THE REFLECTOR PIANO CONTEST.

More Candidates Wanted and Now is a Good Time to Enter.

The Reflector contest is going some, and every day it grows more interesting. It was just two weeks ago that the contest started, and in that time some of the candidates have been doing active work, securing a good number of votes. All of them can do the same thing if they will just work, and there is plenty of time for new candidates to enter now and catch up with those in the lead.

Remember the prize is something worth working for. On Christmas eve The Reflector will give the handsome baby upright Boudoir piano, now on exhibition at the music room of Fineman & White, to the person who has the largest vote in this popularity contest. This piano is no toy, but an elegant instrument, equal in tone and volume to the best made. All who have been to examine it are delighted with it. Even if you do not get a large enough vote to win the piano, every contestant will be paid a cash commission according to the number of subscribers secured for The Reflector, so the work done will not be thrown away.

We want more contestants to enter the race, and every one of them work earnestly to get new subscribers for The Reflector and make collections from those who are already subscribers. The best worker will get the prize, but all of them will be paid for what they do. Now do not hold back longer, but enter the race and get to work, and those already in it work all the harder.

Here is the standing of the vote today, but some contestants have votes not yet turned in:

Miss Mary Johnson	10,000
Miss Lottie Blow	6,000
Miss Mavis Belle Evans	4,050
Miss Lillie R. Tucker	3,500
James Tingle	2,050
Quinerly School	1,225
Miss Jessie Hodges	1,000
Miss Christine Johnson	1,000
Mrs. John Cheek	1,000
Miss Beulah Mumford	1,000

Go out among your friends or write to them, get them to subscribe to The Reflector and vote for you.

Quinerly school, near Grifton, is one of the new candidates. The friends of any school or church can enter them for the race.

AYDEN ITEMS.

Newsy Notes From a Hustling Town Briefly Told.

Ayden, N. C., Oct. 16, 1909.
At her home on Thursday evening Miss Olivia Berry entertained in honor of her guest, Miss Essa Eerebee, of Camden. At eight thirty the many guests began to arrive. It was quite a merry crowd 'till eleven o'clock. Many excellent selections of instrumental music were given by Misses Blanche Cannon and Jimmie Davis which were much enjoyed by all. At 10 o'clock refreshments were served.

It is a well known fact that C. V. Cannon will be married on the 20th of Oct.

J. B. Booth left Friday afternoon for his home in Oxford. We all wish him a pleasant trip. Misses Mattie Johnston and Rosa Lee Skinner spent Thursday in Greenville.

Quite a number of people went from Ayden to the show Wednesday.

The carpenters are doing some rapid work on the new M. E. church. If they keep up the same pace they will soon have the church completed and ready for use.

The fun has begun when the horse business starts up. R. H. Wingate has some very pretty stock on hand.

Everybody is cordially invited to attend the young men's Baraca class at the Christian church on Sunday morning at 9:45. You are a stranger but once only. Rev. C. M. Morton will fill his regular appointment at the Christian church at Ayden, on Sunday morning.

Watch Glenn & Gentry Win.

If you want to sell your tobacco high come to the Ayden warehouse; Glenn & Gentry will send you home happy. Here are some sales made for farmers the past week, just watch them:

CHAPEL HILL NOTES.

Chapel Hill, N. C., Oct. 15, 1909.

The one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of the founding of the university was celebrated here Tuesday, October 12th, with fitting commemorative exercises in Memorial Hall. The address of the occasion was delivered by Dr. S. C. Mitchell, the distinguished president of the university of South Carolina. Hon. T. W. Bickett, attorney-general of North Carolina, made a characteristically strong address in behalf of the alumni of the university. Mr. Chas. W. Tillett, Jr., responded most happily for the student body. President Francis Venable made his annual report to the alumni which showed the university, in spite of its limited resources, to be in a decidedly progressive condition. Telegrams of congratulation were received from alumni associations from New York to Florida.

Dr. Joseph Hyde Pratt, professor of economic geology and State geologist, and Dr. Archibald Anderson attended the Southern Appalachian good roads convention recently held at Asheville. Dr. Pratt was elected president of the convention and Dr. Henderson, in an address as representative of the university, showed the vital relation that the university sustains to the good roads movement and the economic needs of the State.

