FOUNTAIN IS COMING.

A Progressive Town in Western Section of the County.

Fountain, N. C., March 12, 1910.

I am here at Fountain and it is so rainy and bad we can't be doing any work out of doors, besides I am almost out of business by my rheumatic affliction, so I have decided to drop you a few dots from Fountain.

Everything seems to be moving on smoothly, health generally good—in fact you can hardly get sick here. I contracted my rheumatism elsewhere. There has been some smallpox among the colored population, but most of the people have been vaccinated, and so we hope are all immune.

The school here is moving along—under the capable and efficient management of Miss Louise Outlaw and Miss Helen Cox. We can't understand how they have done so well in such a poor house with such inadequate equipment. I understand Brother Ragsdale has promised us a better house before the next term begins. "So mote it be."

I suspect there is more business being done in Fountain than ever before as indicated by the fact that a bank has recently been chartered and they contemplate the erection of the bank building in May.

Our church building is going up. We have part of the framing up, and hope to, at least, get the building completed this year. The plan of the building is for an auditorium, four small class rooms, and a dressing room and baptistry. Our Sunday school, though small, is running regularly. This is hopeful, for success comes by holding on when you almost fail.

Our town is making a record as being one of the best towns morally, to be found. I have seen very little signs of drinking. We are bothered very little, if any at all, by illicit whiskey dealing. Our people are law-abiding, and when prohibition came they submitted to it. So you see, Fountain is a desirable place to live. When we get the new bank and the new school building, and our church is finished, we will be in fine shape for advancement morally, financially, intellectually and religiously. N. H. S.

A Baffling Mystery Story.

Preparations are now being made by the New York Sunday World to print in booklet form the greatest detective story of modern times. Arrangements have not been completed with the author, hence the title of the story for the present remains unannounced. Next week's issue of this paper will give further particulars. Every one will want this great story, which is given free with the Sunday World. There will also be the words and music of a splendid song entitled "Venus, Goddess of Liberty," from "Skylark," soon to appear on Broadway.

Farmers' Union Express Thanks.

Saturday was the time for the regular meeting of the Pitt County Farmers' Union. The burning of the court house having left the Union without a place of meeting, Mayor Whedbee, with the consent of the aldermen, extended them the use of the city hall. This was much appreciated, and Secretary Little called by to ask The Reflector to extend the thanks of the Union to the mayor and aldermen for the courtesy.

STATE NEWS.

Newly Items of Interest Condensed for Busy Readers.

Charlotte, N. C., March 12.—W. M. Christenbury, a relative of Chief of Police Christenbury, of Charlotte, was run over and killed this afternoon about six o'clock by an automobile belonging to Mr. Jeremiah Goff. The negro chauffeur, George Evans, has been arrested and is in the city police station. He refuses to have anything to say about the occurrence.

Roxboro, March 12.—Seven miles northwest of Roxboro, on the farm of W. E. Farley, ten negroes met horrible death early last night, John Wagstaff, his wife and eight children being burned to ashes in their home. Not one was left to tell the gruesome tale and the only evidence of their death was the charred bones from which all flesh was burned.

Knoxville, Tenn., March 12.—Dr. Eben Alexander, dean of the law school of the University of North Carolina, died at the home of his son, Dr. Eben Alexander, Jr., in this city, yesterday. Dr. Alexander was on a leave of absence from the University and had just arrived from New York, where he attended the meeting of the Phi Beta Kappa National Society. He had been unwell for sometime, but his death was sudden and unexpected. He was 59 years of age.

The Way to Encourage Your Husband.

Do not hesitate to remind him every few days that you have nothing decent to wear—never have had since you were married.

Ask him, every little while, "Why is it we never have anything like other people; never go anywhere?"

Do not fail to tell him now and then that he has been hard up for money ever since you were married.

Do not forget to twit him with the fact that he took you out of a comfortable home and buried you in an obscure, out-of-the-way place, and that he never has time to go anywhere with you.

Do not forget to remind your husband often that your children do not dress as other children do; that the girls should take music lessons from the best teachers, and that they should have a first-class piano and other things to correspond.

Do not encourage your children to wear their clothes a long time; and never try to make them over. When a garment begins to show wear, to get a little out of date, just cast it aside and get a new one. New clothes look so much fresher and smarter than old ones, and one feels so much better in them.

Do not try to economize too much. You know it is the liberal soul that gets fat. Be generous with your husband's money. —Success Magazine.

