TWO SOUTHERN FEDERALISTS.

LINCOLN AND JOHNSON OF OLD N. C. STOCK.

An Interesting Story by Mr. Gaston Lichtenstein About the Two Men

How many of my readers know that when General Lee surrendered at Appomattox the victorious Federal government had at its head both a native Southern President and a native Southern Vice-President? It is an odd but noteworthy fact, and, stranger still, both were from North Carolina stock. The Old North State boasts of having contributed more soldiers to the Confederate cause than any other Commonwealth, and, if an honor it be, it can also boast of having a man on the opposite side whose duty as chief executive was to command the Federal forces in their attempt to kill and maim as many North Carolinians as possible.

Abraham Lincoln is a saint or a sinner, a big man or a small one, according to the viewpoint of the individual thinker, or, of person who lets other people do his thinking. He was a human being, and, like all of us, possessed weaknesses. But, there were Southerners who knew him in life, and they did not have the opinion now heard in certain quarters of our Southland: Alexander H. Stephens, the Confederate Vice-President, thought well of Mr. Lincoln, and deplored the assassination as soon as he heard the news, not because a man had been killed, but because he knew that the South would suffer thereby.

A few years ago there appeared a book entitled "The Genesis of Lincoln." It will be remembered that even the best biographies of the ill-fated man contain unsatisfactory accounts of the events surrounding his birth. James H. Cathey, who had heard the North Carolina tradition, determined to "clear up" the mystery, and he has brought forth some interesting evidence. This much has been established, that Abraham Lincoln's father lived in the Old North State, that the paternal stock was capable of producing a President of the United States, for it had already given to the world men possessed with intellects of the higher kind, that his mother moved to Kentucky very shortly before his birth (if not immediately afterwards.)

Captain William A. Enloe, a relative of Lincoln's father, relates the tradition so as to produce the impression that Nancy Hank's son was actually born in North Carolina. The great mass of evidence, however, is to the effect that the mother went to Kentucky shortly before the birth of the child.

As to Andrew Johnson, I do not think there is any doubt about his having emigrated at an early age from the neighborhood of Raleigh to the Western mountains. He settled in Greenville, Tenn., where he worked at the tailor's trade. The old shop is still standing, with worn sign above the door. This weather-beaten relic bears the name of A. Johnson, and inhabitants of the place told me that he had made the sign himself.

About a year ago I visited Eastern Tennessee and talked with the old people. One man said that, at the outbreak of the Civil War he heard Johnson deliver a speech which had the effect of making many ally themselves with the cause of the Union. A number I talked to knew him personally and they testified to his popularity, that in later years he did not forget to be friendly to those who were his associates in the early days of struggle.

Andrew Johnson's grandson now occupies the residence used by his forbear after his retirement from the presidency. Many mementoes are to be seen about the house. Through the kindness of the gentlemen and and his charming wife, I was permitted to inspect the table on which Johnson worked as a tailor. My attention was also directed to a bit of the first Atlantic cable, the Bible upon which he took the oath of office as the nation's chief executive, and an elaborately gotten up set of resolutions, in book form, presented to him by the common council of the city of New York.

Mr. Patterson, the present owner, is the son of the lady of the White House during Johnson's administration. He mentioned how people had visited Greenville and had written exaggerated stories about both his grandfather and his own family. Before leaving the house, I must note the thimble, a relic of sartorial activity, preserved along with the other mementoes given above, and tell my readers that the original furniture is still used.

Mrs. Patterson called to my special notice a pair of andirons, the product of the skill of a friend of Andrew Johnson, who agreed to make the set in return for an outfit of clothing. This bargain was struck late in life when it was an honor to receive handiwork from either of them.

Perhaps some facetious editor will now ask me why have I not included Napoleon, Alexander the Great and Socrates in this article as natives of North Carolina? I shall leave the proof of the place of their birth for another occasion, but I do want to say that, down in Edgecombe county where I am from, many of the inhabitants actually call it "God's country." Who knows but what the Garden of Eden may have been located there?—Gaston Lichtenstein in Richmond Times-Dispatch.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Ladies of the Book Club Desire Help to Re Establish It.

The ladies of the End of the Century Club in session on Tuesday decided to re-establish the public library for Greenville, if they can get the support and co-operation of the townspeople. The library is for the benefit of the town solely and we feel sure that every public spirited citizen—man or woman—who realize at all the value of a library to a town will help in this worthy cause.

It is the purpose of the committee in charge of this work to have some entertainments in the near future for the benefit of the library, but in the meantime, any who feel interested in its re-establishment and are willing to help us by donations, however small, may report either to Mrs. Mark Quinerly or Mrs. W. A. Bowen.