Prof. Edward K. Graham represented the university at the inauguration of President A. L. Lowell, of Harvard university. In the procession of universities and colleges, arranged according to the date of foundation, the university of North Carolina was number 46 in a line of 195, preceded by 29 foreign universities and 16 American universities. Provided for by the constitution in 1776; chartered by the legislature in 1789; and founded by Davie on October 12, 1792; and opened to receive Hinton James, the first student, in 1795, the University of North Carolina is in point of service the oldest state university in the country.

Pitt County has 16 representatives at the university this year. The Pitt County Club, an organization which takes its name from the county of its members, will hold its meeting this week and elect officers for the new year.

Mrs. Blount, formerly of Chocowinity, is now matron of university.

A Large Family.

A. A. Smith, who lives near Grifton, dropped in Friday to get a Reflector subscription receipt, and while here told us there are four generations of his people living. He says his father, J. B. Smith, now living at Clay Root, is 76 years old, and had married three times. He had 11 children, all born by his first wife, and 10 of them are now living. There are also 50 grand-children and 5 great-grand-children. This is certainly a large family.

Does Farming Pay.

James Lewis, a young man of Chicod township, planted one acre of tobacco on land rented from Israel Edwards, and his crop weighed, when ready for market, 964 pounds. He sold it at the Star Warehouse in Greenville for $231.62. After paying all expenses of cultivation, rent, etc., he had the nucleus of a very nice little bank account to his credit. Go thou and do likewise.

WINTERVILLE ITEMS.

Newsy Notes From Our Hustling Neighbor.

Winterville, N. C., Oct. 16 1909.

Rev. Mr. Bridgers, of Ayden, was in town Friday.

J. E. Green returned from Williamston Thursday.

Rev. T. H. King held a series of meetings at Cove City last week. He reports a good meeting.

Miss Venie Crawford and Mrs. Lissie Fincent went to Greenville Friday.

W. L. Bailey, relief agent for the A. C. L. railroad company, returned to Norfolk Friday.

J. D. Cox returned home Friday from South Carolina.

F. A. Edmundson went to Greenville Friday.

We are glad to learn that Robert Dixon, who had an attack of appendicitis a few days ago, is out again.

Rev. T. H. King has been attending the Baptist association at Greenville this week.

Misses Bessie and Lillie Owens, who have been in school here reviewing their studies, returned to their home at Saratoga this week to begin teaching.

There will be services in the Baptist church tomorrow morning and night.

A series of meetings will begin at the Baptist church Monday night, November 1st. The pastor will be aided by Rev. G. T. Watkins, pastor of the First Baptist church in Goldsboro.

The debate in the society hall Friday night was one of the best the Vance Literary society has had this year. The boys had something to say and said it. The query was, "Resolved, That tobacco is more injurious than intoxicants."

A letter was received from Bruton Bryan a few days ago, stating that he went deer hunting, and killed a large buck. He said it was dear meat, for he was very tired afterwards.

People are still bringing cotton here to sell. We understand that it is selling well.

Mr. Oglesby carried his child to the hospital at Kinston Friday. We hope the child a speedy recovery.

The lecture in the school auditorium Thursday night, delivered by Rev. R. A. McFarland, was excellent. His subject was: "Despise not the day of little things." He said: "All things come from little things, all things depend on little things. Do not rush too fast to leave little things. Be not content to remain in the little things too long." We hope that it will be our privilege to hear Mr. McFarland again, for he is a good speaker.

On the fifth page of this paper will be found advertisements of A. C. L., N. & S., and S. A. L. Railways and Chesapeake Line Steamers. Some very attractive excursion rates are offered in these advertisements. Look them over.

Good public roads will pay a larger return than any other investment the people can make.

The season for chapped lips is coming on. But it is hard to keep the chaps away from them any time when they are pretty.

Never mind! there is no law against persimmon beer, and that beats the "near" kind any day. It is almost time for it, too.

Even if what Peary says about Cook should be true, his conduct so far has been such that he could not get many people to believe it.

Why not take the testimony of the Esquimo dogs in the Cook-Peary controversy? It would be about as good as some of the other that has come out.

There is no occasion for Cook to lose any sleep over what Peary says, as he has already received the honors and is reaping the cash. That is what makes Peary so mad.

The announcement that cotton mills throughout the country have decided upon a curtailment of production, thus taking employment for a part of the time from a great number of operatives, does not sound in keeping with the claim of returning prosperity.