School Invitations.

The Reflector Printing House has a beautiful line of samples for school commencement invitations, and will be glad to quote prices to schools wanting them. The samples cannot be sent out, but may be seen at this office.

DE KOVEN QUARTETTE.

In Training School Auditorium Wednesday Night.

For some years the De Kovens, who will appear in the auditorium of E. C. T. T. S. on Tuesday evening under the auspices of the End of the Century club, have been regarded as about the best representatives of the ever-popular male quartette now before the public, enjoying a remarkable record of popularity extending through season after season on the lyceum circuits.

Unlike many a similar organization, the De Kovens make a distinct specialty of the old familiar songs and it is probably to this more than any other one thing that they owe the success of their work in the South.

After hearing a group of selections from the great work it has been a delightful experience to many an audience to have the De Kovens swing suddenly into "Dixie," "Suwanee River," or "Carry Me Back to Ole, Virginia" given with a sympathy and insight rather unusual in those not to the manor born. So enthusiastically has this departure been received that the lyceum management has made it the chief feature of the work of the quartette and is advertising it as such.

Though the original organization remains unchanged, a notable addition to the company has been made in the person of Miss Anna Florence Smith, who has scored a great hit as reader and soprano soloist. Miss Smith is a very talented young woman and her voice is clear and strong and sweet.

She will sing with the quartette in one number the famous sextette from "Lucia" which has been specially arranged for the five voices. The program will conclude with a delightful musical literary after-piece entitled "Firelight Memories."

This is the last entertainment of the lyceum course this season, and our people should give the End of the Century Club a liberal patronage to help the library fund. Seats to subscribers will go on sale at Reflector Book Store Tuesday morning, and to the public Wednesday morning.

F. M. C. Tonight.

J. I. Thomason, State Supreme Deputy of the Fraternal Mystic Circle, arrived this morning to be present at the meeting of Tar River Ruling No. 2070 tonight at Red Men's hall. Every member is earnestly requested to be present at 7:30 o'clock. First degree work will be rehearsed. The Mystic Circle is one of the foremost beneficial orders in the United States and has the best plans of insurance afforded by any—having six different plans to select from, all based on the National Fraternal Congress rates, which are recognized by all insurance experts to be scientifically correct. Tar River Ruling has a large membership and is still growing.

Every member be sure to attend this meeting tonight.

Another Quarantine Violation.

Ike McCoy, colored, was before Mayor Whedbee this morning for violating the quarantine law. He was given 15 days road sentence, but appealed to Superior court and was required to give bond for $200.

This case and a few drunks constituted the Mayor's Monday morning court.

THE FORCE OF ADVERTISING.

The money put into advertising by the manufacturer adds nothing to the cost of the merchandise, since the money spent for advertising comes out of the large sale made possible by the advertising.

For example, let us say the profit on a 50 cent article is 75 cents a dozen to the manufacturer. And without advertising let us say the manufacturer can sell 50,000 dozen a year, which nets a gross profit of $37,500, out of which must be paid the manufacturing and selling expenses. Let us figure the net profit on 50,000 dozens leaves the manufacturer with $10,000 clear.

Now, then, take the manufacturer who invests $50,000 a year in advertising, and through the advertising forces the sale to 200,000 dozen a year, the basis of profit being also 75 cents a dozen. The gross profit on 200,000 dozen a year, of course, would be more than four times the profit on 50,000 dozens, since the larger sale reduces the pro rata cost of manufacturing and selling.

The purchasing power is greater—and while the profit may be 75 cents a dozen on a sale of 50,000 dozens, of 200,000 dozens quality and make can be bettered, and the profit still be greater than 75 cents a dozen. Nevertheless, at 75 cents a dozen the profit on 50,000 dozens would be $150,000 gross, and out of this $150,000 must come the $50,000 spent for advertising, also the manufacturing and selling expenses.

The manufacturer who spends $50,000 a year for advertising will enjoy more than four times the net profit on a 50,000 dozen sale. In other words, he will make more than four times $10,000, without putting in more time and without working harder to sell the 200,000 dozens than is necessary to sell 50,000 dozens. In fact, it requires more work to sell 50,000 dozens without advertising than to sell 200,000 dozens with advertising. The advertising creates a demand and makes selling easy for all concerned. —Merchants' Journal.

A Clever Salesman.