Many encouraging offers of help have been made by those who enjoyed the library in the past, but this is a matter in which all should feel equally interested and should feel it a privilege to aid.

Until we can get some room and start again the books we have on hand may be exchanged regularly each Wednesday from three until five o'clock at my home. Mrs. W. A. Bowen, Librarian.

In this connection we print the following circular sent out by the North Carolina Library Commission, which speaks for itself:

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

We all believe in public libraries. We frequently discuss the library we are going to have someday. We do not find that it is helping the boys and girls who are growing up in our town now. Will the next generation need it more than this? Will the children of the next generation be dearer to us than the boys and girls that now cheer our fireside?

WHY WE NEED A LIBRARY.

1. A public library in our community would be an influence for good every day in the week.

2. It would make the town more attractive to the class of people we want as residents and neighbors.

3. A library would be the center of our social and intellectual life, and would stimulate the growth of clubs for study and debating.

4. We need a library to carry forward the education of the children who leave school at an early age; to give them a better chance for self-education.

5. To enable adults to get an education, who have lacked or failed to make use of early opportunities.

6. To provide fresh, strong, wholesome books for young and old, rich and poor; for the teacher and the pupil, for the student and the workman.

We all want a library, for ourselves, for our neighbors, for the good of the town. Why not establish it now and be getting the goon out of it?

Parker Fountain Pen.

If you want to see something attractive, walk in at the Reflector Book Store and look at the large lot of new Parker fountain pens that have just come in. There are various styles at prices from $1 up, also the new safety pen which can be carried flat in the pocket and never leak. Parker pens have been sold here for 20 years, and people who use them know they are unequalled by any other make.

WILL BUILD NICE COURT HOUSE.

The Board of County Commissioners, at the meeting Tuesday, gave the matter of building a new court house much consideration. After looking at plans and illustrations of architects present, the board decided to set another day later in the month to consider the matter more fully. In the meantime a committee of the board will visit some other counties that have lately erected new court houses with a view of inspecting these and better arriving at the needs for Pitt county. The members of the board have the needs of the county earnestly at heart and desire to do the very best thing. The Reflector feels sure they will build a court house and a jail that will be creditable to the county. The eyes of the whole State are now on Pitt county, which is regarded as one of the best in North Carolina, and many desires are expressed to see the county take a great step forward and in building meet the needs of generations to come. We are sure the expectations of all will be met.

Greenville was the first town in this section of the State, and perhaps the first of its size any where in the State, to establish day current with its electric plant. This was done a few years ago, and has proven a great convenience. Many small enterprises in the town get their power in this way, and numerous fans, irons, and other conveniences for comfort in drug stores, offices and homes are run by electricity. The coming summer the users of day electric current will no doubt largely increase, as the convenience arising from it is found to be so great. The Reflector plant would hardly know how to get along without electric current, and many other users feel the same way about it.

The commission form of city government is getting popular. April 2nd Columbia, S. C., will vote on the question of establishing it there. So far none of our North Carolina cities have tried it, but if it proves a success in cities of other States, North Carolina will not be slow to follow the lead. We need some system in advance of the present form of government, but whether the commission form is the specific we are not prepared to say.

DO IT NOW
Greenville People Should Not Wait Until it is Too Late.

The appalling death rate from kidney disease is due in most cases to the fact that the little kidney troubles are usually neglected until they become serious. The slight symptoms give place to chronic disorders and the sufferer goes gradually into the grasp of diabetes, dropsy, Bright's disease, gravel or some other serious form of kidney complaint.

If you suffer from backache, headaches, dizzy spells; if the kidney secretions are irregular of passage and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. Help the kidneys at once.

Doan's Kidney Pills are especially for kidney disorders—they cure where others fail. Over one hundred thousand people have recommended them.

Here is one of many cases in this vicinity.

Romulus S. Butler, 219 Harvey St., Washington, N. C., says: "I am well pleased with the results that followed the use of Doan's Kidney Pills in my case and can highly recommend them to other kidney sufferers. I was subject to dull pains in my back, accompanied by sharp twinges through my joints for some time. Doan's Kidney Pills removed my trouble and benefited me in every way."

"After taking Cardui, I am now well and can recommend it to other suffering women."

Just such doubtful symptoms, as those from which Mrs. Smith suffered, are the ones for which it will pay you to take Cardui, the woman's tonic.

It is at such times, when there is nothing to show, for certain, the real cause of the trouble, that you need a tonic, to give the body strength to throw off the illness that evidently threatens.

Fire Department statistics show that some eighty per cent. of all fires are extinguished by chemical apparatus.

