Let us all try to make Greenville better looking.

Poor Atlanta, she is always in trouble, and mostly of her own making.

If you don't think you live in the best town in the world, pull up and go to another one.

The fifth district is already trotting out candidates for congress two years from now.

If the sugar trust has to shell out the $3,600,000 for which the government is suing, there will be an advance in the price of sweetening.

That splendid afternoon paper, the Greensboro Record, has just completed its eighteenth year. The Record is a credit to Greensboro and to the State.

The season has opened for shooting men through mistake for wild turkeys and other game. A man who cannot tell his game has no business going out with a gun.

Mr. Roosevelt is credited with saying that if it had been himself running for president he would have broken the solid South. We do not believe he would have made as good a run as Mr. Taft did.

GLENN EXPLAINS VOTE.

"Governor Glenn, do you think North Carolina is headed toward breaking the Solid South? Do you think the falling off of Kitchin's majority from yours of four years ago, and the loss of the three congressional districts is ominous with portent to the Democracy of the state?"

To these questions by a News man this morning, Governor Glenn, who is here to attend the municipal convention, replied: "While Kitchin's majority is 15,000 less than mine in 1904, the vote received by Kitchin is larger than the vote received by me, which shows that the Democrats not only did not lose, but gained. In 1900 and 1904 the Republicans seemed to have lost interest in the election and did not go to the polls while the Democrats did. This year, however, the Republicans made a special effort to thoroughly organize and get every man possible to vote, thus increasing their vote over previous years and making our majority less.

"Crawford received a larger vote than he did two years ago. Local troubles in the fifth district caused a division among Democrats. A great many objected to the manner in which Mr. Brooks was nominated, and, while they voted for him, took no interest in getting their friends out. In Rockingham county there was a serious local division over the new court question which injured ticket. Surry also added to the Fifth district its large Republican vote."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other disease put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and there fore requires constitutional treatment. Hill's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. themselves caused the division in the Fifth district.

"There were local troubles also in the Eighth district together with some dissatisfaction on account of the temperance question, which materially reduced the Democratic vote.

"If the Democrats learn the lesson of this election it should teach, to-wit: "First, that thorough organization insures success and a loose organization in the counties brings defeat, and

"Second, that crimination and recrimination in their efforts to get the nomination by Democrats must cease if they want a full vote in the regular election. The Democrats will not only regain the three districts next time but will carry North Carolina by an increased majority.

"No one objects to the truth being told as to candidates, and if they are bad men they should not be nominated, else they cannot expect the people to vote for the nominees

"Men should be made to stop uttering statements against other candidates that are calculated to injure them in a general election unless they are thoroughly satisfied that they are true, for, by so doing weapons are put into the hands of the enemy to crack our own heads with. In my judgment the only safe way is a legalized primary for both political parties on the same day throughout the state to name the candidates. Then in a fair contest Democratic voters can express their preference and there will be no danger in the future of our failing to sweep the state."—Charlotte News.

Drank and Remembered.
A porter in a big New York warehouse in Greenwich street was recently discharged for getting drunk and losing a valuable parcel. The discharge sobered him instantly, coming as a sudden hard shock. He said he would take the oath never to touch liquor again, but his pleadings for reinstatement were unheeded. He searched everywhere for the parcel, but could not recollect what disposition he had made of it. Of his honesty there had never been a question in twenty years. Overcome by the loss of his place, he got violently drunk and while in this condition recollected where he had left the parcel and went and recovered it.—New York Times.

Where Willie Was.
The professor (at the dinner table)—Oh, by the way, Mrs. Chopsticks, have you seen your little boy Willie lately? Mrs. Chopsticks—No, professor, I have not seen him since 10 o'clock, and I can't imagine what has become of him. In fact, I am very much worried about him. Professor—Well, seeing Martha pour me out that glass of water just now reminded me of something that I had on my mind to tell you some time ago, but which unfortunately escaped my memory. It was just about 10 o'clock, I think, that I saw little Willie fall down the well.—Atlanta Constitution.

OYSTERS.

How They Are Nursed and Reared and Prepared For Market.