E. A. Baldree, of Winterville, the clever and industrious mite salesman, was here today. He handles a number of useful household articles and is meeting with much success in making sales. He has adopted this means of a livelihood and the people can help him by buying his articles.

No Marriages Last Week.

Register of Deeds Moore had a complete blank last week in the marriage license file, not an applicant coming in during the week. This is something unusual for a county as large as Pitt.

Washington's Farewell.

The farewell address of Washington, the military chieftain, to his soldierly stands without parallel in all history. He does not refer to his own sacrifices or achievements. He simply and completely sinks himself, the great central figure, out of sight. He sees only his country and thinks only of her good. —Bingham of American History.

How Coal Was First Named.

Curiously, the word coal was in use long before as well as long after the commencement of the coal trade, with a meaning quite different from that which it now has. The term originally belonged to wood fuel and was applied in particular to wood which had been charred, or what is now called charcoal. When the trade in mineral coal began this was usually distinguished by the singular name of sea coal. It would seem that from having been gathered in early times on the seashore, more especially of Northumberland, along with seaweed and other wreckage cast up by the waves, this peculiar substance was supposed to be of marine origin. From this circumstance and its resemblance to wood coal in color and burning properties it obtained the name of sea coal, by which it was so long and so widely known. Then in the course of time, as the new fuel gained upon and superseded the old, the simple name of coal became universally transferred to it.

A Royal Talisman.

For 400 years the Hohenzollern family has possessed a peculiar talisman in the shape of a black stone set in a ring, each head of the house having passed the charm on to the next in succession for many generations. Frederick the Great is said to have found the ring sealed in a package with instructions as to its preservation and transmission written by Frederick I. Precisely what value or significance attaches to this carefully treasured bit of jewelry it would be difficult to say. Tradition says that a huge toad hopped into the royal presence centuries ago with the stone held in its mouth. As to whether the golden setting in which the stone is now preserved is due to the forethought of the intelligent toad or to the afterthought of the Hohenzollerns tradition fails to enlighten us.

Forgetting His Own Picture.

Reynolds once forgot the existence of one of his pictures. Burke once obtained a very early work and called on the great artist, submitting the work as that of a young student who sought advice from the master. Reynolds had a long look and then asked, "Is the painter a friend of yours?"

Burke replied in the affirmative. "Well," replied the great man, "I really don't feel able to give an opinion. It's a cleverish thing, but whether it is of sufficient promise to justify the young man in adopting art as a profession I cannot say." Sir Joshua had entirely forgotten his own work. —Chambers' Journal.

The report comes that women in Long Island are hunting a "Jack the Hugger." Must want hugging powerful bad up in that section, we reckon.—Wilmington Dispatch.

Thought your experience with the Boston "kissing overdone" woman was enough to satisfy you.—Greenville Reflector.

Isn't he just the jealous thing? And, again, how does he presume to know our capacity, and doesn't he know that hugging goes with kissing? Of course he does; hence, his vile libel cannot be attributed to lack of knowledge, but was probably said merely for effect.—Wilmington Dispatch.

Certainly we know that the two go together, and because of that knowledge you are not going to catch us trying to kiss an "overdone" girl in Boston and hug an "unhugged" girl in Long Island all at the same time. Possibly Cowan's capacity extends that far, but ours don't. Now, take that, you mean thing.

Unfair Primary Rule.

A revision of the Democratic party organization in this State is suggested by The High Point Enterprise, at the meeting of the executive committee, Thursday. The Enterprise would have established a uniform time for primaries and conventions "The party primary which is a part of the Democratic organization in this State is an unwise measure," says The Enterprise "It is unfair to all candidates and saddles upon them the cost of a primary in the beginning to bring about the nomination and the additional cost of the campaign that follows to effect an election. As the primaries are arranged today, no poor man in North Carolina can run for office

It costs a fortune to begin with to get the nomination—aside from the expense attendant upon the campaign. The primaries for the nomination of governor two years ago is estimated to have cost the three candidates, Messrs. Kitchin, Horne and Craig over $100,000. This is probably a conservative estimate." The point is well made and it should be mentioned also, that recently this feature of the primary was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme court of Tennessee. The primary plan as enforced in this State is contrary to Democratic principles and should be amended so as to be in accord with them.—Charlotte Chronicle.

The Bible in the Mountains.