Nearly all fires are discovered at the start and are readily put out if means are at once available.

A stream is thrown to a distance of about fifty feet, carrying a large amount of carbonic acid gas, which excludes the oxygen and prevents combustion.

A fire cannot live if a small per cent. of carbonic acid gas is in the air.

It is forty times as efficient as water and will extinguish fires of oil, naphtha, gasoline, etc., which water only spreads.

VI—John Tullis calls on the beautiful Countess Inghemede, who warns him that her hated and notorious old husband, Count Marlanx, is conspiring against the prince.

CHAPTER VIII. LOOKING FOR AN EYE.

THE witch was haranguing her huddled audience, cursing the soldiers, laughing gleefully in the faces of her stately, scornful guests, greatly to the irritation of Baron Dangloss, toward whom she showed an especial attention.

Tullis was holding the prince in his arms. Colonel Quinnox stood before them, keeping the babbling, leering beldame from thrusting her face close to that of the terrified boy. The Countess Marlanx, pale and rigid, her wondrous eyes glowing with excitement, stood behind John Tullis.

With incredible swiftness the storm passed. Almost at its height there came a cessation of the roaring tempest, the downpour was checked, the thunder died away and the lightning trickled off into faint flashes. The sky cleared as if by magic. The exhibition, if you please, was over!

"It is the most amazing thing I've ever seen," Dangloss said over and over again.

The Countess Marlanx was trembling violently. Tullis, observing this, tried to laugh away her nervousness.

"Mere coincidence; that's all," he said. "You can't believe she brought about this storm?"

"It isn't that," she said in a low voice. "I feel as if a grave personal danger had just passed me by. Not danger for the rest of you, but for me alone. That is the sensation I have—the feeling of one who has stepped back from the brink of an abyss just in time to avoid being pushed over. I can't make you understand. See! I am trembling."

"Nerves, my dear countess—shadows! You'll be over it as soon as we are outside."

Ten minutes later the cavalcade started down the rain swept road toward the city, dry blankets having been placed across the saddles occupied by the ladies and the prince. The witch stood in her doorway, laughing gleefully, inviting them to come often.

"Come again, your highness!" she croaked sarcastically.

"The next time I come it will be with a torch to burn you alive!" shouted back Dangloss. To Tullis he added: "Gad, sir, they did well to burn witches in your town of Salem. You cleared the country of them—the pests!"

Down through the lowering shades rode the prince's party swiftly, even gayly by virtue of relaxation from the strain of a weird half hour. No one revealed the slightest sign of apprehension arising from the mysterious demonstration in which nature had taken a hand.

Truxton King, for reasons best known to himself, soon relapsed into a thoughtful, contemplative silence. Between us, he was sorely vexed and disappointed. When the gallant start was made from the glen of "dead men's bones" he found that he was to be cast utterly aside, quite completely ignored by the fair Loraine. She rode off with young Count Vos Ego without so much as a friendly wave of the hand to him.

You Ego, being an officer in the royal guard, rode ahead by order of Colonel Quinnox. Truxton, therefore, had her back in view—at rather a vexing distance, too—for mile after mile of the ride to the city. He galloped along beside the baron, a prey to gloomy considerations. What was the use? He had no chance to win her. That was for story books and plays. She belonged to another world far above his.

The baron's dry, insinuating voice broke in upon the young man's thoughts. "I think it's pretty well understood that she's going to marry him." The little old minister had been reading King's thoughts; he had the satisfaction of seeing his victim start guiltily. King managed to control himself, asking with bland interest:

"Indeed! Is it a good match, baron?" The baron smiled. "I think so. He has been a trifle wild, but I believe he has settled down. Splendid family. He is desperately in love."

"I hadn't thought much about it. Is she in love with him?"

"She sees a great deal of him," was the diplomatic answer.

"Would you mind telling me just who she is, baron?"

Dangloss was truly startled. "Do you mean, sir, that you don't know her?" he asked, almost harshly. "I don't know her name."

"And you had the effrontery to—My excellent friend, you amaze me! I know that Americans are bold; but, by gad, sir, I've always looked upon them as gentlemen. You—"

"Hold on, Baron Dangloss!" interrupted Truxton, very red in the face. "You'd better hear my side of the story first. She went to school with my sister. She knows me, but refuses to tell me who she is."

"Well, my boy, if she elects to keep you in the dark concerning her name it is not for me to betray her. Ladies in her position, I dare say, enjoy these little mysteries."