Oystermen nowadays are farmers of the deep. They own their artificial beds and seed them down and cultivate them carefully and watch their crops and scarecrow off the predatory hordes, both men and fish, that otherwise would prey upon them, just as the careful husbandman labors in his fields. Such an oyster bed as this may comprise a sea covered patch of anywhere from 50 to 300 acres of "bottom," floored preferably with good, clean sand or broken rock or shell, yet frequently devoid at the start of all natural growth of the oysters.

On the natural beds the oysters spawn tremendously in the first warm months of summer. The spawn attaches itself like millions of freckles to anything affording a foothold—anything sharp, like broken shells, old bottles, other oysters and rocks. With incredible rapidity these freckles expand, becoming "pats"—small finger nail oysters, already housed in walls of lime.

Now comes the oysterman, he of the schooner with its two big iron dredges, and he in the skiff with his tongs. Both begin to pillage the beds in long, hard days of application. They fetch up tons of baby oysters, pitch back tons and tons of rock or broken shell for the foothold of oysters yet to be and, sailing away to their staked out farms, scatter all this "seed" beneath the waves.

Not only are the private oyster beds carefully divided one from another by the best of good stake hedges, but each holding is subdivided again into many smaller fields to facilitate the work. This becomes necessary from the fact that the seed must be permitted to grow for fully three seasons before marketable oysters can be harvested. Therefore when, with the advent of September, the season for bivalves has begun the schooners are manned with oystermen proper, who go down to dredge out a three-year-old crop for the towns.

They are dredged from the beds just as rapidly as men and machines can fetch them forth. The dredge comes up from the deep like a mining cage of steel. Its cargo upon its arrival is dumped upon the deck, and over it goes for another. Meanwhile a crew of furiously working men are busily culling at the heap. Scores of the oysters come up in lumpy colonies, where six, eight, ten or more of the creatures are cemented together in a group. The men, armed with hammers and skillful at the work, give one sharp tap at such an aggregation and break all its units apart. A false blow might serve to kill many oysters.

Having loaded her decks, the schooner goes home, only to discharge with all possible speed and hasten again to her labors. At the docks in the meantime equally arduous employment is abundant. The oysters are forked like so much coke upon especially constructed floats, which, provided with tanks to submerge them, are lowered at once below the ebb tide level, where they "drink" and fatten for at least three changes of the tide, being watched like nursing babies. The moment they are just exactly right another hurried business is on hand.

The tanks are pumped out, up come the floats, and men descend upon them like rubber booted demons to shovel them swiftly to a scow. And now, being absolutely at their finest, they must all be rushed to market.—Philip Verrill Nichols in Harper's.

"I got my wife through advertising." "Then you'll admit that advertising pays?" "I'll admit that it brings results," was the cautious reply.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A NOTORIOUS OUTLAW

Fearless "Billy the Kid," Who Reveled In Carnage.

ONLY A BOY, YET A TERROR.

This Youthful Desperado of the Southwestern Territories Was but Twenty-one When He Met Death at the Hands of Sheriff Pat Garrett.

When General Lew Wallace was governor of New Mexico and the war that raged for several years between the rival cattle companies was at its height "Billy the Kid" had reached the flood of his murderous career. He arrived in Lincoln county to take sides in the cattle warfare, known and feared in every range town and mining camp in the southwestern territories.

Pure wanton love of carnage was all that attracted him to Lincoln county. With the band of desperadoes he led he raided ranches, "shot up" towns, killed, burned houses and committed outrage after outrage with the blind recklessness of a maniac. Fear was extinct within him. He cared no more for detachments of cavalry than he did for cowering sheriffs.

Affairs in New Mexico finally came to such a pass that half the cattlemen paid the youthful desperado tribute. It was only after Pat F. Garrett was made sheriff of Lincoln county and the author of "Ben-Hur" (General Wallace) urged that fearless gun fighter and gambler to capture Billy the Kid that a determined effort was made to end his reign of terror.

The obstacles that Garrett had to encounter called for all his headlong energy and nerve. Billy had the entire countryside in a state of abject terror; friends were ready to give him timely warning of pursuit; ranchmen dared not deny him lodgment or concealment.