Editor Johnson, of Charity and Children, is speaking of the generally over-rated illiteracy among the mountain people, or the poor whites over whom the Northern philanthropists are wont to shed tears, truthfully says: "The fact of the business is, we can take half the D. D's, who deplore the ignorance of the mountain people about the Bible, into Alexander county, among the mountain preachers who never saw a college or a seminary, and they would make these critics hang their heads in shame in a discussion of the Scriptures. They know the Bible because they make it the man of their counsel: and we dare say that in no section of the State is the Bible more revered and more fully believed than among these very people who are held up as heathen." That is a correct estimate of the character of the inhabitants of the mountain section of this State. Not only are they well versed on the Bible, but they can discuss with surprising intelligence all the political and economical issues of the day. Those who know the mountain people know this to be the truth.—Charlotte Chronicle

"VANDERBILT" IN WASHINGTON

By "VANDERBILT" Himself.

After leaving home on the 16th of February on a mission of conquest, I was thinking of the slogan for Greenville: "Our Greenville—Yours if you Come". So I concluded that I would see how it felt to be a millionaire for at least one day, so I got off the cars and took charge of the town. While viewing the premises, it was my pleasure to run up against the editor and told him my business, that so far as Greenville was concerned for that day, it was mine. Well, I spent the day walking around and visiting my friends—R. C. Flanagan, your very polite and genteel postmaster, C. T. Munford, A. E. Tucker, those merchant princes doing business in my town, and I know they were all highly honored to have the "Boss" come in and talk "shust a little mit dem." I spent most of the forenoon in this way, and about the noon hour went to call on my very much loved kinsman and patriarch, Col. W. M. King and lady, and enjoyed their hospitality until the afternoon when I took the Coast Line train for Washington, D. C.

After stopping at Weldon, N. C., until 2 o'clock the next morning our train came to take us through to the capital city of the greatest and best Nation on God's green earth, and that's all I'm going to say along this line, for if I don't stop right now my thoughts will crowd in on my mind so fast it might cause me to run away with myself and get all out of shape or go crazy or some other place, and I don't want to go there yet awhile—crazy.

Well, after riding through the country across creeks and rivers, up and down hills and through valleys, at about 8 o'clock, a. m. on Thursday 17th, we entered the depot. Well, we said we are here, but where is here? I was just like a new born babe, I found that I had struck a place that was all strange to me. In the first place I found that I did not know where I wanted to go, much less where it was or how to get there. I concluded to strike out and trust to luck or limber tongue, so I went up in the union depot, and after getting in I did not know how to get out. I walked on my tongue up to the first one I met and told him in the first place, I wanted to know how to get out of that place to some place higher down, not "fer frum" the ground so I could run up against some hotel that had some folks I knew some how or other or some other how, get acquainted with some folks who knew "Vanderbilt." Well, he shewn me the door, and away I went like a shot and made out like I knew all about it. So after I got on the avenue a porter came up and blazed away at me and said, "Metropolitan Hotel?" Says I, "You go to h—l, that's the place I'm looking for, you ace of spades, you black Republican, take me there or lose your soul's salvation for I am in a desperate mood and I'll tackle your carcass until I make your soul crack if you don't hurry. He thought I was the "Old Biz" himself, looking with lightning eyes and sulphurous breath, and don't you "fer git" it, he was the most anxious nigger to get me off his hands in charge of the Metropolitan Hotel you "eber seed."

Well, after I entered the door, the first place I got to was cigars, periodicals and all kinds of the newspaper tribe, and thinking that the next thing to do would be something else, so instead of reading I "konkluded" to smoke. Therefore, I got me a cheroot, called it a cigar, lit it on a streak of lightning and then went thundering down the hall to the register's office. Bless your life, and soul, and body too, the first man I saw behind the desk was that good old friend I used to know at the Benbow Hotel in Greensboro, N. C., Mr. Harris. Why don't you know the Good Lord always helps those who try to help themselves. Why, Mr. Editor, I found that I was strictly in it and there I felt like I was at home as long as I was in the hotel, but quite the reverse when on the street. But let me tell you, when I saw Mr. Harris, the hotel clerk, I was as glad as I ever was. I felt just "superluous," which means "most better than good." I gave it that definition because it ranges way beyond the superlative degree in feeling and speech.