The Reflector very much appreciates a copy of a large railroad map of North Carolina prepared by Clerk H. C. Brown, of the State Corporation Commission. This map shows the location of every railroad in the State, both commercial and lumber, as well as indicates where new lines are proposed. It is a useful map.

Supporting the Home Paper.

The New Bern Daily Sun is moved to say:

"There are concerns in New Bern who advertise in papers in other places who never carry a line in their home papers, and still these same ones are usually asking favors of their home papers, and the most apt to criticize and find fault."

Unfortunately what the Sun says is too true, and it applies to more places than New Bern. Some of the citizens who do that mean well, or they think they do, and some will acknowledge their error if they are convinced of it while others will get huffy. We doubt not there are citizens of New Bern who think that New Bern ought to have a paper three times better than any there, but when they are pinned down it will be found that they neither subscribe to nor advertise in the paper. If all citizens were just like them

New Bern would have no paper at all much less one that is as representative as those now in the field endeavoring and hoping one day to develop into truly good newspapers.

A newspaper publisher makes just as good a newspaper as his receipts from subscriptions and advertisements will warrant him in making. It is always a publisher's ambition to get out a creditable sheet but he cannot do so on wind, and hot air certainly won't take the place of money to pay expenses.

The better a newspaper is supported, the better paper it will be. It represents just the amount of public spirit there is in a town, and sometimes it represents a good deal more.

Many a knocker of a daily paper couldn't get out a weekly sheet if one were turned over to him, but sometimes friendly critics make good suggestions which publishers appreciate and profit by. It is the citizen who wants to help you build up that is a welcome kicker, but the fellow with a grouch and free advice that hasn't got anything in it and who doesn't show up any long green to pay for getting out the paper, is the individual that the publisher places on his list of undesirable citizens.

Some times it is a good idea to knock the knockers so they can see themselves as others see them. The man who subscribes and advertises in his home paper helps himself, helps his town, and helps the paper. The knocker should at least contribute something to a paper's assets before he undertakes to knock, or else he is doing business without a license. - Wilmington Star.

THE RIDDLE OF SLEEP

A Mystery That the Mind of Man Is Unable to Penetrate.

THE CAVERN OF MORPHEUS.

It is Pitch Black as Far as Human Understanding Goes, For We Know No More About It Than We Do About Its Twin Mystery, Death.

When all is written, how little we know of sleep! It is a closing of the eyes, a disappearance, a wondering return. In uneasy slumber, in dreamless dead rest, in horrid nightmare or in ecstasies of somnolent fancies the eyes are blinded, the body is abandoned, while the inner essence is known not where. We have no other knowledge of sleep than we have of death. In delirium or coma or trance, no less than in normal sleep and in dissolution, the soul is gone. In these it returns, in that it does not come again, or so we ignorantly think.

Yet when I reflect on my death I forget that I have encountered it many times already and find myself none the worse. I forget that I sleep. The fly has no shorter existence than man's. We bustle about for a few years with ludicrous importance, as butterflies buzz at the window panes. They, too, may imagine themselves of infinite moment in this universe we share with them. But this is to take no account of the prognostics of sleep. There is something hidden, something secret, some unfathomed mystery whose presence we feel, but cannot verify; some permeative thought insistently moving in our hearts, some phosphorescence that glows we know not whence through our shadowy atoms.

Neither sleep itself nor half its promises nor mysteries have been plumbed. It is the mother of superstitions and of miracles. In dreams we may search the surface powers of the freed soul. Visions in the night are not all hallucinations; voices in the night are not all mocking. There is a prophet dwells within the mind—not of the mind, but deeper throned in obscurity.

