. Arthur has received from George Tait & Son, Norfolk, one of the most unique calendars we have seen. It represented an old barn door with rusty hinges and key hole, and on the door are tacked a horse shoe, wish bone and rabbit foot, not pictures but the real article. Good luck ought certainly to come with that kind of calendar.

SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1908

Looks like March will leave the blowing for April to do.

Mr. Bond having withdrawn the field is now clear for Mr. Small, and he ought to be re-nominated by acclamation.

The March civil term of Pitt Superior court was a little out of the ordinary. It kept busy for the entire two weeks allotted to the term.

If the farmers put in a large crop of cotton this year in the face of the present low prices, they may have to sell it next fall below the cost of production.

The president does not mind asking congress to do things, but that is no guarantee that the things will be done. More is going to depend on what "Uncle Joe" says about it.

It does not look like the proper thing for two Democrats aspiring to the same office to meet in joint debate and make the fur fly off each other. Such things do not help the party.

In one of the New York Sunday supplements last Sunday Maximé Elliot advocated wearing clothes to match the hair but that would never do for some of the gentlemen we frequently see in the front rows at the Academy of Music.—Wilmington Star.

Nor for those whose hair is of such hue that clothing the same color would make them decidedly conspicuous.

The President's message was a disappointment in one respect. It gave no advice in regard to the Easter hat. He probably took it for granted that that was included in the financial question.—Wilmington Star.

Governor Johnson is not an orator. But there are a few men in the country who can give a better account of themselves before an audience. The Minnesota governor can talk faster for two hours and make more friends and fewer enemies, advance more plausible ideas, and skip more hard nuts than any other man in politics today. In short, without being a hero or a profound public man, the Minnesota governor is, as a candidate, resourceful, humane and quick, just the kind of a man who makes a good run. In office he is quiet, modest, ready and dependable. One of his most charming characteristics is his handling of patronage. It is the point at which most politicians fall down. It is the point at which Johnson rises to his best.—Minneapolis Journal.

Working a Wise Way.

There is a man in this here town, and he is wondrous wise, for when he marked his prices down he then did advertise. And when he saw his trade increase, with all his might and main, he marked still lower every price, and advertised again. And when he advertised again, his rivals stamped and swore, to see folks rush with might and main, to patronize his store. And while they sat in solitude, and saw him custom win, that man behind the counter stood and raked the shekels in. And when he raked the shekels in and saw his fortune rising, he took a goodly lot of tin and kept on advertising. Each day a generous sum he'd sink and demonstrate full plain, the more one pays for printer's ink, the greater is his gain.—Ex.

HANDEL'S FITS OF RAGE.

The Great Master's Fiery Wrath When His Temper Cut Loose.

Handel was much given to flying into eccentric rages, though he was not a wholly unkind man. He knew his power, says a biographer, as every genius knows his power, and it is not surprising that he was thought to be overproud and egotistical. He would denounce torrents of abuse when "Fings vos mixed," to understand which one required an intimate acquaintance with at least four languages—English, German, French and Italian. Yet these rages, it has been said, were the healthy outbursts of a great mind, not morbid, jealous feelings.

Such fits of wrath led to amusing scenes. Handel thundered and roared at Cuzzoni when she refused to sing an air he had written for her, and she did so only from fear lest he should give effect to his threat to throw her out of the window.

Again, he administered a thorough rating to a chorister named Jansen, who had assured Handel that he could sing at sight.

"You schoundrel!" yelled Handel, shaking his fist underneath the nose of the frightened chorister. "Vat do you mean by delling me dot you could sing at sight?"

"So I can, sir," stammered Jansen, completely unnerved, "but not at first sight, sir."

In 1753, in the Lenten season, a minor canon from the cathedral of Gloucester offered his services to Handel. His offer was accepted, and he was employed in the choruses. Not satisfied with this department, the canon requested leave to sing a solo, that his voice might appear to more advantage. This request was also granted, but he executed his solo so little to the satisfaction of the audience that, to his great mortification, he was violently hissed.