Well, then, the next place I wanted to visit was the patent office, so I took up the directory and looked up 1331 Fairmount St., S., I hid me on a street car and got there just as they were finishing breakfast. Took them by surprise, of course, and they were all glad to see me, and have the pleasure of getting the news from Tarheeldom orally. After telling Cousins Nan and Rosa all the news of importance, I got lots of instruction as to how to go where I wanted to go. This was at the home of my honorable cousin, Geo. B. King, formerly of Greenville, N. C. I was just a little too late that morning to see him, as he had just gone to his office in the agricultural department, so I went back to the hotel, went to my room, took a bath, removing all the fragrance of the North Carolina tar; powdered and perfumed and came down the elevator a full-fledged city gentleman, and took a stroll down the avenue and it seemed that I was the cynosure of all eyes. I did not know why they did so unless they thought I was President McKinley riz from the dead, as I am his double in looks, if not so good in politics or religion. If I had worn my mustache I should have thought they were taking me for "Bwano Tumbo", just back from Africa, but as I had never been to that place, I could not think they were taking me for him. Then again, it worried me no little to think that because of the cancerous affection on my face they might take me for John Early, the leper, and if that were the case I determined to take the bull by the horns of the dilemma, so I put on a bold front and marched up to a big, burly, strong looking policeman and says to him, "Consider yourself under arrest, sir." His answer was, "Who are you, sir?" I says, to him, sez I, "I am a Tar Heel detective from North Carolina, in a strange city, and am looking for a man who can and will give me some information about what I want to know." He says, "What do you want to know?" "In the first place," I says, "I want to know who brought the North Pole to Washington City, Cook or Peary, or might it not have been Zeke Bilkins?" Then he says to me, sez he, "Stranger, what's your name?" I told him it was Smiling-house, or Laughingkitchen one, but down in "Norf Carliny" they called me "Vanderbilt" for short. Then he acknowledged the pleasure of my acquaintance and invited me down to his office to give me a diagram of the city with all the avenues, together with all the mathematical, and alphabetical streets and highways, by-ways and all sorts of ways, that run to and fro all through the city. So the first place I went to was the Patent office. I went all through that transacted my business and spent the evening with my lawyers and the other Big Bugs around there cracking jokes spinning yarns, etc. I then went back to my hotel, and as I entered the lobby the first man I met was C. M. Bernard, and, as I thought, Hon. Thos. Settle. Well, we had quite a little chat and after awhile Bernard introduced me to Mr. Oaks, "No taffy Claud, that's Tom Settle" "No, Oaks, if you please." "Well," I says, "it might please me to meet Mr. Oaks, if I were a mule, but if I were appointed to take Tom Settle to the devil, and the devil would not take this man for him, he wouldn't get any Settle at all." Why, he is so much like Settle it ought to make Settle ashamed of himself. I had the pleasure also of meeting our young friend, Price, of Salisbury.

Well, this takes me down, or up, to supper, and when I got there I was approached by one of the sable sons of Africa, who asked for my ticket. I told him I was not looking for a theatre but was on my way to refreshments as my inner man was bawling for something to eat and I had to take him around. Well, then he wanted to know what plan I desired, European or American? I told him I wanted the best he had in the shop, if it didn't cost too much, and would be the means of my getting something for the man inside of me. He said, as I had no ticket I would have to take the European plan. I told him all O. K., that rather than take the red out of his tape I would go to Europe and get supper. "Oh! no," he says, "Just walk right in this room." "O. K." says I, "If you don't want me to go to Europe, you can bring it over here, and I will help myself without any further bother." I thought it quite strange that an American would have to live on European style when we had all the style you're lookin' for, without any messing or doing about it. But let her go gallagher, and let her go slow, Ulah. When he brought around the programme with a list of the vittles and the price thereof, I selected 1-2 shad, broiled, and after waiting half an hour, the waitman came in with a large dish of shad, nested in celery leaves, spinach, sage, and all such yerbs, and capped the climax with a lemon, with olives and Japanese simmon stuck in the lemon on a stick or tooth pick one, I didn't know which. Well, after supper he pulled my leg for 75 cents, and when I paid him thinks I, Ole man, I got the best of that trade, for that shad with all his Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes on was well worth $1.50, good money, and my appetite was worth the same. So you see, I got $3.00 worth for 75 cents.