The brain cannot know of this holy presence nor of its life in sleep. The brain is mortal and untrustworthy, a phonograph and a camera for audible and palpable existence. Strike it a blow in childhood so that it ceases its labors and awake it by surgery after forty years and it will repeat the infantile action or word it last recorded and will take up its task on the instant, making no account of the intermediate years. They are nonexistent to it. Yet to that hidden memory those diseased years are not blank. It knows, it has recorded, though the brain has slept. And in hypnotic or psychic trance, when that wonderful ruler is released from the prison of the body, it can speak through the atom-bent machinery of the flesh and tell of things man himself could not know because of his paralyzed brain. This ruler is not asleep in sleep, nor in delirium is it delirious, and in death is it dead? Through all the ages it has been our sphinx, which we have interrogated in vain. It joins not in our laughter nor our tears. We have fancied it with immobile, brooding features of utmost knowledge and wisdom and sorrow. It has asked us but one question, nor from the day of Oedipus unto today have we answered rightly, so that we die of our ignorance. It is Osiris living in us. It is the unknown God to whom we erect our altars, the fire in the tabernacle, the presence behind the veil. Not in normal wakefulness at least will it answer our queries, but in sleep sometimes it will speak. And it may possibly be that at last, after all these centuries, we are learning how to question it and in hypnotic trance and in the fearful law of suggestion are discovering somewhat of its mystery and how to employ it for our worldly good. Yet to its essential secret we are no closer than our forefathers were.

We may define dreams and nightmare, coma and swoon and trance with what terms we will, search their physical reasons and learn to guide and guard, yet we know no more of them than of electricity. We may begin to suspect that telepathy and clairvoyance and occult forces of the soul are not superstitious fancies, and we may even empirically classify and study and direct them. Yet the soul itself is no nearer our inquisition. Though we should know of its reality, though our finite minds should fathom the infinitude, of what benefit would it be? Would it modify our beliefs or our hopes or our faiths? Would it dictate one action to our passionate lives? There would be no change in human nature and no reforms of the world. We are the children of our fathers, and our children will tread the prehistoric paths. Dreams are our life, whether we wake or sleep. We drowse through existence, awaking and dying and being reborn daily, ever tormented and unamazed, and our thousand slumberous deaths we call restorative sleep—sleep that restores our physical being, building up where we have torn down, recreating what we destroy.

Black-pitch black, indeed—is the cavern of Morpheus. Faith peoples it with varied legions and builds its chaos into myriad forms. Nightly we enter it and drain the Lethean air and forget; and daily we return with rejoicings, babbling of dreams that were not dreamed, and finally we enter for the last time and drain somewhat more deeply the essence of ecstasy and awake no more and no more return to the autumn dyed skies of the dawn. And yet we shall dream.—Atlantic Monthly.

SEWING NEEDLES.

How They Are Fashioned From Coils of Fine Steel Wire.

We are so accustomed to seeing the little steel sewing needle in everyday use that we accept its presence as a matter of course, quite as if it grew on a tree like an apple.

It is true that needles have always been used, but not always in their present form. In times when skins of animals were worn for clothing the needle was made of fishbone, bone or ivory, without an eye and of goodly size and strength, in order to pierce the skins easily.

Since the latter part of the fourteenth century steel needles have been made. Various are the kinds and sizes which are now required for everyday use by a world of people for sewing by hand, by machine, for packing, upholstery and leather work, wonderful needles for surgical purposes and many others.

The material used in the manufacture of the needle consists of fine steel wire, which is supplied in coils. These coils are cut with powerful shears into lengths, each sufficient for two needles.

Several thousand of these lengths are placed together in a bundle, heated to red heat and then quickly straightened by pressure and rolling.

These straightened lengths are then pointed at both ends on a revolving grindstone. A grinder will point as many as 100,000 needles in a day, while machinery invented for the same purpose will point three times as many as a skilled workman.

Next comes the eyeing of the needles. You will remember that each length of wire referred to is sufficient for two needles. At the center of each length, therefore, is stamped the grooved and rounded impression of two needle heads, end to end, and then perforated by steel punches.

Through the double eyeholes thus formed (of say 100 needles at a time) is threaded fine wire, giving an appearance of a two edged comb. The needles are held rigid and then broken apart with comparative ease between the eyeholes.

The needles are next hardened and tempered by being subjected to red heat, plunged into an oil bath, reheated again and gradually cooled.

After this they must be scoured and polished by friction combined with soft soap, oil and emery powder. Washing, drying and more polishing follow. In fact, there seems to be no end to the polishing and finishing processes. But when the work is finally completed the needles are as near perfection as modern machinery and human skill can make them.—Exchange.

George Washington's Lottery.