When the performance was over, Handel, who for once was not in a rage, came to the unfortunate and said: "I am very, very sorry for you, my dear sir, but go back to your church in de country. God will forgive you for your bad singing. Dese wicked peoples in London, dey will not forgif you."—Washington Star.

Christmas Presents.

The custom of giving presents at Christmas seems to have gained ground in England since the close of the seventeenth century, when a French visitor to England considered it worthy of notice. "Whereas," he observes, "little presents from one another are made only on the first day of the year in France, they begin here at Christmas, and they are not so much presents from friend to friend or from equal to equal (which is less practiced in England now than formerly) as from superior to inferior.

"In the taverns the landlord gives part of what is eaten and drunk in his house that and the next two days. For instance, they reckon you for the wine and tell you there is nothing to pay for bread nor for your slice of Westphalia," an anticipation of the modern free lunch. But in some parts of East Anglia the great day for giving and receiving presents is not Christmas, but St. Valentine's day, before which children formally present to their parents lists of the particular articles they specially wish for.—London Chronicle.

This is what Hon. Jake Moore, State Warden of Georgia, says of Kodol For Dyspepsia: "E. C. DeWitt & Co., Chicago, Ill.—Dear Sirs—I have suffered more than twenty years from indigestion. About eighteen months ago I had grown so much worse that I could not digest a crust of corn bread and could not retain anything on my stomach. I lost 25 lbs; in fact I made up my mind that I could not live but a short time, when a friend of mine recommended Kodol. I consented to try it to please him and I was better in one day. I now weigh more than I ever did in my life and am in better health than for many years. Kodol did it. I keep a bottle constantly, and write this hoping that humanity will be benefited. Yours very truly, Jake C. Moore, Atlanta, Aug. 10, 1904." Sold by Jno. L. Wooten's Drug Store.

THE REPORTER'S STORY.

A Dream That Might Have Ended, In Unconscious Guilt.

"Do you know I came pretty near committing suicide one time, and I wouldn't have known it if I had," remarked the fat scribe as he broke into a conversation of night police reporters at central. At the time the startling affair occurred I was engaged in a sort of day police stunt—that is, the editor kept me on criminal stories as a sort of specialty. An express car hold-up came off, and I was sent to report the chase of the bandits. It was a long, hard game.

"One day I got a telegram to come home, and there never was a guy that packed his grip with such joy. I had been gone a month, and what with the life I lived and the excitement of the hunt and all that I was about all in. I had been in the habit of staying up late at night, and I knew I could not sleep comfortably in a berth, so I threw myself down on the long leather seat in the smoking apartment of the Pullman. Travel happened to be light, and I was not bothered.

"I had a revolver with me in my right hip pocket. It hurt me as I rested upon it, and I raised up and took it out of the hip pocket, placing it in the left coat pocket. Then with my overcoat and right arm under my head, I made a try for a little sleep.

"Pretty soon I snoozed off. Then I dreamed. I dreamed that the train was being held up and that three masked men, armed with rifles or shotguns, appeared on the platform of the car. I had got it into my head that the bandits intended to kill me, and in my nightmare I thought I sprang up and tried to barricade the door with chairs and seats. But my efforts were useless. The robbers pushed their way in and jeered me. I heard one of them say: 'Kill him. That's the guy that has been after us.'

"I felt that my hour had come, but something made me want to die game. I reached for my revolver and got it and strove desperately to fire it at the villains. But strangely enough the revolver would not discharge. I pulled and pulled at the trigger, but it was no go.

"Just then there was a crash—I thought I had been made the present of a load of buckshot, but it was simply the porter closing the door—and I awoke, covered with perspiration. I was half dazed, and it took me a moment or two to get my bearings. Then I found I had my revolver in my right hand, and my index finger was gripped around the guard as if it were frozen there, so intense had been the strength I had applied to the weapon. If it had been the trigger instead of the guard—oh, my—

"I then figured it out. I had reached into my left pocket with my right hand, transferred the revolver to my right, which was under my head. The angle of the weapon was directly over my heart when I strove to discharge it. The revolver was a heavy bulldog, and I wouldn't have known what hurt me had it gone off. But some kind of a good fairy saved me."