Pat Garrett undertook the capture in October, 1880, and on Dec. 20 he surrounded the Kid and his band in a deserted house near Stinking Springs. After a siege lasting most of the day the outlaws' ammunition was exhausted. Billy the Kid surrendered. He and his four followers, surrounded by a great force of armed men, were taken to Las Vegas and thence to Santa Fe for safe keeping.

An array of indictments charging murder confronted him. He was tried on one indictment and acquitted, then tried on another and convicted. He carried himself throughout with sneering defiance. After he had been sentenced to hang Garrett took him to Fort Stanton, near Lincoln. Two deputies armed with Winchesters were assigned to guard him in the temporary jail in the Murphy & Dolan store building.

In some mysterious fashion the Kid possessed himself of a revolver, shot down his guards, seized their weapons and appeared at the window. When another guard appeared the prisoner riddled his body with buckshot. Then he called to an old man on the plaza to bring him a file. Filing off one of his shackles, he called for a horse. One was brought, and he escaped.

For nearly three months after that Billy the Kid led a fugitive life. Garrett dogged him patiently and finally got wind of his hiding place—the ranch of Peter Maxwell, near Fort Sumner. It was nearly midnight when Garrett and two deputies quietly approached the Maxwell hacienda. Garrett crept into the room where Maxwell was sleeping. Softly awakening the sleeper, he questioned him concerning the whereabouts of the Kid.

At that moment the hated youth sprang into the room, calling out in Spanish, "Quien va?" ("Who comes there?") It was Billy. He was unarmed, and as he reached for his rifle Garrett shot him. The body of William Bonney (Billy the Kid) was buried in the military cemetery at Fort Stanton July 15, 1881. His age at the time of his death was twenty-one years seven months. There his body is today, though in later years a corpse was exhibited throughout the west as that of the famous young outlaw.—Harper's Weekly.

None Left Alive.

"An orator," said one of our statesmen, "was addressing an assemblage of the people. He recounted the people's wrongs. Then he passionately cried:

"Where are America's great men? Why don't they take up the cudgel in our defense? In the face of our manifold wrongs why do they remain cold, immovable, silent?"

"Because they're all cast in bronze!" shouted a cynic in the rear."

A TEMPERANCE UNION.

Members Limited to Fourteen—Drinks of Liquor Daily.

"Signing the pledge" is no new thing, as is proved by researches in Italy. Interesting particulars of what would appear to be the earliest examples of written pledges to abstain from gambling and excessive drinking are given in the Turin Studi Medievali by Signor Girolamo Biscaro, who has discovered three such documents in the archives of Milan. The first of these records is an oath sworn on the gospels by Giacomo Pasquali and Armanino Duca to the effect that for two years they will abstain from gambling in Pavia or within three miles thereof and will likewise refrain from inducing others to gamble on their behalf. The penalty for any breach of this oath is fixed at 5 soldi, payable to Papio Bovatorio.

In the second document Perano de Bono promises Uberto de Proto to abstain from gambling for a certain period, exception being made on behalf of the game of bismentiro, at which, however, he was not to lose more than 2 denari on any one day. Further, he undertakes not to visit any inn for drinking purposes before the hour of vespers on Monday. A breach of either clause of the pledge involves the payment of 5 soldi to De Proto. By the third document Sileto Ferrario expressed his willingness to pay 12 denari to his brother Lamperlo should he be persuaded to play for money in any place of public resort or to spend more than 2 denari on intoxicants in any one day.

The motive for these contracts is not stated, but it is presumed that they were entered into by employees whose masters wished to keep their proclivities in check. There is nothing in the documents to suggest the existence of any organization for the promotion of temperance. The honor of being first in the field in this respect therefore still rests with Germany, where two temperance societies were founded in the sixteenth century.

Of these the Order of St. Christopher was formed by Sigismund de Dietrichstein on Jan. 18, 1517, and the Order of Temperance by the landgrave of Hesse on Dec. 25, 1600. The members of the one order were pledged to abstain from toast drinking, and the members of the other undertook not to drink more than seven glasses of liquor at a time, and that not oftener than twice a day.—Chicago News.

A PARISIAN RUSE.