The great Father of His Country was on at least one occasion the originator of a lottery, the like of which at the present day would be forbidden to send its tickets through the mails. That George Washington was interested in such a scheme is proved by a number of tickets still in existence which bear his august name. It was the Mountain Road lottery of which George was the promoter, and it is, of course, unnecessary to state that Washington himself did not financially profit from it. All the funds raised by the lottery were spent in building the road through Cumberland gap, near Fredericksburg, Va. Originally the lottery tickets which Washington signed were worth $1 each. Now, because they bear his signature, they are easily sold for $50 apiece, though it is certain that not one of them will ever draw a prize.

A Lesson in Grammar.

Hetty's uncle, who was a school-teacher, says the Lutheran, met her on the street one beautiful May day and asked her if she was going out with the Maying party.

"No, I ain't going."

"Oh, my little dear," said her uncle, "you must not say 'I ain't going.' You must say 'I am not going.' And he proceeded to give her a little lesson in grammar. "You are not going. He is not going. We are not going. You are not going. They are not going. Now, can you say all that, Hetty?"

"Sure I can," she replied, making a courtesy. "There ain't nobody going."

Grecian Jokes on Physicians.

Among the jests of the ancient Greek humorists are many on the physician. Some of them are characterized by an almost American extravagance. The following are from a popular Greek anthology: "Diophantus dreamed that he saw Hermogenes, the physician, and he never awoke again, even though he wore an amulet."

"Marcus, the doctor, called yesterday on the marble Jupiter; but, though he was Jupiter and though he was marble, his funeral takes place to-day."

WEDDINGS IN BELGIUM.

The Necessary Civil Ceremony Performed in the Town Hall.

If you want to get married in Belgium you must go to the town hall of the particular city in which you happen to reside and take one of the chief parts in a brief ceremony, which alone legalizes your matrimonial union. You can go to church before or after the little bit of civic business, as you choose, but nothing that priest or minister can do for you, however soothing to your feelings or your conscience, can give any recognized binding to your wedding vows as far as the law of this country goes. In most of the ancient and wonderfully interesting town halls of Belgium there is a "salle des mariages," a spacious chamber specially reserved for nuptial ceremonies. At Antwerp the town hall is more to be admired for its interior than for its exterior. The facade is in the renaissance style by Cornelis de Vriendt and dates from 1581.

The Antwerp town hall occupies the whole of the west side of the square of old guild houses and in its center rises to a height of 183 feet. A statue of the Virgin Mary is in a niche in the center of the top story.

Half a dozen wedding parties await the advent of the deputy mayor each morning. The procession of brides and their friends leads into the marriage chamber, the walls of which are appropriately covered with five frescoes.

The several wedding parties approach the mayor's table in turn, the unmarried parties remaining seated in the body of the hall, watching their predecessors. The proceedings are very brief. The deputy mayor examines a few papers put forward by the father or other representative of the bride, asks one or two low voiced questions, smiles at the bride, nods to the groom, signs a certificate and informs them that they are man and wife. Then he touches a button on his desk, and from an adjacent apartment an organ sounds a few bars of a wedding march, during which the married pair and company file out of the chamber, and the deputy mayor murmurs the French equivalent of "next" to one of the two little pages attending him—handsome youngsters in court dress. Another wedding party stands before a desk; a repetition of the short proceedings; once more the tap on the button and the wedding march on the organ. Out they go, blushing and smiling, and No. 3 marriage begins. In less than half an hour the six marriages had been made. Nothing more and nothing less happens, no matter what the rank or position of the contracting parties may be, except that the mayor's pages can be employed to carry the bride's train if she happens to be wearing one.—Washington Star.

directions were obeyed. During that time he would stay in the basement alone; every door was to be locked, and on no account was he to be disturbed until he gave them the signal. So they left him in absolute darkness and carried out his directions.

On Sunday morning the queer old man emerged from the darkness so confident of his success that he refused to accept the money which was his due then and there, but insisted that Professor Henry mail the check to him in Philadelphia the following week.

"Now you can leave your food in the basement, and it won't be touched. And I won't take a cent if you are troubled with rats," were his parting words.

Cheese and cake were directly placed about the building to tempt the rats. Morning after morning they were found as they had been left, and from that day to this the Smithsonian institution has never been seriously troubled with rats. And no one has ever found out the secret of the "rat king's" method.—Youth's Companion.

THE RAT KING.

His Method Was Successful, but It Remains a Secret.