"That ain't a bad yarn," remarked a listener. "Your friends would have certainly said you had taken the suicide route."

"Sure they would," approved the fat reporter. "All of which goes to show that circumstantial evidence is sometimes a very uncertain quantity."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Vitality of Cats.

It's an old saying that "a cat has nine lives" and, like most old sayings, not supposed to have any truth in it, but from recent investigations it really seems that a cat can hold on to life under circumstances where any other creature would die. A cat's life may be proved to be at least three times the worth of a dog's. Put a cat and a dog of the same age in a "lethal chamber." The cat will always outlive the dog. On one occasion it was noticed the dog was dead in five minutes and the cat still breathing forty minutes later. A cat has been known to recover after two hours' immersion in cold water, and another came back to life eight hours after apparent death from a dose of prussic acid.—Strand Magazine.

Got the Rest of It Later.

The process of loading a Flat-bush avenue car at the door of a Fulton street department store the other afternoon was delayed for an instant by a woman who dropped a parcel and paused in front of the car step to pick it up. She was tall, angular and wore a heavy veil. "Aw, hurry up, will ye?" said the courteous conductor, addressing himself to her. "We can't wait here all afternoon." The woman said nothing, but passed inside and took her seat. When the conductor came to collect her fare, she lifted her veil and remarked with evident temper: "If I wasn't your wife, I'd report you to the company for being sassy."—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE STAGECOACH.

An Ancient Economist Who Said It Would Ruin Business.

The first stagecoach seen in England was about the year 1553, and another 120 years passed before stagecoaches began to run. They were not received with much favor. In 1673 a treatise was published in London by "A Lover of His Country and Well Wisher to the Prosperity Both of the King and Kingdoms," in which were used many elaborate arguments and violent tirades against them.

"These coaches and caravans," said the writer, "are one of the greatest mischiefs that hath happened of late years to the kingdom, mischievous to the public, destructive to trade and prejudicial to lands."

He laments the decay of good horsemanship, which would follow if everybody rode to London in a coach. He calculates that a coach from York, Chester or Exeter would have forty horses on the journey to the capital and carry eighteen passengers a week. In the whole year it would carry about 1,872. Suppose there were returning passengers. There would be 936, and for these forty horses would be sufficient, but if people traveled in the good old fashioned way then at least 500 horses would be required for the work. The use of so many horses would give employment to many who were by the stagecoach thrown out of work, such as cloth workers, drapers, tailors, saddlers, tanners, curriers, shoemakers, spurriers, lorimers and fellmakers. The inns would also suffer, for the stagecoach stops only at a few, but when gentlemen traveled on horseback, accompanied, as they usually were, by two or three servants, they stopped at any and as often as they liked and thus encouraged trade.

Farmers will be ruined, he says, by the stagecoach, for how can they dispose of their hay, straw and horse corn? Moreover, the influence on health would be bad—men called out of their beds before daylight, hurried from place to place until far on into the night, in the summer stifled with heat and choked with dust, in the winter starving and freezing with cold or choked with filthy fog, obliged to ride all day with strangers and with sick, ancient and diseased persons and with children crying, poisoned with fetid breaths and crippled by the crowd of boxes and bundles. Besides all these troubles there were accidents arising from the rotten coaches and foul roads.

In short, the writer is fully convinced that if stagecoach traveling becomes popular the country will go to ruin. Had he lived to see the railway he would have been bereft of his senses.

Anent the Graveyard.

A lumbering old stage was winding in and out over a remote foad in the Adirondacks. There was only one passenger, and he had chosen to sit beside the driver. Several times he had tried conversation, but had met with so little encouragement that he had given up and was silently watching the landscape.