The Dressmaker's Lure That Ensnared the Americans.

Grace Margaret Gould tells in the September Woman's Home Companion some of the ways the Parisian dressmaking establishments sell their goods to American women. Here is one ruse that she saw worked in one of the biggest establishments in Paris:

There was a sudden and evident commotion among the employees. "The princess! The princess! She has arrived!" they cried.

American eyes began to bulge.

Out from a magnificent equipage stepped a regally gowned grand lady, attended by footmen and maid and received by the whole bowing establishment, to the neglect of all other customers. She was in a placid mood this day and easy to be pleased, praising their past efforts and selecting several of their new creations without regard to cost. After she had made her departure amid the exclamations there was no need of the saleswoman bothering her head over suggestions. Every American woman present wanted a gown copied from the one the princess had bought, and she got it after much pleading and at a price far beyond the limit she had set.

And the point of this fable is this: The princess was no princess, but an employee of the house.

Every French gown has two prices—an American price and a French price. It is needless to say which is the greater price.

Along about April the cry goes up, "The Americans are coming!" and then the prices go up too.

Along about November, when the Americans have left, you might almost say they are giving away gowns, only the Frenchman never does give away anything. Then it is that the Frenchwoman in general and the French actress in particular selects her wardrobe.

The End Spot.

An Irishman one day was told to put up a signboard on which were the words, "To Motorists—This Hill Is Dangerous."

Away went Mike with the signboard and placed it at the bottom of a very steep hill. A few days later his employer went to see how the board was put up and, finding it at the bottom of the hill, sought and found Mike.

"You blooming fool!" he cried. "Why didn't you put that sign in the right place?"

"Shure and ain't it?" asked Mike. "Don't all the accidents happen at the bottom?"—Harper's Weekly.

Crazy to Expect It.

Harduppe—Say, old fellow, lend me a hundred, will you? Riggs—A hundred what? Harduppe—A hundred dollars. I—Riggs—Oh, stop your joking. Harduppe (earnestly)—Joking? I was never more serious in my life. I'm broke. Riggs—My dear man, you're not broke; you're cracked!—Catholic Standard and Times.

Clocks.

It is not generally appreciated that clocks of the present type, although used as far back as the twelfth century and possibly earlier, were but fair timekeepers until several centuries later. In fact, it has been only within recent years that really accurate clocks have been manufactured. Those which the astronomers used in their observations at the end of the fifteenth century were so unreliable that modified forms of the water clocks of the ancients were often employed as checks upon them. Galileo's discovery of the isochronism of the pendulum from the swinging chandelier in the church of Pisa was of great value in its application to the measurement of time. The inventions of the mercurial and compensating pendulums have aided materially in cutting down the errors of the running rate and controlling the notions of clock mechanism.—New York World.

It never occurs to fools that merit and good fortune are closely united.—Goethe.

It is simply impossible for any one to repeat these three sentences fast. They are the gems of a collection of tongue twisters that an elocutionist has made. And almost equally difficult are the following, taken at random from the elocutionist's collection of more than 200 tongue twisters:

Six thick thistle sticks.

Two toads tried to trot to Ted-bury.

Strict, strong Stephen Stringer snared slickly six sickly silky snakes.

Two Houses Burned.

Two houses down the railroad a little south of town, were destroyed by fire Wednesday. The houses belonged to Mr. B. J. Pulley and were occupied by colored people. We did not learn how the fire originated.

Relative.

On the occasion of a public reception at Washington when Andrew Carnegie was one of the guests a new congressman remarked, after deliberately "sizing up" the diminutive billionaire, that it seemed odd to him that so unpretending a man should be the possessor of so many millions.

"Everything is relative," solemnly interposed an Arkansas man. "It depends upon the point of view. I remember how in my state a man was once pointed out to me as having squandered two fortunes. When I asked for the details I was informed:

"Why, sir, that man received at the death of his father the sum of $200 and $300 on the demise of his uncle. Today he hasn't a cent to his name!"

An Extended Interval.

Two clergymen were once discussing the process of sermon writing, when one of them remarked that the only really hard propositions for him were the introduction and the conclusion.