It was dusk when they entered the northern gates. Above the castle King said goodby to Tullis and the countess, gravely saluted the sleepy prince and followed Mr. Hobbs off to the heart of the city. He was hot with resentment. Either she had forgotten to say goodby to him or had willfully decided to ignore him altogether. At any rate, she entered the gates to the castle grounds without so much as an indifferent glance in his direction.

Truxton knew in advance that he was to have a sleepless, unhappy night. In his room at the hotel he found the second anonymous letter, unquestionably from the same source, but this time printed in crude, stilted letters. It had been stuck under the door.

"Leave the city at once. You are in great danger. Save yourself!"

This time he did not laugh. That it was from Olga Platanova he had no doubt. But why she should interest herself so persistently in his welfare was quite beyond him. And what, after all, could she mean by "great danger—save yourself!"

He indulged in a long spell of thoughtfulness. "No, by George, I'll not turn tail at the first sign of danger. I'll stay here and assist Dangloss in unraveling this matter. And I'll go up to that witch's hole before I'm a day older to have it out with her. I'll find out where the smoke came from, and I'll know where that eye went to." He sighed without knowing it. "By Jove, I'd like to do something to show her I'm not the blooming duffer she thinks I am."

He could not find Baron Dangloss that night nor early the next day. Hobbs, after being stigmatized as the only British coward in the world, changed his mind and made ready to accompany King to the hovel in Ganlook gap.

By noon the streets in the vicinity of the plaza were filled with strange, rough looking men, undeniably laborers. "Who are they?" demanded King.

"There's a strike on among the men building the railroad," said Hobbs.

"They'd better look out for these fellows," said King, very soberly. "I don't like the appearance of 'em. They look like cutthroats."

"Take my word for it, sir, they are. They're the riffraff of all Europe."

"I hope Baron Dangloss knows how to handle them?" in some anxiety.

In due time they rode into the somber solitudes of Ganlook gap and up to the witch's glen. Here Mr. Hobbs balked. He refused to adventure farther than the mouth of the stony ravine. Truxton approached the hovel alone, without the slightest trepidation. The goose herd grandson was driving a flock of geese across the green bowl below the cabin. The few very wide open; his heart experienced a sudden throbbless moment; his mind leaped backward to the unexplained smoke mystery of the day before. It was on the pad of his tongue to cry out to his unseen patron, to urge

A LOW, MOCKING LAUGH CAME FROM HER LIPS.

American called out to him, and a moment later the youth, considerably excited, drove his geese up to the door. While they were vainly haranguing each other the old woman appeared. Uttering shrill exclamations, she hurried down to confront King with blazing eyes. Her horrid grin of derision brought a flush to his cheek.

"I'll lay you a hundred gavvos that the kettle and smoke experiment is a fake of the worst sort," he announced. "Have it your own way—have it your own way!" she cackled.

"Tell you what I'll do—if I can't expose that trick in ten minutes I'll make you a present of a hundred gavvos."

She took him up like a flash, a fact which startled and disconcerted him not a little. Her very eagerness argued ill for his proposition.

With a low, mocking bow the shriveled hag stood aside and motioned for him to precede her into the hovel.

"A hundred gavvos is a fortune not easily to be won," said the old dame. "How can I be sure that you will pay me if you lose?"

"It is in my pocket, madam. If I don't pay, you may instruct your excellent grandson to crack me over the head. He looks as though he'd do it for a good deal less money, I'll say that for him."

"He is honest—as honest as his grandmother," cried the old woman. She bestowed a toothless grin upon him. "Now, what is it you want to do?"

"I want to go through that kitchen, just to satisfy myself of one or two things." King was looking hard at the crack in the kitchen door. Suddenly he started as if shot.

The staring, burning eye was again looking straight at him from the jagged crack in the door!

"I'll get you this time!" he shouted, crossing the room in two eager leaps. The door in his violent clutch swung open with a bang.

The owner of that mocking, phantom eye was gone!

Like a frantic dog, Truxton dashed about the little kitchen, looking in every corner, every crack, for signs of the thing he chased. The old woman was standing in the middle of the outer room, grinning at him with genuine malevolence.

"Ha, ha!" she croaked. "You fool! You fool! Search! Smell him out! All the good it will do you! Ha, ha!"

"By gad, I will get at the bottom of this!" shouted Truxton, stubborn rage possessing him. "There's some one here, and I know it. I'm not such a fool as to believe—Say! What's that? The ceiling! By the eternal, that scragging noise explains it! There's where the secret trapdoor is—in the ceiling! Within arm's reach, at that! Watch me, old woman!"

The hag was standing in the kitchen door now, still grinning evilly. She watched the eager young man pounce upon the low ceiling with a three legged stool that he had seized from the floor.