Well, I must hurry along with my tale and let you know some more. When I entered the office after supper, a nice, dapper good-looking young man grabbed me by the arm and told me to consider myself under arrest. I surrendered and told him it was one of the greatest pleasures of my life to be arrested by a good looking young man as he was, and I certainly was glad to have the privilege of placing my babe corpus in his custody. It was that clever, genteel gentleman, Col. Geo. Buehner King, who always makes his prisoners feel very much at home in his custody. Well, after staying a short while in my room talking and planning out a course of procedure for the next day, we parted at 1:30 A. M. and surrendered to Morpheus, in whose arms we gently reposed until 8 o'clock next morning. We agreed to meet at the Metropolitan at 1 o'clock P. M., the 18th, and make a tower of the capital and see congress in session; to pass through the Hall of Fame, and on through the whole thing. We first visited the Senate and my friends pointed out Senator Borah, the colleague of Senator Heyburn, of Idaho, I think. And when I looked upon the Senator's physiognomy I was not at all surprised at the stand he took about the rights of the States to honor any of their noble sons that they saw fit by placing a statute of them in the Hall of Fame. It was there that I saw the noble and grand man, soldier, patriot and citizen, Lee, of Virginia, and in the same hall was also Gen. U. S. Grant. I took off my hat to them both. I took off my hat to General Lee for the advice he gave we boys at the surrender to go home and make ourselves good citizens of this our one and common country. I took off my hat to General Grant for the affection I had for him because he gave his fallen foes protection assured them at the surrender. God bless his memory forever. I hope I may live to see the time when the statues will be placed side by side and then the blue and the gray will worship at the same shrine, together in the Hall of Fame sufficiently to destroy all the demagogery not dead, who would live upon the bloody shirt that should have been buried in the long ago. I was proud of the stand Senator Borah took when asked by his constituents about our right to honor whom we would honor, and it was full of logical reasoning. I told my friend, King, I just had to shake Senator Borah's hand before I left the capitol, so we went to the reception room of the Senate and sent up my card. In a few minutes the Senator made his appearance. After the acknowledgment of our introduction to each other, I told him I was from North Carolina, and what was termed by some people, a Rebel during the Civil War, and that when it was over and we lay down our arms we took up, with patriotic pride, our allegiance to the Union, and that when I saw his letter to his constituents defining his position about the States' rights in the Hall of Fame he had expressed my sentiments so much better than I could myself, that I just felt like I could not leave Washington City until I had met him and shook his hand; that I felt like I was taking hold of the hand of a statesman, who, in my estimation, was second to none this country had ever produced. He seemed to appreciate the display of admiration I entertained for him and thanked me for the interest manifested as a representative Southern Reb.

Well, Mr. Editor, I could write a volume, but I expect you are getting tired, so I will quit by saying, that if you ever go to Washington, D. C., and it should be your fortune to run up with Col. G. B. King, you'll never regret it. By all means stop at the Metropolitan and get acquainted with Mr. Harris, the hotel clerk.

No more at present.

International Humor.

In America all jokes concerning dogs and sausages refer to the rumor that sausages are made of our dumb friend. In Europe sausages of very poor quality are part of the soldiers' rations; hence this French joke: "What! You leash your dog with a chain of sausages?" "Yes; they are army sausages." American readers looking for the old joke to which they are accustomed fail to see the point. It means that army sausages are so poor a dog wouldn't eat them.—Kansas City Times.

The Cossack's Whip.

People who are unacquainted with Russia and who read of street disturbances being suppressed by the Cossacks with their whips have little idea of what formidable weapons these are. Made of hard leather and tapering to a fine point, they are triangular in shape, and the Cossack, who knows how to bring the edge down upon his victim, can inflict a wound that is not infrequently fatal. A favorite stroke is one by which the eye and a portion of the cheek are cut.

The Electric Eel is Very Old.

Certain species of electric fishes have been known from very early times. Occasionally we find people ascribing mysterious powers to them both of good and evil. It is certain that the Abyssinians knew an electric eel and used it "as a remedy for nervous diseases," and the Hindoos and other nations of the east in times past were also conscious of its powers. Humboldt describes an old method of capturing this eel practiced by the East Indians, which consisted in driving horses into water inhabited by the eel and allowing the eels to exhaust themselves by attacking the horses with their electric organs, when they were "easily harpooned by the Indians," but subsequent travelers in the same parts where Humboldt says the custom was practiced have denied the report, and it is now not generally believed. However, the electric eel has been known to those people for centuries.

The Better Part.

Mr. McNabber, says the London Mail, had just told his pastor that he was planning a trip to the Holy Land. "And while I'm there," he continued, "I'll read the Ten Commandments aloud from the top o' Mount Sinai." "McNabber," replied the minister gravely, "tak my advice. Bide at home an' keep them."