In the early sixties of the last century the Smithsonian institution was infested with rats. Nothing in the building seemed to be rat proof. They ate skins cured with arsenical soap or table linen or the contents of Professor Henry's pantry without discrimination. Every one in the city, from Professor Henry to the bootblack, had one subject in common, and that was "rats."

As Professor Henry, who lived in the east end of the building, was listening to an account of the ruin wrought in his home during that day Professor Spencer Baird walked in and said, just as if he had been following every word of the family conversation, "I have just been told that there is a man in Philadelphia who can rid this place of rats."

Professor Henry's eyes expressed interest and incredulity at the same moment.

"I have his address here," went on the assistant secretary. "He calls himself the 'ratten konig' and won't take a cent if a rat remains and has"—

"We'll send for him if it takes our last thousand cents to do it!" said Professor Henry and laughingly predicted the repetition of the famous old tale of the Pied Piper of Hamelin.

Several days later the "rat king" appeared in Washington. He was almost as short as he was broad and wore clothes too loose for description; they had no shape. He carried a large oilcloth sack and a covered basket. His penetrating blue eyes were almost covered by shaggy eyebrows, and his blood-hair had not been cut, but haggled. His manner was short and brisk, and he went straight to the point, talking to Professor Henry in German.

He declared that not a rat would be in the building three days hence if his Washington's High Priced Shad.

Washington's steward was a man named Fraunces, who liked good living and with whom Washington continually quarreled about the marketing. One time he bought a shad in February, and as Washington saw it coming into the dining room he was charmed and asked what fish it was.

"It is a shad," replied the steward, "a very fine shad. It was the only one in the market, and I bought it for you."

"But what did you pay for it?" said Washington sternly.

"It is a very fine shad," continued the steward, "and it is cooked to a turn."

"But I want to know the price—the price!"

"It cost $3," stammered out Fraunces.

"Take it away," said Washington as he raised his hand; "take it away. It shall never be said that I set such an example of luxury and extravagance."

And with that he drove the steward out of the room, and the shad was eaten in the servants' kitchen.

She Liked Silk Hosiery.

Susan B. Anthony was a woman of simple taste in dress, but her close friends knew of one pretty feminine vanity that she always held to. She had a weakness for silk stockings. Being pressed on one occasion for an explanation of what most women at one time regarded as an unnecessary extravagance, she laughingly exclaimed: "Oh, I just love 'em! They are an inspiration. If I have my silk stockings on when I rise to make an address I feel just as if I am walking among the clouds. They help me to soar away on flights of eloquence. I wouldn't be without them."

ABOARD A SUBMARINE.

The Crew, the Work and the Kind of Life the Men Lead.

Life aboard a submarine is not so unpleasant or dangerous as one might imagine, but it is entirely different from that led on other types of ships.

The crew, usually consisting of two officers and fourteen men, is selected from volunteers after a most rigid medical examination. Service rarely extends beyond a period of two years, and real work on a submarine is limited to about three weeks in the summer and one in the winter. During the remainder of the time the men live on a "parent" ship or on shore. The boat is, however, put through the various evolutions once every week.

The first impression on entering a submarine is one of heat, the air being rather close and heavy, but the men soon become accustomed to it. Standing room space is about six and one-half feet, and toward both ends the boat tapers away almost to a point. There are no portholes. The hatchway in the conning tower is the only aperture. Under water electric light is used. There are ventilators, but when the boat dives they are shut off with a cap.

Life on board a submarine is essentially "in common." The way men and many objects are crammed together in a narrow space is almost miraculous.

Cooking is done in an electric oven, and no foods which have a strong or disagreeable smell are used. Of course smoking is allowed only when on the surface and then on the bridge. Owing to the character of the men selected discipline is perfect.

There is scarcely any noise in a submarine when submerged. The greatest depth the boat descends does not exceed thirty feet. At that depth her speed is about 8 knots. The air is quite "breathable" for four hours, but in case of emergency the crew can remain closed in for seventy hours without danger.

The men love the life. With the officers they are as one family, sharing everything equally, including the dangers, which are not much to speak of, provided every one does his duty. When the weather is fair there is very little rolling. In rough weather the men escape knocking about by holding on to "steadying lines."—New York Press.

JURIES IN ENGLAND.

They Get Through Their Work Quickly and With Little Fuss.