Presently they came to a tiny mountain burying ground, containing a few gravestones and a few unmarked graves. The passenger looked at it, struck by its air of loneliness, which seemed to stir in him afresh the desire for human intercourse. He turned again to the driver, pointed toward the graveyard and observed:

"People around here don't seem to die very often, do they?"

And without turning his head the driver said:

"Just once."—Home Magazine.

Taking No Chances.

A tall man impatiently pacing the platform of a wayside station accosted a red haired boy of about twelve. "S-s-say," he said, "d-d-do y-you know ha-ha-how late this train is?" The boy grinned, but made no reply. The man stuttered out something about red headed kids in general and passed into the station. A stranger, overhearing the one sided conversation, asked the boy why he hadn't answered the big man. "D-d-d-ye wanter see me g-g-get me fa-fa-face punched?" stammered the boy. "D-d-dat big g-g-guy'd tink I was mo-mo-mocking him."—Argonaut.

Fifty Kinds of Headache.

"There are more than fifty kinds of headaches," said a physician, "and sufferers from the more common forms may cure themselves accordingly. The more frequent forms are a dull pain across the forehead, due to dyspepsia; a pain in the back of the head, due to the liver; a bursting pain in both temples, due to malnutrition; an ache on the top of the head, as though a weight pressed on the skull, due to overwork; an ache between the brows just above the base of the nose, due to eye strain."—Fur News.

ANECDOTE OF A FLOWER.

A Russian Nobleman Gave the Century Plant Its Name.

About two centuries ago a Russian nobleman traveling in Mexico saw and admired the maguay plant, which is a native of Mexico.

The plant was so much admired by the Russian for its beauty and utility that he was eager to have growing specimens in his own country. So when leaving Mexico he procured some roots to take home to the czar as a present.

On his first visit to court, after he reached the capital city, he told of the wonderful plant and asked permission of the czar to present to him the specimens which he had. The czar graciously granted his request and gave the roots to the court gardener, who promised to give the plants his best attention, but unfortunately before he could plant them properly as he intended he was taken suddenly ill and died without having accomplished anything.

Another gardener was appointed. In the meantime the roots lay in the sack in which they were first placed. The new gardener, not knowing their value, threw the sack away, and it lay unheeded in a corner of the garden day after day. Some time afterward his little daughter picked up one of the roots and in a playful mood planted it, but paid no further attention to it. The czar had forgotten all about it. In course of time the ruler died and also the second gardener.

The plant in after years put out a few spikes for leaves, but did not thrive in the cold air of Russia. It grew very slowly, and its origin was not known to any one save the wife of the former gardener and the child that planted it.

Years passed, and still the strange plant, with its thick, long, straight leaves, now-nearly six feet tall, did not bloom, but as it grew taller it attracted notice, and the new czar sometimes looked at it and wondered if it would ever bloom.

In time he, too, died, and still the maguay bloomed not.

But just after the coronation of another czar a stalk shot up from the root of the plant and rapidly grew to the height of twenty feet. Soon many clusters of small buds appeared, which slowly unfolded and became white blossoms. The wonderful plant had bloomed at last.

The gardener said it was 100 years old and had bloomed in honor of the new czar. Word was sent to him, and he and his whole court visited and admired the flowers and the plant.

The poor exile from the sunny skies of Mexico had earned its reward and a new name, for ever since that day it has been known as "the century plant."

THE ROMAN SENATE.

It Was Purely Executive, With No Authority to Make Laws.

The senate of Rome, which was an ancient institution, said to have been established by Romulus himself, was a purely executive body, having no authority whatever to make laws. The senate of the United States is almost purely legislative in its functions, having no power to make appointments outside of the body itself, but only to agree to those made by the president. And this is largely a formality, as it is regarded as a very discourteous thing to refuse to confirm a presidential appointment.

The Roman senate as instituted by Romulus consisted of 100 members. An additional hundred were added when the Sabines migrated from Rome. The first Tarquin increased the number of senators to 300, at which number it continued for a long time. Julius Caesar increased the number of senators first to 700 and afterward to 900 members. Augustus at first added another hundred, making an even 1,000, but afterward reduced the number to 600.