He was pounding vigorously on the sharply boarded ceiling when the sharp voice of the old woman, raised in command, caused him to lower the stool and turn upon her with gleaming, triumphant eyes. The look he saw in her face was sufficient to check his enterprise for the moment. He dropped the stool and started toward her, his arms extended to catch her swaying form. The look of the dying was in her eyes. She seemed to be crumbling before him.

He reached her in time, his strong arms grasping the frail, bent figure as it sank to the floor. As he lifted her bodily from her feet, intent upon carrying her to the open air, her bony fingers sank into his arm with the grip of death, and—could he believe his ears!—a low, mocking laugh came from her lips.

Down where the pebbly house yard merged into the mossy banks Mr. Hobbs sat tight, still staring with gloomy eyes at the dark little hut up the glen. A quarter of an hour had passed since King disappeared through the doorway. Mr. Hobbs was getting nervous.

The shiftless, lanky goose herd came forth in time and lazily drove his scattered flock off into the lower glen.

Presently Hobbs caught sight of a thin stream of smoke, rather black than blue, arising from the little chimney at the rear of the cabin. His eyes seemed to be crawling with ants.

"What's that?" he asked, peering out from under the eaves. "Smoke? No, no, no! It's a trick of the wind, I'll bet. It's a trick of the wind, I'll bet."

"It is in my pocket, madam. If I don't pay, you may instruct your excellent grandson to crack me over the head. He looks as though he'd do it for a good deal less money, I'll say that for him."

him to leave the witch to her deity and come along home, when the old woman herself appeared in the doorway—alone.

She sat down upon the doorstep, puffing away at a long pipe, her hooded face almost invisible from the distance which he resolutely held. She was no more than a black, inanimate heap of rags piled against the door jamb.

Hobbs let out a shout. The old woman arose and hobbled toward him, leaning upon a great cane.

"Where's Mr. King?" called out Hobbs.

Her arm was raised, a bony finger pointing to the treetops above her hovel.

"He's gone. Didn't you see him? He went off among the treetops. You won't see him again." She waited a moment and then went on in most ingratiating tones: "Would you care to come into my house? I can show you the road he took. You"

But Mr. Hobbs, his hair on end, had dropped the rein of King's horse and was putting boot to his own beast, whirling frantically into the path that led away from the hated, damped spot. Down the road he crashed, pursued by witches whose persistence put to shame the efforts of those famed ladies of Tam o' Shanter in the long ago. If he had looked over his shoulder he might have discovered that he was followed by a riderless horse, nothing more. But a riderless horse is a grewsome thing sometimes.

OLD TIME MANNERS.

Rules of Good Behavior in the Early Eighteenth Century.

In a work entitled "Youth's Behavior," published in 1700, there is this injunction to young gentlemen, "Put off thy Cap or Hat to persons of Desert as are Churchmen, Justices and the like, turning the Cap or Hat to thyself; making a Reverence, bowing thyself more or less according to the custom of the better bred."

In the midst of remarks which indicate the utmost refinement we come suddenly upon such directions as this: "Tis not manners as soon as you are set at Table to bawl out, 'I eat none of this, I eat none of that, I care for no Rabbit; I love nothing that tastes of Pepper, Nutmeg, Onions,' etc.

After stating that "some have been so refined in Foreign parts that they will neither be covered, nor sit with their backs to the picture of an eminent Person," the writer goes on to remark that "there are some who eat with that eagerness and impatience, they eat themselves out of breath and will pant like a broken winded Horse, but these are not to be endured."

He also warns his pupil thus: "When you are talking to any one do not continually punch him in the side, as some people do; who, after every sentence keep asking the person they are conversing with, 'Did I not tell you so?' 'What say you, sir?' and in the meantime they are every moment jogging and thrusting him with their elbows, which cannot be considered as a mark of respect."

The Order of the Shell.

Employees of the Krupp works can easily be distinguished, even when attired in their Sunday best. Every workman on his enrollment is presented with a curiously fashioned scarfpin composed of a miniature artillery shell made of platinum and set in silver. After twenty years' service he receives a second pin modeled on the same lines and mounted in gold. The higher grades of employees, including the engineers and those employed in the counting house, wear their shells in the form of sleeve links. The workmen are very proud of this distinction, which they call the Order of the Shell and wear on every possible occasion.

A Strenuous Preacher.

Whitefield, one of the founders of Methodism, who died in 1770, was a strenuous preacher. His usual program was forty hours' solid speaking each week and this to congregations measured in thousands, but he often spoke for sixty hours. This was not all, for "after his labors, instead of taking rest, he was engaged in offering up prayers and intercessions or in singing hymns, as his manner was, in every house to which he was invited."