The working of the British jury system exhibits a marked contrast with that of our own. It is possible that my experience in British courts was exceptional, but in not a single instance did I see a juror challenged or rejected. In all of the courts requiring juries the necessary number of men were present, and they were sworn in without question. In the sheriff's deputy court in Scotland the presiding judge gave notice to the jury that he expected to adjourn the court at 2 o'clock and stated that if they could all remain until that hour he would at once dismiss the men who had been called for a second panel. The jurors conferred together and decided to remain till 1 o'clock, whereupon the judge notified the other men to appear at 12:30. The one jury impaneled for the morning session rendered six verdicts in cases involving prosecutions for thefts, fraud and burglary.

In the court of quarter sessions at Taunton, England, I saw a single jury in one day render eleven verdicts. I found that it was customary in the several sorts of court that I attended for the same jury to act in successive cases. In no instance did I see a jury leave their seats to make up their verdict. Usually the issue before them was made so plain that all who gave attention knew in advance what the decision would be. I made note of an exceptional instance of delay when the court was forced to wait nine minutes for the report of the jury. In this case the judge who gave the instructions was himself in doubt as to what the verdict ought to be.

A Scottish jury consists of fifteen persons, and a majority may render a verdict. In England the number is twelve, and unanimity is required. But I noted no difference as to practical results in the two countries. The twelve men in the English jury were as prompt and certain in their action as were the eight out of fifteen in the Scottish jury.—McClure's Magazine.

A Hot Spot in Mexico.

"I believe that Mojave, Mexico, is the hottest spot in the world in the daytime," said an Arizona man. "I have seen the thermometer register as high as 120 degrees in the late afternoon. It was so hot that the natives who ventured on the streets would bug the foot wide shade of the low buildings like lichen clings to tree bark. But here's the funny part of it: When the sun sets it begins to cool off, and at night it is positively necessary to sleep under blankets. The nights are delightfully cool, and I presume it is because one is able to get a good sleep that it is possible to live in that climate."—Washington Post.

SAVED BY A PANTHER.

The Fierce Brute Proved a Good Temperance Lecturer.

Governor Jennings of Indiana used to tell a story of his early electioneering days in which he said that a panther may be a good temperance lecturer. Colonel W. M. Cockrum repeats the story in his "Pictorial History of Indiana." The incident happened when Governor Jennings was traveling over the thinly settled hills of Dearborn county, electioneering for congress.

He met a man with whom he was well acquainted, by name Tom Oglesby, who was just getting over a protracted debauch. Jennings began asking Tom about his political views. The half sober fellow looked at him and said:

"Jen, don't you think a man just out of a panther fight ought to be electioneered in a different manner from this? I am just from the grave. I was awakened a little while ago by a panther putting leaves and grass over me. It kept this up until I was entirely covered. I lay still for awhile and then raised up and found the panther gone. I knew I was in danger, so I took my gun and climbed into a tree to see what the panther intended to do."

"In a short time I heard her coming, and she had her kittens with her. Every few steps she would jump as if catching something, and the little ones would go through the same maneuvers. She kept this up until she got near to the bed of leaves she had covered over me and then made a spring on the pile. She looked just as I felt when I found that I was covered up for dead. She then started in to investigate the cause of my disappearance, and before she located me I shot her."

Jennings, after hearing this, said:

"Well, Tom, I believe I should treat you as one from the dead and that you should begin your life from this point. We were schoolboys together. I know you are a capable, civil engineer and well educated, and if you cease drinking I will see that you have a good position on the surveying corps."

Tom Oglesby did quit drinking. Jennings was elected and kept his promise to his old friend, who became one of the well known engineers of the United States.

ENDOCARDITIS.

Forms and Dangers of This Affection of the Heart.

By "endocarditis" is meant an inflammation of the endocardium or membrane lining the cavities of the heart. It is caused by the presence of poisonous material, usually of living germs, in the blood and is therefore most often associated with or a consequence of some general disease, such as rheumatism, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria or pneumonia.

There are the usual two forms found in most diseases, acute and chronic, the last following upon the first, and there are also the more important divisions into simple and malignant endocarditis.

In the simple kind the lining membrane of the heart presents numerous points of inflammation—little red areas with a tuft or ball of fibrin, or clotted blood, in the center. These inflamed spots are not large, and the clots attached to them are also small in the simple form. But in malignant endocarditis the area inflamed is much more extensive, and the clots are larger, sometimes almost filling the cavity of the heart. In some cases of malignant endocarditis, then called ulcerative endocarditis, the inflammation is so acute as to cause ulceration of the affected parts.