Senators were supposed to be men of special merit. They were at first selected by the monarch, but the duty was afterward intrusted to the consuls and latterly to the censors. No man was eligible to the office who had not been previously knighted and who had held the inferior offices of questor, tribune of the people, edile, praetor and consul.

The senate met regularly on the 1st of January and also on extraordinary occasions when called together by the consuls, tribunes of the emperor.

A Roman senator during the early days of the republic made a virtue of poverty and gloried in the simple life. But when wealth, vice and corruption became more common it was decreed that no man could be a senator whose wealth amounted to less than 80,000 sesterces, or about $35,000, because, it was argued, he could not support the dignity of the office on a less amount. Therefore when a senator's fortune was reduced below this sum he was dropped from the rolls. Under such an arrangement in this country a man like the late Senator Hoar, who lived in a boarding house, would not be eligible.—Punxsutawney (Pa.) Spirit.

A Wise Guy.

In a New York street a wagon loaded with lamp globes collided with a truck, and many of the globes were smashed. Considerable sympathy was felt for the driver as he gazed ruefully at the shattered fragments. A benevolent looking old gentleman eyed him compassionately. "My poor man," he said, "I suppose you will have to make good this loss out of your own pocket." "Yep," was the melancholy reply. "Well, well," said the philanthropic old gentleman, "hold out your hat. Here's a quarter for you, and I dare say some of these other people will give you a helping hand too." The driver held out his hat, and several persons hastened to drop coins in it. At last, when the contributors had ceased, he emptied the contents of his hat into his pocket; then, pointing to the retreating figure of the philanthropist who had started the collection, he observed: "Say, maybe he ain't the wise guy! That's me boss!"

A Point of Interest.

In a certain county of Arkansas a man named Walters was put on trial for stealing a watch. The evidence had been very conflicting, and as the jury retired the judge remarked suavely that if he could afford any assistance in the way of smoothing out possible difficulties he should be most happy to do so. Eleven of the jurors had filed out of the box, but the twelfth remained, and there was on his countenance an expression indicating great perplexity.

"Is there any question you'd like to ask me before you retire?" asked his honor, observing the juror's hesitancy.

The man's face brightened. "Yes, your honor," he replied eagerly. "I'd like to know, your honor, whether the prisoner really stole the watch."—Harper's Weekly.

The Crooked Genesee.

Do you ever stop to think what a crooked old river the Genesee is? It is said that by way of the river it is twenty-eight miles from Genesee to Mount Morris against six miles by the road. It runs along the west side of the valley until it nearly strikes Piffard, then crosses the valley to Genesee, runs on the east side about a mile and a half, then turns and runs back again nearly to the village of Piffard. The two points at Piffard are only about half a mile apart, but to follow the course of the river from one-point to the other a person would travel from five to six miles. It is a crooked stream, all right enough.—Livingston Democrat.

To Punish for False Report About Crops.

Washington, D. C., March 27.—Representative Craig, of Alabama, has introduced a bill to punish officers and employees of the government guilty of issuing false or distorted crop reports. The bill is an echo of the scandal in which it was asserted that officials of the department of agriculture had been in collusion with cotton operators and had manipulated the cotton crop to their advantage, while it was found there was no law covering such operations.

The Craig bill makes it unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States to compile for insurance or issue any false statistics or information relative to products of the soil, under penalty of a fine of not more than $5,000 and imprisonment for not more than five years.

TAFT & BOYD

For Your Sunday Dinner.

try the following delightful desert:
(2 cup English Walnut meats.
1-2 doz. figs, cut up fine.
1 10c. package JELLO-O, any flavor
Dissolve the JELL-O in a pint of boiling water. When cool and just commencing to thicken stir in the figs and nuts. Served with Whipped cream. Delicious. The walnuts, figs and JELLO-O can be bought at any good grocery. This makes enough desert for a large family and is very economical.