"You remember," said he, "the sermon I preached at the installation of Brother Morley not long ago? Well, I flattered myself that that sermon were pretty well done."

"Yes," responded the other divine, with a faint smile, "but, as I remember, they were awfully far apart."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Too Honest.

"James," said a grocer to the new boy, "what have you been doing in the back room so long?"

"I was a-pickin' the dead flies out of the dried currants, sir," replied James.

"You were," replied the grocer, with much disgust. "An' your father told me that he thought you were born for the grocery business. You had better study for the ministry, James."—London Mail.

Her Regret.

The Nobleman—You bought me-bought me as you would buy a hat. The Heiress—Yes, and what I'm sore about now is that I neglected to wait for my change.—Cleveland Leader.

RELIGIOUS ACROBATS.

Dangerous Aerial Slide Annually Performed in India.

India offers many curious things in the way of religion, and the strangest of them all is the aerial slide, which is performed annually at Kulu, in the Himalayas. At a point where there is a cliff overhanging a precipitous gorge several hundred feet in width and a hundred feet in depth a rope is made fast to the rock. The other end of this is carried across the gorge and there secured to a stake. The total length of the rope between the two points is when drawn taut 2,500 feet, and the end attached to the cliff is several hundred feet higher than that fastened on the opposite side of the ravine. Thus a slide is contrived, and it is a dangerous one to all appearance.

It is down this incline that the performer has his path. For the lofty journey a sort of saddle is provided made of wood, with holes in it, through which the rope passes. But before a start is made the whole length of the rope is wet to prevent the saddle from catching fire from the friction. The performer sits astride this seat, and to his legs are fastened bags of sand, which serve two purposes—they enable him to maintain an upright position during his lightning-like descent, and they increase the momentum. The lower end of the rope is carefully wound with bits of carpet to check the speed before the stake is reached. Without this precaution the performer would be dashed to pieces.

The terrific velocity of the descent for the first few hundred yards is shown by the stream of smoke that trails from the wake of the saddle, despite the fact that the rope has been wet. Afterward the incline diminishes somewhat, and the pace becomes correspondingly slower. By the time the goal is reached the jheri, as the performer is called, is able to come to a standstill without disaster.

This slide in the air is supposed to reveal the will of the gods as to the crops of the approaching season. If the perilous trip is accomplished in safety a plentiful harvest is assured. Naturally, therefore, every care is taken to minimize the dangers of the performance. The ceremony is of ancient origin, and those who engage in it as jheri form a small caste apart.—New York Tribune.

OLD TIME FORCEPS.

When the Thing Was Turned Something Had to Give Way.

And speaking of teeth reminds me that the country doctor had to draw them when they ached. The dentist's artistry had not attained the elevated plane it occupies today, when everybody's mouth shines like the inside of a communion cup. I honestly believe the modern dentist has more different kinds of tools than even a sanitary plumber, and that's a whole lot when you come to count them up. The modern dentist hates the worst way to draw a tooth. Nevertheless if the modern dentist must draw the tooth he has a particular forceps for a particular tooth, and a cruel hearted and cold looking thing it is too. It puts you so in mind of a successful financier. When you brace yourself in the iron chair and take a tight grip on the arms of it and make up your mind you'll try to stand it and he gets that forceps well under the gum and—wait a minute; I feel so kind o' faint! Laws! Why didn't I mind my mother when she told me not to crack hick-o' nuts with my teeth? Well, anyway, you know he'll get the tooth out without doing more than take the whole top of your head off, and that only in a figurative sense.

Uncle Doc had one implement that did for every tooth, big and little, front and back. It wasn't a forceps; it was a turnkey. The real old folks know what that is and will say so with the cold chills running over them. But you've never seen one, and many a man that you would call old has never seen one. It's something like a canthook. The loosely riveted piece that curves slips over the tooth and catches on the inside; the solid cam bears on the outside gum; the operator turns the handle. Let's not talk about it. Something has got to give. Maybe the tooth will come out; maybe it will break off; maybe the jaw will fracture. All those are details. The main point is that if the operator twists the handle something has got to give, and that's all there is about it.—Eugene Wood in Success Magazine.