The dangers of endocarditis are twofold—danger to the heart itself and danger to the brain or lungs or one of the other organs of the body. The danger to the heart is from injury to one of the valves. This almost always happens except in the mildest form of endocarditis, because the inflammation most often affects the edges of the valves. Even when the disease subsides without giving any sign of valvular injury at first, this often appears later through a fibrous thickening or scarlike contraction of the part originally inflamed. This interferes with the complete closure of the valve, and the result is a heart permanently crippled by valvular disease.

When there is actual ulceration of the valves injury is inevitable.

The danger to the brain or other organ is from detachment of the little blood clot from the inflamed spot and its carriage into the general circulation, where it plugs one of the smaller arteries. If this happens in the brain it gives rise to symptoms of apoplexy.

The first principle of treatment is absolute rest in bed, and this inaction must be insisted upon long after the patient feels well and is well, and for the rest of life anything that may cause heart strain must be carefully avoided.—Youth's Companion.

Well Bred.

"That's a well bred child." "You bet she is. Never corrects her parents publicly, no matter what the exigencies of the case may be."—Pittsburg Post.

ROSEBERY'S TIPS.

The Traveler Wouldn't Take It and Voted Himself a Chump.

"When Lord Rosebery was a young man," said a London sporting man, "he was on a journey to a race meeting at Ayr and for his companion in the railway carriage had a remarkable pushing species of commercial traveler, who attempted to force a speaking acquaintance. Seeing his lordship perusing the 'racing calendar,' he 'broke earth' with the remark: 'Racing is a great institution. Suppose you're going to the Ayr meeting?'"

"I am going as far as Ayr," replied his lordship.

"Pity young swells get fleeced by blacklegs. Some noblemen, I hear, drop fortunes on the turf."

"Indeed!"

"Do a bit myself sometimes—a tenner or a pony's about my cut. Know anything good for today worth my white touching?"

"I am not a tipster."

"Beg pardon. Saw you reading the racing calendar. Thought you might know."

"Well," replied his lordship, "I give you the straight tip will it be of service to you?"

"Depends if I fancy it."

"Put your tenner or pony on Lord Rosebery's Chevroler for the Welter cup."

"Not for Joseph! I never back Lord Rosebery's horses. They say he's a regular chumpkin."

"Indeed! Perhaps they're right. However, you asked me. I can only add that I heard Lord Rosebery himself tell what you term a chumpkin to back his horse."

"Depend upon it, if it was all right he would not let you overhear his conversation. Mum would then be his game. Why, there's a lot in that race. I'll bet you a pony Lord Rosebery don't win it."

"Really! I am not accustomed to bet in railway carriages with strangers."

"There's my card. Fact is you ain't game to bet."

"I think you'll lose your money. But, as you challenge me, let it be a bet. You'll see me in the stewards' enclosure at the course. I have no cards with me."

"Agreed! It's a bet. I bet you an even pony against Chevroler for the Welter cup. But what's your name, young fellow?"

"Primrose. Sometimes I'm otherwise addressed."

"All right, young Primrose. Pay and receive after the race."

The companions separated at the station. Chevroler won in a canter, and the commercial traveler received the following morning a short note by a messenger from the stewards' stand: "Mr. Primrose (Lord Rosebery) would feel obliged by Mr. — handing to his servant £25, which his lordship will have much pleasure in forwarding as a donation to the Commercial Travelers' Orphan asylum."

"The 'bagman' paid his money, looking very crestfallen, and was heard to ejaculate: 'Done! Who on earth would have dreamed that the good looking, affable young fellow, whom I imagined was a chumpkin, was in fact none other than the Earl of Rosebery, giving me a good, honest tip about his own horse, by which I was fool enough to lose £25? Anyway, he's a regular trump, and he's right. I'm the chumpkin after all!'"—Pearson's Weekly.

Just the Thing.

The poet took his silver mounted pistol from the bureau drawer.

"What are you going to do with that?" asked his timid wife.

"I'm going to use it to drive the wolf from the door," he answered.

Ten minutes later the pawbroker had advanced $2 on it.—Chicago News.
